THE

POETICAL WORKS

OF

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

WITH A MEMOIR.

PHILADELPHIA:
PORTER AND COATES.
PREFACE.

This Volume contains a more complete Collection of Sir Walter's Poetry than has ever before appeared. In addition to the great Metrical Romances, and the Miscellaneous Pieces, given in the later Editions, it includes, for the first time, the Songs and Fragments scattered over his Novels, and various Specimens, both Serious and Comic, which were originally printed in the Memoirs of his Life.

As the object in the present Collection has been to adhere to the original productions of Sir Walter, the old parts of the Romance of Sir Tristrem are not given, nor the Contributions to the Minstrelsy by other hands.

In the arrangement of annotations, it has, upon mature consideration, been thought most advisable to follow as nearly as possible the plan originally adopted by the Poet himself. The Author's longer Notes, so rich in historical and biographical interest, are given in Appendices to the several Romances, and other larger performances; the short ones, explanatory chiefly of ancient words and phrases, at the bottom of the page. To avoid confusion, the Notes of the Editor are given with these last.

The references to the Life of Sir Walter apply to the Second Edition, 1839.

1841.

John G. Lockhart.
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>MEMORI</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL</td>
<td>vii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advertisement to Edition 1833</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Edition 1830</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dedication</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preface to the First Edition</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto I</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto II</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto III</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto IV</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto V</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VI</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>MARMION</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Notice to Edition 1833</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Edition 1830</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dedication</td>
<td>76</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advertisement to the First Edition</td>
<td>76</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Canto I—To William Stewart Rose, Esq.</td>
<td>76</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto I—The Castle</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Canto II—To the Rev. John Marriott, A.M.</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto II—The Convent</td>
<td>89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Canto III—To William Enskine, Esq.</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto III—The Hostel, or Inn</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Canto IV—To James Skene, Esq.</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto IV—The Camp</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Canto V—To George Ellis, Esq.</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto V—The Court</td>
<td>118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Canto VI—To Richard Heber, Esq.</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VI—The Gathering</td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>145</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>THE LADY OF THE LAKE</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Canto IV—The Prophecy</td>
<td>202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto V—The Combat</td>
<td>211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VI—The Guard-Room</td>
<td>220</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>231</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>THE VISION OF DON RODERICK</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dedication</td>
<td>263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Vision</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>274</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>278</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ROKEBY</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Notice to Edition 1833</td>
<td>285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Edition 1830</td>
<td>285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dedication</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advertisement</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto I</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto II</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto III</td>
<td>307</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto IV</td>
<td>316</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto V</td>
<td>324</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VI</td>
<td>335</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Preface to the First Edition</td>
<td>373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>376</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto I</td>
<td>377</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto II</td>
<td>382</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto III</td>
<td>390</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>404</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>THE LORD OF THE ISLES</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Notice to Edition 1833</td>
<td>407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to Edition 1830</td>
<td>407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advertisement to the First Edition</td>
<td>409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto I</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto II</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto III</td>
<td>424</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto IV</td>
<td>432</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto V</td>
<td>441</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VI</td>
<td>449</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>463</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTENTS.</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE FIELD OF WATERLOO,</td>
<td>499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DEDICATION,</td>
<td>499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ADVERTISEMENT,</td>
<td>499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONCLUSION,</td>
<td>506</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX,</td>
<td>508</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HAROLD THE DAUNTLESS,</td>
<td>511</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTION,</td>
<td>512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO I.</td>
<td>513</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO II.</td>
<td>516</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO III.</td>
<td>520</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO IV.</td>
<td>523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO V.</td>
<td>526</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO VI.</td>
<td>530</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONCLUSION,</td>
<td>534</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE BORDER MINSTRELSY.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTORY REMARKS ON POPULAR POETRY,</td>
<td>537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX,</td>
<td>552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ESSAY ON Imitations of the ANCIENT BALLAD,</td>
<td>554</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX,</td>
<td>569</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IMITATIONS OF the ANCIENT BALLAD,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas the Rhymer, Part I.</td>
<td>572</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Part II.</td>
<td>574</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Part III.</td>
<td>581</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix,</td>
<td>583</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Glenfinlas; or, Lord Ronald’s Coronach,</td>
<td>586</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix,</td>
<td>590</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Eve of St. John,</td>
<td>591</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix,</td>
<td>594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cadyow Castle,</td>
<td>595</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix,</td>
<td>599</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Gray Brother,</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix,</td>
<td>603</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>War-Song of the Royal Edinburgh Light Dragoons,</td>
<td>604</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BALLADS TRANSLATED OR IMITATED FROM THE GERMAN, &amp;c.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William and Helen,</td>
<td>606</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Wild Huntsman,</td>
<td>610</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Fire-King,</td>
<td>612</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frederick and Alice,</td>
<td>614</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Battle of Sempach,</td>
<td>615</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Noble Moringer,</td>
<td>618</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Erl-King,</td>
<td>622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces, in the Order of Their Composition or Publication.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Juvenile Lines. From Virgil. 1782,</td>
<td>623</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On a Thunder Storm,</td>
<td>623</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On the Setting Sun,</td>
<td>623</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Violet,</td>
<td>623</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To a Lady, with Flowers from a Roman Wall,</td>
<td>624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces,</td>
<td>624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bothwell Castle,</td>
<td>624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Shepherd’s Tale,</td>
<td>627</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheviot,</td>
<td>627</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Riel’s Wedding,</td>
<td>627</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Bard’s Inchantment,</td>
<td>628</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hellvellyn,</td>
<td>629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Dying Bard,</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Norman Horse-shoe,</td>
<td>630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Maid of Toro,</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Palmer,</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Maid of Neidpath,</td>
<td>632</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wandering Willie,</td>
<td>632</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Health to Lord Melville, 1806,</td>
<td>633</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hunting Song,</td>
<td>634</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Resolve,</td>
<td>634</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epitaph, designed for a Monument in Lichfield Cathedral, at the Burial-place of the family of Miss Seward,</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prologue to Miss Baillie’s Play of the Family Legend,</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Poacher,</td>
<td>636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Song—“Oh, say not, my love, with that mortified air,”</td>
<td>637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Bold Dragoon; or, The Plain of Badajoz,</td>
<td>637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On the Massacre of Glencoe,</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>For a’ that an’ a’ that—A new song to an old tune,</td>
<td>639</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Song, for the Anniversary Meeting of the Pitt Club of Scotland,</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pharos Loquitur,</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lines addressed to Ranald Macdonald, Esq., of Staffa,</td>
<td>641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Letter in Verse, on the Voyage with the Commissioners of Northern Lights.—To his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, 1814,</td>
<td>641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FROM Waverley.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridal Song,</td>
<td>642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Waverley,</td>
<td>643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Davie Gellatley’s Song,</td>
<td>643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scene in Luckie Macleary’s Tavern,</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hee away, hie away,</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. Swithin’s Chair,</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Davie Gellatley’s Song,</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Janet Gellatley’s alleged Witchcraft,</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Flora MacIvor’s Song,</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lines on Captain Wogan,</td>
<td>646</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Follow me, follow me,</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Author of Waverley?</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kin-tail.—From the Gaelic,</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Imitation of the preceding Song,</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>War-Song of Lachlan, High Chief of Mac-lean.—From the Gaelic,</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saint Cloud,</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Dance of Death,</td>
<td>649</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces.</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Romance of Dunois,</td>
<td>650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Troubador,</td>
<td>651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From the French,</td>
<td>651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Song, on the lifting of the Banner of the House of Buccleuch, at a</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>great Foot-Ball Match on Carterhaugh,</td>
<td>651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lullaby of an Infant Chief,</td>
<td>652</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From Guy Mancrining.

| Songs of Meg Merrilies—                                              |      |
| Nativity of Harry Bertram,                                          | 652  |
| Twist ye, Twine ye,                                                 | 653  |
| The Dying Gipsy Smuggler,                                           | 653  |
| The Prophecy,                                                       | 653  |
| Songs of Dirk Hatteraick and Glossin,                               | 653  |

| The Return to Ulster,                                                | 654  |
| Jock of Hazeldean,                                                  | 654  |
| Fibroch of Donald Dhu,                                              | 655  |
| Nora's Vow,                                                         | 655  |
| MacGregor's Gathering,                                              | 656  |

| Verses composed for the occasion, and sung by a select band, after  |      |
| the Dinner given by the Lord Provost of Edinburgh,                 |      |
| to the Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia and his Suite, 19th December,  |      |
| 1816,                                                               | 656  |

From the Antiquary.

| Time,                                                               | 657  |
| Epitaph on Jon o' ye Girnells,                                      | 657  |
| Elspeth's Ballad,                                                   | 657  |
| Mottoes, 1-20,                                                       | 658  |

From the Black Dwarf.

| Mottoes, 1, 2,                                                      | 660  |

From Old Mortality.

| Major Bellenden's Song,                                             | 660  |
| Verses found in Bothwell's Pocket-book,                             | 660  |
| Epitaph on Balfour of Burley,                                       | 660  |
| Mottoes, 1, 2, 3,                                                   | 661  |

| The Search after Happiness; or, The Quest of Sultain Solimann,      | 661  |
| Mr. Kemble's Farewell Address on taking leave of the Edinburgh     | 661  |
| Stage, Lines written for Miss Smith, The Sun upon the Weirdlaw Hill,| 665  |
| The Monks of Bangor's March,                                        | 666  |
| Letter to his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch,                          | 667  |

From Rob Roy.

| To the Memory of Edward the Black Prince,                           | 667  |
| Translation from Ariosto,                                           | 668  |
| Mottoes, 1-7,                                                       | 668  |

From the Heart of Mid-Lothian.

| Madge Wildfire's Songs,                                             | 670  |
| Mottoes, 1-5,                                                       | 672  |

From the Bride of Lammermoor.

| Lucy Ashton's Song,                                                 | 672  |
| Norman the Forester's Song,                                        | 672  |
| The Prophecy,                                                      | 672  |
| Mottoes, 1-6,                                                       | 672  |

From a Legend of Montrose.

| Ancient Gaelic Melody,                                              | 673  |
| The Orphan Maid,                                                   | 673  |
| Mottoes, 1, 2, 3,                                                  | 674  |

From Ivanhoe.

| The Crusader's Return,                                             | 674  |
| The Barefooted Friar,                                              | 675  |
| Saxon War-Song,                                                    | 675  |
| Rebecca's Hymn,                                                    | 676  |
| The Black Knight's Song,                                           | 676  |
| Song—The Black Knight and Wamba,                                   | 677  |
| Funeral Hymn,                                                      | 677  |
| Mottoes, 1-9,                                                       | 677  |

| Epitaph on Mrs. Erskine,                                            | 678  |

From the Monastery.

| Songs of the White Lady of Avenel—                                  |      |
| On Tweed River,                                                    | 678  |
| To the Sub-Prior,                                                  | 679  |
| Halbert's Incantation,                                             | 679  |
| To Halbert,                                                        | 679  |
| Halbert's Second Interview,                                        | 680  |
| To Mary Avenel,                                                    | 681  |
| To Edward Glendinning,                                             | 681  |
| The White Lady's Farewell,                                         | 682  |
| Border Ballad,                                                     | 682  |
| Mottoes, 1-20,                                                     | 682  |

From the Abbot.

| The Pardoner's Advertisement,                                      | 684  |
| Mottoes, 1-17,                                                     | 684  |

From Kenilworth.

| Goldthred's Song,                                                   | 685  |
| Speech of the Porter at Kenilworth,                                | 685  |
| Mottoes, 1-13,                                                     | 686  |

From the Pirate.

| The Song of the Tempest,                                           | 687  |
| Claud Halero's Song,                                                | 687  |
| The Song of Harold Harfager,                                       | 688  |
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

Song of the Mermaids and Mermen, 688
Norma's Song, 689
Claud Halero and Norma, 689
Song of the Zetland Fishermen, 690
Cleveland's Songs, 690
Claud Halero's Verses, 691
Norma's Incantations, 691
Bryce Snaillsfoot's Advertisement, 692
Mottoes, 1-12, 692

On Ettrick Forest's Mountains Dun, 694
Farewell to the Muse, 694
The Maid of Isla, 694
Carle, now the King's come, 695

Part Second, 696

FROM THE FORTUNES OF NIGEL.
Mottoes, 1-24, 697

FROM PE VERIL OF THE PEAK.
Mottoes, 1-19, 699

FROM QUENTIN DURWARD.
Song—County Guy, 701
Mottoes, 1-10, 701

FROM ST. RONAN'S WELL.
Mottoes, 1-9, 702

The Bannatyne Club, 703
Letter in Verse to J. G. Lockhart, Esq., on the composition of Maida's Epitaph, 704
Lines, addressed to Monsieur Alexandre, the celebrated Ventrioloquist, 705
Epilogue to the Drama founded on "St.
Ronan's Well," 705
Epilogue (Queen Mary), 706

FROM REDGAUNLET.
"As Lords their Laborers' hire delay," 706

FROM THE BETROTHED.
Song—Soldier, Wake, 707
The Truth of Woman, 707
I ask'd of my Harp, 707
Mottoes, 1-6, 708

FROM THE TALISMAN.
Ahriman, 708
Song of Blonded—The Bloody Vest, 709
The Bloody Vest—Fytte Second, 709
Mottoes, 1-10, 710

Lines—"When with Poetry dealing," 711

FROM WOODSTOCK.
An hour with thee, 711
Mottoes, 1-8, 711

LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

Lines to Sir Cuthbert Sharp, 712

FROM CHRONICLES OF THE CANONGATE.
Mottoes, 712

FROM THE FAIR MAID OF PERTH.
The Lay of Poor Louise, 713
Death Chant, 713
Song of the Glee-Maiden, 714
Mottoes, 1-5, 714

The Death of Keeldar, 714

FROM ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN.
The Secret Tribunal, 715
Mottoes, 1-12, 716

The Foray, 717
Inscription for the Monument of the Rev.
George Scott, 717
Lines on Fortune, 717

FROM COUNT ROBERT OF PARIS.
Mottoes, 1-13, 717

FROM CASTLE DANGEROUS.
Mottoes, 1-5, 719

DRAMATIC PIECES.

HALIDON HILL; A DRAMATIC SKETCH FROM SCOTTISH HISTORY, 721
Preface, 721
Act I.—Scene I., 723

MACDUFF'S CROSS,
Introduction, 733
Dedication, 738
Scene I., 738

THE DOOM OF DEVORGOIL,
Preface, 742
Act I.—Scene I., 742

AUCHINDRANE; OR, THE AYRSHIRE TRAGEDY,
Preface, 770
Act I.—Scene I., 770

THE HOUSE OF ASPEN,
 Advertisement, 796
Act I.—Scene I., 797

GOETZ OF BERLICHINGEN, WITH THE IRON HAND,
Preface, 815
Act I.—Scene I., 817

INDEX, 853
MEMOIR OF THE AUTHOR.

Sir Walter Scott was born at Edinburgh on the 15th of August, 1771, the same day which gave birth to Napoleon Bonaparte. "My birth," says he, "was neither distinguished nor sordid. According to the prejudices of my country, it was esteemed gentle, as I was connected, though remotely, with ancient families, both by my father's and mother's side." His paternal great-grandfather—a cadet of the border family of Harden—was sprung in the fourteenth century from the great house of Bucleuch; his grandfather became a farmer in Roxburghshire; and his father, Walter Scott, was a writer to the signet in the Scottish capital. His mother, Anne Rutherford, was the daughter of one of the medical professors in the university of Edinburgh.

Neither Scott's poetical turn nor his extraordinary powers of memory seem to have been inherited from either of his parents. His early years displayed little precocity of talent; and the uneventful tenor of his childhood and youth seemed little calculated to awaken in his mind a love of the imaginative or romantic.

Before he had completed his second year, delicacy of constitution, and lameness which proved permanent, assailed him, and soon afterwards caused his removal to the country. There, at his grandfather's farm-house of Sandyknowe, situated beneath the crags of a ruined baronial tower, and overlooking a district famous in border history, the poet passed his childhood till about his eighth year, with scarcely any interruption but a year at Bath. At this early age was evinced his warm sympathy with the beauty and grandeur of nature; and the ballads and legends, recited to him amid the scenes in which their events were laid, co-operated in after days with family and national pride to decide the bent of the border minstrel's fancy.

His health being partially confirmed, he was recalled home; and from the end of 1778 till 1783 his education was conducted in the High School of Edinburgh, with the assistance of a tutor resident in his father's house. Prior to this change, he had shown a decided inclination towards literary pursuits; but now, introduced with imperfect preparation into a large and thoroughly trained class, consisting of boisterous boys, his childish zeal for learning seems to have been quenched by ambition of another kind. His memory, it is true, was still remarkable, and procured for him from his master the title of historian of the class; while he produced some school-verses, both translated and original, at least creditable for a boy of twelve. Even his intellectual powers, however, were less active in the proper business of the school than in enticing his companions from their tasks by merry jests and little stories; and his place as a scholar rarely rose above mediocrity. But his reputation stood high in the play-ground, where, possessed of unconquerable courage, and eager to defeat the scorn which his physical defects excited, he performed hazardous feats of agility, and gained (vii) pugilistic trophies over comrades who, that they might have no unfair advantage over the lame boy, fought, like him, lashed face to face on a plank. At home, his tutor, a zealous Presbyterian, instructed him, chiefly by conversation in the facts of Scottish history, though without being able to shake those opinions which the boy had already taken up as an inheritance from his Jacobite ancestors. At every interval also which could be stolen from the watchfulness of his elders, he eagerly pursued a course of reading miscellaneous and undigested, embracing much that to most minds would have been either useless or positively injurious. "I left the High School," says he, "with a great quantity of general information, ill arranged, indeed, and collected without system, yet deeply impressed upon my mind, readily assorted by my power of connection and memory, and gilded, if I may be permitted to say so, by a vivid and active imagination."

His perusal of histories, voyages, and travels, fairy tales, romances, and English poetry, was continued with increasing avidity during a long visit which, in his twelfth year, he paid to his father's sister at the village of Kelso, where the young student read for the first time, with entranced enthusiasm, Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. This work, besides the delight imparted by its poems, gave new dignity, in his eyes, to his favorite Scottish ballads, which he had already begun to collect from recitation, and to copy in little volumes, several of which are still preserved. "To this period, also," he tells us, "I can trace distinctly the awaking of that delightful feeling for the beauties of natural objects which has never since deserted me. The romantic feelings which I have described as predominating in my mind naturally rested upon and associated themselves with the grand features of the landscape around me; and the historical incidents or traditional legends connected with many of them gave to my admiration a sort of intense impression of reverence, which at times made my heart feel too big for its bosom. From this time the love of natural beauty, more especially when combined with ancient ruins, or remains of our fathers' piety or splendor, became with me an insatiable passion, which, if circumstances had permitted, I would willingly have gratified by travelling over half the globe."

In November, 1783, Scott became a student in the university of Edinburgh, where he seems to have attended the classes of Greek, Latin, and logic, during one session, with those of ethics and universal history at a later period, while preparing for the bar. At college the scholastic part of his education proceeded even more unprosperously than it had previously done. For science, mental, physical, or mathematical, he displayed no inclination; and in the acquisition of languages, for which he possessed considerable aptitude, he was but partially industrious or successful. Of Greek, as his son-in-law and biographer admits, he had in later life forgotten the very alphabet. He had indeed entered on the study with disadvantages similar to those which had formerly impeded his progress in Latin. Inferior to his competitors, he petulantly resolved to despise the study; and by his carelessness, and by an essay maintaining Ariosto to be a better poet than Homer, he provoked Dr. Dalziel to pronounce of him "that dunce he was, and dunce he would remain." His knowledge of Latin also does not appear to have been more than superficial, although we are informed that for some writers in that tongue, especially Lucan, Claudian, and Buchanan, he had in after life a decided predilection. About the time now under review, he also acquired French, Italian, and Spanish, all of which he afterwards read with sufficient ease; and the German language was learned a few years later, but never critically understood.

During a severe illness between his twelfth and sixteenth year his stores of romantic and poetical reading received a vast increase, and one of his schoolfellows has given an interesting account of excursions in the neighborhood of the city, during this period, when the two youths read poems and romances of knight-errantry, and exercised their invention in composing and relating to each other interminable tales modelled on their favorite books. The vocation of the romance-writer and poet of chivalry was thus already fixed. His health likewise became permanently robust, and the lameness in one leg, which was the sole remnant of his early complaints, was through life no obstacle to his habits of active bodily exertion, or to his love for out-of-door sports and exercise.

The next step in his life did not seem directed towards the goal to which all his favorite studies pointed. His father, a formal though high-spirited and high-principled man, designed him for the legal profession; and, although he was desirous that his son should embrace the highest department of it, considered it advisable, according to a practice not uncommon in Scotland, that he should be prepared for the bar by an education as an attorney. Accordingly, in May, 1786, Scott, then nearly fifteen years old, was articled for five years as an apprentice to his father, in whose chambers he continued to discharge the humble duties of a clerk, until, about the year 1790, he had, with his father's approbation, finally resolved on coming to the bar. Of the amount of the young poet's professional industry during those years of servitude we possess conflicting representations; but many circumstances in his habits, many peculiarities in the knowledge he exhibits incidentally in his works, and perhaps even much of his resolute literary industry, may be safely referred to the period of his apprenticeship, and be admitted as evidence that at all events he was not systematically negligent of his duties. Historical and imaginative reading, however, continued to be prosecuted with undiminished ardor; summer excursions into the Highland introduced him to the scenes and to more than one of the characters which afterwards figured in his most successful works; while in the law-classes of the university, as well as in the juvenile debating societies, he formed, or renewed from his school-days, acquaintance with several who became in manhood his cherished friends and his literary advisers. In 1791 the Speculative Society made him acquainted with Mr. Jeffrey and those other young men whose subsequent celebrity has reflected lustre on the arena of their early training.

Scott's attempts in poetry had now become more ambitious; for, about the completion of his fifteenth year, he is said to have composed a poem in four books on the Conquest of Granada, which, however, he almost immediately burned, and no trace of it has been preserved. During some years after this time, we hear of no other literary compositions than essays for the debating societies.

In July, 1792, he was called to the bar. Immediately after his first circuit, he commenced that series of "raids," as he playfully called them, or excursions into the secluded border-districts, which in a few years enabled him to amass the materials for his first considerable work. His walks on the boards of the Parliament House, the Westminster Hall of Scotland, if they gained him for a time few professional fees, speedily procured him renown among his fellow-lawyers as a story-teller of high excellence; his father's connections and his own friendships opened for him a ready admission into the best society of the city, in which his cheerful temper and his rich store of anecdotes made him universally popular; and his German studies produced, in 1796, his earliest poetical efforts that were published, namely, the translations of Bürger's ballads, Lenoré and the Wild Huntsman. The same year witnessed the disappointment of a long and fondly-cherished hope, by the marriage of a young lady, whose image, notwithstanding, clung to his memory through life, and inspired some of the tenderest strains of his poetry. In the summer of 1797, however, on a visit to the watering-place of Gil-land, in Cumberland, he became acquainted with Charlotte Margaret Carpenter, a young lady of French birth and parentage, and a mutual attachment having ensued, they were married at Carlisle in December of the same year.

The German ballads served as the translator’s introduction to the then celebrated Matthew Gregory Lewis, who enlisted him as a contributor to his poetical Tales of Wonder; and one cannot but smile to hear of the elation with which the author of Waverley at that time contemplated the patronizing kindness extended to him by the author of The Monk. Early in 1788 was published Scott’s translation of Goethe’s Goetz von Berlichingen, which, through Lewis’s assistance, was sold to a London bookseller for twenty-five guineas; but, though favorably criticised, it was coldly received by the public. In the summer of 1799, the poet wrote those ballads which he has himself called his “first serious attempts in verse”—the Glenfinlas, the Eve of St. John, and the Gray Brother.

After Scott’s marriage, several of his summers were spent in a pretty cottage at Lasswade, near Edinburgh, where he formed, besides other acquaintances, those of the noble houses of Melville and Buccleuch, whose influence procured for him, in the end of 1799, his appointment as sheriff-depute of Selkirkshire, an office imposing little duty, while it yielded a permanent salary of £300 per annum. His father’s death had recently bestowed on him a small patrimony; his wife had an income considerable enough to aid him greatly; his practice as a lawyer yielded, though not much, yet more than barristers of his standing can usually boast of; and altogether, his situation in life was strikingly favorable compared with that of most literary men. Still, however, though now twenty-eight years of age, he had done nothing to found a reputation as a man of letters; and there appeared as yet little probability that he would devote himself to literature as a profession, or consider it as any thing more than a relaxation for those leisure hours left unoccupied by business, and by the enjoyments of society.

In 1800 and 1801 those hours were employed in the preparation of the Border Minstrelsy, the first two volumes of which appeared in the beginning of the next year, and the edition, consisting of eight hundred copies, was sold off before its close. This work, the earliest which can be said to have contributed to his general fame, yielded him about eighty pounds of clear profit; a sum far inadequate to defray the expense of the investigations out of which it sprang. In 1803 it was completed by the publication of the third volume. Besides the value which the Minstrelsy possesses in itself, in the noble antique ballads, so industriously, tastefully, and yet conscientiously edited, in the curious and lively information which overflows through all the prose annotations, and in those few original poems which gave the earliest and most significant intimation of that genius which as yet had lurked unseen, the work has now a separate value and interest, as forming the most curious of all illustrations for the history of its editor’s mind and of his subsequent works. “One of the critics of that day,” remarks Mr. Lockhart, “said that the book contained ‘the elements of a hundred historical romances;’ and this critic was a prophetic one. No person who has not gone through its volumes for the express purpose of comparing their contents with his great original works can have formed a conception of the endless variety of incidents and images, now expanded and emblazoned by his mature art, of which the first hints may be found either in the text of those primitive ballads or in the notes which the happy rambles of his youth had gathered together for their illustration.”

But before the publication of the Border Minstrelsy, the poet had begun to attempt a higher flight. “In the third volume,” says he, writing to his friend George Ellis in 1803,
“I intend to publish a long poem of my own. It will be a kind of romance of border chivalry, in a light-horseman sort of stanza.” This border romance was the Lay of the Last Minstrel, which, however, soon extended in plan and dimensions, and, originating as a ballad on a goblin story, became at length a long and varied poem. The first draught of it, in its present shape, was written in the autumn of 1802, and the whole history of its progress has been delightfully told by the author himself, and is well illustrated by his biographer.

In 1803, during a visit to London, Scott, already familiarly acquainted with Ellis, Heber, and other literary men, and now possessing high reputation based upon the Minstrelsy, was introduced to several of the first men of the time; and thenceforth, bland as he was in manner, and kind in heart, indefatigable and successful in his study of human character, and always willing to receive with cordiality the strangers whom his waxing fame brought about him, it is not surprising to find that not to know personally Walter Scott argued one's self unknown. The toleration and kindliness of his character are illustrated by the fact that firm as his own political opinions were, and violently as excitement sometimes led him to express them, not only did he always continue on friendly terms with the chief men of the opposite party in Edinburgh, but several of them were his intimate friends and associates; and he even was for some years an occasional contributor to the Edinburgh Review.

In 1804 was published his edition of the ancient poem of Sir Tristrem, so valuable for its learned dissertations, and for that admirable imitation of the antique which appears as a continuation of the early minstrel's work.

During that year and the preceding, the Lay was freely submitted to all the author's friends, Wordsworth and Jeffreys among the rest; and after undergoing various changes, and receiving enthusiastic approval in several quarters from which commendation was wont to issue but sparingly, it was at length published, in the first week of 1805. The poet, now thirty-three years of age, took his place at once as a classic in English literature. Its circulation immediately became immense, and has since exceeded that of any other English poem.

At this culminating point of the poet's life, we must turn aside from the narrative of his literary triumphs, to notice a step of another kind, which proved the most important he ever took. In one of those interesting communications of 1830 which throw so much light on his personal history, he has told us that, from the moment when it became certain that literature was to form the principal employment of his days, he determined that it should at least not constitute a necessary source of his income. Few literary men, perhaps, have not nourished a wish of this sort; but very few indeed have possessed, like Scott, the means of converting the desire into an effectual resolution. In 1805, as his biographer tells us, he was, “independently of practice at the bar and of literary profits, in possession of a fixed revenue of nearly, if not quite, £1000 a year.” To most men of letters this income would have appeared affluence; but Scott has frankly avowed that he did not think it such. His mind was already filled with the ambition, not of founding a new family (for that was too mean an aim for his pride of birth to stoop to), but of adding to his own ancestral pretensions that claim to respect which ancient pedigree does not always possess when it stands alone, but which belongs to it beyond challenge when it is united with territorial possessions. The fame of a great poet, now within his reach, if not already grasped, seemed to him a little thing compared with the dignity of a well-descended and wealthy Scottish landholder; and, while neither he nor his friends could yet have foreseen the immensity of those resources which his genius was afterwards to place at his disposal for the attainment of his favorite wish, two plans occurred, and were executed, which promised to conduct him far at least towards the goal.
MEMOIR OF THE AUTHOR.

The first of these was the obtaining of one of the principal clerkships in the Scottish Court of Session, offices of high respectability, the duties of which were executed at a moderate cost of time and trouble, and remunerated at that time by an income of about £800 a year, which was afterwards increased to £1300. This object was attained early in 1806, through his ministerial influence, aided by the consideration paid to his talents; although, owing to a private arrangement with his predecessor, he did not receive any part of the emoluments till six years later.

The second plan was of a different sort, being in fact a commercial speculation. James Ballantyne, a schoolfellow of Scott, a man possessing considerable literary talent, having become the editor and printer of a newspaper in Kelso, had been employed to print the Minstrelsy, and acquired great reputation by the elegance with which that work was produced. Soon afterwards, in pursuance of Scott’s advice, he removed to Edinburgh, where, under the patronage of the poet and his friends, and assisted by his own character and skill, his printing business accumulated to an extent which his capital, even with pecuniary aid from Scott, proved inadequate to sustain. An application for a new loan was met by a refusal, accompanied, however, by a proposal that Scott should make a large advance on condition of being admitted as a partner in the firm, to the amount of a third share. Accordingly, in May, 1805, Walter Scott became regularly a partner of the printing-house of James Ballantyne & Co., though the fact remained for the public, and for all his friends but one, a profound secret. “The forming of this commercial connection was,” says his son-in-law, “one of the most important steps in Scott’s life. He continued bound by it during twenty years, and its influence on his literary exertions and his worldly fortunes was productive of much good and not a little evil. Its effects were in truth so mixed and balanced during the vicissitudes of a long and vigorous career that I at this moment doubt whether it ought, on the whole, to be considered with more of satisfaction or of regret.”

From this time we are to view Scott as incessantly engaged in that memorable course of literary industry whose toils advancing years served only to augment, and from which neither the duties of his two professional offices of clerk of session and sheriff, nor the increasing claims made on him by society, were ever able to divert him. He now stood deservedly high in the favor of the booksellers, not merely as a poet and man of genius, but as one possessed of an extraordinary mass of information, and of such habits as qualified him eminently for turning his knowledge to account. He was therefore soon embarked in undertakings, not indeed altogether inglorious, but involving an amount of drudgery to which, perhaps, no man of equal original genius has ever condescended. The earliest of these was his edition of Dryden, which, entered upon in 1805, was completed and published in 1808.

But the list of works in which his poetical genius shone forth continued rapidly to increase amidst his multiplicity of other avocations. From the summer of 1804 till that of 1812, the spring and autumnal vacations of the court were spent by him and his family at Ashiestiel, a small mansion romantically overhanging the Tweed some miles above Melrose, and rented from one of the poet’s kinsmen. In this beautiful retreat, at intervals during twelve months, was chiefly composed the magnificent poem of Marmion, which was published in the beginning of 1808. At the same place, likewise, in 1805, were composed the opening chapters of a novel which, on the disapproval of one of the author’s critical friends, was thrown aside and not resumed for years.

Scott’s commercial engagements must now again be adverted to. In the year 1808 he took a part, perhaps as suggester, certainly as a zealous promoter, of a scheme which terminated in the establishment of the Quarterly Review in London, as a political and literary counterpoise to the Edinburgh Review, the advocate of Whig opinions. But the poet had other than political grounds for embarking in this opposition. He had seriously quarrelled with the firm of Constable & Co., the publishers of the Edinburgh Review, and of several of his own earlier works; and his wish to check the enterprising head of that house in his attempts to obtain a monopoly of Scottish literature is openly avowed, in Scott's correspondence at the time, as one of his principal motives for framing another scheme. His plan, as far as it was explained either to the public or to his own friends, amounted only to this: That a new publishing house should be set up in Edinburgh, under the management of John Ballantyne, a younger brother of James; and that this firm, with the acknowledged patronage of Scott and his friends, should engage in a series of extensive literary undertakings, including, amongst others, the annual publication of a historical and literary Register, conducted on Tory principles. But unfortunately both for Scott's peace of mind, and ultimately also for his worldly fortunes, there was here, as in his previously formed connection with the same family, an undivulged secret. The profits of the printing-house had been large; Scott's territorial ambition had been growing faster than his prospect of being able to feed it; and these causes, inextricably mixed up with pique towards Constable, and kindliness for his Kelso protégés, led him into an entanglement which at length ruined both himself and his associates. By the contract of the publishing house of John Ballantyne & Co., executed in May, 1808, Scott became a secret partner to the extent of one third. The unhappy issue of this affair will force itself on our notice at a later stage.

In the mean time we see him prosecuting for some time his career of poetical success. The Lady of the Lake, published in 1810, was followed by the Vision of Don Roderick in 1811; by Rokey in 1812; and by the Bridal of Triermain, which came out anonymously, in 1813. His poems may be said to have closed in 1815 with the Lord of the Isles and the Field of Waterloo; since Harold the Dauntless, in 1817, appeared without the writer's name, and the dramatic poems of 1822 and 1830 are quite unworthy of him. In the midst of these poetical employments he made his second and last great appearance as an editor and commentator of English classics, by publishing in 1814 his edition of Swift.

But from 1815 till 1825, Scott's name ceased almost entirely to be before the public as an avowed author; and for those who chose to believe that he was not the writer of the Waverley Novels it must have been a question not a little puzzling, if it ever occurred to them, how this man, who wrote with such ease, and seemed to take such pleasure in writing, was now occupying his hours of leisure. A few articles in the Quarterly Review, such works as Paul's Letters, and annotations in occasional editions of ancient tracts, accounted but poorly for his time during ten years.

About 1813 and 1814 his popularity as a poet was sensibly on the decline, partly from causes inherent in his later poems themselves, and partly from extraneous causes, among which a prominent place belongs to the appearance of Byron. No man was more quick-sighted than Scott in perceiving the ebb of popular favor; and no man better prepared to meet the reverse with firmness. He put in serious execution a threat which he had playfully uttered to one of his own family even before the publication of the Lady of the Lake. "If I fail now," said he, "I will write prose for life." And in writing prose his genius discovered, on its first attempt, a field in which it earned triumphs even more splendid than its early ones in the domain of poetry.

The chapters of fiction begun at Ashestiel in 1805, which had already been resumed and again thrown aside, were once more taken up, and the work was finished with miraculous rapidity; the second and third volumes having been written during the afternoons of three summer weeks in 1814. The novel appeared in July of that year, under the title of Waverley, and its success from the first was unequivocal and unparalleled. In the midst of occupations which would have taken away all leisure from other men, the press poured forth novels and romances in a succession so rapid as to deprive of some part of its absurdity one of the absurd suppositions of the day, namely, that more persons than one were concerned in their production. Guy Mannering, the second of the series, in 1815, was followed in 1816 by the Antiquary and the First Series of the Tales of My Landlord. Rob Roy appeared in 1817; the Second Series of the Tales in 1818; and in 1819 the Third Series and Ivanhoe. Two romances a year now seemed to be expected as the due of the public. The year 1820 gave them the Monastery and the Abbot; 1821, Kenilworth and the Pirate; the Fortunes of Nigel, coming out alone in 1822, was followed in 1823 by no fewer than three works of fiction, Peveril of the Peak, Quentin Durward, and St. Roman's Well; and the comparatively scanty number of novels in 1824 and 1825, which produced respectively only Redgauntlet and the Tales of the Crusaders, is accounted for by the fact that the author was engaged in preparing a large historical work.

It is impossible even to touch on the many interesting details which Scott's personal history presents during these brilliant years; but it is indispensable to say that his dream of territorial acquisition was realized with a splendor which, a few years before, he himself could not have hoped for. The first step was taken in 1811, by the purchase of a small farm of a hundred acres on the banks of the Tweed, which received the name of Abbotsford, and in a few years grew, by new purchases, into a large estate. The modest dwelling first planned on this little manor, with its two spare bed-rooms and its plain appurtenances, expanded itself in like manner with its master's waxing means of expenditure, till it had become that baronial castle which we now reverentially visit as the minstrel's home. The hospitality of the poet increased with his seeming prosperity; his mornings were dedicated to composition, and his evenings to society; and from the date of his baronetcy in 1820 to the final catastrophe in 1826, no mansion in Europe, of poet or of nobleman, could boast such a succession of guests illustrious for rank or talent as those who sat at Sir Walter Scott's board, and departed proud of having been so honored. His family meanwhile grew up around him; his eldest son and daughter married; most of his early friends continued to stand by his side; and few that saw the poet in 1825, a hale and seemingly happy man of fifty-four, could have guessed that there remained for him only a few more years (years of mortification and of sorrow) before he should sink into the grave, struck down by internal calamity, not by the gentle hand of time.

And yet not only was this the issue, but, even in the hour of his greatest seeming prosperity, Scott had again and again been secretly struggling against some of the most alarming anxieties. On details as to his unfortunate commercial engagements we cannot here enter. It is enough to say that the printing company of which he was a partner, which seems to have had considerable liabilities even before the establishment of the publishing house, was now inextricably entangled with the concerns of the latter, many of whose largest speculations had been completely unsuccessful; that, besides this, both firms were involved to an enormous extent with the house of Constable; and that large sums, which had been drawn by Sir Walter as copyright money for the novels, had been paid in bills which were still current, and threatening to come back on him.
In the beginning of 1826, Constable's house stopped payment; and the failure of the firm of Ballantyne, for a very large sum, followed instantly and of course. Probably even the utter ruin which this catastrophe brought upon Scott was not more painful to him than the exposure which it necessarily involved of those secret connections the existence of which even his most confidential friends could till now have at most only suspected. But if he had been imprudent, he was both courageous and honorable; and in no period of his life does he appear to such advantage as when he stood, as now, beggared, humbled, and covered with a load of debt from which no human exertions seemed able to relieve him. He came forward without a day's delay, and refused to be dealt with as an ordinary bankrupt, or to avail himself of those steps which would have set him free from the claims of his creditors, on surrendering his property to them. He insisted that these claims should, so far as regarded him, be still allowed to subsist; and he pledged himself that the labor of his future life should be unremittingly devoted to the discharge of them. He did more than fulfill his noble promise; for the gigantic toil to which, during years after this, he submitted, was the immediate cause that shortened his life. His self-sacrifice, however, effected astonishingly much towards the purpose which it was designed to serve. Between January, 1826, and January, 1828, he had realized for the creditors the surprising sum of nearly £40,000; and soon after his death the principal of the whole Ballantyne debt was paid up by his executors.

We have now briefly to describe the efforts by which this result was accomplished. After spending at Abbotsford, in 1826, a solitary summer, very unlike its former scenes of splendor, Scott, returning to town for his winter duties, and compelled to leave behind him his dying wife (who survived but till the spring), took up his residence in lodgings, and there continued that system of incessant and redoubled labor which he had already maintained for months, and maintained afterwards till it killed him. Woodstock, published in 1826, had been written during the crisis of his distresses; and the next fruit of his toil was the Life of Napoleon, which, commenced before the catastrophe, appeared in 1827, and was followed by the First Series of Chronicles of the Canongate; while to these again succeeded, in the end of the same year, the First Series of the Tales of a Grandfather. The year 1828 produced the Second Series of both of these works; 1829 gave Anne of Geierstein, the first volume of a History of Scotland for Lardner's Cyclopædia, and the Third Series of the Tales of a Grandfather. The same year also witnessed the commencement of that annotated publication of the collected novels which, together with the similar edition of the poetical works, was so powerful an instrument in effecting Scott's purpose of pecuniary disentanglement. In 1830 came two Dramas, the Letters on Demonology, the Fourth Series of the Tales of a Grandfather, and the second volume of the History of Scotland. If we are disappointed when we compare most of these works with the productions of younger and happier days, our criticism will be disarmed by a recollection of the honorable end which the later works promoted; and as to the last productions of the mighty master, the volumes of 1831, containing Count Robert and Castle Dangerous, no one who is acquainted with the melancholy circumstances under which these were composed and published will be capable of any feeling but that of compassionate respect.

The defection which it was impossible for Scott not to feel in commencing his self-imposed task was materially lightened, and his health invigorated, by an excursion to London and Paris in the course of 1826, for the purpose of collecting materials for the Life of Napoleon. In 1829 alarming symptoms appeared, and were followed by a paralytic attack in February, 1830, after which the tokens of the disease were always more or less perceptible to his family; but the severity of his tasks continued unremitting, although in that year he retired from his clerkship, and took up his permanent residence at Abbotsford. The mind was now but too evidently shaken, as well as the body; and the diary which he kept contains, about and after this time, melancholy misgivings of his own upon this subject. In April, 1831, he had the most severe shock of his disease that had yet attacked him; and having been at length persuaded to abandon literary exertion, he left Abbotsford in September of that year, on his way to the Continent, no country of which he had ever yet visited, except some parts of France and Flanders. This new tour was undertaken with the faint hope that abstinence from mental labor might for a time avert the impending blow. A ship of war, furnished for the purpose by the Admiralty, conveyed Sir Walter first to Malta and then to Naples; and the accounts which we have, both of the voyage and of his residence in Italy, abound with circumstances of melancholy interest. After the beginning of May, 1832, his mind was completely overthrown; his nervous impatience forced his companions to hurry him homeward from Rome through the Tyrol to Frankfort; in June they arrived in London, whence Sir Walter was conveyed by sea to Edinburgh; and, having reached Abbotsford on the 11th of July, he there continued to exist, with few intervals of consciousness, till the afternoon of the 21st of September, when he expired, having just completed the sixty-first year of his age. On the 26th he was buried in the beautiful ruins of Dryburgh Abbey.—From an edition of Scott's Poetry, published by Adam and Charles Black, Edinburgh, 1853.
THE

POETICAL WORKS

OF

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

The Lay of the Last Minstrel:

A POEM, IN SIX CANTOS.

Dum relego, scripsiisse pudet; quia plurima cerno,
Me quoque, qui fecit, judice, digna lini.

ADVERTISEMENT TO EDITION 1833.

The Introduction to The Lay of the Last Minstrel, written in April, 1830, was revised by the Author in the autumn of 1831, when he also made some corrections in the text of the Poem, and several additions to the notes. The work is now printed from his interleaved copy.

It is much to be regretted that the original MS. of this Poem has not been preserved. We are thus denied the advantage of comparing throughout the Author's various readings, which, in the case of Marmion, the Lady of the Lake, the Lord of the Isles, &c. are often highly curious and instructive.—Ed.

INTRODUCTION TO EDITION 1830.

A POEM of nearly thirty years' standing\(^1\) may be supposed hardly to need an Introduction, since, without one, it has been able to keep itself afloat through the best part of a generation. Nevertheless, as, in the edition of the Waverley Novels now in course of publication [1880], I have imposed on myself the task of saying something concerning the purpose and history of each, in their turn, I am desirous that the Poems for which I first received some marks of the public favor, should also be accompanied with such scraps of their literary history as may be supposed to carry interest along with them. Even if I should be mistaken in thinking that the secret history of what was once so popular may still attract public attention and curiosity, it seems to me not without its use to record the manner and circumstances under which the present, and other Poems on the same plan, attained for a season an extensive reputation.

I must resume the story of my literary labors at the period at which I broke off in the Essay on the Imitation of Popular Poetry [see post], when I had enjoyed the first gleam of public favor, by the success of the first edition of the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border. The second edition of that work, published in 1803, proved, in the language of the trade, rather a heavy concern. The demand in Scotland had been supplied by the first edition, and the curiosity of the English was not much awakened by poems in the rude garb of antiquity, accompanied with notes referring to the obscure feuds of barbarous clans, of whose very names civilized history was ignorant. It was, on the whole, one of those books which are more praised than they are read.\(^2\)

At this time I stood personally in a different position from that which I occupied when I first dipt my desperate pen in ink for other purposes than those of my profession. In 1796, when I first published the translations from Bürger, I was an insulated individual, with only my own wants to provide for, and having, in a great measure, my own inclinations alone to consult. In 1803, when the second edition of the Minstrelsy appeared, I had arrived at a period of life when men, however thoughtless, encounter duties and circumstances which press consideration and plans of life upon the most careless minds. I had been for some time married—was the father of a rising family, and, though fully enabled to meet the consequent demands upon me, it was my duty and desire to place myself in a situation which would enable me to make honorable provision against the various contingencies of life.

---

\(^1\) Published in quarto, January, 1805.

\(^2\) "The 'Lay' is the best of all possible comments on the Border Minstrelsy."—British Critic, August, 1805.

It may be readily supposed that the attempts which I had made in literature had been unfavorable to my success at the bar. The goddess Themis is, at Edinburgh, and I suppose everywhere else, of a peculiarly jealous disposition. She will not readily consent to share her authority, and sternly demands from her votaries, not only that real duty be carefully attended to and discharged, but that a certain air of business shall be observed even in the midst of total idleness. It is prudent, if not absolutely necessary, in a young barrister to appear completely engrossed by his profession; however destitute of employment he may in reality be, he ought to preserve, if possible, the appearance of full occupation. He should, therefore, seem perpetually engaged among his law-papers, dusting them, as it were; and, as Ovid advises the fair,

"Si nullus crit pulvis, tamen exspecta nullam."

Perhaps such extremity of attention is more especially required, considering the great number of counsellors who are called to the bar, and how very small a proportion of them are finally disposed, or find encouragement, to follow the law as a profession. Hence the number of deserters is so great, that the least lingering look behind occasions a young novice to be set down as one of the intending fugitives. Certain it is, that the Scottish Themis was at this time peculiarly jealous of any flirtation with the Muses on the part of those who had ranged themselves under her banners. This was probably owing to her consciousness of the superior attractions of her rivals. Of late, however, she has relaxed in some instances in this particular, an eminent example of which has been shown in the case of my friend Mr. Jeffrey, who, after long conducting one of the most influential literary periodicals of the age, with unquestionable ability, has been, by the general consent of his brethren, recently elected to be their Dean of Faculty, or President,—being the highest acknowledgment of his professional talents which they had it in their power to offer. But this is an incident much beyond the ideas of a period of thirty years' distance, when a barrister who really possessed any turn for lighter literature, was at as much pains to conceal it as if it had in reality been something to be ashamed of; and I could mention more than one instance in which literature and society have suffered much loss, that jurisprudence might be enriched.

1 "If dust be none, yet brush that none away."

2 Mr. Jeffrey, after conducting the Edinburgh Review for twenty-seven years, withdrew from that office in 1829, on Such, however, was not my case; for the reader will not wonder that my open interference with matters of light literature diminished my employment in the weightier matters of the law. Nor did the solicitors, upon whose choice the counsel takes rank in his profession, do me less than justice, by regarding others among my contemporaries as fitter to discharge the duty due to their clients than a young man who was taken up with running after ballads, whether Teutonic or national. My profession and I, therefore, came to a stand nearly upon the footing which honest Slender consol'd himself on having established with Mistress Anne Page: "There was no great love between us at the beginning, and it pleased Heaven to decrease it on further acquaintance." I became sensible that the time was come when I must either buckle myself resolutely to the "toil by day, the lamp by night," renouncing all the Delilahs of my imagination, or bid adieu to the profession of the law, and hold another course.

I confess my own inclination revolted from the more severe choice, which might have been deemed by many the wiser alternative. As my transgressions had been numerous, my repentance must have been signalized by unusual sacrifices. I ought to have mentioned that, since my fourteenth or fifteenth year, my health, originally delicate, had become extremely robust. From infancy I had labored under the infirmity of a severe lameness, but, as I believe is usually the case with men of spirit who suffer under personal inconveniences of this nature, I had, since the improvement of my health, in defiance of this incapacitating circumstance, distinguished myself by the endurance of toil on foot or horseback, having often walked thirty miles a day, and rode upwards of a hundred, without resting. In this manner I made many pleasant journeys through parts of the country then not very accessible, gaining more amusement and instruction than I have been able to acquire since I have travelled in a more commodious manner. I practiced most sylvan sports also, with some success, and with great delight. But these pleasures must have been all resigned, or used with great moderation, had I determined to regain my station at the bar. It was even doubtful whether I could, with perfect character as a jurisconsult, retain a situation in a volunteer corps of cavalry, which I then held. The threats of invasion were at this time instant and menacing; the call by Britain on her children was universal, and was answered by some, who, like myself, consulted rather their desire than their ability to bear arms. My services, however, were found useful in assisting to maintain the discipline of the corps, being the point on which their constitution rendered them most amenable to military criticism. In other being elected Dean of the Faculty of Advocates. In 1836, under Earl Grey's Ministry, he was appointed Lord Advocate of Scotland, and, in 1834, a Senator of the College of Justice by the title of Lord Jeffrey.—Ed. respects, the squadron was a fine one, consisting chiefly of handsome men, well mounted and armed at their own expense. My attention to the corps took up a good deal of time; and while it occupied many of the happiest hours of my life, it furnished an additional reason for my reluctance again to encounter the severe course of study indispensable to success in the juridical profession.

On the other hand, my father, whose feelings might have been hurt by my quitting the bar, had been for two or three years dead, so that I had no control to thwart my own inclination; and my income being equal to all the comforts, and some of the elegancies, of life, I was not pressed to an irksome labor by necessity, that most powerful of motives; consequently, I was the more easily seduced to choose the employment which was most agreeable to me. This was yet the easier that, in 1800, I had obtained the preferment of Sheriff of Selkirkshire, about £300 a year in value, and which was the more agreeable to me, as in that county I had several friends and relations. But I did not abandon the profession to which I had been educated without certain prudential resolutions, which, at the risk of some egotism, I will here mention, not without the hope that they may be useful to young persons who may stand in circumstances similar to those in which I then stood.

In the first place, upon considering the lives and fortunes of persons who had given themselves up to literature, or to the task of pleasing the public, it seemed to me that the circumstances which chiefly affected their happiness and character, were those from which Horace has bestowed upon authors the epithet of the "Irritable Race." It requires no depth of philosophic reflection to perceive that the petty warfare of Pope with the Dunci of his period could not have been carried on without his suffering the most acute torture, such as a man must endure from mosquitoes, by whose stings he suffers agony, although he can crush them in his grasp by myriads. Nor is it necessary to call to memory the many humiliating instances in which men of the greatest genius have, to avenge some pitiful quarrel, made themselves ridiculous during their lives, to become the still more degraded objects of pity to future times.

Upon the whole, as I had no pretension to the genius of the distinguished persons who had fallen into such errors, I concluded there could be no occasion for imitating them in their mistakes, or what I considered as such; and, in adopting literary pursuits as the principal occupation of my future life, I resolved, if possible, to avoid those weaknesses of temper which seemed to have most easily beset my more celebrated predecessors.

With this view, it was my first resolution to keep as far as was in my power abreast of society, continuing to maintain my place in general company, without yielding to the very natural temptation of narrowing myself to what is called literary society. By doing so, I imagined I should escape the besetting sin of listen-the reversion of a situation which completely met them.

Thus far all was well, and the Author had been guilty, perhaps, of no great imprudence when he relinquished his forensic practice with the hope of making some figure in the field of literature. But an established character with the public in my new capacity still remained to be acquired. I have noticed that the translations from Bürger had been unsuccessful, nor had the original poetry which appeared under the auspices of Mr. Lewis, in the "Tales of Wonder," in any great degree raised my reputation. It is true, I had private friends disposed to second me in my efforts to obtain popularity. But I was sportsman enough to know, that if the greyhound does not run well, the halloos of his patrons will not obtain the prize for him.

Neither was I ignorant that the practice of ballad-writing was for the present out of fashion, and that any attempt to revive it, or to found a poetical character upon it, would certainly fail of success. The ballad measure itself, which was once listened to as to an enchanting melody, had become hackneyed and sickening, from its being the accompaniment of every grinding hand-organ; and besides, a long work in quatrains, whether those of the common ballad or such as are termed elegiac, has an effect upon the mind like that of the bed of Procrustes upon the human body; for, as it must be both awkward and difficult to carry on a long sentence from one stanza to another, it follows that the meaning of each period must be comprehended within four lines, and equally so that it must be extended so as to fill that space. The alternate dilation and contraction thus rendered necessary is singularly unfavorable to narrative composition; and the "Gondibert" of Sir William D'Avenant, though containing many striking passages, has never become popular, owing chiefly to its being told in this species of elegiac verse.

In the dilemma occasioned by this objection, the idea occurred to the Author of using the measured short line, which forms the structure of so much minstrel poetry, that it may be properly termed the Romantic stanza, by way of distinction, and which appears so natural to our language, that the very best of our poets have not been able to protract it into the verse properly called Heroic, without the use of epithets which are, to say the least, unnecessary. But, on the other hand, the extreme facility of the short couplet, which seems congenial to our language, and was, doubtless for that reason, so popular with our old minstrels, is, for the same reason, apt to prove a snare to the composer who uses it in more modern days, by encouraging him in a habit of slovenly composition. The necessity of occasional pauses often forces the young poet to pay more attention to sense, as the boy's kite rises highest when the train is loaded by a due counterpoise. The Author was therefore intimidated by what Byron calls the "fatal facility" of the octosyllabic verse, which was otherwise better adapted to his purpose of imitating the more ancient poetry.

I was not less at a loss for a subject which might admit of being treated with the simplicity and wildness of the ancient ballad. But accident dictated both a theme and measure, which decided the subject as well as the structure of the poem.

The lovely young Countess of Dulketh, afterwards Harriet, Duchess of Buccleuch, had come to the land of her husband with the desire of making herself acquainted with its traditions and customs, as well as its manners and history. All who remember this lady will agree, that the intellectual character of her extreme beauty, the amenity and courtesy of her manner, the soundness of her understanding, and her unbounded benevolence, gave more the idea of an angelic visitant than of a being belonging to this nether world; and such a thought was but too consistent with the short space she was permitted to terry among us. Of course, where all made it a pride and pleasure to gratify her wishes, she soon heard enough of Border lore; among others, an aged gentleman of property, near Laugholm, communicated to her ladyship the story of Gillyn Horner, a tradition in which the narrator, and many more of that country, were firm believers. The young Countess, much delighted with the legend, and the gravity and full confidence with which it was told, enjoined on me as a task to compose a ballad on the subject. Of course, to hear was to obey; and thus the goblin story, objected to by several critics as an excrescence upon the poem, was, in fact, the occasion of its being written.

A chance similar to that which dictated the subject, gave me also the hint of a new mode of treating it. We had at that time the lease of a pleasant cottage, near Lasswade, on the romantic banks of the Esk, to which we escaped when the vacations of the Court permitted me so much leisure. Here I had the pleasure to receive a visit from Mr. Stoddart (now Sir lines on her death will be found in a subsequent page of this collection.—Ed.

1] Thus it has been often remarked, that, in the opening couplets of Pope's translation of the Iliad, there are two syllables forming a superfluous word in each line, as may be observed by attending to such words as are printed in italics.

Achilles' wrath to Greece the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess, sing;
That wrath which sent to Pluto's gloomy reign
The souls of mighty chiefs in battle slain,
Whose bones, unburied on the desert shore,
Devouring dogs and hungry vultures tore."

2] This was Mr. Beattie of Mickledale, a man then considerably upwards of eighty, of a shrewd and sarcastic temper, which he did not at all times suppress, as the following anecdote will show:—A worthy clergyman, now deceased, with better good-will than tact, was endeavoring to push the senior forward in his recollection of Border ballads and legends, by expressing reiterated surprise at his wonderful memory. "No, sir," said old Mickledale; "my memory is good for little, for it cannot retain what ought to be preserved. I can remember all these stories about the annual riding days, which are of John Stoddart, Judge Advocate at Malta), who was at that time collecting the particulars which he afterwards embodied in his Remarks on Local Scenery in Scotland. I was of some use to him in procuring the information which he desired, and guiding him to the scenes which he wished to see. In return, he made me better acquainted than I had hitherto been with the poetic effusions which have since made the Lakes of Westmorland, and the authors by whom they have been sung, so famous wherever the English tongue is spoken.

I was already acquainted with the "Joan of Arc," the "Thalaba," and the "Metrical Ballads" of Mr. Southey, which had found their way to Scotland, and were generally admired. But Mr. Stoddart, who had the advantage of personal friendship with the authors, and who possessed a strong memory with an excellent taste, was able to repeat to me many long specimens of their poetry, which had not yet appeared in print. Amongst others, was the striking fragment called Christabel, by Mr. Coleridge, which, from the singularly irregular structure of the stanzas, and the liberty which it allowed the author to adapt the sound to the sense, seemed to be exactly suited to such an extravaganza as I meditated on the subject of Gilpin Horner. As applied to comic and humorous poetry, this mesolanza of measures had been already used by Anthony Hall, Austey, Dr. Wolcott, and others; but it was in Christabel that I first found it used in serious poetry, and it is to Mr. Coleridge that I am bound to make the acknowledgment due from the pupil to his master. I observe that Lord Byron, in noticing my obligations to Mr. Coleridge, which I have been always most ready to acknowledge, expressed, or was understood to express, a hope that I did not write an unfriendly review on Mr. Coleridge's productions.

On this subject I have only to say, that I do not even know the review which is alluded to; and were I ever to take the unbecoming freedom of censoring a man of Mr. Coleridge's extraordinary talents, it would be on account of the caprice and indulgence with which he has thrown from him, as if in mere wantonness, those unfinished scraps of poetry which, like the Torso of antiquity, defy the skill of his poetical brethren to complete them. The charming fragments which the author abandons to their fate, are surely too valuable to be treated like the proofs of careless engravers, the sweepings of whose studios often make the fortune of some painstaking collector.

I did not immediately proceed upon my projected labor, though I was now furnished with a subject, and with a structure of verse which might have the effect of novelty to the public ear, and afford the author an opportunity of varying his measure with the variations of a romantic theme. On the contrary, it was, to the best of my recollection, more than a year after Mr. Stoddart's visit that, by way of experiment, I composed the first two or three stanzas of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel." I was shortly afterwards visited by two intimate friends, one of whom still survives. They were men whose talents might have raised them to the highest station in literature, had they not preferred exerting them in their own profession of the law, in which they attained equal preferment. I was in the habit of consulting them on my attempts at composition, having equal confidence in their sound taste and friendly sincerity. In this specimen I had, in the phrase of the Highland servant, packed all that was my own at least, for I had also included a line of invocation, a little softened, from Coleridge—

"Mary, mother, shield us well."

As neither of my friends said much to me on the subject of the stanzas I showed them before their departure, I had no doubt that their disgust had been greater than their good nature chose to express. Looking upon them, therefore, as a failure, I threw the manuscript into the fire, and thought as little more as I could of the matter. Some time afterwards I met one of my two counsellors, who inquired, with considerable appearance of interest, about the progress of the romance I had commenced, and was greatly surprised at learning its fate. He confessed that neither he nor our mutual friend had been at first able to give a precise opinion on a poem so much out of the common road; but that as they walked home together to the city, they had talked much on the subject, and the result was an earnest desire that I would proceed with the composition. He also added, that some sort of prologue might be necessary, to place the mind of the hearers in the situation to understand and enjoy the poem, and recommended the adoption of such quaint mottoes as Spenser has used to announce the contents of the chapters of the Faery Queen, such as—

"Robe's bloody hands may not be cleansed.

The face of golden Mean:
Her sisters two, Extremities,
Strive her to banish clean."

I entirely agreed with my friendly critic in the necessity of having some sort of pitch-pipe, which might

---

1 Two volumes, royal octavo, 1811.
2 Medwin's Conversations of Lord Byron, p. 309.
3 Sir Walter, elsewhere, in allusion to "Coleridge's beautiful and tantalizing fragment of Christabel," says, "Has not our own imaginative poet cause to fear that future ages will desire to summon him from his place of rest, as Milton longed to summon Homer from his slumbers in the shade of the island of the Phlegraean Fields?"
4 One of these, William Erskine, Esq. (Lord Kinnoul), I have often had occasion to mention, and though I may hardly be thanked for disclosing the name of the other, yet I cannot but state that the second is George Cranstoun, Esq., now a Senator of the College of Justice, by the title of Lord Corehouse. 1831.—[Mr. Cranstoun resigned his seat on the Bench in 1839.]
5 Book II. canto II.

'To call up him who left half told
The story of Cambuscan hold?'

Notes to the Abbot.—Ed.
make readers aware of the object, or rather the tone, of the publication. But I doubted whether, in assuming the oracular style of Spenser's mottoes, the interpreter might not be censured as the harder to be understood of the two. I therefore introduced the Old Minstrel, as an appropriate prolocutor, by whom the lay might be sung, or spoken, and the introduction of whom betwixt the cantos might remind the reader at intervals of the time, place, and circumstances of the recitation. This species of cadre, or frame, afterwards afforded the poem its name of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel."

The work was subsequently shown to other friends during its progress, and received the imprimatur of Mr. Francis Jeffrey, who had been already for some time distinguished by his critical talent. The poem, being once licensed by the critics as fit for the market, was soon finished, proceeding at about the rate of a canto per week. There was, indeed, little occasion for pause or hesitation, when a troublesome rhyme might be accomplished by an alteration of the stanza, or where an incorrect measure might be remedied by a variation of the rhyme. It was finally published in 1807, and may be regarded as the first work in which the writer, who has been since so voluminous, laid his claim to be considered as an original author. The book was published by Longman & Co., and Archibald Constable & Co. The principal of the latter firm was then commencing that course of bold and liberal industry which was of so much advantage to his country, and might have been so to himself, but for causes which it is needless to enter into here. The work, brought out on the usual terms of division of profits between the Author and publishers, was not long after purchased by them for £500, to which Messrs. Longman & Co. afterwards added £100, in their own unsolicited kindness, in consequence of the uncommon success of the work. It was handsomely given to supply the loss of a fine horse, which broke down suddenly while the Author was riding with one of the worthy publishers.1

It would be great affectation not to own frankly that the Author expected some success from "The Lay of the Last Minstrel." The attempt to return to a more simple and natural style of poetry was likely to be welcomed, at a time when the public had become tired of heroic hexameters, with all the buckram and binding which belong to them of later days. But whatever might have been his expectations, whether moderate or unreasonable, the result left them far behind, for among those who smiled on the adventurous Minstrel, were numbered the great names of William Pitt and Charles Fox.2 Neither was the extent of the sale inferior to the character of the judges who received the poem with approbation. Upwards of thirty thousand copies of the Lay were disposed of by the trade; and the Author had to perform a task difficult to human vanity, when called upon to make the necessary deductions from his own merits, in a calm attempt to account for his popularity.3

A few additional remarks on the Author's literary attempts after this period, will be found in the Introduction to the Poem of Marmion.

ABBOTSFORD, April, 1830.

---

1 Mr. Owen Rees, here alluded to, retired from the house of Longman & Co., at Midsummer, 1837, and died 5th September following, in his 67th year.—Ed.

2 "Through what channel or in what terms Fox made known his opinion of the Lay, I have failed to ascertain. Pitt's praise, as expressed to his niece, Lady Hester Stanhope, within a few weeks after the poem appeared, was repeated by her to Mr. William Stewart Rose, who, of course, communicated it forthwith to the author; and not long after, the Minister, in conversation with Scott's early friend, the Right Hon. William Dundas, signified that it would give him pleasure to find some opportunity of advancing the fortunes of such a writer. 'I remember,' writes this gentleman, 'at Mr. Pitt's table in 1805, the Chancellor asked me about you and your then situation, and after I had answered him, Mr. Pitt observed—'He can't remain as he is,' and desired me to "look to it."'"—Lockhart. Life of Scott, vol. ii. p. 226.

3 "The poet has under-estimated even the patent and tangible evidence of his success. The first edition of the Lay was a magnificent quarto, 750 copies; but this was soon exhausted, and there followed an octavo impression of 1500; in 1806, two more, one of 2000 copies, another of 2250; in 1807, a fifth edition, of 2000, and a sixth, of 3000; in 1808, 3550; in 1809, 3069—a small edition in quarto (the ballads and lyric pieces being then annexed to it)—and another octavo edition of 2250; in 1811, 3000; in 1812, 3000; in 1816, 3000; in 1825, 1000. A fourteenth impression of 2000 foolscap appeared in 1823. And besides all this, before the end of 1830, 11,000 copies had gone forth in the collected editions of his poetical works. Thus, nearly forty-four thousand copies had been disposed of in this country, and by the legitimate trade alone, before he superintended the edition of 1830, to which his biographical introductions were prefixed. In the history of British Poetry nothing had ever equaled the demand for the Lay of the Last Minstrel."—Life, vol. ii. p. 226.
INTRODUCTION.

The way was long, the wind was cold,
The Minstrel was infirm and old;

1 "The chief excellence of The Lay consists in the beauty of the descriptions of local scenery, and the accurate picture of customs and manners among the Scottish Borderers at the time it refers to. The various exploits and adventures which occur in those half-civilized times, when the bands of government were so loosely twisted, that every man depended for safety more on his own arm, or the prowess of his chief, than on the civil power, may be said to hold a middle rank between history and private anecdote. War is always most picturesque where it is least formed into a science; it has most variety and interest where the prowess and activity of individuals has most play; and the nocturnal expedition of Diomel and Ulysses to seize the chariot and horses of Rhesus, or a raid of the Scots or the Kerrs to drive cattle, will make a better figure in verse, than all the battles of the great King of Prussia. The steud-dog, the beacon-fires, the Jedwood-axes, the musk-troopers, the yell of the slygan, and all the irregular warfare of predatory expedition, or feuds of hereditary vengeance, are far more captivating to the imagination than a park of artillery and battalions of well-drilled soldiers."—Annual Review, 1834.

2 "It must be observed, that there is this difference between the license of the old romancer, and that assumed by Mr. Scott; the aberrations of the first are usually casual and slight; those of the other premeditated and systematic. The old romancer may be compared to a man who trusts his reins to his horse; his palfrey often blunders, and occasionally breaks his pace, sometimes from vivacity, oftener through indolence. Mr. Scott sets out with the intention of diversifying his journey by every variety of motion. He is now at a trot, now at a gallop; nay, he sometimes stops, as if to 'Make graceful caprice, and prance between the pillars.'

A main objection to this plan is to be found in the shock which the ear receives from violent and abrupt transitions. On the other hand, it must be allowed, that as different species of verse are individually better suited to the expression of the different ideas, sentiments, and passions, which it is the object of poetry to convey, the happiest efforts may be produced by adapting to the subject its most congenial structure of verse."—Critical Review, 1835.

3 "From the novelty of its style and subject, and from the spirit of its execution, Mr. Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel kindled a sort of enthusiasm among all classes of readers; and the concurrent voice of the public assigned to it a very exalted rank, which, on more cool and dispassionate examination, its numerous essential beauties will enable it to maintain. For vivid richness of coloring and truth of costume, many of its descriptive pictures stand almost unrivalled; it carries us back in imagination to the time of action; and we wander with the poet along Tweedside, or among the wild glades of Etrick Forest."—Monthly Review, May, 1808.

4 "We consider this poem as an attempt to transfer the refinements of modern poetry to the matter and the manner of the ancient metrical romance. The author, enamored of
The Minstrel gazed with wishful eye—
No humbler resting-place was nigh,
With hesitating step at last,
The embattled portal arch he pass'd,
Whose ponderous grate and massy bar
Had oft roll'd back the tide of war,
But never closed the iron door
Against the desolate and poor.
The Duchess mark'd his weary pace,
His timid mien, and reverend face,
And bade her page the menials tell,
That they should tend the old man well:
For she had known adversity,
Though she in such a high degree:
In pride of power, in beauty's bloom,
Had wept o'er Monmouth's bloody tomb!

When kindness had his wants supplied,
And the old man was gratified,
Began to rise his minstrel pride:
And he began to talk anon,
Of good Earl Francis, \(^4\) dead and gone, immediate vicinity, called Auldwarke, founded, it is said, by Alexander III. Both were designed for the royal residence when the king was disposed to take his pleasure in the extensive forest of Ettrick. Various grants occur in the records of the Privy Seal, bestowing the keeping of the Castle of Newark upon different barons. There is a popular tradition that it was once seized, and held out by the outlaw Murray, a noted character in song, who only surrendered Newark upon condition of being made hereditary sheriff of the forest. A long ballad, containing an account of this transaction, is preserved in the Border Minstrelsy (vol. i. p. 569). Upon the marriage of James IV. with Margaret, sister of Henry VIII., the Castle of Newark, with the whole Forest of Ettrick, was assigned to her as a part of her jointure lands. But of this she could make little advantage; for, after the death of her husband, she is found complaining heavily, that Buccleuch had seized upon these lands. Indeed, the office of keeper was latterly held by the family of Buccleuch, and with firm grasp, that when the Forest of Ettrick was disparked, they obtained a grant of the Castle of Newark in property. It was within the court-yard of this castle that General Lesly did military execution upon the prisoners whom he had taken at the battle of Philiphaugh. The castle continued to be an occasional seat of the Buccleuch family for more than a century; and here, it is said, the Duchess of Monmouth and Buccleuch was brought up. For this reason, probably, Mr. Scott has chosen to make it the scene in which the Lay of the Last Minstrel is recited in her presence, and for her amusement.—Schuyler's Illustrations of the Lay of the Last Minstrel.

It may be added that Bowhill was the favorite residence of Lord and Lady Dalkeith (afterwards Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch) at the time when the poem was composed; the ruins of Newark are all but included in the park attached to that modern seat of the family; and Sir Walter Scott, no doubt, was influenced in his choice of the locality, by the predilection of the charming lady who suggested the subject of his Lay for the scenery of the Yarrow—a beautiful walk on whose banks, leading from the house to the old castle, is called, in memory of her, the Duchess's Walk—Ed.

3 Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth, representative of the ancient Lords of Buccleuch, and widow of the unfortunate James, Duke of Monmouth, who was beheaded in 1685.
4 Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, father of the Duchess.
And of Earl Walter,1 rest him God!
A braver ne'er to battle rode;
And how full many a tale he knew,
Of the old warriors of Buccleuch:
And, would the noble Duchess design
To listen to an old man's strain,
Though stiff his hand, his voice though weak,
He thought even yet, the sooth to speak,
That, if she loved the harp to hear,
He could make music to her ear.

The humble boon was soon obtain'd;
The Aged Minstrel audience gain'd.
But when he reach'd the room of state,
Where she, with all her ladies, sate,
Perchance he wish'd his boon denied;
For, when to tune his harp he tried,
His trembling hand had lost the case,
Which marks security to please;
And scenes, long past, of joy and pain,
Came wildering o'er his aged brain—
He tried to tune his harp in vain!

The pitying Duchess praised its chime,
And gave him heart, and gave him time,
Till every string's according glee
Was blended into harmony.
And then, he said, he would full plain
He could recall an ancient strain,
He never thought to sing again.
It was not framed for village churls,
But for high dames and mighty earls;
He had play'd it to King Charles the Good,
When he kept court in Holyrood:
And much he wish'd, yet fear'd, to try
The long-forgotten melody.
Amid the strings his fingers stray'd,
And an uncertain warbling made,
And oft he shook his hoary head.
But when he caught the measure wild,
The old man raised his face and smiled;

And lighten'd up his faded eye,
With all a poet's ecstasy!
In varying cadence, soft or strong,
He swept the sounding chords along;
The present scene, the future lot,
His toils, his wants were all forgot:
Cold diffidence, and age's frost,
In the full tide of song were lost;
Each blank, in faithless memory void,
The poet's glowing thought supplied;
And, while his harp responsive rung,
'Twas thus the Latest Minstrel sung.5

---

The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

CANTO FIRST.

I.

The feast was over in Branksome tower;4
And the Ladye had gone to her secret bower;
Her bower that was guarded by word and by spell,
Deadly to hear, and deadly to tell—
Jesu Maria, shield us well!
No living wight, save the Ladye alone,
Had dared to cross the threshold stone.

II.

The tables were drawn, it was idlesse all;
Knight, and page, and household squire,
Loiter'd through the lofty hall,
Or crowned round the ample fire:
The stag-hounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretch'd upon the ruddy floor,
And urged, in dreams, the forest race,
From Teviot-stone to Eskdale moor.5

---

1 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, grandfather of the Duchess, and a celebrated warrior.
2 "Mr. W. Dumas (see Life of Scott, vol. ii. p. 236) says, that Pitt repeated the lines, describing the old harper's embarrassment when asked to play, and said,—'This is a sort of thing which I might have expected in painting, but could never have fancied capable of being given in poetry.'"
3 "In the very first rank of poetical excellence, we are inclined to place the introductory and concluding lines of every canto, in which the ancient strain is suspended, and the feelings and situation of the minstrel himself described, in the words of the author. The elegance and the beauty of this setting, if we may so call it, though entirely of modern workmanship, appears to us to be fully more worthy of admiration than the better relief of the antiques which it encloses, and leads us to regret that the author should have wasted, in imitation and antiquarian researches, so much of those powers which seem fully equal to the task of raising an independent reputation."—JEFFREY.
4 See Appendix, Note A.
5 "The ancient romance owes much of its interest to the lively picture which it affords of the times of chivalry, and of those usages, manners, and institutions, which we have been accustomed to associate in our minds, with a certain combination of magnificence with simplicity, and ferocity with romantic honor. The representations contained in those performances, however, are, for the most part, too rude and naked to give complete satisfaction. The execution is always extremely unequal; and though the writer sometimes touches upon the appropriate feeling with great effect and felicity, still this appears to be done more by accident than design; and he wanders away immediately into all sorts of ridiculous or uninteresting details, without any apparent consciousness of incongruity. These defects Mr. Scott has corrected with admiral address and judgment in the greater part of the work now before us; and while he has exhibited a very striking and impressive picture of the old feudal usages and institutions, he has shown still greater talent in engraving upon those descriptions all the tender or magnanimous emotions to which the circumstances of the story naturally give rise. Without impairing the antique air of the whole piece, or violating the simplicity of the ballad style, he has contrived, in
III.
Nine-and-twenty knights of fame
Hung their shields in Branksome Hall;¹
Nine-and-twenty squires of name
Brought them their steeds to bower from stall;
Nine-and-twenty yeomen tall
Waited, duteous, on them all:
They were all knights of mettle true,
Kinsmen to the bold Buccleuch.

IV.
Ten of them were sheathed in steel,
With belted sword, and spur on heel:
They quitted not their harness bright,
Neither by day, nor yet by night:
They lay down to rest,
With corselet laced,
Pillow’d on buckler cold and hard;
They carved at the meal
With gloves of steel,
And they drank the red wine through the helmet barr’d.

V.
Ten squires, ten yeomen, mail-clad men,
Waited the beck of the warders ten;
Thirty steeds, both fleet and wight,
Stood saddled in stable day and night,
Barbed with frontlet of steel, I trow,
And with Jedwood-axe at saddlebow²
A hundred more fed free in stall:—
Such was the custom of Branksome Hall.

VI.
Why do these steeds stand ready dight?
Why watch these warriors, arm’d, by night?—
They watch to hear the blood-hound baying;
They watch to hear the war-horn braying;
To see St. George’s red cross streaming,
To see the midnight beacon gleaming:
They watch, against Southern force and guile,
Lest Scoop, or Howard, or Percy’s powers,
Threaten Branksome’s lordly towers,
From Warkworth, or Naworth, or merry Carlisle.³

VII.
Such is the custom of Branksome Hall.—⁴
Many a valiant knight is here;
But he, the chieftain of them all,
His sword hangs rusting on the wall,
Beside his broken spear.
Bars long shall tell
How Lord Walter fell!⁵
When startled burgheurs fled, afar,
The furies of the Border war;
When the streets of high Dunedin⁶
Saw lances gleam, and falcheons reden,
And heard the slogan’s deadly yell—
Then the Chief of Branksome fell.

VIII.
Can piety the discord heal,
Or stanch the death-feud’s enmity?
Can Christian lore, can patriot zeal,
Can love of blessed charity?
No! vainly to each holy shrine,
In mutual pilgrimage, they drew;
Implored, in vain, the grace divine
For chiefs, their own red falcheons slew:
While Cessford owns the rule of Carr,
While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott,
The slaughter’d chiefs, the mortal jar,
The havoc of the feudal-war,
Shall never, never be forgot!⁸

IX.
In sorrow o’er Lord Walter’s bier
The warlike foresters had bent;
And many a flower, and many a tear,
Old Teviot’s maids and matrons lent:
But o’er her warrior’s bloody bier
The Ladye dropp’d nor flower nor tear.⁹
Vengeance, deep-brooding o’er the slain,
Had lock’d the source of softer woe;
And burning pride, and high disdain,
Forbidden the rising tear to flow;
Until, amid his sorrowing clan,
Her son lisp’d from the nurse’s knee—
“And if I live to be a man,
My father’s death revenged shall be!”

¹ See Appendix, Note B.
² See Appendix, Note C.
³ See Appendix, Note D, and compare these stanzas with the description of Jamie Telfer’s appearance at Branksome Hall (Border Minstrelsy, vol. ii. p. 5), to claim the protection of “Auld Buccleuch”—and the ensuing scene (page 9).—Jeffrey.
⁴ “The Scots they raile, the Scots they ran,
Sae starkly and sae steadilie!
And aye the ower-word o’ the thrang
Was—’Rike for Branksome readilie,’” &c.—Ed.
⁵ Compare also the Ballad of Kinmont Willie (vol. ii. p. 53).
⁶ “Now word is gane to the baild keeper,
In Branksome la’ where that he lay,” &c.—Ed.
⁷ There are not many passages in English poetry more impressive than some parts of Stanzas vii. viii. ix.”—Jeffrey.
⁸ See Appendix, Note E.
⁹ Edinburgh.
⁵ The war-ery, or gathering-word, of a Border clan.
⁸ See Appendix, Note F.
Then fast the mother's tears did seek
To dew the infant's kindling cheek.

X.
All loose her negligent attire,
All loose her golden hair,
Hung Margaret o'er her slaughter'd sire,
And wept in wild despair.
But not alone the bitter tear
Had filial grief supplied;
For hopeless love, and anxious fear,
Had lent their mingled tide:
Nor in her mother's alter'd eye
Dared she to look for sympathy.
Her lover, 'gainst her father's clan,
With Carr in arms had stood,¹
When Mathouse-burn to Melrose ran,
All purple with their blood:
And well she knew, her mother dreed,
Before Lord Cranston she should wed,²
Would see her on her dying bed.

XI.
Of noble race the Ladye came,
Her father was a clerk of fame,
Of Bethune's line of Picardie;³
He learn'd the art that none may name,
In Padua, far beyond the sea.⁴
Men said he changed his mortal frame
By feat of magic mystery;
For when, in studious mood, he paced
St. Andrew's cloister'd hall,⁵
His form no darkening shadow traced
Upon the sunny wall.⁶

XII.
And of his skill, as bards avow,
He taught that Ladye fair,
Till to her bidding she could bow
The viewless forms of air;⁷
And now she sits in secret bower,
In old Lord David's western tower,
And listens to a heavy sound,
That moans the mossy turrets round.
Is it the roar of Teviot's tide,
That chafes against the sower's red side?
Is it the wind that swings the oaks?
Is it the echo from the rocks?
What may it be, the heavy sound
That moans old Branksome's turrets round?

XIII.
At the sullen, moaning sound,
The ban-dogs bay and howl;
And, from the turrets round,
Loud whoops the startled owl,
In the hall, both squire and knight
Sware that a storm was near,
And looked forth to view the night;
But the night was still and clear!

XIV.
From the sound of Teviot's tide,
Chaffing with the mountain's side,
From the groan of the wind-swung oak,
From the sullen echo of the rock,
From the voice of the coming storm,
The Ladye knew it well!
It was the Spirit of the Flood that spoke,
And he called on the Spirit of the Fell.

XV.
River spirit.
"Sleep'st thou, brother?"—
Mountain spirit.
"'Brother, nay—"
On my hills the moonbeams play.
From Craik-cross to SkelHill-pen,
By every rill, in every glen,
Merry elves their morris pacing,
To aerial minstrelsy,
Emerald rings on brown heath tracing,
Trip it delf and merrily.
Up, and mark their nimble feet!
Up, and list their music sweet!" ¹

XVI.
River spirit.
"Tears of an imprison'd maiden
Mix with my polluted stream;
Margaret of Branksome, sorrow-laden,
Mourns beneath the moon's pale beam.
Tell me, thou, who view'st the stars,
When shall cease these feudal jars?
What shall be the maiden's fate?
Who shall be the maiden's mate?"—

XVII.
Mountain spirit.
"Arthur's slow wain his course doth roll
In utter darkness round the pole;
The Northern Bear lowers black and grim;
Orion's studded belt is dim;
Twinkling faint, and distant far,
Shimmers through mist each planet star;
Ill may I read their high decree!
But no kind influence deign they shower
On Teviot's tide, and Branksome's tower,
Till pride be quell'd, and love be free!" ²

¹ See Appendix, Note G. (The name is spelt differently by the various families who bear it. Carr is selected, not as the most correct, but as the most poetical reading.)
² See Appendix, Note H.
³ Ibid. Note I.
⁴ See Appendix, Note K.
⁵ First Edition—"St. Kentigerne's hall."—St. Mungo, or Kentigerne, is the patron saint of Glasgow.
⁶ See Appendix, Note L.
⁷ Ibid. Note M.
⁸ Sear, a precipitous bank of earth.
XVIII.
The unearthly voices ceast,
And the heavy sound was still;
It died on the river's breast,
It died on the side of the hill.
But round Lord David's tower
The sound still floated near;
For it rang in the Ladye's bower,
And it rang in the Ladye's ear.
She raised her stately head,
And her heart throbbed high with pride:
"Your mountains shall bend,
And your streams ascend,
Ere Margaret be our fomian's bride."

XIX.
The Ladye sought the lofty hall,
Where many a bold retainer lay,
And, with jocund din, among them all,
Her son pursued his infant play.
A funicled moss-trooper,¹ the boy
The truncheon of a spear bestrode,
And round the hall, right merrily,
In minie foray² rode.
Even bearded knights, in arms grown old,
Share in his frolic gambols bore,
Albeit their hearts, of rugged mould,
Were stubborn as the steel they wore.
For the gray warriors prophesied,
How the brave boy, in future war,
Should tame the Unicorn's pride,³
Exalt the Crescent and the Star.⁴

XX.
The Ladye forgot her purpose high,
One moment, and no more;
One moment gazed with a mother's eye,
As she passed at the arched door:
Then from amid the armed train,
She call'd to her William of Deloraine.⁵

XXI.
A stark moss-trooping Scott was he,
As 'er euch'd Border lance by knee;
Through Solway sands, through Terras moss,
Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross;
By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best blood-hounds;⁶
In Eske or Liddel, fords were none,
But he would ride them, one by one;
Alike to him was time or tide,
December's snow, or July's pride;
Alike to him was tide or time,
Moonless midnight, or morn prime:
Steady of heart, and stout of hand,
As ever drove prey from Cumberland;
Five times outlawed had he been,
By England's King, and Scotland's Queen.

XXII.
"Sir William of Deloraine, good at need,
Morn thee on the wightest steed;
Spare not to spur, nor stint to ride,
Until thou come to fair Tweedsid;
And in Melrose's holy pile
Seek thou the Monk of St. Mary's aisle.
Greet the Father well from me;
Say that the fated hour has come,
And to-night he shall watch with thee,
To win the treasures of the tomb:
For this will be St. Michael's night,
And, though stars be dim, the moon is bright;
And the Cross, of bloody red,
Will point to the grave of the mighty dead.

XXIII.
"What he gives thee, see thou keep;
Stay not thou for food or sleep:
Be it scroll, or be it book,
Into it, Knight, thou must not look;
If thou readest, thou art lorn!
Better hadst thou ne'er been born."—

XXIV.
"Oh, swiftly can speed my dapple-gray steed,
Which drinks of the Teviot clear;
Ere break of day," the Warrior 'gan say,
"Again will I be here:
And safer by none may thy errand be done,
Than, noble dame, by me;
Letter nor line know I never a one,
Wer't my neck-verse at Hairibee."⁷

XXV.
Soon in his saddle sat he fast,
And soon the steep descent he past,
Soon cross'd the sounding barbarian,⁸
And soon the Teviot side he won.
Eastward the wooded path he rode,
Green hazels o'er his basnet nod;
He pass'd the Peel⁹ of Goldiluid,
And cross'd old Borthwick's roaring strand;
Dimly he view'd the Moat-hill's mound,
Where Druid shades still flitted round.¹⁰

¹ See Appendix, Note N.
² Firing, a predatory brand.
³ This line, of which the metre appears defective, would have its full complement of feet according to the pronunciation of the poet himself—as all who were familiar with his utterance of the letter r will bear testimony.—Ed.
⁴ See Appendix, Note O. ⁵ Ibid, Note P. ⁶ Ibid, Note Q.
⁷ Hairibee, the place of executing the Border marauders at Carlisle. The neck-verse is the beginning of the 51st Psalm.
⁸ Barbian, the defence of the outer gate of a feudal castle.
⁹ Peel, a Border tower.
¹⁰ See Appendix, Note R.
In Hawick twinkled many a light;
Behind him soon they set in night;
And soon he spurr'd his courser keen
Beneath the tower of Hazeldean.\(^1\)

XXVI.
The clattering hoofs the watchmen mark;—
"Stand, ho! thou courier of the dark."—
"For Branksome, ho!" the Knight rejoin'd,
And left the friendly tower behind.
He turn'd him now from Teviotside,
And, guided by the tinkling rill,
Northward the dark ascent did ride,
And gain'd the moor at Horseshill;
Broad on the left before him lay,
For many a mile, the Roman way.\(^2\)

XXVII.
A moment now he slack'd his speed,
A moment breathed his panting steed;
Drew saddle-girth and corselet-band,
And loosen'd in the sheath his brand.
On Minto-craggs the moonbeams glint,\(^3\)
Where Barnhill hew'd his bed of flint;
Who flung his outlaw'd limbs to rest,
Where falcons hang their giddy nest,
Mid cliffs, from whence his eagle eye
For many a league his prey could spy;
Cliffs, doubling, on their echoes borne,
The terrors of the robber's horn;
Cliffs, which, for many a later year,
The warbling Doric reed shall hear,
When some sad swain shall teach the grove,
Ambition is no cure for love!

XXVIII.
Unchallenged, thence pass'd Deloraine,
To ancient Riddell's fair domain,\(^4\)
Where Aill, from mountains freed,
Down from the lakes did raving come;
Each wave was crested with tawny foam,
Like the mane of a chestnut steed.
In vain! no torrent, deep or broad,
Might bar the bold moss-trooper's road.

XXX.
Now Bowden Moor the march-man won,
And sternly shook his plumed head,
As glanced his eye o'er Haldon;\(^6\)
For on his soul the slaughter red
Of that unhallow'd morn arose,
When first the Scott and Carr were foes;
When royal James beheld the fray,
Prize to the victor of the day;
When Home and Douglas in the van
Bore down Buccleuch's retiring clan,
Till gallant Cessford's heart-blood dear
Reck'd on dark Elliot's Border spear.

XXXI.
In bitter mood he spurred fast,
And soon the hated heath was past;
And far beneath, in lustre wan,
Old Melros' rose, and fair Tweed ran:
Like some tall rock with lichens gray,
Seem'd dimly huge, the dark Abbaye.
When Hawick he pass'd, had ear-row rung,
Now midnight lands\(^7\) were in Melrose sung.
The sound, upon the fitful gale,
In solemn wise did rise and fail,
Like that wild harp, whose magic tone
Is waken'd by the winds alone.
But when Melrose he reach'd, 'twas silence all;
He meetly stayed his steed in stall,
And sought the convent's lonely wall.\(^8\)

HERE paused the harp; and with its swell
The Master's fire and courage fell;
Dejectedly, and low, he bow'd,
And gazing timid on the crowd,
He seem'd to seek, in every eye,
If they approved his minstrelsy;
And, diffident of present praise,
Somewhat he spoke of former days,
And how old age, and wand'ring long,
Had done his hand and harp some wrong.
The Duchess, and her daughters fair,
And every gentle lady there,
Each after each, in due degree,
Gave praises to his melody;
His hand was true, his voice was clear,
And much they long'd the rest to hear.
Encouraged thus, the Aged Man,
After meet rest, again began.

---
\(^1\) See Appendix, Note 8.
\(^2\) An ancient Roman road, crossing through part of Roxburghshire.
\(^3\) See Appendix, Note T.
\(^4\) Ibid. Note U.
\(^5\) Barded, or barbed,—applied to a horse accoutred with defensive armor.
\(^6\) Haldon was an ancient seat of the Kerrs of Cessford, now demolished. About a quarter of a mile to the northward lay the field of battle betwixt Buccleuch and Angus, which is called to this day the Skirmish Field.—See Appendix, Note D.
\(^7\) Land, the midnight service of the Catholic church.
\(^8\) See Appendix, Note V.
The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

CANTO SECOND.

I.

If thou would'st view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild, but to flout, the ruins gray.
When the broken arches are black in night,
And each shafted oriel glimmers white;
When the cold light's uncertain shower
Streams on the ruin'd central tower;
When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of ebon and ivory;
When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die;
When distant Tweed is heard to rave,
And the owllet to hoot o'er the dead man's grave,
Then go—but go alone the while—
Then view St. David's ruin'd pile;
And, home returning, soothly swear,
Was never scene so sad and fair!

II.

Short halt did Deloraine make there,
Little reck'd he of the scene so fair:
With dagger's hilt, on the wicket strong,
He struck full loud, and struck full long.
The porter hurried to the gate—
"Who knocks so loud, and knocks so late?"
"From Branksome I," the Warrior cried,
And straight the wicket open'd wide:
For Branksome's Chiefs had in battle stood,
To fence the rights of fair Melrose;
And hands and livings, many a rood,
Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose.

III.

Bold Deloraine his errand said;
The porter bent his humble head;
With torch in hand, and feet unshod,
And noiseless step, the path he trod:
The arched cloister, far and wide,
Rung to the Warrior's clanking stride,
Till, stooping low his lofty crest,
He enter'd the cell of the ancient Priest,

And lifted his barred aventayle,
To hail the Monk of St. Mary's aisle.

IV.

"The Ladye of Branksome greets thee by me;
Says, that the fated hour is come,
And that to-night I shall watch with thee,
To win the treasure of the tomb."

From sackcloth couch the Monk arose,
With toil his stiffen'd limbs he rear'd;
A hundred years had flung their snows
On his thin locks and floating beard.

V.

And strangely on the Knight look'd he,
And his blue eyes gleam'd wild and wide;
"And, dares thou, Warrior! seek to see What heaven and hell alike would hide?"
My breast, in belt of iron pent,
With shirt of hair and scourage of thorn;
For threescore years, in penance spent,
My knees those flinty stones have worn;
Yet all too little to atone
For knowing what should ne'er be known.
Would'st thou thy every future year
In ceaseless prayer and penance drie,
Yet wait thy latter end with fear—
Then, daring Warrior, follow me?"

VI.

"Penance, father, will I none;
Prayer know I hardly one;
For mass or prayer can I rarely tarry,
Save to patter an Ave Mary,
When I ride on a Border foray."

Other prayer can I none;
So sped me my errand, and let me be gone.

VII.

Again on the Knight look'd the Churchman old,
And again he sighed heavily;
For he had himself been a warrior bold,
And fought in Spain and Italy.
And he thought on the days that were long since by
When his limbs were strong, and his courage was high:—
Now, slow and faint, he led the way,
Where, cloister'd round, the garden lay;
The pillar'd arches were over their head,
And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

1 "In the description of Melrose, which introduces the second canto, the reader will observe how skillfully the Author calls in the aid of sentimental associations to heighten the effect of the picture which he presents to the eye."—Jeffrey.

2 See Appendix, Note W.

3 David I. of Scotland, purchased the reputation of sanctity, by founding, and liberally endowing, not only the monastery of Melrose, but those of Kelso, Jedburgh, and many others; which led to the well-known observation of his successor, that he was a sore saint for the crown.

4 The Buccleuch family were great benefactors to the Abbey of Melrose. As early as the reign of Robert II., Robert Scott, Baron of Murielston and Bakeleburn (now Buccleuch), gave to the monks the lands of Hinkery, in Ettrick Forest, pro salute animae sua.—Charterulary of Melrose, 28th May, 1415.

5 Aventayle, visor of the helmet.

6 See Appendix, Note X.

7 The cloisters were frequently used as places of sepulture. An instance occurs in Dryburgh Abbey, where the cloister has an inscription, bearing, Hic jacet frater Archibaldus.
VIII.

Spreading herbs, and flowerets bright,
Glisten'd with the dew of night;
Nor herb, nor floweret, glisten'd there,
But was carv'd in the cloister-arches as fair.
The Monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
Then into the night he look'd for'th;
And red and bright the streamers light
Were dancing in the glowing north.
So had he seen, in fair Castile,
The youth in glittering squadrons start;¹
Sudden the flying jeannet wheel,
And hurl'd the unexpected dart.
He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.

IX.

By a steel-clench'd postern door,
They enter'd now the chancel fall;
The darken'd roof rose high aloft,
On pillars lofty and light and small:
The key-stone, that lock'd each ribb'd aisle,
Was a fleur-de-lis, or a quatre-fuille;
The corbels² were carv'd grotesque and grim;
And the pillars, with cluster'd shafts so trim,
With base and with capital flourish'd around,
Seem'd bundles of lances which garlands had bound.

X.

Full many a sconce and banner riven,
Shook to the cold night-wind of heaven,
Around the screen'd altar's pale;
And there the dying lamps did burn,
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant Chief of Otterburne!³
And thine, dark Knight of Liddesdale!⁴
Oh, fading honors of the dead!
Oh, high ambition, lowly laid!

XI.

The moon on the east oriel shone,
Through slender shafts of shapely stone,
By foliage tracery combined;
Thou would'st have thought some fairy's hand
Twist poplars straight the ozier wand,
In many a freakish knot, had twined;
Then framed a spell, when the work was done,
And chang'd the willow-wreaths to stone.

¹ See Appendix, Note Y.
² Corbels, the projections from which the arches spring, usually cut in a fantastic face, or mask.
³ "With plinth and with capital flourish'd around."
⁴ See Appendix, Note Z.
⁵ Ibid. Note 2 A.
⁶ Ibid. Note 2 B.
⁷ "Bombay, September 25, 1805.—I began last night to read Walter Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel, as part of my evening readings to my children. I was extremely delighted by the poetical beauty of some passages, the Abbey of Melrose for example, and most of the prologues to the cantos. The costume, too, is admirable. The tone is antique; and it might be read for instruction as a picture of the manners of the middle ages." "November 2, 1805.—We are perfectly enchanted with Walter Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel. He is surely the man born at last to translate the Iliad. Are not the good parts of his poem the most Homeric of anything in our language? There are tedious passages, and so are there in Homer."—Sir James Mackintosh, Life, vol. 1, pp. 254, 262.
⁸ A large marble stone, in the chancel of Melrose, is pointed out as the monument of Alexander II., one of the greatest of our early kings; others say, it is the resting-place of Waldere, one of the early abbots, who died in the odor of sanctity.
⁹ See Appendix, Note 2 C.
¹⁰ Ibid. Note 2 D.
¹¹ See Appendix, Note 2 E.
¹² Ibid. Note 2 F.
And never to tell where it was hid,
Save at his Chief of Branksome's need:
And when that need was past and o'er,
Again the volume to restore.
I buried him on St. Michael's night,
When the bell toll'd one, and the moon was bright,
And I dug his chamber among the dead,
When the floor of the chancel was stained red,
That his patron's cross might over him wave,
And scare the fiends from the Wizard's grave.

XVI.
"It was a night of voe and dread,
When Michael in the tomb I laid!
Strange sounds along the chancel pass'd,
The banners waved without a blast"—
—Still spoke the Monk, when the bell toll'd one!—
I tell you, that a braver man
Than William of Deloraine, good at need,
Against a foe ne'er spurr'd a steed;
Yet somewhat was he chill'd with dread,
And his hair did bristle upon his head.

XVII.
"Lo, Warrior! now, the Cross of Red
Points to the grave of the mighty dead;
Within it burns a wondrous light,
To chase the spirits that love the night:
That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
Until the eternal doom shall be."—
Slow moved the Monk to the broad flag-stone,
Which the bloody Cross was traced upon:
He pointed to a secret nook;
An iron bar the Warrior took;
And the Monk made a sign with his wither'd hand,
The grave's huge portal to expand.

XVIII.
With beating heart to the task he went;
His sinewy frame o'er the grave-stone bent;
With bar of iron heaved amain,
Till the toll-drops fell from his brows, like rain.
It was by dint of passing strength,
That he moved the massy stone at length.
I would you had been there, to see
How the light broke forth so gloriously,
Stream'd upward to the chancel roof,
And through the galleries far aloof!
No earthly flame blazed o'er so bright:
It shone like heaven's own blessed light,
And, issuing from the tomb,
Show'd the Monk's cowl, and visage pale,
Danced on the dark-brow'd Warrior's mail,
And kiss'd his waving plume.

XIX.
Before their eyes the Wizard lay,
As if he had not been dead a day.
His hoary beard in silver roll'd,
He seem'd some seventy winters old;
A palmer's anice wrapp'd him round,
With a wrought Spanish baldrience bound,
Like a pilgrim from beyond the sea:
His left hand held his Book of Might;
A silver cross was in his right;
The lamp was placed beside his knee:
High and majestic was his look,
At which the fallest fiends had shook,
And all unruffled was his face:
They trusted his soul had gotten grace. 3

XX.
Often had William of Deloraine
Rode through the battle's bloody plain,
And trampled down the warriors slain,
And neither known remorse nor awe;
Yet now remorse and awe he own'd;
His breath came thick, his head swam round,
When this strange scene of death he saw,
Bewilder'd and unnerved he stood,
And the priest pray'd fervently and loud:
With eyes averted pray'd he;
He might not endure the sight to see,
Of the man he had loved so brotherly.

XXI.
And when the priest his death-prayer had pray'd,
Thus unto Deloraine he said:—
"Now, speed thee what thou hast to do,
Or, Warrior, we may dearly rue;
For those, thou may'st not look upon,
Are gathering fast round the yawning stone!"—
Then Deloraine, in terror, took
From the cold hand the Mighty Book,
With iron clasps'd, and with iron bound:
He thought, as he took it, the dead man frown'd; 4
But the glare of the sepulchral light,
Perchance, had dazzled the Warrior's sight.

XXII.
When the huge stone sunk o'er the tomb,
The night return'd in double gloom;
For the moon had gone down, and the stars were few;
And, as the Knight and Priest withdrew,
With wavering steps and dizzy brain,
They hardly might the postern gain.
'Tis said, as through the nibles they pass'd,
They heard strange noises on the blast;
And through the cloister-galleries small,
Which at mid-height thread the chancel wall,

---

1 See Appendix, Note 2 G.
2 Ori— A bar from thence the warrior took.
3 "The agitation of the monk at the sight of the man whom he had loved with brotherly affection—the horror of Deloraine, and his belief that the corpse frowned, as he withdrew the magic volume from its grasp, are, in a succeeding part of the narrative, circumstances not more happily conceived than exquisitely wrought."—Critical Review.
4 See Appendix, Note 2 H.
THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

Loud sobs, and laughter louder, ran,
And voices unlike the voice of man;
As if the fiends kept holiday,
Because these spells were brought to day,
I cannot tell how the truth may be;
I say the tale as 'twas said to me.

XXIII.
"Now, bide thee hence," the Father said,
"And when we are on death-bed laid,
Oh may our dear Ladye, and sweet St. John,
Forgive our souls for the deed we have done!"—
The Monk return'd him to his cell,
And many a prayer and penance sped;
When the convent met at the noon tide—
The Monk of St. Mary's aisle was dead!
Before the cross was the body laid,
With hands elasp'd fast, as if still he pray'd.

XXIV.
The Knight breathed free in the morning wind,
And strove his hardihood to find:
He was glad when he pass'd the tomstones gray,
Which girdle round the fair Abbaye;
For the mystic Book to his bosom prest,
Felt like a load upon his breast;
And his joints, with nerves of iron twined,
Shook, like the aspen leaves in wind.
Full fain was he when the dawn of day
Began to brighten Cheviot gray;
He joy'd to see the cheerful light,
And he said Ave Mary, as well as he might.

XXV.
The sun had brighten'd Cheviot gray,
The sun had brighten'd the Carter's side;
And soon beneath the rising day
Smiled Branksome Towers and Teviot's tide.
The wild birds told their warbling tale,
And wak'd every flower that blows;
And peeped forth the violet pale,
And spread her breast the mountain rose.
And lovelier than the rose so red,
Yet paler than the violet pale,
She early left her sleepless bed,
The fairest maid of Teviotdale.

XXVI.
Why does fair Margaret so early awake?
And don her kirtle so hastilie;
And the silken knots which in hurry she would make,
Why tremble her slender fingers to tie;
Why does she stop, and look often around,
As she glides down the secret stair;
And why does she put the shaggy blood-hound,
As he rous'd him up from his hair;
And, though she passes the postern alone,
Why is not the watchman's bugle blown?

XXVII.
The ladye steps in doubt and dread,
Lest her watchful mother hear her tread;
The ladye caresses the rough blood-hound
Lest his voice should waken the castle round;
The watchman's bugle is not blown,
For he was her foster-father's son;
And she glides through the greenwood at dawn of light.
To meet Baron Henry, her own true knight.

XXVIII.
The Knight and ladye fair are met,
And under the hawthorn's boughs are set.
A fairer pair were never seen
To meet beneath the hawthorn green.
He was stately, and young, and tall;
Dreaded in battle, and loved in hall:
And she, when love, scarce told, scarce hid,
Lent to her cheeks a livelier red;
When the half sigh her swelling breast
Against the silken ribbon prest;
When her blue eyes their secret told,
Though shaded by her locks of gold—
Where would you find the peerless fair,
With Margaret of Branksome might compare!

XXIX.
And now, fair dames, methinks I see
You listen to my minstrelsy;
Your waving locks ye backward throw,
And sidelong bend your necks of snow:
Ye ween to hear a melting tale,
Of two true lovers in a dale;
And how the Knight, with tender fire,
To paint his faithful passion strove;
Swore he might at her feet expire,
But never, never, cease to love;
And how she blush'd and how she sigh'd,
And, half consenting, half denied,
And said that she would die a maid;—
Yet, might the bloody feud be stay'd,
Henry of Cranstoun, and only he,
Margaret of Branksome's choice should be.

XXX.
Alas! fair dames, your hopes are vain!
My harp has lost the enchanting strain;
Its lightness would my age reprove:
My hairs are gray, my limbs are old,
My heart is dead, my veins are cold:
I may not, must not, sing of love.

1 A mountain on the Border of England, above Jedburgh.
2 "How lovely and exhilarating is the fresh cool morning landscape which relieves the mind after the horrors of the spell-guarded tomb!"—Anna Seward.
3 "How true, sweet, and original, is this description of Margaret—the trembling haste with which she attires herself, descends, and Speeds to the bower!"—Anna Seward.
XXXI.
Beneath an oak, moss'd o'er by eld,
The Baron's Dwarf his coursers held;¹
And held his crested helm and spear:
That Dwarf was scarce an earthly man,
If the tales were true that of him ran Through all the Border far and near.
'Twas said, when the Baron a-hunting rode Through Reedendale's glen, but rarely trod,
He heard a voice cry, "Lost! lost! lost!"
And, like tennis-ball by racket toss'd,
A leap, of thirty feet and three,
Made from the gorse this elfin shape,
Distorted like some dwarfish ape,
And lighted at Lord Cranstoun's knee,
Lord Cranstoun was some whit dismay'd;
'Tis said that five good miles he rade,
To rid him of his company;
But where he rode one mile, the Dwarf ran four,
And the Dwarf was first at the castle door.

XXXII.
Use lessens marvel, it is said:
This elfish Dwarf with the Baron staid;
Little he ate and less he spoke,
Nor mingled with the menial flock:
And oft apart his arms he toss'd,
And often mutter'd "Lost! lost! lost!"
He was waspish, arch, and litherlie,²
But well Lord Cranstoun serv'd he;
And he of his service was full fain;
For once he had been ta'en or slain,
An it had not been for his ministry,
All between Home and Hermitage,
Talk'd of Lord Cranstoun's Goblin Page.

XXXIII.
For the Baron went on pilgrimage,
And took with him this elfish Page,
To Mary's Chapel of the Lowes:
For there, beside Our Ladye's lake,
An offering he had sworn to make,
And he would pay his vows.
But the Ladye of Branksome gather'd a band
Of the best that would ride at her command:³
The trysting place was Newark Lee.

¹ See Appendix, Note 2 I.
² The idea of the imp domesticating himself with the first person he met, and subjecting himself to that one's authority, is perfectly consonant to old opinions. Ben Jonson, in his play of "The Devil is an Ass," has founded the leading incident of that comedy upon this article of the popular creed. A fiend, styled Pug, is ambitious of figuring in the world, and petitions his superior for permission to exhibit himself upon earth. The devil grants him a day-rule, but clogs it with this condition,—
"Satan—Only this more, I bade you
To serve the first man that you meet; and him
I'll show you now; observe him, follow him;
But, once engaged, there you must stay and fix."
³ See Appendix, Note 2 K.
⁴ See notes on The Douglas Tragedy in the Minstrelsy, vol. iii. p. 3.—Ed.
⁵ Wood-pigeon.

XXXIV.
And now, in Branksome's good green wood,
As under the aged oak he stood,
The Baron's coursers pricks his ears,
As if a distant noise he hears.
The Dwarf waves his long lean arm on high,
And signs to the lovers to part and fly;
No time was then to vow or sigh.
Fair Margaret through the hazel grove
Flew like the startled emeshed-dove:
⁶ The Dwarf the stirrup held and rein;
Vaulted the Knight on his steed amain,
And, pondering deep that morning's scene,
Rode eastward through the hawthorns green.

While thus he pour'd the lengthen'd tale,
The Minstrel's voice began to fail:
Full silyly smiled the observant page,
And gave the wither'd hand of age
A goblet, crown'd with mighty wine,
The blood of Velez' scorched vine.
He raised the silver cup on high,
And, while the big drop fill'd his eye,
Pray'd God to bless the Duchess long,
And all who cheer'd a son of song.
The attending maidens smiled to see
How long, how deep, how zealously,
The precious juice the Minstrel quaff'd;
And he, embolden'd by the draught,
Look'd gayly back to them, and laugh'd.
The cordial nectar of the bowl
Swell'd his old veins, and cheer'd his soul;
A lighter, livelier prelude ran,
Ere thus his tale again began.

It is observable that in the same play, Pug alludes to the spareness of his diet. Mr. Scott's Goblin, though "waspish, arch, and litherlie," proves a faithful and honest retainer to the lord, into whose service he had introduced himself. This sort of inconsistency seems also to form a prominent part of the diabolic character. Thus, in the romances of the Round Table, we find Merlin, the son of a devil, exerting himself most zealously in the cause of virtue and of religion, the friend and counsellor of King Arthur, the chastiser of wrongs, and the scourge of the infidels.
The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

CANTO THIRD.

I.
And said I that my limbs were old,
And said I that my blood was cold,
And that my kindly fire was fled,
And my poor with'er heart was dead,
And that I might not sing of love?—
How could I to the dearest theme,
That ever warm'd a minstrel's dream,
So foul, so false a recreant prove!
How could I name love's very name,
Nor wake my heart to notes of flame?

II.
In peace, Love tunes the shepherd's reed;
In war, he mounts the warrior's steed;
In halls, in gay attire is seen;
In hamlets, dances on the green.
Love rules the court, the camp, the grove,
And men below, and saints above;
For love is heaven, and heaven is love.

III.
So thought Lord Cranstoun, as I ween,
While pondering deep the tender scene,
He rode through Branksome's hawthorn green.
But the page shouted wild and shrill,
And scarce his helmet could he don,
When downward from the shady hill
A stately knight came pricking on.
That warrior's steed, so dapple-gray,
Was dark with sweat, and splash'd with clay;
His armor red with many a stain;
He seem'd in such a weary plight,
As if he had ridden the live-long night;
For it was William of Deloraine.

IV.
But no whit weary did he seem,
When, dancing in the sunny beam,
He mark'd the crane on the Baron's crest;¹
For his ready spear was in his rest.
Few were the words, and stern and high,
That mark'd the foemen's feudal hate;
For question fierce, and proud reply,
Gave signal soon of dire debate.
Their very courser seem'd to know
That each was other's mortal foe,
And snorted fire, when wheel'd around,
To give each Knight his vantag'ground.

V.
In rapid round the Baron bent;
He sigh'd a sigh, and pray'd a prayer;
The prayer was to his patron saint,
The sigh was to his ladye fair.
Stout Deloraine nor sigh'd nor pray'd,
Nor saint, nor ladye, call'd to aid;
But he stoop'd his head, and couch'd his spear,
And spurr'd his steed to full career.
The meeting of these champions proud
Seem'd like the bursting thunder-cloud.

VI.
Stern was the dint the Borderer lent!
The stately Baron backwards bent;
Bent backwards to his horse's tail,
And his plumes went scattering on the gale;
The tough ash spear, so stout and true,
Into a thousand flinders flew.
But Cranstoun's lance, of more avail,
Pierced through, like silk, the Borderer's mail;
Through shield, and jack, and acton, past,
Deep in his bosom broke at last.—
Still sat the Warrior saddle-fast,
Till, stumbling in the mortal shock,
Down went the steed, the girthing broke,
Hurl'd on a heap lay man and horse.
The Baron onward pass'd his course;
Nor knew—so giddy roll'd his brain—
His foe lay stretch'd upon the plain.

VII.
But when he rein'd his courser round,
And saw his foeman on the ground
Lie senseless as the bloody clay,
He bade his page to stanch the wound,
And there beside the warrior stay,
And tend him in his doubtful state,
And lead him to Branksome castle-gate:
His noble mind was inly moved
For the kinsman of the maid he loved,
"This shalt thou do without delay:
No longer here myself may stay;
Unless the swifter I speed away,
Short shrift will be at my dying day."

VIII.
Away in speed Lord Cranstoun rode;
The Goblin Page behind abode;
His lord's command he ne'er withstood,
Though small his pleasure to do good,
As the corselet off' he took,
The Dwarf espied the Mighty Book!
Much he marvell'd a knight of pride,
Like a book-bosom'd priest should ride:²
He thought not to search or stanch the wound,
Until the secret he had found.

¹ The crest of the Cranstouns, in allusion to their name, is a crane dormant, holding a stone in his foot, with an
² See Appendix, Note 2 L.
IX.
The iron band, the iron clasp,
Resisted long the elfin grasp:
For when the first he had undone,
It closed as he the next begun.
Those iron clasps, that iron band,
Would not yield to unchristen'd hand,
Till he smeared the cover o'er
With the Borderer's curdled gore;
A moment then the volume spread,
And one short spell therein he read,
It had much of glamour¹ might,
Could make a ladye seem a knight;
The cobwebs on a dungeon wall
Seem tapestry in lordly hall;
A nut-shell seem a gilded barge,
A sheeling² seem a palace large,
And youth seem age, and age seem youth—
All was delusion, nought was truth.³

X.
He had not read another spell,
When on his cheek a buffet fell,
So fierce, it stretch'd him on the plain,
Beside the wounded Deloraine.
From the ground he rose dismay'd,
And shook his huge and matted head;
One word he mutter'd and no more,
"Man of age, thou smitest sore!"—
No more the Elfin Page durst try
Into the wondrous Book to pry;
The clasps though smear'd with Christian gore,
Shut faster than they were before.
He hid it underneath his cloak.—
Now, if you ask who gave the stroke,
I cannot tell, so mot I thrive;
It was not given by man alive.⁴

XI.
Unwillingly himself he address'd,
To do his master's high behest:
He lifted up the living corse,
And laid it on the weary horse:
He led him into Branksome Hall,
Before the beards of the warders all;
And each did after swear and say,
There only pass'd a wain of hay.
He took him to Lord David's tower,
Even to the Ladye's secret bower;
And, but that stranger spells were spread,
And the door might not be opened,
He had laid him on her very bed.
Whate'er he did of gramarye,⁵
Was always done maliciously;
He flung the warrior on the ground,
And the blood well'd freshly from the wound.

¹ Magical delusion.
² A shepherd's hut.
³ See Appendix, Note 2 M.
⁴ Ibid. Note 2 N.
⁵ Magic.
⁶ See Appendix, Note 2 O.
He faced the blood-hound manfully,
And held his little bat on high;
So fierce he struck, the dog, afraid,
At cautious distance hoarsely bay'd;
But still in act to spring;
When dash'd an archer through the glade,
And when he saw thehound was stay'd,
He drew his tough bow-string;
But a rough voice cried, "Shoot not, hoy!
Ho! shoot not, Edward—"Tis a boy!"

XVI.
The speaker issued from the wood,
And check'd his fellow's surly mood,
And quell'd the ban-dog's ire;
He was an English yeoman good,
And born in Lancashire.
Well could he hit a fallow-deer
Five hundred feet him fro;
With hand more true, and eye more clear,
No archer bended bow.
His coal-black hair, shorn round and close,
Set off his sunburn'd face:
Old England's sign, St. George's cross,
His barrel-cap did grace;
His bugle-horn hung by his side,
All in a wolveskin baldric tied;
And his short falchion, sharp and clear,
Had pierced the throat of many a deer.

XVII.
His kirtle, made of forest green,
Reach'd scantly to his knee;
And, at his belt, of arrows keen
A furbish'd shelf bore he;
His buckler, scarce in breadth a span,
No larger fence had he;
He never counted him a man,
Would strike below the knee:
His slacken'd bow was in his hand,
And the leath, that was his blood-hound's band.

XVIII.
He would not do the fair child harm,
But held him with his powerful arm,
That he might neither fight nor flee;
For when the red cross spied he,
The boy strove long and violently,
"Now, by St. George," the archer cries,
"Edward, methinks we have a prize!
This boy's fair face, and courage free,
Show he is come of high degree."—

XIX.
"Yes! I am come of high degree,
For I am the heir of bold Buccleuch;
And, if thou dost not set me free,
False Sonthron, thou shalt dearly rue!
For Walter of Harden shall come with speed,
And William of Deloraine, good at need,
And every Scott, from Esk to Tweed;
And, if thou dost not let me go,
Despite thy arrows, and thy bow,
I'll have thee hang'd to feed the crow!"—

XX.
"Gramercy, for thy good-will, fair boy!
My mind was never set so high;
But if thou art chief of such a clan,
And art the son of such a man,
And ever comest to thy command,
Our wardens had need to keep good order;
My bow of yew to a hazel wand,
Thou'llt make them work upon the Border.
Meantime, be pleased to come with me,
For good Lord Dacre shalt thou see;
I think our work is well begun,
When we have taken thy father's son."

XXI.
Although the child was led away,
In Branksome still he seem'd to stay,
For so the Dwarf his part did play;
And, in the shape of that young boy,
He wrought the castle much annoy,
The comrades of the young Buccleuch
He pinch'd, and beat, and overthrew;
Nay, some of them he wellnigh slew.
He tore Dame Maidlin's silken tire,
And, as Sym Hall stood by the fire,
He lighted the match of his bandelier,
And woefully scorched the hackbuteer.
It may be hardly thought or said,
The mischief that the urchin made,
Till many of the castle guess'd
That the young Baron was possess'd!

XXII.
Well I ween the charm he held
The noble Ladye had soon dispeel'd;
But she was deeply busied then
To tend the wounded Deloraine.
Much she wonder'd to find him lie,
On the stone threshold stretch'd along;
She thought some spirit of the sky
Had done the bold moss-trooper wrong;
Because, despite her precept dread,
Perchance he in the Book had read;
But the broken lance in his bosom stood,
And it was earthly steel and wood.

XXIII.
She drew the splinter from the wound,
And with a charm she stanch'd the blood;
She bade the gash be cleansed and bound:
No longer by his couch she stood;

---

1 See Appendix, Note 2 P.
2 Bandelier, belt for carrying ammunition.
XXIV.

So pass’d the day—the evening fell,
'Twas near the time of curfew bell;
The air was mild, the wind was calm,
The stream was smooth, the dew was balm;
E’en the rude watchman, on the tower,
Enjoy’d and bless’d the lovely hour.
Far more fair Margaret loved and bless’d
The hour of silence and of rest.
On the high turret sitting lone,
She waked at times the lute’s soft tone;
Touch’d a wild note, and all between
Thought of the bower of hawthorns green.
Her golden hair stream’d free from band,
Her fair cheek rested on her hand,
Her blue eyes sought the west afar,
For lovers love the western star.

XXV.

Is yon the star, o’er Penchryst Pen,
That rises slowly to her ken,
And, spreading broad its wavering light,
Shakes its loose tresses on the night?
Is yon red glare the western star?—
Oh, ’tis the beacon-blaze of war!
Scarce could she draw her tighten’d breath,
For well she knew the fire of death!

XXVI.

The Warder view’d it blazing strong,
And blew his war-note loud and long,
Till, at the high and haughty sound,
Rock, wood, and river, rung around.
The blast alarm’d the feastal hall,
And startled forth the warriors all;
Far downward, in the castle-yard,
Full many a torch and cresset glare’d;
And helms and plumes, confusedly toss’d,
Were in the blaze half-seen, half-lost;
And spears in wild disorder shook,
Like reeds beside a frozen brook.

1 See Appendix, Note 2 R.
2 “As another illustration of the prodigious improvement which the style of the old romance is capable of receiving from a more liberal admixture of pathetic sentiments and gentle affections, we insert the following passage (stanzas xxiv. to xxvii.), where the effect of the picture is finely assisted by the contrast of its two compartments.”—Jeffrey.
THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

Till high Dunedin the blazes saw
From Soltra and Dumpender Law;
And Lothian heard the Regent’s order,
That all should bowne’ them for the Border.

XXX.
The livelong night in Branksome rang
The ceaseless sound of steel;
The castle-bell, with backward clang,
Sent forth the larum peal;
Was frequent heard the heavy jar,
Where massy stone and iron bar
Were piled on echoing keep and tower,
To whelm the foe with deadly shower;
Was frequent heard the changing guard,
And watchword from the sleepless ward;
While, wearied by the endless din,
Blood-hound and ban-dog yell’d within.

XXXI.
The noble Dame, amid the broil,
Shared the gray Seneschal’s high toil,
And spoke of danger with a smile;
Cheer’d the young knights, and council sage
Held with the chiefs of riper age.
No tidings of the foe were brought,
Nor of his numbers knew they aught,
Nor what in time of truce he sought.
Some said, that there were thousands ten;
And others ween’d that it was nought.
But Leven Clans, or Tynedale men,
Who came to gather in black-mail, 2
And Liddesdale, with small avail,
Might drive them lightly back again.
So pass’d the anxious night away,
And welcome was the peep of day.

CEASED the high sound—the listening throng
Applaud the Master of the Song;
And marvel much, in helpless age,
So hard should be his pilgrimage.
Had he no friend—no daughter dear,
His wandering toil to share and cheer;
No son to be his father’s stay,
And guide him on the rugged way?
“Ay, once he had—but he was dead!”
Upon the harp he stoop’d his head,
And busied himself the strings withal,
To hide the tear that fain would fall.
In solemn measure, soft and slow,
Arose a father’s notes of woe. 3

The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

CANTO FOURTH.

I.
Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide
The glaring bale-fires blaze no more;
No longer steel-clad warriors ride
Along thy wild and willow’d shore; 4
Where’er thou wind’st, by dale or hill,
All, all is peaceful, all is still,
As if thy waves, since Time was born,
Since first they roll’d upon the Tweed, 5
Had only heard the shepherd’s reed,
Nor started at the bugle-horn.

II.
Unlike the tide of human time,
Which, though it change in ceaseless flow,
Retains each grief, retains each crime
Its earliest course was doom’d to know;
And, darker as it downward bears,
Is stain’d with past and present tears.
Low as that tide has ebb’d with me,
It still reflects to Memory’s eye.
The hour my brave, my only boy,
Fell by the side of great Dundee. 6
Why, when the volleying musket play’d
Against the bloody Highland blade,
Why was not I beside him laid?—
Enough—he died the death of fame;
Enough—he died with conquering Graeme. 7

III.
Now over Border, dale, and fell,
Full wide and far was terror spread;
For pathless marsh, and mountain cell,
The peasant left his lowly shed.
The frighten’d flocks and herds were pent
Beneath the peel’s rude battlement;

1 Bowne, make ready.
2 Protection money exacted by freebooters.
3 "Nothing can exalt the simple concise pathos of the close of this canto—nor the touching picture of the Bard when, with assumed business, he tries to conceal real sorrow. How well the poet understands the art of contrast—and how judiciously it is exercised in the exordium of the next canto, where our mourning sympathy is exchanged for the thrill of pleasure!"—Anna Seward.
4 "What luxury of sound in this line!"—Anna Seward.
5 Orig.: "Since first they rolled their way to Tweed."—Huntsman.
6 The Viscount of Dundee, slain in the battle of Killiecrankie.
7 "Some of the most interesting passages of the poem are those in which the author drops the business of his story to moralize, and apply to his own situation the images and reflections it has suggested. After concluding one canto with an account of the warlike array which was prepared for the reception of the English invaders, he opens the succeeding one with the following beautiful verses (stanzas I. and II.). "There are several other detached passages of equal beauty, which might be quoted in proof of the effect which is produced by this dramatic interference of the narrator."—Jeffreys.
8 See Appendix, Note 2 V.
9 No one will dissent from this, who reads, in particular, the first two and heart-glowing stanzas of canto vi.—now, by association of the past, rendered the more affecting.—Ed.
And maids and matrons dropp'd the tear,
While ready warriors seized the spear.
From Branksome's towers, the watchman's eye
Dun wreaths of distant smoke can spy,
Which, curling in the rising sun,
Show'd southern ravage was begun.¹

IV.

Now loud the heedful gate-ward cried—
"Prepare ye all for blows and blood!
Watt Tinlinn,² from the Liddel-side,
Comes wading through the flood.³
Full oft the Tynedale snatchers knock
At his lone gate, and prove the lock;
It was but last St. Barnabright
They sieged him a whole summer night,
But fled at morning; well they knew,
In vain he never twang'd the yew.

Right sharp has been the evening shower,
That drove him from his Liddel tower;
And, by my faith," the gate-ward said,
"I think 'twill prove a Warden-Raid."⁴

V.

While thus he spoke, the bold yeoman⁵
Enter'd the echoing barbican.
He led a small and shaggy nag,
That through a bog, from hag to hag,⁶
Could bound like any Billhope stag.⁷
It bore his wife and children twain;
A half-clothed sor⁸ was all their train;
His wife, stout, ruddy, and dark-brow'd,
Of silver brooch and bracelet proud,⁹
Laugh'd to her friends among the crowd,
He of stature passing tall,
But sparely form'd, and lean withal;
A batter'd morion on his brow;
A leather jack, as fence enow,
On his broad shoulders loosely hung;
A border axe behind was sling'd;

¹ See Appendix, Note 2 W.
² Ibid. Note 2 X.
³ "And when they eam to Branksome ha',
They shouted a' baith loud and hee,
Till up and spak him auld Buceleuch,
Said—'Whae's this brings the frayre to me?'—
'It's I, Jamie Telfer, o' the fair Darkhead,
And a harried man I think I be,'" &c.

⁴ An inroad commanded by the Warden in person.
⁵ "The dawn displays the smoke of ravaged fields, and shepherds, with their flocks, flying before the storm. Tidings brought by a tenant of the family, not used to seek a shelter on light occasions of alarm, disclose the strength and object of the invaders. This man is a character of a lower and of a rougher cast than Deloraine. The portrait of the rude retainers is sketched with the same masterly hand. Here, again, Mr. Scott has trod in the footsteps of the old romancers, who confine not themselves to the display of a few personages who stalk over the stage on stately stilts, but usually reflect all the varieties of character that marked the era to which they belong. The interesting example of manners thus preserved to us is not the only advantage which results from this peculiar structure of their plan. It is this, amongst other circumstances, which enables them to carry us along with them, under I know not what species of fascination, and to make us, as it were, credulous spectators of their most extravagant scenes. In this they seem to resemble the painter, who, in the delineation of a battle, while he places the adverse heroes of the day combating in the front, takes care to fill his background with subordinate figures, whose appearance adds at once both spirit and an air of probability to the scene."—Critical Review, 1805.

⁶ The broken ground in a bog.
⁷ See Appendix, Note 2 Y.
⁸ Bondsman.
⁹ As the Borderers were indifferent about the furniture of their habitations, so much exposed to be burned and plundered, they were proportionally anxious to display splendour in decorating and ornamenting their females.—See LEESEY de MORIBUS Limiteanoen.
¹⁰ See Appendix, Note 2 Z.
¹¹ Ibid. Note 3 A.
¹² Musketeers. See Appendix, Note 3 B.
¹³ The four last lines of stanza vii. are not in the first edition.—Ed.

VI.

Thus to the Lady did Tinlinn show
The tidings of the English foe:—
"Belted Will Howard,"¹⁰ is marching here,
And hot Lord Dacre,¹¹ with many a spear,
And all the German hackbut-men,¹²
Who have long lain at Askerton:
They cross'd the Liddel at curfew hour,
And burn'd my little lonely tower:
The fiend receive their souls therefor!
It had not been burnt this year and more.
Barn-yard and dwelling, blazing bright,
Served to guide me on my flight;
But I was chased the livelong night.
Black John of Akeshaw, and Fergus Graeme,
Fast upon my traces came,
Until I turn'd at Priesthaugh Strogg,
And shot their horses in the bog,
Slew Fergus with my lance outright—
I had him long at high despite:
He drove my cows last Fastern's night."

VII.

Now weary scouts from Liddesdale,
Fast hurrying in, confirm'd the tale;
As far as they could judge by ken,
Three hours would bring to Teviot's strand
Three thousand armed Englishmen—
Meanwhile, full many a warlike band,
From Teviot, Aill, and Ettrick shade,
Came in, their Chief's defence to aid.
There was saddling and mounting in haste,
There was pricking o'er moor and lea;
He that was last at the trysting-place
Was but lightly held of his gaye ladye.¹³
VIII.
From fair St. Mary's silver wave,
From dreary Gamescleugh's dusky height,
His ready lances Thirlstane brave
Array'd beneath a banner bright.
The tressed fleur-de-luce he claims,
To wreath his shield, since royal James,
Encamp'd by Fallsa's mossy wave,
The proud distinction grateful gave,
For faith 'mid feudal jars;
What time, save Thirlstane alone,
Of Scotland's stubborn barons none
Would march to southern wars;
And hence, in fair remembrance worn,
You shan'f of spears his crest has borne;
Hence his high motto shines reveal'd—
"Ready, aye ready," for the field.1

IX.
An aged Knight, to danger steel'd,
With many a moss-trooper came on
And azure in a golden field,
The stars and crescent grace his shield,
Without the bend of Murdieston,2
Wide lay his lands round Oakwood tower,
And wide round haunted Castle-Ower;
High over Borthwick's mountain flood,
His wood-embosom'd mansion stood;
In the dark glen, so deep below,
The herds of plunder'd England low;
His bold retainers' daily food,
And bought with danger, blows, and blood.
Marauding chief! his sole delight
The moonlight raid, the morning fight;
Not even the Flower of Yarrow's charms,
In youth, might tame his rage for arms;
And still, in age, he spurr'd at rest,
And still his brows the helmet press'd,
Albeit the blanched locks below
Were white as Dinby's spotless snow;
Five stately warriors drew the sword
Before their father's band;
A braver knight than Harlen's lord
Ne'er belted on a brand.3

X.4
Scotts of Eskdale, a stalwart band,5
Came trooping down the Todshawhill;
By the sword they won their land,
And by the sword they hold it still.
Hearken, Ladye, to the tale,
How thy sires won fair Eskdale—
Earl Morton was lord of that valley fair,
The Beattisons were his vassals there.

The Earl was gentle, and mild of mood,
The vassals were warlike, and fierce, and rude;
High of heart, and haughty of word,
Little they reck'd of a tame liege lord.
The Earl into fair Eskdale came,
Homage and seignory to claim:
Of Gilbert the Galliard a heriot6 he sought,
Saying, "Give thy best steed, as a vassal ought."
—"Dear to me is my bonny white steed,
Oft has he help'd me at pinch of need;
Lord and Earl though thou be, I trow,
I can rein Bucksfoot better than thou."—
Word on word gave fuel to fire,
Till so highly blazed the Beattison's ire,
But that the Earl the flight had made,
The vassals there their lord had slain.
Sore he plied both whip and spur,
As he urged his steed through Eskdale mair;
And it fell down a weary weight,
Just on the threshold of Branksome gate.

XI.
The Earl was a wrathful man to see;
Full fain avenged would he be.
In haste to Branksome's Lord he spoke,
Saying—"Take these traitors to thy yoke;
For a cast of hawks, and a purse of gold,
All Eskdale I'll sell thee, to have and hold:
Beshrew thy heart, of the Beattisons' clan
If thou leavest on Eske a landed man;
But spare Woodkerrick's lands alone,
For he lent me his horse to escape upon.
A glad man then was Branksome bold,
Down he flung him the purse of gold;
To Eskdale soon he spurr'd a'main,
And with him five hundred riders has ta'en.
He left his merry-men in the mist of the hill,
And aide them hold them close and still;
And alone he wended to the plain,
To meet with the Galliard and all his train.
To Gilbert the Galliard thus he said:—
"Know thou me for thy liege lord and head;
Deal not with me as with Morton tame,
For Scotts play best at the roughest game.
Give me in peace my heriot due,
Thy bonny white steed, or thou shalt rue.
If my horn I three times wind,
Eskdale shall long have the sound in mind."—

XII.
Loudly the Beattison laugh'd in scorn;
"Little care we for thy winded horn.
Ne'er shall it be the Galliard's lot,
To yield his steed to a haughty Scott.

1 See Appendix, Note 3 C.
2 Ibid. Note 3 D.
3 See, besides the note on this stanza, one in the Border Minstrelsy, vol. ii. p. 19, respecting Watt of Harden, the Author's ancestor.
4 Stanzas x. xi. xii. were not in the first edition.
5 See Appendix, Note 3 E.
6 The feudal superior, in certain cases, was entitled to the best horse of the vassal, in name of Heriot, or Herezeld.
Wend thou to Branksome back on foot,
With rusty spur and miry boot."—
He blew his bugle so loud and hoarse,
That the dun deer started at fair Craikeros;
He blew again so loud and clear,
Through the gray mountain mist there did lances appear;
And the third blast rang with such a din,
That the echoes answered from Pentoun-linn,
And all his riders came lighted in.
Then had you seen a gallant shock,
When saddles were emptied, and lances broke!
For each scornful word the Galliard had said,
A Beattison on the field was laid.
His own good sword the chieftain drew,
And he bore the Galliard through and through;
Where the Beattisons' blood mix'd with the rill,
The Galliard's-Haugh men call it still.
The Scotts have scatter'd the Beattison clan,
In Eskdale they left but one landed man.
The valley of Eske, from the mouth to the source,
Was lost and won for that bonny white horse.

XIII.
Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came,
And warriors more than I may name;
From Yarrow-cleugh to Hindhaugh-swair,¹
From Woodhouselie to Chester-glen,
Troop'd man and horse, and bow and spear;
Their gathering word was Bellenden,²
And better hearts o'er Border sod
To siege or rescue never rode.
The Ladye mark'd the aids come in,
And high her heart of pride arose:
She bade her youthful son attend,
That he might know his father's friend,
And learn to face his foes.
"The boy is ripe to look on war;
I saw him draw a cross-bow stiffe,
And his true arrow struck afar
The raven's nest upon the cliff;
The red cross, on a southern breast,
Is broader than the raven's nest;
Thou, Whitslade, shalt teach him his weapon to wield,
And o'er him hold his father's shield."³

XIV.
Well may you think, the wily page
Cared not to face the Ladye sage.
He counterfeited childish fear,
And shriek'd, and shed full many a tear,
And moan'd and plain'd in manner wild.
The attendants to the Ladye told,
Some fairy, sure, had changed the child,
That wont to be so free and bold.

Then wrathful was the noble dame;
She blush'd blood-red for very shame:
"Hence! ere the clan his faintness view;
Hence with the weakening to Bucceleich!"
Watt Tinlinn, thou shalt be his guide
To Rangleburn's lonely side.—
Sure some fell fiend has cursed our line,
That coward should e'er be son of mine?"—

XV.
A heavy task Watt Tinlinn had,
To guide the counterfeited lad.
Soon as the palfrey felt the weight
Of that ill-omen'd elfish freight,
He bolstered, sprung, and rear'd again,
Nor heeded bit, nor curb, nor rein.
It cost Watt Tinlinn mickle toil
To drive him but a Scottish mile;
But as a shallow brook they cross'd,
The elf, amid the running stream,
His figure changed, like form in dream,
And fled, and shouted, "Lost! lost! lost!"
Full fast the urchin ran and laugh'd,
But faster still a cloth-yard shaft
Whistled from startled Tinlinn's yew,
And pierced his shoulder through and through.
Although the imp might not be slain,
And though the wound soon heal'd again,
Yet, as he ran, he yell'd for pain;
And Wat of Tinlinn, much agast,
Rode back to Branksome fiery fast.

XVI.
Soon on the hill's steep verge he stood,
That looks o'er Branksome's towers and wood
And martial murmurs, from below,
Proclaim'd the approaching southern foe.
Through the dark wood, in mingled tone,
Were Border pipes and bugles blown;
The courser's neighing he could ken,
A measured tread of marching men;
While broke at times the solemn hum,
The Almey's sullen kettle-drum;
And banners tall, of crimson sheen,
Above the copese appear;
And, glistening through the Hawthorn green,
Shine helm, and shield, and spear.

XVII.
Light forays, first, to view the ground,
Spurr'd their fleet coursers loosely round;
Behind, in close array, and fast,
The Kendal archers, all in green,
Obedient to the bugle blast,
Advancing from the wood were seen.
To back and guard the archer band,
Lord Dacre's bill-men were at hand:

¹ This and the three following lines are not in the first edition.—Ed.
² See Appendix, Note 3 F.
THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.
27

A hardy race on Irthing bred,
With kirtles white and crosses red,
Array'd beneath the banner tall,
That stream'd o'er Acre's conquer'd wall;
And minstrels, as they march'd in order,
Play'd "Noble Lord Dacre, he dwells on the Border."

XVIII.

Behind the English bill and bow,
The mercenaries, firm and slow,
Moved on to fight, in dark array,
By Conrad led of Wolfenstein,
Who brought the band from distant Rhine,
And sold their blood for foreign pay.
The camp their home, their law the sword,
They knew no country, own'd no lord:¹
They were not arm'd like England's sons,
But bore the levain-daring guns;
Buff coats, all froncused and broder'd o'er,
And morining-horns² and scarts they wore;
Each better knee was bared, to aid
The warriors in the escalade;
All as they march'd, in rugged tongue
Songs of Teutonic feuds they sung.

XIX.

But louder still the clamor grew,
And louder still the minstrels blew,
When, from beneath the Greenwood tree,
Rode forth Lord Howard's chivalry;
His men-at-arms, with glaive and spear,
Brought up the battle's glittering rear.
There many a youthful knight, full keen
To gain his spurs, in arms was seen;
With favor in his crest, or glove,
Memorial of his ladye-love.
So rode they forth in fair array,
Till full their lengthen'd lines display;
Then call'd a halt, and made a stand,
And cried, "St. George for merry England!"³

XX.

Now every English eye, intent
On Branksome's armed towers was bent;
So near they were, that they might know
The straining harsh of each cross-bow;
On battlement and bartizan
Gleam'd axe, and spear, and partisan;
Falcon and culver,⁴ on each tower,
Stood prompt their deadly hail to shower;
And flashing armor frequent broke
From eddying whirls of sable smoke,
Where upon tower and turret head,
The seething pitch and molten lead
Reck'd like a witch's caldron red,
While yet they gaze, the bridges fall,
The wicket opes, and from the wall
Rides forth the hoary Seneschal.

XXI.

Armed he rode, all save the head,
His white beard o'er his breast-plate spread;
Unbroke by age, erect his seat,
He ruled his eager courser's gait;
Forced him, with chasten'd fire, to prance,
And, high curvetting, slow advance:
In sign of truce, his better hand
Display'd a peeled willow wand;
His squire, attending in the rear,
Bore high a gauntlet on a spear.⁵
When they espied him riding out,
Lord Howard and Lord Dacre stout
Sped to the front of their array,
To hear what this old knight should say.

XXII.

"Ye English warden Lords, of you
Demands the Ladye of Buccleunch,
Why, 'gainst the truce of Border tide,
In hostile guise ye dare to ride,
With Kendal bow, and Gilsland brand,
And all ye mercenary band,
Upon the bounds of fair Scotland?
My Ladye reads you swith return;
And, if but one poor straw you burn,
Or do our towers so much molest
As scare one swallow from her nest,
St. Mary! but we'll light a brand
Shall warm your hearths in Cumberland."

XXIII.

A wrathful man was Dacre's lord,
But calmer Howard took the word:
"May't please thy Dame, Sir Seneschal,
To seek the castle's outward wall,
Our pursuant-at-arms shall show
Both why we came, and when we go."—
The message sped, the noble Dame
To the wall's outward circle came;
Each chief around lean'd on his spear,
To see the pursuant appear.
All in Lord Howard's livery dress'd,
The lion argent deck'd his breast;
He led a boy of blooming hue—
Oh, sight to meet a mother's view!
It was the heir of great Buccleunch.

¹ See Appendix, Note 3 G.
² Powder-flasks.
³ "The stanzas describing the march of the English forces, and the investiture of the Castle of Braxholm, display a great knowledge of ancient costume, as well as a most picturesque and lively picture of feudal warfare."—Critical Review.
⁴ Ancient pieces of artillery.
⁵ A glove upon a lance was the emblem of faith among the ancient Borderers, who were wont, when any one broke his word, to expose this emblem, and proclaim him a faithless villain at the first Border meeting. This ceremony was much dreaded. See Lesley.
Obeisance meet the herald made,
And thus his master's will he said:—

XXIV.

"It irks, high Dame, my noble Lords,
'Gainst ladye fair to draw their swords;
But yet they may not tamely see,
All through the Western Warderney,
Your law-contemning kinsmen ride,
And burn and spoil the Border-side;
And all beseems your rank and birth
To make your towers a flemens-firth.
We claim from thee William of Deloraine,
That he may suffer march-treason² pain.
It was but last St. Cuthbert's even
He prick'd to Stapleton on Leven,
Harried the lands of Richard Musgrave,
And slew his brother by dint of glaive.
Then, since a lone and widow'd Dame
These restless riders may not tame,
Either receive within thy towers
Two hundred of my master's powers,
Or straight they sound their warrison,⁴
And storm and spoil thy garrison;
And this fair boy, to London led,
Shall good King Edward's page be bred."

XXV.

He ceased—and loud the boy did cry,
And stretch'd his little arms on high;
Implored for aid each well-known face,
And strove to seek the Dame's embrace,
A moment changed that Ladye's cheer,
Gush'd to her eye the unbidden tear;
She gazed upon the leaders round,
And dark and sad each warrior frown'd;
Then, deep within her sobbing breast
She lock'd the struggling sigh to rest;
Unalter'd and collected stood,
And thus replied, in dauntless mood:—

"Say to your Lords of high emprise,⁵
Who war on women and on boys,
That either William of Deloraine
Will cleanse him, by oath, of march-treason stain,⁶
Or else he will the combat take
'Gainst Musgrave for his honor's sake.
No knight in Cumberland so good,
But William may count with him kin and blood.
Knighthood he took of Douglas' sword,⁷
When English blood swell'd Ancram's ford;⁸
And, but Lord Dacre's steed was wight,
And bare him ably in the flight,
Himself had seen him dubb'd a knight."

For the young heir of Branksome's line,
God be his aid, and God be mine;
Through me no friend shall meet his doom;
Here, while I live, no foe finds room.
Then, if thy Lords their purpose urge,
Take our defiance loud and high;
Our slogan is their lyke-wake⁹ dirge,
Our moat, the grave where they shall lie."

XXVII.

Proud she look'd round, applause to claim—
Then lighten'd Thirlestane's eye of flame;
His bugle Wat of Harden blew;
Pensils and pennons wide were flung,
To heaven the Border slogan rung,
"St. Mary for the young Buceluch!"
The English war-cry answer'd wide,
And forward bent each southern spear;
Each Kendal archer made a stride,
And drew the bowstring to his ear;
Each minstrel's war-note loud was blown;—
But, ere a gray-goose shaft had flown,
A horseman gallop'd from the rear."

XXVIII.

"Ah! noble Lords!" he breathless said,
"What treason has your march betray'd?
What make you here, from aid so far,
Before you walls, around you war?
Your foemen triumph in the thought,
That in the toils the lion's caught.
Already on dark Ruberslaw
The Douglas holds his weapon-schaw;¹⁰
The lances, waving in his train,
Clothe the dun heath like autumn grain;
And on the Liddel's northern strand,
To bar retreat to Cumberland,
Lord Maxwell ranks his merry-men good,
Beneath the eagle and the rood;
And Jedwood, Eske, and Teviotdale,
Have to proud Angus come;
And all the Merse and Lauderdale
Have risen with haughty Home;
An exile from Northumberland,
In Liddesdale I've wandered long;
But still my heart was with merry England,
And cannot brook my country's wrong:
And hard I've spurred all night to show
The mustring of coming foe."—

XXIX.

"And let them come!" fierce Dacre cried;
"For soon you erst, my father's pride,
That swept the shores of Judah's sea,
And waved in gales of Galilee,

¹ An asylum for outlaws.
² See Appendix, Note 3 H.
³ Plundered.
⁴ Note of assault.
⁵ Orig.: "Say to thy Lords of high emprise."
⁶ See Appendix, Note 3 I.
⁷ Ibid. Note 3 K.
⁸ See Appendix, Note 3 L.
⁹ Lyke-wake, the watching a corpse previous to interment.
¹⁰ Weapon-schaw, the military array of a county.
XXX.

"Yet hear," quoth Howard, "calmly hear, Nor deem my words the words of fear: For who, in field or foray slack, Saw the blanched lion e'er fall back? But thus to risk our Border flower In strife against a kingdom's power, Ten thousand Scots 'gainst thousands three, Certes, were desperate policy. Nay, take the terms the Ladye made, Ere consciences of the advancing aid: Let Musgrave meet fierce Deloraine\(^2\) In single fight, and, if he gain, He gains for us; but if he's cross'd, 'Tis but a single warrior lost: The rest, retreating as they came, Avoid defeat, and death, and shame."

XXXI.

Ill could the haughty Daere brook His brother Warden's sage rebuke; And yet his forward step he staid, And slow and sullenly obey'd. But ne'er again the Border side Did these two lords in friendship ride; And this slight discontent, men say, Cost blood upon another day.

XXXII.

The pursuivant-at-arms again Before the castle took his stand; His trumpet call'd, with parleying strain, The leaders of the Scottish band; And he defied, in Musgrave's right, Stout Deloraine to single fight; A gauntlet at their feet he laid, And thus the terms of fight he said:— "If in the lists good Musgrave's sword Vanquish the Knight of Deloraine, Your youthful chieftain, Branksome's Lord, Shall hostage for his clan remain: If Deloraine foil good Musgrave, The boy his liberty shall have. Howe'er it falls, the English band, Unharmed Scots, by Scots unharm'd, In peaceful march, like men unarm'd, Shall straight retreat to Cumberland."

XXXIII.

Unconscious of the near relief, The proffer pleased each Scottish chief,

Though much the Ladye sage gainsay'd; For though their hearts were brave and true, From Jedwood's recent sack they knew How tardy was the Regent's aid: And you may guess the noble Dame Durst not the secret presence own, Sprung from the art she might not name, By which the coming help was known. Closed was the compact, and agreed That lists should be enclosed with speed, Beneath the castle, on a lawn: They fix'd the morrow for the strife, On foot, with Scottish axe and knife, At the fourth hour from peep of dawn; When Deloraine, from sickness freed, Or else a champion in his stead, Should for himself and chieftain stand, Against stout Musgrave, hand to hand.

XXXIV.

I know right well, that, in their lay, Full many minstrels sing and say, Such combat should be made on horse, On foaming steed, in full career, With brand to aid, when as the spear Should shiver in the course: But he, the jovial Harper,\(^3\) taught Me, yet a youth, how it was fought, In guise which now I say: He knew each ordinance and clause Of Black Lord Archibald's battle-laws,\(^4\) In the old Dougal's day. He brook'd not, he, that scoffing tongue Should tax his minstrelsy with wrong, Or call his song untrue: For this, when they the goblet plied, And such rude taunt had chaf'd his pride, The Bard of Reull he slew. On Teviot's side, in fight they stood, And tuneful hands were stain'd with blood; Where still the thorn's white branches wave, Memorial o'er his rival's grave.

XXXV.

Why should I tell the rigid doom, That dragg'd my master to his tomb? How Ousenam's maidens tore their hair, Wept till their eyes were dead and dim, And wrung their hands for love of him, Who died at Jedwood Air? He died!—his scholars, one by one, To the cold silent grave are gone; And I, alas! survive alone, To muse o'er rivalries of yore, And grieve that I shall hear no more The strains, with envy heard before; For, with my minstrel brethren fled, My jealousy of song is dead.

\(^{1}\) See Appendix, Note 3 M.  \(^{2}\) Ibid. Note 3 N.  \(^{3}\) See Appendix, Note 3 O.  \(^{4}\) Ibid. Note 3 P.
He paused: the listening dames again
Applaud the hoary Minstrel's strain.
With many a word of kindly cheer,—
In pity half, and half sincere,— Marvell'd the Duchess how so well
His legendary song could tell
Of ancient deeds, so long forgot;
Of feuds, whose memory was not;
Of forests, now laid waste and bare;
Of towers, which harbor now the bare;
Of chiefs, who, under changed and gone;
So long had slept, thatickle Fame
Had blotted from her rolls their name,
And twined round some new minion's head
The fading wreath for which they bled;
In sooth, 'twas strange this old man's verse
Could call them from their marble hearse.

The Harper smiled, well pleased; for ne'er
Was flattery lost on poet's ear:
A simple race! they waste their toil
For the vain tribute of a smile;
E'en when in age their flame expires,
Her dulcet breath can fan its fires;
Their drooping fancy wakes at praise,
And strives to trim the short-lived blaze.

Smiled then, well pleased, the Aged Man,
And thus his tale continued ran.

---

The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Canto Fifth.

I.

CALL it not vain:—they do not err
Who say that when the Poet dies,
Mute Nature mourns her worshipper,
And celebrates his obsequies:
Who say, tall cliff, and cavern lone,
For the departed Bard make morn;
That mountains weep in crystal rill;
That flowers in tears of balm distill;
Through his loved groves that breezes sigh;
And oaks, in deeper groan, reply;
And rivers teach their rushing wave
To murmur dirges round his grave.

1 Orig.: "Spear-heads above the columns dun."—Ed.
2 See Appendix, Note 3 Q.
3 In the first edition we read—
"Vails not to tell what hundreds more
From the rich Merse and Lammermore," &c.

II.

Not that, in sooth, o'er mortal urn
Those things inanimate can mourn;
But that the stream, the wood, the gale,
Is vocal with the plaintive wail
Of those who, else forgotten long,
Lived in the Poet's faithful song,
And, with the Poet's parting breath,
Whose memory feels a second death.
The Maid's pale shade, who wails her lot,
That love, true love, should be forgot,
From rose and hawthorn shakes the tear
Upon the gentle Minstrel's bier:
The phantom Knight, his glory fled,
Mourns o'er the field he heaped with dead;
Mounts the wild blast that sweeps amain,
And shrieks along the battle-plain.
The Chief, whose antique crownlet long
Still sparkled in the feudal song,
Now, from the mountain's misty throne,
Sees, in the thanedom once his own,
His ashes undistinguish'd lie,
His place, his power, his memory die;
His groans the lonely caverns fill,
His tears of rage impel the rill:
All mourn the Minstrel's harp unstrung,
Their name unknown, their praise unsung.

III.

Scarcely the hot assault was said,
The terms of truce were scarcely made,
When they could spy, from Branksome's towers,
The advancing march of martial powers.
Thick clouds of dust afar appear'd,
And trampling steeds were faintly heard;
Bright spears, above the columns dun,
Glanced momentary to the sun;
And feudal banners fair display'd
The bands that moved to Branksome's aid.

IV.

Vails not to tell each hardy clan,
From the fair Middle Marches came;
The Bloody Heart blazed in the van,
Announcing Douglas, dreaded name! 2
Vails not to tell what steeds did spurn, 3
Where the Seven Spears of Wedderburne 4
Their men in battle order set;
And Swinton laid the lance in rest,
That tamed of yore the sparkling crest
Of Clarence's Plantagenet. 5
Nor list I say what hundreds more,
From the rich Merse and Lammermore,

The lines on Wedderburne and Swinton were inserted in the second edition.—Ed.
4 Sir David Home of Wedderburn, who was slain in the fatal battle of Flodden, left seven sons by his wife, Isabel, daughter of Hoppringle of Galashiels (now Pringle of Whitebank). They were called the Seven Spears of Wedderburne.
5 See Appendix, Note 3 R.
And Tweed's fair borders, to the war,
Beneath the crest of old Dunbar,
And Hepburn's mingled banners come,
Down the steep mountain glittering far,
And shouting still, "A Home! a Home!"

V.
Now squire and knight, from Branksome sent,
On many a courteous message went;
To every chief and lord they paid
Meet thanks for prompt and powerful aid;
And told them,—how a truce was made,
And how a day of fight was taken
'Twixt Musgrave and stout Deloraine;
And how the Ladye pray'd them dear,
That all would stay the fight to see,
And deign, in love and courtesy,
To taste of Branksome cheer.
Nor, while they bade to feast each Scot,
Were England's noble Lords forgot.
Himself, the hoary Seneschal,
Rode forth, in seemly terms to call
Those gallant foes to Branksome Hall;
Accepted Howard, than whom knight
Was never dub'd more bold in fight;
Nor, when from war and armor free,
More famed for stately courtesy:
But angry Daure rather chose
In his pavilion to repose.

VI.
Now, noble Dame, perchance you ask,
How these two hostile armies met?
Deceming it were no easy task
To keep the truce which here was set;
Where martial spirits, all on fire,
Breathed only blood and mortal ire.—
By mutual inroads, mutnal blows,
By habit, and by nation, foes,
They met on Teviot's strand;
They met and sat them mingled down,
Without a threat, without a frown,
As brothers meet in foreign land;
The hands, the spear that lately grasp'd,
Still in the mailed gauntlet clasped,
Were interchanged in greeting dear;
Visors were raised, and faces shown,
And many a friend, to friend made known,
Partook of social cheer.
Some drove the jolly bowl about;
With dice and draughts some chased the day;
And some, with many a merry shout,
In riot, revelry, and rout,
Pursued the foot-ball play.2

VII.
Yet, be it known, had bingles blown,
Or sign of war been seen,
Those bands, so fair together ranged,
Those hands, so frankly interchanged,
Had dyed with gore the green:
The merry shout by Teviot-side
Had sunk in war-cries wild and wide,
And in the groan of death;
And whingers, now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.
'Twixt truce and war, such sudden change
Was not infrequent, nor held strange,
In the old Border-day:4
But yet on Branksome's towers and town,
In peaceful merriment, sunk down
The sun's declining ray.

VIII.
The blithesome signs of wassail gay
Decay'd not with the dying day;
Soon through the latticed windows tall
Of lofty Branksome's lordly hall,
Divided square by shafts of stone,
Huge flakes of ruddy lustre shone;
Nor less the gilded rafters rang
With merry harp and beakers' clang:
And frequent, on the darkening plain,
Loud hollo, whoop, or whistle ran,
As bands, their strugglers to regain,
Give the shrill watchword of their clan;5
And revellers, o'er their bowls, proclaim
Douglas' or Daure's conquering name.

IX.
Less frequent heard, and fainter still,
At length the various clamors died:
And you might hear, from Branksome hill,
No sound but Teviot's rushing tide;
Save when the changing sentinel
The challenge of his watch could tell;
And save, where, through the dark profound,
The clanging axe and hammer's sound
Rung from the nether lawn;
For many a busy hand toil'd there,
Strong pales to shape, and beams to square,6
The lists6 dread barriers to prepare
Against the morrow's dawn.

X.
Margaret from hall did soon retreat,
Despite the Dame's reproving eye;
Nor mark'd she, as she left her seat,
Full many a stifled sigh;
For many a noble warrior strove
To win the Flower of Teviot's love,
And many a bold ally,—
With throbbing head and anxious heart,
All in her lonely bower apart,

1 See Appendix, Note 3 S.  2 Ibid. Note 3 T.
3 A sort of knife or poniard.  4 See Appendix, Note 3 U.
5 Ibid. Note 3 V.  6 This line is not in the first edition.
In broken sleep she lay:
By times, from silken couch she rose;
While yet the banner'd hosts repose,
She view'd the dawning day:
Of all the hundreds sunk to rest,
First woke the loveliest and the best.

XI.
She gazed upon the inner court,
Which in the tower's tall shadow lay;
Where courser's clang, and stamp, and snort,
Had rung the livelong yesterday;
Now still as death; till stalking slow,—
The jingling spurs announced his tread,—
A stately warrior pass'd below;
But when he raised his plum'd head—
Blessed Mary! can it be?—
Secure, as if in Ousenam bowers,
He walks through Branksome's hostile towers,
With fearless step and free.
She dare not sign, she dare not speak—
Oh! if one page's slumbers break,
His blood the price must pay!
Not all the pearls Queen Mary wears,
Not Margaret's yet more precious tears,
Shall buy his life a day.

XII.
Yet was his hazard small; for well
You may bethink you of the spell
Of that sly urchin page;
This to his lord he did impart,
And made him seem, by glamour art,
A knight from Hermitage.
Unchallenged thus, the warder's post,
The court, unchallenged, thus he cross'd,
For all the vassalage:
But oh! what magic's quaint disguise
Could blind fair Margaret's azure eyes!
She started from her seat;
While with surprise and fear she strove,
And both could scarcely master love—
Lord Henry's at her feet.

XIII.
Oft have I mused, what purpose bad
That foul malicious urchin had
To bring this meeting round;
For happy love's a heavenly sight,
And by a vile malignant sprite
In such no joy is found;
And oft I've deem'd, perchance he thought
Their erring passion might have wrought

Sorrow, and sin, and shame;
And death to Cranston's gallant Knight,
And to the gentle ladye bright,
Disgrace, and loss of fame.
But earthly spirit could not tell
The heart of them that loved so well.
True love's the gift which God has given
To man alone beneath the heaven:
It is not fantasy's hot fire,
Whose wishes, soon as granted, fly;
It liveth not in fierce desire,
With dead desire it does not die;
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver link,1 the silken tie,
Which heart to heart, and mind to mind,
In body and in soul can bind.—
Now leave we Margaret and her Knight,
To tell you of the approaching fight.

XIV.
Their warning blasts the bugles blew,
The pipe's shrill port2 aroused each clan,
In haste, the deadly strife to view,
The trooping warriors eager ran:
Thick round the lists their lances stood,
Like blasted pines in Ettrick wood;
To Branksome many a look they threw,
The combatants' approach to view,
And bandied many a word of boast,
About the knight each favored most.

XV.
Meantime full anxious was the Dame;
For now arose disputed claim,
Of who should fight for Deloraine,
'Twixt Harden and 'twixt Thirlstane?3
They 'gan to reckon kin and rent,
And frowning brow on brow was bent;
But yet not long the strife—for, lo!
Himself, the Knight of Deloraine,
Strong, as it seem'd, and free from pain,
In armor sheath'd from top to toe,
Appear'd, and craved the combat due.
The Dame her charm successful knew,4
And the fierce chiefs their claims withdrew.

XVI.
When for the lists they sought the plain,
The stately Ladye's silken rein
Did noble Howard hold;
Unarmed by her side he walk'd,
And much, in courteous phrase, they talk'd
Of feats of arms of old.

1 In the first edition, "the silver cord;"—
"Yes, love, indeed, is light from heaven;
A spark of that immortal fire
With angels shared, by Allah given,
To lift from earth our low desire," &c.

2 A martial piece of music, adapted to the bagpipes.

3 It may be noticed that the late Lord Napier, the representative of the Scotts of Thirlstane, was Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire (of which the author was sheriff-depute) at the time when the poem was written; the competitor for the honor of supplying Deloraine's place was the poet's own ancestor.—Ed.

4 See canto iii. stanza xxiii.
Costly his garb—his Flemish ruff
Fell o'er his doublet shaped of buff;
With satin slash'd and lined;
Tawny his boot, and gold his spur,
His cloak was all of Poland fur,
His hose with silver twined;
His Billboa blade, by March-men felt,
Hung in a broad and studded belt;
Hence, in rude phrase, the Borderers still Call'd noble Howard, Belted Will.

XVII.
Behind Lord Howard and the Dame,
Fair Margaret on her palfrey came,
Whose foot-cloth swept the ground;
White was her wimple, and her veil,
And her loose locks a chaplet pale
Of whitest roses bound;
The lordly Angus, by her side,
In courtesy to cheer her tried;
Without his aid, her hand in vain
Had strove to guide her broder'd rein.
He deem'd, she shudder'd at the sight
Of warriors met for mortal fight;
But cause of terror, all ungess'd,
Was fluttering in her gentle breast,
When, in their chairs of crimson placed,
The Dame and she the barriers graced.

XVIII.
Prize of the field, the young Bucleuch,
An English knight led forth to view;
Scarce rued the boy his present plight,
So much he long'd to see the fight.
Within the lists, in knightly pride,
High Home and haughty Dacre ride;
Their leading staffs of steel they wield,
As marshals of the mortal field;
While to each knight their care assign'd
Like vantage of the sun and wind,
Then heralds hoarse did loud proclaim,
In King and Queen and Warden's name,
That none, while last the strife,
Should dare, by look, or sign, or word,
Aid to a champion to afford,
On peril of his life;
And not a breath the silence broke,
Till thus the alternate Heralds spoke:—

XIX.
ENGLISH HERALD.
"Here standeth Richard of Musgrave,
Good knight and true, and freely born,
Amenends from Deloraine to crave,
For foul despicive scathe and scorn.
He sayeth, that William of Deloraine
Is traitor false by Border laws;
This with his sword he will maintain,
So help him God, and his good cause!"

XX.
SCOTTISH HERALD.
"Here standeth William of Deloraine,
Good knight and true, of noble strain,
Who sayeth, that foul treason's stain,
Since he bore arms, ne'er soil'd his coat;
And that, so help him God above!
He will on Musgrave's body prove,
He lies most foully in his throat."

LORD DACRE.
"Forward, brave champions, to the fight!
Sound trumpets!"

LORD HOME.
"God defend the right!"

Then, Teviot! how thine echoes rang,
When bugle-sound and trumpet-clang
Let loose the martial foes,
And in mid list, with shield poised high,
And measured step and wary eye,
The combatants did close.

XXI.
Ill would it suit your gentle ear,
Ye lovely listeners, to hear
How to the axe the helms did sound,
And blood pour'd down from many a wound;
For desperate was the strife and long,
And either warrior fierce and strong.
But, were each dame a listening knight,
I well could tell how warriors fight!
For I have seen war's lightning flashing,
Seen the claymore with bayonet clashing,
Seen through red blood the war-horse dashing,
And scorn'd, amid the reeling strife,
To yield a step for death or life.—

XXII.
'Tis done! 'tis done! that fatal blow3
Has stretch'd him on the bloody plain;
He strives to rise—Brave Musgrave, no!
Thence never shalt thou rise again!
He chokes in blood—some friendly hand
Undo the visor's barred band,
Unfix the gorget's iron clasp,
And give him room for life to gasp!—
Oh, bootless aid!—haste, holy Friar,4
Haste, ere the sinner shall expire!
Of all his guilt let him be shriven,
And smooth his path from earth to heaven!

1 This couplet was added in the second edition.
2 After this, in the first edition, we read only,
   "At the last words, with deadly blows,
   The ready warriors fiercely close."—Ed.
3 "The whole scene of the duel, or judicial combat, is conducted according to the strictest ordinances of chivalry, and delineated with all the minuteness of an ancient romance.
The modern reader will probably find it rather tedious; all but the concluding stanza, which is in a loftier measure—
'Tis done! 'tis done!" &c.—JEFFREY.
4 First edition, "In vain—In vain! haste, holy Friar."
XXIII.
In haste the holy Friar sped;—
His naked foot was dyed with red,
As through the lists he ran;
Unmindful of the shouts on high,
That half'd the conqueror's victory,
He raised the dying man;
Loose waved his silver beard and hair,
As o'er him he kneel'd down in prayer;
And still the crucifix on high
He holds before his darkening eye;
And still he bends an anxious ear,
His faltering penitence to hear;
Still props him from the bloody sod,
Still, even when soul and body part,
Pours ghostly comfort on his heart,
And bids him trust in God!
Unheard he prays;—the death-pang's o'er?
Richard of Musgrave breathes no more.

XXIV.
As if exhausted in the fight,
Or musing o'er the piteous sight,
The silent victor stands;
His beaver did he not unclasp,
Mark'd not the shouts, felt not the grasp
Of gratulating hands.
When lo! strange cries of wild surprise,
Mingled with seeming terror, rise
Among the Scottish bands;
And all, amid the throng'd array,
In panic haste gave open way
To a half-naked ghastly man,
Who downwards from the castle ran:
He cross'd the barriers at a bound,
And wild and haggard look'd around,
As dizzy, and in pain;
And all, upon the armed ground,
Knew William of Deloraine!
Each ladye sprung from seat with speed;
Vaulted each marshal from his steed;
"And who art thou," they cried,
"Who hast this battle fought and won?"—
His plumed helm was soon undone—
"Cranstoun of Teviot-side!
For this fair prize I've fought and won,"—
And to the Ladye led her son.

XXV.
Full oft the resuced boy she kiss'd,
And often press'd him to her breast;
For, under all her dauntless show,
Her heart had throb'd at every blow;
Yet not Lord Cranstoun deign'd she greet,
Though low he kneeled at her feet.
Me lists not tell what words were made,
What Douglas, Home, and Howard, said—
—For Howard was a generous foe—
And how the clan united pray'd

1 Orig. "Unheard he prays;—'tis o'er! 'tis o'er!"

The Ladye would the feud forego,
And deign to bless the nuptial hour
Of Cranstoun's Lord and Teviot's Flower.

XXVI.
She look'd to river, look'd to hill,
Thought on the Spirit's prophecy,
Then broke her silence stern and still,—
"Not you, but Fate, has vanquish'd me;
Their influence kindly stars may shower
On Teviot's tide and Branksome's tower,
For pride is quell'd, and love is free."—
She took fair Margaret by the hand,
Who breathless, trembling, scarce might stand;
That hand to Cranstoun's Lord gave she:—
"As I am true to thee and thine,
Do thou be true to me and mine!
This clasp of love our bond shall be;
For this is your betrothing day,
And all these noble lords shall stay,
To grace it with their company."

XXVII.
All as they left the listed plain,
Much of the story she did gain;
How Cranstoun fought with Deloraine,
And of his page, and of the Book
Which from the wounded Knight he took;
And how he sought her castle high,
That morn, by help of granary;
How, in Sir William's armor dight,
Stolen by his page, while slept the Knight,
He took on him the single fight.
But half his tale he left unsaid,
And linger'd till he join'd the maid.—
Cared not the Ladye to betray
Her mystic arts in view of day;
But well she thought ere midnight came,
Of that strange page the pride to tame,
From his foul bands the Book to save,
And send it back to Michael's grave.—
Needs not to tell each tender word
'Twixt Margaret and 'twixt Cranstoun's Lord;
Nor how she told of former woes,
And how her bosom fell and rose,
While he and Musgrave bandied blows.—
Needs not these lovers' joys to tell:
One day, fair maids, you'll know them well.

XXVIII.
William of Deloraine, some chance
Had waken'd from his deathlike trance;
And taught that, in the listed plain,
Another, in his arms and shield,
Against fierce Musgrave axe did wield,
Under the name of Deloraine.
Hence, to the field, unarmed he ran,
And hence his presence scared the clan,
Who held him for some fleeting wraith,²

² The spectral apparition of a living person.
And not a man of blood and breath,
Not much this new ally he loved,
Yet, when he saw what hap had proved,
He greeted him right heartilie;
He would not waken old debate,
For he was void of rancorous hate,
Though rude, and scant of courtesy;
In raids it split but seldom blood,
Unless when men-at-arms withstood,
Or, as was meet, for deadly feud.
He ne'er bore grudge for stalwart blow,
Ta'en in fair fight from gallant foe;
And so 'twas seen of him, e'en now,
When on dead Musgrave he look'd down;
Grief dark'en'd on his rugged brow;
Though half disguised with a frown;
And thus, while sorrow bent his head,
His foeman's epitaph he made:—

XXIX.

"Now, Richard Musgrave, liest thou here!
I ween, my deadly enemy;
For, if I slew thy brother dear,
Thou saw'lt a sister's son to me;
And when I lay in dungeon dark,
Of Naworth Castle, long months three,
Till ransom'd for a thousand mark,
Dark Musgrave, it was long of thee.
And, Musgrave, could our fight be tried,
And thou wert now alive, as I,
No mortal man should us divide,
Till one, or both of us, did die:
Yet rest thee God! for weil I know
I ne'er shall find a nobler foe.
In all the northern counties here,
Whose word is Snaffle, spur, and spear,
Thou wert the best to follow gear!
'Twas pleasure, as we look'd behind,
To see how thou the chase couldst wind,
Cheer the dark blood-bound on his way;
And with the bugle rouse the fray?
I'd give the lands of Deloraine,
Dark Musgrave were alive again."—

XXX.

So mourn'd he, till Lord Dacre's band
Were bowling back to Cumberland.
They raised brave Musgrave from the field,
And laid him on his bloody shield;
On level'd lances, four and four,
By turns, the noble burden bore.
Before, at times, upon the gale,
Was heard the Minstrel's plaintive wail;
Behind, four priests, in sable stole,
Sung requiem for the Warrior's soul:

1 "The lands, that over Ouse to Berwick forth do bear,
Have for their blazon had, the snaffle, spur, and spear." Poly-Albion, song 13.

2 See Appendix, Note 3 W.

3 "The style of the old romancers has been very successfully imitated in the whole of the scene; and the speech of Around, the horsemen slowly rode;
With trailing pikes the spearmen trode;
And thus the gallant Knight they bore,
Through Liddesdale to Leven's shore;
Thence to Holme Coltrame's lofty shore,
And laid him in his father's grave.

The harp's wild notes, though hush'd the song,
The mimic march of death prolong;
Now seems it far, and now a-near,
Now meets, and now eludes the ear;
Now seems some mountain side to sweep,
Now faintly dies in valley deep;
Seems now as if the Minstrel's wail,
Now the sad requiem, loads the gale;
Last, o'er the Warrior's closing grave,
Rung the full choir in choral stave.

After due pause, they bade him tell,
Why he, who touch'd the harp so well,
Should thus, with ill-rewarded toil,
Wander a poor and thankless soil,
When the more generous Southern Land
Would well requite his skillful hand.

The Aged Harper, howsoe'er
His only friend, his harp, was dear,
Liked not to hear it rank'd so high
Above his flowing poesy:
Less liked he still, that scornful jeer
Misprized the land he loved so dear;
High was the sound, as thus again
The Bard resumed his minstrel strain.

The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

CANTO SIXTH.

I.

Breathes there the man, with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burn'd,
As home his footsteps he hath turn'd,
From wandering on a foreign strand!
If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
For him no Minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim;
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentrated all in self,

Deloraine, who, roused from his bed of sickness, rushes into the lists, and apostrophizes his fallen enemy, brought to our recollection, as well from the peculiar turn of expression in its commencement, as in the tone of sentiments which it conveys, some of the funebres orationes of the Mort Arthur:—

Critical Review.
Living, shall for'cit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust, from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonor'd, and unsung.

II.
O Caledonia! stern and wild,
Meet nurse for a poetical child!
Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
Land of the mountain and the flood,
Land of my sires! what mortal hand
Can o'er untie the filial band?
That knits me to thy rugged strand!
Still, as I view each well-known scene,
Think what is now, and what hath been,
Seems as, to me, of all bereft,
Sole friends thy woods and streams were left;
And thus I love them better still,
Even in extremity of ill.
By Yarrow's streams still let me stray,
Though none should guide my feeble way;
Still feel the breeze down Ettrick break,
Although it chill'd my wither'd cheek;
Still lay my head by Teviot's Stone,
Though there, forgotten and alone,
The Bard may draw his parting groan.

III.
Not scorn'd like me! to Branksome Hall
The Minstrels came, at festive call;
Trooping they came, from near and far,
The jovial priests of mirth and war;
Alike for feast and fight prepared,
Battle and banquet both they shared.
Of late, before each martial clan,
They blew their death-note in the van,
But now, for every merry mate,
Rose the portcullis' iron grate;
They sound the pipe, they strike the string,
They dance, they revel, and they sing,
Till the rude turrets shake and ring.

IV.
Me lists not at this tide declare
The splendor of the spousal rite,
How must'r'd in the chapel fair
Both maid and matron, squire and knight;
Me lists not tell of owches rare,
Of mantles green, and braided hair,
And kirtles furr'd with miniver;
What plumage waved the altar round,
How spurs and ringing chainlets sound;
And hard it were for Bard to speak
The changeful hue of Margaret's cheek;

1 "The Lady of the Lake has nothing so good as the address to Scotland."—Mackintosh.
2 The preceding four lines now form the inscription on the monument of Sir Walter Scott in the market-place of Sol-kirk.—See Life, vol. x. p. 257.
3 The line "Still lay my head," &c., was not in the first edition.—Ed.

That lovely hue which comes and flies,
As awe and shame alternate rise!

V.
Some bards have sung, the Ladyle high
Chapel or altar came not nigh;
Nor durst the rites of spousal grace,
So much she fear'd each holy place.
False slanders these:—I trust right well
She wrought not by forbidden spell;
For mighty words and signs have power
O'er sprites in planetary hour;
Yet scarce I praise their venturous part,
Who tamper with such dangerous art.
But this for faithful truth I say,
The Ladyle by the altar stood,
Of sable velvet her array,
And on her head a crimson hood,
With pearls embroider'd and entwined,
Guarded with gold, with ermine lined;
A merlin sat upon her wrist,
Held by a leash of silken twist.

VI.
The spousal rites were ended soon;
'Twas now the merry hour of noon,
And in the lofty arch'd hall
Was spread the gorgeous festival.
Steward and squire, with heedful haste,
Marshall'd the rank of every guest;
Pages, with ready blade, were there,
The mighty meal to carve and share:
O'er capon, heron-shew, and crane,
And princely peacock's gilded train,
And o'er the boar-head, garnish'd brave,
And eygnet from St. Mary's wave;
O'er plarmigan and venison,
The priest had spoke his benison.
Then rose the riot and the din,
Above, beneath, without, within!
For, from the lofty balcony,
Rung trumpet, shalm, and psaltery:
Their clanging bowls old warriors quaff'd,
Loudly they spoke, and loudly laugh'd;
Whisper'd young knights, in tone more mild,
To ladies fair, and ladies smiled.
The hooded hawks, high perch'd on beam,
The clamor join'd with whistling scream,
And flapp'd their wings, and shook their bells,
In concert with the stag-hounds' yells.
Round go the flasks of ruddy wine,
From Bordeaux, Orleans, or the Rhine;
Their tasks the busy sewers ply,
And all is mirth and revelry.

4 See Appendix, Note 3 X.
5 Ibid. Note 3 Y.
6 See Appendix, Note 3 Z.
7 There are often flights of wild swans upon St. Mary's Lake, at the head of the river Yarrow. See Wordsworth's Yarrow Visited:
"The swan on still St. Mary's Lake
Floats double, swan and shadow."—Ed.
VII.
The Goblin Page, omitting still
No opportunity of ill,
Strove now, while blood ran hot and high,
To rouse debate and jealousy;
Till Conrad, Lord of Wolfenstein,
By nature fierce, and warm with wine,
And now in humor highly cross'd,
About some steeds his band had lost,
High words to words succeeding still,
Smote, with his gauntlet, stout Huthill; 1
A hot and hardly Rutherford,
Whom men called Dickon Draw-the-sword,
He took it on the page's saye,
Huthill had driven these steeds away.
Then Howard, Hone, and Douglas rose,
The kindling discord to compose;
Stern Rutherford right little said,
But hit his glove, 2 and shook his head. —
A fortinthe thence, in Inglewood,
Stout Conrad, cold, and drouch'd in blood,
His bosom gored with many a wound,
Was by a woodman's lyme-dog found;
Unknown the manner of his death,
Gone was his brand, both sword and sheath;
But ever from that time, 'twas said,
That Dickon wore a Cologne blade.

VIII.
The Dwarf, who fear'd his master's eye
Might his foul treachery espie,
Now sought the castle buttrey,
Where many a yeoman, bold and free,
Revel'd as merrily and well
As those that sat in lordly selle.
Watt Tinlinn, there, did frankly raise
The pledge to Arthur Fire-the-Brace 3
And he, as by his breeding bound,
To Howard's merry-men sent it round.
To quit them, on the English side,
Red Roland Forster loudly cried,
"A deep carouse to you fair bride!"
At every pledge, from vat and pail
Foam'd forth in floods the nut-brown ale;
While shout the riders every one;
Such day of mirth ne'er cheer'd their clan,

Since old Buccleuch the name did gain,
When in the cloch the buck was ta'en. 4

IX.
The wily page, with vengeful thought,
Remember'd him of Tinlinn's yew,
And swore, it should be dearly bought
That ever he the arrow drew.
First, he the yeoman did molest,
With bitter gibe and taunting jest;
Told, how he fled at Solway strife,
And how Hob Armstrong cheer'd his wife;
Then, shunning still his powerful arm,
At unawares he wrought him harm;
From trecher stole his choiceest cheer,
Dash'd from his lips his can of beer;
Then, to his knee sly creeping on,
With bodkin piercèd him to the bone:
The venom'd wound, and festering joint,
Long after rued that bodkin's point.
The startled yeoman swore and spurn'd,
And board and flagons overturn'd. 5
Riot and clamor wild began;
Back to the hall the urchin ran;
Took in a darkling nook his post,
And grin'd, and mutter'd, "Lost! lost! lost!"

X.
By this, the Dame, lest farther fray
Should mar the concord of the day,
Had bid the Minstrels tune their lay.
And first step forth old Albert Greene,
The Minstrel of that ancient name; 6
Was none who struck the harp so well,
Within the Land Debatable;
Well friended, too, his hardy kin,
Whoever lost, were sure to win;
They sought the beeves that made their broth,
In Scotland and in England both,
In homely guise, as nature bade,
His simple song the Borderer said.

XI.
ALBERT GREENE. 7
It was an English ladye bright,
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,) 8

order; but the Goblin Page is well introduced, as applying a torch to this mass of combustibles. Quarrels, highly characteristic of Border manners, both in their cause and in the manner in which they are supported, enlace, as well among the lordly guests, as the yeomen assembled in the buttery."—Critical Review, 1856.
5 See Appendix, Note 4 D.
6 "It is the author's object, in these songs, to exemplify the different styles of ballad narrative which prevailed in this island at different periods, or in different conditions of society. The first (Albert's) is conducted upon the rude and simple model of the old Border ditties, and produces its effect by the direct and concise narrative of a tragical occurrence."—Jeffrey.
7 See Appendix, Note 4 E.
And she would marry a Scottish knight,
For Love will still be lord of all.

Blithely they saw the rising sun,
When he shone fair on Carlisle wall;
But they were sad ere day was done,
Though Love was still the lord of all.

Her sire gave brooch and jewel fine,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall;
Her brother gave but a flask of wine,
For ire that Love was lord of all.

For she had lands, both meadow and lea,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,
And he swore her death, ere he would see
A Scottish knight the lord of all!

XII.
That wine she had not tasted well,
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,)
When dead, in her true love's arms, she fell,
For Love was still the lord of all!

He pierced her brother to the heart,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall:—
So perish all would true love part,
That Love may still be lord of all!

And then he took the cross divine,
(Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,)
And died for her sake in Palestine,
So Love was still the lord of all.

Now all ye lovers, that faithful prove,
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,)
Pray for their souls who died for love,
For Love shall still be lord of all!

XIII.
As ended Albert's simple lay,
Arose a bard of loftier port;
For sonnet, rhyme, and roundelay,
Renown'd in haughty Henry's court:
There rung thy harp, unrival'd long,
Fitztraver of the silver song!
The gentle Surrey loved his lyre—
Who has not heard of Surrey's fame?
His was the hero's soul of fire,
And his the bard's immortal name,
And his was love, exalted high
By all the glow of chivalry.

XIV.
They sought, together, chimes afar,
And oft, within some olive grove,
When even came with twinkling star,
They sung of Surrey's absent love.
His step the Italian peasant stay'd,
And deem'd, that spirits from on high,
Round where some hermit saint was laid,
Were breathing heavenly melody;
So sweet did harp and voice combine,
To praise the name of Geraldine.

XV.
Fitztraver! oh, what tongue may say
The pangs thy faithful bosom knew,
When Surrey, of the deathless lay,
Ungrateful Tudor's sentence slew?
Regardless of the tyrant's frown,
His harp call'd wrath and vengeance down,
He left, for Naworth's iron towers,
Windsor's green glades, and courtly bowers,
And, faithful to his patron's name,
With Howard still Fitztraver came;
Lord William's foremost favorite he,
And chief of all his minstrelsy.

XVI.
'Twas All-soul's eve, and Surrey's heart beat high;
He heard the midnight bell with anxious start,
Which told the mystic hour, approaching nigh,
When wise Cornelius promised, by his art,
To show to him the ladye of his heart,
Albeit betwixt them roar'd the ocean grim;
Yet so the sage had hight to play his part,
That he should see her form in life and limb,
And mark, if still she loved, and still she thought of him.

XVII.
Dark was the vaulted room of grammar,
To which the wizard led the gallant Knight,
Save that before a mirror, huge and high,
A hallow'd taper shed a glimmering light
On mystic implements of magic might;
On cross, and character, and talisman,
And almagest, and altar, nothing bright:
For fitful was the lustre, pale and wan,
As watchlight by the bed of some departing man.

XVIII.
But soon, within that mirror huge and high,
Was seen a self-emitted light to gleam;
And forums upon its breast the Earl 'gan spy,
Cloudy and indistinct, as feverish dream;
Till, slow arranging, and defined, they seem
To form a lordly and a lofty room,
Part lighted by a lamp with silver beam, accomplished Surrey, has more of the richness and polish of the Italian poetry, and is very beautifully written in a stanza resembling that of Spenser."—Jeffrey.
XIX.
Fair all the pageant—but how passing fair
The slender form, which lay on couch of Ind!
O'er her white bosom stray'd her hazel hair,
Pale her dear cheek, as if for love she pined;
All in her night-robe she lay reclined,
And, pensive, read from tablet eburnine
Some strain that seem'd her inmost soul to find;—
That favor'd strain was Surrey's raptured line,
That fair and lovely form, the Lady Geraldine.

XX.
Slow roll'd the clouds upon the lovely form,
And swept the goodly vision all away—
So royal envy roll'd the murky storm
O'er my beloved Master's glorious day.
Thou jealous, ruthless tyrant! Heaven repay
On thee, and on thy children's latest line,
The wild caprice of thy despotick sway,
The gory bridal bed, the plunder'd shrine.
The murder'd Surrey's blood, the tears of Geraldine!

XXI.
Both Scots and Southern chiefs prolong
Applauses of Fitztraver's song;
These hated Henry's name as death,
And those still held the ancient faith.—
Then, from his seat, with lofty air,
Rose Harold, hard of brave St. Clair;
St. Clair, who, feasting high at Home,
Had with that lord to battle come.
Harold was born where restless seas
Howl round the storm-swept Orcades; 2
Where erst St. Clairs held princely sway
O'er isle and islet, strait and bay;—
Still nod their palace to its fall,
Thy pride and sorrow, fair Kirkwall!—
Thence oft he mark'd fierce Pentland rave,
As if grim Odin rode her wave;
And watch'd, the whilst, with visage pale,
And throbbing heart, the struggling sail;
For all of wonderful and wild
Had rapture for the lonely child.

XXII.
And much of wild and wonderful
In these rude isles might fancy call;
For thither came, in times afar,
Stern Lochlin's sons of roving war,
The Norsemen, train'd to spoil and blood,
Skill'd to prepare the raven's food;
Kings of the main their leaders brave,
Their bark's the dragons of the wave. 2
And there, in many a stormy vale,
The Scald had told his wondrous tale;
And many a Runie column high
Had witness'd grim idolatry.
And thus had Harold, in his youth,
Learn'd many a Saga's rhyne uncouth,—
Of that Sea-Snake, tremendous curl'd,
Whose monstrous circle girls the world; 4
Of those dread Maids, 5 whose hideous yell
Maddens the battle's bloody swell;
Of Chiefs, who, guided through the gloom
By the pale death-lights of the tomb,
Ransack'd the graves of warriors old,
Their fealiones wrench'd from corpses' hold, 6
Waked the dead' tomb with war's alarms,
And bade the dead arise to arms!
With war and wonder all on flame,
To Roslin's bowers young Harold came,
Where, by sweet glen and greenwood tree,
He learn'd a milder minstrelsy;
Yet something of the Northern spell
Mix'd with the softer numbers well.

XXIII.
HAROLD. 7
Oh listen, listen, ladies gay!
No haughty feat of arms I tell;
Soft is the note, and sad the lay,
That mourns the lovely Rosabelle. 8

"Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
Rest thee in Castle Ravenshene 9
Nor tempt the stormy firth to-day.

"The blackening wave is edged with white:
To inch 10 and rock the sea-mew's fly;
The fishers have heard the Water-Sprite,
Whose screams forbode that wreck is nigh.

1 See Appendix, Note 4 G.
2 Ibid. Note 4 H.
3 The chiefs of the Välingr, or Scandinavian pirates, assumed the title of Sekoningr, or Sea-kings. Ships, in the inflated language of the Scalds, are often termed the serpents of the ocean.
4 See Appendix, Note 4 I.
5 Ibid. Note 4 K.
6 See Appendix, Note 4 L.
7 "The third song is intended to represent that wild style of composition which prevailed among the bards of the Northern Continent, somewhat softened and adorned by the 8 This was a family name in the house of St. Clair. Henry St. Clair, the second of the line, married Rosabelle, fourth daughter of the Earl of Stratheine.
9 See Appendix, Note 4 M.
10 Inch, isle.
O'er Roslin all that dreary night,
A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam;
'Twas broader than the watch-fire's light,
And redder than the bright moonbeam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock,
It ruddied all the copse-wood glen;
'Twas seen from Dryden's groves of oak,
And seen from cavern'd Hawthorneden.

Seem'd all on fire that chapel proud,
Where Roslin's chiefs uncofin'd lie,
Each baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.

Seem'd all on fire within, around,
Deep sacristy and altar's pale:
Shone every pillar foilage-bound,
And glimmer'd all the dead men's mail.

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair—
So still they blaze, when fate is nigh
The lordly line of high St. Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold
Lie buried within that proud chappel;
Each one the holy vault doth hold—
But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle!

And each St. Clair was buried there,
With candle, with book, and with knell;
But the sea-eaves rung, and the wild winds sung,
The dirge of lovely Rosabelle!

XXIV.
So sweet was Harold's piteous lay,
Scarce mark'd the guests the darken'd hall,
Though, long before the sinking day,
A wondrous shade involved them all:
It was not eddying mist or fog,
Draiu'd by the sun from fen or bog;
Of no eclipse had sages told;
And yet as it came on apace,
Each one could scarce his neighbor's face,
Could scarce his own stretch'd hand behold.
A secret horror check'd the feast,
And chill'd the soul of every guest;
Even the high Dame stood half aghast,
She knew some evil on the blast;
The elvish page fell to the ground,
And, shuddering, mutter'd, "Found! found!
Found!"

XXV.
Then sudden through the darken'd air
A flash of lightning came;
So broad, so bright, so red the glare,
The castle seem'd on flame.
Glanced every rafter of the hall,
Glanced every shield upon the wall;
Each trophyed beam, each sculptured stone,
Were instant seen, and instant gone;
Full through the guests' bedazzled band
Resistless flash'd the levin-brand,
And fill'd the hall with smouldering smoke,
As on the elvish page it broke.
It broke, with thunder long and loud,
Dismay'd the brave, appall'd the proud,—
From sea to sea the larum rung;
On Berwick wall, and at Carlisle withal,
To arms the startled warders sprung.
When ended was the dreadful roar,
The elvish Dwarf was seen no more!"
XXVI.
Some heard a voice in Branksome Hall,
Some saw a sight, not seen by all;
That dreadful voice was heard by some,
Cry, with loud summons, "Glybin, come!"
And on the spot where burst the brand,
Just where the page had flung him down,
Some saw an arm, and some a hand,
And some the waving of a gown.
The guests in silence pray'd and shook,
And terror dimm'd each lofty look.
But none of all the astonish'd train
Was so dismay'd as Deloraine;
His blood did freeze, his brain did burn,
'Twas fear'd his mind would ne'er return;
For he was speechless, ghastly, wan,
Like him of whom the story ran,
Who spoke the spectre-hound in Man.1
At length, by fits, he darkly told,
With broken hint, and shuddering cold—
That he had seen, right certainly,
A shape with amice wrapp'd around,
With a wrong'd Spanish baldric bound,
Like pilgrim from beyond the sea;
And knew—but how it matter'd not—
It was the wizard, Michael Scott.

XXVII.
The anxious crowd, with horror pale,
All trembling heard the wondrous tale;
No sound was made, no word was spoke,
Till noble Angus silence broke;
And he a solemn sacred plight
Did to St. Bride of Douglas make,2
That he a pilgrimage would take
To Melrose Abbey, for the sake
Of Michael's restless sprite.
Then each, to ease his troubled breast,
To some bless'd saint his prayers address'd:
Some to St. Modan made their vows,
Some to St. Mary of the Lowes,
Some to the Holy Rood of Lisle,
Some to our Ladye of the Isle;
Each did his patron witness make,
That he such pilgrimage would take,

And monks should sing, and bells should toll,
All for the weal of Michael's soul.
While vows were ta'en, and prayers were pray'd,
'Tis said the noble Dame, dismay'd,
Renounced, for aye, dark magic's aid.

XXVIII.
Nought of the bridal will I tell,
Which after in short space befell;
Nor how brave sons and daughters fair
Bless'd Teviot's Flower, and Cranstoun's heir:
After such dreadful scene, 'twere vain
To wake the note of mirth again.
More meet it were to mark the day
Of penitence and prayer divine,
When pilgrim-chiefs, in sad array,
Sought Melrose' holy shrine.

XXIX.
With naked foot, and sackcloth vest,
And arms enfolded on his breast,
Did every pilgrim go;
The standers-by might hear unceath,
Footstep, or voice, or high-drawn breath,
Through all the lengthen'd row:
No lordly look, nor martial stride;
Gone was their glory, sunk their pride,
Forgotten their renown;
Silent and slow, like ghosts they glide
To the high altar's hallow'd side,
And there they knelt them down:
Above the suppliant chiefains wave
The banners of departed brave;
Beneath the letter'd stones were laid
The ashes of their fathers dead;
From many a garnish'd niche around,
Stern saints and tortured martyrs frown'd.

XXX.
And slow up the dim aisle afar,
With sable cowl and scapular,
And snow-white stoles, in order due,
The holy Fathers, two and two,
In long procession came;
Taper, and host, and book they bare,
And holy banner, flourish'd fair
With the Redeemer's name.
Above the prostrate pilgrim band
The mitred Abbot stretch'd his hand,
And bless'd them as they knelt;
With holy cross he sign'd them all,
And pray'd they might be safe in hall,
And fortunate in field.

Then mass was sung, and prayers were said,
And solemn requiem for the dead;
And bells toll'd out their mighty peal,
For the departed spirit's soul;
And ever in the office close
The hymn of intercession rose;
And far the echoing aisles prolong
The awful burden of the song,—

Dies irae, dies illa,
Solvet Saeclum in Pauilla;
While the pealing organ rung
Were it meet with sacred strain
To close my lay, so light and vain,
Thus the holy Fathers sung:

XXXI.

Hymn for the Dead.

That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
When heaven and earth shall pass away,
What power shall be the sinner's stay?
How shall he meet that dreadful day?

When, shrivelling like a parched scroll,
The flaming heavens together roll;
When louder yet, and yet more dreadful,
Swells the high trump that wakes the dead!

Oh! on that day, that wrathful day,
When man to judgment wakes from clay,
Be Thou the trembling sinner's stay,
Though heaven and earth shall pass away!

Hush'd is the harp—the Minstrel gone.
And did he wander forth alone?
Alone, in indigence and age,
To linger out his pilgrimage?

No!—close beneath proud Newark's tower
Arose the Minstrel's lowly bower;
A simple hut; but there was seen
The little garden hedged with green,
The cheerful hearth, and lattice clean,
There shelter'd wanderers, by the blaze,
Oft heard the tale of other days;
For much he loved to ope his door,
And give the aid he begg'd before.

So pass'd the winter's day; but still,
When summer smiled on sweet Bowhill,²
And July's eve, with balmy breath,
Waved the blue-bells on Newark heath;
When throstles sang in Harhead-shaw,
And corn was green on Carterhaugh,³
And flourish'd, broad, Blackandro's oak,
The aged Harper's soul awoke!
Then would he sing achievements high,
And circumstance of chivalry,
Till the rapt wanderer would stay,
Forgetful of the closing day;
And noble youths, the strain to hear,
Forsook the hunting of the deer,
And Yarrow, as he roll'd along,
Bore burden to the Minstrel's song.⁴

"the vale unfolds
Rich groves of lofty stature,
With Yarrow winding through the pomp
Of cultivated nature:
And, rising from those lofty groves,
Behold a ruin heary,
The shatter'd front of Newark's towers,
Renown'd in Border story.

Fair scenes for childhood's opening bloom,
For sportive youth to stray in;
For manhood to enjoy his strength;
And age to wear away in," &c.

Wordsworth's Yarrow Visited.

² Bowhill is now, as has been mentioned already, a seat of the Duke of Buccleuch. It stands immediately below Newark Hill, and above the junction of the Yarrow and the Etrick. For the other places named in the text, the reader is referred to various notes on the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.—Ep.

³ Origin: "And grain waved green on Carterhaugh."

⁴ The arch allusions which run through all these Introductions, without in the least interrupting the truth and graceful pathos of their main impression, seem to me exquisitely characteristic of Scott, whose delight and pride was to play with the genius which nevertheless mastered him at will. For, in truth, what is it that gives to all his works their unique and marking charm, except the matchless effect which sudden effusions of the purest heart-blood of nature derive from their being poured out, to all appearance involuntarily, amidst diction and sentiment cast equally in the mould of the busy world, and the seemingly habitual desire to dwell on nothing but what might be likely to excite curiosity, without too much disturbing deeper feelings, in the spoons of polished life! Such outbursts come forth dramatically in all his writings; but in the interludes and passionate passages of the Lay of the Last Minstrel we have the poet's own inner soul and temperament laid bare and throbbing before us. Even here, indeed, he has a mask, and he trusts it—but fortunately it is a transparent one.

"Many minor personal allusions have been explained in the notes to the last edition of the 'Lay.' It was hardly necessary even then to say that the choice of the hero had been dictated by the poet's affection for the living descendants of the Baron of Cranstoun; and now—none who have perused the preceding pages can doubt that he had dressed out this Margaret of Branksome in the form and features of his own first love. This poem may be considered as the 'bright consummation flower' in which all the dearest dreams of his youthful fancy had at length found expansion for their strength, spirit, tenderness, and beauty.

"In the closing lines—

'Hush'd is the harp—the Minstrel gone;
And did he wander forth alone?
Alone, in indigence and age,
To linger out his pilgrimage?

No!—close beneath proud Newark's tower,
Arose the Minstrel's humble bower;' &c.—
in these charming lines he has embodied what was, at the time when he penned them, the chief day-dream of Ashestiel. From the moment that his uncle's death placed a considerable sum of ready money at his command, he pleased himself, as we have seen, with the idea of buying a mountain farm, and becoming not only the 'sheriff' (as he had in former days delighted to call himself), but 'the laird of the cairn and the scaur.'—Lockhart. Life of Scott, vol. ii. p. 212.

"The large quotations we have made from this singular poem must have convinced our readers that it abounds equally with poetical description and with circumstances curious to the antiquary. These are farther illustrated in copious and very entertaining notes: they, as well as the poem, must be particularly interesting to those who are connected with Scottish families, or conversant with their history. The author has managed the versification of the poem with great judgment, and the most happy effect. If he had aimed at the grave and stately cadence of the epic, or any of our more regular measures, it would have been impossible for him to have brought in such names as Watt Tinlinn, Black John, Priest-haugh Scrooge, and other Scottish names, or to have spoken of the lyke-wake, and the slogan, and driving of cattle, which Pope and Gray would have thought as impossible to introduce into serious poetry, as Bolleau did the names of towns in the campaigns of Louis IV. Mr. Scott has, therefore, very judiciously thrown in a great mixture of the familiar, and varied the measure; and if it has not the finished harmony, which, in such a subject, it were in vain to have attempted, it has great ease and spirit, and never tires the readers. Indeed we think we see a tendency in the public taste to go back to the more varied measures and familiar style of our earlier poets; a natural consequence of having been satiated with the regular harmony of Pope and his school, and somewhat wearied with the stiffness of lofty poetic language. We now know what can be done in that way, and we seek entertainment and variety, rather than finished modulation and uniform dignity. We now take our leave of this very elegant, spirited, and striking poem."—Annual Review, 1894.

"From the various extracts we have given, our readers will be enabled to form a tolerably correct judgment of the poem; and, if they are pleased with those portions of it which have now been exhibited, we may venture to assure them that they will not be disappointed by the perusal of the whole. The whole night journey of Deloraine—the opening of the Wizard's tomb—the march of the English battle—and the parley before the walls of the castle, are all executed with the same spirit and poetical energy which we think is conspicuous in the specimens we have already extracted; and a great variety of short passages occur in every part of the poem, which are still more striking and meritorious, though it is impossible to detach them, without injury, in the form of a quotation. It is but fair to apprise the reader, on the other hand, that he will meet with very heavy passages, and with a variety of details which are not likely to interest any one but a Borderer or an antiquary. We like very well to hear of 'the gallant Chief of Otterburn,' or 'the Dark Knight of Liddesdale,' and feel the elevating power of great names, when we read of the tribes that mustered to the war, 'beneath the crest of old Dunbar and Hepburn's mingled banners.' But we really cannot so far sympathize with the local partialities of the author as to feel any glow of patriotism or ancient virtue in hearing of the Todrig or Johnston clans, or of Elliots, Armstrongs, and Tinlins; still less can we relish the introduction of Black Jack of Athelstan, Whitslade the Hawb, Arthur Fire-the-Braes, Red Roland Forster, or any other of those worthies, who 'Sought the beeves that made their broth,

In Scotland and in England both,'
APPENDIX.

Note A.

The feast was over in Branksome tower.—P. 9.

In the reign of James I, Sir William Scott of Buckleugh, chief of the clan bearing that name, exchanged, with Sir Thomas Inglis of Manor, the estate of Murdlestone, in Lanarkshire, for one-half of the barony of Branksome, or Brankholm, lying upon the Teviot, about three miles above Hawick. He was probably induced to this transaction from the vicinity of Branksome to the extensive domain which he possessed in Ettrick Forest and in Teviotdale. In the former district he held by occupancy the estate of Buckleugh, and much of the forest land on the river Ettrick. In Teviotdale, he enjoyed the barony of Eckford, by a grant from Robert II. to his ancestor, Walter Scott of Kirkurd, for the apprehending of Gilbert Ridderford, confirmed by Robert III. 3d May, 1424. Tradition imputes the exchange betwixt Scott and Inglis to a conversation, in which the latter—a man, it would appear, of a mild and forbearing nature—complained much of the injuries which he was exposed to from the English Borderers, who frequently plundered his lands of Branksome. Sir William Scott instantly offered him the estate of Murdlestone, in exchange for that which was subject to such egregious inconvenience. When the bargain was completed, he dryly remarked, that the cattle in Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale; and proceeded to commence a system of reprisals upon the English, which was regularly pursued by his successors. In the next reign, James II. granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branksome, and to Sir David, his son, the remaining half of the barony of Branksome, to be held in blanche for the payment of a red rose. The cause assigned for the grant is, their brave and faithful exertions in favor of the King against the house of Douglas, with whom James had been recently tugging for the throne of Scotland. This charter is dated the 21st February, 1443; and in the same month part of the barony of Langholm, and many lands in Lanarkshire, were conferred upon Sir Walter and his son by the same monarch.

After the period of the exchange with Sir Thomas Inglis, Branksome became the principal seat of the Buckleugh family. The castle was enlarged and strengthened by Sir David Scott, the grandson of Sir William, its first possessor. But, in 1570-1, the vengeance of Elizabeth, provoked by the inroads of Buckleugh, and his attachment to the cause of Queen Mary, destroyed the castle, and laid waste the lands of Branksome. In the same year the castle was repaired and enlarged by Sir Walter Scott, its brave possessor; but the work was not completed until after his death, in 1574, when the widow finished the building. This appears from the following inscriptions. Around a stone bearing the arms of Scott of Buckleugh appears the following legend—"Sir Wll. Scott of Brankholm Knight, and Sir William Scott of Kirkud Knight began ye work upon ye 2d of Marche 1571 year quha deparit at God's pleasour ye 17 April 1572." On a similar caponet are sculptured the arms of Douglas, with this inscription: "Dame Margaret Douglas his spouse compleat the foresaid work in October 1576." Over an arched door is inscribed the following moral verse:—

In barb. is. noct. natur. hes. brought. gat. sal. lest. ay.
Therfore. serbe. God. heip. bell. ye. rod. thy. fame. sal. noct. dekay.
Sir Walter Scott of Brankhol Knignt. Margaret Douglas. 1571.

Branksome Castle continued to be the principal seat of the Buckleugh family, while security was any object in their choice of a mansion. It has since been the residence of the Commissioners, or Chamberlains, of the family. From the various alterations which the building has undergone, it is not only greatly restricted in its dimensions, but retains little of the castellated form, if we except one square tower of massy thickness, the only part of the original building which now remains. The whole forms a handsome modern residence, lately inhabited by my deceased friend, Adam Ogilvy, Esq., of Hartwoodnayres, Commissioner of his Grace the Duke of Buckleugh.

The extent of the ancient edifice can still be traced by some vestiges of its foundation, and its strength is obvious from the situation, on a deep bank surrounded by the Teviot, and flanked by a deep ravine, formed by a precipitous brook. It was anciently surrounded by wood, as appears from the survey of Roxburghshire, made for Pont's Atlas, and preserved in the Advocates' Library. This wood was cut about fifty years ago, but is now replaced by the thriving plantations, which have been formed by the noble proprietor, for miles around the ancient mansion of his forefathers.

Note B.

Nine-and-twenty knights of fame
Hung their shields in Branksome Hall.—P. 10.

The ancient barons of Buckleugh, both from feudal splendor and from their frontier situation, retained in their household at Branksome a number of gentlemen of their own name, who held lands from their chief, for the military service of watching and warding his castle. Satchells tells us, in his doggerel poetry, the time of Scott of Satchells, many of the ancient barons of Buckleugh lie buried. There is also said to have been a mill near this solitary spot; an extraordinary circumstance, as little or no corn grows within several miles of Buckleugh. Satchells says it was used to grind corn for the hounds of the chieftain.

1 Brankholm is the proper name of the barony; but Brank- some has been adopted, as suitable to the pronunciation, and more proper for poetry.

2 There are no vestiges of any building at Buckleugh, except the site of a chapel, where, according to a tradition current in (44)
Each two had a servant to wait upon them
Before supper and dinner, most renowned,
The bells rung and the trumpets souned; "
And more than that, I do confess,
They kept four and twenty pensioners.
Think not I lie, nor do me blame,
For the pensioners I can all name;
There's men alive, elder than I,
They know if I speak truth, or lie.
Every pensioner a room¹ did gain,
For service done and to be done;
This let the reader understand,
The name both of the men and land,
Which they possessed, it is of truth,
Both from the Lairds and Lords of Buckleugh." Accordingly, discounting from his Pegasus, Satchells gives us, in prose, the names of twenty-four gentlemen, younger brothers of ancient families, who were pensioners to the house of Bucleuch, and describes the lands which each possessed for his Border service. In time of war with England, the garrison was doubtless augmented. Satchells adds, "These twenty-three pensioners, all of his own name of Scott, and Walter Gladstanes of Whitelaw, a near cousin of my lord's as aforesaid, were ready on all occasions, when his honor pleased to advance them. It is known to many of the country better than it is to me, that the rent of these lands, which the Lairds and Lords of Bucleuch did freely bestow upon their friends, will amount to above twelve or fourteen thousand marks a year."—History of the Name of Scott, p. 45. An immense sum in those times.

¹ Room, portion of land.

NOTE C.

with Jedwood-axe at saddlebow.—P. 10.

"Of a truth," says Froissart, "the Scottish cannot boast great skill with the bow, but rather bear axes, with which, in time of need, they give heavy strokes." The Jedwood-axe was a sort of partisan, used by horsemen, as appears from the arms of Jedburgh, which bear a cavalier mounted, and armed with this weapon. It is also called a Jedwood or Jeddart staff.

NOTE D.

They watch, against Southern force and guile,
Lost Scrope, or Housey, or Percy's powers,
Threatens Bracknowe's lordly towers,
From Warkworth, or Gosforth, or worry Carlisle.—P. 10.

Branksome Castle was continually exposed to the attacks of the English, both from its situation and the restless military disposition of its inhabitants, who were seldom on good terms with their neighbors. The following letter from the Earl of Northumberland to Henry VIII. in 1533 gives an account of a successful inroad of the English, in which the country was plundered up to the gates of the castle, although the invaders failed in their principal object, which was to kill, or make prisoner, the Laird of Bucleuch. It occurs in the Cotton MS. Calig. b. viii. f. 222.

"Pleaseth yt your most gracious highness to be advertised, that my comptroller, with Raynald Carnaby, desyred licence of me to invade the realm of Scotlande, for the annoyance of your highnes enemies, where they thought best exploit by theymselfe to be done, and to have to concur with theymne the inhabitants of Northumberland, suche as was towards me according to theyre assembly, and as by theyre discretion vpone the same they shulde thinke most convenient; and so they dyde meet vppone Monday, before night, being the ili day of this instant monethe, at Wawhope, upon North Tyne water, above Tyndail, where they were to the number of xv men, and soo invaded Scotland at the hour of vili of the clock at night, at a place called Whole Causay; and before xi of the clock dyd send forth a forrey of Tyndall and Ryddisall and hald all the reslyewe in a bushment, and actuely did set vpon a towne called Brancxholme, where the Lord of Bruc- loo dwwlythe, and parayed themselfes with a trayne for hym lyke to his accustomed maner, in rysynge to all frays; albeit, that knayght he was not at home, and so they brynt the said Brancxholm, and other townes, as to say Which- estre, Whichestre-belme and Whelley, and had ordered themself, soo that sundry of the said Lord Bucloogh's servaunts, who dyd issue fourth of his gate, was takyn prisoners. They dyd not leve one house, one stak of corne, nor one shryf, without the gate of the said Lord Bucloogh vnbynt, and thus srymaged and frayded, supposing the Lord of Bruc- loo to be within ili or ili myles to have trayed him to the bushment; and soo in the brekyng of the day dyd the forrey and the bushment mete, and recuel homeward, making theyre way westward from theyre invasion to be over Lydersdail, reely to thayre first entry by thayre first entry by Scotts waiches, or otherwise by warynyng, shud hawe bene gven to Gedworth and the country of Scotland theyrea- bount of theyre invasion; whiche Gedworth is from the Wholes Causay vi miles, that thereby the Scotts shulde have comen further vnto theyme, and more out of ordre; and soo upon sundry good considerations, before they entered Lydersdail, as well accompting the inhabitants of the same to be towards your highness, and to enforce theyme the more thereby, as also to put an occasion of suspect to the Kings of Scott, and his counsell, to be taken anent theyme, amonges themselfes, made proclamations, commanding, vpon payne of dethe, assurance to be for the said inhabitants of Lyders- dail, without any prejudice or hurt to be done by any Ingly- man vnto theyme, and soo in good ordre about the howre of ten of the clock before none, vppon Twysday, dyd pass through the said Lydersdail, when dyd come diverse of the said in- habitants there to my servants, under the said assurance, offering theymselfes with any service they couthe make; and thus, thanks be to Godde, your highnes' subjects, abowte the howre of xii of the clock at none the same daye, came into this your highnes realme, bringing wt theyme above xi Scotts- men prisoners, one of themye named Scott, of the surname and kyn of the said Lord of Buclough, and of his householde; they brought also ccc nowte, and above lx horse and mares, kepyn in savety frome losse or hurte all your said highnes subjects. There was also a towne, called Newbygyns, by diverse fot- men of Tyndail and Ryddisall, takyn vp of the night, and spoyled, when was slayne if Scottsmen of the said towne, and many Scotts there hurte; your highnes subjects was xii myles within the grounde of Scotlande, and is from my house at Workworth, above lx miles of the most evil passage, where great nawses doth lyre; heretofore the same townes howebr bynt withal not at any tyme in the mynd of man in any wars been enterprised unto nowe; your subjects were thereto more encouraged for the better advancement of your highnes service, the said Lord of Buclough beyng always a mortal enemy to this your Graces realme, and he dyd say, within xith dayes be- fore, he would see who durst lyre near hym; wt many other cruel words, the knowledge whereof was certeynly haid to my said servaunts, before theye enterprised maid vpon him; most humbly beseeching your majesty, that youre highnes thanks may concur vnto theyme, whose names be here inclosed, and to have in your most gracious memory, the paynfull and diligent service of my pore servaunte Wharton, and thus, as I am most bounden, shall dispose wt them that be under me f... ... annoyance of your highnes enuies." In resenment of this foray, Buccleuch, with other Border chiefs, assembled an army of 3000 riders, with which they penetrated into Northumberland, and laid waste the country as far as the banks of Brannish. They baffled, or defeated, the English forces opposed to them, and returned loaded with prey.—PINKERTON'S HISTORY, vol. ii. p. 315.

NOTE E.

Bards long shall tell
How Lord Walter fell.—P. 10.

Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch succeeded to his grandfather, Sir David, in 1492. He was a brave and powerful baron, and Warden of the West Marches of Scotland. His death was the consequence of a feud betwixt the Scotts and Kerrs, the history of which is necessary to explain repeated allusions in the romance.

In the year 1526, in the words of Pitcotte, "the Earl of Angus, and the rest of the Douglasses, ruled all which they liked, and no man durst say the contrary; wherefore the King (James V., then a minor) was heavily displeased, and would fain have been out of their hands, if he might by any way: And, to that effect, wrote a quiet and secret letter with his own hand, and sent it to the Laird of Buccleuch, beseeching him that he would come with his kin and friends, and all the force that he might be, and meet him at Melross, at his home passing, and there to take him out of the Douglasses hands, and to put him to liberty, to use himself among the lave (rest) of his lords, as he thinks expedient.

"This letter was quietly directed, and sent by one of the King's own secret servants, which was received very thankfully by the Laird of Buccleuch, who was very glad thereof, to be put to such charges and familiarity with his prince, and did great diligence to perform the King's writing, and to bring the matter to pass as the King desired: And, to that effect, convened all his kin and friends, and all that would do for him, to ride with him to Melross, when he knew of the King's homecoming. And so he brought with him six hundred spears, of Liddesdale, and Annandale, and countrymen, and clans thereabout, and held themselves quiet while that the King returned out of Jedburgh, and came to Melross, to remain there all that night.

"But when the Lord Hume, Cessford, and Fernyhirst (the chiefs of the clan of Kerr), took their leave of the King, and returned home, then appeared the Lord of Buccleuch in sight, and his company with him, in an arrayed battle, intending to have fulfilled the King's petition, and therefore came stoutly forward on the back side of Hadding Hill. By that the Earl of Angus, with George Douglas, his brother, and sundry other of his friends, seeing this army coming, they marvelled what the matter meant; while at the last they knew the Laird of Buccleuch, with a certain company of the thieves of Annandale. With him they were less affarred, and made them manfully to the field contrary them, and said to the King in this manner, 'Sir, you are Buccleuch, and thieves of Annandale with him, to unseath your Grace from the gate' (i.e. Interrupt your passage). 'I vow to God they shall either fight or flee; and ye shall tarry here on this high, and my brother George with you, with any other company you please; and I shall pass, and put you thieves off the ground, and rid the gate unto your Grace, or else die for it.' The King tarried still, as was devised; and George Douglas with him, and sundry other lords, such as the Earl of Lennox, and the Lord Erskine, and some of the King's own servants; but all the lave (rest) part with the Earl of Angus to the field against the Laird of Buccleuch, who joyned and countered cruelly both the said parties in the field of Darnelles, either against other, with uncertain victory. But at the last, the Lord Hume, hearing word of that matter how it stood, returned again to the King in all possible haste, with him the Lairds of Cessford and Fernyhirst, to the number of four-score spears, and set freshly on the lap and wing of the Laird of Buccleuch's field, and shortly bore them backward to the ground; which caused the Laird of Buccleuch, and the rest of his friends, to go back and flee, whom they followed and chased; and especially the Lairds of Cessford and Fernyhirst followed furiously, till at the foot of a path the Laird of Cessford was slain by the stroke of a spear by an Elliot, who was then servant to the Laird of Buccleuch. But when the Laird of Cessford was slain, the chase ceased. The Earl of Angus returned again with great meerriness and victory, and thanked God that he saved him from that chance, and passed with the King to Melross, where they remained all that night. On the morn they past to Edinburgh with the King, who was very sad and dolorous of the slaughter of the Laird of Cessford, and many other gentlemen and yeomen slain by the Laird of Buccleuch, containing the number of fourscore and fifteen, which died in defence of the King, and at the command of his writing."

I am not the first who has attempted to celebrate in verse the renown of this ancient baron, and his hazardous attempt to procure his sovereign's freedom. In a Scottish Latin poet we find the following verses:—

VALERIUS SCOTTUS BALCULIUS.

Egregio suscepto facine, libertate Regis, ac allis rebus gestibus clarus, sub JACOBO V. A.D. Christi, 1526.

"Intentata allis, nullique auditis priorum
Audet, nec pavidi movere, metuere quanti,
Libertatem allis soliti transcibere Regis:
Subreptam hane Regi restituisse paras;
Si vinces, quanta ó succedunt premia dextre!
Sin vices, falsas spes jace, pone animum.
Hostiae vis nocuti: sant alibi robora mortis
Atque decens. Vincit, Rege propterea,ides
Insita quael animus virtus, quaque aequor arder
Obsibet, obscuris nox preнатim a teneris!"

In consequence of the battle of Melrose, there ensued a deadly feud betwixt the names of Scott and Kerr, which, in spite of all means used to bring about an agreement, raged for many years upon the Borders. Buccleuch was imprisoned, and his estates forfeited, in the year 1533, for levying war against the Kerrs, and restored by act of Parliament, dated 15th March, 1542, during the regency of Mary of Lorraine. But the most signal act of violence to which this quarrel gave rise was the murder of Sir Walter himself, who was slain by the Kerrs in the streets of Edinburgh in 1532. This is the event alluded to in stanza vi.; and the poem is supposed to open shortly after it had taken place.

The feud between these two families was not reconciled in 1596, when both chiefestains paraded the streets of Edinburgh with their followers, and it was expected their first meeting would decide their quarrel. But, on July 14th of the same year, a treaty was concluded between them, by Sir Alexander Stirling, Lord Ballymena, and Sir William Scott, Lord of Buccleuch. Further particulars concerning these places, of all which the author of the Lay was ultimately proprietor.—Ed.

1 Darnwick, near Melrose. The place of conflict is still called Skinner's Field, from a corruption of Skirmish Field. [See the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, vols. i. and ii., for further particulars concerning these places, of all which the author of the Lay was ultimately proprietor.—Ed.]
year, Colvil, in a letter to Mr. Bacon, informs him, "that there was great trouble upon the Borders, which would continue till order should be taken by the Queen of England and the King, by reason of the two young Scots chieftains, Cesford and Badugh, and of the present necessity and scarcity of corn amongst the Scots Borderers and riders. That there had been a private quarrel betwixt those two lords on the Borders, which was like to have turned to blood; but the fear of the general trouble had reconciled them, and the injuries which they thought to have committed against each other were now transferred upon England: not unlike that emulation in France between the Baron de Biron and Mons.
Jeverie, who, being both ambitious of honor, undertook more hazardous enterprises against the enemy than they would have done if they had been at concord together."—Birch's

Note F.

While Cesford owns the rule of Carr,
While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott,
The slaughter'd chiefs, the mortal jar,
The havoc of the feudal war,
Shall never, never be forgot!—P. 10.

Among other expatriots resorted to for staining the feud betwixt the Scotts and the Kerrs, there was a bond executed in 1529, between the heads of each clan, binding themselves to perform reciprocally the four principal pilgrimages of Scotland, for the benefit of the souls of those of the opposite name who had fallen in the quarrel. This indenture is printed in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, vol. 1. But either it never took effect, or else the feud was renewed shortly afterwards.
Such pactsions were not uncommon in feudal times; and, as might be expected, they were often, as in the present case, void of the effect desired. When Sir Walter Mauny, the renowned follower of Edward III., had taken the town of Ryed in Gascony, he remembered to have heard that his father lay there buried, and offered a hundred crowns to any who could show him his grave. A very old man appeared before Sir
Walter, and informed him of the manner of his father's death, and the place of his sepulture. It seems the Lord of Mauny had, at a great tournament, unhorsed, and wounded to the death, a Gascon knight, of the house of Mirepoix, whose kinsman was Bishop of Cambrai. For this deed he was held at feud by the relations of the knight, until he agreed to undertake a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. James of Compostella, for the benefit of the soul of the deceased. But as he returned through the town of Ryed, after accomplishment of his vow, he was beset and treacherously slain by the knighthood of the knight whom he had killed. Sir Walter, guided by the old man, visited the lovely tomb of his father; and, having read the inscription, which was in Latin, he caused the body to be raised, and transported to his native city of Valenciennes, where masses were, in the days of Froissart, duly said for the soul of the unfortunate pilgrim.—Chronicle of Froissart,
vol. i. p. 123.

Note G.

With Carr in arms had stood.—P. 11.

The family of Kerr, Kerr, or Carr,¹ was very powerful on the Border. Fynes Moryson remarks, in his Travels,

¹ The name is spelt differently by the various families who bear it. Carr is selected, not as the most correct, but as the most poetical reading.

that their influence extended from the village of Preston-
Grange, in Lothian, to the limits of England. Cesford Castle, the ancient baronial residence of the family, is situated near the village of Morebattle, within two or three miles of the Cheviot Hills. It has been a place of great strength and consequence, but is now ruinous. Tradition affirms that it was founded by Halbert or Hubby Kerr, a gigantic warrior, concerning whom many stories are current in Roxburghshire.
The Duke of Roxburghe represents Ker of Cesford. A distinct and powerful branch of the same name owns the Marquis of Lothian as their chief. Hence the distinction betwixt Kerrs of Cesford and Fairmailhurst.

Note H.

Lord Cranstoun.—P. 11.

The Cranstouns, Lord Cranstoun, are an ancient Border family, whose chief seat was at Cranfied, in Teviotdale. They were at this time at feud with the clan of Scott; for it apppears that the Lady of Buccleuch, in 1557, beset the Laird of Cranstoun, seeking his life. Nevertheless, the same Crantoun, or perhaps his son, was married to a daughter of the same lady.

Note I.

Of Bethune's line of Picardie.—P. 11.

The Bethunes were of French origin, and derived their name from a small town in Artois. There were several distinguished families of the Bethunes in the neighboring province of Picardy; they numbered among their descendants the celebrated Due de Sully; and the name was accounted among the most noble in France, while aught noble remained in that country. The family of Bethune, or Beaton, in Fife, produced three learned and dignified prelates; namely, Cardinal Beaton, and two successive Archbishops of Glasgow, all of whom flourished about the date of the romance. Of this family was descended Dame Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branksome. She was a woman of masculine spirit, as appeared from her riding at the head of her son's clan, after her husband's murder. She also possessed the hereditary abilities of her family in such a degree that the superstition of the vulgar imputed them to supernatural knowledge. With this was mingled, by faction, the fool accusation of her having influenced Queen Mary to the murder of her husband. One of the placards, preserved in Buchanan's Detection, accuses of Darnley's murder the "Erle of Bothwell, Mr. James Balfour, the person of Fliske, Mr.
David Chalmers, black Mr. John Spens, who was principal deviser of the murder; and the Queen, assenting therein, throw the persuasion of the Erle Bothwell, and the witchcraft of Lady Buccleuch."

Note K.

He learn'd the art that none may name,
In Padua, far beyond the son.—P. 11.

Padua was long supposed, by the Scottish peasants, to be

² This expression and sentiment were dictated by the situation of France in the year 1806, when the poem was originally written. 1821.
the principal school of necromancy. The Earl of Gowrie, slain at Perth, in 1600, pretended, during his studies in Italy, to have acquired some knowledge of the cabala, by which, he said, he could charm snakes, and work other miracles; and, in particular, could produce children without the intercourse of the sexes. —See the examination of Wemyss of Bogie before the Privy Council, concerning Gowrie's Conspiracy.

NOTE L.

His form no darkening shadow traced
Upon the sunny wall! — P. 11.

The shadow of a necromancer is independent of the sun. Glynis informs us that Simon Magus caused his shadow to go before him, making people believe it was an attendant spirit. —Heywood's Hierarchie, p. 475. The vulgar conceive that when a class of students have made a certain progress in their mystic studies, they are obliged to run through a subterraneous hall, where the devil literally catches the hindmost in the race, unless he crosses the hall so speedily that the arch-enemy can only apprehend his shadow. In the latter case, the person of the sage never after throws any shade; and those who have thus lost their shadow always prove the best magicians.

NOTE M.

The viewless forms of air. — P. 11.

The Scottish vulgar, without having any very defined notion of their attributes, believe in the existence of an intermediate class of spirits, residing in the air, or in the waters; to whose agency they ascribe floods, storms, and all such phenomena as their own philosophy cannot readily explain. They are supposed to interfere in the affairs of mortals, sometimes with a malevolent purpose, and sometimes with milder views. It is said, for example, that a gallant baron, having returned from the Holy Land to his castle of Drummelzier, found his fair lady nursing a healthy child, whose birth did not by any means correspond to the date of his departure. Such an occurrence, to the credit of the dames of the Crusaders be it spoken, was so rare that it required a miraculous solution. The lady, therefore, was believed when she averred confidently that the Spirit of the Tweed had issued from the river while she was walking upon its bank, and compelled her to submit to his embraces; and the name of Tweedle was bestowed upon the child, who afterwards became Baron of Drummelzier, and chief of a powerful clan. To those spirits were also ascribed, in Scotland, the "Airy tongues, that syllable men's names,

On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses."

When the workmen were engaged in erecting the ancient church of Old Deer, in Aberdeenshire, upon a small hill called Bissaw, they were surprised to find that the work was impeded by supernatural obstacles. At length, the Spirit of the River was heard to say,

"It is not here, it is not here,
That ye shall build the church of Deer;
But on Taptillirye,
Where many a corpse shall lie."

The site of the edifice was accordingly transferred to Taptillirye, an eminence at some distance from the place where the building had been commenced. — Macfarlane's MSS.

I mention these popular fables, because the introduction of the River and Mountain Spirits may not, at first sight, seem to accord with the general tone of the romance, and the superstitious of the country where the scene is laid.

NOTE N.

A fancied mass-trooper, &c. — P. 12.

This was the usual appellation of the marauders upon the Borders: a profession diligently pursued by the inhabitants on both sides, and by none more actively and successfully than by Buccleuch's clan. Long after the union of the crowns the mass-troopers, although sunk in reputation, and no longer enjoying the pretext of national hostility, continued to pursue their calling.

Fuller includes, among the wonders of Cumberland, "The mass-troopers; so strange in the condition of their living, if considered in their Original, Increase, Height, Decay, and Ruine."

"1. Original. I conceive them the same called Borderers in Mr. Camden; and characterized by him to be a wild and warlike people. They are called mass-troopers, because dwelling in the mosses, and riding in troops together. They dwell in the bounds, or meeting, of the two kingdoms, but obey the laws of neither. They come to church as seldom as the 29th of February comes into the calendar.

"2. Increase. When England and Scotland were united in Great Britain, they that formerly lived by hostile incursions betook themselves to the robbing of their neighbors. Their sons are free of the trade by their fathers' copy. They are like to Job, not in pity and patience, but in sudden plenty and poverty; sometimes having dells and herds in the morning, none at night, and perchance many again next day. They may give for their motto, vivitur ex rajo, stealing from their honest neighbors what they sometimes require. They are a nest of hornets; strike one, and stir all of them about your ears. Indeed, if they promise safely to conduct a traveller, they will perform it with the fidelity of a Turkish janizary; otherwise, woe be to him that falleth into their quarters!

"3. Height. Accounting, forty years since, to some thousands. These compelled the vicinage to purchase their security, by paying a constant rent to them. When in their greatest height, they had two great enemies — the Laws of the Land, and the Lord William Howard of Naworth. He sent many of them to Carlisle, to that place where the officer doth always his work by daylight. Yet these mass-troopers, if possibly they could procure the pardon for a condemned person of their company, would advance great sums out of their common stock, who, in such a case, cast in their lots amongst themselves, and all have one purse.

"4. Decay. Caused by the wisdom, valor, and diligence of the Right Honorable Charles Lord Howard, Earl of Carlisle, who routed these English Tories with his regiment. His severity unto them will not only be excused, but commended, by the judicious, who considers how our great lawyer doth describe such persons, who are solemnly outlawed. Bracton, lib. viii. trac. 2. cap. 11. — Ex tunc serrat caput luptamin, ha quod sine judicilin inquisitione vive percut, et semper sine judicil lambentur, ut et mortel sine lego percut; qui securitatem legem vivore reccussant — Thenceforward (after that they are outlawed), they wear a wolf's head, so that they lawfully may be destroyed, without any judicial inquisition, as who carry their own condemnation about them, and deservedly die without law, because they refused to live according to law.

"5. Ruine. Such was the success of this worthy lord's severity, that he made a thorough reformation among them; and the ring-leaders being destroyed, the rest are reduced to
APPENDIX TO THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

The last public mention of mous-troopers occurs during the civil wars of the 17th century, when many ordinances of Parliament were directed against them.

NOTE O.

—can the Unicorn's pride,
Exalt the Crescent and the Star.—P. 12.

The arms of the Kerrs of Cessford were, Vert on a chevron, betwixt three unicorns' heads erased argent, three mullets sable; crest, a unicorn's head, erased proper. The Scotts of Buccleuch bore Or, on a bend azure; a star of six points betwixt two crescents of the first.

NOTE P.

William of Deloraine.—P. 12.

The lands of Deloraine are joined to those of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest. They were innumerably possessed by the Buccleuch family, under the strong title of occupancy, although no charter was obtained from the crown until 1545. Like other possessions, the lands of Deloraine were occasionally granted by them to vassals, or kinsmen, for Border service. Satelshes mentions, among the twenty-four gentlemen-pensioners of the family, "William Scott, commonly called Cuthat-eb-Black, who had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service." And again, "This William of Deloraine, commonly called Cuthat-eb-Black, was a brother of the ancient house of Haining, which house of Haining is descended from the ancient house of Hassendean._ The lands of Deloraine now give an earl's title to the descendant of Henry, the second surviving son of the Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth. I have endeavored to give William of Deloraine the attributes which characterized the Borderers of his day; for which I can only plead Froissart's apology, that, "it behoveth, in a lynage, some to be folyse and outrageous, to myntaynede and sustayne the peesable._ As a contrast to my Marchman, I beg leave to transcribe, from the same author, the speech of Amoret Marcell, a captain of the Adventurous Companions, a robber, and a pillager of the country of Auvergne, who had been bribed to sell his strongholds, and to assume a more honorable military life under the banners of the Earl of Armagnae. But "when he remembered alle this, he was sorrowful; his treasurer he thought he would not mayrurhe; he was wonte dayly to write for newe pyllages, wherby encrees his profyte, and then he sawt that alle was closed fro' hym. Then he sayde and imagyned, that to pyt and to robb (all thynge considred) was a good lyfe, and so repentt hym of his good doing. On a tym, he said to his old companions, 'Sirs, there is no sporte nor glory in this worlde amonst men of warre, but to use suche lyfe as we have done in tym past. What a joy was it to us when we rode forth at adventure, and sometyme found by the way a riche priour or merchaut, or a route of muletes of Montpellier, of Narbonne, of Lymens, of Fongans, of Besyers, of Tholous, or of Caracsevene, halen with cloth of Brussel, or peltre ware comynge fro the fayres, or halen with sprevy fro Bruges, fro Dumas, or fro Alyssandres; whatsoever we met, all was ours, or els ransounced at our pleasures; dayly we gate new money, and the ryllaynes of Auvergne and of Lymsyn dayly provyded and brought to our castell whate mele, good wynes, beffes, and fette motons, poultyne, and wydde foute: We were ever furnishased as tho we had been kings. When we rode forthe, all the country tyumbled for feare: all was ours going and comynge. How tok we Carlast, and the Bourge of Company, and I and Perot of Bernoyes took Calusset; how dyd we scale, with lyttel ayde, the strong castell of Marquell, pertaining to the Eri Dolphyn: I kept it nat post five days, but I receyved for it, on a feyre table, fvye thousande frankes, and forgave one thousande for the love of the Eri Dolphyn's children. By my fayth, this was a fayre and a good lyfe! wherefore I repete myselfe sore decayved, in that I have rendered up the fortress of Aleyos; for it wold have kept fro alle the worke, and the daye that I gav it up, it was fourrayished with vrytaylles, to have been kept seven yere without any re-vytaylilge. This Eri of Armynak hath decayved me; Olyve Barbe, and Perot le Bernoys, shewed to me how I shulde repente myselfe: certayne I sore repente mysselfe of what I have done.'—Froissart, vol. ii. p. 195.

NOTE Q.

By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best blood-hounds.—P. 12.

The kings and heroes of Scotland, as well as the Border-riders, were sometimes obliged to study how to evade the pursuit of blood-hounds. Burbour informs us, that Robert Bruce was repeatedly tracked by sleuth-dogs. On one occasion, he escaped by wading a bow-shot down a brook, and ascending into a tree by a branch which overhung the water; thus leaving no trace on land of his footsteps, he baffled the scent. The pursuers came up:

"Rycht to the burn that passyt ware,
Bot the sleuth-hund male stinting thar,
And waeery lang ymce ta and fra,
That he na certain gate couthe ga;
Till at the last that John of Lorne
Perseuwt the hund the sleuth had lorne."

The Bruce, book vii.

A sure way of stopping the dog was to spill blood upon the track, which destroyed the discriminating fineness of his scent. A captive was sometimes sacrificed on such occasions. Henry the Minstrel tells a romantic story of Wallace, founded on this circumstance:—The hero's little band had been joined by an Irishman, named Fawdoun, or Fudzoon, a dark, savage, and suspicious character. After a sharp skirmish at Black-Erne Side, Wallace was forced to retreat with only sixteen followers. The English pursued with a border sleuth-hatchet, or blood-hound.

"In Gelderland there was that bratchet bred,
Siker of scent, to follow them that fled;
So was he used in Eske and Liddlesdale,
While (i.e. till) she gaet blood no fleecinge might avar."

In the retreat, Fawdoun, tired, or affecting to be so, would go no farther. Wallace, having in vain argued with him, in hasty anger struck off his head, and continued the retreat. When the English came up, their hound stayed upon the dead body:—

"The sleuth stopped at Fawdon, still she stood, Nor farther would fra time she find the blood."

The story concludes with a fine Gothic scene of terror. Wallace took refuge in the solitary tower of Gask. Here he was disturbed at midnight by the blast of a horn. He sent out his attendants by two and two, but no one returned with tidings. At length, when he was left alone, the sound was heard still louder. The champion descended, sword in hand; and, at the gate of the tower, was encountered by the headless spectre of Fawdoun, whom he had slain so rashly. Wallace, in great terror, fled up into the tower, tore open the boards of a window, leapt down fifteen feet in height, and continued his flight up the river. Looking back to Gask, he discovered the tower on fire, and the form of Fawdoun upon the battlements, dilated to an immense size, and holding in his hand a blaz ing rafter. The Minstrel concludes,

"Trust right wele, that all this be sooth indeed, Supposing it to be no point of the creed."

Mr. Ellis has extracted this tale as a sample of Henry's poetry.—Specimens of English Poetry, vol. i. p. 351.

NOTE R.

the Mount-hill's mound,
Where Druid shades still flitted round.—P. 12.

This is a round artificial mount near Hawick, which, from its name (Mhil. Ang. Sax. Concilium, Conventus), was probably anciently used as a place for assembling a national council of the adjacent tribes. There are many such mounds in Scotland, and they are sometimes, but rarely, of a square form.

NOTE S.

the tower of Hazeldene.—P. 13.

The estate of Hazeldene, corruptly Hassendean, belonged formerly to a family of Scotts, thus commemorated by Satchells:

"Hassendean came without a call,
The ancientest house among them all."

NOTE T.

On Minto-crags the moonbeams glint.—P. 13.

A romantic assemblage of cliffs, which rise suddenly above the vale of Teviot, in the immediate vicinity of the family-seat, from which Lord Minto takes his title. A small platform, on a projecting crag, commanding a most beautiful prospect, is termed Barnhill's Bed. This Barnhills is said to have been a robber, or outlaw. There are remains of a strong tower beneath the rocks, where he is supposed to have dwelt, and from which he derived his name. On the summit of the crags are the fragments of another ancient tower, in a picturesque situation. Among the houses cast down by the Earl of Hart-foxe, in 1545, occur the towers of Easter Barnhills, and of Minto-crags, with Minto town and place. Sir Gilbert Elliot, father to the present Lord Minto, was the author of a beautiful pastoral song, of which the following is a more correct copy than is usually published. The poetical mantle of Sir Gilbert Elliot has descended to his family.

"My sheep I neglected, I broke my sheep-hook,
And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsake:
No more for Amynta fresh garlands I wave;
Ambition, I said, would soon cure me of love,
But what had my youth with ambition to do?
Why left I Amynta? why broke I my vow?

"Through regions remote in vain do I rove,
And bid the wide world secure me from love.
Ah, fool, to imagine that aught could subdue
A love so well founded, a passion so true!
Ah, give me my sheep, and my sheep-hook restore!
And I'll wander from love and Amynta no more!"

"Alas! 'tis too late at thy fate to repine!
Poor shepherd, Amynta no more can be thine!
Thy tears are all fruitless, thy wishes are vain,
The moments neglected return not again.
Ah! what had my youth with ambition to do?
Why left I Amynta? why broke I my vow?"

NOTE U.

— ancient Riddell's fair domain.—P. 13.

The family of Riddell have been very long in possession of the barony called Riddell, or Ryedale, part of which still bears the latter name. Tradition carries their antiquity to a point extremely remote; and is, in some degree, sanctioned by the discovery of two stone coffins, one containing an earthen pot filled with ashes and arms, bearing a legible date, A. D. 727; the other dated 936, and filled with the bones of a man of gigantic size. These coffins were discovered in the foundations of what was, but has long ceased to be, the chapel of Riddell; and as it was argued, with plausibility, that they contained the remains of some ancestors of the family, they were deposited in the modern place of sepulture, comparatively so termed, though built in 1110. But the following curious and authentic documents warrant most conclusively the epithet of "ancient Riddell": 1st, A charter by David I. to Walter Rydale, Sheriff of Roxburgh, confirming all the estates of Liliesclive, &c., of which his father, Gervarins de Rydale, died possessed. 2dly, A bull of Pope Adrian IV., confirming the will of Walter de Ridale, knight, in favor of his brother Anschitil de Ridale, dated 5th April, 1155. 3dly, A bull of Pope Alexander III., confirming the said will of Walter de Ridale, bequeathing to his brother Anschitil the lands of Liliesclive, Whettunis, &c., and ratifying the bargain betwixt Anschitil and Hectredus, concerning the church of Liliesclive, in consequence of the mediation of Malcolm II., and confirmed by a charter from that monarch. This bull is dated 17th June, 1160. 4thly, A bull of the same Pope, confirming the will of Sir Anschitil de Ridale, in favor of his son Walter, conveying the said lands of Liliesclive and others, dated 10th March, 1120. It is remarkable that Liliesclive, otherwise Rydale, or Riddell, and the Whettunis, have descended, through a long train of ancestors, without ever passing into a collateral line, to the person of Sir John Buchanan Riddell, Bart. of Riddell, the lineal descendant and representative of Sir Anschitil.—These circumstances appeared worthy of notice in a Border work. 2

1 Grandfather to the present Earl. 1819.

2 Since the above note was written, the ancient family of Riddell have parted with all their Scotch estates.—Ed.
Note V.

But when Melrose he reach'd, 'twas silence all;
He mildly stabled his steed in stall,
And sought the convent's lonely cell.—P. 13.

The ancient and beautiful monastery of Melrose was founded by King David I. Its ruins afford the finest specimen of Gothic architecture and Gothic sculpture which Scotland can boast. The stone of which it is built, though it has resisted the weather long ages, retains perfect sharpness, so that even the most minute ornaments seem as entire as when newly wrought. In some of the cloisters, as is hinted in the next canto, there are representations of flowers, vegetables, &c., carved in stone, with accuracy and precision so delicate, that we almost distrust our senses, when we consider the difficulty of subjecting so hard a substance to such intricate and exquisite modulation. This superb convent was dedicated to St. Mary, and the monks were of the Cistercian order. At the time of the Reformation, they shared the general reproach of sensuality and irregularity, thrown upon the Roman churchmen. The old words of Galsashields, a favorite Scotch air, ran thus:—

O the monks of Melrose made gude kale,1
On Fridays when they fasted,
They wanted neither beef nor ale,
As long as their neighbors' lasted."

1 Kale, broth.

Note W.

When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of stone and ivory;
When silver edge the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die;
Then view St. David's ruin'd pile.—P. 14.

The buttresses ranged along the sides of the ruins of Melrose Abbey are, according to the Gothic style, richly carved and fretted, containing niches for the statues of saints, and labelled with scrolls, bearing appropriate texts of Scripture. Most of these statues have been demolished. David I. of Scotland purchased the reputation of sanctity, by founding, and liberally endowing, not only the monastery of Melrose, but those of Kelso, Jedburgh, and many others; which led to the well-known observation of his successor, that he was a sore saint for the crown.

Note X.

For mass or prayer can I rarely tarry,
Save to patter an Ave Mary,
When I ride on a Border foray.—P. 14.

The Borderers were, as may be supposed, very ignorant about religious matters. Colville, in his Paraphraes, or Admonition, states that the reformed divines were so far from undertaking distant journeys to convert the Heathen, "as I would as at God that ye wold only go bot to the Hieland and Borders of our own realm, to gain our ain countrymen, who, for lack of preaching and ministration of the sacraments, must, with tymne, becum either Iudiths, or atheists." But we learn from Lesley that, however deficient in real religion, they regularly told their beads, and never with more zeal than when going on a plundering expedition.

Note Y.

So had he seen, in fair Castle,
The youth in glittering squadrons start;
Sudden the flying jennet wheel,
And hurt the unexperienced dart.—P. 15.

"By my faith," said the Duke of Lancaster (to a Portuguese squire), "of all the feats of arms that the Castellians, and they of your country doth use, the castlyng of their derrys best please me, and gladly I wolde see: for, as I hear say, if they strike one arryght, without he be well armed, the dart will pierce him thrugh."—"By my fayth, sir," said the squire, "ye say truthe; for I have seen many a gyte stroke given with them, which at one time cost us derely, and was to us great displease: for, at the said skyrme, Sir John Lawrence of Crogyn was striken with a dart in such wise, that the head perced all the plates of his cote of mayle, and a sakk stopped with sylyke, and passed thrugh his body, so that he fell down dead."—Froissart, vol. ii. ch. 44. This mode of fighting with darts was imitated in the military game called Jeuge of the canes, which the Spaniards borrowed from their Moorish invaders. A Saracen champion is thus described by Froissart: "Among the Sarazyns, there was a yonge knight called Agalinger Dolyferne; he was alwaies wel mounted on a rode and a lighty horse; it seemed, when the horse ranne, that he did fly in the ayre. The knightes seemed to be a good man of armes by his dedes; he bare always of usage three fethered darters, and rychte well he could handle them; and, according to their custome, he was clene armed, with a long white towell about his head. His apparell was blacke, and his own colour browne, and a good horsemann. The Crysten men say, they thoughte he dyd such deedes of armes for the love of some yonge lady of his country. And true it was, that he loved entirly the King of Thunes daughter, named the Lady Azala; she was inherotor to the realme of Thune, after the disease of the kyng her father. This Agalinger was sonne to the Duke of Olyferne. I can nat telle if they were married together after or nat; but it was showen me, that this kyght, for love of the sayd ladye, during the siege, did many feats of armes. The knyghtes of Fance would fayne have taken hym; but they colde never attrape nor in close him; his horse was so swifty, and so rode to his hand, that alwaies he escaped."—Vol. ii. ch. 71.

Note Z.

And there the dying lamps did burn,
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant Chief of Otterburne!—P. 15.

The famous and desperate battle of Otterburne was fought 15th August, 1388, betwixt Henry Percy, called Hotspur, and James, Earl of Douglas. Both these renowned champions were at the head of a chosen body of troops, and they were rivals in military fame; so that Froissart affirms, "Of all the batayles and encontreylls that I have made mention of here before in all this history, great or small, this battayle that I treat of nowe was one of the sorest and best foughten, without cowards or flynte heretis; for there was neyther knyghte nor squire but that dyde his devoyte, and foughte hende to hende. This batayle was lyke the batayle of Becherell, the which was vallyuntaught fought and endured." The issue of the conflict is well known: Percy was made prisoner, and the Scots won the day, dearly purchased by the death of their gallant general, the Earl of Douglas, who was slain in the action. He was buried at Melrose, beneath the high altar. "His obsequy was done reverently, and on his body layde a tombe of stone, and his bauer hangyng over hym."—Froissart, vol. ii. p. 165.

NOTE 2 A.

dark Knight of Liddesdale!—P. 15.

William Douglas, called the Knight of Liddesdale, flourished during the reign of David II., and was so distinguished by his valor that he was called the Flower of Chivalry. Nevertheless, he tarnished his renown by the cruel murder of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalhousie, originally his friend and brother in arms. The King had conferred upon Ramsay the sheriffdom of Teviotdale, to which Douglas pretended some claim. In revenge of this preference, the Knight of Liddesdale came down upon Ramsay, while he was administering justice at Hawick, seized and carried him off to his remote and inaccessible castle of Hermitage, where he threw his unfortunate prisoner, horse and man, into a dungeon, and left him to perish of hunger. It is said, the miserable captive prolonged his existence for several days by the corn which fell from a granary above the vault in which he was confined.1 So weak was the royal authority, that David, although highly incensed at this atrocious murder, found himself obliged to appoint the Knight of Liddesdale successor to his victims, as Sheriff of Teviotdale. But he was soon after slain, while hunting in Ettrick Forest, by his own godson and chieftenant, William, Earl of Douglas, in revenge, according to some authors, of Ramsay's murder; although a popular tradition, preserved in a ballad quoted by Godscroft, and some parts of which are still preserved, ascribes the resentment of the Earl to jealousy. The place where the Knight of Liddesdale was killed is called, from his name, William-Cross, upon the ridge of a hill called William-hope, betwixt Tweed and Yarrow. His body, according to Godscroft, was carried to Lindcane church the first night after his death, and thence to Melrose, where he was interred with great pomp, and where his tomb is still shown.

NOTE 2 B.

The moon on the east ortel shone.—P. 15.

It is impossible to conceive a more beautiful specimen of the lightness and elegance of Gothic architecture, when in its purity, than the eastern window of Melrose Abbey. Sir James Hall of Douglas, Bart., has, with great ingenuity and plausibility, traced the Gothic order through its various forms and seemingly eccentric ornaments, to an architectural imitation of wicker work; of which, as we learn from some of the legends, the earliest Christian churches were constructed. In such an edifice, the original of the clustered pillars is traced to a set of round posts, begirt with slender rods of willow, whose loose summits were brought to meet from all quarters, and bound together artificially, so as to produce the framework of the roof; and the tracery of our Gothic windows is displayed in the meeting and interlacing of rods and hoops, affording an inexhaustible variety of beautiful forms of open work. This ingenious system is alluded to in the romance, Sir James Hall's Essay on Gothic Architecture is published in The Edinburgh Philosophical Transactions.

NOTE 2 C.

the wondrous Michael Scott.—P. 15.

Sir Michael Scott of Balwearie flourished during the 13th century, and was one of the ambassadors sent to bring the Maid of Norway to Scotland upon the death of Alexander III. By a poetical anachronism, he is here placed in a later era. He was a man of much learning, chiefly acquired in foreign countries. He wrote a commentary upon Aristotle, printed at Venice in 1496; and several treatises upon natural philosophy, from which he appears to have been addicted to the abstruse studies of judicial astrology, alchemy, physiology, and chirocrany. Hence he passed among his contemporaries for a skilful magician. Dempster informs us that he remembers to have heard in his youth that the magic books of Michael Scott were still in existence, but could not be opened without danger, on account of the malignant fiends who were thereby invoked. Demyster Historia Ecclesiastica, 1627, lib. xii. p. 495. Lesley characterizes Michael Scott as "singulare philosophie, astronomiae, ac medicinae transversa diebus; diebatur peccatissimus magiae recessus Iuligasae." Dante also mentions him as a renowned wizard:

"Quell altro che ne fia bianco e rose pocho,
Michele Scotto fu, che veramente
Delle maghe frode sepe il giucche."

Inferno, canto xxmo.

A personage, thus spoken of by biographers and historians, loses little of his mystical fame in vulgar tradition. Accordingly, the memory of Sir Michael Scott survives in many a legend; and in the south of Scotland, any work of great labor and antiquity is ascribed, either to the agency of Auld Michael, of Sir William Wallace, or of the devil. Tradition varies concerning the place of his burial; some contend for Home Coltrame, in Cumberland; others for Melrose Abbey. But all agree, that his books of magic were interred in his grave, or preserved in the convent where he died. Satchells, wishing to give some authority for his account of the origin of the name of Scott, pretends that, in 1629, he chanced to be at Burgh under Bowness, in Cumberland, where a person, named Lancedot Scott, showed him an extract from Michael Scott's works, containing that story:

"He said the book which he gave me
Was of Sir Michael Scott's historie;
Which history was never yet read through,
Nor never will, for no man dare it do.

The ryche and pure him meynde bath,
For of his dede was mekyll skath."

Some years ago, a person digging for stones, about the old castle of Hermitage, broke into a vault, containing a quantity of chaff, some bones, and pieces of iron; amongst others, the curb of an ancient bridle which the author has since given to the Earl of Dalhousie, under the impression that it possibly may be a relic of his brave ancestor. The worthy clergyman of the parish has mentioned this discovery in his Statistical Account of Castletown.

1 There is something affecting in the manner in which the old Prior of Lochleven turns from describing the death of the gallant Ramsay, to the general sorrow which it excited:—

"To tell you theere of the manere,
It is not sorrow for til here;
He was the grettest mennyth man
That any cowth have thoughht of than,
Of his state, or of mare be faire:
All mennyth him, bath bettyr and war;"
Young scholars have picked out something from the contents, that dare not read within. He carried me along the castle then, and shewed his written book hanging on an iron pin. His writing pen did seem to me to be of hardened metal, like steel, or accumine; the volume of it did seem to me an anvil. As the Book of Martyrs and Turks historie, Then in the church he let me see a stone where Mr. Michael Scott did lie; I asked at him how that could appear, Mr. Michael had been dead above five hundred years? He shewed me none dust bury under that stone, more than he had been dead a few years agoe; for Mr. Michael's name does terrify each one." History of the Right Honorable Name of Scott.

Note 2 D.
Salamanca's cave.—P. 15.

Spain, from the relives, doubtless, of Arabian learning and superstition, was accounted a favorite residence of magicians. Pope Sylvester, who actually imported from Spain the use of the Arabian numerals, was supposed to have learned there the magic for which he was stigmatized by the ignorance of his age.—William of Malmsbury, lib. ii. cap. 10. There were public schools, where magic, or rather the sciences supposed to involve its mysteries, were regularly taught, at Toledo, Seville, and Salamanca. In the latter city, they were held in a deep cavern, the mouth of which was walled up by Queen Isabella, wife of King Ferdinand.—D'Aubigny on Learned Incredibility, p. 45. These Spanish schools of magic are celebrated also by the Italian poets of romance:—

"Questo città di Tolletto sola
Tenere studio de' negromanzia,
Quivi di magica arte si leggea
Pubblicamente, e di peromanzia;
E molti gnomanti sempre avea,
Esperimenti assai di idromanzia
E d'alte false opinione di sceloci
Come è fatture, o spesso batter gli occhi."—Il Morgante Maggiore, canto xxv. st. 232.

The celebrated magician Mangis, cousin to Rinaldo of Montalban, called, by Ariosto, Malagisi, studied the black art at Toledo, as we learn from L'histoire de Mangis D'Ajugrenon. He even held a professor's chair in the necromantic university; for so I interpret the passage, "qu'on tous les sept ans d'enchantement, des charmes et conjurations, il n'y avait meilleur maistre que lui; et en tel renom qu'on le laissa lit en chaise, et l'appelait on maistre Mangis." This Salamanca Domdaniel is said to have been founded by Hercules. If the classic inquirer inquires where Hercules himself learned magic, he may consult "Les faits et processus du noble et valiant Hercules," where he will learn that the fable of his aiding Atlas to support the heavens so large from the said Atlas having taught Hercules the noble knight-errant, the seven liberal sciences, and in particular, that of judical astrology. Such, according to the idea of the middle ages, were the studies, "maximus que docuit Atlas."—In a romantic history of Roderic, the last Gothic King of Spain, he is said to have entered one of those enchanted caverns. It was situated beneath an ancient tower near Toledo; and when the iron gates, which secured the entrance, were unfolded, there rushed forth so dreadful a whirlwind, that hitherto no one had dared to penetrate into its recesses. But Roderic, threatened with an invasion of the Moors, resolved to enter the cavern, where he expected to find some prophetic intimation of the event of the war. Accordingly, his train being furnished with torches, so artificially composed that the tempest could not extinguish them, the King, with great difficulty, penetrated into a square hall, inscribed all over with Arabian characters. In the midst stood a colossal statue of brass, representing a Saracen with a Moorish helmet, with which it discharged furious flares on all sides, and seemed thus to excite the tempest which raged around. Being conjured by Roderic, it ceased from striking, until he read, inscribed on the right hand, "Wretched Monarch, for thy evil hast thou come hither!" on the left hand, "Thou shalt be dispossessed by a strange people;" on one shoulder, "I invoke the sons of Hagar!" on the other, "I do mine office." When the King had deciphered these ominous inscriptions, the statue returned to its exercise, the tempest commenced anew, and Roderic retired, to mourn over the predicted evils which approached his throne. He caused the gates of the cavern to be locked and barricaded; but, in the course of the night, the tower fell with a tremendous noise, and under its ruins concealed forever the entrance to the mystic cavern. The conquest of Spain by the Saracens, and the death of the unfortunate Don Roderic, fulfilled the prophecy of the brazen statute.—Historia verdadera del Rey Don Rodrigo por el Sabio Alcayde Abecedian, traducida de la lengua Arabiga por Miguel de Luna, 1654, cap. vi.

Note 2 E.
The bells would ring in Notre Dame.—P. 15.

"Tantumne resum tum negligentur?" says Tyrwhitt, of his predecessor, Speight; who, in his commentary on Chaucer, had omitted, as trivial and fabulous, the story of Wade and his boat Guingelot, to the great prejudice of posterity, the memory of the hero and the boat being now entirely lost. That future antiquaries may lay no such omission to my charge, I have noted one or two of the most current traditions concerning Michael Scott. He was chosen, it is said, to go upon an embassy, to obtain from the King of France satisfaction for certain piracies committed by his subjects upon those of Scotland. Instead of preparing a new equipage and splendid retinue, the ambassador retreated to his study, opened his book, and evoked a fiend in the shape of a huge black horse, mounted upon his back, and forced him to fly through the air towards France. As they crossed the sea, the devil indignantly asked his rider, What it was that the old women of Scotland muttered at bed-time? A less experienced wizard might have answered that it was the Pater Noster, which would have licensed the devil to precipitate him from his back. But Michael sternly replied, "What is that to thee?—Mount, Diabolus, and fly!" When he arrived at Paris, he tied his horse to the gate of the palace, entered, and boldly delivered his message. An ambassador, with so little of the pomp and circumstance of diplomacy, was not received with much respect, and the King was about to return a contemptuous refusal to his demand, when Michael besought him to suspend his resolution till he had seen his horse stand three times. The first stamp shook every stone in Paris, and caused all the bells to ring; the second threw down three of the towers of the palace; and the infernal steed had lifted his hoof to give the third stamp, when the King rather chose to dismiss Michael, with the most ample concessions, than to stand to the probable consequences. Another time, it is said that, when residing at the Tower of Oakwood, upon the Etricket, about three miles above Selkirk, he heard of the fame of a sorcerer, called the Witch of Falscapes, who lived on the opposite side of the river. Michael went one morning to put her skill to the test, but was disappointed, by her denying positively any knowledge of the necromantic art. In his discourse with her, he laid his wand inadvertently on the table, which the hag observing, suddenly snatched it up, and struck him with it. Feeling the force of the charm, he rushed out of the house; but, as it had conferred on him the external appearance of a harc, his servant, who waited without, haloed upon the discomfited wizard his own greyhounds, and pursued him so close, that, in order to obtain a moment's breathing to reverse the charm, Michael, after a very fatiguing course, was fain to take refuge in his own jachole (Anglice, common sewer). In order to revenge himself of the Witch of Falsehope, Michael, one morning in the ensuing harvest, went to the hill above the house with his dogs, and sent down his servant to ask a bit of bread from the goodwife for his greyhounds, with instructions what to do if he met with a denial. Accordingly, when the witch had refused the boon with contumely, the servant, as his master had directed, laid above the door a paper which he had given him, containing, amongst many cabalistical words, the well-known rhyme,—

"Maister Michael Scott's man tought meat, and gat none."

Immediately the good old woman, instead of pursuing her domestic occupation, which was baking bread for the reapers, began to dance round the fire, repeating the rhyme, and continued this exercise till her husband sent the reapers to the house, one after another, to see what had delayed their provision; but the charm caught each as they entered, and, losing all hope of returning, was dashed in the dance and chorus. At length the old man himself went to the house; but as his wife's frolic with Mr. Michael, whom he had seen on the hill, made him a little cautious, he contented himself with looking in at the window, and saw the reapers at their involuntary exercise, dragging his wife, now completely exhausted, sometimes round, and sometimes through, the fire, which was, as usual, in the midst of the house. Instead of entering, he saddled a horse, and rode up the hill, to humble himself before Michael, and beg a cessation of the spell; which the good-natured warlock immediately granted, directing him to enter the house backwards, and, with his left hand, take the spell from above the door, which accordingly ended the supernatural dance.—This tale was told par excellence in former editions, and I have been ensnared for inaccuracy in doing so.—A similar charm occurs in Huon de Bourdeaux, and in the ingenious Oriental tale, called the Caliph Vathek.

Notwithstanding his victory over the Witch of Falsehope, Michael Scott, like his predecessor, Merlin, fell at last a victim to female art. His wife, or concubine, elicted from him the secret that his art could ward off any danger except the poisonous qualities of broth made of the flesh of a breme sow. Such a mess she accordingly administered to the wizard, who died in consequence of eating it; surviving, however, long enough to put to death his treacherous confidant.

Note 2 F.

The words that cleft Eildon hills is three.—P. 15.

Michael Scott was, once upon a time, much embarrassed by a spirit, for whom he was under the necessity of finding constant employment. He commanded him to build a cold, or dam-head, across the Tweed at Kelso; it was accomplished, in one night, and still does honor to the infernal architect. Michael next ordered that Eildon hill, which was then a uniform cone, should be divided into three. Another night was sufficient to part its summit into the three picturesque peaks which it now bears. At length the enchanter conquered this indefatigable demon, by employing him in the hopeless and endless task of making ropes out of sea-sand.

Note 2 G.

That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
Until the eternal doom shall be.—P. 16.

Baptista Porta, and other authors who treat of natural magic, talk much of eternal lamps, pretended to have been found burning in ancient sepulchres. Fortunatus Licius investigates the subject in a treatise, De Lacernis Antiquorum E cohorts, published at Venice, 1621. One of these perpetual lamps is said to have been discovered in the tomb of Tulliola, the daughter of Cicero. The wick was supposed to be composed of asbestos. Kircher enumerates three different recipes for constructing such lamps; and wisely concludes that the thing is nevertheless impossible.—Mandus Subterraneus, p. 72. Delrio imputes the fabrication of such lights to magical skill.—Disquisitiones Magiae, p. 38. In a very rare romance, which "treateth of the life of Virgilius, and of his death, and many marvels that he dyd in his lyft-time, by wychecraft and ingraymynce, through the helpe of the deryll of helle," mention is made of a very extraordinary process, in which one of these mystical lamps was employed. It seems that Virgil, as he advanced in years, became desirous of renovating his youth by magical art. For this purpose he constructed a solitary tower, having only one narrow portal, in which he placed twenty-four copper figures, armed with iron flails, twelve on each side of the porch. These enchanted statues struck with their flails incessantly, and rendered all entrance impossible, unless when Virgil touched the spring which stopped their motion. To this tower he repaired privately, attended by one trusty servant, to whom he communicated the secret of the entrance, and hither they conveyed all the magician's treasure. "Then sayde Virgilius, my dere beloved frende, and he that I above alle men truste and knowe mooste of my secret," and then he led the man into a cellar, where he made a forge and brought a burning. "And then sayd Virgilius to the man, 'Se you the barrel that stanteth here?' and he sayd, yea: 'Therein must thou put me: fyrst ye must see me, and hewe me smal to pieces, and cut my hed in illi pieces, and salte the heer under in the bottom, and then the pieces there after, and my herte in the myddel, and then set the barrel under the lamp, that nyghte and day the fat therein may droppe and leake; and ye shall x dayes long, ones in the day, fyll the lamp, and fayle nat. And when this is all done, then shall I be renued, and made yonge agen.'" At this extraordinary proposal, the confidant was sore abashed, and made some scruple of obeying his master's commands. At length, however, he complied, and Virgil was slain, pickled, and barrelled up, in all respects according to his own direction. The servant then left the tower, taking care to put the copper thrashers in motion at his departure. He continued daily to visit the tower with the same precaution. Meanwhile, the emperor, with whom Virgil was a great favorite, missed him from the court, and demanded of his servant where he was. The domestic pretended ignorance, till the emperor threatened him with death, when at length he conveyed him to the enchanted tower. The same threat extorted a discovery of the mode of stopping the statues from widdling their flails.

"And then the emperor entered into the castle with all his folke, and sought all aboute in every corner after Virgilius; and at the laste they sought so longe, that they came into the seller, where they sawe the lamp hang over the barrel, where Virgilius lay.* And this man, who had made hym so herdy to put his master Virgilius so to dethe; and the man answered no wordes to the emperor. And then the emperor, with great anger, drew out his sword, and slew he there Virgilius man. And when all this was done, then sawe the emperor, and all his foulke, a naked child iii tymes rennynge aboute the barrel, sayenge these wordes, 'Cursed be the tymes that ye ever came here.' And with those wordes vanished the chylde awaye, and was never seen agayn; and thus abyd Virgilius in the barrell deed."—
APPENDIX TO THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

55

Virginia, bl. let., printed at Antwerp by John Doesborck. This curious volume is in the valuable library of Mr. Douce; and is supposed to be a translation from the French, printed in Flanders for the English market. See Grygel Biblioth. France, ix. 225. Catalogue de la Bibliothèque Nationale, tom. ii. p. 5. De Bure, No. 1257.

NOTE 2 H.

Then Deloraine, in terror took
From the cold hand the Mighty Book,
He thought, as he took it, the dead man frowned.—P. 16.

William of Deloraine might be strengthened in this belief by the well-known story of the Cid Ruy Diaz. When the body of that famous Christian champion was sitting in state by the high altar of the cathedral church of Toledo, where it remained for ten years, a certain malicious Jew attempted to pull him by the beard; but he had no sooner touched the formidable whiskers, than the corpse started up, and half unsheathed his sword. The Israelite fled; and so permanent was the effect of his terror, that he became Christian.—Heywood’s Hierarchy, p. 409, quoted from Sebastian Odburrowius Orazee.

NOTE 2 I.

The Baron's Dwarf his courser held.—P. 18.

The idea of Lord Cranstoun's Goblin Page is taken from a being called Gilpin Horner, who appeared, and made some stay, at a farm-house among the Border-mountains. A gentleman of that country has noted down the following particulars concerning his appearance:

"The only certain, at least most probable account, that ever I heard of Gilpin Horner, was from an old man, of the name of Anderson, who was born and lived all his life at Tolshaw-hill, in Eskbridgelaur, the place where Gilpin appeared and stayed for some time. He said there were two men, late in the evening, when it was growing dark, employed in fastening the horses upon the uttermost part of their ground (that is, tying their forefeet together, to hinder them from travelling far in the night), when they heard a voice, at some distance, crying, 'Tint! Tint! Tint!' One of the men, named Moffat, called out, 'What devil has tint you? Come here.' Immediately a creature, of something like a human form, appeared. It was surprisingly little, distorted in features, and misshapen in limbs. As soon as the two men could see it plainly, they ran home in a great fright, imagining they had met with some goblin. By the way, Moffat fell, and it ran over him, and was home at the house as soon as either of them, and stayed there a long time; but I cannot say how long. It was real flesh and blood, and ate and drank, was fond of cream, and, when it could get at it, would destroy a great deal. It seemed a mischievous creature; and any of the children whom it could master, it would heat and scratch without mercy. It was once abusing a child belonging to the same Moffat, who had been so frightened by its first appearance; and he, in a passion, struck it so violent a blow upon the side of the head, that it tumbled upon the ground; but it was not stunned; for it set up its head directly, and exclaimed, 'Ah, hail, Will o' Moffat, you strike sair!' (viz. sore). After it had staid there long; one evening, when the women were milking the cows in the loan, it was playing among the children near by them, when suddenly they heard a loud shrill voice cry three times, 'Gilpin Horner!' It started, and said, 'That is me, I must away,' and instantly disappeared, and was never heard of more. Old Anderson did not remember it, but said, he had often heard his father, and other old men in the place, who were there at the time, speak about it; and in my younger years I have often heard it mentioned, and never met with any who had the remotest doubt as to the truth of the story; although, I must own, I cannot help thinking there must be some misrepresentation in it."—To this account, I have to add the following particulars from the most respectable authority. Besides constantly repeating the word tint! tint! Gilpin Horner was often heard to call upon Peter Bertram, or Be-te-rum, as he pronounced the word; and when the shrill voice called Gilpin Horner, he immediately acknowledged it was the summons of the said Peter Bertram; who seems therefore to have been the devil who had tint, or lost, the little imp. As much has been objected to Gilpin Horner, on account of his being supposed rather a device of the author than a popular superstition, I can only say, that no legend which I ever heard seemed to be more universally credited; and that many persons of very good rank, and considerable information, are well known to repose absolute faith in the tradition.

NOTE 2 K.

But the Ladie of Brunscombe gather'd a band
Of the best that would ride at her command.—P. 18.

"Upon 25th June, 1557, Dame Janet Beatonne, Lady Buccleuch, and a great number of the name of Scott, delaitit (accused) for coming to the kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes, to the number of two hundred persons bothin in feire of weire (arrayed in armor), and breaking open the door of the said kirk, in order to apprehend the Laird of Cranstoun for his destruction." On the 20th July, a warrant from the Queen is presented, discharging the justice to proceed against the Lady Buccleuch while new calling.—Abridgment of Books of Adjournal, in Advocates' Library. The following proceedings upon this case appear on the record of the Court of Justiciary: On the 25th of June, 1557, Robert Scott, in Bowhill parish, priest of the kirk of St. Mary's, accused of the convection of the Queen's lieges, to the number of two hundred persons, in warlike array, with packs, helmets, and other weapons, and marching to the chapel of St. Mary of the Lowes, for the slaughter of Sir Peter Cranstoun, out of ancient feud and malice prepense, and of breaking the doors of the said kirk, is repelled by the Archbishop of Glasgow. The bail given by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Adam Scott of Burnett, Robert Scott in Howfurde, Walter Scott in Todshawhaugh, Walter Scott younger of Synton, Thomas Scott of Hayning, Robert Scott, William Scott, and James Scott, brothers of the said Walter Scott, Walter Scott in the Woll, and Walter Scott, son of William Scott of Harden, and James Wemyss in Eckford, all accused of the same crime, is declared to be forfeited. On the same day, Walter Scott of Synton and Walter Chisholme of Chisholme, and William Scott of Harden, became bound, jointly and severally, that Sir Peter Cranstoun, and his kindred and servants, should receive no injury from them in future. At the same time, Patrick Murray of Fallolih, Alexander Stuart, uncle to the Laird of Trakwhare, John Murray of Newhall, John Fairlye, residing in Solkirk, George Tait, younger of Pirn, John Penneyeke of Pennyecke, James Ramsay of Coken, the Laird of Fassylde, and the Laird of Henderstoune, were all severally fined for not attending as jurors; being probably either in alliance with the accused parties, or dreading their vengeance. Upon the 20th of July following, Scott of Synton, Chisholme of Chisholme, Scott of Harden, Scott of Howcastle, Scott of Burnfute, with many others, are ordered to appear at next calling, under the pains of treason. But no further procedure seems to have taken place. It is said that, upon this rising, the kirk of St. Mary was burnt by the Scotts.

1 Tint signifies lost.

Note 2 L.

Like a book-boosted priest.—P. 19.

"At Unthank, two miles N. E. from the church (of Eves), there are the ruins of a chapel for divine service, in time of Popery. There is a tradition, that friars were wont to come from Melrose or Jedburgh, to baptize and marry in this parish; and from being in use to carry the mass-book in their bosoms, they were called by the inhabitants, Book-a-bosomnes. There is a man yet alive who knew old men who had been baptized by these Book-a-bosomnes, and who says one of them, called Hair, used this parish for a very long time."—Account of Parish of Eves, apud Macfarlane's MSS.

Note 2 M.

All was delusion, naught was truth.—P. 20.

Glamour, in the legends of Scottish superstition, means the magic power of imposing on the eyesight of the spectators, so that the appearance of an object shall be totally different from the reality. The trasformation of Michael Scott by the Witch of Falshope, already mentioned, was a genuine operation of glamour. To a similar charm the ballad of Johnny Fa' imparts the fascination of the lovely Countess, who eloped with that gypsy leader:—

"Sae soon as they saw her weel-far'd face,
They cast the glamour o'er her."

It was formerly used even in war. In 1381, when the Duke of Anjou lay before a strong castle, upon the coast of Naples, a necromancer offered to "make the ayre so thynke, that they within shall thynke that there is a great bridge on the see (by which the castle was surrounded) for ten men to go a front; and when they within the castle see this bridge, they will be so afrayed, that they shall yield to your mercy. The Duke demanded,—'Fayre Master, on this bridge that ye spoke of, may our people assuredly go thereon to the castell, to assaye it?"—Syr, quod the enchantour, 'I dare not assure you that; for if any that passeth on the bridge make the signe of the crosse on hym, all shall go to nought, and they that be on the bridge shall fall into the see.' Then the Duke began to laugh; and a certain of young knights, that were there present, said, 'Syr, for godsake, let the master assay his cunning: we shall love making of any signe of the crosse on us for that tyme.'" The Earl of Savoy, shortly after, entered the tent, and recognized in the enchantor the same person who had put the castle into the power of Sir Charles de la Payx, who then held it, by persuading the garrison of the Queen of Naples, through magical deception, that the sea was coming over the walls. The sage avowed the feat, and added, that he was the man in the world most dreaded by Sir Charles de la Payx. "By my faith," quod the Earl of Savoy, 'ye say well; and I will that Syr Charles de la Payx shall know that he hath gret wronge to fear you. But I shall assure hym of you; for ye shall never do enchantment to deceyve hym, nor yet none other. I wold nat that in tyme to come we shulde be reprochted that in so highe an enterprize as we be in, wherein there be so many noble knyghtes and squyers assembled, that we shulde do any thyng be enchantmen, nor that we shulde wyn our enemies be such craft.' Then he called to him a servant, and said, 'Go, and get a hangman, and let him stryke off this myster's heed without delay; and as soone as the Erle had commanded it, incontinent it was done, for his heed was stryken of before the Erle's tent.'—Erie's, vol. i. ch. 301, 302.

The art of glamour, or other fascination, was anciently a principal part of the skill of the jongleur, or juggler, whose tricks formed much of the amusement of a Gothic castle. Some instances of this art may be found in the Minstrely of the Scottish Border, vol. iv. p. 106. In a strange allegorical poem, called the Houlat, written by a dependent of the house of Douglas, about 1452-3, the jay, in an assembly of birds, plays the part of the juggler. His feats of glamour are thus described:—

"He gart them see, as it semyt in samyn hour, Hunting at herlis in holits so hair; Some sailand on the see schippis of tooure, Bernis battalhand on burd brim as a bare; He coulde carye the coup of the kingis des, Synye leve in the stede, Bot a black bunwele; He coulde of a henis hede Make a man nes.

"He gart the Emproure trow, and trewly behald, That the corneraik, the pandere at hand, Had pouyndit all his pris hors in a pouynd fald, Because that cte of the corn in the kirkand. He coulde wirk windaris, quhat way that he wald, Mak a gray gus a gold garland, A lang sper of a bittle, for a berne bale, Nobilis of nutschelles, and silver of sand. Thus joklit with juxters the janglane ja, Fair ladys in ringis, Knychtis in caralyngis, Bayth dantis and singis, It semyt as sa.'

Note 2 N.

Now, if you ask who gave the stroke, I cannot tell, so not I thrive; It was not given by man alive.—P. 20.

Dr. Henry More, in a letter prefixed to Glanville's Solutuus Triumphatus, mentions a similar phenomenon.

"I remember an old gentleman in the country, of my acquaintance, an excellent justice of the peace, and a piece of a mathematician; but what kind of a philosopher he was, you may understand from a rhyme of his own making, which he commended to me at my taking horse in his yard, which rhyme is this:—

'Ens is nothing till sense finds out:
Sense ends in nothing, so naught goes about.'

Which rhyme of his was so rapturous to himself, that, on the reciting of the second verse, the old man turned himself about upon his toe as nimbly as one may observe a dry leaf whisht round the corner of an orchard walk by some little whirlwind. With this philosopher I have had many discourses concerning the immortality of the soul and its distinction; when I have run him quite down by reason, he would but laugh at me, and say this is logic, II. (calling me by my Christian name), to which I replied, this is reason, father L. (for so I used and some others to call him); but it seems you are for the new lights, and immediate inspiration, which I confess he was as little for as for the other; but I said so only in the way of drollerie to him in those times, but truth is nothing but palpable experience would move him; and being a bold man, and fearing nothing, he told me he had used all the magical ceremonies of conjuration he could, to raise the devil or a spirit, and had a most earnest desire to meet with one, but never could do it. But this he told me, when he did not so much as think of it, while his servant was pulling off his boots in the hall, some invisible hand gave him such a clap upon the back, that it made all ring again; 'so,' thought he now, 'I am invited to the converse of my spirit,' and therefore, so soon as his boots were off, and his shoes on, out he goes into the yard and next field, to find out the spirit that had given him this familiar clap on the back, but found none neither in the yard nor field next to it.

"But though he did not feel this stroke, albeit he thought it afterwards (finding nothing came of it) a mere delusion; yet not long before his death, it had more force with him than all the philosophical arguments I could use to him, though I could wind him and nonplus him as I pleased; but yet all my arguments, how solid soever, made no impression upon him; wherefore, after several reasonings of this nature, whereby I would prove to him the soul's distinction from the body, and its immortality, when nothing of such sublime consideration did any more execution on his mind than some lightning is said to do, though it melts the sword, on the fuzzy consistency of the seabbard,—'Well,' said I, 'father L., though none of these things move you, I have something still behind, and what yourself has acknowledged to be true, that may do the business:—Do you remember the clap on your back when your servant was pulling off your boots in the hall? Assured yourself, says I, 'father L., that goblin will be the first to bid you welcome into the other world.' Upon that his countenance changed most sensibly, and he was more confounded with this rubbing up his memory, than with all the rational or philosophical arguments that I could produce."

Note 2 O.

The running stream dissolved the spell.—P. 20.

It is a firm article of popular faith, that no enchantment can subsist in a living stream. Nay, if you can interpose a brook betwixt you and witches, spectres, or even fiends, you are in perfect safety. Burn's inimitable Tam o' Shanter turns entirely upon such a circumstance. The belief seems to be of antiquity. Brompton informs us, that certain Irish wizards could, by spells, convert earthen clods, or stones, into fat pigs, which they sold in the market, but which always reassumed their proper form when driven by the deceived purchaser across a running stream. But Brompton is severe on the Irish for a very good reason. "Gens ista spectaculis non solvant declinat."—Chronicon Johannis Brompton apud deoem Scriptorum, p. 1076.

Note 2 P.

He never counted him a man, Would strike below the knee.—P. 21.

Imitated from Drayton's account of Robin Hood and his followers:

"A hundred valiant men had this brave Robin Hood, Still ready at his call, that bowmen were right good; All clad in Lincoln green, with caps of red and blue, His fellow's windsed horn not one of them but knew.

When setting to their lips their bugles shrill, The warbling echoes waked from every dale and hill; Their bardsies set with studth outhwart their shoulder's cast, To which under their arms their sheafs were buckled fast, A short sword at their belt, a buckler scarce a span, Who struck below the knee not counted then a man. All made of Spanish pew, their bows were wondrous strong, They not an arrow drew but was a cloth-yard long. Of archery they had the very perfect craft, With broad arrow, or but, or prick, or roving shaft."

To wound an antagonist in the thigh, or leg, was reckoned contrary to the law of arms. In a tilt betwixt Gawain Michael, an English squire, and Joachim Cuthore, a Frenchman, "they met at the speare poynete rudely; the French squire justed right pleasantly; the Englishman ran too low, for he strak the Frenchman cape into the thigh. Wherewith the Erle of Buckingham was right sore displeased, and so were all the other lords, and sayde how it was shamefully done."—Froissart, vol. i. chap. 366. Upon a similar occasion, "the two knights came a fote ech against other rudely, with their speares low couched, to styke ech other within the four quarters. Johan of Castell-Morant statake the English squire on the brest in such wyse, that Syr Wyllyam Fermetone stumba and bowed, for his fote a lyttel fayled him. He helde his speare lowe with both his handes, and couede nat amende it, and strake Syr Johan of the Castell-Morant in the thigh, so that the speare wen cleane through, that the heed was sene a hamfull on the other syde. And Syr Johan with the stroke releed, but he fell nat. Than the Englyshe knightes and squyers were rytthe sore displeased, and sayde how it was a faule stroke. Syr Wyllyam Fermetone excused hyselfe, and sayde how he was sorie of that adventure, and bowe that sf he had known that it shulde have bene so, he wolde neuer have began it; sayenge how he could nat amende it, by cause of glaumes of his fote by constrainyt of the great stroke that Syr Johan of the Castell-Morant had given him."

—Froissart, vol. i. chap. 373.

Note 2 Q.

She drew the splinter from the wound, And with a charm she staunch'd the blood.—P. 21.

See several charms for this purpose in Reginald Scott's Discovery of Witchcraft, p. 273.

"Tom Potts was but a serving man, But yet he was a doctor good; He bound his handkerchief on the wound, And with some kinds of words he staunch'd the blood."

Pieces of Ancient Popular Poetry, Lond. 1791, p. 131.

Note 2 R.

But she has too'en the broken lance, And wun'd it from the clotted gore, And solv'd the splinter o'er and o'er.—P. 22.

Sir Kenelm Digby, in a discourse upon the cure by sympathy, pronounced at Montpellier before an assembly of nobles and learned men, translated into English by R. White, gentleman, and published in 1658, gives us the following curious surgical case:

"Mr. James Howel (well known in France for his public works, and particularly for his Deudrologie, translated into French by Mons. Baudouin) by coming by chance, as two of his best friends were fighting in duel, he did his endeavor to part them; and, putting himself between them, seized, with his left hand, upon the hilt of the sword of one of the combatants, while with his right hand, he laid hold of the blade of the other. They, being transported with fury one against the other, struggled to rid themselves of the hindrance their friend made, that they should not kill one another; and one of them roughly drawing the blade of his sword, cuts to the very bone the nerves and muscles of Mr. Howel's hand; and then the other disengaged his hilt, and gave a cross blow on his adversary's head, which glanced towards his friend, who being up by his ounce, in order to save the blow, he was wounded on the back of his hand as he had been before within. It seems some strange constellation reigned then against him, that he should lose so much blood by parting two such dear friends, who, had they themselves, would have hazarded both their lives to have preserved his; but this involuntary effusion of blood by them, prevented that which they shoulde have drawn one from the other. For they, seeing Mr. Howel's face besmeared with blood, by heaving up his wounded hand, they both ran to embrace him; and, having searched his hurts, they bound up his hand with one of his garters, to close the veins which were cut, and bled abundantly. They brought him home, and sent for a surgeon. But this being heard at court, the King sent one of his own surgeons; for his Majesty much affected the said Mr. Howel.

"It was my chance to be lodged hard by him; and four or five days after, as I was making myself ready, he came to my house, and prayed me to view his wounds; 'for I understand,' said he, 'that you have extraordinary remedies on such occasions, and my surgeons apprehend some fear that it may grow to a gangrene, and so the hand must be cut off?' In effect, his countenance discovered that he was in much pain, which he said was insupportable, in regard of the extreme inflammation. I told him I would willingly serve him; but if haply he knew the manner how I would cure him, withoutouching or seeing him, it may be he would not expose himself to my manner of curing, because he would think it, peradventure, either incertal or superstitions. He replied, 'the wonderful things which many have related unto me of your way of medicament, makes me nothing doubt at all of its efficacy; and all that I have to say unto you is comprehended in the Spanish proverb, Haga-se el milagro y hagalo Mahoma.—Let the miracle be done, though Mahomet do it!'

"I asked him then for any thing that had the blood upon it; so he presently sent for his garter, wherewith his hand was first bound; and as I called for a bason of water, as if I would wash his hands, I took a handful of powder of vitriol, which I had in my study, and presently dissolved it. As soon as the bloody garter was brought me, I put it within the bason, observing, in the interim, what Mr. Howel did, who stood talking with a gentleman in a corner of my chamber, not regarding anything what I was doing; but he started suddenly, as if he had found some strange alteration in himself. I asked him what he alled? 'I know not what alles me; but I finde that I feel no more pain. Methinks that a pleasing kind of freshness, as it were a wet cold napkin, did spread over my hand, which hath taken away the inflammation that tormented me before, —I replied, 'Since then that you feel already so good effect of my medicament, I advise you to cast away all your playsters; only keep the wound clean, and in a moderate temper between heat and cold.' This was presently reported to the Duke of Buckingham, and a little after to the King, who were both very curious to know the circumstancs of the businesse, which was, that after dinner I took the garter out of the water, and put it to dry before a great fire. It was scarce dry, but Mr. Howel's servant came running, that his master felt as much burning as ever he had done, if not more; for the heat was such as if his hand were 'twixt coals of fire. I answered, although that had happened at present, yet he should find ease in a short time; for I knew the reason of this new accident, and would provide accordingly; for his master should be free from that inflammation, it may be before he could possibly return to him; but in case he found no ease, I wished him to come presently back again; if not, he might foresee coming. Thereupon he went; and at the instant I did put again the garter into the water, thereupon he found his master without any pain at all. To be brief, there was no sense of pain afterward; but within five or six days the wounds were cicatrized, and entirely healed."—Page 6.

The King (James VI) obtained from Sir Kenelm the discovery of his secret, which he pretended had been taught him by a Carmelite friar, who had learned it in Armenia or Persia. Let not the age of animal magnetism and metallic tractors smile at the sympathetic powder of Sir Kenelm Digby. Regimakl Scot mentions the same mode of cure in these terms—"And that which is more strange . . . . they can remedie anie stranger with that verie sword wherewith they are wounded. Yea, and that which is beyond all admiration, if they stroke the sword upward with their fingers, the partie shall feele no pain; whereas, if they draw their fingers downwards, thereupon the partie wounded shall feel intolerable pain." I presume that the success ascribed to the sympathetic mode of treatment might arise from the pains bestowed in washing the wound, and excluding the air, thus bringing on a cure by the first intention. It is introduced by Dryden in the Enchanted Island, a (very unnecessary) alteration of the Tempest.—

"Ariel. Anoint the sword which pierced him with this Weapon-salve, and wrap it close from air, Till I have time to visit him again."—Act v. sc. 2.

Again, in scene 4th, Miranda enters with Hippolito's sword wrapt up:—

"M. O my wound pains me! I am come to ease you. [She unsepars the Sword.] M. Alas, I feel the cold air come to me;
My wound shoots worse than ever.
M. Does it still grieve you? [She wipes and anointis the Sword.]
M. Now, methinks, there's something laid just upon it.
M. Do you find no ease?
M. Yes, yes; upon the sudden all this pain is leaving me. Sweet heaven, how I am eased!"

Note 2 S.

On Penchryst glows a bale of fire.—P. 22.

Bale, beacon-fagot. The Border beacons, from their number and position, formed a sort of telegraphic communication with Edinburgh.—The act of Parliament 1455, c. 48, directs, that one bale or fagot shall be warning of the approach of the English in any manner; two bales that they are coming indeed; four bales, blazing beside each other, that the enemy are in great force. "The same tallowings to be watchted and maid at Eggerhope (Eggerstand) Castell, fra they se the fire of Hume, that they fire right swa. And in like manner on Sowert Edge, saal se the fire of Eggerhope Castell, and mak tallowing in like manner; And thus may all Louthaine be warnid, and in special the Castell of Edin- burgh; and their four fires to be made in like manner, that they in Fife, and fra Striveling east, and the cast part of Louthaine, and to Dunbar, all may se them, and come to the defence of the reame." These beacons (at least in latter times) were a "long and strong tree set up, with a long iron
Note 2 T.

The speed with which the Borderers collected great bodies of horse may be judged from the following extract, when the subject of the rising was much less important than that supposed in the romance. It is taken from Carey’s Memoirs:

“Upon the death of the old Lord Scroop, the Queen gave the west wardenry to his son, that had married my sister. He having received that office, came to me with great earnestness, and desired me to be his deputy, offering me that I should live with him in his house; that he would allow me half a dozen men, and as many horses, to be kept at his charge; and his fee being 1000 marks yearly, he would part it with me, and I should have the half. This his noble offer I accepted of, and went with him to Carlisle; where I was no sooner come, but I entered into my office. We had a stirring time of it; and few days passed over my head but I was on horseback, either to prevent mischief, or take malefactors, and to bring the Border in better quiet than it had been in times past. One memorable thing of God’s mercy shewed unto me, was such as I have good cause still to remember it.

“I had private intelligence given me, that there were two Scotsmen who had killed a churchman in Scotland, and were by one of the Grames relieved. This Grrame dwelt within five miles of Carlisle. He had a pretty house, and close by it a strong tower, for his own defence in time of need. About two o’clock in the morning, I took horse in Carlisle, and not above twenty-five in my company, thinking to surprise the house on a sudden. Before I could surround the house, the two Scots were gotten in the strong tower, and I could see a boy riding from the house as fast as his horse could carry him; I little suspected what it meant. But Thomas Carleton came to me presently, and told me, that if I did not presently prevent it, both myself and all my company would be either slain or taken prisoners. It was strange to me to hear this language. He then said to me, ‘Do you see that boy that rideth away so fast? He will be in Scotland within this half hour; and he is gone to let them know that you are there, and to what end you are come, and the small number you have with you; and that if they will make haste, on a sudden they may surprise us, and do with us what they please.’ Hereupon we took advice what was best to be done. We sent notice presently to all parts to raise the country, and to come to us with all the speed they could; and withall we sent to Carlisle to raise the townsmen; for which foot we could do no good against the tower. Then we stayed some hours, expecting more company; and within short time after the country came in on all sides, so that we were quickly between three and four hundred horse; and after some longer stay, the foot of Carlisle came to us, to the number of three or four hundred men; whom we presently set to work, to get to the top of the tower, and to uncover the roof; and then some twenty of them to fall down together, and by that means to win the tower. The Scots, seeing their present danger, offered to parley, and yielded themselves to my mercy. They had no sooner opened the iron gate, and yielded themselves my prisoners, but we might see 400 horse within a quarter of a mile coming to their rescue, and to surprise me and my small company; but of a sudden they stayed, and stood at gaze. Then had I more to do than ever; for all our Borderers came crying, with full mouths, ‘Sir, give us leave to set upon them; for these are they that have killed our fathers, our brothers, and uncles, and our cousins; and they are coming, thinking to surprise you, upon weak grass mags, such as they could get on a sudden; and God hath put them into your hands, that we may take revenge of them for much blood that they have spilt of ours.’ I desired they would be patient a while, and bethought myself, if I should give them their will, there would be few or none of the Scots that would escape unhurt (there was so many deadly feuds among them); and therefore I resolved with myself to give them a fair answer, but not to give them their desire. So I told them, that if I were not there myself, they might then do what they pleased themselves; but being present, if I should give them leave, the blood that should be spilt that day would lie very hard upon my conscience. And therefore I desired them, for my sake, to forbear; and, if the Scots did not presently make away with all the speed they could, upon my sending to them, they should then have their wills to do what they pleased. They were ill satisfied with my answer, but durst not disobey. I sent with speed to the Scots, and bade them pack away with all the speed they could; for if they stayed the messenger’s return, they should few of them return to their own home. They made no stay; but they were returned homewards before the messenger had made an end of his message. Thus, by God’s mercy, I escaped a great danger; and, by my means, there was a great many men’s lives saved that day.”

Note 2 U.

On many a cairn’s gray pyramid,
Where urns of mighty chiefs lie hid.—P. 22.

The cairns, or piles of loose stones, which crown the summit of most of our Scottish hills, and are found in other remarkable situations, seem usually, though not universally, to have been sepulchral monuments. Six flat stones are commonly found in the centre, forming a cavity of greater or smaller dimensions, in which an urn is often placed. The author is possessed of one, discovered beneath an immense cairn at Roughlie, in Liddesdale. It is of the most barbarous construction; the middle of the substance alone having been subjected to the fire, over which, when hardened, the artist had laid an inner and outer coat of unbroken clay, etched with some very rude ornaments; his skill apparently being inadequate to baking the vase, when completely finished. The contents were bones and ashes, and a quantity of beads made of coal. This seems to have been a barbarous imitation of the Roman fashion of sepulture.

Note 2 V.

For pathless marsh, and mountain cell.
The peasant left his lonely shed.—P. 23.

The morrasses were the usual refuge of the Border herdsmen, on the approach of an English army.—Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, vol. i. p. 365. Caves, hewed in the most dangerous and inaccessible places, also afforded an occasional retreat. Such caverns may be seen in the precipitous banks of the Teviot at Sunlaws, upon the Aie at Ancram, upon the Jed at Hundale, and in many other places upon the Border. The banks of the Ecke, at Gordon and Hawthorn, are hollowed into similar recesses. But even these dreary dens were not always secure places of concealment. “In the way as we came, not far from this place (Long Niddry), George Ferres, a gentleman of my Lord Protector’s,”... happened upon a cave in the grounde, the mouth whereof was so wore with the fresh prints of steps, that he seemed to be certayne there wear some folke within; and gone dounne to trie, he was radely received with a hatchet or two. He left them not yet, till he had known whether thei wold be content to yield and come out; which they fondly refusing, he went to my lord's grace, and upon utterance of the thynge, got licence to deal with them as he coude; and so returned to them, with a score or two of pioners. Three ventes had their cave, that we wear ware of, wherof he first stopt up on; another he fill'd full of strawe, and set it a fyre, wheret they within cast water space; but it was so well mainetyned, without that thei fery prevayled, and thei within fayn to get them belyke into another parller. Then devyssed we (for I hap't be with him) to stop the same up, whereby we should ester smoother them, or fynd out their ventes, if thei hadd any mose; as this was done at another issue, about xii score of we mought to see the fame of their smoke to come out the, which continued with so great a force, and so long a while, that we could not but thinke they must needs get them out, or smoother within: and forasmuch as we found not that they dyd the tone, we thought it for certain thei wear sure of the toother."—PATTEN'S Account of Somerset's Expedition into Scotland, apud DALYELL's Fragments.

Note 2 W.

Show'd southern ravage was begun.—P. 24.

From the following fragment of a letter from the Earl of Northumberland to King Henry VIII., preserved among the Cotton MSS. Calig. B. vii, 179, the reader may estimate the nature of the dreadful war which was occasionally waged upon the Borders, sharpened by mutual cruelties, and the personal hatred of the wardens, or leaders.

Scotland's Borderers say of the King of Norway, he had threatened to come within "three miles of my pore house of Werkworth, where I lye, and gif me light to put on my clothes at mynd-night; and also the said Marke Carr said there openly, that, seyng they had a governor on the Marches of Scotland, as well as they had in England, he should kepe your highness instructions, gyffyn unto your garsyon, for making of any day-forre;" for he and his friends wold burne enough on the night, lettyny your counsell here defyne a notable acte at theyre pleasures. Upon whiche, in your highnes name, I comandest dewe watche to be kepte on your Marches, for comyng in of any Scots.—Neurtheches, upon Thursday at night last, came thryght light horsemen into a hill village of myne, called Whitell, having not past sex houses, lying, towards Liddesdale, upon Shilbotell More, and there wold have fyrd the said houes, but ther was no fyre to get there, and they forgote to brynge any withe thyme; and took a wyf being great with chylde, in the said towne, and said to hyr, Wher we can not gyve the hard lyght, yet we shall doe tis in spyte of hym; and gyve her iii mortall wounds upon the heid, and another in the right side, with a dagger: whereupon the said wyf is deceede, and the childe in her bely is loste. Beseeching your most gracious highness to reduce unto your gracious memory this wyllful and shamefull murder, done within this your highnes realm, notwithstanding all the inhabitants thereabout rose unto the said fray, and gave warninge by becons into the country afor thyme, and yet the Scottsman dyde escape. And upon certayne knowledge to my brother Clyfforth, and me, had by credible persons of Scotland, this abominable act not only to be done by dyverse of the Mershe, but also the afore named persons of Tyvidall, and consented to, as by appearance, by the Erle of Murey, upon Friday at night last, let slyp C of the best horsemen of Glendall, with a parte of your highnes subjects of Berwyke, together with George Dowglas, whoe came into Ingland awaie, in the dawning of the day; but afore theye retorne, they dyd mar the Erle of Murreis provissions at Coldingham; for they did not only burne the said towne of Coldingham, with all the corue thereunto belonging, which is esteemed warthe cii marke sterling; but also burned twa townes nye adjoining thereunto, called Branderest and the Black Hill, and toke xxii persons, kx horse, with cc hed of catalli, which, nowe, as I am informed, hathe not only been a staye of the said Erle of Murreis not coming to the Bordure as yet, but also, that none Inlande man will adventure seyng thei upon the Marches. And as for the tax that shulde have been granyted for finding of the said iii hundred men, is utterly denied. Upon which the King of Scotland departed from Edynburgh to Stirling, and as yet there deh remainy. And also I, by the advice of my brother Clyfforth, have deyssed, that within this iii nyghts, Godde willing, Kelsey, in like case, shall be brest, with all the corn in the said towne; and then they shall have noo place to lye any garsyon in nych unto the Borders. And as I shall atteigne further knowledge, I shall not fail to satsyfe your highnes, according to my most boundent duties. And for this burnyng of Kelsey is devyssed to be done secretly, by Tyndalli and Ryddissall. And thus the holy Trynity and ★★ your most royal estate, with long lyg, and as much increase of honour as your most noble heart can desire. At Werkevorth the xxid day of October." (1522)

Note 2 X.

Watt Tintinn.—P. 24.

This person was, in my younger days, the theme of many a fireside tale. He was a retainer of the Bucebach family, and held for his Border service a small tower on the frontiers of Liddesdale. Watt was, by profession, a "sutor," but, by inclination and practice, an archer and warrior. Upon one occasion, the captain of Bewcastle, military governor of that wild district of Cumberland, is said to have made an incursion into Scotland, in which he was defeated, and forced to fly. Watt Tintinn pursued him closely through a dangerous morass; the captain, however, gained the firm ground; and seeing Tintinn dismounted, and floundering in the bog, used these words of insult:—"Sutor Watt, ye cannot sew your boots; the heels rip, and the seams rise."—"If I cannot sew," retorted Tintinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain's thigh to his saddle,—"If I cannot sew, I can perk." 3

Note 2 Y.

Billhope stag.—P. 24.

There is an old rhymne which thus celebrates the places in Liddesdale remarkable for game:

"Billhope bracc for bucks and raes,
And Carit haugh for swine,
And Terras for the good bull-trout,
If he be taken in time." 2

The bucks and roes, as well as the old swine, are now extinct; but the good bull-trout is still famous.

1 Rip, creak.—Rée, tear.

2 York, to twitch, as shoemakers do, in securing the stitches of their work.
APPENDIX TO THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

61

NOTE 2 Z.

Belted Will Howard.—P. 24.

Lord William Howard, third son of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, succeeded to Naworth Castle, and a large domain annexed to it, in right of his wife Elizabeth, sister of George Lord Dacre, who died without heirs male, in the 11th of Queen Elizabeth. By a posthumous amicitation, he is introduced into the romance a few years earlier than he actually flourished. He was warden of the Western Marches; and, from the rigor with which he repressed the Border excesses, the name of Belted Will Howard is still famous in our traditions. In the castle of Naworth, his apartments, containing a bedroom, oratory, and library, are still shown. They impress us with an unpleasing idea of the life of a lord warden of the Marches. Three or four strong doors, separating these rooms from the rest of the castle, indicate the apprehensions of treachery from his garrison; and the secret winding passages, through which he could privately descend into the gardroom, or even into the dungeons, imply the necessity of no small degree of secret superintendence on the part of the governor. As the ancient books and furniture have remained undisturbed, the venerable appearance of these apartments, and the armor scattered around the chamber, almost lead us to expect the arrival of the warden in person. Naworth Castle is situated near Brampton, in Cumberland. Lord William Howard is ancestor of the Earls of Carlisle.

NOTE 3 A.

Lord Dacre.—P. 24.

The well-known name of Dacre is derived from the exploits of one of their ancestors at the siege of Acre, or Patmos, under Richard Cœur de Lion. There were two powerful branches of that name. The first family, called Lord Dacres of the South, held the castle of the same name, and are ancestors to the present Lord Dacre. The other family, descended from the same stock, were called Lord Dacres of the North, and were barons of Gilsland and Graystock. A chieftain of the latter branch was warden of the West Marches during the reign of Edward VI. He was a man of a hot and obstinate character, as appears from some particulars of Lord Surney's letter to Henry VIII., giving an account of his behavior at the siege and storm of Jedburgh. It is printed in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, Appendix to the Introduction.

NOTE 3 B.

—the German hackbut-men.—P. 24.

In the wars with Scotland, Henry VIII. and his successors employed numerous bands of mercenary troops. At the battle of Pinkie, there were in the English array six hundred hackbutters on foot, and two hundred on horseback, composed chiefly of foreigners. On the 25th of September, 1543, the Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, writes to the Lord Dacre, warden of the West Marches:—"The Almain, in number two thousand, very valiant soldiers, shall be sent to you shortly from Newcastle, together with Sir Thomas Holcroft, and with the force of your warderney (which we would were advanced to the most strength of horsemen that might be) shall make the attempt to Loughmaben, being of no such strength but that it may be skated with hiders, wherever, beforehand, we would you caused secretly some number to be provided; or else undermined with the pyke-axe, and so taken: either to be kept for the King's Majesty, or otherwise to be defaced, and taken from the profits of the enemy. And in like manner the house of Carlaverock to be used." Repeated mention occurs of the Almain in the subsequent correspondence; and the enterprise seems finally to have been abandoned, from the difficulty of providing these strangers with the necessary "victuals and carriages in so poor a country as Dumfrieshire."—History of Cumberland, vol. i. Introd. p. lxi. From the battle-pieces of the ancient Flemish painters, we learn that the Low Country and German soldiers marched to an assault with their right knees bare. And we may also observe, in such pictures, the extravagance to which they carried the fashion of ornamenting their dress with knots of ribbon. This custom of the Germans is alluded to in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 121.

"Their pleated garments therewith well accord, All jadgle and frounset, with divers colours deckt."

NOTE 3 C.

"Ready, eye ready," for the field.—P. 25.

Sir John Scott of Thirlestane flourished in the reign of James V., and possessed the estates of Thirlestane, Gumesleuch, &c., lying upon the river of Etrick, and extending to St. Mary's Loch, at the head of Yarrow. It appears that when James had assembled his nobility and their feudal followers at Fala, with the purpose of invading England, and was, as is well known, disappointed by the obstinate refusal of his peers, this baron alone declared himself ready to follow the King wherever he should lead. In memory of his fidelity, James granted to his family a charter of arms, entitling them to bear a border of fleurs-de-luce, similar to the treasure in the royal arms, with a bundle of spears for the crest; motto, Ready, eye ready. The charter itself is printed by Nisbet; but his work being scarce, I insert the following accurate transcript from the original, in the possession of the Right Honorable Lord Napier, the representative of John of Thirl- stane.

"JAMES REX.

"We James, by the grace of God, King of Scottis, consider- and the faith and guld ar ris of ofl rig, in ist named John Scott of Thirlstane, qua was commant to our hoste at Souts- edge, with three score and ten launeciers on horseback of his friends and followers, and beand willing to gang with ws into England, when all our nobles and others refused, he was ready to stakke at all our bidding; for the quibill cause, it is our will, and we doe straitic command and charg our lion heraund and his deputies for the time beand, to give and to grant to the said John Scott, ane Border of fleure de lises about his coatte of armes, sik as is on our royal banner, and alsau ane bunell of launecies above his helmet, with thir words, Beady, ye Beady, that he and all his aftercummings may bruike the samne as a pledge and takien of our guld will and kyrudnes for his true worthines; and thir our letters seen, yo nee was Falkie to doe. Given at Fella Muire, under our hand and privy casket, the xxvii day of July, m c and xxxii zeires. By the King's graces speciall ordinance."

"Jo. Arskine."

On the back of the charter is written, "Edin. 14 January, 1713. Registered, conform to the act of parliament made anent probative writs, per Mc'Kafe, pror. and produced by Alexander Bothwick, servant to Sir William Scott of Thirlestane. M. L. J."
Note 3 D.

An aged Knight, to danger stept,
With many a moss-trooper came on;
And sov'ren in a golden field,
The stars and crescent grace his shield,
Without the bend of Murielston.—P. 25.

The family of Harden are descended from a younger son of the Laird of Buccleuch, who flourished before the estate of Murielston was acquired by the marriage of one of those chieftains with the heiress, in 1296. Hence they bear the cognizance of the Scotts upon the field; whereas those of the Buccleuch are disposed upon a bend dexter, assumed in consequence of that marriage.—See Gladis wite of Whitaup's MSS., and Scott of Sobra's Pedigree, Newcastle, 1783.

Walter Scott of Harden, who flourished during the reign of Queen Mary, was a renowned Border freebooter, concerning whom tradition has preserved a variety of anecdotes, some of which have been published in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border; others in Leyden's Scenes of Infancy; and others, more lately, in The Mountain Bard, a collection of Border ballads by Mr. James Hogg. The bogle-born, said to have been used by this formidable leader, is preserved by his descendant, the present Mr. Scott of Harden. His castle was situated upon the very brink of a dark and precipitous dell, through which a scanty rivulet steals to meet the Borthwick. In the recess of this glen he is said to have kept his spoil, which served for the daily maintenance of his retainers, until the production of a pair of clean spurs, in a covered dish, announced to the hungry band that they must ride for a supply of provisions. He was married to Mary Scott, daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope, and called in song the flower of Yarrow. He possessed a very extensive estate, which was divided among his five sons. There are numerous descendants of this old marauding Baron. The following beautiful passage of Leyden's Scenes of Infancy is founded on a tradition respecting an infant captive, whom Walter of Harden carried off in a predatory incursion, and who is said to have become the author of some of our most beautiful pastoral songs:

"Where Borthna hoarse, that loads the meads with sand,
Rolls her red tide to Teviot's western strand,
Through slaty hills, whose sides are shag'd with thorn,
Where springs, in scutter'd tufts, the dark-green corn,
Towers wood-girl Harden, far above the vale,
And clouds of ravens o'er the torrents sail.
A hardy race, who never shrank from war,
The Scott, to rival realms a mighty lair,
Here fix'd his mountain home;—a wide domain,
And rich the soil, had purple heath been grain;
But what the niggard ground of wealth denied,
From fields more bless'd his fearless arm supplied.

"The waning harvest-moon shone cold and bright;
The warden's horn was heard at dead of night;
And as the mussy portals wide were flung,
With stamping hoofs the rocky pavement rung.
What fair, half veil'd, leans from her latticed hall,
Where red the waving gleams of torchlight fall?
The Yarrow's fairest flower, who, through the gloom,
Looks, wistful, for her lover's dancing plume.
Amid the piles of spoil, that stroke'd to the ground,
Her ear, all anxious, caught a wailing sound;
With trembling haste the youthful matron flew,
And from the hurried heaps an infant drew.

"Scared at the light, his little hands he flung
Around her neck, and to her bosom clung;
While beauteous Mary soothed, in accents mild,
His fluttering soul, and clasp'd her faster child.

Of milder mood the gentle captive grew,
Nor loved the scenes that scared his infant view;
In vales remote, from camps and castles far,
He shun'd the fearful shuddering joy of war;
Content the loves of simple swains to sing,
Or wake to fame the harp's heroic string.

"His are the strains, whose wandering echoes thrill
The shepherd, lingering on the twilight hill;
When evening brings the merry folding hours,
And sun-eyed daisies close their winking flowers.
He lived o'er Yarrow's Flower to shed the tear,
To strew the holy leaves o'er Harden's bier;
But none was found above the minstrel's tomb,
Emblem of peace, to bid the daisy bloom:
He, nameless as the race from which he sprang,
Saved other names, and left his own unsung."

Note 3 E.

Scots of Eldonale, a stately bard.—P. 25.

In this, and the following stanzas, some account is given of the mode in which the property in the valley of Esk was transferred from the Beattisons, its ancient possessors, to the name of Scott. It is needless to repeat the circumstances, which are given in the poem, literally as they have been preserved by tradition. Lord Maxwell, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, took upon himself the title of Earl of Morton. The descendants of Beattison of Woodkerrick, who aided the Earl to escape from his disobedient vassals, continued to hold these lands within the memory of man, and were the only Beattisons who had property in the dale. The old people give locality to the story, by showing the Galliard's-Haugh, the place where Buccleuch's men were concealed, &c.

Note 3 F.

Their gathering word was Bellenden.—P. 26.

Bellenden is situated near the head of Borthwick water, and being in the centre of the possessions of the Scotts, was frequently used as their place of rendezvous and gathering word.—Survey of Selkirkshire, in Macfarlane's MSS., Advocates' Library. Hence Satchells calls one part of his genealogical account of the families of that clan, his Bellenden.

Note 3 G.

The camp their home, their law the sword,
They knew no country, own'd no lord.—P. 27.

The mercenary adventurers, whom, in 1380, the Earl of Cambridge carried to the assistance of the King of Portugal against the Spaniards, mouthed for want of regular pay. At an assembly of their leaders, Sir John Solter, a natural son of Edward the Black Prince, thus addressed them: "I counsel, let us be all of one alliance, and of one accord, and let us among ourselves reye up the banner of St. George, and let us be friends to God, and enemies to all the world; for without we make onselfe to be feared, we get no thinge.'

"By my faith! quod Sir William Helman, ye saye right well, and so let us do.' They all agreed with one voyce, and so regarded among them who shulde be their capitayne. Then they advised in the case how they could nat have a better capitayne than Sir John Sollter. For they subde then have good keyser to do yvel, and they thought he was more metelyer thereto than any other. Then they raised up the penon of St. George, and cried, 'A Sollter! a Sollter! the valuart bastarde! frendes to God, and enemies to all the worlde?"—FROISSART, vol. i. ch. 393.

NOTE 3 H.

That he may suffer march-treasoni pain.—P. 28.

Several species of peculier, peculiar to the Border, constituted what was called march-treasure. Among others, was the crime of riding, or causing to ride, against the opposite country during the time of truce. Thus, in an indenture made at the water of Eske, beside Salom, on the 25th day of March, 1334, betwixt noble lords and mighty, Sirs Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, and Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, a truce is agreed upon until the 1st day of July; and it is expressly accorded, "Gif any stelis auithir on the ta part, or on the toothy, that he shall be hanteg or heoflit; and gif any company stelis any guiles within the treuces beforeseyd, aue of that company sail be hanteg or heoflit, and the remnant sail restore the gudys stolen in the dubble."—History of Westmoreland and Cumberland, Intro. p. xxxix.

NOTE 3 I.

Will cleanse him, by oath, of march-treasure stain.—P. 28.

In dubious cases, the innencesse of Border criminals was occasionally referred to their own oath. The form of excusing bills, or indictments, by Border-oath, ran thus: "You shall swear by heaven above you, hell beneath you, by your part of Paradise, by all that God made in six days and seven nights, and by God himself, you are what out sacke of art, part, way, witting, ridd, leaning, having, or recetting of any of the goods and cattles named in this bill. So help you God."—History of Cumberland, Intro. p. xxv.

NOTE 3 K.

Knighthood he took of Douglas' sword.—P. 28.

The dignity of knighthood, according to the original institution, had this peculiari, that it did not flow from the monarch, but could be conferred by one who himself possessed it, upon any squire who, after due probation, was found to merit the honor of chivalry. Latterly, this power was conferred to generals, who were wont to create knights bannerets after or before an engagement. Even so late as the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Essex highly offended his jealous sovereign by the indiscriminate exertion of this privilege. Among others, he knighted the witty Sir John Harrington, whose favor at court was by no means enhanced by his new honors. See the Nugae Antiquae, edited by Mr. Park. But probably the latest instance of knighthood, conferred by a subject, was in the case of Thomas Ker, knighted by the Earl of Huntly, after the defeat of the Earl of Argyll in the battle of Bredines. The fact is attested, both by a poetical and prose account of the engagement, contained in an ancient MS. in the Advocates' Library, and edited by Mr. Dalyell, in Godly Songs and Ballads, Edin. 1802.

NOTE 3 L.

When English blood swelt'd Anacreon's ford.—P. 28.

The battle of Anacreon Moor, or Penicleenke, was fought A. D. 1545. The English, commanded by Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun, were totally routed, and both their leaders slain in the action. The Scottish army was commanded by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, assisted by the Laird of Bucchini and Norman Lesley.

NOTE 3 M.

For who, in field or foray slack, Saw the blanche lion or fall back?—P. 29.

This was the cognizance of the noble house of Howard in all its branches. The crest, or bearing of a warrior, was often used as a non de guerre. Thus Richard III. acquired his well-known epithet, The Boar of York. In the violent satire on Cardinal Wolsey, written by Roy, commonly, but erroneously, imputed to Dr. Bull, the Duke of Buckingham is called the Beautiful Swan, and the Duke of Norfolk, or Earl of Surrey, the White Lion. As the book is extremely rare, and the whole passage relates to the emblematical interpretation of heraldry, it shall be here given at length.

"The Description of the Armes, "Of the proud Cardinal this is the sheld, Borne up betwixt two angels of Sathan; The six bloody axes in a bare feld, Sheweth the crueltie of the red man, Which hath devoured the Beautiful Swan, Mortal enemy unto the Whyte Lion, Carter of Yorke, the yle butcher's sonne, The six bulles heedes in a feld blacke, Betokeneth his stordy forsiousness, Wherefore, the godly lyght to put abacke, He bryngeth in his drylysh dardess; The bandag in the middle doth exresse The mastiff curre bred in Ypswich towne, Gnawynghe with his beth a kings crowne, The cloube signifieth playne his tirany, Covered over with a Cardinall's hatt, Wherein shall be fulfilled the prophecy, Arsyne up, Jacke, and put on thy salatt, For the tyne is come of bagge and walatt. The temporall chevalry thus thrown done, Wherefor, prest, take hede, and beware thy crowne." There were two copies of this very scarce satire in the library of the late John, Duke of Roxburghie. See an account of it also in Sir Egerton Brydges' curious miscellany, the Censora Literaria.

NOTE 3 N.

Let Musgrave meet fierce Deloraine In single fight.—P. 29.

It may easily be supposed that trial by single combat, so peculiar to the feudal system, was common on the Borders. In 1558, the well-known Kirkaldy of Grange fought a duel with Ralph Eyre, brother to the then Lord Eyre, in consequence of a dispute about a prisoner said to have been ill treated by the Lord Eyre. Pitcottes gives the following account of the affair:—"The Lord of Ivers his brother provoked William Kircaldy of Grange to fight with him, in singular combat, on horseback, with spears, who keeping the appoint ment, accompanied with Monsieur d'Ossel, Lieutenant to the French King, and the garrison of Haymouth, and Mr. Ivers, accompanied with the governor and garrison of Berwick, it was discharged, under the pain of treason, that any man should come near the champions within a flight-shot, except one man for either of them, to bear their spears, two trum pets, and two lords to be judges. When they were in readi ness, the trumpets sounded, the heralds cried, and the judges let them go. They then encountered very fiercely; but Grange struck his spear through his adversary's shoulder, and bare him off his horse, being sore wounded: But whether he died, or not, it is uncertain."—P. 292.

The following indenture will show at how late a period the trial by combat was resorted to on the Border, as a proof of guilt or innocence:—

"It is agreed between Thomas Musgrave and Lancelot Carleton, for the true trial of such controversies as are be twixt them, to have it openly tried by way of combat, before God and the face of the world, to try it in Canonyholme, before England and Scotland, upon Thursday in Easter-week, being the eighth day of April next ensuing, A.D. 1692, betwixt nine of the clock, and one of the same day, to fight on foot, to be armed with jack, steel cap, plaited sleeves, plaited breaches, plaited socks, two baslead swords, the blades to be one yard and half a quarter in length, two Scotch daggers, or darts, at their girdles, and either of them to provide armour and we apons for themselves, according to this indenture. Two gen tlemen to be appointed, on the field, to view both the parties, to see that they both be equal in arms and weapons, accord ing to this indenture; and being so viewed by the gentlemen, the gentlemen to ride to the rest of the company, and to leave them but two boys, viewed by the gentlemen, to be under sixteen years of age, to hold their horses. In testimony of this our agreement, we have both set our hands to this inden ture, of intent all matters shall be made so plain, as there shall be no question to stick upon that day. Which inden ture, as a witness, shall be delivered to two gentlemen. And for that it is convenient the world should be privy to every particular of the grounds of the quarrel, we have agreed to set it down in this indenture betwixt us, that, knowing the quarrel, their eyes may be witness of the trial.

THE GROUNDS OF THE QUARREL.

"1. Lancelot Carleton did charge Thomas Musgrave before the Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council, that Lancelot Carleton was told by a gentleman, one of her Majesty's sworn serv ants, that Thomas Musgrave had offered to deliver her Majesty's Castle of Bewcastle to the King of Scots; and to wit ness the same, Lancelot Carleton had a letter under the gentleman's own hand for his discharge.

"2. He chargeth him, that whereas her Majesty doth yearly bestow a great fee upon him, as captain of Bewcastle, to aid and defend her Majesty's subjects therein: Thomas Musgrave hath neglected his duty, for that her Majesty's Castle of Bew castle was by him made a den of thieves, and an harbour and receipt for murderers, felons, and all sorts of misdemeanors. The precedent was Quintin Whitehead and Runion Black burne.

"3. He chargeth him, that his office of Bewcastle is open for the Scotch to ride in and through, and small resistance made by him to the contrary.

"Thomas Musgrave doth deny all this charge; and saith, that he will prove that Lancelot Carleton doth falsely hyle him, and will prove the same by way of combat, according to this indenture. Lancelot Carleton hath entertained the challenge; and so, by God's permission, will prove it true as before, and hath set his hand to the same.

(Signed) "THOMAS MUSGRAVE.
"LANCELOT CARLETON."

---

Note 3 O.

The person here alluded to is one of our ancient Border minstrels, called Rattling Roaring Willie. This sombre quet was probably derived from his bullying disposition; being, it would seem, such a roaring boy, as is frequently mentioned in old plays. While drinking at Newmiln, upon Tievot, about five miles above Hawick, Willie chanced to quarrel with one of his own profession, who was usually distinguished by the odd name of Sweet Milk, from a place on Rude Water so called. They retired to a meadow on the opposite side of the Tievot, to decide the contest with their swords, and Sweet Milk was killed on the spot. A thorn-tree marks the scene of the murder, which is still called Sweet Milk Thorn. Willie was taken and executed at Jedburgh, bequeathing his name to the beautiful Scotch air, called "Rattling Roaring Willie." Ramsay, who set no value on traditional lore, published a few verses of this song in the Tea-Table Miscellany, carefully suppressing all which had any connection with the history of the author and origin of the pieces. In this case, however, honest Allan is in some degree justified, by the extreme worthlessness of the poetry. A verse or two may be taken, as illustrative of the history of Roaring Willie, alluded to in the text:—

"Now Willie's gone to Jeddart,
And he's for the rood-day; 3
But Stobs and young Falnash 2
They follow'd him a' the way;
They follow'd him a' the way,
They sought him up and down,
In the links of Ousenham water
They fand him sleeping sound.

"Stobs light aff his horse,
And never a word he spak,
Till he tied Willie's hands
Pu' fast behind his back;
Pu' fast behind his back,
And down beneath his knee,
And drink will be dear to Willie,
When sweet milk 3 gars him die.

"Ah was light on ye, Stobs!
An ill death met ye die;
Ye're the first and foremost man
That ever laid hands on me;
And took my marc me take;
Wae to you, Sir Gilbert Elliot!
Ye are my mortal fae!

---

1 The day of the Roos-fair at Jedburgh.
2 Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs, and Scott of Falnash.
3 A wretched pun on his antagonist's name.
"The lasses of Ouse nan water
Are rugging and riving their hair,
And a' for the sake of Willie,
His beauty was so fair:
His beauty was so fair,
And comely for to see,
And drink will be dear to Willie,
When sweet milk gars him die."

Note 3 P.

He knew each ordinance and clause
Of Black Lord Archibald's battle-towns,
In the old Douglas' day.—P. 29.

The title to the most ancient collection of Border regulations runs thus:—"Be it remembered, that on the 18th day of December, 1463, Earl William Douglas assembled the whole lords, freeholders, and eldest Borderers, that best knowledge had, at the college of Lincluden; and there he caused these lords and Borderers bodily to be sworn, the Holy Gospel touched, that they, justly and truly, after their cunning, should decreet, decree, deliver, and put in order and writing, the statutes, ordinances, and uses of marche, that were ordained in Black Archibald of Douglas's days, and Archibald his son's days, in time of warfare; and they came again to him adviselly with these statutes and ordinances, which were in time of warfare before. The said Earl William, seeing the statutes in writing decreed and delivered by the said lords and Borderers, thought them right speedful and profitable to the Borders; the which statutes, ordinances, and points of warfare, he took, and the whole lords and Borderers he caused bodily to be sworn, that they should maintain and supply him at their goodly power, to do the law upon those that should break the statutes underwritten. Also, the said Earl William, and lords, and eldest Borderers, made certain points to be treason in time of warfare to be used, which were no treason before his time, but to be treason in his time, and in all time coming."

Note 3 Q.

The Bloody Heart blazed in the van,
Announcing Douglas, dreaded name.—P. 30.

The chief of this potent race of heroes, about the date of the poem, was Archibald Douglas, seventh Earl of Angus, a man of great courage and activity. The Bloody Heart was the well-known cognizance of the House of Douglas, assumed from the time of good Lord James, to whose care Robert Bruce committed his heart, to be carried to the Holy Land.

Note 3 R.

And Swinton laid the lance in rest,
That tame'd of yore the sparkling crest
Of Clarence's Plantagenet.—P. 30.

At the battle of Beaugé, in France, Thomas, Duke of Clarence, brother to Henry V., was unhorsed by Sir John Swinton of Swinton, who distinguished him by a coronet set with precious stones, which he wore around his helmet. The family of Swinton is one of the most ancient in Scotland, and produced many celebrated warriors.¹

¹ See the Battle of Halidon Hill. Sir W. Scott was descended from Sir John Swinton.—Ed.

Note 3 S.

The Earls of Home, as descendants of the Dunbars, ancient Earls of March, carried a lion rampant, argent; but, as a difference, changed the color of the shield from gules to vert, in allusion to Greenlaw, their ancient possession. The slogan, or war-cry, of this powerful family was, "A Home! a Home!" It was anciently placed in an escot above the crest. The helmet is armed with a lion's head erased gules, with a cap of state gules, turned up ermine.

The Hepburns, a powerful family in East Lothian, were usually in close alliance with the Homes. The chief of this clan was Hepburn, Lord of Hailes; a family which terminated in the too famous Earl of Bothwell.

Note 3 T.

And some, with many a merry shout,
In riot, revelry, and rout,
Poured the foot-ball play.—P. 31.

The foot-ball was anciently a very favorite sport all through Scotland, but especially upon the Borders. Sir John Carmichael of Carmichael, Warden of the Middle Marches, was killed in 1600 by a band of the Armstrongs, returning from a foot-ball match. Sir Robert Carey, in his Memoirs, mentions a great meeting, appointed by the Scotch riders to be held at Kelso for the purpose of playing at foot-ball, but which terminated in an incursion upon England. At present, the foot-ball is often played by the inhabitants of adjacent parishes, or of the opposite banks of a stream. The victory is contested with the utmost fury, and very serious accidents have sometimes taken place in the struggle.

Note 3 U.

'Twas truce and war, such sudden change
Was not infrequent, nor held strange,
In the old Border-day.—P. 31.

Notwithstanding the constant wars upon the Borders, and the occasional cruelties which marked the mutual invades, the inhabitants on either side do not appear to have regarded each other with that violent and personal animosity which might have been expected. On the contrary, like the outposts of hostile armies, they often carried on something resembling friendly intercourse, even in the middle of hostilities; and it is evident, from various ordinances against trade and intermarriages, between English and Scottish Borderers, that the governments of both countries were jealous of their cherishing too intimate a connection. Froissart says of both nations, that "Englyshmen on the one party, and Scottes on the other party, are good men of warre; for when they meet, there is a harde fight without sparynge. There is no hoo [truce] between them, as long as spears, swords, axes, or daggeres, will endure, but lay on eche upon echer; and when they be well beaten, and that the one party hath obtained the victory, they then glorify so in theirde deces of armes, and are so hurtfull, that such as he taken shall be ransomed, or that they go out of the fleke; so that shortly eche of them is so content with other, that, at their departynge, curtesye they will say, God thank you."—Berners's Froissart, vol. ii. p. 153. The border meetings, of truce, which although places of merchandise and merriment, often witnessed the most bloody scenes, may serve to illustrate the description in the text. They are vividly portrayed in the old ballad of the Riel-daughair. [See Minstrelsy, vol. ii. p. 15.] Both parties came armed to a meeting of the wardenists, yet they intermixed fearlessly and peaceably with each other in mutual sports and familiar intercourse, until a casual fray arose—

"Then was there sought but bow and spear,
And every man pulled out a brand."

In the 29th stanza of this canto, there is an attempt to express some of the mixed feelings with which the Borderers on each side were led to regard their neighbors.

Note 3 V.

— on the darkening plain,

Load helo, wheop, or whistle ran,

As bands, their stragglers to regain,

Give the shell watchword of their clan.—P. 31.

Patten remarks, with bitter censure, the disorderly conduct of the English Borderers who attended the Protector Somerset's expedition against Scotland. "As we wear then a setting, and the tents a setting up, among all things els commendable in our hole journey, one thing seemed to me an intolerable disorder and abuse: that whereas always, both in all tunes of war, and in all camps of armies, quietness and stillness, without noise, is principally in the night, after the watch is set, observed, (I need not reason why,) our northern prikiers, the Borderers, not withstanding, with great enormity, as thougted me, and not unlike (to be playn) unto a mess of hounds howling in a hide way when he hath lost him; waited upon, sum hoopyng, sum whistling, and most with crying, A Berwyke, a Berwyke! A Fenwyke, a Fenwyke! A Bulmer, a Bulmer! or so otherwise as thyrr captains names wear, never lin'de these troublesome and dangerous noyses all the nighte longe. They said, they did it to find their captain and follows; but if the souldiers of our other countrys and shores had used the same manner, in that case we should have ofttimes had the state of our campo more like the outrage of a dissolute hunting, than the quiet of a well ordered army. It is a feat of war, in mine opinion, that might right well be loyt. I could rehearse causes (but yf I take it, they are better unspoken that uttered, unless the faut wear sure to be amended) that might show the more nives more peril to our armie, but in their one night's so doyney, than they show good service (as some say) in a hoole vyage."—Apud Dalzell's Fragments, p. 75.

Note 3 W.

To see how thou the chase couldst wind,

Cheer the dark blood-hound on his way,

And with the bugle rouse the fray.—P. 33.

The pursuit of Border marauders was followed by the injured party and his friends with blood-hounds and hounds-born, and was called the hot-tryst. He was entitled, if his dog could trace the scent, to follow the invaders into the opposite kingdom; a privilege which often occasioned bloodshed. In addition to what has been said of the blood-hound, I may add, that the breed was kept up by the Bucleuch family on their Border estates till within the 18th century. A person was alive in the memory of man, who remembered a blood-hound being kept at Eldinhope, in Ettrick Forest, for whose maintenance the tenant had an allowance of meal. At that time the sheep were always watched at night. Upon one occasion, when the duty had fallen on the narrator, then a lad, he became exhausted with fatigue, and fell asleep upon a bank, near sun-rising. Suddenly he was awakened by the tread of horses, and saw five men, well mounted and armed, ride briskly over the edge of the hill. They stopped and looked at the flock; but the day was too far broken to admit the chance of their carrying any of them off. One of them, in spite, leaped from his horse, and coming to the shepherd, seized him by the belt he wore round his waist; and, setting his foot upon his body, pulled it till it broke, and carried it away with him. They rode off at the gallop; and, the shepherd giving the alarm, the blood-hound was turned loose, and the people in the neighborhood alarmed. The marauders, however, escaped, notwithstanding a sharp pursuit. This circumstance serves to show how very long the license of the Borderers continued in some degree to manifest itself.

Note 3 X.

She wrought not by forbidden spell.—P. 36.

Popular belief, though contrary to the doctrines of the Church, made a favorable distinction between magicians and necromancers, or wizards; the former were supposed to command the evil spirits, and the latter to serve, or at least to be in league and compact with, those enemies of mankind. The arts of subjecting the demons were manifold; sometimes the fiends were actually swindled by the magicians, as in the case of the bargain betwixt one of their number and the poet Virgil. The classical reader will doubtless be curious to pursue this anecdote:

"Virgilius was at sole to Tolentum, where he stodydy gently, for he was of great understyndyngue. Upon a tyne, the secludors had lyence to go to play and sproute them in the fyldes, after the mane of the old tyne. And there was also Virgilius therbye, also walkyngyng among the bylles aile about. It fortunefth he spred a great hole in the syde of a great hyll, wherein he went so depe, that he cud not see no more lyght; and than he went a lytell farther tharinde, and than he saw some lyyght egayne, and than he went fourth streightyng, and within a lytell wyly after he harde a voyce that called 'Virgilius! Virgilius!' and looked abouthe, and he cold noo see no body. Than sayd he, (i.e. the voyce) 'Virgilius, see ye not the lyytll borde lyyng beyside you there marked with that word?' Than answered Virgilius, 'I se that borde well anough.' The voyce said, 'Doo awaye that borde, and lette me out there atte.' Than answered Virgilius to the voyce that was under the lytll borde, and sayd, 'Who art thou that callest me so?' Than answered the devyll, 'I am a devyll conjured out of the bodye of a certeyne man, and banysshed here till the day of judgymend, without that I be deluyeryng by the bandes of men. Thus, Virgilius, I pray the, deluyer me out of this payn, and I shall shewe unto the many bokes of negromancy, and how thou shalt come by it lyghtly, and know the praectye therein, that no man in the seynce of negromancye shall passe the. And moreover, I shall shewe and enforme the so, that thou shalt have alle thy desyre, whereby mytheinke it is a great gyfte for so lyltyl a dyong. For ye may also thus all your power frenyds helps, and make ryche your enemies.' Thorough that great promise was Virgilius temptted; he bafde the fynyd show the bokes to hym, that he might have and use them in his case, and he banyshed him. And than Virgilius pulled open a borde, and there was a lytell hole, and thererat wraung the devyll out like a yell, and cam and stode before Virgilius lyke a byggyn man; whereof Virgilius was astonisshed and maravedly greatyngyng thereof, that so great a man myght come out at so lyltyl a holde. Than sayd Virgilius, 'Shulde ye wel pass into the hole that ye cam out of?'—'Yea, I shall wel,' sayd the devyll.—'I holde the best pleas that I have, that ye shall not do it."—'Well,' sayd the devyll, 'thereto I consent.' And than the devyll wrangeth himself into the lytly hol hole auge; and as he was therein, Virgilius kyvered the hole augey with the borde close, and so was the devyll bekyled, and myght nat there come out auge, but abodyeth stille stily therein. Than called the devyll dредefullu to Virgilius, and said, 'What have ye done, Virgilius?'—Virgilius answered, 'Abyde there styll to your day appoynted;' and fro thens forth abodyeth he there. And so Virgilius because very connyng in the practice of the black science.'

This story may remind the reader of the Arabian tale of the Fisherman and the imprisoned Genie; and it is more than probable that many of the marvels narrated in the life of Virgil are of Oriental extraction. Among such I am disposed to reckon the following whimsical account of the foundation of Naples, containing a curious theory concerning the origin of the earthquakes with which it is afflicted. Virgil, who was a person of gallantry, had, it seems, carried off the daughter of a certain Soldier, and was anxious to secure his prize.

"Then he thought in his mynde how he myghte marry hyr, and thought in his mynde to founde in the middle of the see a fayer towne, with great landes belongyng to it; and so he did by his cunninge; and called it Naples. And the funda-cyon of it was of egges, and in that town of Naples he made a tower with hili corners, and in the toppe he set an apell upon an yron yardre, and no man coud pull away that apell without he brake it; and thorough that yren set he a bolte, and in that bolte set he a egge. And he henge the apell by the stakke upon a cheyne, and so hangeth it still. And when the egge styrreth, so shuble the towne of Napells quake; and when the egge brake, then shuble the towne sinke. Whan he had made an ende, he lette call it Napells." This appears to have been an article of current belief during the middle ages, as appears from the statutes of the order Du Saint Esprit an droit désir, instituted in 1372. A chapter of the knights is appointed to be held annually at the Castle of the Enchanted Egg, near the grotte of Virgil.—Montfaucon, vol. ii. p. 329.

---

Note 3 Y.

A merlin sat upon her vert,
Held by a length of silen twist.—P. 36.

A merlin, or sparrow-hawk, was actually carried by ladies of rank, as a falcon was, in time of peace, the constant attendant of a knight or baron. See Latham on Falconry.—Godscroft relates that when Mary of Lorraine was regent, she pressed the Earl of Angus to admit a royal garrison into his Castle of Tallanton. To this he returned no direct answer; but, as if apostrophizing a goss-hawk, which sat on his wrist, and which he was feeding during the Queen's speech, he explained, "The devil's in this greedy glebe, she will never be fell."—Thom's History of the House of Douglas, 1743, vol. ii. p. 131. Barclay complains of the common and indecent practice of bringing hawks and hounds into churches.

---

Note 3 Z.

And princeely peacock's gildet train,
And o'er the bound-head garnish'd brave.—P. 36.

The peacock, it is well known, was considered, during the times of chivalry, not merely as an exquisite delicacy, but as a dish of peculiar solemnity. After being roasted, it was again decorated with its plumage, and a sponge, dipped in lighted spirits of wine, was placed in its bill. When it was introduced on days of grand festival, it was the signal for the adventurous knights to take upon them vows to do some deed of chivalry, "before the peacock and the ladies."

The boar's head was also a usual dish of feudal splendor. In Scotland it was sometimes surrounded with little banners, displaying the colors and achievements of the baron at whose board it was served.—Pinkerton's History, vol. i. p. 452.

---

Note 4 A.

Swate, with his gownet, stout Hanthill.—P. 37.

The Rutherfords of Hanthill were an ancient race of Border Lairds, whose names occur in history, sometimes as defending the frontier against the English, sometimes as disturbing the peace of their own country. Dickon Draw-thewoold was son to the ancient warrior, called in tradition the Cock of Hanthill, remarkable for leading into battle nine sons, gallant warriors, all sons of the aged champion. Mr. Rutherford, late of New York, in a letter to the editor, soon after these songs were first published, quoted, when upwards of eighty years old, a ballad apparently the same with the Raid of the Ridsquare, but which apparently is lost, except the following lines:

"Bauld Rutherford he was fu' stout,
With all his nine sons him about,
He brought the lads of Jedburgh out,
And baubly fought that day."

---

Note 4 B.

— bit his glove.—P. 57.

To bite the thumb, or the glove, seems not to have been considered, upon the Border, as a gesture of contempt, though so used by Shakespeare, but as a pledge of mortal revenge. It is yet remembered that a young gentleman of Teviotdale, on the morning after a hard drinking-bout, observed that he had bitten his glove. He instantly demanded of his companion, with whom he had quarrelled. And, learning that he had had words with one of the party, insisted on instant satisfaction, asserting that, though he remembered nothing of the dispute, yet he was sure he never would have bit his glove unless he had received some unpardonable insult. He fell in the duel, which was fought near Selkirk, in 1721.

---

Note 4 C.

Since old Buckelouch the name did goin,
When in the cleuch the buck was ta'en.—P. 37.

A tradition preserved by Scott of Satchells, who published, in 1688, A True History of the Right Honorable Name of Scott, gives the following romantic origin of that name: Two brethren, natives of Galloway, having been banished from that country for a riot, or insurrection, came to Blantkiburn, in Ettrick Forest, where the keeper, whose name was Brydoun, received them joyfully, on account of their skill in winding the horn, and in the other mysteries of the chase. Kenneth MacAlpin, then King of Scotland, came soon after to hunt in the royal forest, and pursued a buck from Ettrick-henge to the glen now called Buckleuch, about two miles above the
The deer being earced in that place,
At his Majesty's demand,
Then John of Galloway ran apace,
And fetched water to his hand.
The King did wash into a dish,
And Galloway John he wot;
He said, 'Thy name now after this Shall ever be called John Scott.'

'The forest and the deer therein,
We commit to thy hand;
For thou shalt sure the ranger be,
If thou obey command;
And for the buck thou stoutly brought
To us up that steep hench,
Thy designation ever shall
Be John Scott in Buccleuch.'

"In Scotland no Buccleuch was then,
Before the buck in the clench was slain;
Night's men at first they did appear,
Because moon and stars to their arms they bear.
Their crest, supporters, and hunting-horn,
Show their beginning from hunting came;
Their name, and style, the book doth say,
John gained them both into one day."

WATT'S BELOIDEN.

The Buccleuch arms have been altered, and now allude less pointedly to this hunting, whether real or fabulous. The family now bear Or, upon a bend azure, a mallet betwixt two crescents of the field; in addition to which, they formerly bore in the field a hunting-horn. The supporters, now two ladies, were formerly a hound and a buck, or, according to the old terms, a hart of leak and a hart of greece. The family of Scott of Howplesley and Thirlstane long retained the bagle-horn; they also carried a bent bow and arrow in the sinister cantle, perhaps as a difference. It is said the motto was—

"Best riding by moonlight, in allusion to the crescents on the shield, and perhaps to the habits of those who bore it."

1 Froissart relates that a knight of the household of the Comte de Foix exhibited a similar feat of strength. The half-breast had waxed low, and wood was wanted to mend it. The knight went down to the court-yard, where stood an ass laden with fagots, seized on the animal and burden, and, carrying him up to the hall on his shoulders, tumbled him into the chimney with his heels uppermost; a humane pleasure, much applauded by the Court and all the spectators.

2 "Minions of the moon," as Falstaff would have said. The vocation pursued by our ancient Borderers may be justified on the authority of the most polished of the ancient nations: "For the Grecians in old time, and such barbarians as in the continent lived near unto the sea, or else inhabited the islands, after once they began to cross over one to another in ships, became thieves, and went abroad under the conduct of their more puissant men, both to enrich themselves, and to fetch in maintenance for the weak: and falling upon towns unfortified, or scatteringly inhabited, rifled them, and made this the best means of their living; being a matter at that time no where in disgrace, but rather carrying with it something of glory. This is manifest by some that dwell upon the continent, amongst whom, so it be performed nobly, it is still esteemed as an ornament. The same is also proved by some of the ancient poets, who introduced men questioning of such as sail by, on all coasts alike, whether they be thieves or not; as a thyng neyer scorned by such as were asked, nor upbraided by those that were desirous to know. They also robbed one another, within the main land; and much of Greece used that old custom, as the Locrians, the Acharnians, and those of the continent in that quarter, unto this day. Moreover, the fashion of wearing iron remaineth yet with the people of that continent, from their old trade of thieving."—HORNE'S THUCYDIDES, p. 4. Lond.

3 See various notes in the Minselay.
NOTE 4 F.

Who has not heard of Surrey's June? — P. 38.

The gallant and unfortunate Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, was unquestionably the most accomplished cavalier of his time; and his sonnets displayed beauties which would do honor to a more polished age. He was beheaded on Tower-hill in 1546; a victim to the mean jealousy of Henry VIII., who could not bear so brilliant a character near his throne.

The song of the supposed haed is founded on an incident said to have happened to the Earl in his travels. Cornelius Agrippa, the celebrated alchemist, showed him, in a looking-glass, the lovely Geraldine, to whose service he had devoted his pen and his sword. The vision represented her as indisposed, and reclining upon a couch, reading her lover's verses by the light of a waxen taper.

NOTE 4 G.

The St. Clairs are of Norman extraction, being descended from William de St. Clair, second son of Walderne, Comte de St. Clair, and Margaret, daughter to Richard, Duke of Normandy. He was called, for his fair deportment, the Secundy St. Clair; and, settling in Scotland during the reign of Malcolm Canmore, obtained large grants of land in Mid-Lothian. These domains were increased by the liberality of succeeding monarchs to the descendants of the family, and comprehended the baronies of Rosline, Pentland, Cowlend, Cardine, and several others. It is said a large addition was obtained from Robert Bruce, on the following occasion:— "The King, in following the chase upon Pentland-hills, had often started a 'white fawn deer,' which had always escaped from his hounds; and he asked the nobles, who were assembled around him, whether any of them had dogs which they thought might be more successful. No courrier would affirm that his hounds were fiercer than those of the King, until Sir William St. Clair of Rosline unceremoniously said, he would wager his head that his two favorite dogs, Help and Hold, would kill the deer before she could cross the March-burn. The King instantly caught at his unwary offer, and betted the forest of Pentland-moor against the life of Sir William St. Clair. All the hounds were tied up, except a few ratchets, or slow-hounds, to put up the deer; while Sir William St. Clair, posting himself in the best situation for slipping his dogs, prayed devoutly to Christ, the blessed Virgin, and St. Katherine. The deer was shortly after roused, and the hounds slipped; Sir William following on a gallant steed, to cheer his dogs. The hind, however, reached the middle of the brook; upon which the hunter threw himself from his horse in despair. At this critical moment, however, Hold stopped her in the brook; and Help, coming up, turned her back, and killed her on Sir William's side. The King descended from the hill, embraced Sir William, and bestowed on him the lands of Kirkton, Logan-house, Earneraig, &c., in fee fo restrie. Sir William, in acknowledgment of St. Katherine's intercession, built the castle of St. Katherine in the Hopes, the churchyard of which is still to be seen. The hill from which Robert Bruce beheld this memorable chase is still called the King's Hill; and the place where Sir William hunted is called the Knight's Field." — MS. History of the Family of St. Clair, by Richard Augustin Hay, Canon of St. Genevieve.

This adventurous huntsman married Elizabeth, daughter of Malice Spar, Earl of Orkney and Strathern, in whose right their son Henry was, in 1379, created Earl of Orkney, by Haco, King of Norway. This title was recognized by the Kings of Scotland, and remained with his successors until it was annexed to the crown, in 1471, by act of Parliament. In exchange for this earldom, the castle and domains of Ravenscraig, or Ravensheuch, were conferred on William Sinclair, Earl of Caithness.

NOTE 4 H.

The Castle of Kirkwall was built by the St. Clairs, while Earls of Orkney. It was dis mantled by the Earl of Caithness about 1615, having been garrisoned against the government by Robert Stewart, natural son to the Earl of Orkney. His ruins afforded a sad subject of contemplation to John, Master of St. Clair, who, flying from his native country, on account of his share in the insurrection 1715, made some stay at Kirkwall.

"I had occasion to entertain myself at Kirkwall with the melancholy prospect of the ruins of an old castle, the seat of the old Earls of Orkney, my ancestors; and of a more melancholy reflection, of so great and noble an estate as the Orkney and Shetland Isles being taken from one of them by James the Third, for fanueil, after his brother Alexander, Duke of Albany, had married a daughter of my family, and for protecting and defending the said Alexander against the King, who wished to kill him, as he had done his youngest brother, the Earl of Mar; and for which, after the forfeiture, he gratefully divorced my forfeited ancestor's sister; though I cannot persuade myself that he had any misalliance to plead against a family in whose veins the blood of Robert Bruce ran as fresh as in his own; for their title to the crown was by a daughter of David Bruce, son to Robert; and our alliance was by marrying a granddaughter of the same Robert Bruce, and daughter to the sister of the same David, out of the family of Douglas, which at that time did not much sullie the blood, more than my ancestor's having not long before had the honour of marrying a daughter of the King of Denmark's, who was named Florente, and has left in the town of Kirkwall a noble monument of the grandeur of the times, the finest church ever I saw entire in Scotland. I then had no small reason to think, in that unhappy state, on the many not inconsiderable services rendered since to the royal family, for these many years bygone, on all occasions, when they stood most in need of friends, which they have thought themselves very often obliged to acknowledge by letters yet extant, and if this couplet does him no great honor as a poet, the conclusion of the story does him still less credit. He set his foot on the dog, says the narrator, and killed him on the spot, saying, he would never again put his neck in such a risk. As Mr. Hay does not mention this circumstance, I hope it is only founded on the conchant posture of the hound on the monument.
in a style more like friends than souverains; our attachment to them, without any other thanks, having brought upon us considerable losses, and among others, that of our all in Cromwell's time; and left in that condition without the least relief except what we found in our own virtue. My father was the only man of the Scots nation who had courage enough to protest in Parliament against King William's title to the throne, which was lost, God knows how; and this at a time when the losses in the cause of the royal family, and their usual gratitude, had scarce left him bread to maintain a numerous family of eleven children, who had soon after sprung up on him, in spite of all which, he had honourably persisted in his principle. I say, these things considered, and after being treated as I was, and in that unfortunat state, when objects appear to men in their true light, as at the hour of death, could I be blamed for making some bitter reflections to myself, and laughing at the extravagance and unaccountable humour of men, and the singularities of my own case (an exile for the cause of the Stuart family), when I ought to have known, that the greatest crime I, or my family, could have committed, was persevering, to my own destruction, in serving the royal family faithfully, though obstinately, after so great a share of depression, and after they had been pleased to doom me and my family to starve."—MS. Memoirs of John, Master of St. Clair.

Note 4 I.

Of that Sea-Snake, tremendous crou’ld,
Whose monstrous circle girds the world.—P. 39.

The jormungandr, or Snake of the Ocean, whose folds surround the earth, is one of the wildest fictions of the Edda. It was very nearly caught by the god Thor, who went to fish for it with a hook baited with a bull’s head. In the battle betwixt the evil demons and the divinities of Odin, which is to precede the Ragnaroc, or Twilight of the Gods, this Snake is to act a conspicuous part.

Note 4 K.

Of those dread Maidis, whose hideous yell.—P. 39.

These were the Vategrir, or Selectors of the Slain, despatched by Odin from Valhalla, to choose those who were to die, and to distribute the contest. They were well known to the English reader as Grey’s Fatal Sisters.

Note 4 L.

Of Chiefs, who, guided through the gloom
By the pale death-lights of the tomb,
Barefoot’d the graves of warriors old,
Their falchions screech’d from corpses’ hold.—P. 39.

"The northern warriors were usually entombed with their arms, and their other treasures. Thus, Angantyr, before commencing the duel in which he was slain, stipulated that, if he fell, his sword Tyrting should be buried with him. His daughter, Her vor, afterwards took it from his tomb. The dialogue which passed betwixt her and Angantyr’s spirit on this occasion has been often translated. The whole history may be found in the Hervarar-Saga. Indeed, the ghosts of the northern warriors were not wont tamely to suffer their tombs to be plundered; and hence the mortal heroes had an additional temptation to attempt such adventures; for they held nothing more worthy of their valor than to encounter supernatural beings."—BARTHOLOMEUS, De causis contemptu a Danis mortis, lib. i. cap. 2, 9, 10, 13.

Note 4 M.

Castle Raveneshow.—P. 39.

A large and strong castle, now ruinous, situated betwixt Kirkkahly and Dysart, on a steep crag, washed by the Frith of Forth. It was conferred on Sir William St. Clair as a slight compensation for the earldom of Orkney, by a charter of King James III. dated in 1471, and is now the property of Sir James St. Clair Erskine (now Earl of Rosslyn), representative of the family. It was long a principal residence of the Barons of Roslin.

Note 4 N.

Seem’d all on fire within, around,
Deep anxiety and altar’s pale;
Shone every pillar foliage-bound,
And glistern’d all the dead men’s mail.—P. 40.

The beautiful chapel of Roslin is still in tolerable preservation. It was founded in 1446, by William St. Clair, Prince of Orkney, Duke of Oldenburgh, Earl of Caithness and Strathern, Lord St. Clair, Lord Niddesdale, Lord Admiral of the Scottish Seas, Lord Chief Justice of Scotland, Lord Warden of the three Marches, Baron of Roslin, Pentland, Pentlandmoo, &c., Knight of the Cockle, and of the Garter (as is affirmed), High Chancellor, Chamberlain, and Lieutenant of Scotland. This hefty person, whose titles, says Godseef, might weary a Spaniard, built the castle of Roslin, where he resided in princely splendor, and founded the chapel, which is in the most rich and florid style of Gothic architecture. Among the profuse carving on the pillars and buttresses, the rose is frequently introduced, in allusion to the name, with which, however, the flower has no connection; the etymology being Rosslinthe, the promontory of the linn, or water-fall. The chapel is said to appear on fire previous to the death of any of his descendants. This superstition, noticed by Slezer, in his Theatro Scotiae, and alluded to in the text, is probably of Norwegian derivation, and may have been imported by the Earls of Orkney into their Loshian dominions. The tomb-fires of the north are mentioned in most of the Sagas.

The Barons of Roslin were buried in a vault beneath the chapel floor. The manner of their interment is thus described by Father Hay, in the Ms. history already quoted:—

"Sir William Sinclair, the father, was a low man. He kept a miller’s daughter, with whom, it is alleged, he went to Ireland; yet I think the cause of his retreat was rather occasioned by the Presbyterians, who vexed him sadly, because of his religion being Roman Catholic. His son, Sir William, died during the troubles, and was interred in the chapel of Roslin the very same day that the battle of Dunbar was fought. When my good-father was buried, his (i. e. Sir William’s) corpse seemed to be entire at the opening of the cave; but when they came to touch his body, it fell into dust. He was laying in his armor, with a red velvet cap on his head, on a flat stone; nothing was spilled except a piece of the white furring that went round the cap, and answered to the hinder part of the head. All his predecessors were buried after the same manner, in their armor: late Rosline, my good-father, was the first that was buried in a coffin, against the sentiments of King James the Seventh, who was then in Scotland, and..."
several other persons well versed in antiquity, to whom my mother would not hearken, thinking it beggarly to be buried after that manner. The great expenses she was at in burying her husband, occasioned the sumptuary acts which were made in the following parliament."

---

Note 4 O.

For he was speechless, ghastly, wan,
Like him of whom the story ran,
Who spoke the spectre-hound to Man.—P. 41.

The ancient castle of Peel-town, in the Isle of Man, is surrounded by four churches, now ruinous. Through one of these chapels there was formerly a passage from the guard-room of the garrison. This was closed, it is said, upon the following occasion:—"They say, that an apparition, called, in the Manxish language, the Mauhe Dog, in the shape of a large black spaniel, with curled shaggy hair, was used to haunt Peel-castle; and has been frequently seen in every room, but particularly in the guard-chamber, where, as soon as candles were lighted, it came and lay down before the fire, in presence of all the soldiers, who, at length, by being so much accustomed to the sight of it, lost great part of the terror they were seized with at its first appearance. They still, however, retained a certain awe, as believing it was an evil spirit, which only waited permission to do them hurt; and, for that reason, forbore swearing and all profane discourse, while in its company. But though they endured the shock of such a guest when altogether in a body, none cared to be left alone with it. It being the custom, therefore, for one of the soldiers to lock the gates of the castle at a certain hour, and carry the keys to the captain, to whose apartment, as I said before, the way led through the church, they agreed among themselves, that whoever was to succeed the ensuing night his fellow in this errand, should accompany him that went first, and by this means no man would be exposed singly to the danger; for I forgot to mention, that the Mauhe Dog was always seen to come out from that passage at the close of the day, and return to it again as soon as the morning dawned; which made them look on this place as its peculiar residence.

"One night a fellow being drunk, and by the strength of his liquor rendered more daring than ordinarily, laughed at the simplicity of his companions, and, though it was not his turn to go with the keys, would needs take that office upon him, to testify his courage. All the soldiers endeavored to dissuade him; but the more they said, the more resolute he seemed, and swore that he desired nothing more than that the Mauhe Dog would follow him, as it had done the others; for he would try if it were dog or devil. After having talked in a very reprobate manner for some time, he snatched up the keys, and went out of the guard-room. In some time after his departure, a great noise was heard, but nobody had the boldness to see what occasioned it, till the adventurer returning, they demanded the knowledge of him; but as loud and noisy as he had been at leaving them, he was now become sober and silent enough; for he was never heard to speak more; and though all the time he lived, which was three days, he was entertained by all who came near him, either to speak, or, if he could not do that, to make some signs, by which they might understand what had happened to him, yet nothing intelligible could be got from him, only that, by the distortion of his limbs and features, it might be guessed that he died in agonies more than is common in a natural death.

"The Mauhe Dog was, however, never after seen in the castle, nor would any one attempt to go through that passage; for which reason it was closed up, and another way made. This accident happened about three score years since; and I heard it attested by several, but especially by an old soldier, who assured me he had seen it oftener than he had their hairs on his head."—Waldron's Description of the Isle of Man, p. 107.

---

Note 4 P.

--- St. Bride of Douglas.—P. 41.

This was a favorite saint of the house of Douglas, and of the Earl of Angus in particular, as we learn from the following passage:—"The Queen-regent had proposed to raise a rival noble to the ducal dignity; and discoursing of her purpose with Angus, he answered, 'Why not, madam? we are happy that have such a princess, that can know and will acknowledge men's services, and is willing to recompense it; but, by the might of God,' (this was his oath when he was serious and in anger; at other times, it was by St. Bryde of Douglas,) 'if he be a Duke, I will be a Drake!'—So she desisted from prosecuting of that purpose."—Godscoft, vol. ii. p. 131.
Alas! that Scottish maid should sing
The combat where her lover fell!
That Scottish bard should wake the string,
The triumph of our foes to tell!

LEYDEN.

Notice to Edition 1833.

Some alterations in the text of the Introduction to Marmion, and of the Poem itself, as well as various additions to the Author's Notes, will be observed in this Edition. We have followed Sir Walter Scott's interleaved copy, as finally revised by him in the summer of 1831.

The preservation of the original MS. of the Poem has enriched this volume with numerous various readings, which will be found curious and interesting.

Introduction to Edition 1830.

What I have to say respecting this Poem may be briefly told. In the Introduction to the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," I have mentioned the circumstances, so far as my literary life is concerned, which induced me to resign the active pursuit of an honorable profession, for the more precarious resources of literature. My appointment to the Sheriffdom of Selkirk called for a change of residence. I left, therefore, the pleasant cottage I had upon the side of the Esk, for the "pleasanter banks of the Tweed," in order to comply with the law, which requires that the Sheriff shall be resident, at least during a certain number of months, within his jurisdiction. We found a delightful retirement, by my becoming the tenant of my intimate friend and cousin-german, Colonel Russell, in his mansion of Ashiestiel, which was unoccupied, during his absence on military service in India. The house was adequate to our accommodation, and the exercise of a limited hospitality. The situation is uncommonly beautiful, by the side of a fine river, whose streams are there very favorable for angling, surrounded by the remains of natural woods, and by hills abounding in game. In point of society, according to the heartfelt phrase of Scripture, we dwelt "amongst our own people," and as the distance from the metropolis was only thirty miles, we were not out of reach of our Edinburgh friends, in which city we spent the terms of the summer and winter Sessions of the Court, that is, five or six months in the year.

An important circumstance had, about the same time, taken place in my life. Hopes had been held out to me from an influential quarter, of a nature to relieve me from the anxiety which I must have otherwise felt, as one upon the precarious tenure of whose own life rested the principal prospects of his family, and especially as one who had necessarily some dependence upon the favor of the public, which is proverbially capricious; though it is but justice to add that, in my own case, I have not found it so. Mr. Pitt had expressed a wish to my personal friend, the Right Honorable William Dundas, now Lord Clerk Register of Scotland, that some fitting opportunity should be taken to be of service to me; and as my views and wishes pointed to a future rather than an immediate provision, an opportunity of accomplishing this was soon found. One of the Principal Clerks of Session, as they are called (official persons who occupy an important and responsible situation, and enjoy a considerable income), who had served upwards of thirty years, felt himself, from age and the infirmity of deafness with which it was accompanied, desires of retiring from his official situation. As the law then stood, such official persons were entitled to bargain with their successors, either for a sum of money, which was usually a considerable one, or for an interest in the emoluments of the office during their life. My predecessor, whose services had been unusually meritorious, stipulated for the emoluments of his office during his life, while I should enjoy the survivorship, on the condition that I discharged the duties of the office in the meantime. Mr. Pitt, however, having died in the interval, his administration was dissolved, and was succeeded by that known by the name of the Fox and Grenville Ministry. My affair was so far completed, that my commission lay in the office subscribed by his Majesty; but, from hurry or mistake, the interest of my predecessor was not expressed in it, as had been usual in such cases. Although, therefore, it only required payment of the fees, I could not in honor take out the commission in the present state, since, in the event of my dying before him, the gentleman whom I succeeded must have lost the vested interest which he had stipulated to retain. I had the honor of an interview with Earl Spencer on the subject, and he, in the most handsome manner, gave directions that the commission should issue as originally intended; adding that, the matter having received the royal assent, he regarded only as a claim of justice what he would have willingly done as an act of favor. I never saw Mr. Fox on this or on any other occasion, and never made any application to him, conceiving that in doing so I might have been supposed to express political opinions contrary to those which I had always professed. In his private capacity, there is no man to whom I would have been more proud to owe an obligation, had I been so distinguished.

1 Published in quarto, February, 1808.

By this arrangement I obtained the survivorship of an office, the emoluments of which were fully adequate to my wishes; and as the law respecting the mode of providing for superannuated officers was, about five or six years after, altered from that which admitted the arrangement of assistant and successor, my colleague very handsomely took the opportunity of the alteration, to accept of the retiring annuity provided in such cases, and admitted me to the full benefit of the office.

But although the certainty of succeeding to a considerable income, at the time I obtained it, seemed to assure me of a quiet harbor in my old age, I did not escape my share of inconvenience from the contrary tides and currents by which we are so often encountered in our journey through life. Indeed, the publication of my next poetical attempt was prematurely accelerated, from one of those unpleasant accidents which can neither be foreseen nor avoided.

I had formed the prudent resolution to endeavor to bestow a little more labor than I had yet done on my productions, and to be in no hurry again to announce myself as a candidate for literary fame. Accordingly, particular passages of a poem, which was finally called "Marmion," were labored with a good deal of care, by one by whom much care was seldom bestowed. Whether the work was worth the labor or not, I am no competent judge; but I may be permitted to say, that the period of its composition was a very happy one, in my life; so much so, that I remember with pleasure, at this moment, some of the spots in which particular passages were composed. It is probably owing to this that the Introductions to the several Cantos assumed the form of familiar epistles to my intimate friends, in which I alluded, perhaps more than was necessary or graceful, to my domestic occupations and amusements—a loquacity which may be excused by those who remember that I was still young, light-headed, and happy, and that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

The misfortunes of a near relation and friend, which happened at this time, led me to alter my prudent determination, which had been, to use great precaution in sending this poem into the world; and made it convenient at least, if not absolutely necessary, to hasten its publication. The publishers of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," emboldened by the success of that poem, willingly offered a thousand pounds for "Marmion." The transaction, being no secret, afforded Lord Byron, who was then at general war with all who blacked paper, an apology for including me in his satire entitled "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers." I never could conceive how an arrangement between an author and his publishers, if satisfactory to the persons concerned, could afford matter of censure to any third party. I had taken no un-

1 See Life, vol. iii. p. 4.
2 "Next view in state, proud prancing on his roan, The golden-crested haughty Marmion, Now forging scorns, now foremost in the fight, Not quite a felon, yet but half a knight, The gibbet or the field prepared to grace; A mighty mixture of the great and base, And think'st thou, Scott! by vain conceit perchance, On public taste to foist thy stale romance, Though Murray with his Miller may combine To yield thy muse just half-a-crown per line? No! when the sons of song descend to trade, Their bays are dear, their former haunts fade, Let such forego the poet's sacred name, Who rack their brains for lucre, not for fame; Still for stern Marmion may they toil in vain, And sadly gaze on gold they cannot gain!"

Such be their need, such still the just reward Of prostituted muse and bireling bard! For this we spurn Apollo's vernal son, And bid a long 'Good-night to Marmion.'"

On first reading this satire, 1809, Scott says: "It is funny enough to see a whelp of a young Lord Byron abusing me, of whose circumstances he knows nothing, for endeavoring to scratch out a living with my pen. God help the bear, if, having little else to eat, he must not even suck his own paws. I can assure the noble imp of fame it is not my fault that I was not born to a park and £5000 a year, as it is not his lordship's merit, although it may be his great good fortune, that he was not born to live by his literary talents or success."

Life, vol. iii. p. 193.—See also Correspondence with Lord Byron, Ibid. pp. 393, 396.
sual or ungenerous means of enhancing the value of my merchandise—I had never haggled a moment about the bargain, but accepted at once what I considered the handsomest offer of my publishers. These gentlemen, at least, were not of opinion that they had been taken advantage of in the transaction, which indeed was one of their own framing; on the contrary, the sale of the Poem was so far beyond their expectation as to induce them to supply the Author's cellars with what is always an acceptable present to a young Scottish housekeeper, namely, a hogshead of excellent claret.

The Poem was finished in too much haste to allow me an opportunity of softening down, if not removing, some of its most prominent defects. The nature of Marmion's guilt, although similar instances were found, and might be quoted as existing, in feudal times, was nevertheless not sufficiently peculiar to be indicative of the character of the period, forgery being the crime of a commercial rather than of a proud and warlike age. This gross defect ought to have been remedied or palliated. Yet I suffered the tree to lie as it had fallen. I remember my friend, Dr. Leyden, then in the East, wrote me a furious remonstrance on the subject. I have, nevertheless, always been of opinion that corrections, however in themselves judicious, have a bad effect—after publication. An author is never so decidedly condemned as on his own confession, and may long find apologists and partisans, until he gives up his own cause. I was not, therefore, inclined to afford matter for censure out of my own admissions; and, by good fortune, the novelty of the subject, and, if I may say so, some force and vivacity of description, were allowed to atone for many imperfections. Thus the second experiment on the public patience, generally the most perilous,—for the public are then most apt to judge with rigor what in the first instance they had received, perhaps, with imprudent generosity,—was in my case decidedly successful. I had the good fortune to pass this ordeal favorably, and the return of sales before me makes the copies amount to thirty-six thousand printed between 1808 and 1825, besides a considerable sale since that period. I shall here pause upon the subject of Marmion, and, in a few prefatory words to "The Lady of the Lake," the last poem of mine which obtained eminent success, I will continue the task which I have imposed on myself respecting the origin of my productions.

Abbotsford, April, 1830.

1 Marmion was first printed in a splendid quarto, price one guinea and a half. The 2000 copies of this edition were all disposed of in less than a month, when a second of 3000 copies, in 8vo, was sent to press. There followed a third and a fourth edition, each of 3000, in 1809; a fifth of 2000, early in 1810; and a sixth of 3000, in two volumes, crown 8vo, with twelve designs by Singleton, before the end of that year; a seventh of 4000, and an eighth of 5000 copies 8vo, in 1811; a ninth of 3000 in 1815; a tenth of 500, in 1820; an eleventh of 500, and a twelfth of 2000 copies, in folio, both in 1825. The legitimate sale in this country, therefore, down to the time of its being included in the first collective edition of his poetical works, amounted to 31,000; and the aggregate of that sale, down to the period at which I am writing (May, 1836), may be stated at 50,000 copies. I presume it is right for me to facilitate the task of future historians of our literature by preserving these details as often as I can. Such particulars respecting many of the great works even of the last century are already sought for with vain regret; and I anticipate no day when the student of English civilization will pass without curiosity the contemporary reception of the Tale of Flobben Field."—Lockhart. Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 66

Marmion.

TO THE

RIGHT HONORABLE

HENRY, LORD MONTAGU,

&c., &c., &c.,

THIS ROMANCE IS INSCRIBED BY

THE AUTHOR.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION.

It is hardly to be expected that an Author whom the Public have honored with some degree of applause should not be again a trespasser on their kindness. Yet the Author of MARMION must be supposed to feel some anxiety concerning its success, since he is sensible that he hazards, by this second intrusion, any reputation which his first Poem may have procured him. The present story turns upon the private adventures of a fictitious character; but is called a Tale of Flodden Field, because the hero's fate is connected with that memorable defeat, and the causes which led to it. The design of the Author was, if possible, to apprise his readers, at the outset, of the date of his Story, and to prepare them for the manner of the Age in which it is laid. Any Historical Narrative, for more an attempt at Epic composition, exceeded his plan of a Romantic Tale; yet he may be permitted to hope, from the popularity of The Lay of the Last Minstrel, that an attempt to paint the manners of the feudal times, upon a broader scale and in the course of a more interesting story, will not be unacceptable to the Public.

The Poem opens about the commencement of August, and concludes with the defeat of Flodden, 9th September, 1513.

ASHIESTIEL, 1808.

Marmion.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FIRST.

TO

WILLIAM STEWART ROSE, ESQ.

Ashiestiel, Etrick Forest.

November's sky is chill and drear,
November's leaf is red and sear:
Late, gazing down the steepy linn,
That hems our little garden in,
Low in its dark and narrow linn,
You scarce the rivulet might ken,
So thick the tangled greenwood grew,
So feeble trill'd the streamlet through:
Now murmuring hoarse, and frequent seen
Through bush and brier, no longer green,
An angry brook, it sweeps the glade,
Brawls over rock and wild cascade,
And, foaming brown with doubled speed,
Hurries its waters to the Tweed.

1 Lord Montagu was the second son of Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, by the only daughter of John, last Duke of Montagu.
2 For the origin and progress of Scott's acquaintance with Mr. Rose, see Life, vols. ii. iii. iv. vi. Part of Marmion was composed at Mr. Rose's seat in the New Forest, Ibid. vol. iii. p. 10.
3 MS.: “No longer now in glowing red
The Eiterrick-forest hills are clad.”
My imps, though hardly, bold, and wild,
As best befits the mountain child,
Feel the sad influence of the hour,
And wail the daisy's vanished flower;
Their summer gambols tell, and mourn,
And anxious ask,—Will spring return,
And birds and lambs again be gay,
And blossoms clothe the hawthorn spray?

Yes, prattlers, yes. The daisy's flower
Again shall paint your summer bower;
Again the hawthorn shall supply
The garlands you delight to tie;
The lambs upon the lea shall bound,
The wild birds carol to the round,
And while you frolic light as they,
Too short shall seem the summer day.

To mute and to material things
New life revolving summer brings;
The genial call dead Nature hears,
And in her glory reappears.
But oh! my country's wintry state
What second spring shall renovate?
What powerful call shall bid arise
The buried warlike and the wise;
The mind that thought for Britain's weal,
The hand that grasp'd the victor steel?
The vernal sun new life bestows
Even on the meanest flower that blows;
But vainly, vainly may he shine,
Where glory weeps o'er Nelson's shrine;
And vainly pierce the solemn gloom
That shrouds, O Pitt, thy hallowed tomb!

Deep graved in every British heart,
Oh never let those names depart.
Say to your sons,—Lo, here his grave,
Who victor died on Gadite wave;
To him, as to the burning levin,
Short, bright, resistless course was given.
Where'er his country's foes were found,
Was heard the fated thunder's sound,
Till burst the bolt on yonder shore,
Roll'd, blazed, destroy'd—and was no more.

Nor mourn ye less his perish'd worth,
Who bade the conqueror go forth,
And launch'd that thunderbolt of war
On Egypt, Hafnia, Trafalgar;
Who, born to guide such high emprise,
For Britain's weal was early wise;
Alas! to whom the Almighty gave,
For Britain's sins, an early grave!
His worth, who, in his mightiest hour,
A bauble held the pride of power,
Spurn'd at the sordid lust of pelf,
And served his Albion for herself;
Who, when the frantic crowd amain
Strain'd at subject's bursting rein,
O'er their wild mood full conquest gain'd,
The pride, he would not crush, restrain'd,
Show'd their fierce zeal a worthier cause,
And brought the freeman's arm to aid the freeman's laws.

Hadst thou but lived, though stripp'd of power,
A watchman on the lonely tower,
Thy thrilling trumpet had roused the land,
When fraud or danger were at hand;
By thee, as by the beacon-light,
Our pilots had kept course aright;
As some proud column, though alone,
Thy strength had prop'd thy tottering throne:
Now is the stately column broke,
The beacon-light is quench'd in smoke,
The trumpet's silver sound is still,
The warden silent on the hill!

Oh think, how to his latest day,
When Death, just hovering, claim'd his prey,
With Pulinure's unalter'd mood,
Firm at his dangerous post he stood;
Each call for needful rest repell'd,
With dying hand the rudder held.

---

1 "The 'chance and change' of nature,—the vicissitudes which are observable in the moral as well as the physical part of the creation,—have given occasion to more exquisite poetry than any other general subject. The author had before made ample use of the sentiments suggested by these topics; yet he is not satisfied, but begins again with the same in his first introduction. The lines are certainly pleasing; but they fail, in our estimation, far below that beautiful simile of the Tweed which he has introduced into his former poem. The Ai, ai, tais malaxas of Moschus is, however, worked up again to some advantage in the following passage:—'To mute; &c.'"

2 MS.: "What call awakens from the dead
The hero's heart, the patriot's head?"

3 MS.: "Deep in each British bosom wrote,
Oh never be those names forgot!"

4 Nelson.

5 Copenhagen.

6 MS.: "Tugg'd at subject's cracking rein."

7 MS.: "Show'd their bold zeal a worthier cause."

8 This paragraph was interpolated on the blank page of the MS. We insert the lines as they appear there:—
"Oh, had he lived, though stripp'd of power,
Like a lone watchman on the tower,
His thrilling trumpet through the land
Had warn'd when foemen were at hand.
As by some beacon's lonely light,
{By thee our course had steer'd aright;}
{Our steady course had steer'd aright;}
{Our pilots kept their course aright;}
His single mind, unbent by fate,
Had prop'd his country's tottering weight:
As some tall column left alone,
{Had prop'd our tottering state and throne,}
{His strength had prop'd our tottering throne,}
The beacon light is quench'd in smoke,
The warden fallen, the column broke."

9 MS.: "Yet think how to his latest day."
Till, in his fall, with fateful sway,
The steerage of the realm gave way!
Then, while on Britain's thousand plains
One unpolluted church remains,
Whose peaceful bells ne'er sent around
The bloody tocsin's maddening sound,
But still, upon the hallowed day, ¹
Convoked the swains to praise and pray; While faith and civil peace are dear,
Grace this cold marble with a tear,—
He who preserved them, Pitt, lies here!

Nor yet suppress the generous sigh,
Because his rival slumbers nigh;
Nor be thy requiescat dumb,
Lest it be said o'er Fox's tomb. ²
For talents mourn, untimely lost
When best employ'd, and wanted most;
Mourn genius high and lore profound,
And wit that loved to play, not wound;
And all the reasoning powers divine,
To penetrate, resolve, combine;
And feelings keen, and fancy's glow,—
They sleep with him who sleeps below:
And, if thou mourn'st they could not save
From error him who owns this grave,
Be every harsher thought suppress'd,
And sacred be the last long rest.
Here, where the end of earthly things
Lays heroes, patriots, bards, and kings;
Where stiff the hand, and still the tongue,
Of those who fought, and spoke, and sung;

Here, where the fretted aisles prolong
The distant notes of holy song,
As if some angel spoke a gen,
"All peace on earth, good-will to men;"

If ever from an English heart,
Oh, here let prejudice depart,
And, partial feeling cast aside,³
Record, that Fox a Briton died!
When Europe crouched to France's yoke,
And Austria bent, and Prussia broke,
And the firm Russian's purpose brave
Was barter'd by a timorous slave,
Even then dishonor's peace he spurn'd,
The suffled olive-branch return'd,
Stood for his country's glory fast,
And nail'd her colors to the mast!
Heaven, to reward his firmness, gave
A portion in this honor'd grave,
And ne'er held marble in its trust
Of two such wondrous men the dust.⁴

With more than mortal powers endow'd,
How high they soar'd above the crowd!
Theirs was no common party race;⁵
Jostling by dark intrigue for place;
Like fabled gods, their mighty war
Shook realms and nations in its jar;
Beneath each banner proud to stand,
Look'd up the noblest of the land,
Till through the British world were known
The names of Pitt and Fox alone.
Spells of such force no wizard grave
E'er framed in dark Thessalian cave,
Though his could drain the ocean dry,
And force the planets from the sky.⁶
These spells are spent, and, spent with these,
The wine of life is on the lees,
Genius, and taste, and talent gone,
For ever tomb'd beneath the stone,
Where—taming thought to human pride!—
The mighty chiefs sleep side by side.⁷

¹ MS.; "But still upon the holy day."
² In place of this couplet, and the ten lines which follow it, the original MS. of Marmion has only the following:—
"If genius high and judgment sound,
And wit that loved to play, not wound,
And all the reasoning powers divine,
To penetrate, resolve, combine,
Could save one mortal of the herd
From error—Fox had never err'd."

³ While Scott was correcting a second proof of the passage where Pitt and Fox are mentioned together, at Stanmore Priory, in April, 1807, Lord Abercorn suggested that the compliment to the Whig statesman ought to be still further heightened, and several lines—
"For talents mourn, untimely lost
When best employ'd, and waver'd most,' &c.—" were added accordingly. I have heard, indeed, that they came from the Marquis's own pen. Ballantyne, however, from some inadvertence, had put the sheet to press before the revise, as it is called, arrived in Edinburgh, and some few copies got abroad in which the additional couplets were omitted. A London journal (the Morning Chronicle) was stupid and malignant enough to intiminate that the author had his presentation copies struck off with or without them, according as they were for Whig or Tory hands. I mention the circumstance now only because I see by a letter of Heber's that Scott had thought it worth his while to contradict the absurd charge in the newspapers of the day."—Lockhart.

⁴ Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 61.
⁵ MS.; "And party passion doff'd aside."
⁶ "The first epistolary effusion, containing a threnody on Nelson, Pitt, and Fox, exhibits a remarkable failure. We are unwilling to quarrel with a poet on the score of politics; but the manner in which he has chosen to praise the last of these great men is more likely, we conceive, to give offence to his admirers than the most direct censure. The only deed for which he is praised is for having broken off the negotiation for peace; and for this act of firmness, it is added, Heaven rewarded him with a share in the honored grave of Pitt! It is then said that his errors should be forgotten, and that he died a Briton—a pretty plain insinuation that in the author's opinion, he did not live one; and just such an encomium as he himself pronounces over the grave of his villain here, Marmion."—Jeffrey.
⁷ MS.; "Their's was no common courtier race."
⁸ MS.; "And force the pale moon from the sky."
⁹ "Reader! remember when thou wert a lad,
Then Pitt was all; or, if not all, so much,
His very rival almost dec'd him such.
Drop upon Fox's grave the tear,
'Twill trickle to his rival's bier;
O'er Pitt's the mournful requiem sound,
And Fox's shall the notes rebound.
The solemn echo seems to cry,—
"Here let their discord with them die.
Speak not for those a separate doom,
Whom Fate made Brothers in the tomb;
But search the land of living men,
Where wilt thou find their like agen?"

Rest, ardent Spirits! till the cries
Of dying Nature bid you rise;
Not even your Britain's groans can pierce
The leaden silence of your hearse;
Then, oh, how impotent and vain
This grateful tributary strain!
Though not unmark'd from northern clime,
Ye heard the Border Minstrel's rhyme:
His Gothic harp has o'er you rung;
The Bard you deign'd to praise, your deathless names has sung.

Stay yet, illusion, stay a while,
My wilder'd fancy still beguile!
From this high theme how can I part,
Ere half unloaded is my heart!
For all the tears e'er sorrow drew,
And all the raptures fancy knew,
And all the keener rush of blood,
That throbs through bale in bale-like mood,
Were here a tribute mean and low,
Though all their mingled streams could flow—
Woe, wonder, and sensation high—
In one spring-tide of ecstasy !
It will not be—it may not last—
The vision of enchantment's past :
Like frostwork in the morning ray,
The fancied fabric melts away;
Each Gothic arch, memorial-stone,
And long, dim, lofty aisle, are gone;
And, lingering last, deception dear,
The choir's high sounds die on my ear.
Now slow return the lonely dawn,
The silent pastures bleak and brown,
The farm begirt with copsewood mild,
The gambols of each frolic child,
Mixing their shrill cries with the tone
Of Tweed's dark waters rushing on.

Prompt on unequal tasks to run,
Thus Nature disciplines her son:
Meeter, she says, for me to stray,
And waste the solitary day
In plucking from yon fen the reed,
And watch it floating down the Tweed;
Or idly list the shrilling lay
With which the milkmaid cheers her way,
Marking its cadence rise and fall,
As from the field, beneath her pail,
She trips it down the uneven dale:
Meeter for me, by yonder cairn,
The ancient shepherd's tale to learn;
Though oft he stop in rustic fear;
Lest his old legends tire the ear
Of one who, in his simple mind,
May boast of book-learn'd taste refined.

But thou, my friend, canst fitly tell
(For few have read romance so well)
How still the legendary lay
O'er poet's bosom holds its sway;
How on the ancient minstrel strain
Time lays his palsied hand in vain;
And how our hearts at doughty deeds,
By warriors wrought in steely weeds,
Still thrab for fear and pity's sake;
As when the Champion of the Lake
Enters Moragna's fated house,
Or in the Chapel Perilous,
Despising spells and demons' force,
Holds converse with the unburied corpse;
Or when, Dame Ganore's grace to move
(Alas, that lawless was their love!),
He sought proud Tarquin in his den,
And freed full sixty knights; or when,
A sinful man, and unconfess'd,
He took the Sangreal's holy quest,
And, slumbering, saw the vision high
He might not view with waking eye.

The mightiest chiefs of British Song
Scorn'd not such legends to prolong;
They gleam through Spenser's elfin dream,
And mix in Milton's heavenly theme;
And Dryden, in immortal strain,
Had raised the Table Round again,
But that a ribald King and Court
Bade him toil on, to make them sport;

Of 'dust to dust,' but half its tale untold;
Time tempers not its terrors.

Byron's Age of Bronze.
1 "If but a beam of sober reason play,
Lo! Fancy's fairy frostwork melts away."
Rogers' Pleasures of Memory.
2 MS.: "Though oft he stop to wonder still
That his old legends have the skill
To win so well the attentive ear,
Pereance to draw the sigh or tear."
3 See Appendix, Note A. 4 Ibid., Note B. 5 Ibid., Note C.
Demand for their niggard pay,
Fit for their souls, a looser lay,
Licentious satire, song, and play;²
The world defrauded of the high design,³
Profaned the God-given strength, and marr'd the lofty line.

Warm'd by such names, well may we then,
Though dwindled sons of little men,
Essay to break a feeble lance
In the fair fields of old romance;
Or seek the moated castle's cell,
Where long through talisman and spell,
While tyrants ruled, and damsels wept,
Thy Genius, Chivalry, hath slept:
There sound the harplings of the North,
Till he awake and sally forth,
On venturous quest to prick again,
In all his arms, with all his train,⁴
Shield, lance, and brand, and plume, and scarf,
Fay, giant, dragon, squire, and dwarf,
And wizard with his wand of might,
And errant maid on palfrey white.
Around the Genius weave their spells,
Pure Love, who scarce his passion tells;
Mystery, half veil'd and half reveal'd;
And Honor, with his spotless shield;
Attention, with fix'd eye; and Fear,
That loves the tale she shrinks to hear;
And gentle Courtesy; and Faith,
Unchanged by sufferings, time, or death;
And Valor, lion-mettled lord,
Leaning upon his own good sword.

Well has thy fair achievement shown,
A worthy meed may thus be won;
Ytene's⁵ oaks—beneath whose shade
Their theme the merry minstrels made,
Of Ascopart, and Bevis bold,⁶
And that Red King,⁷ who, while of old
Through Boldrewood the chase he led,
By his loved huntsman's arrow bled—
Ytene's oaks have heard again
Renew'd such legendary strain;
For thou hast sung, how he of Gaul,
That Amadis so famed in hall,
For Oriana, foil'd in fight
The Neeromancer's felon might;

¹ MS.: "Licentious song, lampoon, and play."
² MS.: "The world defrauded of the bold design,
And quench'd the heroic fire, and marr'd the Profaned the heavenly and lofty line."
³ Again," Profaned his God-given strength, and marr'd his lofty line."
⁴ In the MS. the rest of the passage stands as follows:—

"Around him wait with all their charms,
Pure Love which virtue only warms;
Mystery, half seen and half conceal'd;
And Honor, with unspotted shield;
And well in modern verse hast wove Partenope's mystic love;
Hear, then, attentive to my lay,
A knightly tale of Albion's elder day.

MHARMION.

CANTO FIRST.
The Castle.

I.

Day set on Norham's castled steep,⁸
And Tweed's fair river broad and deep,
And Cheviot's mountains lone:
The battled towers, the donjon keep,⁹
The loophole grates, where captives weep,
The flanking walls that round it sweep,
In yellow lustre shone.¹⁰
The warriors on the turrets high,
Moving athwart the evening sky,¹¹
Seem'd forms of giant height;
Their armor, as it caught the rays,
Flash'd back again the western blaze,¹²
In lines of dazzling light.

II.

Saint George's banner, broad and gay,
Now faded, as the fading ray
Less bright, and less, was flung;
The evening gale had scarce the power
To wave it on the donjon tower,
So heavily it hung.
The scouts had parted on their search,
The Castle gates were barr'd;
Above the gloomy portal arch,
Timing his footsteps to a march,
The warder kept his guard;
Low humming, as he paced along,
Some ancient Border gathering song.

III.

A distant trampling sound he hears;
He looks abroad, and soon appears,

Attention, with fix'd eye; and Fear,
That loves the tale she shrinks to hear;
And gentle Courtesy; and Faith,
And Valor that despises death."

⁴ The New Forest in Hampshire, anciently so called.
⁵ See Appendix, Note D.
⁶ William Rufus.
⁷ Partenope de Blois, a poem, by W. S. Rose, Esq., was published in 1808.—Ed.
⁸ See Appendix, Note E.
⁹ Ibid. Note F.
¹⁰ In the MS. the first line has "hoary keep;" the fourth
"donjon steep;" the seventh "ruddy lustre."
¹¹ MS.: — "eastern sky."
¹² MS.: — "evening blaze."
"O'er Horncliff-hill, a plump\(^1\) of spears,
   Beneath a pennon gay;
A horseman, darting from the crowd,
Like lightning from a summer cloud,
Spurs on his mettled courser proud,
   Before the dark army.
Beneath the sable palisade,
That closed the Castle barricade,
   His bugle horn he blew;
The warder hasted from the wall,
And warn'd the Captain in the hall,
   For well the blast he knew;
And joyfully that knight did call
To sewer, squire, and seneschal.

IV.
  "Now broach ye a pipe of Malvoisie,
   Bring pasties of the doe,
And quickly make the entrance free,
And bid my heralds ready be,
And every minstrel sound his glee,
   And all our trumpets blow;
And, from the platform, spare ye not
To fire a noble salvo-shot;\(^2\)
   Lord MARMION waits below!"
Then to the Castle's lower ward
Sped forty yeomen tall,
The iron-studded gates unbarr’d,
   Raised the portcullis’ ponderous guard,
The lofty palisade unsparr’d,
   And let the drawbridge fall.

V.
Along the bridge Lord MARMION rode,
   Proudly his red-roan charger trode,
His helm hung at the saddlebow;
Well by his visage you might know
He was a stalworth knight, and keen,
   And had in many a battle been;
The scar on his brown cheek reveal’d\(^3\)
   A token true of Bosworth field;
His eyebrow dark, and eye of fire,
Show’d spirit proud, and prompt to ire;
Yet lines of thought upon his cheek
   Did deep design and counsel speak.
His forehead, by his casque worn bare,
His thick mustache and curly hair,
Coal-black, and grizzled here and there,
   But more through toil than age;

---

His square-turned joints, and strength of limb,
Show’d him no carpet knight so trim,
   But in close fight a champion grim,
   In camps a leader sage.\(^4\)

VI.
Well was he arm’d from head to heel,
   In mail and plate of Milan steel;\(^5\)
But his strong helm, of mighty cost,
   Was all with burnish’d gold emboss’d;
Amid the plumage of the crest,
   A falcon hover’d on her nest,
With wings outspread, and forward breast;
E’en such a falcon, on his shield,
   Soar’d sable in an azure field:
The golden legend bore ariight,
   Who thorks at me, to death is light.\(^6\)
Blue was the charger’s broder’d rein;
   Blue ribbons deck’d his arching mane;
The knightly housing’s ample fold
   Was velvet blue, and trapp’d with gold.

VII.
Behind him rode two gallant squires,
Of noble name, and knightly sires;
They burn’d the gilded spurs to claim;
   For well could each a war-horse tame,
Could draw the bow, the sword could sway,
   And lightly bear the ring away;
Nor less with courteous precepts stored,
   Could dance in hall, and carve at board,
And frame love-ditties passing rare,
   And sing them to a lady fair.

VIII.
Four men-at-arms came at their backs,
   With halbert, bill, and battle-axe:
They bore Lord MARMION’s lance so strong,\(^7\)
And led his sumpter-mules along,
   And ambling palfrey, when at need
   Him listed ease his battle-steel.
The last and trustiest of the four
   On high his forky pennon bore;
Like swallow’s tail, in shape and hue,
  Flutter’d the streamer glossy blue,
   Where, blazon’d sable, as before,
The towering falcon seem’d to soar.
Last, twenty yeomen, two and two,
   In hosen black, and jerkins blue,
the prominence of the features; and the union of a king is as light and sinewy a cavalier as the Bardic—or rather less ferocious—more wicked, not less fit for the hero of a ballad, and much more so for the hero of a regular poem."—GEORGE ELLIS.

---

\(^1\) This word properly applies to a flight of water-fowl; but is applied, analogously, to a body of horse.
\(^2\) MS.: "A welcome-shot."
\(^3\) MS.: "On his brown cheek an azure scar Bore token true of Bosworth field."
\(^4\) "Marmion is to Doraine what Tom Jones is to Joseph Andrews; the varnish of higher breeding nowhere diminishes
\(^5\) See Appendix, Note G.
\(^6\) Ibid. Note II.
\(^7\) MS.: "One bore Lord Marmion’s lance so strong,
   Two led his sumpter-mules along,
   The third his palfrey, when at need."
With falcons broider'd on each breast,
Attended on their lord's behest.
Each, chosen for an archer good,
Knew hunting-craft by lake or wood;
Each one a six-foot bow could bend,
And far a cloth-yard shaft could send;
Each held a boar-spear tough and strong,
And at their belts their quivers rung.
Their dusty palfreys, and array,
Show'd they had march'd a weary way.

IX.
'Tis meet that I should tell you now,
How fairly arm'd, and order'd how,
The soldiers of the guard,
With musket, pike, and morion,
To welcome noble Marmion,
Stood in the Castle-yard;
Minstrels and trumpeters were there,
The gunner held his linstock yare.

For welcome-shot prepared:
Enter'd the train, and such a clang,¹
As then through all his turrets rang,
Old Norham never heard.

X.
The guards their morrice-pikes advanced,
The trumpets flourish'd brave,
The cannon from the ramparts glanced,
And thundering welcome gave.
A blithe salute, in martial sort,
The minstrels well might sound,
For, as Lord Marmion cross'd the court,
He scatter'd angels round.

"Welcome to Norham, Marmion!
Stout heart, and open hand!
Well dost thou brook thy gallant roan,
Thou flower of English land!"

XI.
Two pursuivants, whom tabarts deck,
With silver scutcheon round their neck,
Stood on the steps of stone,
By which you reach the donjon gate,
And there, with herald pomp and state
They hail'd Lord Marmion:²
They hail'd him Lord of Fontenaye,
Of Lutterward, and Scrivellbaye,
Of Tamworth and town:³
And he, their courtie to require,
Gave them a chain of twelve marks weight,
All as he lighted down.

¹ MS.: "And when he enter'd, such a clang,
As through the echoing turrets rang."

² "The most picturesque of all poets, Homer, is frequently minute, to the utmost degree, in the description of the dresses and accoutrements of his personages. These particulars, often inconsiderable in themselves, have the effect of giving truth and identity to the picture, and assist the mind in realizing

"Now, largesse, largesse," Lord Marmion,
Knight of the crest of gold!
A blazon'd shield, in battle won,
Ne'er guarded heart so bold."

XII.
They marshall'd him to the Castle-hall,
Where the guests stood all aside,
And loudly flourish'd the trumpet call,
And the heralds loudly cried,
"Room, lordlings, room for Lord Marmion,
With the crest and helm of gold!
Full well we know the trophies won
In the lists at Cottisvold:
There, vainly Ralph de Wilton strove
'Gainst Marmion's force to stand;
To him he lost his lady-love,
And to the King his land.

Ourselves beheld the listed field,
A sight both sad and fair;
We saw Lord Marmion pierce his shield,⁴
And saw his saddle bare;
We saw the victor win the crest
He wears with worthy pride;
And on the gibbet-tree, reversed,
His foeman's scutcheon tied.

Place, nobles, for the Falcon-Knight!
Room, room, ye gentles gay,
For him who conquer'd in the right,
Marmion of Fontenaye!""""

XIII.
Then stepp'd, to meet that noble Lord,
Sir Hugh the Heron bold,
Baron of Twisel, and of Ford,
And Captain of the Hold.⁵
He led Lord Marmion to the deas,
Raised o'er the pavement high,
And placed him in the upper place—
They feasted full and high:
The whiles a northern harper rude
Chanted a rhyme of deadly feud,
"How the fierce Thirwalls, and Ridleys all,
Stout Williamdwick,
And Hardriding Dick,
And Hughie of Hoxdon, and Will o' the Wall,
Have set on Sir Albany Featherstonhaugh,
And taken his life at the Deadman's-shaw."²
Scantly Lord Marmion's ear could brook
The harper's barbarous lay;
Yet much he praised the pains he took,
And well those pains did pay:

the scenes, in a degree which no general description could suggest; nor could we so completely enter the Castle with Lord Marmion, were any circumstances of the description omitted."—British Critic.

³ See Appendix, Note I.⁴ Ibid. Note K.
⁵ MS.: "Cleave his shield."
⁶ See Appendix, Note L.⁷ Ibid. Note M.
For lady's suit, and minstrel's strain,
By knight should ne'er be heard in vain.

XIV.
"Now, good Lord Marmion," Heron says,
"Of your fair courtesy,
I pray you bide some little space
In this poor tower with me.
Here may you keep your arms from rust,
May breathe your war-horse well;
Seldom hath pass'd a week but giust
Or fear of arms befell:
The Scots can rein a mettled steed,
And love to couch a spear;—
Saint George! a stirring life they lead,
That have such neighbors near.
Then stay with us a little space,
Our northern wars to learn;
I pray you for your lady's grace!"—
Lord Marmion's brow grew stern.

XV.
The Captain mark'd his alter'd look,
And gave a square the sign;
A mighty wassail-bowl he took,
And crown'd it high with wine.
"Now pledge me here, Lord Marmion:
But first I pray thee fair, 1
Where hast thou left that page of thine,
That used to serve thy cup of wine,
Whose beauty was so rare?
When last in Raby towers we met,
The boy I closely eyed,
And often mark'd his cheeks were wet
With tears he fain would hide:
His was no rugged horse-boy's hand,
To burnish shield or sharpen brand, 2
Or saddle battle-steed;
But meeter seem'd for lady fair,
To fan her cheek, or curl her hair,
Or through embroidery, rich and rare,
The slender silk to lead:
His skin was fair, his ringlets gold,
His bosom—when he sigh'd,
The russet doublet's rugged fold
Could scarce repel its pride!
Say, hast thou given that lovely youth
To serve in lady's bower?
Or was the gentle page, in sooth,
A gentle paramour?"

1 MS.: "And let me pray thee fair."
2 MS.: "To rub a shield, or sharp a brand."
3 MS.: "Lord Marmion ill such jest could brook; He roll'd his kindling eye, Fis't on the Knight his dark baught look, And answer'd stern and high: 'That page thou didst so closely eye, So fair of hand and skin, Is come, I ween, of lineage high, And of thy lady's kin.

XVI.
Lord Marmion ill could brook such jest; 4
He roll'd his kindling eye,
With pain his rising wrath suppress'd,
Yet made a calm reply:
"That boy thou thought'st so goodly fair,
He might not brook the northern air.
More of his fate if thou wouldst learn,
I left him sick in Lindisfarne: 4
Enough of him.—But, Heron, say,
Why does thy lovely lady gay
Disdain to grace the hall to-day?
Or has that dame, so fair and sage,
Gone on some pious pilgrimage?"—
He spoke in covert scorn, for fame
Whisper'd light tales of Heron's dame. 5

XVII.
Unmark'd, at least unreck'd, the taunt,
Careless the Knight replied, 6
"No bird whose feathers gayly flaunt,
Delights in cage to bide:
Norham is grim and grated close,
Hemm'd in by battlement and fosse,
And many a darksome tower;
And better loves my lady bright
To sit in liberty and light,
In fair Queen Margaret's bower.
We hold our greyhound in our hand,
Our falcon on our glove;
But where shall we find leash or band,
For dame that loves to rove?
Let the wild falcon soar her swing,
She'll stoop when she has tired her wing."— 7

XVIII.
"Nay, if with royal James's bride
The lovely Lady Heron ride,
Behold me here a messenger,
Your tender greetings prompt to bear;
For, to the Scottish court address'd,
I journey at our King's behest,
And pray you, of your grace, provide
For me and mine a trusty guide.
I have not ridden in Scotland since
James back'd the cause of that mock prince,
Warbeck, that Flemish counterfeit,
Who on the gibbet paid the cheat.
Then did I march with Surrey's power,
What time we razed old Ayton tower."— 8

That youth, so like a paramour,
Who wept for shame and pride,
Was erst, in Wilton's lordly bower,
Sir Ralph de Wilton's bride."

4 See Note 2 B, canto ii. stanza 1.
5 MS.: "Whisper'd strange things of Heron's dame."
6 MS.: "The captain gay replied."
7 MS.: "She'll stoop again when tired her wing."
8 See Appendix, Note N.
XIX.
"For such-like need, my lord, I row,
Norham can you guide's now;
For here be some have prick'd as far,
On Scottish ground, as to Dunbar;
Have drunk the monks of St. Bothan's ale,
And driven the beves of Lauderdale;
Harried the wives of Greenlaw's goods,
And given them light to set their hoods."—1

XX.
"Now, in good sooth," Lord Marmion cried,
"Were I in warlike wise to ride,
A better guard I would not lack,
Than your stout forayers at my back;
But, as in form of peace I go,
A friendly messenger, to know,
Why through all Scotland, near and far,
Their King is mustering troops for war,
The sight of plundering Border spears
Might justify suspicious fears,
And deadly feud, or thirst of spoil,
Break out in some unseenly broil:
A herald were my fitting guide;
Or friar, sworn in peace to bide;
Or pardoner, or travelling priest,
Or strolling pilgrim, at the least."

XXI.
The Captain mused a little space,
And pass'd his hand across his face.—
"Fain would I find the guide you want,
But ill may spare a pursuivant,
The only men that safe can ride
Mine errands on the Scottish side:
And though a bishop built this fort,
Few holy brethren here resort;
Even our good chaplain, as I ween,
Since our last siege, we have not seen:
The mass he might not sing or say,
Upon one stinted meal a day;
So, safe he sat in Durham aisle,
And pray'd for our success the while.
Our Norham vicar, woe betide,
Is all too well in case to ride;
The priest of Shoreswood2—he could rein
The wildest war-horse in your train;
But then, no spearman in the hall
Will sooner swear, or stab, or brawl.
Friar John of Tillmounth were the man:
A blithesome brother at the can,
A welcome guest in hall and bower,
He knows each castle, town, and tower
In which the wine and ale is good,
'Twixt Newcastle and Holy-Rood.
But that good man, as ill befalls,
Hath seldom left our castle walls,

Since, on the vigil of St. Bede,
In evil hour he cross'd the Tweed,
To teach Dame Alison her creed.
Old Bughtrig found him with his wife;
And John, an enemy to strife,
Sans freck and hood, fled for his life.
The jealous churl hath deeply swore,
That, if again he venture o'er,
He shall shrieve penitent no more.
Little he loves such risks, I know;
Yet, in your guard, perchance will go."

XXII.
Young Selby, at the fair hall-board,
Carved to his uncle and that Lord,
And reverently took up the word.—
"Kind uncle, woe were we each one,
If harm should hap to brother John.
He is a man of mirthful speech,
Can many a game and gambol teach:
Full well at tables can he play,
And sweep at bowls the stake away.
None can a lustier carol bawl,
The needfullest among us all,
When time hangs heavy in the hall,
And snow comes thick at Christmas tide,
And we can neither hunt, nor ride
A foray on the Scottish side.
The vow'd revenge of Bughtrig rude
May end in worse than loss of hood.
Let Friar John, in safety, still
In chimney-corner snore his fill,
Roast hissing crabs, or flagons swell:
Last night, to Norham there came one
Will better guide Lord Marmion."

"Nephew," quoth Heron, "by my fay,
Well hast thou spoke; say forth thy say."

XXIII.
"Here is a holy Palmer come,
From Salem first, and last from Rome;
One that hath kiss'd the blessed tomb,
And visited each holy shrine,
In Araby and Palestine;
On hills of Armenia hath been,
Where Noah's ark may yet be seen;
By that Red Sea, too, hath he trod,
Which parted at the prophet's rod;
In Sinai's wilderness he saw
The Mount, where Israel heard the law,
'Mid thunder-dint, and flashing levin,
And shadows, mists, and darkness, given.
He shows Saint James's cockle-shell,
Of fair Montserrat, too, can tell;
And of that Grot where olives nod,3
Where, darling of each heart and eye,
From all the youth of Sicily,
Saint Rosalie4 retired to God.5

1 See Appendix, Note O. 2 Ibid. Note P. 3 MS.: "And of the olives' shaded cell." 4 MS.: "Retired to God St. Rosalie." 5 See Appendix, Note Q.
XXIV.

"To stout Saint George of Norwich merry, Saint Thomas, too, of Canterbury, Cuthbert of Durham, and Saint Bede, For his sins' pardon hath he pray'd. He knows the passes of the North, And seeks far shrines beyond the Forth; Little he eats, and long will wake, And drinks but of the stream or lake. This were a guide o'er moor and dale; But, when our John hath quaff'd his ale, As little as the wind that blows, And warms itself against his nose,\(^1\) Kens he, or cares, which way he goes.\(^2\)

XXV.

"Gramercy!" quoth Lord Marmion, "Full loth were I, that Friar John, That venerable man, for me Were placed in fear or jeopardy. If this same Palmer will me lead From hence to Holy-Rood, Like his good saint, I'll pay his meed, Instead of cockle-shell, or bead, With angels fair and good. I love such holy rumblers; still They know to charm a weary hill, With song, romance, or lay: Some jovial tale, or glee, or jest, Some lying legend, at the least, They bring to cheer the way."

XXVI.

"Ah! noble sir," young Selby said, And finger on his lip he laid, "This man knows much, perchance e'en more Than he could learn by holy lore. Still to himself he's muttering, And shrinks as at some unseen thing. Last night we listen'd at his cell; Strange sounds we heard, and, sooth to tell, He murmur'd on till morn, how'e'er No living mortal could be near. Sometimes I thought I heard it plain, As other voices spoke again, I cannot tell—I like it not—Friar John hath told us it is wrote, No conscience clear, and void of wrong, Can rest awake, and pray so long.

\(^1\) MS.: "And with metheglin warm'd his nose, As little as," &c.

\(^2\) This poem has faults of too great magnitude to be passed without notice. There is a debasing lowness and vulgarity in some passages, which we think must be offensive to every reader of delicacy, and which are not, for the most part, redeemed by any vigor or picturesque effect. The venison pasties, we think, are of this description; and this commemoration of Sir Hugh Heron's troopers, who

\[^{1}\] Have drunk the monks of St. Bothan's ale, &c.
The long account of Friar John, though not without merit, Himself still sleeps before his beads Have mark'd ten ayes and two creeds."—\(^3\)

XXVII.

"Let pass," quoth Marmion; "by my fay, This man shall guide me on my way, Although the great arch-fiend and he Had sworn themselves of company. So please you, gentle youth, to call This Palmer\(^4\) to the Castle-hall.\(^5\) The summon'd Palmer came in place; His sable cowl o'erhid his face; In his black mantle was he clad, With Peter's keys in cloth of red, On his broad shoulders wrought; The scallop shell his cap did deck; The crucifix around his neck Was from Loretto brought; His sandals were with travel tore; Staff, budget, bottle, scrip, he wore; The faded palm-branch in his hand Show'd pilgrim from the Holy Land.

XXVIII.

When as the Palmer came in hall, Nor lord, nor knight, was there more tall, Or had a statelier step withal, Or look'd more high and keen; For no saluting did he wait, But strode across the hall of state, And fronted Marmion where he sate,\(^6\) As he his peer had been. But his gaunt frame was worn with toil; His cheek was sunk, alas the while! And when he struggled at a smile, His eye look'd haggard wild; Poor wretch! the mother that him bare, If she had been in presence there, In his wan face, and sunburn'd hair, She had not known her child. Danger, long travel, want, or woe, Soon change the form that best we know— For deadly fear can time outgo, And blanch at once the hair; Hard toil can roughen form and face,\(^7\) And want can quench the eye's bright grace, Nor does old age a wrinkle trace More deeply than despair.

offends in the same sort, nor can we easily conceive how any one could venture, in a serious poem, to speak of \[^{3}\] The wind that blows,

And warms itself against his nose."—JEFFREY.

\[^{4}\] See Appendix, Note B.\(^4\)

\[^{5}\] The first presentment of the mysterious Palmer is laudable."—JEFFREY.

\[^{6}\] MS.: "And near Lord Marmion took his seat."

\[^{7}\] MS.: "Hard toil can alter form and face,

And what can (quench) the eyes of grace."
Happy whom none of these befall,\(^1\)
But this poor Palmer knew them all.

XXIX.
Lord Marmion then his boon did ask;
The Palmer took on him the task,
So he would march with morning tide,\(^2\)
To Scottish court to be his guide.
"But I have solemn vows to pay,
And may not linger by the way,
To fair St. Andrews bound,
Within the ocean-cave to pray,
Where good Saint Rule his holy lay,
From midnight to the dawn of day,
Sung to the billows' sound,\(^3\)
Thence to Saint Fillan's blessed well,
Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel,
And the crazed brain restore:\(^4\)
Saint Mary grant, that cave or spring
Could back to peace my bosom bring,
Or bid it throb no more!"

XXX.
And now the midnight draught of sleep,
Where wine and spices richly steep,
In massive bowl of silver deep,
The page presents on knee.
Lord Marmion drank a fair good rest,
The Captain pledged his noble guest,
The cup went through among the rest,\(^5\)
Who drain'd it merrily;
Alone the Palmer pass'd it by,
Though Selby press'd him courteously.
This was a sign the feast was o'er;
It hush'd the merry wassail roar,\(^6\)
The minstrels ceased to sound.
Soon in the castle nought was heard,
But the slow stepfoot of the guard,
Pacing his sober round.

XXXI.
With early dawn Lord Marmion rose:
And first the chapel doors unclose;
Then after morning rites were done
(A hasty mass from Friar John?),
And knight and squire had broke their fast,
On rich substantial repast,
Lord Marmion's bugles blew to horse;
Then came the stirrup-cup in course:
Between the Baron and his host,
No point of courtesy was lost;
High thanks were by Lord Marmion paid,
Solemn excuse the Captain made,
Till, filing from the gate, had pass'd
That noble train, their Lord the last.
Then loudly rung the trumpet call;
Thunder'd the cannon from the wall,
And shook the Scottish shore;
Around the castle eddied slow
Volumes of smoke as white as snow,
And hid its turrets hoar;
Till they roll'd forth upon the air,\(^7\)
And met the river breezes there,
Which gave again the prospect fair.

Marmion.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SECOND.

TO THE

REV. JOHN MARRIOTT, A.M.

Ashiestiel, Etrick Forest.

The scenes are desert now, and bare,
Where flourish'd once a forest fair,\(^8\)
When these waste glens with copse were lined,
And peopled with the hart and hind.
Yon Thorn—perchance whose prickly spears
Have fenced him for three hundred years,
While fell around his green comperees—
Yon lonely Thorn, would he could tell
The changes of his parent dell,\(^9\)
Since he, so gray and stubborn now,
Waved in each breeze a sapling bough;
Would he could tell how deep the shade
A thousand mingled branches made;
How broad the shadows of the oak,
How clung the rowan\(^10\) to the rock,
And through the foliage show'd his head,
With narrow leaves and berries red;

\(^{10}\) "The second epistle opens again with 'change and chance;' but it cannot be denied that the mode in which it is introduced is new and poetical. The comparison of Etrick Forest, now open and naked, with the state in which it once was—covered with wood, the favorite resort of the royal hunt, and the refuge of daring outlaws—leads the poet to imagine an ancient thorn gifted with the powers of reason, and relating the various scenes which it has witnessed during a period of three hundred years. A melancholy train of fancy is naturally encouraged by the idea."—Monthly Review.

\(^{11}\) Mountain-ash.

MS.: "How broad the ash his shadows flung,
How to the rock the rowan clung."
What pines on every mountain sprung,
O'er every dell what birches hung,
In every breeze what aspens shook,
What alders shaded every brook!

"Here, in my shade," methinks he'd say,
"The mighty stag at noontide lay:
The wolf I've seen, a fiercer game
(The neighboring dingle bears his name),
With lurching step around me prowled,
And stop, against the moon to howl;
The mountain-boar, on battle set,
His tusks upon my stem would whet;
While doe, and roe, and red-deer good,
Have bounded by, through gay green-wood.
Then oft, from Newark's^d riven tower,
Sallied a Scottish monarch's power:
A thousand vassals muster'd round,
With horse, and hawk, and horn, and hound;
And I might see the youth intent,
Guard every pass with crossbow bent,
And through the brake the rangers stalk,
And fal'ners hold the ready hawk;
And foresters, in green-wood trim,
Lead in the leash the gazehounds grim.

Of such proud huntings, many tales
Yet linger in our lonely dales,
Up pathless Ettrick and on Yarrow,
Where erst the outlaw drew his arrow.

Not but more blithe that sylvan court,
Than we have been at humbler sport;
Though small our pomp, and mean our game,
Our mirth, dear Marriott, was the same.
Remember'st thou my greyhounds true?
O'er holt or hill there never flew,
From slip or leach there never sprang,
More fleet of foot, or sure offang.

Nor dull, between each merry chase,
Pass'd by the intermitted space;
For we had fair resource in store,
In Classic and in Gothic lore:
We mark'd each memorable scene,
And held poetic talk between;
Nor hill, nor brook, we paced along,
But had its legend or its song.
All silent now—for now are still
Thy bowers, untenanted Bowhill!
No longer from thy mountains dun
The yeoman hears the well-known gun,
And while his honest heart glows warm,
At thought of his paternal farm,
Round to his mates a brimmer fills,
And drinks, "The Chieftain of the Hills!"
No fairy forms, in Yarrow's bowers,
Trip o'er the walks, or tend the flowers,
Fair as the elves whom Janet saw
By moonlight dance on Carterhaugh;
No youthful Baron's left to grace
The Forest-Sheriff's lonely chase,
And apace, in manly step and tone,
The majesty of Oberon,
And she is gone whose lovely face
Is but her least and lowest grace,
Though if to Sylphid Queen 'twere given
To show our earth the charms of Heaven,
She could not glide along the air,
With form more light, or face more fair.
No more the widow's deafen'd ear
Grows quick that lady's step to hear:
At noontide she expects her not,
Nor busies her to trim the cot;
Pensive she turns her humming wheel,
Or pensive cooks her orphans' meal;
Yet blesses, ere she deals their bred,
The gentle hand by which they're fed.

From Yair,—which hills so closely bind,
Scarce can the Tweed his passage find,
Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil,
Till all his eddying currents boil,—
Her long-descended lord^ is gone,
And left us by the stream alone.
And much I miss those sportive boys,
Companions of my mountain joys,
Just at the age 'twixt boy and youth,
When thought is speech, and speech is truth.

1 See Notes to the Lay of the Last Minstrel.
2 Slowhound.
3 The Tale of the Outlaw Murray, who held out Newark Castle and Ettrick Forest against the King, may be found in the Border Minstrelsy, vol. i. In the Macfarlane MS., among other causes of James the Fifth's charter to the burgh of Selkirk, it is mentioned, that the citizens assisted him to suppress this dangerous outlaw.
4 A seat of the Duke of Buccleuch on the Yarrow, in Ettrick Forest. See Notes to the Lay of the Last Minstrel.
5 Mr. Marriott was governor to the young nobleman here alluded to, George Henry, Lord Scott, son to Charles, Earl of Dalkeith (afterwards Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry), and who died early in 1685.—See Life of Scott, vol. iii. pp. 59-61.
6 The four next lines on Harriet, Countess of Dalkeith, afterwards Duchess of Buccleuch, were not in the original MS.
7 The late Alexander Pringle, Esq., of Whytbank—whose beautiful seat of the Yair stands on the Tweed, about two miles below Ashestiel, the then residence of the poet.
8 The sons of Mr. Pringle of Whytbank.
Close to my side, with what delight
They press'd to hear of Wallace wight,
When, pointing to his airy mound,
I call'd his ramparts holy ground!
Kindled their brows to hear me speak;
And I have smiled, to feel my cheek,
Despite the difference of our years,
Return again the glow of theirs.
Ah, happy boys! such feelings pure,
They will not, cannot, long endure;
Condemn'd to stem the world's rude tide,
You may not linger by the side;
For Fate shall thrust you from the shore,
And Passion ply the sail and oar, 1
Yet cherish the remembrance still,
Of the lone mountain, and the rill;
For trust, dear boys, the time will come,
When fiercer transport shall be dumb,
And you will think right frequently,
But, well I hope, without a sigh,
On the free hours that we have spent
Together, on the brown hill's bent.

When, musing on companions gone,
We doubly feel ourselves alone,
Something, my friend, we yet may gain;
There is a pleasure in this pain;
It soothes the love of lonely rest,
Deep in each gentler heart impress'd.
'Tis silent amid worldly toils,
And stilled soon by mental broils;
But, in a bosom thus prepared,
Its still small voice is often heard,
Whispering a mingled sentiment,
'Twixt resignation and content.
Oft in my mind such thoughts awake,
By lone Saint Mary's silent lake; 2
Thou know'st it well,—nor fen, nor sedge,
Pollute the pure lake's crystal edge;
Abrupt and sheer, the mountains sink
At once upon the level brink;
And just a trace of silver sand 3
Marks where the water meets the land.
Far in the mirror, bright and blue,
Each hill's huge outline you may view; 4
Shaggy with heath, but lonely bare,
Nor tree, nor bush, nor brake, is there,
Save where, of land, you slender line
Beart thwart the lake the scatter'd pine,

Yet even this nakedness has power,
And aids the feeling of the hour:
Nor thicker, dell, nor cope you spy,
Where living thing conceal'd might lie;
Nor point, retiring, hides a dell,
Where swain, or woodman lone, might dwell;
There's nothing left to fancy's guess,
You see that all is loneliness:
And silence aids—though the steep hills
Send to the lake a thousand rills;
In summer tide, so soft they weep,
The sound but lulls the ear asleep;
Your horse's hoof-tread sounds too rude,
So stilly is the solitude.

Nought living meets the eye or ear,
But well I ween the dead are near;
For though, in feudal strife, a foe
Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low, 5
Yet still, beneath the hallow'd soil,
The peasant rests him from his toil,
And, dying, bids his bones be laid
Where erst his simple fathers pray'd.

If age had tamed the passions' strife, 6
And fate had cut my ties to life,
Here, have I thought, 'twere sweet to dwell,
And rear again the chaplain's cell,
Like that same peaceful hermitage
Where Milton long'd to spend his age. 7
'Twere sweet to mark the setting day
On Bourhope's lonely top decay;
And, as it faint and feeble died
On the broad lake, and mountain's side,
To say, "Thus pleasures fade away;
Youth, talents, beauty, thus decay,
And leave us dark, forlorn, and gray;" 8
Then gaze on Dryhope's ruin'd tower,
And think on Yarrow's faded Flower:
And when that mountain-sound I heard,
Which bids us be for storm prepared,
The distant rustling of his wings,
As up his force the Tempest brings,
'Twere sweet, ere yet his terrors rave
To sit upon the Wizard's grave;
That Wizard Priest's, whose bones are thrust
From company of holy dust; 9
On which no sunbeam ever shines
(So superstition's creed divine)—

1 There is, on a high mountainous ridge above the farm of Ashbeneil, a fossè call'd Wallace's Trench.
2 MS.: "And youth shall ply the sail and oar." See Appendix, Note W.
3 MS.: "At once upon the silent brink;
Just a line of pebbly sand." See Appendix, Note X.
4 "A few of the lines which follow breathe as true a spirit of peace and repose as even the simple strains of our venerable Walton."—Monthly Review.
5 "And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth show,
And every herb that sips the dew;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain."-It Penneroso.
6 MS.: "Far traced upon the lake you view
The hills' huge sides and sombre hue."
7 See Appendix, Note Y.
MARMION.

Then, issuing forth one foamy wave,
And wheeling round the Giant's Grave,
White as the snowy charger's tail,
Drives down the pass of Mollatdale.

Marriott, thy harp, on Isis strung,
To many a Border theme has rung.
Then list to me, and thou shalt know
Of this mysterious Man of Woe.

CANTO SECOND.

The Content.

I.

The breeze which swept away the smoke,
Round Norham Castle roll'd,
When all the loud artillery spoke,
With lightning-flash, and thunder-stroke,
As Marmion left the Hold,
It curl'd not Tweed alone, that breeze,
For, far upon Northumbrian seas,
It freshly blew, and strong,
Where, from high Whitby's cloister'd pile,
Bound to St. Cuthbert's Holy Isle,
It bore a bark along,
Upon the gale she stoop'd her side,
And bounded o'er the swelling tide,
As she were dancing home;
The merry seamen laugh'd, to see
Their gallant ship so lustily
Furrow the green sea-foam,
Much joy'd they in their honor'd freight;
For, on the deck, in chair of state,
The Abbess of Saint Hilda placed,
With five fair nuns, the galley graced.

II.

'Twas sweet to see these holy maids,
Like birds escaped to green-wood shades,
Their first flight from the cage,
How timid, and how curious too,
For all to them was strange and new,
And all the common sights they view
Their wonderment engage.
One eyed the shrouds and swelling sail,
With many a benedicite;
One at the rippling surge grew pale,
And would for terror pray;

1 MS.: "Spread through broad mist their snowy sail."
2 MS.: "Till fancy wild had all her sway."
3 MS.: "Till from the task my brain I clear'd."
4 See Appendix, Note Z.
5 See various ballads by Mr. Marriott, in the 4th vol. of the Border Minstrelsy.
6 See Appendix, Note 2 A.
7 See Appendix, Note 2 B.
Then shriek'd, because the sea-dog, nigh,
His round black head, and sparkling eye,
Rear'd o'er the foaming spray;
And one would still adjust her veil,
Disorder'd by the summer gale,
Perchance lest some more worldly eye
Her dedicated charms might spy;
Perchance, because such action graced
Her fair-turn'd arm and slender waist.
Light was each simple bosom there,
Save two, who ill might pleasure share,—
The Abbess, and the Novice Clare.

III.
The Abbess was of noble blood,
But early took the veil and hood,
Ere upon life she cast a look,
Or knew the world that she forsook.
Fair too she was, and kind had been
As she was fair, but ne'er had seen
For her a timid lover sigh,
Nor knew the influence of her eye.
Love, to her car, was but a name,
Combined with vanity and shame;
Her hopes, her fears, her joys, were all
Bounded within the cloister wall:
The deadliest sin her mind could reach
Was of monastic rule the breach;
And her ambition's highest aim
To emulate Saint Hilda's fame.
For this she gave her ample dower,¹
To raise the convent's eastern tower;
For this, with carving rare and quaint,
She deck'd the chapel of the saint,
And gave the relics-shrine of cost,
With ivory and gems emboss'd.
The poor her convent's bounty blest,
The pilgrim in its halls found rest.

IV.
Black was her garb, her rigid rule
Reform'd on Benedictine school;
Her cheek was pale, her form was spare;
Vigils, and penitence austere,
Had early quench'd the light of youth,
But gentle was the dame, in sooth;
Though vain of her religious sway,
She loved to see her maids obey,
Yet nothing stern was she in cell,
And the nuns loved their Abbess well.
Sad was this voyage to the dame;
Summon'd to Lindisfarne, she came,
There, with Saint Cuthbert's Abbot old,
And Tynemouth's Prior, to hold
A chapter of Saint Benedict,
For inquisition stern and strict,
On two apostates from the faith,
And, if need were, to doom to death.

V.
Nought say I here of Sister Clare,
Save this, that she was young and fair;
As yet a novice unprofess'd,
Lovely and gentle, but distress'd,
She was betroth'd to one now dead,
Or worse, who had dishonor'd fled.
Her kinsmen bade her give her hand
To one who loved her for her land:
Herself, almost heart-broken now,
Was bent to take the vestal vow,
And shroud, within Saint Hilda's gloom,
Her blasted hopes and wither'd bloom.

VI.
She sat upon the galley's prow,
And seem'd to mark the waves below;
Nay, seem'd, so fix'd her look and eye,
To count them as they glided by.
She saw them not—'twas seeming all—
Far other seen her thoughts recall,—
A sun-scored desert, waste and bare,
Nor waves, nor breezes, murmur'd there;
There saw she, where some careless hand
O'er a dead corpse had heap'd the sand,
To hide it till the jackals come,
To tear it from the scanty tomb.—
See what a woeful look was given,
As she raised up her eyes to heaven!

VII.
Lovely, and gentle, and distress'd—
These charms might tame the fiercest breast:
Harpers have sung, and poets told,
That he, in fury uncontroll'd,
The shaggy monarch of the wood,
Before a virgin, fair and good,
Hath pacified his savage mood,
But passions in the human frame
Oft put the lion's rage to shame:
And jealousy, by dark intrigue,
With sordid avarice in league,
Had practiced with their bowl and knife
Against the mourner's harm less life.
This crime was charg'd 'gainst those who lay
Prison'd in Cuthbert's islet gray.

VIII.
And now the vessel skirts the strand
Of mountainous Northumberland;
Towns, towers, and halls, successive rise,
And catch the nuns' delighted eyes.
Monk-Warmouth soon behind them lay,
And Tynemouth's priory and bay;
They mark'd, amid her trees, the hall
Of lofty Seaton-Delaval;
They saw the Blythe and Wansbeck floods
Rush to the sea through sounding woods;

¹ MS.: "'Twas she that gave her ample dower . . .
'Twas she, with carving rare and quaint,
Who deck'd the chapel of the saint."
They pass'd the tower of Widderingston,
Mother of many a valiant son;
At Coquet-isle their beads they tell
To the good Saint who own'd the cell;
Then did the Alne attention claim,
And Warkworth, proud of Percy's name;
And next, they cross'd themselves, to hear
The whitening breakers sound so near,
Where, boiling through the rocks, they roar
On Dunstanborough's cavern'd shore;
Thy tower, proud Bamborough, mark'd they there,
King Ida's castle, huge and square,
From its tall rock look grimly down,
And on the swelling ocean frown;
Then from the coast they bore away,
And reach'd the Holy Island's bay.

IX.
The tide did now its flood-mark gain,
And girdled in the Saint's domain:
For, with the flow and ebb, its style
Varies from continent to isle;
Dry-shod, o'er sands, twice every day,
The pilgrims to the shrine find way;
Twice every day, the waves office
Of staves and sandall'd feet the trace,
As to the port the galley flew,
Higher and higher rose to view
The Castle with its battled walls,
The ancient Monastery's halls,
A solemn, huge, and dark-red pile,
Placed on the margin of the isle.

X.
In Saxon strength that Abbey frown'd,
With massive arches broad and round,
That rose alternate, row and row,
On ponderous columns, short and low,
Built ere the art was known,
By pointed aisle, and shafted stalk,
The arcades of an alley'd walk
To emulate in stone.
On the deep walls, the heathen Dane
Had pour'd his impious rage in vain;
And needful was such strength to these,
Exposed to the tempestuous seas,
Scourged by the winds' eternal sway,
Open to rovers fierce as they,
Which could twelve hundred years withstand
Winds, waves, and northern pirates' hand.
Not but that portions of the pile,
Rebuilt in a later style,
Show'd where the spoiler's hand had been;
Not but the wasting sea-breeze keen
Had worn the pillar's carving quaint,
And moulder'd in his niche the saint,
And rounded, with consuming power,
The pointed angles of each tower;
Yet still entire the Abbey stood,
Like veteran, worn, but unsubdued.

XI.
Soon as they near'd his turrets strong,
The maidens raised Saint Hilda's song,
And with the sea-wave and the wind,
Their voices, sweetly shrill, combined,
And made harmonious close;
Then, answering from the sandy shore,
Half-drown'd amid the breakers' roar,
According chorus rose:
Down to the haven of the Isle,
The monks and nuns in order file,
From Cuthbert's cloisters grim;
Banner, and cross, and relics there,
To meet Saint Hilda's maids, they bare;
And, as they caught the sounds on air,
They echo'd back the hymn.
The islanders, in joyous mood,
Rush'd emulously through the flood,
To hale the bark to land;
Conspicuous by her veil and hood,
Signing the cross, the Abbess stood,
And bless'd them with her hand.

XII.
Suppose we now the welcome said,
Suppose the Convent banquet made:
All through the holy dome,
Through cloister, aisle, and gallery,
Wherever vestal maid might pry,
Nor risk to meet unhallow'd eye,
The stranger sisters roan:
Till fell the evening damp with dew,
And the sharp sea-breeze coldly blew,
For there, even summer night is chill.
Then, having stray'd and gazed their fill,
They closed around the fire;
And all, in turn, essay'd to paint
The rival merits of their saint,
A theme that ne'er can tire
A holy maid; for, be it known,
That their saint's honor is their own.

XIII.
Then Whity's nuns exulting told
How to their house three Barons bold
Must menial service do;2
While horns blow out a note of shame,
And monks cry "Fie upon your name!
In wrath, for loss of sylvan game,
Saint Hilda's priest ye slew."—
"This, on Ascension-day, each year,
While laboring on our harbor-pier,
Must Herbert, Brnee, and Percy hear."—
They told how in their convent-cell
A Saxon princess once did dwell,

1 See the notes on Chevy Chase.—Percy's Reliques.
2 See Appendix, Note 2 C.
The lovely Edelfled;
And how, of thousand snakes, each one
Was changed into a coil of stone,
When holy Hilda pray'd;
Themselves, within their holy bound,
Their stony folds had often found.
They told how sea-fowls' pinions fail,
As over Whitby's towers they sail;
And, sinking down, with flutterings faint,
They do their homage to the saint.

XIV.
Nor did Saint Cuthbert's daughters fail
To vie with these in holy tale;
His body's resting-place, of old,
How oft their patron changed, they told;
How, when the rude Dane burn'd their pile,
The monks fled forth from Holy Isle;
O'er northern mountain, marsh, and moor,
From sea to sea, from shore to shore,
Seven years Saint Cuthbert's corpse they bore.
They rested them in fair Melrose;
But though, alive, he loved it well,
Not there his relics might repose;
For, wondrous tale to tell!
In his stone coffin forth he rides,
A ponderous bark for river tides,
Yet light as gossamer it glides
Downward to Tilmouth cell.
Nor long was his abiding there,
For southward did the saint repair;
Chester-le-Street, and Rippon, saw
His holy corpse, ere Wardilaw
Hail'd him with joy and fear;
And, after many wanderings past,
He chose his lordly seat at last,
Where his cathedral, huge and vast,
Looks down upon the Wear;
There, deep in Durham's Gothic shade,
His relics are in secret laid;
But none may know the place,
Save of his holiest servants three,
Deep sworn to solemn secrecy,
Who share that wondrous grace.

XV.
Who may his miracles declare!
Even Scotland's dauntless king, and heir
(Although with them they led Galwegians, wild as ocean's gale,
And Lodon's knights, all sheathed in mail,
And the bold men of Teviotdale),
Before his standard fled.
'Twas he, to vindicate his reign,
Edged Alfred's falchion on the Dane,
And turn'd the Conqueror back again.

When, with his Norman bowyer band,
He came to waste Northumberian.

XVI.
But fain Saint Hilda's nuns would learn
If, on a rock, by Lindisfarne,
Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame
The sea-born beads that bear his name:
Such tales had Whithby's fishers told,
And said they might his shape behold,
And hear his anvil sound;
A deaden'd clang,—a huge dim form,
Seen but, and heard, when gathering storm
And night were closing round.
But this, as tale of idle fame,
The nuns of Lindisfarne disclaim.

XVII.
While round the fire such legends go,
Far different was the scene of woe,
Where, in a secret aisle beneath,
The Council was held of life and death.
It was more dark and lone, that vault,
Than the worst dungeon cell:
Old Colwulf built it, for his fault,
In penitence to dwell,
When he, for cowl and beads, laid down
The Saxon battle-axe and crown.
This den, which, chilling every sense
Of feeling, hearing, sight,
Was call'd the Vault of Penitence,
Excluding air and light,
Was, by the prelate Sexhelm, made
A place of burial for such dead
As, having died in mortal sin,
Might not be laid the church within.
'Twas now a place of punishment;
Whence, if so loud a shriek were sent,
As reach'd the upper air,
The hearers bless'd themselves, and said,
The spirits of the sinful dead
Bemoan'd their torments there.

XVIII.
But though, in the monastic pile,
Died of this penitential aisle
Some vague tradition go,
Few only, save the Abbot, knew
Where the place lay; and still more few
Were those who had from him the clew
To that dread vault to go.
Victim and executioner
Were blindfold when transported there.
In low dark rounds the arches hung,
From the rude rock the side walls sprung;

1 See Appendix, Note 2 D.
2 Ibid. Note 2 E.
3 See Appendix, Note 2 F.
4 Ibid. Note 2 G.
5 See Appendix, Note 2 H.
6 See Appendix, Note 2 I.
7 MS.: "Seen only when the gathering storm."
8 See Appendix, Note 2 K.
The grave-stones, rudely sculptured o'er,
Half sunk in earth, by time half wore,
Were all the pavement of the floor;
The mildew-drops fell one by one,
With tinkling flush, upon the stone.
A cresset, in an iron chain,
Which served to light this drear domain,
With damp and darkness seem'd to strive,
As if it scarce might keep alive;
And yet it dimly served to show
The awful conclavse met below.

XIX.
There, met to doom in secrecy,
Were placed the heads of convents three:
All servants of Saint Benedict,
The statutes of whose order strict
On iron table lay;
In long black dress, on seats of stone,
Behind were these three judges shown
By the pale cresset's ray:
The Abbess of Saint Hilda's, there,
Sat for a space with visage bare,
Until, to hide her bosom's swell,
And tear-drops that for pity fell,
She closely drew her veil:
You shrouded figure, as I guess,
By her proud mien and flowing dress,
Is Tynemouth's haughty Prioress,
And she with awe looks pale:
And he, that Ancient Man, whose sight
Has long been quench'd by age's night,
Upon whose wrinkled brow alone
Nor ruth, nor mercy's trace, is shown,
Whose look is hard and stern,—
Saint Cuthbert's Abbot is his style;
For sanctity call'd, through the isle,
The Saint of Lindisfarne.

XX.
Before them stood a guilty pair;
But, though an equal fate they share,
Yet one alone deserves our care,
Her sex a page's dress belied;
The cloak and doublet, loosely tied,
Obscured her charms, but could not hide.
Her cap down o'er her face she drew;
And, on her doublet breast,
She tried to hide the badge of blue,
Lord Marmion's falcon crest.
But, at the Prioress' command,
A monk unndid the silken band,
That tied her tresses fair,
And raised the bonnet from her head,
And down her slender form they spread,
In ringlets rich and rare,
Constance de Beverley they know,
Sister profess'd of Fontevraud,
Whom the church number'd with the dead,
For broken vows, and convent fled.

XXI.
When thus her face was given to view
(Although so pallid was her hue,
It did a ghastly contrast bear
To those bright ringlets glistering fair),
Her look composed, and steady eye,
Bespoke a matchless constancy;
And there she stood so calm and pale,
That, but her breathing did not fail,
And motion slight of eye and head,
And of her bosom, warranted
That neither sense nor pulse she lacks,
You might have thought a form of wax,
Wrought to the very life, was there;
So still she was, so pale, so fair.

XXII.
Her comrade was a sortid soul,
Such as does murder for a meed;
Who, but of fear, knows no control,
Because his conscience, sharro'd and foul,
Feels not the import of his deed;

"... Parisina's fatal charms
Again attracted every eye—
Would she thus hear him doom'd to die!
She stood, I said, all pale and still,
The living cause of Hugo's ill;
Her eyes unmoved, but full and wide,
Not once had turn'd to either side—
Nor once did those sweet eyelids close,
Or shade the glance o'er which they rose,
But round their orbs of deepest blue
The circling white dilated grew—
And there with glassy gaze she stood
As ice were in her curated blood;
But every now and then a tear
So large and slowly gather'd slid
From the long dark fringe of that fair lid,
It was a thing to see, not hear!
And those who saw, it did surprise,
Such drops could fall from human eyes.

Apothecary, Mr. Murray, 2nd of March, 1816.—Compare:
One whose brute feeling ne'er aspire\(^1\)
Beyond his own more brute desires.
Such tools the Tempter ever needs,
To do the savagest of deeds;
For them no vision'd terrors daunt,
Their nighs no fancied spectres haunt:
One fear with them, of all most base,—
The fear of death,—alone finds place.
This wretch was clad in frock and cowl,
And shamed not loud to moan and howl,
His body on the floor to dash,
And crouch, like hound beneath the lash;
While his mute partner, standing near,
Waited her doom without a tear.

XXIII.

Yet well the luckless wretch might shriek,
Well might her paleness terror speak!
For there were seen in that dark wall
Two niches, narrow, deep, and tall;—
Who enters at such grisly door,
Shall ne'er, I ween, find exit more.
In each a slender meal was laid,
Of roots, of water, and of bread:
By each, in Benedictine dress,
Two haggard monks stood motionless;
Who, holding high a blazing torch,
Show'd the grim entrance of the porch:
Reflecting back the smoky beam,
The dark-red walls and arches gleam.
Hewn stones and cement were display'd,
And building tools in order laid.

XXIV.

These executioners were chose
As men who were with mankind foes,
And with despite and envy fired,
Into the cloister had retir'd;
Or who, in desperate doubt of grace,
Strove, by deep penance, to efface
Of some foul crime the stain;
For, as the vassals of her will,
Such men the Church selected still,
As either joy'd in doing ill,

---

To speak she thought—the imperfect note
Was choked within her swelling throat,
Yet seemed in that low hollow groan
Her whole heart gushing in the tone.”

\(^1\) In some recent editions this word had been erroneously printed “aspires.” The MS. has the correct line:
“One whose brute feeling ne'er aspire.”

\(^2\) See Appendix, Note 2 M.

\(^3\) MS.: “A feeble and a flutter'd streak,
Like that with which the mornings break
In Autumn's sober sky.”

\(^4\) “Mr. S. has judiciously combined the horrors of the punishment with a very beautiful picture of the offender, so as to heighten the interest which the situation itself must necessarily excite; and the struggle of Constance to speak, before the fatal sentence, is finely painted.”—Monthly Review.

Or thought more grace to gain,
If, in her cause, they wrestled down
Feelings their nature strove to own.
By strange device were they brought there,
They knew not how, nor knew not where.

XXV.

And now that blind old Abbot rose,
To speak the Chapter's doom
On those the wall was to enclose,
Alive, within the tomb;\(^2\)
But stopp'd, because that woeful Maid,
Gathering her powers, to speak essay'd.
Twice she essay'd, and twice in vain;
Her accents might no utterance gain;
Nought but imperfect murmurs slip
From her convulsed and quivering lip;
'Twixt each attempt all was so still,
You seem'd to hear a distant rill—
'Twas ocean's swells and falls;
For though this vault of sin and fear
Was to the sounding surge so near,
A tempest there you scarce could hear,
So massive were the walls.

XXVI.

At length, an effort sent apart
The blood that curdled to her heart,
And light came to her eye,
And color dawn'd upon her cheek,
A hectic and a flutter'd streak;\(^3\)
Like that left on the Cheviot peak
By Autumn's stormy sky;
And when her silence broke at length,
Still as she spoke she gather'd strength,
And arm'd herself to bear.\(^4\)
It was a fearful sight to see
Such high resolve and constancy
In form so soft and fair.\(^5\)

XXVII.

“I speak not to implore your grace;\(^6\)
Well known I, for one minute's space
Successless might I sue:

---

\(^5\) MS.: "And mann'd herself to bear.
It was a fearful thing to see
Such high resolve and constancy,
In form so soft and fair;
*Like Summer's dew her accents fell,
But dreadful was her tale to tell."

\(^6\) MS.: "I speak not now to sue for grace,
For well I know one minute's space
Your mercy scarce would grant;
Nor do I speak your prayers to gain;
For if my penance be in vain,
Your prayers I cannot want.
Full well I knew the church's doom,
What time I left a convent's glose,
To fly with him I loved;
And well my folly's meed he gave—
I forfetted, to be a slave,
All here, and all beyond the grave,
Nor do I speak your prayers to gain;
For if a death of lingering pain,
To cleanse my sins, be penance vain,
Vain are your masses too,—
I listen’d to a traitor’s tale,
I left the convent and the veil;
For three long years I bow’d my pride,
A horse-boy in his train to ride;
And well my folly’s meed he gave,
Who forfeited, to be his slave,
All here, and all beyond the grave.—
He saw young Clara’s face more fair,
He knew her of broad lands the heir,
Forgot his vows, his faith forswore,
And Constance was beloved no more.—
’Tis an old tale, and often told;
But did my fate and wish agree,
Ne’er had been read, in story old,
Of maiden true betray’d for gold,
That loved, or was avenged, like me!

XXVIII.

“The King approved his favorite’s aim;
In vain a rival bârd his claim,
Whose fate with Clare’s was plight,
For he attains that rival’s fame
With treason’s charge—and on they came,
In mortal lists to fight.
Their oaths are said,
Their prayers are pray’d,
Their lances in the rest are laid,
They meet in mortal shock;
And, hark! the throng, with thundering cry,
Shout ‘Marmion! Marmion! to the sky,
De Wilton to the block!’
Say ye, who preach Heaven shall decide
When in the lists two champions ride,
Say, was Heaven’s justice here?
When, loyal in his love and faith,
Wilton found overthrow or death,
Beneath a traitor’s spear?
How false the charge, how true he fell,
This guilty packet best can tell.”—
Then drew a packet from her breast,
Paused, gather’d voice, and spoke the rest.

XXIX.

“Still was false Marmion’s bridal staid;
To Whitby’s convent fled the maid,
The hated match to shun.
‘Ho! shifts she thus?’ King Henry cried;
‘Sir Marmion, she shall be thy bride,
If she were sworn a nun.’

And faithless hath he proved;
He saw another’s face more fair,
He saw her of broad lands the heir,
And Constance loved no more—
Loved her no more, who, once Heaven’s bride,
Now a scorn’d mendial by his side,
Had wander’d Europe o’er.”

One way remain’d—the King’s command
Sent Marmion to the Scottish land:
I linger’d here, and rescue plann’d
For Clara and for me:
This caitiff Monk, for gold, did swear
He would to Whitby’s shrine repair,
And, by his drugs, my rival fair
A saint in heaven should be.
But ill the dastard kept his oath,
Whose cowardice has undone us both.

XXX.

“And now my tongue the secret tells,
Not that remorse my bosom swells,
But to assure my soul that none
Shall ever wed with Marmion.²
Had fortune my last hope betray’d,
This packet, to the King convey’d,
Had given him to the headsman’s stroke,
Although my heart that instant broke.—
Now, men of death, work forth your will,
For I can suffer, and be still;
And come he slow, or come he fast,
It is but Death who comes at last.

XXXI.

“Yet dread me, from my living tomb,
Ye vassal slaves of bloody Rome!
If Marmion’s late remorse should wake,
Full soon such vengeance will he take,
That you shall wish the fiery Dane
Had rather been your guest again,
Behind, a darker hour ascends!
The altars quake, the crosier bends,
The ire of a despotic King
Rides forth upon destruction’s wing;
Then shall these vaults, so strong and deep,
Burst open to the sea-winds’ sweep;
Some traveller then shall find my bones
Whitening amid disjointed stones,
And, ignorant of priests’ cruelty,³ Marvel such relics here should be.”

XXXII.

Fix’d was her look, and stern her air:
Back from her shoulders stream’d her hair;
The locks, that went her brow to shade,
Stared up erectly from her head;⁴
Her figure seem’d to rise more high;
Her voice, despair’s wild energy
Had given a tone of prophecy.

¹ MS.: “Say, ye who preach the heavens decide
When in the lists the warriors ride.”
⁲ The MS. adds: “His schemes reveal’d, his honor gone.”
³ MS.: “And, witless of priests’ cruelty.”
⁴ MS.: “Stared up (aspiring) from her head.”
Marmion.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO THIRD.

TO

WILLIAM ERKINE, ESQ.\(^6\)

Ashestiel, Ettrick Forest.

Like April morning clouds, that pass,
With varying shadow, o'er the grass,
And imitate, on field and furrow,
Life's chequer'd scene of joy and sorrow;
Like streamlet of the mountain north,
Now in a torrent racing forth,
Now winding slow its silver train,
And almost slumbering on the plain;
Like breezes of the Autumn day,
Whose voice inconstant dies away,
And ever swells again as fast,
When the ear deems its murmur past;—
Thus various, my romantic theme
Flits, winds, or sinks, a morning dream.
Yet pleased, our eye pursues the trace
Of Light and Shade's inconstant race;
Pleased, views the rivulet afar,
Weaving its maze irregular;
And pleased, we listen as the breeze
Heaves its wild sigh through Autumn trees:
Then, wild as cloud, or stream, or gale,
Flow on, flow unconfined, my Tale!

Need I to thee, dear Erkine, tell
I love the license all too well,
In sounds now lowly, and now strong,
To raise the desultory song?—\(^6\)
Oft, when 'mid such capricious chime,
Some transient fit of lofty rhyme
To thy kind judgment seem'd excuse
For many an error of the muse,
Oft hast thou said, "If, still misspent,
Thine hours to poetry are lent,\(^7\)

1 See Note 2 on stanza xxv. ante, p. 94.
2 MS.: "From that dark penance vault to day."
3 MS.: "That night, amid the vesper's swell,
They thought they heard Constantia's yell,
And bade the mighty bell to toll,
For welfare of a passing soul."
4 "The sound of the bell that was rung for the parting soul of this victim of seduction is described with great force and solemnity."—JEFREY.
5 "The whole of this trial and doom presents a high-wrought scene of horror, which, at the close, rises almost to too great a pitch."—Scot's Mag. March, 1808.
6 MS.: "With sound now lowly, and now strong,
Irregular to wake the lyre."
7 MS.: "Thine hours to thriftless rhyme are lent."
Go, and to tame thy wandering course,
Quaff from the fountain at the source;
Approach those masters, o'er whose tomb
Immortal laurels ever bloom;
Instructive of the feeble bard,
Still from the grave their voice is heard;
From them, and from the paths they show'd,
Choose honor'd guide and practiced road;
Nor ramble on through brake and maze,
With harpers rude of barbarous days.

"Or deem'st thou not our later time\nYields topic meet for classic rhyme?\nHast thou no elegiac verse\nFor Brunswick's venerable hearse?\nWhat! not a line, a tear, a sigh,
When valor bleeds for liberty?—\nOh! hero of that glorious time,
When, with unrival'd light sublime,—\nThough martial Austria, and though all
The might of Russia, and the Gaul,
Though banded Europe stood her foes,—
The star of Brandenburgh arose!
Thou couldst not live to see her beam
For ever quench'd in Jenna's stream.
Lamented Chief!—it was not given
To thee to change the doom of Heaven,
And crush that dragon in its birth,
Predestined scourge of guilty earth.
Lamented Chief!—not thine the power
To save in that presumptious hour,
When Prussia hurried to the field,
And snatch'd the spear, but left the shield!
Valor and skill 'twas thine to try,
And, tried in vain, 'twas thine to die.
Ill had it seem'd thy silver hair
The last, the bitterest pang to share,
For princeloms reft, and sventheous riven,
And birthrights to usurpers given;
Thy land's, thy children's wrongs to feel,
And witness woes thou couldst not heal!

1 MS.: "Dost thou not deem our later day
Yields topic meet for classic lay?
Hast thou no elegiac tone
To join that universal moon,
Which mingled with the battle's yell,
Where venerable Brunswick fell?—
What! not a verse, a tear, a sigh,
When valor bleeds for liberty?"

2 MS.: "For honor'd life an honor'd close—
The boon which falling heroes crave,
A soldier's death, a warrior's grave.
Or it, with more exulting swell,
Of conquering chiefs thou lovest to tell,
Give to the harp an unheard strain,
And sing the triumphs of the main—
Of him the Red-Cross hero teach.
Dauntless on Acre's bloody breach,
And, scion of tyrannic power,
As dauntless in the Temple's tower:
Alike to him the sea, the shore,
The brand, the bridge, or the ear,
On thee relenting Heaven bestows
For honor'd life an honor'd close?\nAnd when revolves, in time's sure change,
The hour of Germany's revenge,
When, breathing fury for her sake,
Some new Arminius shall awake,
Her champion, ere he strike, shall come
To whet his sword on Brunswick's tomb."

"Or of the Red-Cross hero teach,
Dauntless in dungeon as on breach:
Alike to him the sea, the shore,
The brand, the bridge, or the ear:
Alike to him the war that calls
Its votaries to the shattered walls,
Which the grim Turk, besmeard with blood,
Against the Invincible made good;
Or that, whose thundering voice could wake
The silence of the polar lake,
When stubborn Russ, and mettall'd Swede,
On the warp'd wave their death-game play'd;
Or that, where Vengeance and Affright
How'd round the father of the fight,
Who snatch'd, on Alexandria's sand,
The conqueror's wreath with dying hand."

"Or, if to touch such chord be thine,
Restore the ancient tragic line,
And emulate the notes that rang
From the wild harp, which silent hung
By silver Avon's holy shore,
Till twice an hundred years roll'd o'er;
When she, the bold Enchantress came,
With fearless hand and heart on flame!
From the pale willow snatch'd the treasure,
And swept it with a kindred measure,
Till Avon's swans, while rung the grove
With Montfort's hate and Basil's love,
Awakening at the inspired strain,
Deem'd their own Shakspere lived again."

The general's eye, the pilot's art,
The soldier's arm, the sailor's heart.
Or if to touch such chord be thine," &c.

3 "Scott seems to have communicated fragments of the poem very freely during the whole of its progress. As early as the 23d February, 1807, I find Mrs. Hayman acknowledging, in the name of the Princess of Wales, the receipt of a copy of the Introduction to Canto III, in which occurs the tribute to her royal highness's heroic father, mortally wounded the year before at Jena—a tribute so grateful to her feelings that she herself shortly after sent the poet an elegant silver vase as a memorial of her thankfulness. And about the same time the Marchioness of Abercorn expresses the delight with which both she and her lord had read the generous verses on Pitt and Fox in another of those epistles."—Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 9.

4 Sir Sidney Smith.

5 Sir Ralph Abercromby.

6 Joanna Baillie.
Thy friendship thus thy judgment wronging,
With praises not to me belonging,
In task more meet for mightiest powers
Wouldst thou engage my thirstless hours.
But say, my Erskine, hast thou weigh'd
That secret power by all obey'd,
Which warps not less the passive mind,
Its source conceal'd or undefined;
Whether an impulse, that has birth
Soon as the infant wakes on earth,
One with our feelings and our powers,
And rather part of us than ours;
Or whether fillier term'd the sway
Of habit, form'd in early day?
How'er derived, its force confest
Rules with despotic sway the breast,
And drags us on by viewless chain,
While taste and reason plead in vain.\(^1\)
Look east, and ask the Belgian why,
Beneath Batavia's sultry sky,
He seeks not eager to inhale
The freshness of the mountain gale,
Content to rear his whit'en'd wall
Beside the dank and dull canal?
He'll say, from youth he loved to see
The white sail gliding by the tree,
Or see ye weatherbeaten bind,
Whose sluggish herds before him wind,
Whose tatter'd plaid and rugged check
His northern clime and kindred speak;
Through England's laughing meads he goes,
And England's wealth around him flows;
Ask, if it would content him well
At ease in those gay plains to dwell,
Where hedge-rows spread a verdant screen,
And spires and forests intervene,
And the neat cottage peeps between?
No! not for these would he exchange
His dark Lochaber's boundless range:
Not for fair Devon's meads forsake
Bennevis gray, and Garry's lake.

Thus while I ape the measure wild
Of tales that charm'd me yet a child,
Rude though they be, still with the chime
Return the thoughts of early time;
And feelings, roused in life's first day,
Glow in the line, and prompt the lay.

Then rise those crags, that mountain tower,
Which charmed my fancy's waking hour:
Though no broad river swept along,
To claim, perchance, heroic song;
Though sigh'd no groves in summer gale,
To prompt of love a softer tale;
Though scarce a puny streamlet's speed
Claim'd homage from a shepherd's reed;
Yet was poetic impulse given,
By the green hill and clear blue heaven.
It was a barren scene, and wild,
Where naked cliffs were rudely piled;
But ever and anon between
Lay velvet tufts of loveliest green;
And well the lonely infant knew
Recesses where the wall-flower grew;\(^2\)
And honeysuckle loved to crawl
Up the low crag and ruin'd wall.
I deem'd such nooks the sweetest shade
The sun in all its round survey'd;
And still I thought that shutter'd tower\(^3\)
The mightiest work of human power;
And marvel'd as the aged hind
With some strange tale bewitch'd my mind,
Of forayers, who, with headlong force,
Down from that strength had spurred their horse,
Their southern rapine to renew,
Far in the distant Cheviot's blue,
And, home returning, fill'd the hall
With revel, Wassail-Rout, and brawl.\(^4\)
Methought that still with trump and clang
The gateway's broken arches rang;
Methought grim features, scar'd with scars,
Glared through the window's rusty bars,
And ever, by the winter hearth,
Old tales I heard of woe or mirth,
Of lovers' slights, of ladies' charms,
Of witches' spells, of warriors' arms;
Of patriot battles, won of old
By Wallace wight and Bruce the bold;
Of later fields of feud and fight,
When, pouring from their Highland height,
The Scottish clans, in headlong sway,
Had swept the scarlet ranks away.
While stretch'd at length upon the floor,
Again I fought each combat o'er,
Pebbles and shells, in order laid,
The mimic ranks of war display'd;

Reason itself but gives it edge and power;
As Heaven's best beam turns vinegar more sour," &c.

Pope's Essay on Man.—Ed.

\(^1\) "As man, perhaps, the moment of his breath,
Receives the lurking principle of death;
The young disease, that must sublue at length,
Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength:
So, east and mingled with his very frame,
The Mind's disease, its RAGING Passion came;
Each vital humor which should feed the whole,
Soon flows to this, in body and in soul;
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination piles her dangerous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part.

"Nature its mother, Habit is its nurse;
Wit, Spirit, Faculties, but make it worse;

\(^2\) MS.: "The lonely hill, the rocky tower,
That caught attention's waking hour."

\(^3\) MS.: "Recesses where the woodbine grew."

\(^4\) Smailholm Tower, in Berwrickshire, the scene of the Author's infamy, is situated about two miles from Dryburgh Abbey.

\(^6\) The two next couplets are not in the MS.

\(^6\) MS.: "While still with mimic hosts of shells,
Again my sport the combat tells—
Onward the Scottish Lion bore,
The scatter'd Soutron fled before."
MARMION.

99

And onward still the Scottish Lion bore,
And still the scatter'd Southeron fled before.

Still, with vain fondness, could I trace,
Anew, each kind familiar face,
That brighten'd at our evening fire!
From the thatch'd mansion's gray-hair'd Sire,²
Wise without learning, plain and good,
And sprung of Scotland's gentler blood;
Whose eye, in age, quick, clear, and keen,
Show'd what in youth its glance had been;
Whose doom discording neighbors sought,
Content with equity unbought;³
To him the venerable Priest,
Our frequent and familiar guest,
Whose life and manners well could paint
Alike the student and the saint;⁴
Alas! whose speech too oft I broke
With gambol rude and timeless joke:
For I was wayward, bold, and wild,
A self-will'd imp, a grandame's child;
But half a plague, and half a jest,
Was still endured, beloved, caress'd.

For me, thus nurtured, dost thou ask
The classic poet's well-conn'd task?
Nay, Erskine, nay—On the wild hill
Let the wild heath-bell flourish still;
Cherish the tulip, prune the vine,
But freely let the woodbine twine,
And leave untrimm'd the gillianine:
Nay, my friend, nay—Since oft thy praise
Hath given fresh vigor to my lays;
Since oft thy judgment could refine
My flatten'd thought, or cumbrous line;
Still kind, as is thy wont, attend,
And in the minstrel spare the friend.
Though wild as cloud, as stream, as gale,
Flow forth, flow unrestrain'd, my Tale!

MARMION.

CANTO THIRD.

The Hostel, or Inn.

I.
The livelong day Lord Marmion rode:
The mountain path the Palmer show'd,

By glen and streamlet winded still,
Where stunted birches hid the rill.
They might not choose the lowland road,⁵
For the Merse forayers were abroad,
Who, fired with hate and thirst of prey,
Had scarcely fail'd to bar their way.
Oft on the trampling band, from crown
Of some tall cliff, the deer look'd down;
On wing of jet, from his repose
In the deep heath, the black-cock rose;
Sprung from the gorse the timid roe,
Nor waited for the bending bow;
And when the stony path began,
By which the naked peak they wan,
Up flew the snowy ptarmigan.
The noon had long been pass'd before
They gain'd the height of Lammermoor;⁶
Thenée winding down the northern way,
Before them, at the close of day,
Old Gifford's towers and hamlet lay.¹

II.

No summons calls them to the tower,
To spend the hospitable hour,
To Scotland's camp the Lord was gone;
His cautious dame, in bower alone,
Dreaded her castle to unclose,
So late, to unknown friends or foes.
On through the hamlet as they paced,
Before a porch, whose front was grace'd
With bush and flagon trimly placed,
Lord Marmion drew his rein:
The village inn seem'd large, though rude;⁵
Its cheerful fire and hearty food
Might well relieve his train.
Down from their seats the horsemen sprung,
With jingling spurs the court-yard rung;
They bind their horses to the stall,
For fare, food, and firing call,
And various clamor fills the hall:
Weighing the labor with the cost,
Toils everywhere the bustling host.

III.

Soon, by the chimney's merry blaze,
Through the rude hostel might you gaze;
Might see where, in dark nook aloof,
The rafters of the sooty roof
Bore wealth of winter cheer;

minister of Mertoun, in which parish Smallholm Tower is situated.

¹ See notes on The Eve of St. John.
² Robert Scott of Sandyknowe, the grandfather of the Poet.
³ Upon revising the Poem, it seems proper to mention that the lines,

"Whose doom discarding neighbors sought, Content with equity unbought,"

have been unconsciously borrowed from a passage in Dryden's beautiful epistle to John Drifden of Chesterton.—1808. Note to Second Edit.

⁴ MS.: "The student, gentleman, and saint."
The reverend gentleman alluded to was Mr. John Martin,

⁵ MS.: "They might not choose the easier road,
For many a forayer was abroad."

⁶ See Notes to "The Bride of Lammermoor." Waverley Novels, vols. xiii. and xiv.

⁷ The village of Gifford lies about four miles from Haddington; close to it is Yester House, the seat of the Marquis of Tweeddale, and a little farther up the stream, which descends from the hills of Lammermoor, are the remains of the old castle of the family.

⁸ See Appendix, Note 2 N.
Of sea-fowl dried, and solands store,
And gammons of the tusky boar,
And savory haunch of deer.
The chimney arch projected wide;
Above, around it, and beside,
Were tools for housewives’ hand;
Nor wanted, in that martial day,
The implements of Scottish fray,
The buckler, lance, and brand.
Beneath its shade, the place of state,
On oaken settle Marmion sate,
And view’d around the blazing hearth
His followers mix in noisy mirth;
Whom with brown ale, in jolly tide,
From ancient vessels ranged aside,
Full actively their host supplied.

IV.

Their was the glee of martial breast,
And laughter theirs at little jest;
And oft Lord Marmion deign’d to aid,
And mingle in the mirth they made;
For though, with men of high degree,
The proudest of the proud was he,
Yet, train’d in camps, he knew the art
To win the soldier’s hardy heart.
They love a captain to obey,
Boisterous as March, yet fresh as May;
With open hand, and brow as free,
Lover of wine and minstrelsy;
Ever the first to scale a tower,
As venturous in a lady’s bower:—
Such buxom chief shall lead his host
From India’s fires to Zembla’s frost.

V.

Resting upon his pilgrim staff,
Right opposite the Palmer stood;
His thin dark visage seen but half,
Half hidden by his hood.
Still fix’d on Marmion was his look,
Which he, who ill such gaze could brook,
Strove by a frown to quell;
But not for that, though more than once
Full met their stern encountering glance,
The Palmer’s visage fell.

VI.

By fits less frequent from the crowd
Was heard the burst of laughter loud;
For still, as squire and archer stared
On that dark face and matted beard,
Their gaze and game declined.
All gazed at length in silence drear,
Unbrooke, save when in comrade’s ear
Some yeoman, wondering in his fear,
Thus whisper’d forth his mind:—
“Saint Mary! saw’st thou e’er such sight?

How pale his cheek, his eye how bright,
Whene’er the firebrand’s fickle light
Glances beneath his own!
Full on our Lord he sets his eye;
For his best palfrey, would not I
Endure that sullen scowl.”

VII.

But Marmion, as to chase the awc
Which thus had quell’d their hearts, who saw
The ever-varying fire-light show
That figure stern and face of woe,
Now call’d upon a squire:—
“Fitz-Eustace, know’st thou not some lay
To speed the lingering night away?
We slumber by the fire.”

VIII.

“So please you,” thus the youth rejoin’d,
“Our chosiest minstrel’s left behind.
Ill may we hope to please your ear,
Accustom’d Coniston’s strains to hear.
The harp full deftly can he strike,
And wake the lover’s lute alike;
To dear Saint Valentine, no thrush
Sings livelier from a spring-tide bush,
No nightingale her love-born tune
More sweetly warbles to the moon.
Woe to the cause, whate’er it be,
Detains from us his melody,
Lavish’d on rocks, and billows stern,
Or duller monks of Lindisfarne.
Now must I venture, as I may,
To sing his favorite roundelay.”

IX.

A mellow voice Fitz-Eustace had,
The air he chose was wild and sad;
Such have I heard, in Scottish land,
Rise from the busy harvest band,
When falls before the mountaineer,
On Lowland plains, the ripen’d ear
Now one shrill voice the notes prolong,
Now a wild chorus swells the song;
Oft have I listen’d, and stood still,
As it came soften’d up the hill,
And deem’d it the lament of men
Who languish’d for their native glen;
And thought how sad would be such sound
On Susquehanna’s swampy ground,
Kentucky’s wood-encumber’d brake,
Or wild Ontario’s boundless lake,
Where heart-sick exiles, in the strain,
Recall’d fair Scotland’s hills again.

X.

Song.

Where shall the lover rest,
Whom the fates sever
From his true maiden’s breast,
Parted for ever?
Where, through groves deep and high,
Sounds the far billow,
Where early violets die,
Under the willow.

CHORUS.
Eleu lory, &c. Soft shall be his pillow.

There, through the summer day,
Cool streams are laving;
There, while the tempests sway,
Scarce are boughs waving;
There, thy rest shalt thou take,
Parted for ever,
Never again to wake,
Never, oh never!

CHORUS.
Eleu lory, &c. Never, oh never!

XI.
Where shall the traitor rest,
He, the deceiver,
Who could win maiden’s breast,
Ruin, and leave her?
In the lost battle,
Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war’s rattle
With groans of the dying.

CHORUS.
Eleu lory, &c. There shall he be lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap
O’er the false-hearted;
His warm blood the wolf shall lap,
Ere life be parted.
Shame and dishonor sit
By his grave ever;
Blessing shall hallow it,—
Never, oh never!

CHORUS.
Eleu lory, &c. Never, oh never!

XII.
It ceased, the melancholy sound;
And silence sunk on all around,
The air was sad; but sadder still
It fell on Marmion’s ear,
And plain’d as if disgrace and ill,
And shameful death, were near.
He drew his mantle past his face,
Between it and the band,

And rested with his head a space
Reclining on his hand.
His thoughts I scan not; but I ween
That, could their import have been seen,
The meanest groom in all the hall,
That e’er tied courser to a stall,
Would scarce have wish’d to be their prey,
For Lutterward and Fontenaye.

XIII.
High minds, of native pride and force,
Most deeply feel thy pangs, Remorse!
Fear, for their scourge, mean villains have,
Thou art the torturer of the brave!
Yet fatal strength they boast to steel
Their minds to bear the wounds they feel,
Even while they writhe beneath the smart
Of civil conflict in the heart.
For soon Lord Marmion raised his head,
And, smiling, to Fitz-Eustace said,—
"Is it not strange, that, as ye sung,
Seem’d in mine ear a death-peat roug,
Such as in nunneries they toll
For some departing sister’s soul?
Say, what may this portend?"—
Then first the Palmer silence broke
(The livelong day he had not spoke),
"The death of a dear friend."

XIV.
Marmion, whose steady heart and eye
Ne’er changed in worst extremity;
Marmion, whose soul could scantily brook,
Even from his King, a haughty look; 2
Whose accent of command controll’d,
In camps, the boldest of the bold—
Thought, look, and utterance fail’d him now,
Fall’n was his glance, and flush’d his brow:
For either in the tone,
Or something in the Palmer’s look,
So full upon his conscience strook,
That answer he found none.
Thus oft it hapts, that when within
They shrink at sense of secret sin,
A feather daunts the brave;
A fool’s wild speech confounds the wise,
And proudest princes veil their eyes
Before their meanest slave.

XV.
Well might he falter!—By his aid
Was Constance Beverley betray’d.
Not that he augur’d of the doom
Which on the living closed the tomb:
But, tired to hear the desperate maid 3
Threaten by turns, beseech, upbraid;

1 See Appendix, Note 2 O.
2 MS.: “Marmion, whose pride
Whose haughty soul y could never brook,

Even from his King, a scornful look.”
3 MS.: “But tired to hear the furious maid.”
And wroth, because in wild despair
She practiced on the life of Clare;
Its fugitive the church he gave,
Though not a victim, but a slave;
And deem'd restraint in convent strange
Would hide her wrongs, and her revenge.
Himself, proud Henry's favorite peer,
Held Romish thunders idle fear,
Secure his pardon he might hold,
For some slight mullet of penance-gold.
Thus judging, he gave secret way,
When the stern priests surprised their prey.
His train but deem'd the favorite page
Was left behind to spare his age;
Or other if they deem'd, none dared
To utter what he thought and heard:
Woe to the vassal who durst pry
Into Lord Marmion's privacy!

XVI.
His conscience slept—he deem'd her well,
And safe secured in distant cell;
But, waken'd by her favorite lay,
And that strange Palmer's boding say,
That fell so ominous and drear,
Full on the object of his fear,
To aid remorse's venom'd throstes,
Dark tales of Convent-vengeance rose;
And Constance, late betray'd and scorn'd,
All lovely on his soul return'd;
Lovely as when, at treacherous call,
She left her convent's peaceful wall,
Crimson'd with shame, with terror mute,
Dreading alike escape, pursuit,
Till love, victorious o'er alarms,
Hid fears and blushes in his arms.

XVII.
"Alas!" he thought, "how changed that mien!
How changed these timid looks have been,
Since years of guilt, and of disguise,
Have steel'd her brow, and arm'd her eyes!
No more of virgin terror speaks
The blood that mantles in her checks;
Fierce and unfeminine, are there
Frenzy for joy, for grief despair;
And I the cause—for whom were given
Her peace on earth, her hopes in heaven!—
Would," thought he, as the picture grows,
"I on its stalk had left the rose?
Oh, why should man's success remove
The very charms that wake his love!—
Her convent's peaceful solitude
Is now a prison harsh and rude;
And, pent within the narrow cell,
How will her spirit chafe and swell!
How brook the stern monastic laws!
The penance how—and I the cause!—
Vigil and seourge—perchance even worse!"—
And twice he rose to cry, "To horse!"—
And twice his Sovereign's mandate came,
Like damp upon a kindling flame;
And twice he thought, "Gave I not charge
She should be safe, though not at large?
They durst not, for their island, shred
One golden ringlet from her head."

XVIII.
While thus in Marmion's bosom strove
Repentance and reviving love,
Like whirlwinds whose contending sway
I've seen Loch Vennachar obey,
Their host the Palmer's speech had heard,
And, talkative, took up the word:
"Ay, reverend Pilgrim, you who stray
From Scotland's simple land away, 3
To visit realms afar,
Full often learn the art to know
Of future weal, or future woe,
By word, or sign, or star;
Yet might a knight his fortune hear,
If, knight-like, he despises fear,
Not far from hence;—if fathers old
Aright our hamlet legend told."—
These broken words the menials move
(For marvels still the vulgar love),
And, Marmion giving license cold,
His tale the host thus gladly told:—

XIX.
The Host's Tale.
"A Clerk could tell what years have flown
Since Alexander built our throne
(Third monarch of that warlike name),
And eke the time when here he came
To seek Sir Hugo, then our lord:
A braver never drew a sword;
A wiser never, at the hour
Of midnight, spoke the word of power:
The same, whom ancient records call
The founder of the Goblin Hall. 4
I would, Sir Knight, your longer stay
Gave you that cavern to survey.
Of lofty roof, and ample size,
Beneath the castle deep it lies:
To hew the living rock profound,
The floor to pave, the arch to round,

1 MS.: "increased, because in wild despair."
2 The MS. read:
"Since fierceer passions wild and high,
Have steel'd her cheek with deeper dye,
And years of guilt: and of disgrace,
Have steel'd her brow, and arm'd her eyes,

3 MS.: "From this plain simple land away."
4 See Appendix, Note 2 P.
There never toil'd a mortal arm,
It all was wrought by word and charm;
And I have heard my grandsire say,
That the wild elanor and affray
Of those dread artisans of hell,
Who laboured under Hugo's spell,
Sounded as loud as ocean's war,
Among the caverns of Dunbar.

XX.
"The King Lord Gifford's castle sought,
Deep laboring with uncertain thought;
Even then he mustered all his host,
To meet upon the western coast:
For Norse and Danist galleys plied
Their oars within the frith of Clyde.
There floated Haco's banner trim,\(^1\)
Above Norwyan warriors grim,\(^2\)
Savage of heart, and large of limb;
Threatening both continent and isle,
Bute, Arran, Cunninghame, and Kyle.
Lord Gifford, deep beneath the ground,
Heard Alexander's bugle sound,
And tarried not his garb to change,
But, in his wizard habit strange,\(^3\)
Came forth,—a quaint and fearful sight;
His mantle lined with fox-skins white;
His high and wrinkled forehead bare
A pointed cap, such as of yore
Clerks say that Pharaoh's Magi wore:
His shoes were mark'd with cross and spell,
Upon his breast a pentacle;\(^4\)
His zone, of virgin parchment thin,
Or, as some tell, of dead man's skin,
Bore many a planetary sign,
Combust, and retrograde, and trine;\(^5\)
And in his hand he held prepared
A naked sword without a guard.

XXI.
"Dire dealings with the fiendish race
Had mark'd strange lines upon his face;
Vigil and fast had worn him grim,
His eyesight dazzled seem'd and dim,
As one unused to upper day;
Even his own menials with dismay
Beheld, Sir Knight, the grisly Sire,
In his unwonted wild attire;
Unwonted, for traditions run,
He seldom thus beheld the sun.—
'I know,' he said,—his voice was hoarse,
And broken seem'd its hollow force,—

\(^1\) See Appendix, Note 2 Q.
\(^2\) MS.: "There floated Haco's banner grim
Over fierce of heart and large of limb."
\(^3\) See Appendix, Note 2 R.
\(^4\) Ibid. Note 2 S.
\(^5\) MS.: "Rare many a character and sign,
Of planets retrograde and trine."

'I know the cause, although untold,
Why the King seeks his vassal's hold:
Vainly from me my liege would know
His kingdom's future weal or woe;
But yet, if strong his arm and heart,
His courage may do more than art.

XXII.
"Of middle air the demons proud,
Who ride upon the racking cloud,
Can read, in fix'd or wandering star,
The issue of events afar;
But still their sullen aid withhold,
Save when by mightier force control'd.
Such late I summon'd to my hall;
And though so potent was the call,
That scarce the deepest nook of hell
I deem'd a refuge from the spell,
Yet, obstinate in silence still,
The haughty demon mocks my skill.
But thou,—who little know'st thy might,
As born upon that blessed night\(^6\)
When yawning graves, and dying groan,
Proclaim'd hell's empire overthrown,—
With untaught valor shall compel
Response denied to magic spell.—\(^7\)
'Gramercy,' quoth our Monarch free,
'Place him but front to front with me,
And, by this good and honor'd brand,
The gift of Cœur-de-Lion's hand,
Soothly I swear that, tide what tide,
The demon shall a buffet hide.'—\(^8\)
His bearing bold the wizard view'd,
And thus, well pleased, his speech renew'd:—
'There spoke the blood of Malcolm!—mark:
Forth pacing hence, at midnight dark,
The rampart seek, whose circling crown\(^9\)
Crests the ascent of yonder down:
A southern entrance shalt thou find;
There halt, and there thy bugle wind,
And trust thine elfin foe to see,
In guise of thy worst enemy:
Couch then thy lance, and spur thy steed—
Upon him! and Saint George to speed!
If he go down, thou soon shalt know
Whate'er these airy sprites can show;—
If thy heart fail thee in the strife,
I am no warrant for thy life.'

XXIII.
"Soon as the midnight bell did ring,
Alone, and arm'd, forth rode the King

\(^6\) See Appendix, Note 2 T.
\(^7\) MS.: "With untaught valor must compel
What is denied to magic spell."
\(^8\) MS.: "Bicker and buffet he shall bide."
\(^9\) MS.: "Seek that old trench that as a crown."
XXIV.

"The vision made our Monarch start,
But soon he mann'd his noble heart,
And in the first career they ran,
The Elfin Knight fell, horse and man;
Yet did a splinter of his lance
Through Alexander's visor glance,
And razed the skin—a puny wound.
The King, light leaping to the ground,
With naked blade his phantom foe
Compell'd the future war to show.
Of Largs he saw the glorious plain,
Where still gigantic bones remain,
Memorial of the Danish war;
Himself he saw, amid the field,
On high his brandish'd war-axe wield,
And strike proud Hao from his car,
While all around the shadowy Kings
Denmark's grim ravens cover'd their wings.
'Tis said that, in that awful night,
Remoter visions met his sight,
Foreshowing future conquests far,
When our sons' sons wage northern war;

| A royal city, tower and spire, |
| Redden'd the midnight sky with fire, |
| And shouting crews her navy bore, |
| Triumphant, to the victor shore. |
| Such signs may learned clerks explain, |
| They pass the wit of simple swain. |

XXV.

"The joyful King turn'd home again,
Headed his host, and quell'd the Dane;
But yearly when return'd the night
Of his strange combat with the sprite,
His wound must bleed and smart;
Lord Gifford then would gibe and say,
'Bold as ye were, my liege, ye pay
The penance of your start.'
Long since, beneath Dunfermline's nave,
King Alexander fills his grave,
Our Lady give him rest!
Yet still the knightly spear and shield
The Elfin Warrior doth wield,
Upon the brown hill's spear and shield
And many a knight hath proved his chance,
In the charm'd ring to break a lance,
But all have foully sped;
Save two, as legends tell, and they Were Wallace wight, and Gilbert Hay.—
Gentles, my tale is said."
Lightly he dreamt, as youth will dream,
Of sport by thicket, or by stream.
Of hawk or hound, of ring or glove,
Or, lighter yet, of lady's love.
A cautious tread his slumber broke,
And, close beside him, when he woke,
In moonbeam half, and half in gloom,
Stood a tall form, with nodding plume;
But ere his dagger Eustace drew,
His master Marmion's voice he knew.—

“Fitz-Eustace! rise, I cannot rest;
Yon churl's wild legend haunts my breast,
And graver thoughts have chased my mood:
The air must cool my feverish blood;
And fair would I ride forth, to see
The scene of elfin chivalry.
Arise, and saddle me my steed;²
And, gentle Eustace, take good heed
Thou dost not rouse these drowsy slaves;
I would not that the prating knaves
Had cause for saying, 'o'er their ale,
That I could credit such a tale.'—
Then softly down the steps they slid,
Eustace the stable door undid,
And, darkling, Marmion's steed array'd,
While, whispering, thus the Baron said:—

“Didst never, good my youth, hear tell,
That on the hour when I was born,
Saint George, who grace my sire's chapelle,
Down from his steed of marble fell,
A weary wight forlorn?
The flattering chalains all agree,
The champion left his steed to me.
I would, the omen's truth to show,
That I could meet this Elfin Foe?³
Blithe would I battle, for the right
To ask one question at the sprite:—
Vain thought! for elves, if elves there be,
An empty race, by fount or sea,
To dashing waves dance and sing,⁴
Or round the green oak wheel their ring.”
Thus speaking, he his steed bestrode,
And from the hostel slowly rode.

Fitz-Eustace followed him abroad,
And mark'd him pace the village road,
And listen'd to his horse's tramp,
Till, by the lessening sound,
He judged that of the Pictish camp
Lord Marmion sought the round.

Wonder it seem'd, in the squire's eyes,
That one so wary held, and wise,—
Of whom 'twas said, he scarce received
For gospel, what the church believed,—
Should, stirr'd by idle tale,
Ride forth in silence of the night,
As hoping half to meet a sprite,
Array'd in plate and mail.
For little did Fitz-Eustace know
That passions, in contending flow,
Unfix the strongest mind;
Wearied from doubt to doubt to flee,
We welcome fond credulity,
Guide confident, though blind.

Little for this Fitz-Eustace cared,
But, patient, waited till he heard,
At distance, prick'd to utmost speed,
The foot-trump of a flying steed
Come townward rushing on;
First, dead, as if on turf it trode,
Then, clattering on the village road,—
In other pace than forth he yode;⁵
Return'd Lord Marmion.
Down hastily he sprang from selle,
And, in his haste, wellnigh he fell;
To the squire's hand the rein he threw,
And spoke no word as he withdrew:
But yet the moonlight did betray,
The falcon-crest was soil'd with clay;
And plainly might Fitz-Eustace see,
By stains upon the charger's knee,
And his left side, that on the moor
He had not kept his footing sure.
Long musing on these wondrous signs,
At length to rest the squire reclines,
Broken and short; for still, between,
Would dreams of terror intervene:
Eustace did ne'er so blithely mark
The first notes of the morning lark.

Marmion.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FOURTH.

TO

JAMES SKENE, Esq.⁶

Ashiestiel, Etrick Forest.

AN ancient Minstrel sagely said,
"Where is the life which late we led?"
That motley clown in Arden wood,
Whom humorous Jaques with envy view'd,

¹ MS.: “But, ere his dagger Eustace drew,
R spoke—Lord Marmion's voice he knew.”
² MS.: “Come down and saddle me my steed.”
³ MS.: “I would, to prove the omen right,
That I could meet this Elfin Knight.”
⁴ MS.: “Dance to the wild waves' murmuring.”
⁵ Iate, used by old poets for went.
⁶ James Skene, Esq., of Rubislaw, Aberdeenshire, was Cornet in the Royal Edinburgh Light Horse Volunteers; and Sir Walter Scott was Quartermaster of the same corps.
Not even that clown could amplify,
On this trite text, so long as I.
Eleven years we now may tell,
Since we have known each other well;
Since, riding side by side, our hand
First drew the voluntary brand,1
And sure through many a varied scene,
Unkindness never came between.
Away these winged years have flown,
To join the mass of ages gone;
And though deep mark'd, like all below,
With chequer'd shades of joy and woe;
Though thou o'er realms and seas hast ranged,
Mark'd cities lost, and empires changed,
While here, at home, my narrower ken
Somewhat of manners saw, and men;
Though varying wishes, hopes, and fears,
Fever'd the progress of these years,
Yet now, days, weeks, and months, but seem
The recollection of a dream,
So still we glide down to the sea
Of fathomless eternity.

Even now it scarcely seems a day
Since first I tuned this idle lay;
A task so often thrown aside,
When leisure graver cares denied,
That now, November's dreary gale,
Whose voice inspir'd my opening tale,
That same November gale once more
Whirls the dry leaves on Yarrow shore,
Their vex'd boughs streaming to the sky,
Once more our naked birches sigh,
And Blackhouse heights, and Ettrick Pen,
Have donn'd their wintry shrouds again:
And mountain dark, and flooded mead,2
Bid us forsake the banks of Tweed,
Earlier than wont along the sky,
Mix'd with the rack, the snow mists fly;
The shepherd, who in summer sun
Had something of our envy won,
As thou with pencil, I with pen,
The features traced of hill and glen;—3
He who, outstretch'd the livelong day,
At ease among the heath-flowers lay,
View'd the light clouds with vacant look,
Or slumber'd o'er his tatter'd book,
Or idly busied him to guide
His angle o'er the lessen'd tide;—

At midnight now, the snowy plain
Finds sterner labor for the swain.

When red hath set the beamless sun,4
Through heavy vapors dark and dun;
When the tired ploughman, dry and warm,
Hears, half asleep, the rising storm
Hurling the hail, and sleeted rain,
Against the casement's tinkling pane;
The sounds that drive wild deer, and fox,
To shelter in the brake and rocks,
Are warnings which the shepherd ask
To dismal and to dangerous task.
Oft he looks forth, and hopes, in vain,
The blast may sink in mellowing rain;
Till, dark above, and white below,5
Decided drives the flaky snow,
And forth the hardy swain must go.
Long, with dejected look and whine,
To leave the hearth his dogs repine;
Whistling and cheering them to aid,
Around his back he wreathe's the plaid:
His flock he gathers, and he guides,
To open downs, and mountain-sides,
Where fiercest though the tempest blow,
Least deeply lies the drift below.
The blast, that whistles o'er the fells,6
Stiffens his locks to ieciles;
Oft he looks back, while streaming far,
His cottage window seems a star,—7
Loses its feeble gleam,—and then
Turns patient to the blast again,
And, facing to the tempest's sweep,
Drives through the gloom his laggins sheep.
If falls his heart, if his limbs fail,
Benumbing death is in the gale:
His paths, his landmarks, all unknown,
Close to the hut, no more his own,
Close to the aid he sought in vain,
The morn may find the stiven'd swain:
The widow sees, at Dawning pale,
His orphans raise their feeble wail;
And, close beside him, in the snow,
Poor Yarrow, partner of their woe,
Couches upon his master's breast,9
And licks his cheek to break his rest.

Who envies now the shepherd's lot,
His healthy fare, his rural cot,

---

1 MS.: "Unsheath'd the voluntary brand."
2 MS.: "And moontide mist, and flooded mead."
3 Various illustrations of the Poetry and Novels of Sir Walter Scott, from designs by Mr. Skene, have since been published.
4 MS.: "When red hath set the evening sun,
And loud winds speak the storm begun."
5 MS.: "Till thickly drives the flaky snow,
And forth the hardy swain must go,
While, with dejected look and whine," &c.
6 MS.: "The frozen blast that sweeps the fells."
7 MS.: "His cottage window beams a star,—
But soon he loses it,—and then Turns patient to his task again."
8 MS.: "The morn shall find the stiffen'd swain:
His widow sees, at morning pale,
His children rise, and raise their wail.
Compare the celebrated description of a man perishing in the snow, in Thomson's Winter.—See Appendix, Note 2 V.
9 MS.: "Couches upon his frozen breast."
MARMION.

His summer couch by Greenwood tree,
His rustic kirt$^1$ loud revelry,
His native hill-notes, tuned on high,
To Marion of the blithesome eye;²
His crook, his scrip, his oaten reed,
And all Arcadia's golden creed?

Changes not so with us, my Skene,
Of human life the varying scene?
Our youthful summer oft we see³
Dance by on wings of game and glee,
While the dark storm reserves its rage
Against the winter of our age:
As he, the ancient Chief of Troy,
His manhood spent in peace and joy;
But Grecian fires, and loud alarms,
Cal'd ancient Priam forth to arms.⁴
Then happy those, since each must drain
His share of pleasure, share of pain,—
Then happy those, beloved of Heaven,
To whom the mingled cup is given;
Whose lenient sorrows find relief,
Whose joys are chasen'd by their grief.
And such a lot, my Skene, was thine,
When thou of late wert doom'd to twine,—
Just when thy brid'le hour was by,—
The cypress with the myrtle tie.
Just on thy bride her Sire had smiled,⁵
And bless'd the union of his child,
When love must change its joyous cheer,
And wipe affection's filial tear.
Nor did the actions next his end⁶
Speak more the father than the friend;
Scarcely had lamented Forbes⁷ paid
The tribute to his Minstrel's shade;
The tale of friendship scarce was told,
Ere the narrator's heart was cold—
Far may we search before we find
A heart so manly and so kind!
But not around his honor'd urn
Shall friends alone and kindred mourn;
The thousand eyes his care had dried
Pour at his name a bitter tide;
And frequent falls the grateful dew,
For benefits the world ne'er knew.
If mortal charity dare claim
The Almighty's attributed name,
Inscribe above his mouldering clay,
"The widow's shield, the orphan's stay."

Nor, though it wake thy sorrow, deem
My verse intrudes on this sad theme;
For sacred was the pen that wrote,
"Thy father's friend forget thou not!"³
And grateful title may I plead,⁹
For many a kindly word and deed,
To bring my tribute to his grave:—
'Tis little—but 'tis all I have.

To thee, perchance, this rambling strain
Recalls our summer walks again:
When, doing nought,—and, to speak true,
Not anxious to find aught to do,—
The wild unbounded hills we ranged,
While oft our talk its topic changed,
And, desultory as our way,
Ranged, unconfined, from grave to gay.
Even when it flagg'd, as oft will chance,
No effort made to break its trance,
We could right pleasantly pursue
Our sports in social silence too?¹⁰
Thou gravely laboring to portray
The blighted oak's fantastic spray;
I spelling o'er, with much delight,
The legend of that antique knight,
Tirante by name, yclep'd the White.
At either's feet a trusty squire,
Pandour and Camp,¹⁰ with eyes of fire,
Jealous, each other's motions view'd,
And scarce suppress'd their ancient feud.¹¹
The laverock whistled from the cloud;
The stream was lively, but not loud;
From the white thorn the May-flower shed
Its dewy fragrance round our head:
Not Ariel lived more merrily
Under the blossom'd bough than we.

And blithesome nights, too, have been ours,
When Winter stript the summer's bower.
Careless we heard, what now I hear,¹²
The wild blast sighing deep and drear,
When fires were bright, and lamps beam'd gay;
And ladies tun'd the lovely lay;
And he was held a laggard soul
Who shunn'd to quaff the sparkling bowl.
Then he, whose absence we deplore,¹³
Who breathes the gales of Devon's shore,
The longer miss'd, bewail'd the more;

¹ The Scottish Harvest-home.
² MS.: "His native wild notes' melody,
To Marion's blithesome eye."
³ MS.: "Our youthful summer oft we see
Dance by on wings of mirth and glee,
While the dark storm reserves its rage,
To crush the winter of our age."
⁴ MS.: "Call'd forth his fobbed age to arms."
⁵ MS.: "Scarcely on thy bride she sere had smiled."
⁶ MS.: "But even the actions next his end Spoke the fond sire and faithful friend."
⁷ See Appendix, Note 2 W.
⁸ MS.: "And nearer title may I plead."
⁹ MS.: "Our thoughts in social silence too."
¹⁰ Camp was a favorite dog of the Poet's, a bull-terrier of extraordinary sagacity. He is introduced in Raeburn's portrait of Sir Walter Scott, now at Dalkeith Palace—Ed.
¹¹ MS.: "Till o'er our voice suppress'd the wind."
¹² MS.: "When light we heard what now I hear."
¹³ Colin Mackenzie, Esq., of Portmore, one of the Principal Clerks of Session at Edinburgh, and through life an intimate friend of Sir Walter Scott, died on 10th September, 1830.—Ed.
And thou, and I, and dear-loved Rae,¹
And one whose name I may not say,—²
For not Mimosa's tender tree
Shrinks sooner from the touch than he,—
In merry chorus well combined,
With laughter drown'd the whistling wind.
Mirth was within; and Care without Might gnaw her nails to hear our shout.
Not but amid the buxom scene
Some grave discourse might intervene—
Of the good horse that bore him best,
His shoulder, hoof, and arching crest:
For, like mad Tom's,³ our chiefest care
Was horse to ride, and weapon wear.
Such nights we've had; and, though the game⁴
Of manhood be more sober tame,
And though the field-day, or the drill,
Seem less important now—yet still
Such may we hope to share again.
The sprightly thought inspires my strain!
And mark how, like a horseman true,
Lord Marmion's March I thus renew.

Marmion.

CANTO FOURTH.

The Camp.

I.

EUSTACE, I said, did blithely mark
The first notes of the merry lark,
The lark sang shrill, the cock he crew,
And loudly Marmion's bugles blew,
And with their light and lively call
Brought grooms and yeomen to the stand.
Whistling they came, and free of heart,
But soon their mood was changed;
Complaint was heard on every part,
Of something disarranged.
Some clamor'd loud for armor lost;
Some brawl'd and wrangled with the host:
"By Becket's bones," cried one, "I fear"⁵
That some false Scot has stolen my spear!"—
Young Blount, Lord Marmion's second squire,
Found his steed wet with sweat and mire;
Although the rated horse-boy swears,
Last night he dress'd him sleek and fair.

While chafed the impatient squire like thunder,
Old Hubert shouts, in fear and wonder,—
"Help, gentle Blount! help, comrades all!
Bevis lies dying in his stall:
To Marmion who the plighted dare tell,
Of the good steed he loves so well?"
Gaping for fear and ruth, they saw
The charger panting on his straw;⁶
Till one, who would seem wisest, cried,—
"What else but evil could betide,
With that cursed Palmer for our guide?
Better we had through mire and bush
Been lantern-led by Friar Rush."⁷

II.

Fitz-Eustace, who the cause but guess'd,
Nor wholly understood,
His comrades' clamorous plaints suppress'd;
He knew Lord Marmion's mood.
Him, ere he issued forth, he sought,
And found deep plunged in gloomy thought,
And did his tale display
Simply as if he knew of nought
To cause such disarray.
Lord Marmion gave attention cold,
Nor marvel'd at the wonders told,—
Pass'd them as accidents of course,
And bade his clarions sound to horse.

III.

Young Henry Blount, meanwhile, the cost
Had reckon'd with their Scottish host;
And, as the charge he cast and paid,
"I'll thou deserv'st thy hire," he said;
"Dost see, thou knave, my horse's plight?
Fairies have ridd'n him all the night,
And left him in a foam!
I trust that soon a conjuring band,
With English cross, and blazing brand,⁸
Shall drive the devils from this land,
To their infernal home:
For in this haunted den, I row,
All night they trample to and fro."—
The laughing host look'd on the hire,
"Gramercy, gentle southern squire,
And if thou comest among the rest,
With Scottish broadsword to be blest,
Sharp be the brand, and sure the blow,
And short the pang to undergo!"
Here stay'd their talk,—for Marmion
Gave now the signal to set on.

through life an intimate, and latterly a generous, friend of Sir Walter Scott; died 25th October, 1828.—En.

¹ Sir William Rae of St. Catharine's, Bart., subsequently Lord Advocate of Scotland, was a distinguished member of the volunteer corps to which Sir Walter Scott belonged; and he, the Poet, Mr. Skene, Mr. Mackenzie, and a few other friends, had formed themselves into a little semi-military club, the meetings of which were held at their family supper-tables in rotation.—Ed.

² The gentleman whose name the Poet "might not say" was the late Sir William Forbes of Pitsligo, Bart., son of the author of the life of Beattie, and brother-in-law of Mr. Skene,

³ See King Lear.

⁴ MS.: "Such nights we've had; and though our game Advance of years may something tame."

⁵ MS.: "By Becket's bones," cried one, "I swear."

⁶ MS.: "The good horse panting on the straw."

⁷ See Appendix, Note 2 X.

⁸ MS.: "With bloody cross and fiery brand."
The Palmer showing forth the way,
They journey'd all the morning day. ¹

IV.
The green-sward way was smooth and good,
Through Humbie's way and through Saltoun's wood;
A forest glade, which, varying still,
Here gave a view of dale and hill,
There narrower closed, till over head
A vaulted screen the branches made.
"A pleasant path," Fitz-Eustace said;
"Such as where errant-knights might see Adventures of high chivalry;
Might meet some damsel flying fast,
With hair unbound, and looks aghast;
And smooth and level course were here,
In her defence to break a spear.
Here, too, are twilight nooks and dells;
And oft in such, the story tells,
The damsel kind, from danger freed,
Did grateful pay her champion's meed."
He spoke to cheer Lord Marmion's mind:
Perchance to show his lore design'd;
For Eustace much had pored
Upon a huge romantic tome,²
In the Hall window of his home,
Imprinted at the antique dome
Of Caxton, or De Worde,³
Therefore he spoke,—but spoke in vain,
For Marmion answered nought again.

V.
Now sudden, distant trumpets shrill,
In notes prolong'd by wood and hill,
Were heard to echo far;
Each ready archer grasp'd his bow,
But by the flourish soon they know,
They breathed no point of war.
Yet cautions, as in foeman's land,
Lord Marmion's order speeds the band,
Some openground to gain;
And scarce a furlong had they rode,
When thinner trees, receding, show'd
A little woodland plain.
Just in that advantageous glade,
The halting troop a line had made,
As forth from the opposing shade
Issued a gallant train.

VI.
First came the trumpets, at whose clang
So late the forest echoes rang;

On prancing steeds they forward press'd,
With scarlet mantle, azure vest;
Each at his trumpet a banner wore,
Which Scotland's royal sceptre bore;
Heralds and pursuivants, by name
Bute, Islay, Marchmont, Rothsay, came,
In painted tabards, proudly showing
Gules, Argent, Or, and Azure glowing,
Attendant on a King-at-arms,
Whose hand the armorial truncheon held,
That feudal strife had often quell'd,
When wildest its alarms.

VII.
He was a man of middle age;
In aspect manly, grave, and sage,
As on King's errand come;
But in the glances of his eye,
A penetrating, keen, and sly
Expression found its home;
The flash of that satiric rage,
Which, bursting on the early stage,
Branded the vices of the age,
And broke the keys of Rome.⁴
On milk-white palfrey forth he paced;
His cap of maintenance was graced
With the proud heron-plume,
From his steel'd shoulder, loin, and breast,
Silk housings swept the ground,
With Scotland's arms, device, and crest,
Embroider'd round and round.
The double treasure might you see,
First by Achaius borne,
The thistle and the fleur-de-lis,
And gallant unicorn.⁵
So bright the King's armorial coat,
That scarce the dazzled eye could note,
In living colors, blazon'd brave,
The Lion, which his title gave;
A train, which well become'd his state,
But all unarm'd, around him wait.
Still is thy name in high account,
And still thy verse has charms,
Sir David Lindsay of the Mount,
Lord Lion King-at-arms?⁶

VIII.
Down from his horse did Marmion spring,
Soon as he saw the Lion-King;
For well the stately Baron knew
To him such courtesy was due,

¹ MS.: "They journey'd till the middle day."
² MS.: "Upon a black and ponderous tome."
³ William Caxton, the earliest English printer, was born in Kent, A.D. 1412, and died 1491. Wynken de Worde was his next successor in the production of those "Rare volumes, dark with tarnish'd gold," which are now the delight of bibliomania.
⁴ The MS. has "Scotland's royal Lion" here; in line 9th, "scarlet tabards;" and in line 12th, "blazoned truncheon."
⁵ MS.: "The flash of that satiric rage, Which, bursting from the early stage, Lash'd the coarse vices of the age," &c.
⁶ MS.: "Silver unicorn." This, and the seven preceding lines, are interpolated in the blank page of the MS.
⁷ See Appendix, Note 2 Y.
Whom royal James himself had crown'd,
And on his temples placed the round
Of Scotland's ancient diadem;
And wet his brow with hallow'd wine,
And on his finger given to shine
The emblematic gem.
Their mutual greetings duly made,
The Lion thus his message said:—
Though Scotland's King hath deeply swore
Ne'er to knit faith with Henry more,
And strictly hath forbid resort
From England to his royal court;
Yet, for he knows Lord Marmion's name,
And honors much his warlike fame,
My liege hath deem'd it shame, and lack
Of courtesy, to turn him back;
And, by his order, I, your guide,
Must lodging fit and fair provide,
Till finds King James meet time to see
The flower of English chivalry."

IX.
Though inly chafed at this delay,
Lord Marmion bears it as he may.
The Palmer, his mysterious guide,
Beholding thus his place supplied,
Sought to take leave in vain:
Strict was the Lion-King's command
That none who rode in Marmion's band
Should sever from the train:
"England has here enow of spies
In Lady Heron's witching eyes:"
To Marchmont thus, apart, he said,
But fair pretext to Marmion made,
The right hand path they now decline,
And trace against the stream the Tyne.

X.
At length up that wild dale they wind,
Where Crichtoun Castle 2 crowns the bank;
For there the Lion's care assigned
A lodging meet for Marmion's rank.
That Castle rises on the steep
Of the green vale of Tyne:
And far beneath, where slow they creep,
From pool to eddy, dark and deep,
Where alders moist and willows weep,
You hear her streams repine. 3
The towers in different ages rose;
Their various architecture shows
The builders' various hands;
A mighty mass, that could oppose, 4

When deadliest hatred fired its foes,
The vengeful Douglas bands.

XI.
Crichtoun! though now thy miry court
But pens the lazy steer and sheep,
Thy turrets rude, and totter'd Keep,
Have been the minstrel's loved resort.
Oft have I traced, within thy fort,
Of mouldering shields the mystic sense; 5
Scutcheons of honor or pretence,
Quarter'd in old armorial sort,
Remains of rude magnificence.
Nor wholly yet had time defaced
Thy lordly gallery fair;
Nor yet the stony cord unbraided,
Whose twisted knots, with roses laced,
Adorn thy ruin'd stair.
Still rises unimpair'd below
The court-yard's graceful portico;
Above its cornice, row and row
Of fair hewn facets richly show
Their pointed diamond form,
Though there but houseless cattle go,
To shield them from the storm.
And, shuddering, still may we explore,
Where oft whilom were captives pent,
The darkness of thy Massy More; 6
Or, from thy grass-grown battlement,
May trace, in undulating line,
The sluggish mazes of the Tyne.

XII.
Another aspect Crichtoun show'd,
As through its portal Marmion rode;
But yet 'twas melancholy state
Received him at the outer gate;
For none were in the Castle then,
But women, boys, or aged men.
With eyes scarce dried, the sorrowing dame,
To welcome noble Marmion, came;
Her son, a stripling twelve years old,
Proffer'd the Baron's rein to hold;
For each man that could draw a sword
Had march'd that morning with their lord,
Earl Adam Hepburn,—he who died
On Flodden, by his sovereign's side. 7
Long may his Lady look in vain!
She ne'er shall see his gallant train
Come sweeping back through Crichtoun-Dean.
'Twas a brave race, before the name
Of hated Bothwell stain'd their fame.

1 MS.: "The Lion-King his message said:—
'My Liege hath deep and deadly sworn,' &c.
2 See Appendix, Note 2 Z; and, for a fuller description of Crichton Castle, see Sir Walter Scott's Miscellaneous Prose Works, vol. vii., p. 157.
3 MS.: "Her lazy streams repine."
4 MS.: "But the huge mass could well oppose."
5 MS.: "Of many a mouldering shield the sense."
6 MS.: "Of many a mouldering shield the sense."
7 MS.: "For the pit, or prison vault.—See Appendix, Note 2 Z.
8 MS.: "Well might his gentle Lady mourn;
Doom'd ne'er to see her Lord's return."

Note: The text is a portion of a larger work, likely from the time of Sir Walter Scott's Poetical Works, and contains references to various historical and legendary figures and places, such as King James, Lord Marmion, and the Lion-King. The text is a poetic narrative that describes a journey and the adventures that occur along the way, blending elements of chivalry, war, and nature.
XIII.
And here two days did Marmion rest,
With every rite that honor claims,
Attended as the King's own guest;—
Such the command of royal James,
Who marshall'd then his land's array,
Upon the Borough-moor that lay.
Perchance he would not foeman's eye
Upon his gathering host should pry,
Till full prepared was every band
To march against the English land.
Here while they dwelt, did Lindsay's wit
Oft cheer the Baron's moodier fit;
And, in his turn, he knew to prize
Lord Marmion's powerful mind, and wise,—
Train'd in the lore of Rome and Greece,
And policies of war and peace.1

XIV.
It chanced, as fell the second night,
That on the battlements they walk'd,
And, by the slowly fading light,
Of varying topics talk'd;
And, unaware, the Herald-bard2
Said, Marmion might his toil have spared,
In travelling so far;
For that a messenger from heaven
In vain to James had counsel given
Against the English war:3
And, closer question'd, thus he told
A tale which chronicles of old
In Scottish story have enroll'd:—

1 MS.: "Nor less the Herald Monarch knew
The Baron's powers to value true—
Hence confidence between them grew."
2 MS.: "Then fell from Lindsay, unaware,
That Marmion might) his labor spare.
Marmion might well)"
3 See Appendix, Note 3 B.
4 "In some places, Mr. Scott's love of variety has betrayed him into strange imitations. This is evidently formed on the school of Sternehold and Hopkins.—
'Of all the palaces so fair,' " &c.
JEFFREY.
5 In Scotland there are about twenty palaces, castles, and remains, or sites of such,
"Where Scotia's kings of other years" had their royal home.

"Linlithgow, distinguished by the combined strength and beauty of its situation, must have been early selected as a royal residence. David, who bought the title of saint by his liberality to the Church, refers several of his charters to his town of Linlithgow; and in that of Holyrood expressly besows on the new monastery all the skins of the rams, ewes, and lambs, belonging to his castle of Linlithgow, which shall die during the year. . . . The convenience afforded for the sport of falconry, which was so great a favorite during the feudal ages, was probably one cause of the attachment of the ancient Scottish monarchs to Linlithgow and its fine lake.

XV.
Sir David Lindsay's Tale.

"Of all the palaces so fair,4
Built for the royal dwelling,
In Scotland, far beyond compare
Linlithgow is excelling:5
And in its park in jovial June,
How sweet the merry linnet's tune,
How blithe the blackbird's lay!
The wild-buck bells6 from ferny brake,
The coot dives merry on the lake;
The saddest heart might pleasure take
To see all nature gay.
But June is to our sovereign dear
The heaviest month in all the year:
Too well his cause of grief you know,—
June saw his father's overthrow,7
Woe to the traitors, who could bring
The princely boy against his King!
Still in his conscience burns the sting.
In offices as strict as Lent,
King James's June is ever spent.8

XVI.
"When last this rufhul month was come,
And in Linlithgow's holy dome
The King, as wont, was praying;
While, for his royal father's soul,
The chanters sung, the bells did toll,
The Bishop mass was saying—
For now the year brought round again9
The day the luckless king was slain—

The sport of hunting was also followed with success in the neighborhood, from which circumstance it probably arises that the ancient arms of the city represent a black greyhound bitch tied to a tree. . . . The situation of Linlithgow Palace is eminently beautiful. It stands on a promontory of some elevation, which advances almost into the midst of the lake.
The form is that of a square court, composed of buildings of four stories high, with towers at the angles. The fronts within the square, and the windows, are highly ornamented, and the size of the rooms, as well as the width and character of the stairs and steps, are upon a magnificent scale. One banquet-room is ninety-four feet long, thirty feet wide, and thirty-three feet high, with a gallery for music. The King's wardrobe or dressing-room, looking to the west, projects over the walls, so as to have a delicious prospect on three sides, and is one of the most enviable boudoirs we have ever seen."—SIR WALTER SCOTT's

6 See Appendix, Note 3 C.
7 See Appendix, Note 3 D.
8 MS.: "In offices as strict as Lent,
And penances, his Junes are spent."
9 MS.: "For now the year brought round again
The very day that he
The day that the third James
In Katharine's aisle the Monarch kneels,
And folded hands show what he feels,"
In Katharine's aisle the Monarch knelt,
With sackcloth shirt, and iron belt,
And eyes with sorrow streaming;
Around him in their stalls of state,
The Thistle's Knight-Companions sate,
Their banners o'er them beaming.
I too was there, and, sooth to tell,
Bedeck'd with the jangling knell,
Was watching where the sunbeams fell,
Through the stain'd casement gleaming;
But, while I marked what next befell,
It seem'd as I were dreaming.
Stepp'd from the crowd a ghostly wight,
In azure gown, with cinature white,
His forehead bald, his head was bare,
Down hung at length his yellow hair.—
Now, mock me not, when, good my Lord,
I pledge to you my knightly word,
That, when I saw his placid grace,
His simple majesty of face,
His solemn bearing, and his pace
So stately gliding on,— Seem'd to me ne'er did limner paint
So just an image of the Saint,
Who prop'd the Virgin in her faint,—
The loved Apostle John!

XVII.
"He stepp'd before the Monarch's chair,
And stood with rustic plainness there,
And little reverence made;
Nor head, nor body, bow'd nor bent,
But on the desk his arm he leant,
And words like these he said,
In a low voice, but never tone
So thrill'd through vein, and nerve, and bone:—
' My mother sent me from afar,
Sir King, to warn thee not to war,—
Woe waits on thine array;
If war thou wilt, of woman fair,
Her witching wiles and wanton snare,
James Stuart, doubly warn'd, beware:
God keep thee as he may!'
The wondering Monarch seem'd to seek
For answer, and found none;
And when he raised his head to speak,
The monitor was gone,
The Marshal and myself had cast
To stop him as he outward pass'd;
But, lighter than the whirlwind's blast,
He vanish'd from our eyes,
Like sunbeam on the bilow cast,
That glances but, and dies."

XVIII.
While Lindsay told his marvel strange,
The twilight was so pale,
He mark'd not Marmion's color change,
While listening to the tale;
But, after a suspended pause,
The Baron spoke:—"Of Nature's laws
So strong I held the force,
That never superhuman cause
Could e'er control their course.
And, three days since, had judged your aim
Was but to make your guest your game,
But I have seen, since past the Tweed,³
What much has changed my skeptic creed,
And made me credit aught."—He said,
And seem'd to wish his words unsaid:
But by that strong emotion press'd,
Which prompts us to unload our breast,
Even when discovery's pain,
To Lindsay did at length unfold
The tale his village host had told,
At Gifford, to his train.
Nought of the Palmer says he there,
And nought of Constance, or of Clare;
The thoughts which broke his sleep he seems
To mention but as feverish dreams.

XIX.
"In vain," said he, "to rest I spread
My burning limbs, and couch'd my head;
Fantastic thoughts return'd;
And, by their wild dominion led,
My heart within me burn'd,²
So sore was the delirious gaud,
I took my steed, and forth I rode,
And, as the moon shone bright and cold,
Soon reach'd the camp upon the wold.
The southern entrance I pass'd through,
And halted, and my bugle blew.
Methought an answer met my ear,—
Yet was the blast so low and drear,⁵
So hollow, and so faintly blown,
It might be echo of my own.

XX.
"Thus judging, for a little space
I listen'd, ere I left the place;
But scarce could trust my eyes,
Nor yet can think they served me true,
When sudden in the ring I view,
In form distinct of shape and hue,
A mounted champion rise.—

¹ MS.: "In a low voice—but every tone
Thrill'd through the listener's vein and bone."
² MS.: "And if to war thou needs wilt fare,
Of wanton wiles and woman's snare."
³ MS.: "But events, since I cross'd the Tweed,
Have undermined my skeptic creed."
⁴ MS.: "In vain," said he, "to rest I laid
My burning limbs, and throbbing head—
Fantastic thoughts return'd;
And by their wild dominion sway'd,
My heart within me burn'd."
⁵ MS.: "And yet it was so low and drear."
I've fought, Lord-Lion, many a day, 1
In single fight, and mix'd al'llay,
And ever, I myself may say,
Have borne me as a knight;
But when this unexpected foe
Seem'd starting from the gulf below,—
I care not though the truth I show,—
I trembled with affright;
And as I placed in rest my spear,
My hand so shook for very fear,
I scarce could couch it right.

XXI.
"Why need my tongue the issue tell?
We ran our course,—my charger fell;—
What could he 'gainst the shock of hell?—
I roll'd upon the plain.
High o'er my head, with threatening hand,
The spectre shook his naked brand,—
Yet did the worst remain:
My dazzled eyes I upward cast,—
Not opening hell itself could blast
Their sight, like what I saw!
Full on his face the moonbeam strook,—
A face could never be mistook!
I knew the stern vindictive look,
And held my breath for awe,
I saw the face of one who, fled 3
To foreign climes, has long been dead,—
I well believe the last;
For n'er, from visor raised, did stare
A human warrior, with a glare
So grimly and so ghast.
Thrice o' er my head he shook the blade;
When but to good Saint George I pray'd
(The first time o' er I ask'd his aid),
He plunged it in the sheath;
And, on his courser mounting light,
He seem'd to vanish from my sight:
The moonbeam droop'd, and deepest night
Sunk down upon the heath.—
'Twere long to tell what cause I have
To know his face, that met me there,
Call'd by his hatred from the grave,
To cumber upper air:
Dead or alive, good cause had he
To be my mortal enemy."

XXII.
Marvell'd Sir David of the Mount;
Then, learnt in story, 'gan recount such chance had happ'd of old,

When once, near Norham, there did fight
A spectre fell of fiendish might,
In likeness of a Scottish knight,
With Brian Bulmer bold,
And train'd him nigh to disallow
The aid of his baptismal vow.
"And such a phantom, too, 'tis said
With Highland broadsword, target, and plaid,
And fingers red with gore,
Is seen in Rothiemmureus glade,
Or where the sable pine-trees shade
Dark Tomantoul, and Auchnaslaid,
Dromouchy, or Glenmore. 4
And yet, what e'er such legends say.
Of warlike demon, ghost, or fay,
On mountain, moor, or plain,
Spotless in faith, in bosom bold, 5
True son of chivalry should hold
These midnight terrors vain;
For seldom have such spirits power
To harm, save in the evil hour
When guilt we meditate within, 6
Or harbor unrepented sin."
Lord Marmion turn'd him half aside,
And twice to clear his voice he tried,
Then press'd Sir David's hand,—
But nought, at length, in answer said;
And here their farther converse staid,
Each ordering that his band
Should bowne them with the rising day,
To Scotland's camp to take their way,—
Such was the King's command.

XXIII.
Early they took Dun-Edin's road,
And I could trace each step they trode:
Hill, brook, nor dell, nor rock, nor stone,
Lies on the path to me unknown.
Much night it boast of storied lore;
But, passing such digression o'er,
Suffice it that the route was laid
Across the furry hills of Baird,
They pass'd the glen and scanty rill,
And climb'd the opposing bank, until
They gain'd the top of Blackford Hill.

XXIV.
Blackford! on whose uncultured breast,
Among the broom, and thorn, and whin,

I knew the face of one who, fled
To foreign climes, or long since dead—
I well may judge the last."
4 See the traditions concerning Bulmer, and the spectre called Lham-learg, or Bloody-hand, in a note on canto III. Appendix, Note 2 U.
5 MS.: "Of spotless faith, and bosom bold."
6 MS.: "When mortals meditate within Fresh guilt or unrepented sin."
A truant boy, I sought the nest,
Or listed, as I lay at rest,
While rose, on breezes thin,
The murmur of the city crowd,
And, from his steeple jangling loud,
St. Giles's mingling din.
Now, from the summit to the plain,
Waves all the hill with yellow grain;
And o'er the landscape as I look,
Nought do I see unchanged remain,
Save the rude cliffs and chiming brook.
To me they make a heavy moon,
Of early friendships past and gone.

XXV.
But different far the change has been,
Since Marmion, from the crown
Of Blackford, saw that martial scene
Upon the bent so brown:
Thousand pavilions, white as snow,
Spread all the Borough-moor below,
Upland, and dale, and down:—
A thousand, did I say? I ween,
Thousands on thousands there were seen,
That chequer'd all the heath between
The streamlet and the town;
In crossing ranks extending far,
Forming a camp irregular;
Oft giving way, where still there stood
Some relics of the old oak wood,
That darkly huge did intervene,
And tamed the glaring white with green:
In these extended lines there lay
A martial kingdom's vast array.

XXVI.
For from Hebudes, dark with rain,
To eastern Lodon's fertile plain,
And from the southern Redswire edge,
To farthest Rosse's rocky ledge;
From west to east, from south to north,
Scotland sent all her warriors forth.
Marmion might hear the mingled hum
Of myriads up the mountain come;
The horses' tramp, and tingling chank,
Where chiefs review'd their vassal rank,
And charger's shrilling neigh;
And see the shifting lines advance,
While frequent flash'd, from shield and lance,
The sun's reflected ray.

XXVII.
Thin curling in the morning air,
The wreaths of falling smoke declare
To embers now the brands decay'd,
Where the night-watch their fires had made.
They saw, slow rolling on the plain,
Full many a baggage-cart and wain,
And dire artillery's clumsy car,
By sluggish oxen tug'd to war;
And there were Borthwick's Sisters Seven,
And culverins which France had given.
Ill-omen'd gift! the guns remain
The conqueror's spoil on Flodden plain.

XXVIII.
Nor mark'd they less, where in the air
A thousand streamers flamm'd fair;
Various in shape, device, and hue,
Green, sanguine, purple, red, and blue,
Broad, narrow, swallow-tail'd, and square,
Scroll, pennon, pensil, bandrol, there
O'er the pavilions flew.
Highest and midmost, was descried
The royal banner floating wide;
The staff, a pine-tree, strong and straight,
Pitch'd deeply in a massive stone,
Which still in memory is shown,
Yet bent beneath the standard's weight
When'er the western wind unroll'd,
With toil, the huge and cumbrous fold,
And gave to view the dazzling field,
Where, in proud Scotland's royal shield,
The ruddy lion ramp'd in gold.

XXIX.
Lord Marmion view'd the landscape bright,—
He view'd it with a chief's delight,—
Until within him burn'd his heart,
And lightning from his eye did part,
As on the battle-day;
Such glance did falcon never dart,
When stooping on his prey.
"Oh! well, Lord-Lion, hast thou said,
Thy King from warfare to dissuade
Were but a vain essay:
For, by St. George, were that host mine,
Not power infernal nor divine
Should once to pence my soul incline,
Till I had dimm'd their armor's shine
In glorious battle-tray!"

1 MS.: "But, oh! far different change has been,
Since Marmion, from the crown
Of Blackford Hill, upon the scene
Of Scotland's war look'd down."
2 See Appendix, Note 3 E.
3 MS.: "A thousand, said the verse? I ween,
Thousands on thousands there were seen,
That white'd all the heath between."
4 Here ends the stanza in the MS.
5 Seven culverins so called, cast by one Borthwick.
6 Each of these feudal ensigns intimated the different rank of those entitled to display them.
7 See Appendix, Note 3 F.
8 MS.: "The standard staff, a mountain pine,
Pitch'd in a huge memorial stone,
That still in monument is shown."
9 See Appendix, Note 3 G.
10 MS.: "Lord Marmion's large dark eye flash'd light,
It kindled with a chief's delight,
For glow'd with martial joy his heart,
As upon battle-day."
MARMION.

XXXI.

Thus while they look'd, a flourish proud,
Where mingled trump, and clarion loud,
And fife, and kettle-drum,
And sackbut deep, and psaltery,
And war-pipe with discordant cry,

And cymbal clattering to the sky,
Making wild music bold and high,
Did up the mountain come;
The whilst the bells, with distant chime,
Merrily toll'd the hour of prime,
And thus the Lindsay spoke:4

"Thus clamor still the war-notes when
The King to mass his way has ta'en,
Or to St. Katharine's of Sienne,5
Or Chapel of Saint Roque.
To you they speak of martial fame;6
But me remind of peaceful game,
When blither was their cheer,
Thrilling in Falkland-woods the air,
In signal none his steed should spare,
But strive which foremost might repair
To the downfall of the deer.

XXXII.

"Nor less," he said,—"when looking forth,
I view you Empress of the North
Sit on her hilly throne;
Her palace's imperial bowers,
Her castle, proof to hostile powers,
Her stately halls and holy towers,—7

Nor less," he said, "I mean,
To think what woe mischance may bring,
And how these merry bells may ring
The death-dirge of our gallant King;

Or with the larnm call
The burghers forth to watch and ward,
Gainst southern sack and fires to guard
Dun-Edin's leaguers' wall.—

But not for my presaging thought,
Dream conquest sure, or cheaply bought?8

Lord Marmion, I say say:
God is the guider of the field,
He breaks the champion's spear and shield,—
But thou thyself shalt say,
When John you host in deadly stowre,
That England's dames must weep in bower,
Her monks the death-mass sing;9

For never saw'st thou such a power
Led on by such a King.—"—

And now, down winding to the plain,
The barriers of the camp they gain,
And there they made a stay,—

There stays the Minstrel, till he fling
His hand o'er every Border string,
And fit his harp the pomp to sing
Of Scotland's ancient Court and King,
In the succeeding lay.

1 MS.: "'Tis better sitting still at rest,
   Than rising but to fall;
   And while those words they did exchange,
   They reach'd the compass extremest range."

2 MS.: "Dun-Edin's towers and town."

3 MS.: "The Lion smiled his joy to see."

4 MS.: "And thus the Lion spoke."

5 MS.: "Or to our Lady's of Sienne."

6 MS.: "To you they speak of martial fame;
   To me, of mood more mild and tame,
   Blither would be their cheer."

7 MS.: "Her stately fames and holy towers."

8 MS.: "Dream of a conquest cheaply bought."

9 MS.: "Their monks dead-masses sing."
Marmion.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FIFTH.\(^1\)

TO GEORGE ELLIS, Esq.\(^2\)

Edinburgh.

When dark December glooms the day,
And takes our autumn joys away;
When short and scant the sunbeam throws,
Upon the weary waste of snows,
A cold and profitless regard,
Like patron on a needy bard;
When sylvan occupation's done,
And o'er the chimney rests the gun,
And hang, in idle trophy, near,
The game-pouch, fishing-rod, and spear;
When wiry terrier, rough and grim,
And greyhound, with his length of limb,
And pointer, now employ'd no more,
Cumber our parlor's narrow floor;
When in his stall the impatient steed
Is long condemn'd to rest and feed;
When from our snow-encircled home
Scarse cares the hardiest step to roam,
Since path is none, save that to bring
The needful water from the spring;
When wrinkled news-page, thrice conn'd o'er,
Beguilés the dreary hour no more,
And darkling politician, cross'd,
Inveighs against the lingering post,
And answering housewife sore complains
Of carriers' snow-impeded wains;
When such the country cheer, I come,
Well pleased, to seek our city home;
For converse, and for books, to change
The Forest's melancholy range,
And welcome, with renew'd delight,
The busy day and social night.

Not here need my desponding rhyme
Lament the ravages of time,
As erst by Newark's riven rivers,
And Ettrick stripp'd of forest bowers.\(^3\)

---

1 "These Introductory Epistles, though excellent in themselves, are in fact only interruptions to the fable, and, accordingly, nine readers out of ten have perused them separately, either before or after the poem. In short, the personal appearance of the Minstrel, who, though the Last, is the most charming of all minstrels, is by no means compensated by the idea of an author shorn of his picturesque beard, and writing letters to his intimate friends."—GEORGE ELLIS.

2 This accomplished gentleman, the well-known coadjutor of Mr. Canning and Mr. Fere in the "Antijacobin," and editor of "Specimens of Ancient English Romances," &c. died 10th April, 1815, aged 70 years; being succeeded in his estates by his brother, Charles Ellis, Esq., created, in 1827, Lord Stamford.—Ed.

3 See Introduction to canto ii.

4 See Appendix, Note 3 H.

5 Since writing this line, I find I have inadvertently borrow'd it almost verbatim, though with somewhat a different meaning, from a chorus in "Caractæus":—

"Britain heard the descent bold,
She flung her white arms o'er the sea,
Proud in her leafy bosom to enfold
The freight of harmony."

7 "For every one her liked, and every one her loved." SPEN$, as above.
And passion, erst unknown, could gain
The breast of blunt Sir Satyrane;
Nor durst light Paridel advance,
Bold as he was, a looser glance.
She charm'd, at once, and tamed the heart,
Incomparable Britomarté!

So thou, fair City! disarray'd
Of battled wall and rampart's aid,
As stately seem'st, but lovelier far
Than in that pandyly of war.
Nor deem that from thy fenceless throne
Strength and security are flown;
Still, as of yore, Queen of the North!
Still canst thou send thy children forth.
Ne'er reader at alarm-bell's call
Thy burglers rose to man thy wall,
Than now, in danger, shall be thine
Thy dauntless voluntary line;
For fosse and turret proud to stand,
Their breasts the bulwarks of the land.
Thy thousands, train'd to martial toil,
Full red would stain their native soil,
Ere from thy murlon crown there fell
The slightest knosp or pinnacle.
And if it come,—as come it may,
Dun-Edin! that eventful day,—
Renown'd for hospitable deed,
That virtue much with Heaven may plead,
In patriarchal times whose care
Descending angels deign'd to share;
That claim may wrestle blessings down
On those who fight for The Good Town,
Destined in every age to be
Refuge of injured royalty;
Since first, when conquering York arose,
To Henry meek she gave repose;¹
Till late, with wonder, grief, and awe,
Great Bourbon's relics sad she saw.²

Truce to these thoughts!—for as they rise,
How gladly I avert mine eyes,
Bodings, or true or false, to change,
For Fiction's fair romantic range,
Or for Tradition's dubious light,
That hovers 'twixt the day and night:
Dazzling alternately and dim,
Her wavering lamp I'd rather trim,
Knights, squires, and lovely dames to see,
Creation of my fantasy,
Than gaze abroad on reddy fen,³
And make of mists invading men.

Who loves not more the night of June
Than dull December's gloomy noon?
The moonlight than the fog of frost?
And can we say, which cheats the most?

But who shall teach my harp to gain
A sound of the romantic strain,
Whose Anglo-Norman tones whilere
Could win the royal Henry's ear,⁴
Famed Beauclerc call'd, for that he loved
The minstrel, and his lay approved?
Who shall these lingering notes redeem,
Decaying on Oblivion's stream;
Such notes as from the Breton tongue
Marie translated, Blondel sung?—
Oh! born Time's ravage to repair,
And make the dying Muse thy care;
Who, when his scythe her hoary foe
Was poising for the final blow,
The weapon from his hand could wring,
And break his glass, and shear his wing,
And bid, reviving in his strain,
The gentle poet live again;
Thou, who canst give to lightest lay
An unpedantic moral gay,
Nor less the dullest theme bid flit
On wings of unexpected wit;
In letters as in life approved,
Example honor'd, and beloved,—
Dear ELLIS! to the Bard impart
A lesson of thy magic art,
To win at once the head and heart,—
At once to charm, instruct, and mend,
My guide, my pattern, and my friend.⁵

Such minstrel lesson to bestow
Be long thy pleasing task,—but, oh!
No more by thy example teach,
—What few can practice, all can preach,—
With even patience to endure
Lingering disease, and painful cure,
And boast affliction's pang subdued
By mild and manly fortitude.
Enough, the lesson has been given:
Forbid the repetition, Heaven!

Come listen, then! for thou hast known
And loved the Minstrel's varying tone,
Who, like his Border sires of old,
Waked a wild measure rude and bold,
Till Windsor's oaks, and Ascot plain,
With wonder heard the northern strain.⁶

¹ See Appendix, Note 3 I.
² In January, 1796, the exiled Count d'Artois, afterwards Charles X. of France, took up his residence in Holyrood, where he remained until August, 1799. When again driven from his country by the Revolution of July, 1830, the same unfortunate Prince, with all the immediate members of his family, sought refuge once more in the ancient palace of the Stuarts, and remained there until 18th September, 1832.
³ MS.: "Than gaze out on the foggy fen."
⁴ See Appendix, Note 3 K.
⁵ "Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,
O master of the poet and the song!" — Pope to Bolingbroke.
⁶ At Sunning-hill, Mr. Ellis's seat, near Windsor, part of the first two cantos of Marmion were written.
Come listen! bold in thy applause,
The Bard shall scorn pedantic laws;
And, as the ancient art could stain
Achievements on the storied pane,
Irregularly traced and plan'd,
But yet so glowing and so grand,—
So shall he strive, in changeful hue,
Field, feast, and combat, to renew,
And loves, and arms, and harpers' glees,
And all the pomp of chivalry.

Marmion.

CANTO FIFTH.

The Court.

I.
The train has left the hills of Braid;
The barrier guard have open made
(So Lindsey bade) the palisade,
That closed the tented ground;
Their men the warders backward drew;
And carried pikes as they rode through
Into its ample bound.¹
Fast ran the Scottish warriors there,
Upon the Southern band to stare,
And envy with their wonder rose,
To see such well-appointed foes;
Such length of shafts, such mighty bows,²
So huge, that many simply thought,
But for a vaunt such weapons wrought;
And little deem'd their force to feel,
Through links of mail, and plates of steel,
When, rattling upon Flodden vale,
The cloth-yard arrows flew like hail.³

Nor less did Marmion's skilful view
Glance every line and squadron through;
And much he marvell'd one small land
Could martial forth such various band:
For men-at-arms were here,
Heavily sheathed in mail and plate,
Like iron towers for strength and weight,
On Flemish steeds of bone and height,
With battle-axe and spear.
Young knights and squires, a lighter train,
Practiced their chargers on the plain,⁴
By aid of leg, of hand, and rein,

Each warlike feat to show:
To pass, to wheel, the croupe to gain,
And high curvet, that not in vain
The sword sway might descend again
On foeman's casque below.⁵
He saw the hardy burghers there
March arm'd, on foot, with faces bare,⁶
For visor they wore none,
Nor waving plume, nor crest of knight;
But burnish'd were their corselets bright,
Their brigantines, and gorgets light,
Like very silver shine.
Long pikes they had for standing fight,
Two-handed swords they wore,
And many wielded mace of weight,⁷
And bucklers bright they bore.

III.
On foot the yeoman too, but dress'd
In his steel-jack, a swarthv vest,
With iron quilted well;
Each at his back (a slender store)
His forty days' provision bore,
As feudal statutes tell.
His arms were halbert, axe, or spear,⁸
A crossbow there, a hagbut here,
A dagger-knife, and brand.
Sober he seem'd, and sad of cheer,
As loth to leave his cottage dear,
And march to foreign strand;
Or musing, who would guide his steer,
To till the fallow land.
Yet deem not in his thoughtful eye
Did aught of dastard terror lie;
More dreadful far his ire
Than theirs who, scorning danger's name,
In eager mood to battle came,
Their valor like light straw on flame,
A fierce but fading fire.

IV.
Not so the Borderer.—bred to war,
He knew the battle's din afar,
And joy'd to hear it swell.
His peacefull day was slothful case;
Nor harp nor pipe his ear could please
Like the loud slogan yell.
On active steed, with lance and blade,
The light-arm'd pricker plied his trade,—
Let nobles fight for fame;
Let vassals follow where they lead,
Burghers to guard their townships bleed,
But war's the Borderer's game.

¹ MS.: "The barrier guard the Lion knew,
Advanced their pikes, and soon withdrew
The slender palisades and few
That closed the tented ground;
And Marmion with his train rode through,
Across its ample bound."
² MS.: "So long their shafts, so large their bows."
³ See Appendix, Note 3 L.
⁴ MS.: "There urged their chargers on the plain."
⁵ See Appendix, Note 3 M.
⁶ See Appendix, Note 3 N.
⁷ MS.: "And mulls did many of weight."
⁸ See Appendix, Note 3 O.
Their gain, their glory, their delight,
To sleep the day, maraud the night,
O'er mountain, moss, and moor;
Joyful to fight they took their way,
Scarcely caring who might win the day,
Their booty was secure.

These, as Lord Marmion's train pass'd by,
Look'd on at first with careless eye,
Nor marv'led'g aunt, yet taught to know
The form and force of English bow.
But when they saw the Lord arry'd
In splendid arms and rich brocade,
Each Borderer to his kinsman said,—

"Hist, Ringan! seest thou there!
Canst guess which road they'll homeward ride?—
Oh! could we but on Border side,
By Eusedale glen, or Liddell's tide,
Beset a prize so fair!
That fangless Lion, too, their guide,
Might chance to lose his glittering hide;
Brown Maudlin, of that doublet pied,
Could make a kirtle rare."

V.

Next, Marmion mark'd the Celtic race,
Of different language, form, and face,
A various race of man;
Just then the chiefs their tribes array'd,
And wild and garish semblance made
The chequ'ry trews, and belted plaid,
And varying notes the war-pipes bray'd,
To every varying clan;
Wild through their red or sable hair
Look'd out their eyes with savage stare
On Marmion as he pass'd;
Their legs above the knee were bare;
Thei rframe was sinewy, short, and spare,
And harden'd to the blast;
Of taller race, the chiefs they own
Were by the eagle's plumage known,
The hunted red-deer's undress'd hide
Their hairy buskins well supplied;
The graceful bonnet deck'd their head:
Back from their shoulders hung the plaid;
A broadsword of unwieldy length,
A dagger proved for edge and strength,
A studded targe they wore,
And quivers, bows, and shafts,—but, oh! short was the shaft, and weak the bow,
To that which England bore.
The Isles-men carried at their backs
The ancient Danish battle-axe.

They raised a wild and wondering cry,
As with his guide rode Marmion by.
Loud were their clamoring tongues, as when
The clashing sea-fowl leave the fen,
And, with their cries discordant mix'd,
Grunbled and yell'd the pipes betwixt.

VI.

Thus through the Scottish camp they pass'd,
And reach'd the City gate at last,
Where all around, a wakeful guard,
Arm'd burghers kept their watch and ward.
Well had they cause of jealous fear,
When lay encamp'd, in field so near,
The Borderer and the Mountaineer.
As through the bustling streets they go,
All was alive with martial show:
At every turn, with dimming clang,
The armorer's anvil clash'd and rang;
Or toil'd the swarthy smith, to wheel
The bar that arms the charger's heel;
Or axe, or falchion, to the side
Of jarring grindstone was applied.
Page, gown, and squire, with hurrying pace,
Through street, and lane, and market-place,
Bore lance, or casque, or sword;
While burghers, with important face,
Described each new-comer lord,
Discuss'd his lineage, told his name,
His following, and his warlike fame.
The Lion led to lodging meet,
Which high o'erlook'd the crowded street;
There must the Baron rest,
Till past the hour of vesper tide,
And then to Holy-Rood must ride,—
Such was the King's behest.
Meanwhile the Lion's care assigns
A banquet rich, and costly wines,
To Marmion and his train,
And when the appointed hour succeeds,
The Baron dons his peaceful weeds,
And following Lindesay as he leads,
The palace-halls they gain.

VII.

Old Holy-Rood rung merrily,
That night, with wassail, mirth, and glee:
King James within her princely bower
Feasted the Chiefs of Scotland's power,
Summon'd to spend the parting hour;
For he had charg'd that his array
Should southward march by break of day.
Well loved that splendid monarch aye

1 MS.: "Hist, Ringan! seest thou there!
Canst guess what homeward road they take—
By Eusedale glen, or Yetholm lake?
Oh! could we but by bush or brake
Beset a prize so fair!
The fangless Lion, too, his guide,
Might chance to lose his glittering hide."

2 MS.: "Wild from their red and swarthy hair
Look'd through their eyes with savage stare."

3 Followina—Feudal retainers.—This word, by the way, has been, since the Author of Marmion used it, and thought it called for explanation, completely adopted into English, and especially into Parliamentary parlance.—Ed.

4 See Appendix, Note 3 P.
The banquet and the song,
By day the tourney, and by night
The merry dance, traced fast and light,
The maskers quaint, the pageant bright,
The revel loud and long,
This feast outshone his banquets past,
It was his blithest—and his last.
The dazzling lamps, from gallery gay,
Cast on the Court a dancing ray;
Here to the harp did minstrels sing;
There ladies touch'd a softer string;
With long-ear'd cap, and motley vest,
The licensed fool retail'd his jest;
His magic tricks the juggler plied;
At dice and draughts the gallants vied;
While some, in close recess apart,
Courted the ladies of their heart,
Nor courted them in vain;
For often, in the parting hour,
Victorious Love asserts his power
O'er coldness and disdain;
And dainty is her heart, can view
To battle march a lover true,—
Can hear, perchance, his last adieu,—
Nor own her share of pain.

VIII.
Through this mix'd d crowd of glee and game,
The King to greet Lord Marmion came,
While, reverent, all made room.
An easy task it was, I trust,
King James's manly form to know,
Although, his courtesy to show,
He doff'd, to Marmion bending low,
His broker'd cap and plume.
For royal was his garb and mien,
His cloak, off crimson velvet piled,
Trimm'd with the fur of martin wild;
His vest, of changeful satin sheen,
The dazzled eye beguiled;
His gorgeous collar hung adown,
Wrought with the badge of Scotland's crown,
The thistle brave, of old renown:
His trusty blade, Toledo right,
Descended from a baldric bright;
White were his buskins, on the heel
His spurs inlaid of gold and steel;
His bonnet, all of crimson fair,
Was button'd with a ruby rare:
And Marmion deem'd he ne'er had seen
A prince of such a noble mien.

IX.
The Monarch's form was middle size;
For feat of strength, or exercise,

—Shaped in proportion fair;
And hazel was his eagle eye,
And auburn of the darkest dye
His short curl'd beard and hair.
Light was his footstep in the dance,
And firm his stirrup in the lists;
And, oh! he had that merry glance
That seldom lady's heart resists.
Lightly from fair to fair he flew,
And loved to plead, lament, and sue;—
Suit lightly won, and short-lived pain,
For monarchs seldom sigh in vain.
I said he joy'd in banquet bow'r,
But 'mid his mirth, 'twas often strange
How suddenly his cheer would change,
His look o'er-cast and lower,
If, in a sudden turn, he felt
The pressure of his iron belt,
That bound his breast in penance pain,
In memory of his father slain.
Even so 'twas strange how, evermore,
Soon as the passing pang was o'er,
Forward he rush'd with double glee
Into the stream of revelry:
Thus, dim seen object of a right
Startles the course in his flight,
And half he halts, half springs aside;
But feels the quickening spur applied,
And, straining on the tighten'd rein,
Scours doubly swift o'er hill and plain.

X.
O' er James's heart, the courtiers say,
Sir Hugh the Heron's wife held sway:
To Scotland's Court she came,
To be a hostage for her lord,
Who Cessford's gallant heart had gored,
And, with the King to make accord,
Had sent his lovely dame.
Nor to that lady free alone
Did the gay King allegiance own;
For the fair Queen of France
Sent him a toruous ring and glove,
And charged him, as her knight and love,
For her to break a lance;
And strike three strokes with Scottish brand,
And march three miles on Southeron land,
And bid the banners of his band
In English breezes dance.
And thus, for France's Queen, he drest
His manly limbs in mailed vest;
And thus admitted English fair
His immost counsels still to share;
And thus, for both, he madly plunn'd
The ruin of himself and land!

1 MS.: "Bearing the badge of Scotland's crown."
2 MS.: "His trusty blade, Toledo right,
Descended from a baldric bright,
And dangled at his knee:
White were his buskins; from their heel

His spurs inlaid of gold and steel
His fretted spurs were jingling merrily."
3 See Appendix, Note 3 Q.
4 See Appendix, Note 3 R.
5 Ibid. Note 3 S.
And yet, the sooth to tell,
Nor England’s fair, nor France’s Queen,
Were worth one pearl-drop, bright and sheen,
From Margaret’s eyes that fell,—
His own Queen Margaret, who, in Lithgow’s bower,
All lonely sat, and wept the weary hour.

XI.
The Queen sits lone in Lithgow pile,
And weeps the weary day,
The war against her native soil,
Her Monarch’s risk in battle broil;
And in gay Holy-Rood, the while,
Dame Heron rises with a smile
Upon the harp to play,
Fair was her rounded arm, as o’er
The strings her fingers flew;
And as she touch’d and tuned them all,
Ever her bosom’s rise and fall
Was plainer given to view;
For, all for heat, was laid aside
Her wimple, and her hood untied,
And first she pitch’d her voice to sing,
Then glanced her dark eye on the King,
And then around the silent ring;
And laugh’d, and blush’d, and oft did say
Her pretty oath, by Yea, and Nay,
She could not, would not, durst not play!
At length, upon the harp, with glee,
Mingled with arch simplicity,
A soft, yet lively, air she rung,
While thus the wily lady sung:

XII.
Lochinvar.

Oh, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
Through all the wide Border his steed was the best;
And save his good broadsword he weapons had none,
He rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone.
So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war,
There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

He staid not for brake, and he stopp’d not for stone,
He swam the Eske river where ford there was none;
But ere he alighted at Netherby gate,
The bride had consented, the gallowt came late:
For a laggard in love, and a dastard in war,
Was to the wed fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he enter’d the Netherby Hall,
Among bride’s-men, and kinsmen, and brothers, and all:

1 MS.: “Nor France’s Queen, nor England’s fair,
Were worth one pearl-drop, passing rare,
From Margaret’s eyes that fell.”

2 The MS. has only—
“For, all for heat, was laid aside
Her wimpled hood and gorget’s pride;
And on the righted harp with glee,
Mingled with arch simplicity,”

3 The ballad of Lochinvar is in a very slight degree founded on a ballad called “Katharine Janarie,” which may be found in the “Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border,” vol. iii.

4 See the novel of Edgauniet for a detailed picture of some of the extraordinary phenomena of the spring-tides in the Solway Frith.

Then spoke the bride’s father, his hand on his sword
(For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word),
“Oh, come ye in peace here, or come ye in war,
Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord Lochinvar?”—

“I long wo’d your daughter, my suit you denied;—
Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide—
And now I am come, with this lost love of mine,
To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
There are maidens in Scotland more lovely by far,
That would gladly be bride to the young Lochinvar.”

The bride kiss’d the goblet: the knight took it up,
He quaff’d off the wine, and he threw down the cup.
She look’d down to blush, and she look’d up to sigh,
With a smile on her lips, and a tear in her eye.
He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar,—

“Now tread we a measure!” said young Lochinvar.

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
That never a hall such a galliard did grace;
While her mother did fret, and her father did fume,
And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet and plume;
And the bride-maidens whisper’d, “Twere better by far
To have match’d our fair cousin with young Lochinvar.”

One touch to her hand, and one word in her ear,
When they reach’d the hall-door, and the charger stood near;
So light to the croune the fair lady he swung,
So light to the saddle before her he sprung!
“Sh she is won! we are gone, over bank, bush, and seaur;
They’ll have fleet steeds that follow,” quoth young Lochinvar.

There was mounting mong Grames of the Netherby clan;
Forsters, Penwicks, and Musgravies, they rode and they ran;
There was racing and chasing, on Cannobie Lee,
But the lost bride of Netherby ne’er did they see.
So daring in love, and so dauntless in war,
Have ye o’er heard of gallant like young Lochinvar?

XIII.
The Monarch o’er the sirens hung
And beat the measure as she sung;
And, pressing closer, and more near,
He whisper’d praises in her ear.
In loud applause the courtiers vied;
And ladies wink’d, and spoke aside.

A soft, yet lively, air she rang,
While thus her voice attendant sang.”
The witching dame to Marmion threw
A glance, where seem'd to reign
The pride that claims applause due,
And of her royal conquest, too,
A real or reign'd disdain:
Familiar was the look, and told
Marmion and she were friends of old.
The King observed their meeting eyes,
With something like displeased surprise;
For monarchs ill can rivals brook,
Even in a word, or smile, or look.
Straight took he forth the parchment broad,
Which Marmion's high commission show'd:
"Our Borders sack'd by many a raid,
Our peaceful liege-men robb'd," he said:
"On day of truce our Warden slain,
Stout Barton kill'd, his vassals ta'en—
Unworthy were we here to reign,
Should these for vengeance cry in vain;
Our full defiance, hate, and scorn,
Our herald has to Henry borne."

XIV.
He paused, and led where Douglas stood,
And with stern eye the pageant view'd: 1
I mean that Douglas, sixth of yore,
Who coronet of Angus bore,
And, when his blood and heart were high, 2
Did the third James in camp defy,
And all his minions led to die
On Launder's dreary flat:
Princes and favorites long grew tame,
And trembled at the homely name
Of Archibald Bell-the-Cat; 3
The same who left the dusky vale
Of Hermitage in Liddisdale,
Its dungeons, and its towers,
Where Bothwell's turrets brave the air,
And Bothwell bank is blooming fair,
To fix his princely bowers.
Though now, in age, he had laid down
His armor for the peaceful gown,
And for a staff his brand,
Yet often would flash forth the fire
That could, in youth, a monarch's ire
And minion's pride withstand;
And even that day, at council board,
Unapt to soothe his sovereign's mood,
Against the war had Angus stood,
And chafed his royal lord. 4

XV.
His giant form, like ruin'd tower,
Though fall'n its muscles' brawny vaunt,
Huge-boned, and tall, and grim, and gaunt,
Seem'd o'er the gaudy scene to lower:
His locks and beard in silver grew;
His eyebrows kept their sable hue.
Near Douglas when the monarch stood,
His bitter speech he thus pursued:
"Lord Marmion, since these letters say
That in the North you needs must stay,
While slightest hopes of peace remain,
uncourteous speech it were, and stern,
To say—Return to Lindisfarne,
Until my herald come again.—
Then rest you in Tantallon Hold.
Your host shall be the Douglas bold,—
A chief unlike his sires of old.
He wears their motto on his blade, 5
Their blazon o'er his towers display'd;
Yet loves his sovereign to oppose,
More than to face his country's foes.
And, I bethink me, by St. Stephen,
But 'cen this morn to me was given 6
A prize, the first fruits of the war,
Ta'en by a galley from Dunbar,
A bevy of the maids of Heaven.
Under your guard, these holy maids
Shall safe return to cloister shades,
And, while they at Tantallon stay,
Requiem for Cochran's soul may say."
And, with the slaughter'd favorite's name,
Across the Monarch's bow there came
A cloud of ire, remorse, and shame.

XVI.
In answer nought could Angus speak;
His proud heart swell'd wellnigh to break;
He turn'd aside, and down his cheek
A burning tear there stole.
His hand the Monarch sudden took,
That sight his kind heart could not brook:
"Now, by the Bruce's soul, 7
Angus, my hasty speech forgive!
For sure as doth his spirit live,
As he said of the Douglas old,
I well may say of you,—
That never King did subject hold,
In speech more free, in war more bold,
More tender and more true: 8
Forgive me, Douglas, once again."
And, while the King his hand did strain,
The old man's tears fell down like rain.
To seize the moment Marmion tried,
And whisper'd to the King aside:
"O! let such tears unwonted plead
For respite short from dubious deed!"

1 MS.: "And, when his blood and heart were high,
King James's minions led to die,
On Launder's dreary flat."
2 Bell-the-Cat, see Appendix, Note 3 T.
3 See Appendix, Note 3 U.
4 Ibid. Note 3 V.
5 See Appendix, Note 3 W.
6 MS.: "But yester morn was hither driven."
7 The next two lines are not in the original MS.
8 "O, Douglas! Douglas!
Tendir and trew."

The Hermitage.
A child will weep a bramble's smart,
A maid to see her sparrow part,¹
A stripling for a woman's heart;
But woe awaits a country, when
She sees the tears of bearded men.
Then, oh! what omen, dark and high,
When Douglas wets his manly eye?"

XVII.

Displeased was James, that stranger view'd
And tamper'd with his changing mood.
"Laugh those that can, weep those that may,"
Thus did the fiery Monarch say,
"Southward I march by break of day;
And if within Tantallon strong
The good Lord Marmion tarries long,
Perchance our meeting next may fall
At Tamworth, in his castle-hall."—

The haughty Marmion felt the taunt,
And answer'd, grave, the royal vaunt:
"Much honor'd were my humble home,
If in its halls King James should come;
But Nottingham has archers good,
And Yorkshire men are stern of mood;
Northumbrian pickers wild and rude.
On Derby Hills the paths are steep;
In Ouse and Tyne the fords are deep;
And many a banner will be torn,
And many a knight to earth be borne,
And many a sheaf of arrows spent,
Ere Scotland's King shall cross the Trent:
Yet pause, brave Prince, while yet you may!"—

The Monarch lightly turn'd away,
And to his nobles loud did call,—
"Lords, to the dance,—a hall! a hall!"²
Himself his cloak and sword flung by,
And led Dame Heron gallantly;
And minstrels, at the royal order,
Rung out—"Blue Bonnets o'er the Border."

XVIII.

Leave we these revels now, to tell
What to Saint Hilda's maids befell,
Whose galley, as they sail'd again
To Whitby, by a Scot was ta'en.
Now at Dun-Edin did they bide,
Till James should of their fate decide;
And soon, by his command,
Were gently summon'd to prepare
To journey under Marmion's care,
As escort honor'd, safe, and fair,
Again to English land.

The Abbess told her chaplet o'er,
Nor knew which saint she should implore;
For, when she thought of Constance, sore
She fear'd Lord Marmion's mood.
And judge what Clara must have felt!
The sword, that hung in Marmion's belt,
Had drunk De Wilton's blood.

Unwittingly, King James had given,
As guard to Whitby's shades,
The man most dreaded under Heaven
By these defenceless maids:
Yet what petition could avail,
Or who would listen to the tale
Of woman, prisoner, and nun,
'Mid bustle of a war begun?
They deem'd it hopeless to avoid
The convoy of their dangerous guide.

XIX.

Their lodging, so the King assign'd,
To Marmion's, as their guardian, join'd;
And thus it fell that, passing nigh,
The Palmer caught the Abbess' eye,
Who warn'd him by a scroll,
She had a secret to reveal,
That much concern'd the Church's weal,
And health of sinner's soul;
And, with deep charge of secrecy,
She named a place to meet,
Within an open balcony,
That hung from dizzy pitch, and high,
Above the stately street;
To which, as common to each home,
At night they might in secret come.

XX.

At night, in secret, there they came,
The Palmer and the holy Dame.
The moon among the clouds rose high,
And all the city hum was by.
Upon the street, where late before
Did din of war and warriors roar,
You might have heard a pebble fall,
A beetle hum, a cricket sing,
An owl flap his boding wing
On Giles's steeple tall.
The antique buildings, climbing high,
Whose Gothic frontlets sought the sky,
Were here wrapt deep in shade;
There on their brows the moonbeam broke,
Through the faint wreaths of silvery smoke,
And on the casements play'd.
And other light was none to see,
Save torches gliding far,
Before some chieftain of degree,
Who left the royal revelry
To bownce him for the war.—
A solemn scene the Abbess chose;
A solemn hour, her secret to disclose.

XXI.

"Oh, holy Palmer!" she began,—
"For sure he must be sainted man,
Whose blessed feet have trod the ground
Where the Redeemer's tomb is found,—

¹ MS.: "A maid to see her love depart."

² The ancient cry to make room for a dance or pageant.
For his dear Church's sake, my tale
Attend, nor deem of light avail,
Though I must speak of worldly love,—
How vain to those who wed above!—
De Wilton and Lord Marmion woo'd;
Clara de Clare, of Gloster's blood
(Idle it were of Whitby's dame
To say of that same blood I came);
And once, when jealous rage was high,
Lord Marmion said despitefully,
Wilton was traitor in his heart,
And had made league with Martin Swart,²
When he came here on Sinmel's part;
And only cowardice did restrain
His rebel aid on Stokefield's plain,—
And down he threw his glove:—the thing
Was tried, as wont, before the King;
Where frankly did De Wilton own,
That Swart in Gueldres he had known;
And that between them then there went
Some scroll of courteous compliment.
For this he to his castle sent;
But when his messenger return'd,
Judge how De Wilton's fury burn'd!¹
For in his packet there were laid
Letters that claim'd disloyal aid,
And proved King Henry's cause betray'd.
His fame, thus blighted, in the field
He strove to clear, by spear and shield;
To clear his fame in vain he strove,
For wondrous are His ways above!
Perchance some form was unobserved;
Perchance in prayer, or faith, he swerved;³
Else how could guiltless champion quail,
Or how the blessed ordeal fail?

XXII.
"His squire, who now De Wilton saw
As recreant doom'd to suffer law,
Repentant, own'd in vain,
That, while he had the scrolls in care,
A stranger maiden, passing fair,
Had drench'd him with a beverage rare;
HIs words no faith could gain.
With Clare alone he credence won,
Who, rather than wed Marmion,
Did to Saint Hilda's shrine repair,
To give our house her livings fair,
And die a vestal votress there.
The impulse from the earth was given,
But bent her to the paths of Heaven.
A purer heart, a lovelier maid,
Ne'er shelter'd her in Whitby's shade,
No, not since Saxon Edelfled;"¹

Only one trace of earthly strain,
That for her lover's loss
She cherishes a sorrow vain,
And murmurs at the cross.—
And then her heritage;—it goes
Along the banks of Tame;
Deep fields of grain the reaper mows,
In meadows rich the heifer low,
The falconer and huntsman knows
Its woodlands for the game.
Shame were it to Saint Hilda dear,
And I, her humble votress here,
Should do a deadly sin,
Her temple spoil'd before mine eyes,
If this false Marmion such a prize
By my consent should win;
Yet hath our boisterous monarch sworn
That Clare shall from our house be torn;
And grievous cause have I to fear
Such mandate doth Lord Marmion bear.

XXIII.
"Now, prisoner, helpless, and betray'd
To evil power, I claim thine aid,
By every step that thou hast trod
To holy shrine and grotto dim,
By every martyr's tortured limb,
By angel, saint, and seraphim,
And by the Church of God!
For mark:—When Wilton was betray'd,
And with his squire forg'd letters laid,
She was, alas! that sinful maid
By whom the deed was done,—
Oh! shame and horror to be said!—
She was a perjured nun!
No clerk in all the land, like her,
Traced quaint and varying character.
Perchance you may a marvel deem,
That Marmion's paramour
(For such vile thing she was) should scheme
Her lover's nuptial hour;
But o'er him thus she hoped to gain,
As privy to his honor's stain,
Illimitable power:
For this she secretly retain'd
Each proof that might the plot reveal,
Instructions with his hand and seal;
And thus Saint Hilda deign'd,
Through sinner's perfidy impure,
Her house's glory to secure,
And Clare's immortal weal.

XXIV.
"'Twere long, and needless, here to tell
How to my hand these papers fell;

¹ "There are passages in which the flatness and tediousness of the narrative is relieved by no sort of beauty nor elegance of diction, and which form an extraordinary contrast with the more animated and finished portions of the poem. We shall not afflict our readers with more than one specimen of this falling off. We select it from the Abbess's explanation to De Wilton:—'De Wilton and Lord Marmion woo'd, &c. (and twenty-two following lines)."—JEFFREY.
² See Appendix, Note 3 X.
³ See Appendix, Note 3 Y.
With me they must not stay,
Saint Hilda keep her Abbess true!
Who knows what outrage he might do,
While journeying by the way?—
Oh, blessed Saint, if 'e'er again
I venturous leave thy calm domain,
To travel or by land or main,
Deep penance may I pay!—
Now, saintly Palmer, mark my prayer:
I give this packet to thy care,
For thee to stop they will not dare;
And, oh! with cautious speed,
To Wolsey's hand the papers bring,
That he may show them to the King:
And, for thy well-earn'd meed,
Thou holy man, at Whitby's shrine
A weekly mass shall still be thine,
While priests can sing and read.—
What all'st thou?—Speak!”—For as he took
The charge, a strong emotion shook
His frame; and, ere reply,
They heard a faint yet shrilly tone,
Like distant clarion feebly blown,
That on the breeze did die;
And loud the Abbess shriek'd in fear,
“Saint Withold, save us!—What is here!
Look at ye City Cross!
See on its battlement tower appear
Phantoms, that sentecheons seem to rear,
And blazon'd banners toss!”—

XXV.

Dun-Edin's Cross, a pillar'd stone,¹
Rose on a turret octagon;
(But now is razed that monument,
Whence royal edict rang,
And voice of Scotland's law was sent
In glorious trumpet-clang.
Oh! be his tomb as lead to lead,
Upon its dull destroyer's head:—
A minstrel's malison² is said,³—
Then on its battlements they saw
A vision, passing Nature's law,
Strange, wild, and dimly seen;
Figures that seem'd to rise and die,
Gibber and sign, advance and fly,
While nought confirm'd could ear or eye
Discern of sound or sien.
Yet darkly did it seem, as there
Heralds and pursuivants prepare,
With trumpet sound and blazon fair,
A summons to proclaim;

But indistinct the pageant proud,
As fancy forms of midnight cloud,
When flings the moon upon her shroud
A wavering tinge of flame;
It flits, expands, and shifts, till loud,
From midmost of the spectre crowd,
This awful summons came:—⁴

XXVI.

“Prince, prelate, potentate, and peer,
Whose names I now shall call,
Scottish, or foreigner, give ear;
Subjects of him who sent me here,
At his tribunal to appear,
I summon one and all:
I cite you by each deadly sin
That 'e'er hath soil'd your hearts within;
I cite you by each brutal lust
That 'e'er defiled your earthly dust,—
By wrath, by pride, by fear⁵
By each 'o'er-mastering passion's tone,
By the dark grave, and dying groan!
When forty days are pass'd and gone,⁶
I cite you, at your Monarch's throne,
To answer and appear.”

Then thunder'd forth a roll of names:
The first was thine, unhappy James!
Then all thy nobles came;
Crawford, Glencaim, Montrose, Argyle,
Ross, Bothwell, Forbes, Lennox, Lyle,—
Why should I tell their separate style?
Each chief of birth and fame,
Of Lowland, Highland, Border, Isle,
Fore-doom'd to Flodden's carnage pile,
Was cited there by name;
And Marmion, Lord of Fontenaye,
Of Lutterward, and Scrivelbye;
De Wilton, erst of Aberley,
The self-same thundering voice did say.—⁷

But then another spoke:
“Thy fatal summons I deny,
And thine infernal Lord defy,
Appealing me to Him on High
Who burst the sinner's yoke.”
At that dread accent, with a scream,
Parted the pageant like a dream;
The summoner was gone.
Prone on her face the Abbess fell,
And fast, and fast, her beads did tell;
Her nuns came, startled by the yell,
And found her there alone.
She mark'd not, at the scene aghast,
What time, or how, the Palmer pass'd.

¹ MS.: “Dun-Edin's Cross, a pillar'd stone,
Rose on a turret hexagon:
(Dust unto dust, lead unto lead,
On its destroyer's drowsy \[ head!—
Upon its base destroyer's \[  head:—
The Minstrel's malison is said,"

² I.e., Curse.

³ See Appendix, Note 2 Z.

⁴ See Appendix, Note 4 A.

⁵ MS.: “By wrath, by fraud, by fear.”

⁶ MS.: “Ere twenty days are pass'd and gone,
Before the mighty Monarch's throne,
I cite you to appear.”

⁷ MS.: “In thundering tone the voice did say.”
XXVII.

Shift we the scene.—The camp doth move,
Dun-Edin’s streets are empty now,
Save when, for weal of those they love,
To pray the prayer, and vow the vow,
The tottering child, the anxious fair,
The gray-hair’d sire, with pious care,
To chapels and to shrines repair:—
Where is the Palmer now? and where
The Abbess, Marmion, and Clare?—
Bold Douglas! to Tantallon fair
They journey in thy charge:
Lord Marmion rode on his right hand,
The Palmer still was with the band;
Angus, like Lindsay, did command
That none should roam at large.
But in that Palmer’s alter’d mien
A wondrous change might now be seen:
Freely he spoke of war,
Of marvels wrought by single hand,
When lifted for a native land;
And still look’d high, as if he plann’d
Some desperate deed afar,
His courser would he feed and stroke,
And, tucking up his sable frocke,
Would first his mettle bold provoke,
Then soothe or quell his pride,
Old Hubert said, that never one
He saw, except Lord Marmion,
A steed so fairly ride.

XXVIII.

Some half-hours’ march behind, there came,
By Eustace govern’d fair,
A troop escorting Hilda’s Dame,
With all her nuns, and Clare.
No audience had Lord Marmion sought;
Ever he fear’d to aggravate
Clara de Clare’s suspicious hate;
And safer ’twas, he thought,
To wait till, from the nuns removed,
The influence of kinsmen loved,
And suit by Henry’s self approved,
Her slow consent had wrought.
His was no flickering flame, that dies
Unless when fann’d by looks and sighs,
And lighted oft at lady’s eyes;
He long’d to stretch his wide command
O’er luckless Clara’s ample land:
Besides, when Wilton with him vie’d,
Although the pang of humbled pride
The place of jealousy supplied,
Yet conquest, by that meanness won
He almost loath’d to think upon,
Led him, at times, to hate the cause
Which made him burst through honor’s laws.

If e’er he loved, ’twas her alone
Who died within that vault of stone.

XXIX.

And now, when close at hand they saw
North Berwick’s town, and lofty Law,¹
Fitz-Eustace bade them pause a while,
Before a venerable pile,²
Whose turrets view’d, afar,
The lofty Bass, the Lambie Isle,³
The ocean’s peace or war.
At tolling of a bell, forth came
The convent’s venerable Dame,
And pray’d Saint Hilda’s Abbess rest
With her, a loved and honor’d guest,
Till Douglas should a bark prepare
To waft her back to Whitby fair.
Glad was the Abbess, you may guess,
And thank’d the Scottish Priress;
And tedious were to tell, I ween,
The courteous speech that pass’d between.
O’erjoy’d the nuns their palfreys leave;
But when fair Clara did intend,
Like them, from horseback to descend,
Fitz-Eustace said,—“I grieve,
Fair lady, grieve o’en from my heart,
Such gentle company to part;—
Think not discourteous,
But lords’ commands must be obey’d;
And Marmion and the Douglas said,
That you must wend with me.
Lord Marmion hath a letter broad,
Which to the Scottish Earl he show’d,
Commanding that beneath his care,
Without delay, you shall repair
To your good kinsman, Lord Fitz-Clare.”

XXX.

The startled Abbess loud exclaim’d;
But she, at whom the blow was aim’d,
Grew pale as death, and cold as lead,—
She deem’d she heard her death-doom read.
“Cheer thee, my child!” the Abbess said;
“They dare not tear thee from my hand,
To ride alone with armed band.”—
“Nay, holy mother, nay,”
Fitz-Eustace said, “the lovely Clare
Will be in Lady Angus’ care,
In Scotland while we stay;
And, when we move, an easy ride
Will bring us to the English side,
Female attendance to provide
Befitting Gloster’s heir:
Nor thinks nor dreams my noble lord,
By slightest look, or act, or word,
To harass Lady Clare.

¹ MS.: “North Berwick’s town, and conic Law.”
² The convent alluded to is a foundation of Cistercian nuns,
³ MS.: “The lofty Bass, the Lamb’s green isle.”

near North Berwick, of which there are still some remains.
It was founded by Duncan, Earl of Fife, in 1216.
Her faithful guardian he will be,
Nor sue for slightest courtesy
That o'en to stranger falls,
Till he shall place her, safe and free,
'Within her kinsman's halls.'
He spoke, and blush'd with earnest grace:
His faith was painted on his face,
And Clare's worst fear relieved,
The Lady Abbess loud exclaim'd
On Henry, and the Douglas blamed,
Entreated, threaten'd, griev'd;
To martyr, saint, and prophet pray'd,
Against Lord Marmion inveigh'd,
And call'd the Prioress to aid,
To curse with cande, bell, and book.
Her head the grave Cistercian shook:
"The Douglas, and the King," she said,
"In their commands will be obey'd;
Grieve not, nor dream that harm can fall
The maiden in Tantallon hall."

XXXI.
The Abbess, seeing strife was vain,
Assumed her wonted state again,—
For much of state she had,—
Composed her veil, and raised her head,
And—"Bid," in solemn voice she said,
"Thy master, bold and bad,
The records of his house turn o'er,
And, when he shall there written see,
That one of his own ancestry
Drove the monks forth of Coventry,¹
Bid him his fate expire!
Prancing in pride of earthly trust,
His charger hurl'd him to the dust,
And, by a base plebeian thrust,
He died his band before.
God judge 'twixt Marmion and me;
He is a Chief of high degree,
And I a poor recluse:
Yet oft, in holy writ, we see
Even such weak minister as me
May the oppressor bruise:
For thus, inspired, did Judith slay
The mighty in his sin,
And Jael thus, and Deborah"—
Here hasty Blount broke in:
"Fitz-Eustace, we must march our band:
St. Anton' fire thee! wilt thou stand
All day, with bonnet in thy hand,
To hear the Lady preach?

By this good light! if thus we stay,
Lord Marmion, for our food delay,
Will sharper sermon teach.
Come, don thy cap, and mount thy horse;
The Dame must patience take perforce."—

XXXII.
"Submit we then to force," said Clare,
"But let this barbarons lord despair
His purposed aim to win;
Let him take living, land, and life;
But to be Marmion's wedded wife
In me were deadly sin;
And if it be the King's decree
That I must find no sanctuary
In that inviolable dome²
Where even a homicide might come,
And safely rest his head,
Though at its open portals stood,
Thirsting to pour forth blood for blood,
The kinsmen of the dead,—
Yet one asylum is my own
Against the dreaded hour;
A low, a silent, and a lone,
Where kings have little power,
One victim is before me there.—
Mother, your blessing, and in prayer
Remember your unhappy Clare!"³
Loud weeps the Abbess, and bestows
Kind blessings many a one:
Weeping and wailing loud arose,
Round patient Clare, the clamorous woes
Of every simple nun.
His eyes the gentle Eustace dries,
And scarce rude Blount the sight could bide.
Then took the squire her rein,
And gently led away her steed,
And, by each courteous word and deed,
To cheer her strove in vain.

XXXIII.
But scant three miles the band had rode,
When o'er a height they pass'd,
And, sudden, close before them show'd
His towers Tantallon vast;³
Broad, massive, high, and stretching far,
And held impregnable in war,
On a projecting rock they rose,
And round three sides the ocean flows;
The fourth did battled walls enclose,
And double mound and fosse.⁴

¹ See Appendix, Note 4 B.
² This line, necessary to the rhyme, is now for the first time restored from the MS. It must have been omitted by an oversight in the original printing.—Ed.
³ For the origin of Marmion's visit to Tantallon Castle, in the Poem, see Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 17.
⁴ "During the regency (subsequent to the death of James V.) the Dowager Queen Regent, Mary of Guise, became desirous of putting a French garrison into Tantallon, as she had into Dunbar and Inchkeith, in order the better to bridle the lords and barons who inclined to the reformed faith, and to secure by citadels the sea-coast of the Frith of Forth. For this purpose, the Regent, to use the phrase of the time, 'dealt with' the then Earl of Angus for his consent to the proposed measure. He occupied himself, while he was speaking, in feeding a falcon which sat upon his wrist, and only replied by addressing the bird, but leaving the Queen to make the application, 'The devil is in this greedy glad—she

SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

By narrow drawbridge, outworks strong,
Through studded gates, an entrance long,
To the main court they cross.
It was a wide and stately square:
Around were lodgings, fit and fair,
And towers of various form,
Which on the court projected far,
And broke its lines quadrangular.
Here was square keep, there turret high,
Or pinnacle that sought the sky,
Whence oft the Warder could desery
The gathering ocean-storm.

XXXIV.
Here did they rest.—The princely care
Of Douglas, why should I declare,
Or say they met reception fair?
Or why the tidings say,
Which, varying, to Tantallon came,
By hurrying posts or fleeter flame,
With every varying day?
And, first, they heard King James had won
Etall, and Wark, and Ford; and then,
That Norham Castle strong was ta'en.
At that sore marvell'd Marmion;—
And Douglas hoped his Monarch's hand
Would soon subdue Northumberland:
But whisper'd news there came,
That, while his host inactive lay,
And melted by degrees away,
King James was dallying off the day
With Heron's wily dame.—
Such acts to chronicles I yield;
Go seek them there, and see:
Mine is a tale of Flodden Field,
And not a history.—
At length they heard the Scottish host
On that high ridge had made their post,
Which frowns o'er Millfield Plain;
And that brave Surrey many a band
Had gather'd in the Southern land,
And march'd into Northumberland,
And camp at Wooler ta'en.
Marmion, like charger in the stall,
That hears, without, the trumpet-call,
Began to chafe and swear:—
"A sorry thing to hide my head
In castle, like a fearful maid,
When such a field is near!
Needs must I see this battle-day:
Death to my fame if such a fray
Were fought, and Marmion away!
The Douglas, too, I wot not why,
Hath bated of his courtesy:

No longer in his halls I'll stay."
Then bade his band they should array
For march against the dawning day.

MARMION.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SIXTH.

TO
RICHARD HEBER, ESQ.

Merton House;* Christmas.

HEAP on more wood! the wind is chill;
But let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.
Each age has deem'd the new-born year
The fittest time for festal cheer:
Even, heathen yet, the savage Dane
At Io! more deep the mead did drain;* 2
High on the beach his galleys drew,
And feasted all his pirate crew;
Then in his low and pine-built hall,
Where shields and axes deck'd the wall,
They gorged upon the half-dress'd steer;
Caroused in seas of sable beer;
While round, in brutal jest, were thrown
The half-gnaw'd rib, and marrow-bone:
Or listen'd all, in grim delight,
While Scalds yell'd out the joys of fight.
Then forth, in frenzy, would they hie,
While wildly loose their red locks fly,
And dancing round the blazing pile,
They make such barbarous mirth the while,
As best might to the mind recall
The boisterous joys of Odin's hall.

And well our Christian sires of old
Loved when the year its course had roll'd,
And brought blythe Christmas back again,
With all his hospitable train,
Domestic and religious rite
Gave honor to the holy night;
On Christmas eve the bells were rung;
On Christmas eve the mass was sung:
That only night in all the year
Saw the stoiled pristce the chalice rear. 3

as any you can place there."—SIR WALTER SCOTT'S MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS, vol. vii. p. 496.

* Merton House, the seat of Hugh Scott, Esq., of Harden, is beautifully situated on the Tweed, about two miles below Dryburgh Abbey.

* See Appendix, Note 4 C.

* Ibid. Note 4 D.
The damsel donn'd her kirtle sheen;
The hall was dress'd with holly green;
Forth to the wood did merry-men go,
To gather in the mistletoe.
Then open'd wide the Baron's hall
To vassal, tenant, serf, and all;
Power laid his rod of rule aside,
And Ceremony doff'd his pride.
The heir, with roses in his shoes,
That night might village partner choose;
The lord, underskilling, share
The vulgar game of "post and pair."
All hail'd, with uncontroll'd delight,
And general voice, the happy night,
That to the cottage, as the crown,
Brought tidings of salvation down.

The fire, with well-dried logs supplied,
Went roaring up the chimney wide;
The huge hall-table's oaken face,
Scrubb'd till it shone, the day to grace,
Bore then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lusty brawn,
By old blue-coated serving man;
Then the grim boar's head frown'd on high,
Crested with bays and rosemary.
Well can the green-garb'd ranger tell
How, when, and where, the monster fell;
What dogs before his death he tore,
And all the bating of the boar.
The wassail round, in good brown bowls,
Garnish'd with ribbons, blithely trowls.
There the huge sirloin reckon'd; hard by
Plum-porridge stood, and Christmas pie;
Nor fail'd old Scotland to produce,
At such high tide, her savory goose.
Then came the merry maskers in,
And carols roar'd with blithesome din;
If unmeldious was the song,
It was a hearty note, and strong.

Who lists may in their mumming see
Traces of ancient mystery;
White shirts supplied the masquerade,
And smutted cheeks the visors made;
But, oh! what masks, richly dight,
Can boast of bosoms half so light!
England was merry England, when Old Christmas brought his sports again.
'Twas Christmas broach'd the mightiest ale;
'Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;

A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
The poor man's heart through half the year.

Still linger, in our northern clime,
Some remnant of the good old time;
And still, within our valleys here,
We hold the kindred title dear,
Even when, perchance, its far-fetch'd claim
To Southron ear sounds empty name;
For course of blood, our proverbs deem,
Is warmer than the mountain stream.
And thus, my Christmas still I hold
Where my great-grand sire came of old,
With amber beard, and flaxen hair,
And reverend apostolic air,
The feast and holy-tide to share,
And mix sobriety with wine,
And honest mirth with thoughts divine:
Small thought was his, in after time
E'er to be hitch'd into a rhyme.
The simple sire could only boast
That he was loyal to his cost;
The banish'd race of kings revered,
And lost his land,—but kept his beard.

In these dear halls, where welcome kind
Is with fair liberty combined;
Where cordial friendship gives the hand,
And flies constraint the magic wand
Of the fair dame that rules the land,
Little we heed the tempest drear,
While music, mirth, and social cheer,
Speed on their wings the passing year.
And Mertoun's halls are fair e'en now,
When not a leaf is on the bough.
Tweed loves them well, and turns again,
As loath to leave the sweet domain,
And holds his mirror to her face,
And clips her with a close embrace:—
Gladly as he, we seek the dome,
And as reluctant turn us home.

How just that, at this time of glee,
My thoughts should, Heber, turn to thee!
For many a merry hour we've known,
And heard the chimes of midnight's tone.
Cease, then, my friend! a moment cease,
And leave these classic tomes in peace!
Of Roman and of Grecian lore
Sure mortal brain can hold no more.
These ancients, as Noll Bluff might say,
"Were pretty fellows in their day;"

1 MS. : "And all the hunting of the boar.
Then round the merry wassail-bowl,
Garnish'd with ribbons, blithe did trawl,
And the large sirloin stand'd on high,
Plum-porridge, hare, and savory pie."

2 See Appendix, Note 4 E.

3 "Blood is warmer than water,"—a proverb meant to vindicate our family predilections.

4 See Appendix, Note 4 F.

5 MS. : "In these fair halls, with merry cheer,
Is bid farewell the dying year."

6 "A lady of noble German descent, born Countess Harriet Brulh of Martinskirchen, married to H. Scott, Esq., of Harden (now Lord Polwarth), the author's relative and much-valued friend almost from infancy."—Brander Matthews, vol. iv. p. 29.

7 "Behold the world is short;—
It passes like the breath of day;
And now the fires are lighted high.
We think of nothing but the past
And what we've lost, and what we've found.
Then let us sing, and merrily."

8 "Hannibal was a pretty fellow, sir—a very pretty fellow in his day."—Old Bachelor.
But time and tide o'er all prevail—
On Christmas eve a Christmas tale
Of wonder and of war—"Profane!
What! leave the lofty Latin strain,
Her stately prose, her verse's charms,
To hear the clash of rusty arms:
In Fairy Land or Limbo lost,
To jestle conjurer and ghost,
Goblin and witch!"—Nay, Heber dear,
Before you touch my charter, hear:
Though Leyden aids, alas! no more,
My cause with many-languaged lore,¹
This may I say:—in realms of death
Ulysses meets Alcides' wrath;
Æneas, upon Thracia's shore,
The ghost of murder'd Polydore;
For omens, we in Livy cross,
At every turn, locutus Bos,
As grave and duly speaks that ox
As if he told the price of stocks;
Or held, in Rome republican,
The place of common-councilman.

All nations have their omens dear,
Their legends wild of woe and fear.
To Cambria look—the peasant see,
Bethink him of Glendoverly,
And shun "the spirit's blasted Tree."²
The Highlander, whose red claymore
The battle turn'd on Maid'a's shore,
Will, on a Friday morn, look pale,
If ask'd to tell a fairy tale;³
He fears the vengeful Elfin King,
Who leaves that day his grasy ring:
Invisible to human ken,
He walks among the sons of men.

Didst e'er, dear Heber, pass along⁴
Beneath the towers of Franchemont,
Which, like an eagle's nest in air,
Hang o'er the stream and hamlet fair?⁵
Deep in their vaults, the peasants say,
A mighty treasure buried lay,
Amass'd through rapine and through wrong
By the last Lord of Franchemont.

The iron chest is bolted hard,
A huntsman sits, its constant guard;

Around his neck his horn is hung,
His hanger in his belt is slung;
Before his feet his blood-hounds lie;
An 'twere not for his gloomy eye,
Whose withering glance no heart can brook,
As true a huntsman doth he look,
As bugle e'er in brake did sound,
Or ever hollo'd to a hound.
To chase the fiend, and win the prize,
In that same dungeon ever tries
An aged necromantic priest;
It is an hundred years at least
Since 'twixt them first the strife begun,
And neither yet has lost nor won.
And oft the Conjurer's words will make
The stubborn Demon groan andquake;
And oft the bands of iron break,
Or bursts one lock, that still amain,
Fast as 'tis open'd, shuts again.
That magic strife within the tomb
May last until the day of doom,
Unless the adept shall learn to tell
The very word that clenched the spell,
When Franchemont lock'd the treasure cell.
An hundred years are pass'd and gone,
And scarce three letters has he won.

Such general superstition may
Excuse for old Pitcoddie say;
Whose gossip history has given
My song the messenger from Heaven;¹
That warn'd, in Lithgow, Scotland's King,
Nor less the infernal summoning;⁶
May pass the Monk of Durham's tale,
Whose demon fought in Gothic mail;
May pardon plead for Fordun grave,
Who told of Gifford's Goblin Cave.
But why such instances to you,
Who, in an instant, can renew
Your treasured hoards of various lore,
And furnish twenty thousand more?
Hoards, not like theirs whose volumes rest
Like treasures in the Franchemont chest,
While gripple owners still refuse
To others what they cannot use;
Give them the priest's whole century,
They shall not spell you letters three;

¹ MS.: "With all his many-languaged lore."
John Leyden, M.D., who had been of great service to Sir Walter Scott in the preparation of the Border Minstrelsy, sailed for India in April, 1809, and died at Java in August, 1811, before completing his 56th year.

"Scenes sung by him who sings no more:
His brief and bright career is o'er,
And mutes his tuneful strains;
Quenched is his lamp of varied lore,
That loved the light of song to pour:
A distant and a deadly shore
Has LEEYDEN's cold remains!"

Lord of the Isles, canto iv. post.

² See a notice of his life in the Author's Miscellaneous Prose Works.
³ See Appendix, Note 4 G.
⁴ See Appendix, Note 4 H.
⁵ This paragraph appears interpolated on the blank page of the MS.
⁶ MS.: "Which, high in air, like eagle's nest,
Hang from the dizzy mountain's breast."
⁷ See Appendix, Note 4 I.
⁸ See Appendix, Note 3 B.
⁹ See Appendix, Note 4 A. The four lines which follow are not in the MS.
Their pleasure in the books the same
The magic takes in piler'd gem.
Thy volumes, open as thy heart,
Delight, amusement, science, art,
To every ear and eye impart;
Yet who of all who thus employ them
Can like the owner's self enjoy them?—
But, hark! I hear the distant drum!
The day of Flodden Field is come.—
Adieu, dear Heber! life and health,
And store of literary wealth!

MARMION.

CANTO SIXTH.

The Battle.

I.

While great events were on the gale,
And each hour brought a varying tale,
And the demeanor, changed and cold,
Of Douglas fretted Marmion bold,
And, like the impatient steed of war,
He smitt'd the battle from afar;
And hopes were none, that back again
Herald should come from Teronenne,
Where England's King in length lay,
Before decisive battle-day;
Whilst these things were, the mournful Clare
Did in the Dame's devotions share;
For the good Countess ceaseless pray'd
To Heaven and Saints her sons to aid,
And, with short interval, did pass
From prayer to book, from book to mass,
And all in high Baronial pride,—
A life both dull and dignified;—
Yet as Lord Marmion nothing press'd
Upon her intervals of rest,
Dejected Clara well could bear
The formal state, the lengthen'd prayer,
Though dearest to her wounded heart
The hours that she might spend apart.

II.

I said, Tantallon's dizzy steep
Hung o'er the margin of the deep.
Many a rude tower and rampart there
Repell'd the insult of the air,
Which, when the tempest vex'd the sky,
Half breeze, half spray, came whistling by.
Above the rest, a turret square
Did o'er its Gothic entrance bear,
Of sculpture rude, a stony shield;
The Bloody Heart was in the Field,
And in the chief three mullets stood,
The cognizance of Douglas blood.

The turret held a narrow stair;¹
Which, mounted, gave you access where
A parapet's embattled row
Did seaward round the castle go.
Sometimes in dizzy steps descending,
Sometimes in narrow circuit bending,
Sometimes in platform broad extending,
Its varying circle did combine
Bulwark, and bartizan, and line,
And bastion, tower, and vantage-coign;
Above the booming ocean leant
The far-projecting battlement;
The billows burst, in ceaseless flow,
Upon the precipice below.
Where'er Tantallon faced the land,
Gate-works and walls were strongly mann'd;
No need upon the sea-girt side:
The steepy rock, and frantic tide,
Approach of human step denied;
And thus these lines and ramparts rude
Were left in deepest solitude.

III.

And, for they were so lonely, Clare
Would to these battlements repair,
And muse upon her sorrows there,
And list the sea-bird's cry;
Or slow, like noontide ghost, would glide
Along the dark-gray bulwarks' side,
And ever on the heaving tide
Look down with weary eye.
Oft did the cliff and swelling main
Recall the thoughts of Whitby's fame,—
A home she ne'er might see again;
For she had laid adown,
So Douglas bade, the hood and veil,
And frontlet of the cloister pale,
And Benedictine gown:
It were unseemly sight, he said,
A novice out of convent shade.—
Now her bright locks, with sunny glow,
Again adorn'd her brow of snow;
Her mantle rich, whose borders, round,
A deep and fretted broidery bound,
In golden foldings sought the ground;
Of holy ornament, alone
Remain'd a cross with ruby stone;
And often did she look
On that which in her hand she bore,
With velvet bound, and broder'd o'er,
Her breviary book,
In such a place, so lone, so grim,
At dawning pale, or twilight dim,
It fearful would have been
To meet a form so richly dress'd;²
With book in hand, and cross on breast,
And such a woeful mien.

¹ MS.: "The tower contain'd a narrow stair,
And gave an open access where."

² MS.: "To meet a form so fair, and dress'd
In antique robes, with cross on breast."
IV.

Once walking thus, at evening tide,
It chanced a gliding sail she spied,
And, sighing, thought—"The Abbess, there!
Perchance does to her home repair;
Her peaceful rule, where Duty free,
Walks hand in hand with Charity;
Where oft Devotion’s tranced glow
Can such a glimpse of heaven bestow,
That the enraptured sisters see
High vision and deep mystery;
The very form of Hilda fair,
Hovering upon the sunny air,
And smiling on her votaries’ prayer.\(^2\)
Oh! wherefore, to my duller eye,
Did still the Saint her form deny!
Was it that, sear’d by sinful sores,
My heart could neither melt nor burn?
Or lie my warm affections low,
With him that taught them first to glow?
Yet, gentle Abbess, well I knew
To pay thy kindness grateful due,
And well could brook the mild command
That ruled thy simple maiden band.
How different now! condemn’d to bide
My doom from this dark tyrant’s pride.—
But Marmion has to learn, ere long,
That constant mind, and hate of wrong,
Descended to a feele girl
From Red De Clare, stout Gloster’d Earl:
Of such a stem, a sapling weak\(^3\)
He ne’er shall bend, although he break.

V.

"But see!—what makes this armor here?"—
For in her path there lay
Targe, corselet, helm;—she view’d them near.—
"The breast-plate pierced!—Ay, much I fear,
Weak fence wert thou! ‘gainst foeman’s spear,
That hath made fatal entrance here,
As these dark blood-gouts say.—
Thus Wilton!—Oh! not corselet’s ward,
Not truth, as diamond pure and hard,
Could be thy manly bosom’s guard,
Oh! on disastrous day!"
She raised her eyes in mournful mood,—
Wilton himself before her stood!
It might have seem’d his passing ghost,
For every youthful grace was lost;
And joy unwonted, and surprise,
Gave their strange wildness to his eyes.—
Expect not, noble dames and lords,
That I can tell such scene in words:
What skillful limner e’er would choose
To paint the rainbow’s varying hues,
Unless to mortal it were given
To dip his brush in dyes of heaven?
Far less can my weak line declare
Each changing passion’s shade;
Brightening to rupture from despair,
Sorrow, surprise, and pity there,
And joy, with her angelic air,
And hope, that paints the future fair,
Their varying hues display’d:
Each o’er its rival’s ground extending,
Alternate conquering, shifting, blending,
Till all, fatigued, the conflict yield,
And mighty Love retains the field.
Shortly I tell what then he said,
By many a tender word delay’d,\(^4\)
And modest blush, and bursting sigh,
And question kind, and fond reply:—

VI.

De Wilton’s History.\(^5\)

"Forget we that disastrous day,
When senseless in the lists I lay.
Thence dragg’d,—but how I cannot know,
For sense and recollection fled,—
I found me on a pallet low,
Within my ancient beadsman’s shed;—\(^6\)
Austin.—Remember’s thy, my Clare,
How thou didst blush when the old man,
When first our infant love began,
Said we would make a matchless pair?
Menials, and friends, and kinsmen fled
From the degraded traitor’s bed,—\(^7\)
He only held my burning head,
And tended me for many a day,
While wounds and fever held their sway,
But far more needful was his care
When sense return’d to wake despair;
For I did tear the closing wound,
And dash me frantic on the ground,
If e’er I heard the name of Clare.

\(^1\) MS.: “A form so sad and fair.”
\(^2\) See Appendix, Note 4 K.
\(^3\) MS.: “Of such a stem, or branch [though so] weak,
He ne’er shall bend me, though he break.”
\(^4\) MS.: “By many a short carres delay’d.”
\(^5\) MS.: “When an affered gnome prone, the dead is considered, the above picture will not be thought over; charged with coloring; and yet the painter is so fatigue’d with his exertion, that he has finally thrown away the brush, and is contented with merely chalking out the intervening adventures of De Wilton, without bestowing on them any colors at-all.”—Critical Review.
\(^6\) MS.: “Where an old beadsman held my head.”
\(^7\) MS.: “The banish’d traitor’s [humble] bed.”
At length, to calmer reason brought,
Much by his kind attendance wrought,
With him I left my native strand,
And, in a Palmer's weeds array'd,
My hated name and form to shade,
I journey'd many a laud;
No more a lord of rank and birth,
But mingled with the dregs of earth.
Oft Austin for my reason fear'd,
When I would sit, and deeply brood
On dark revenge, and deeds of blood,
Or wild mad schemes uprear'd.
My friend at length fell sick, and said,
God would remove him soon:
And, while upon his dying bed,
He begg'd of me a boon —
If e'er my deadliest enemy
Beneath my brand should conquer'd lie,
Even then my mercy should awake,
And spare his life for Austin's sake.

VII.
"Still restless as a second Cain,
To Scotland next my route was ta'en;
Full well the paths I knew.
Fame of my fate made various sound,
That death in pilgrimage I found,
That I had perish'd of my wound,—
None cared which tale was true;
And living eye could never guess
De Wilton in his Palmer's dress;
For now that sable slough is shed,
And trimm'd my shaggy beard and head,
I scarcely know me in the glass.
A chance most wondrous did provide
That I should be that Baron's guide —
I will not name his name! —
Vengeance to God alone belongs;
But, when I think on all my wrongs,
My blood is liquid flame!
And ne'er the time shall I forget,
When, in a Scottish hostel set,
Dark looks we did exchange:
What were his thoughts I cannot tell;
But in my bosom must er'd Hell
Its plans of dark revenge.

VIII.
"A word of vulgar anger,
That broke from me, I scarce knew why,
Drought on a village tale;
Which wrought upon his moody sprite,
And sent him armed forth by night.
I borrow'd steed and mail,
And weapons, from his sleeping band;
And, passing from a postern door,
We met, and 'counter'd hand to hand —
He fell on Gifford moor.
For the death-stroke my brand I drew (Oh, then my helmed head he knew,
The Palmer's cowl was gone),
Then had three inches of my blade
The heavy debt of vengeance paid —
My hand the thought of Austin staid;
I left him there alone —
Oh, good old man! even from the grave
Thy spirit could thy master save:
If I had slain my foe man, ne'er
Had Whitby's Abbess, in her fear,
Given to my hand this packet dear,
Of power to clear my injured fame,
And vindicate De Wilton's name —
Perchance you heard the Abbess tell
Of the strange pageantry of Hell,
That broke our secret speech —
It rose from the infernal shade,
Or fealty was some juggle play'd,
A tale of peace to teach,
Appeal to Heaven I judged was best,
When my name came among the rest.

IX.
"Now here, within Tantallon Hold,
To Douglas late my tale I told,
To whom my house was known of old,
Won by my proofs, his falchion bright.
This eye anew shall dub me knight.
These were the arms that once did turn
The tide of fight on Otterburne,
And Harry Hotspur forced to yield,
When the Dead Douglas won the field.
These Angus gave — his armorer's care,
Ere morn, shall every breach repair;
For nought, he said, was in his halls,
But ancient armor on the walls,
And aged chargers in the stalls,
And women, priests, and gray-hair'd men;
The rest were all in Twisnel glen,
And now I watch my armor here,
By law of arms, till midnight's near;
Then, once again a belted knight,
Seek Surrey's camp with dawn of light.

X.
"There soon again we meet, my Clare!
This Baron means to guide thee there:
Douglas reveres his King's command,
Else would he take thee from his hand.

1 MS.: "But thought of Austin staid my hand,
And in the sheath I plunged the brand;
I left him there alone —
Oh, good old man! even from the grave
Thy spirit could De Wilton save."

2 See the ballad of Otterbourne, in the Border Minstrelsy,
vol. i. p. 345.

3 Where James encamped before taking post on Flioden.
The MS. has—
"The rest were all on Flioden plain."

"The rest were all on Flioden plain."
And there thy kinsman, Surrey, too,
Will give De Wilton justice due.
Now meet for far martial broil,
Firmer my limbs, and strung by toil,
Once more”—"Oh, Wilton! must we then
Risk new-found happiness again,
Trust fate of arms once more?
And is there not an humble glen,
Where we, content and poor,
Might build a cottage in the shade,
A shepherd thou, and I to aid
Thy task on dale and moor?—
That reddening brow!—too well I know,
Not even thy Clare can peace bestow,
While falsehood stains thy name:
Go then to fight! Clare bids thee go!
Clare can a warrior's feelings know,
And weep a warrior's shame;
Can Red Earl Gilbert's spirit feel,
Buckle the spurs upon thy heel,
And belt thee with thy brand of steel,
And send thee forth to fame!"

XI.

That night, upon the rocks and bay,
The midnight moonbeam slumbering lay,
And pour'd its silver light, and pure,
Through loop-hole and through embrasure,
Upon Tantallon tower and hall;
But chief where arched windows wide
Illuminate the chapel's pride,
The sober glances fall.
Much was there need; though seem'd with scars,
Two veterans of the Douglas' wars,
Though two gray priests were there,
And each a blazing torch held high,
You could not by their blaze desery1
The chapel's carving fair.
Amid that dim and smoky light,
Chequering the silver moonshine bright,
A bishop by the altar stood, 2
A noble lord of Douglas blood,
With mitre sheen, and rochet white,
Yet show'd his meek and thoughtful eye
But little pride of prelacy;
More pleased that, in a barbarous age,
He gave rude Scotland Virgil's page,
Than that beneath his rule he held
The bishopric of fair Dunkeld.
Beside him ancient Angus stood,
Doff'd his fur'd gown, and sable hood:
O'er his huge form, and visage pale,
He wore a cap and shirt of mail;
And lean'd his large and wrinkled hand
Upon the huge and sweeping brand
Which wont of yore, in battle fray,
His foeman's limbs to shred away,
As wood-knife lops the sapling spray.3
He seem'd as, from the tombs around
Rising at judgment-day,
Some giant Douglas may be found
In all his old array;
So pale his face, so huge his limb,
So old his arms, his look so grim.

XII.

Then at the altar Wilton kneels,
And Clare the spurs bound on his heels;
And think what next he must have felt,
At buckling of the falchion belt!
And judge how Clara changed her hue,
While fastening to her lover's side
A friend which, though in danger tried,
He once had found untrue!
Then Douglas struck him with his blade:
"Saint Michael and Saint Andrew aid,
I dub thee knight.
Arise, Sir Ralph, De Wilton's heir!
For King, for Church, for Lady fair,
See that thou fight."—4
And Bishop Gawain, as he rose,
Said—"Wilton! grieve not for thy woes,
Disgrace, and trouble;
For He, who honor best bestows,
May give thee double."—
De Wilton sobb'd, for sob he must—
"Where'er I meet a Douglas, trust
That Douglas is my brother!"—
"Nay, nay," old Angus said, "not so;
To Surrey's camp thou now must go,
Thy wrongs no longer smother.
I have two sons in yonder field;
And, if thou meet'st them under shield,
Upon them bravely—do thy worst;
And foul fall him that bleaches first!"

XIII.

Not far advanced was morning day,
When Marmion did his troop array
To Surrey's camp to ride;
He had safe conduct for his band,
Beneath the royal seal and band,
And Douglas gave a guide:
The ancient Earl, with stately grace,
Would Clara on her palfrey place,
And whisper'd in an under tone,
"Let the hawk stoop, his prey is flown."— poetical pieces of great merit. He had not at this period attained the mitre.

1 See Appendix, Note 4 L.
2 The well-known Gawain Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, son of Archibald Bell-the-Cat, Earl of Angus. He was author of a Scottish metrical version of the Æneid, and of many other
3 "The following (five lines) are a sort of mongrel between the school of Sterne and Hopkins and the later one of Mr.Wordsworth."—Jeffrey.
The train from out the castle drew,¹
But Marmion stopp'd to bid adieu:—
"Though something I might plain," he said,
"Of cold respect to stranger guest,
Sent hither by your King's behest,
While in Tantallon's towers I staid;
Part we in friendship from your land,
And, noble Earl, receive my hand."—
But Douglas round him drew his cloak,
Folded his arms, and thus he spoke:—
"My manors, halls, and bowers, shall still
Be open, at my Sovereign's will,
To each one whom he lists, how'er
Unmeet to be the owner's peer.²
My castles are my King's alone,
From turret to foundation-stone—
The hand of Douglas is his own;
And never shall in friendly grasp
The hand of such as Marmion clasp."—

XIV.
Burn'd Marmion's swarthy cheek like fire,
And shook his very frame for ire,
And—"This to me!" he said,—
"An't were not for thy hoary beard,
Such hand as Marmion's had not spared
To cleave the Douglas head!
And, first, I tell thee, haughty Peer,
He who does England's message here,
Although the meanest in her state,
May well, proud Angus, be thy mate:
And, Douglas, more I tell thee here,
Even in thy pitch of pride,
Here in thy hold, thy vassals near (Nay, never look upon your lord,
And lay your hands upon your sword),
I tell thee, thou'rt defied!
And if thou saidst I am not peer
To any lord in Scotland here,
Lowland or Highland, far or near,
Lord Angus, thou hast lied?"³—
On the Earl's cheek the flush of rage
Overcame the ashen hue of age:
Fierce he broke forth,—"And darest thou then
To beard the lion in his den,
The Douglas in his hall?
And hopest thou hence unsacred to go?—
No, by Saint Bride of Bothwell, no!
Up drawbridge, grooms—what, Warder, ho!
Let the portcullis fall."—

Lord Marmion turn'd,—well was his need,—
And dash'd the rowels in his steel,
Like arrow through the archway sprung,
The ponderous grate behind him rang:

To pass there was such scanty room,
The bars, descending, razed his plume.

XV.
The steed along the drawbridge flies,
Just as it trembled on the rise;
Nor lighter does the swallow skim
Along the smooth lake's level brim:
And when Lord Marmion reach'd his band,
He halts, and turns with clenched hand,
And shout of loud defiance pours,
And shook his gauntlet at the towers.
"Horse! horse!" the Douglas cried, "and chase!"

But soon he reined his fury's pace:
"A royal messenger he came,
Though most unworthy of the name.—
A letter forged! Saint Jude to speed!
Did ever knight so foul a deed?⁵
At first in heart it liked me ill,
When the King praised his clerkly skill.
Thanks to Saint Bothan, son of mine,⁶
Save Gawain, ne'er could pen a line;
So swore I, and I swear it still.
Let my boy-bishop fret his fill.—
Saint Mary mend my fiery mood!
Old age ne'er cools the Douglas blood:
I thought to slay him where he stood.
'Tis pity of him too," he cried:
"Bold can he speak, and fairly ride,
I warrant him a warrior tried."³
With this his mandate he recalls,
And slowly seeks his castle halls.

XVI.
The day in Marmion's journey wore;
Yet, ere his passion's gust was o'er,
They cross'd the heights of Stanrig-moor.
His troop more closely there he scanned,
And miss'd the Palmer from the band.—
"Palmer or not," young Blount did say,
"He parted at the peep of day;
Good sooth, it was in strange array."—
"In what array?" said Marmion, quick.
"My lord, I ill can spell the trick;
But all night long, with clink and bang,
Close to my couch did hammers clang;
At dawn the falling drawbridge rang,
And from a loop-hole while I peep,
Old Bell-the-Cat came from the Keep,
Wrapp'd in a gown of sables fair,
As fearful of the morning air;
Beneath, when that was blown aside,
A rusty shirt of mail I spied,

¹ MS.: "The train the portal arch pass'd through."
² MS.: "Unmeet they be to harbor here."
³ MS.: "False Douglas, thou hast lied?"
⁴ See Appendix, Note 4 M.
⁵ See Appendix, Note 4 N.
⁶ MS.: "Thanks to Saint Bothan, son of mine
Could never pen a written line;
So swear I, and I swear it still,
Let brother Gawain fret his fell."
—— — ——

—

; ;: :

! ;;
:

:

;;

!

:

;

;

;

;

SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

136
By Archibald won

work,

in bloody

Our time a fair exchange has made
Hard by, in hospitable shade,

Against the Saracen and Turk
Last night

it

hung not

A

in the hall

thought some marvel would befall.
And next I saw them saddled lead
Old Cheviot forth, the Earl's best steed
A matchless horse, though something old,

Prompt

in his paces, cool

and bold.

heard the Sheriff Sholto say,
The Earl did much the Master 1 pray
To use him on the battle-day
" Nay, Henry, cease
But he preferr'd"
Thou sworn horse-courser, hold thy peace.
Eustace, thou bear'st a brain I pray,
I

did Blount see at break of day

v

my lord,

?"—

:

Amid

XVII.
we both descried

The

Upon the Earl's own

his eye

the shifting lines

Scottish host drawn out appears,

For, flashing on the hedge of spears,

stood

I

—

Long Marmion look'd at length
Unusual movement might descry

by Henry's side)'
The Palmer mount, and outwards ride,
(For then made a show,

pavilions

Like remnants of the winter snow,
Along the dusky ridge.

-^

" In brief,

reverend pilgrim dwells,

The white

—

What

;

Well worth the whole Bernardine brood,
That e'er wore sandal, frock, or hood);
Yet did Saint Bernard's Abbot there
Give Marmion entertainment fair,
And lodging for his train and Clare. 3
Next morn the Baron climb'd the tower,
To view afar the Scottish power,
Encamp'd on Flodden edge

I

The

sunbeam

eastern shines.

Their front now deepening, now extending
Their flank inclining, wheeling, bending,
Now drawing back, and now descending,

favorite steed

All sheathed he was in armor bright,

And much

resembled that same knight
Subdued^by you in Cotswold fight
Lord Angus wish'd him speed."

The skillful Marmion well could know
They watch'd the motions of some foe

The

Who

instant that Fitz-Eustace spoke,

A sudden light

on Marmion broke

" Ah dastard fool, to
He mutter'd " 'Twas
!

reason lost

traversed on the plain below.

;

!"

XIX.
Even so it was. From Flodden ridge
The Scots beheld the English host nor fay nor ghost

met upon the moonlight wold,
;

I

living man of earthly mould.
Oh, dotage blind and gross
Had I but fought as wont, one thrust
Had laid De Wilton in the dust,
My path no more to cross.
How stand we now ? he told his tale
To Douglas and with some avail
'Twas therefore gloom'd his rugged brow.
Will Surrey dare to entertain,
'Gainst Marmion, charge disproved and vain?
Small risk of that, I trow.
Yet Clare's sharp questions must I shun
Must separate Constance from the Nun
Oh, what a tangled web we weave,

But

Leave Barmore-wood, their evening post,

I

And

heedful watch'd them as they cross'd
The Till by Twisel Bridge.*
High sight it is, and haughty, while
They dive into the deep defile

—

;

When

A first

Palmer

we too

!

Beneath the cavern'd cliff they fall,
Beneath the castle's airy wall.
By rock, by oak, by hawthorn-tree,
Troop after troop are disappearing
Troop after troop their banners rearing,
Upon the eastern bank you see.
Still pouring down the rocky den,

Where

flows the sullen Till,

practice to deceive

And

— no wonder why

Standards on standards,

rebuked beneath his eye might have known there was but one Whose look could quell Lord Marmion."

rising

from the dim-wood glen,
men on men,

In slow succession

I felt

And, sweeping

I

And

still,

o'er the Gothic arch,

pressing on, in ceaseless march,

To gain the opposing
XVIII.

That morn,

to many hill.

a trumpet clang,

Stung with these thoughts, he urged to speed
His troop, and reach'd, at eve, the Tweed,

And many

Where

Lennel's convent 2 closed their march

Saint Helen! at thy fountain drank.

(There

now

Thy hawthorn

is left but one

Yet mourn thou not
1

2

frail arch,

From

this period to the conclusion of the

Twisel

!

thy rock's deep echo rang
a chief of birth and rank, glade,

which now we see

In spring-time bloom so lavishly, its cells

and even transcends itself. It is impossible to do him justice by making extracts, when all is equally attractive."— Monthly

His eldest son, the Master of Angus.
See Appendix, Note 4 0.

3 "

;

poem, Mr.

Scott's genius, so long overclouded, bursts forth in full lustre,

A'* rii

*

w.

See Appendix, Note 4 P.


Had then from many an axe its doom,
To give the marching columns room.

XX.
And why stands Scotland idly now,
Dark Flodden on thy airy brow,
Since England gains the pass the while,
And struggles through the deep defile?
What checks the fiery soul of James?
Why sits that champion of the dames
Inactive on his steed,
And sees between him and his land,
Between him and Tweed's southern strand,
His host Lord Surrey lead?
What t'ails the vain knight-errant's brand?—
Oh, Douglas, for thy leading wand!
Fierce Randolph, for thy speed!
Oh for one hour of Wallace wight,
Or well-skilled'd Bruce, to rule the fight,
And cry—"Saint Andrew and our right!"
Another sight had seen that morn,
From Fate's dark book a leaf been torn,
And Flodden had been Bannockbourn!—
The precious hour has pass'd in vain,
And England's host has gain'd the plain;
Wheeling their march, and circling still,
Around the base of Flodden hill.

XXI.
Ere yet the bands met Marmion's eye,
Fitz-Eustace shouted loud and high,
"Hark! hark! my lord, an English drum!
And see ascending squadrons come
Between Tweed's river and the hill,
Foot, horse, and cannon;—hap what hap,
My basket to a prentice cap,
Lord Surrey's o'er the Till!—
Yet more! yet more!—how far array'd
They file from out the hawthorn shade,
And sweep so gallant by?
With all their banners bravely spread,
And all their armor flashing high,
Saint George might waken from the dead,
To see fair England's standards fly."—
"Stint in thy prate," quoth Blount, "thou'dst best,
And listen to our lord's behest."—
With kindling brow Lord Marmion said,—
"This instant be our band array'd;
The river must be quickly cross'd,
That we may join Lord Surrey's host.
If fight King James,—as well I trust
That fight he will, and fight he must,—

1 MS.: "Ere first they met Lord Marmion's eye."
2 MS.: "And all go sweeping by."
3 "The speeches of Squire Blount are a great deal too unpollished for a noble youth aspiring to knighthood. On two occasions, to specify no more, he addresses his brother squire in these cacophonous lines,—

"St. Anson! fire thee! wilt thou stand
All day with bonnet in thy hand?"

The Lady Clare behind our lines
Shall tarry while the battle joins."

XXII.
Himself he swift on horseback throw,
Scarcely the Abbot bade adieu;
Far less would listen to his prayer
To leave behind the helpless Clare.
Down to the Tweed his band he drew,
And muttered, as the flood they view,
"The pheasant in the falcon's claw,
He scarce will yield to please a daw:
Lord Angus may the Abbot awe,
So Clare shall ride with me."
Then on that dangerous ford, and deep,
Where to the Tweed Leat's eddies creep,4
He ventured desperately:
And not a moment will he bide,
Till squire, or groom, before him ride;
Headmost of all he stems the tide,
And stems it gallantly.
Eustace held Clare upon her horse,
Old Hubert led her rein;
Stoutly they braved the current's course,
And, though far downward driven perforce,
The southern bank they gain.
Behind them struggling, came to shore,
As best they might, the train:
Each o'er his head his yew-bow bore,
A caution not in vain;
Deep need that day that every string,
By wet unarm'd, should sharply ring.
A moment then Lord Marmion said,
And breathed his steed, his men array'd,
Then forward moved his band,
Until, Lord Surrey's rear-guard won,
He halted by a Cross of Stone,
That, on a hillock standing lone,
Did all the field command.

XXIII.
Hence might they see the full array
Of either host, for deadly fray:
Their marshall'd lines stretch'd east and west,
And fronted north and south,
And distant salutation pass'd
From the loud cannon mouth;
Not in the close successive rattle
That breathes the voice of modern battle,
But slow and far between.—
The hillock gain'd, Lord Marmion said:
"Here, by this Cross," he gently said,

"Stint in thy prate," quoth Blount, "thou'dst best,
And listen to our lord's behest."
Neither can we be brought to admire the simple dignity of Sir Hugh the Heron, who thus encourageth his nephew,—
4 By my say,
Well hast thou spoke—say forth thy say,"—JEFFREY.
5 MS.: "Where to the Tweed Leat's tributus creep."
6 MS.: "Their lines were form'd, stretch'd east and west."
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

“You well may view the scene.
Here shalt thou tarry, lovely Clare:
Oh! think of Marmion in thy prayer!—
Thou wilt not?—well,—no less my care
Shall, watchful, for thy weal prepare.—
You, Blount and Eustace, are her guard,
With ten pick’d archers of my train;
With England if the day go hard,
To Berwick speed again.—
But if we conquer, cruel maid,
My spoil shall at your feet be laid,
When here we meet again.”
He waited not for answer there,
And would not mark the maid’s despair;¹
Nor heed the discontented look
From either squire; but spur’d again,
And, dashing through the battle plain,
His way to Surrey took.

XXIV.
"—The good Lord Marmion, by my life!
Welcome to danger’s hour!—
Short greeting serves in time of strife;—
Thus have I ranged my power:
Myself will rule this central host,
Stout Stanley fronts their right,
My sons command the vanward post,
With Brian Tunstall, stainless knight;²
Lord Daere, with his horsemen light,
Shall be in rearward of the fight,
And succor those that need it most.
Now, gallant Marmion, well I know,
Would gladly to the vanguard go;
Edmund, the Admiral, Tunstall there,
With thee their charge will blithely share;
There fight thine own retainers too,
Beneath De Burg, thy steward true."—³
"Thanks, noble Surrey!" Marmion said,
Nor farther greeting there he paid;
But, parting like a thunderbolt,
First in the vanguard made a halt,
Where such a shout there rose
Of "Marmion! Marmion!" that the cry,
Up Flodden mountain shrilling high,
Startled the Scottish foes.

XXV.
Blount and Fitz-Eustace rested still
With Lady Clare upon the hill;
On which (for far the day was spent)
The western sunbeams now were bent.
The cry they heard, its meaning knew,
Could plain their distant comrades view:

1 MS.: “Nor mark’d the lady’s deep despair,
Nor heeded discontented look.”
2 See Appendix, Note 4 R.
3 MS.: “Beneath thy seneschal, Fitz-Hugh.”
4 “Of all the poetical battles which have been fought, from the days of Homer to those of Mr. Southey, there is none, in our opinion, at all comparable, for interest and animation,— for breadth of drawing and magnificence of effect,—with this of Mr. Scott’s.”—Jeffrey.

5 This couplet is not in the MS.
6 The next three lines are not in the MS.
7 MS.: “And first the broken ridge of spears.”
Still bear them bravely in the fight:
Although against them come
Of gallant Gordons many a one,
And many a stubborn Badenoch-man,¹
And many a rugged Border clan,
With Huntly, and with Home.

XXVII.
Far on the left, unseen the while,
Stanley broke Lennox and Argyle;
Though there the western mountaineer²
Rush'd with bare bosom on the spear,
And flung the feele targe aside,
And with both hands the broadsword plied,
'Twas vain:—But Fortune, on the right,
With fickle smile cheer'd Scotland's fight.
Then fell that spotless banner white,³
The Howard's lion fell;
Yet still Lord Marmion's falcon flew
With waver'g flight, while fiercer grew
Around the battle-yell.
The Border slogan rent the sky;
A Home! a Gordon! was the cry:
Loud were the clanging blows;
Advanced,—forced back,—now low, now high,
The pennon sunk and rose;
As bends the bark's mast in the gale,
When rent are rigging, shrouds, and sail,
It waver'd mid the foes.
No longer Blount the view could bear:
"By Heaven, and all its saints! I swear
I will not see it lost!
Fitz-Eustace, you with Lady Clare⁴
May bid your heads, and pater prayer,—
I gallop to the host."
And to the fray he rode amain,
Follow'd by all the archer train.
The fiery youth, with desperate charge,
Made, for a space, an opening large,—
The rescued banner rose;
But darkly closed the war around:
Like pine-tree root'd from the ground,⁵
It sunk among the foes.
Then Eustace mounted too:—yet staid,
As loath to leave the helpless maid,
When, fast as shaft can fly,
Blood-shot his eyes, his nostrils spread,
The loose rein dangling from his head,
Housing and saddle bloody red,
Lord Marmion's steed rush'd by;

And Eustace, maddening at the sight,
A look and sign to Clara cast
To mark he would return in haste;⁶
Then plunged into the fight.

XXVIII.
Ask me not what the maiden feels,
Left in that dreadful hour alone:
Perchance her reason stoops, or reels;
Perchance a courage, not her own,
Braces her mind to desperate tone.—
The scatter'd van of England wheels;—⁷
She only said, as loud in air
The tumult roar'd, "Is Wilton there?"—
They fly, or, madden'd by despair,
Fight but to die,—"Is Wilton there?"
With that, straight up the hill there rode
Two horsemen drench'd with gore,
And in their arms, a helpless load,
A wounded knight they bore,
His hand still strain'd the broken brand;
His arms were smear'd with blood and sand;
Dragg'd from among the horses' feet,
With dinted shield, and helmet beat,
The falcon-crest and plumage gone,
Can that be haughty Marmion! . . .⁸
Young Blount his armor did unlace,
And, gazin on his ghastly face,
Said—"By Saint George, he's gone!
That spear-wound has our master sped,
And see the deep cut on his head!
Good night to Marmion."—
"Unmurtuerd Blout! thy brawling cease;
He opes his eyes," said Eustace; "peace!"

XXIX.
When, doff'd his casque, he felt free air,⁹
Around 'gan Marmion wildly stare:—
"Where's Harry Blount? Fitz-Eustace where?
Linger ye here, ye hearts of hare!
Redeem my pennon,—charge again!
Cry—'Marmion to the rescue!'—Vain!
Last of my race, on battle-plain
That shout shall never be heard again—
Yet my last thought is England's—fly,¹⁰
To Dacre bear my signet ring:
Tell him his squadrons up to bring,—
Fitz-Eustace, to Lord Surrey hie;
Tunstall lies dead upon the field,
His life-blood stains the spotless shield;

¹ In all former editions, Highlandman. Badenoch is the correction of the Author's interleafed copy of the edition of 1839.
² MS.: "Though there the dauntless mountaineer."
³ MS.: "Fell stainless Tunstall's banner white, Sir Edmund's lion fell."
⁴ MS.: "Fitz-Eustace, you and Lady Clare May for its safety join in prayer."
⁵ MS.: "Like pine uprooted from the ground."
⁶ MS.: "And cried he would return in haste."
⁷ MS.: "Repulsed, the hand of England wheels."
⁸ MS.: "Can that be proud Lord Marmion?"
⁹ MS.: "And when he felt the fresher air."
¹⁰ MS.: "Yet my last thought's for England—hie, To Dacre give my signet-ring. . . Fitz-Eustace, to Lord Surrey fly."
Edmund is down; my life is reft;
The Admiral alone is left,
Let Stanley charge with spur of fire,—
With Chester charge, and Lancashire,—
Full upon Scotland's central host,
Or victory and England's lost,—
Must I bid twice?—hence, varlets! fly!
Leave Marmion here alone—to die."
They parted, and alone he lay:
Clare drew her from the sight away,
Till pain wrung forth a lowly moan,
And half he murmur'd,—"Is there none
Of all my halls have nust,
Page, squire, or groom, one cup to bring
Of blessed water from the spring,
To quench my dying thirst!"

XXX.
Oh, Woman! in our hours of ease
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
And variable as the shade
By the light quivering aspen made,—
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou!—
Scarce were the piteous accents said,
When, with the Baron's casque, the maid
To the nigh streamlet ran:
Forgot were hatred, wrongs, and fears;
The plaintive voice alone she hears,
Sees but the dying man.
She stoop'd her by the runnel's side,
But in abhorrence backward drew;
For, oozing from the mountain's side,
Where raged the war, a dark-red tide
Was curdling in the streamlet blue.
Where shall she turn?—behold her mark
A little fountain cell,
Where water, clear as diamond spark,
In a stone basin fell.
Above, some half-worn letters say,
Drink. weary pilgrim. drink. and pray.
For. the. king. soul. of. Sybil. Gray.
Who. built. this. cross. and. well.
She fill'd the helm, and back she hied,
And with surprise and joy espied
A Monk supporting Marmion's head;

A pious man, whom duty brought
To dubious verge of battle fought,
To shrieve the dying, bless the dead.

XXXI.
Deep drank Lord Marmion of the wave,
And, as she stoop'd his brow to lave—
"Is it the hand of Clare," he said,
"Or injured Constance, bathes my head?"
Then, as remembrance rose,—
"Speak not to me of shift or prayer!
I must redress her woes.
Short space, few words, are mine to spare;
Forgive and listen, gentle Clare!"
"Alas!" she said, "the while,—
Oh, think of your immortal weal!
In vain for Constance is your zeal;
She—died at Holy Isle."—
Lord Marmion started from the ground,
As light as if he felt no wound;
Though in the action burst the tide,
In torrents, from his wounded side.
"Then it was truth," he said—"I knew
That the dark presage must be true.—
I would the Fiend, to whom belongs
The vengeance due to all her wrongs,
Would spare me but a day!
For wasting fire, and dying groan,
And priests slain on the altar stone,
Might bribe him for delay.
It may not be!—this dizzy trance—
Curse on yon base marauder's lance,
And doubly cursed my failing brand!
A sinful heart makes feeble hand."
Then, fainting, down on earth he sunk,
Supported by the trembling Monk.

XXXII.
With fruitless labor, Clara bound
And strove to staunch the gushing wound:
The Monk, with unavailing cares,
Exhausted all the Church's prayers.
Ever he said that, close and near,
A lady's voice was in his ear,
And that the priest he could not hear;
For that she ever sung,

For, oozing from the mountains wide
Where raged the war, a dark-red tide
Was curdling in the streamlet blue.
Where shall she turn? behold, she marks
A little vaulted cell,
Whose water, clear as diamond spark,
In a rude basin fell.
Above, some half-worn letters say,
Drink, passing pilgrim, drink, and pray."

MS.: "Fire, sacrifice, and dying groan,
And priests gorged on the altar stone,
Might bribe him for delay,
And all by whom the deed was done
Should with myself become his own.
It may not be—"
"In the last battle, borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle with groans of the dying!"
So the notes rung,—
"Avoid thee, Fiend,—with cruel hand,
Shake not the dying sinner's sand!
Oh, look, my son, upon you sign!
Of the Redeemer's grace divine;
Oh, think on faith and bliss!—
By many a death-bed I have been,
And many a sinner's parting seen,
But never might like this."

The war, that for a space did fail,
Now trebly thundering swell'd the gale,
And—STANLEY! was the cry;
A light on Marmion's visage spread,
And fired his glazing eye;
With dying hand, above his head
He shook the fragment of his blade,
And shouted "Victory!—
Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on!"
Were the last words of Marmion.

XXXIII.

By this, though deep the evening fell,
Still rose the battle's deadly swell,
For still the Scots, around their King,
Unbroken, fought in desperate ring.
Where's now their victor vanward wing,
Where Huntly, and where Home?—
Oh, for a blast of that dread horn,
On Fontarabian echoes borne,
That to King Charles did come,
When Rowland brave, and Olivier,
And every paladin and peer,
On Roncesvalles died!
Such blast might warn them, not in vain,
To quit the plunder of the slain,
And turn the doubtful day again,
While yet on Flodden side,
Afar, the Royal Standard flies,
And round it toils, and bleeds, and dies,
Our Caledonian pride!
In vain the wish—for far away,
While spoil and havoc mark their way,
Near Sybil's Cross the plunderers stray.—
"Oh, Lady," cried the Monk, "away!"
And placed her on her steel,
And led her to the chapel fair
Of Tilmouth upon Tweed,
There all the night they spent in prayer,
And at the dawn of morning, there
She met her kinsman, Lord Fitz-Clare.

XXXIV.

But as they left the dark'ning heath,
More desperate grew the strife of death.
The English shafts in volleys hail'd,
In headlong charge their horse assai'ld;
Front, flank, and rear, the squadrons sweep
To break the Scottish circle deep,
That fought around their King.

But yet, though thick the shafts as snow,
Though charging knights like whirlwinds go,
Though bill-men ply the ghastly blow,
Unbroken was the ring;
The stubborn spear-men still made good
Their dark impenetrable wood,
Each stepping where his comrade stood,
The instant that he fell.
No thought was there of dastard flight;
Link'd in the serried phalanx tight,
Groom fought like noble, squire like knight,
As fearlessly and well;
Till utter darkness closed her wing
O'er their thin host and wounded King,
Then skillful Surrey's sage commands
Led back from strife his shatter'd bands;
And from the charge they drew,
As mountain-waves, from wasted lands,
Sweep back to ocean blue.
Then did their loss his foemen know;
Their King, their Lords, their mightiest low,
They melted from the field as snow,
When streams are swollen and south winds blow,
Dissolves in silent dew.
Tweed's echoes heard the ceaseless splash,
While many a broken band,
Disorder'd, through her currents dash,
To gain the Scottish land;

The instant that he fell,
Till the last ray of parting light,
Then ceased performe the dreadful fight,
And sunk the battle's yell.
The skillful Surrey's sage commands
Drew from the strife his shatter'd bands.
Their loss his foemen know;
Their King, their Lords, their mightiest low,
They melted from the field as snow,
When streams are swollen and south winds blow,
Dissolves in silent dew.
Tweed's echoes heard the ceaseless splash,
While many a broken band,
Disorder'd, through her currents dash,
To gain the Scottish land;

MS.: "Oh, look, my son, upon this cross,
Oh, think upon the grace divine,
On saints and heavenly bliss!—
By many a sinner's bed I've been,
And many a dismal parting seen,
But never might like this."

MS.: "And sparkled in his eye."

"The Lady of the Lake has nothing so good as the death of Marmion."—MACKINSTOSH.

MS.: "In vain the wish—for far they stray,
And spoil and havoc mark'd their way.
"Oh, Lady," cried the Monk, 'away!'"

MS.: "But still upon the darkening heath."

MS.: "Ever the stubborn spears made good
Their dark impenetrable wood;
Each Scot steppe'd where his comrade stood,
To town and tower, to down and dale,
To tell red Flodden's dismal tale,
And raise the universal wail.

Tradition, legend, tune, and song
Shall many an age that wail prolong:
Still from the sire the son shall hear
Of the stern strife, and carnage drear,
Of Flodden's fatal field,
Where shiver'd was fair Scotland's spear,
And broken was her shield!

XXXV.
Day dawns upon the mountain's side:—
There, Scotland! lay thy bravest pride,
Chief's, knights, and nobles, many a one:
The sad survivors all are gone.—
View not that corpse mistrustfully,
Defaced and mangled though it be;
Nor to yon Border castle high
Look northward with upbraiding eye;
Nor cherish hope in vain,
That, journeying far on foreign strand,
The Royal Pilgrim to his land
May yet return again.
He saw the wreck his rashness wrought;
Reckless of life, he desperate fought,
And fell on Flodden plain:
And well in death his trusty brand,
Firm clenched within his manly hand,
Beseech'd the Monarch slain.

But, oh, how changed since yon blithe night!—
Gladsly I turn me from the sight,
Unto my tale again.

XXXVI.
Short is my tale:—Fitz-Enstan's care
A pierced and mangled body bare
To moated Lichfield's lofty pile;
And there, beneath the southern aisle,
A tomb, with Gothic sculpture fair,
Did long Lord Marmion's image bear.

(Now vainly for its site you look;
'Twas level'd when fanatic Brook
The fair cathedral storm'd and took;
But, thanks to Heaven and good Saint Chad,
A guerdon meet the spoiler had!)

There erst was martial Marmion found,
His feet upon a couchant bough,
His hands to heaven upraised;
And all around, on sculptieu rich,
And tablet carved, and fretted niche,
His arms and feats were blazing.
And yet, though all was carved so fair,
And priest for Marmion breathed the prayer,
The last Lord Marmion lay not there.
From Ettrick woods a peasant swain
Follow'd his lord to Flodden plain,—
One of those flowers whom plaintive lay
In Scotland mourns as "wee away;"
Sore wounded, Sybil's Cross he spied,
And dragg'd him to its foot, and died,
Close by the noble Marmion's side.
The spoilers stripp'd and gash'd the slain,
And thus their corpses were mista'en;
And thus, in the proud Baron's tomb,
The lowly woodsman took the room.

XXXVII.
Less easy task it were to show
Lord Marmion's nameless grave, and low.

They dug his grave c'en where he lay,
But every mark is gone;
Time's wasting hand has done away
The simple Cross of Sybil Gray,
And broke her font of stone:
But yet from out the little hill?
Oozes the slender springlet still.

Off halts the stranger there,
For thence may best his curious eye
The memorable field descry;
And shepherd boys repair
To seek the water-flag and rush,
And rest them by the hazel bush,
And plait their garlands fair;
Nor dream they sit upon the grave
That holds the bones of Marmion brave.
When thou shalt find the little hill,
With thy heart commune, and be still.
If ever, in temptation strong,
Thou left'st the right path for the wrong;
If every devious step, thus trod,
Still led thee farther from the road;

1 "The powerful poetry of these passages can receive no illustration from any praises or observations of ours. It is superior, in our apprehension, to all that this author has hitherto produced; and, with a few faults of diction, equal to any thing that has ever been written upon similar subjects.
From the moment the author gets in sight of Flodden field, indeed, to the end of the poem, there is no tame writing, and no intervention of ordinary passages. He does not once flag or grow tedious; and neither stops to describe dresses and ceremonies, nor to commemorate the hard names of feudal barons from the Border. There is a flight of five or six hundred lines, in short, in which he never stoops his wing, nor wavers in his course; but carries the reader forward with a more rapid, sustained, and lofty movement, than any epic hard that we can at present remember."—JEFFREY.

2 "Day gimmers on the dying and the dead,
The cloven cuirass, and the hehless head," &c.

3 Ibid. Lara.

4 See Appendix, Note 4 S.

5 "A corpse is afterwards conveyed, as that of Marmion, to the Cathedral of Lichfield, where a magnificent tomb is erected to his memory, and mass is instituted for the repose of his soul; but, by an admirably-imagined act of poetical justice, we are informed that a peasant's body was placed beneath that costly monument, while the haughty Baron himself was buried like a vulgar corpse, on the spot on which he died."—Mon. Rev.

6 MS.: "They dug his bed even where he lay.

7 MS.: "But yet where swells the little hill.

8 MS.: "If thou shouldst find this little tomb,
Beware to speak a hasty doom."
Dread thou to speak presumptuous doom
On noble Marmion's lowly tomb;
But say, "He died a gallant knight,
With sword in hand, for England's right."

XXXVIII.
I do not rhyme to that dull elf
Who cannot image to himself,
That all through Flodden's dismal night
Wilton was foremost in the fight;
That, when brave Surrey's steed was slain,
"Twas Wilton mounted him again;
"Twas Wilton's brand that deepest he'd d
Amid the spear-men's stubborn wood;
Unnamed by Holinshed or Hall,
He was the living soul of all:
That, after fight his faith made plain,
He won his rank and lands again;
And charged his old paternal shield
With bearings won on Flodden Field.
Nor sing I to that simple maid
To whom it must in terms be said,
That King and kinsmen did agree
To bless fair Clara's constancy;
Who cannot, unless I relate,
Paint to her mind the bridal state;
That Wolsey's voice the blessing spoke,
More, Sands, and Denny, pass'd the joke;
That bluff King Hal the curtain drew,
And Catherine's hand the stocking threw;

1 MS: "He hardest press'd the Scottish ring;
"Twas thought that he struck down the King."
2 Used generally for tale or discourse.
3 "We have dwelt longer on the beauties and defects of this poem than, we are afraid, will be agreeable either to the partial or the indifferent; not only because we look upon it as a misapplication, in some degree, of very extraordinary talents, but because we cannot help considering it as the foundation of a new school, which may hereafter occasion no little annoyance both to us and to the public. Mr. Scott has hitherto filled the whole stage himself; and the very splendor of his success has probably operated as yet rather to deter than to encourage the herd of rivals and imitators; but if, by the help of the good parts of his poem, he succeeds in suborning the verdict of the public in favor of the bad parts also, and establishes an indiscriminate taste for chivalrous legends and romances in irregular rhyme, he may depend upon having as many copyists as Mrs. Radcliffe or Schiller, and upon becoming the founder of a new schism in the catholic poetical church, for which, in spite of all our exertions, there will probably be no cure but in the extravagance of the last and lowest of its followers. It is for this reason that we conceive it to be our duty to make one strong effort to bring back the great apostle of the heresy to the wholesome creed of his instructors, and to stop the insurrection before it becomes desperate and senseless, by persuading the leader to return to his duty and allegiance. We admire Mr. Scott's genius as much as any of those who may be misled by its perversion; and, like the curate and the barber in Don Quixote, lament the day when a gentleman of such endowments was corrupted by the wicked tales of knight-errantry and enchantment."—Jeffrey.

"We do not flatter ourselves that Mr. Scott will pay to our advice that attention which he has refused to his acute friend Mr. Erskine; but it is possible that his own good sense may in time persuade him not to abandon his loved fairy ground (a province over which we wish him a long and prosperous government), but to combine the charms of tasteful poetry with those of wild and romantic fiction. As the first step to this desirable end, we would beg him to reflect that his Gothic moods will not bear him out in transferring the loose and stuffing ballad metre to a poem of considerable length and of complicated interest like the present. It is a very easy thing to write five hundred ballad verses, stanzas pede in unum; but Mr. Scott needs not to be told that five hundred verses written on one foot have a very poor chance for immortality."—Monthly Review.

"The story," writes Mr. Southey, "is made of better materials than the Lay, yet they are not so well fitted together. As a whole, it has not pleased me so much—in parts, it has pleased me more. There is nothing so finely conceived in your former poem as the death of Marmion: there is nothing finer in its conception anywhere. The introductory epistles I do not wish away, because, as poems, they gave me great pleasure; but I wished them at the end of the volume, or at the beginning,—any where except where they were. My taste is perhaps peculiar in disliking all interruptions in narrative poetry. When the poet lets his story sleep, and talks in his own person, it has to me the same sort of unpleasant effect that is produced at the end of an act. You are alive to know what follows, and lo—down comes the curtain, and the players begin with their abominations. The general opinion, however, is with me, in this particular instance."—Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 44.

"Thank you," says Mr. Wordsworth, "for Marmion. I think your end has been attained. That it is not the end which I should wish you to propose to yourself, you will be well aware from what you know of my notions of composition, both as to matter and manner. In the circle of my acquaintance, it seems as well liked as the Lay, though I have heard that in the world it is not so. Had the poem been much better than the Lay, it could scarcely have satisfied the public, which has too much of the monster, the moral monster, in its composition."—Ibid. p. 45.

"My own opinion," says Mr. George Ellis, "is that both the productions are equally good in their different ways: yet, upon the whole, I had rather be the author of Marmion than of the Lay, because I think its species of excellence of much more difficult attainment. What degree of bulk may be essentially necessary to the corporeal part of an Epic poem, I know not; but sure I am that the story of Marmion might have furnished twelve books as easily as six—that the masterly character of Constance would not have been less bewitching had it been much more minutely painted—and that De Wilton might have been dilated with great ease, and even to considerable advantage;—in short, that had it been your intention merely to exhibit a spirited romantic story, instead of making that story subservient to the delineation of the manners which prevailed at a certain period of our history, the number and variety of your characters would have suited any scale of painting. On the whole, I can sincerely assure you that, had I seen Marmion without knowing the author, I should have ranked it with Theodore and Honoria,—that is to say, on the very top shelf of English poetry."—Ibid. vol. iii. p. 46.

"I shall not, after so much of and about criticism, say any thing more of Marmion in this place than that I have always considered it as, on the whole, the greatest of Scott's poems. There is a certain light, easy, virgin charm about the Lay, which we look for in vain through the subsequent volumes of his verse; but the superior strength, and breadth, and boldness, both of conception and execution, in the Marmion, appear to me indisputable. The great blot, the combination of mean felony with so many noble qualities in the character of the hero, was, as the poet says, severely commented on at the time by the most ardent of his early friends, Leyden; but though he admitted the justice of that criticism, he chose 'to let the tree lie as it had fallen.' He was also sensible that many of the subordinate and connecting parts of the narrative are flat, harsh, and obscure—but would never make any serious attempt to do away with these imperfections; and perhaps they, after all, heighten by contrast the effect of the passages of high-wrought enthusiasm which alone he considered, in after days, with satisfaction. As for the 'epistolary dissertations,' it must, I take it, be allowed that they interfered with the flow of the story, when readers were turning the leaves with the first ardor of curiosity; and they were not, in fact, originally intended to be interwoven in any fashion with the romance of Marmion. Though the author himself does not allude to, and had perhaps forgotten the circumstance, when writing the Introductory Essay of 1830—they were announced, by an advertisement early in 1807, as 'Six Epistles from Ettrick Forest,' to be published in a separate volume, similar to that of the Ballads and Lyrical Pieces; and perhaps it might have been better that this first plan had been adhered to. But however that may be, are there any pages, among all he ever wrote, that one would be more sorry he should not have written? They are among the most delicious portraituresthat genius ever painted of itself—buoyant, virtuous, happy genius—exulting in its own energies, yet possessed and mastered by a clear, calm, modest mind, and happy only in diffusing happiness around it.

"With what gratification those Epistles were read by the friends to whom they were addressed, it would be superfluous to show. He had, in fact, painted them almost as fully as himself; and who might not have been proud to find a place in such a gallery? The tastes and habits of six of those men in whose intercourse Scott found the greatest pleasure when his fame was approaching its meridian splendor are thus preserved for posterity; and when I reflect with what avidity we catch at the least hint which seems to afford us a glimpse of the intimate circle of any great poet of former ages, I cannot but believe that posterity would have held this record precious, even had the individuals been in themselves far less remarkable than a Rose, an Ellis, a Hofer, a Skene, a Marriott, and an Erskine."—Lockhart, vol. iii. p. 55.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

As when the Champion of the Lake
Enters Morgan's fatal house,
Or in the Chapel Perilous,
Despising spells and demons' force,
Holds converse with the unburred corpse.—P. 79.

The romance of the Morte Arthur contains a sort of abridgment of the most celebrated adventures of the Round Table; and, being written in comparatively modern language, gives the general reader an excellent idea of what romances of chivalry actually were. It has also the merit of being written in pure Old English; and many of the wild adventures which it contains are told with a simplicity bordering upon the sublime. Several of these are referred to in the text; and I would have illustrated them by more full extracts, but as this curious work is about to be republished, I confine myself to the tale of the Chapel Perilous, and of the quest of Sir Launcelot after the Sangreal.

"Eight so Sir Launcelot departed, and when he came to the Chapel Perilous, he alighted downe, and tied his horse to a little gate. And as soon as he was within the churchyard, he saw, on the front of the chappel, many faire rich shields turned upside downe; and many of the shields Sir Launcelot had seene knights have before; with that he saw stand by him thirtie great knights, more, by a yard, than any man that ever he had scene, and all those grinned and gnashed at Sir Launcelot; and when he saw their countenance, he dread them sore, and so put his shield afore him, and took his sword in his hand, ready to doe battelie; and they were all armed in black harneis, ready, with their shields and swords drawn. And when Sir Launcelot would have gone through them, they scattered on every side of him, and gave him the way; and therewith he waxed all bold, and entered into the chappel, and then hee saw no light but a dimme lamp burning, and then was hee of a corps covered with a cloath of silke; then Sir Launcelot stooped downe, and cut a piece of that cloath away, and then it fared under him as the earth had quaked a little, whereof he was afeard, and then hee saw a faire sword lye by the dead knight, and that he gat in his hand, and hied him out of the chappel. As soon as he was in the chappell-yard, all the knights spake to him with a gramily voice, and said, 'Knight, Sir Launcelot, lay that sword from thee, or else thou shalt die.'—Whether I live or die,' said Sir Launcelot, 'with no great words get yee it againe, therefore fight for it and yee list.' Therewith he passed through them; and, beyond the chappell-yard, there met him a faire damosell, and said, 'Sir Launcelot, leave that sword behind thee, or thou wilt die for it.'—I will not leave it,' said Sir Launcelot, 'for no threats.'—No?' said she; and ye did leave that sword, Queen Guenever should ye never see.'—Then were I fool and I would leave this sword,' said Sir Launcelot. 'Now, gentle knight,' said the damosell, 'I require thee to kiss me once.'—Nay,' said Sir Launcelot, 'that God forbid!'—Well, sir,' said she, 'and thou haddest kissed me thy life dayes had been done; but now, alas!' said she, 'I have lost all my labour; for I ordained this chappell for thy sake, and for Sir Gawaine; and once I had Sir Gawaine within it; and at that time he fought with that knight which there looth dealt in yonder chappell, Sir Gilbert the bastard, and at that time hee smote off Sir Gilbert the bastard's left hand. And so, Sir Launcelot, now I tell thee, that I have loved thee this seaven yeares; but there may no woman have thy love but Queene Guenever; but sithen I may not rejoice thee to have thy body alive, I had kept no more joye in this world but to have had thy dead body; and I would have balmed it and served, and so have kept it in my life daies, and daily I should have clipped thee, and kissed thee, in the despite of Queene Guenever.'—Yee say well,' said Sir Launcelot; 'Jesus preserve me from your subtil craft.' And therewith he took his horse, and departed from her."

NOTE B.

A sinful man, and unconfess'd,
He took the Sangreal's holy quest,
And, slumbering, saw the vision high
He might not view with waking eye.—P. 79.

One day, when Arthur was holding a high feast with his Knights of the Round Table, the Sangreal, or vessel out of which the last passover was eaten (a precious relic, which had long remained concealed from human eyes, because of the sins of the land), suddenly appeared to him and all his chivalry. The consequence of this vision was that all the knights took on them a solemn vow to seek the Sangreal. But, alas! it could only be revealed to a knight at once accomplished in earthly chivalry, and pure and guiltless of evil conversation. All Sir Launcelot's noble accomplishments were therefore rendered vain by his guilty intrigue with Queen Guenever, or Ganore; and in his holy quest he encountered only such disgraceful disasters as that which follows:—

"But Sir Launcelot rode overthwart and endlong in a wild forest, and held no path but as wild adventure led him; and at the last, he came unto a stone crosse, which departed two ways, in wast land; and, by the crosse, was a stone that was of marble; but it was so dark that Sir Launcelot might not well know what it was. Then Sir Launcelot looked by him, and saw an old chappell, and there he wend to have found people. And so Sir Launcelot tied his horse to a tree, and there he put off his shield, and hung it upon a tree, and then he went unto the chappell doore, and found it wasted and broken. And within he found a faire altar, full richly arrayed with cloth of silk, and there stood a faire candlestick, which beare six great candles, and the candlestickes was of silver. And when Sir Launcelot saw this light, hee had a great will for to enter into the chappell, but hee could find no place where hee might enter. Then was hee passing heavie and dismayed. Then he returned, and came againe to his horse, and tooke off his saddle and his bridle, and let him pasture, and unclad his helm, and ungirded his sword, and laid him down to sleep upon his shield, before the crosse.

"And so hee fell on sleep; and, halfe waking and halfe sleeping, he saw come by him two palefrys, both faire and white, the which beare a litter, therein lying a sicker knight. And when he was nigh the crosse, hee there abode still. All this Sir Launcelot saw and beheld, for hee slept not verily, and hee heard him say, 'O sweete Lord, when shall this sorrow leave me, and when shall the holy vessell come by me, where through I shall be blessed, for I have endured thus long for little trespass?" And thus a great while complained the knight, and allwaies Sir Launcelot heard it. With that Sir Launcelot saw the candlestick, with the fire tapers, come before the crosse; but he could see nobody that brought it. Also there came a table of silver, and the holy vessell of the Sanegrell, the which Sir Launcelot had seen before that time in King Petchou's house. And therewithall the sicker knight set him upright, and held up both his hands, and said, 'Fair sweete Lord, which is here within the holy vessell, take heed to mee, that I may bee hole of this great malady!' And therewith upon his hands, and upon his knees, he went so nigh that he touched the holy vessell, and kissed it: And anon he was hole, and then he said, 'Lord God, I thank thee, for I am healed of this malady.' Soo when the holy vessell had been there a great while, it went into the chappelle againe, with the candlestick and the light, so that Sir Launcelot wist not where it became, for he was overtaken with sinne, that hee had no power to arise against the holy vessell, wherefore afterward many men said of him shame. But hee tooke repentance afterward. Then the sicker knight dressed him upright, and kissed the crosse. Then anon his squire brought him his armes, and asked his lord how he did, 'Certainly,' said hee, 'I thanke God right heartily, for through the holy vessell I am healed.' But I have right great morvaile of this sleeping knight, which hath had neither grace nor power to awake during the time that this holy vessell hath beene here present."—"I dare it right well say," said the squire, 'that this same knight is defauld with some manner of deadly sinne, whereof he has never confessed."—"By my faith," said the knight, 'whatsoever he be, he is unhappie; for, as I decerne, hee is of the fellowship of the Round Table, the which is entered into the quest of the Sanegrell."—Sir, said the squire, 'here I have brought you all your armes, save your helme and your sword; and, therefore, by mine assent, now may ye take this knight's helme and his sword;' and so he did. And when he was clean armes, he took Sir Launcelot's horse; for he was better than his owne, and so they departed from the crosse.

"Then anon Sir Launcelot awaked, and set himselfe upright, and he thought him what hee had there scene, and whether it were dreames or not; right so he heard a voice that said, 'Sir Launcelot, more hardie than is the stone, and more bitter than is the wood, and more naked and bare than is the leafe of the fig-tree, therefore go thon from hence, and withdraw thee from this holy place;' and when Sir Launcelot heard this, he was passing heavy, and wist not what to doe. And so he departed sore weeping, and cursed the time that he was borne; for then he deemed never to have had more worship; for the words went unto his heart, till that he knew wherefore that hee was so called." contained in an "Essay on Satire," addressed to the Earl of Dorset, and prefixed to the Translation of Juvenal. After mentioning a plan of supplying machinery from the guardian angels of kingdoms, mentioned in the Book of Daniel, he adds,—

"Thus, my lord, I have, as briefly as I could, given your lordship, and by you the world, a rude draught of what I have long laboring in my imagination, and what I had intended to have put in practice (though far unable for the attempt of such a poem); and to have left the stage, to which my genius never much inclined me, for a work which would have taken up my life in the performance of it. This, too, I had intended chiefly for the honor of my native country, to which a poet is particularly obliged. Of two subjects, both relating to it, I was doubtful whether I should choose that of King Arthur conquering the Saxons, which, being farther distant in time, gives the greatest scope to my invention; or that of Edward the Black Prince, in subduing Spain, and restoring it to the lawful prince, though a great tyrant, Don Pedro the Crnel; which, for the compass of time, including only the expedition of one year, for the greatness of the action, and its answerable event, for the magnanimity of the English hero, stood opposed to the ingratitude of the person whom he restored, and for the many beautiful episodes which I had interwoven with the principal design, together with the characters of the chiefest English persons (wherein, after Virgil and Spenser, I would have taken occasion to represent my living friends and patrons of the noblest families, and also shadowed the events of future ages in the succession of our imperial line),—with these helps, and those of the machines which I have mentioned, I might perhaps have done as well as some of my predecessors, or at least chalked out a way for others to amend my errors in a like design; but being encouraged only with fair words by King Charles II., my little salary ill paid, and no prospect of a future subsistence, I was then discouraged in the beginning of my attempt; and now age has overtaken me, and want, a more insufferable evil, through the change of the times, has wholly disabled me."

Note D.

Their theme the merry minstrel's made,
Of Ascopart, and Bevis bold.—P. 80.

The "History of Bevis of Hampton" is abridged by my friend Mr. George Ellis, with that liveliness which extracts amusement even out of the most rude and unpromising of our old tales of chivalry. Aseopart, a most important personage in the romance, is thus described in an extract:—

"This gent was nightly and strong,
And full thirty foot was long,
He was bristled like a sow;
A foot he had between each brow;
His lips were great, and hung aside;
His cyan were hollow, his mouth was wide;
Lothly he was to look on,
And like a devil than a man.
His staff was a young oak,
Hard and heavy was his stroke."

I am happy to say that the memory of Sir Bevis is still fragrant in his town of Southampton; the gate of which is sentinelled by the effigies of that doughty knight--errant and his gigantic associate.

Note C.

And Dryden, in immortal strain,
Had raised the Table Round again.—P. 79.

Dryden's melancholy account of his projected Epic Poem, blazed by the selfish and sordid parsimony of his patrons, is
The ruinous castle of Norham (anciently called Ullswater) is situated on the southern bank of the Tweed, about six miles above Berwick, and where that river is still the boundary between England and Scotland. The extent of its ruins, as well as its historical importance, shows it to have been a place of magnificence, as well as strength. Edward I. resided there when he was created empir of the dispute concerning the Scottish succession. It was repeatedly taken and retaken during the wars between England and Scotland; and, indeed, scarce any happened, in which it had not a principal share. Norham Castle is situated on a steep bank, which overhangs the river. The repeated sieges which the castle had sustained rendered frequent repairs necessary. In 1164, it was almost rebuilt by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, who added a huge keep, or donjon; notwithstanding which, King Henry II., in 1174, took the castle from the bishop, and committed the keeping of it to William de Neville. After this period it seems to have been chiefly garrisoned by the King, and considered as a royal fortress. The Greys of Chillingham Castle were frequently the castellans, or captains of the garrison: yet, as the castle was situated in the patrimony of St. Cuthbert, the property was in the see of Durham till the Reformation. After that period it passed through various hands. At the union of the crowns, it was in the possession of Sir Robert Carey (afterwards Earl of Monmouth), for his own life, and that of two of his sons. After King James's accession, Carey sold Norham Castle to George Home, Earl of Dunbar, for £2000. See his curious Memoirs, published by Mr. Constable of Edinburgh.

According to Mr. Pinkerton, there is, in the British Museum, Cat. B. 6. 216, a curious memoir of the Dacres on the state of Norham Castle in 1522, not long after the battle of Flodden. The inner ward, or keep, is represented as impregnable:—"The provisions are three great vats of salt eels, forty-four kine, three hogsheads of salted salmon, forty quarters of grain, besides many cows and four hundred sheep, lying under the castle-wall nightly; but a number of the arrows of gold were feathers, and a good Fletcher [i.e. maker of arrows] was required."—History of Scotland, vol. II. p. 291, note.

The ruins of the castle are at present considerable, as well as picturesque. They consist of a large chambered tower, with many vaults, and fragments of other edifices, enclosed within an outward wall of great circuit.

Note H.

Who checks at me, to death is right.—P. 81.

The crest and motto of Marmion are borrowed from the following story.—Sir David de Lindsay, first Earl of Crawford, was, among other gentlemen of quality, attended, during a visit to London, in 1390, by Sir William Dalzell, who was, according to my authority, Bower, not only excelling in wisdom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to be at the court, he there saw Sir Piers Courtenay, an English knight, famous for skill in tilting, and for the beauty of his person, parading the palace, arrayed in a new mantle, bearing for device an embroidered falcon, with this rhyme,—

"I bear a falcon, fairest of flight,
Whoop pinches at her, his death is light,
In faith."—2

The Scottish knight, being a wag, appeared next day in a dress exactly similar to that of Courtenay, but bearing a magpie instead of the falcon, with a motto ingeniously contrived to rhyme to the vaunting inscription of Sir Piers:

"I bear a pie picking at a piece,
Whoop picks at her, I shall pick at his nose,
In faith."—3

This affront could only be expiated by a just with sharp lances. In the course, Dalzell left his helmet unladen, so that it gave way at the touch of his antagonist's lance, and he thus avoided the shock of the encounter. This happened twice;—in the third encounter, the handsome Courtenay lost two of his front teeth. As the Englishman complained bitterly of Dalzell's fraud in not fastening his helmet, the Scottishman agreed to run six courses more, each champion stating in the hand of the King two hundred pounds, to be forfeited, if, on entering the lists, any unequal advantage should be detected. This being agreed to, the wily Scot demanded that Sir Piers, in addition to the loss of his teeth, should consent to the extinction of one of his eyes, he himself having lost an eye in the fight of Otterburn. As Courtenay demurred to this equalization of optical powers, Dalzell demanded the forfeit; which, after much altercation, the King appointed to be paid

---

1 Prepared.
2 Armor.
3 Nose.
to him, saying, he surpassed the English both in wit and valor. This must appear to the reader a singular specimen of the humor of that time. I suspect the Jockey Club would have given a different decision from Henry IV.

Note I.

They hail'd Lord Marmion:
They hail'd him Lord of Fontenay,
Of Lutterward, and Scrivelby,
Of Tamworth tower and town.—P. 82.

Lord Marmion, the principal character of the present romance, is entirely a fictitious personage. In earlier times, indeed, the family of Marmion, Lords of Fontenay, in Normandy, was highly distinguished. Robert de Marmion, Lord of Fontenay, a distinguished follower of the Conqueror, obtained a grant of the castle and town of Tamworth, and also of the manor of Scrivelby, in Lincolnshire. One, or both, of these noble possessions was held by the honorable service of being the royal champion, as the ancestors of Marmion had formerly been to the Dukes of Normandy. But after the castle and demesne of Tamworth had passed through four successive Barons from Robert, the family became extinct in the person of Philip de Marmion, who died in 20th Edward I. without issue male. He was succeeded in his castle of Tamworth by Alexander de Freville, who married Maiora, his granddaughter. Baldwin de Freville, Alexander's descendant, in the reign of Richard I., by the supposed tenure of his castle of Tamworth, claimed the office of royal champion, and to do the service appertaining; namely, on the day of coronation, to ride, completely armed, upon a barbed horse, into Westminster Hall, and there to challenge the combat against any who would gainsay the King's title. But this office was adjudged to Sir John Dymoke, to whom the manor of Scrivelby had descended by another of the co-heiresses of Robert de Marmion; and it remains in that family, whose representative is Hereditary Champion of England at the present day. The family and possessions of Freville have merged in the Earls of Ferrars. I have not, therefore, created a new family, but only revived the titles of an old one in an imaginary personage.

It was one of the Marmion family who, in the reign of Edward II., performed that chivalrous feat before the very castle of Norham, which Bishop Percy has woven into his beautiful ballad, "The Hermit of Warkworth."—The story is thus told by Leland:—

"The Scottes cam yn to the marches of England, and destroyed the castles of Werk and Herbottel, and overran much of Northumberland marches."

At this time, Thomas Gray and his friends defended Norham from the Scotties. "It was a wonderful processe to declare, what mischiefes cam by houre and aseges by the space of xi yeres in Northumberland; for the Scottes became so proude, after they had got Berwick, that they nothing esteeme the Englishmen.

"About this tymne there was a great haste made yn Lincolnshire, to which came many gentlemen and ladies; and amonget them one lady brought a healmie for a man of were, with a very richie creste of gold, to William Marmion, knight, with a letter of commande ment of her lady, that he should go into the daungerest place in England, and ther to let the healmie be seem and known as famous. So he went to Norham; whither, within 4 days of cunning, cam Philip Monbray, guardian of Berwick, having yn his hand 40 men of armes, the very flour of men of the Scottish marches."

Thomas Gray, capitayne of Norham, seynghe this, brought his garrison afore the barriars of the castel, behind whom cam William, richly arrayed, as al glittering in gold, and wearing the healmie, his lady's present.

"Then said Thomas Gray to Marmion, 'Sir Knight, ye be cum hither to fame your helmet: mount up on yowr horse, and ride lyke a valiant man to yowr foes even here at hand, and I forsake God if I rescue not thy body deade or aluye, or I myself wyl dye for it.'

"Whereupon he toke his curneree, and rode among the throng of ennemeyes; the which layed sore stripes upon him, and pulled him at the last out of his sadel to the grounde."

Then Thomas Gray, with al the hole garrison, lette prick yu among the Scottes, and so wonded them and their horses, that they were overthrowen; and Marmion, sore beten, was horsid agayn, and, with Gray, persewed the Scottes yn chase. There were taken 50 horse of price; and the women of Norham brought them to the footo men to follow the chase."
Note M.

The whites a northern harper rude
Chanted a rhyme of deadly feud,
"How the fierce Thirwalls, and Ridleys all," &c.—P. 82.

This old Northumbrian ballad was taken down from the recitation of a woman eighty years of age, mother of one of the miners of Alston-moor, by an agent for the lead mines there, who communicated it to my friend and correspondent, R. Surtees, Esq., of Mainsforth. She had not, she said, heard it for many years; but, when she was a girl, it used to be sung at the merry-makings "till the roof rung again." To preserve this curious though rude rhyme, it is here inserted. The ludicrous turn given to the slaughter marks that wild and disorderly state of society, in which a murder was not merely a casual circumstance, but, in some cases, an exceedingly good jest. The structure of the ballad resembles the "Fray of Suport," having the same irregular stanzas and wild chorus.

I.
Hoot awa', lads, hoot awa',
Ha' ye heard how the Ridleys, and Thrirlaws, and a'
Hae' set upon Albany Featherstonhaugh,
And taken his life at the Deadmanshaugh?
There was Willimoteswick,
And Hardriding Dick,
And Hughie of Hawden, and Will of the Wa',
I cannot tell a', I cannot tell a',
And mony a mair that the dill may know.

II.
The auld man went down, but Nicol, his son,
Ran away afore the fight was begun;
And he run, and he run,
And afore they were done,
There was many a Featherston gal sie a stum,
As never was seen since the world begun.

III.
I cannot tell a', I cannot tell a';
Some got a skelp, and some got a claw;
But they gart the Featherstons hae'd their jaw,—
Nicol, and Alick, and a'
Some got a hurt, and some got a name;
Some bad harness, and some got st'an'en.

IV.
Ane got a twist o' the craig;
Ane got a bunch' o' the name;
Symy Haw got lamed of a leg,
And syne ran wallowing hame.

V.
Hoot, hoot, the old man's slain outright!
Lay him now wi' his face down—he's a sorrowful sight.

Note N.

Janet, thou donot,10
I'll lay my best bonnet,
Thou gets a new gude-man afore it be night.

VI.
Hoo away, lads, hoo away,
We's a' be hangid if we stay.
Take up the dead man, and lay him abint the biggin.
Here's the Bailey o' Haltwhistle,11
Wi' his great bull's pizzle,
That sup'd up the broo', and syne—in the piggins.12

In explanation of this ancient ditty, Mr. Surtees has furnished me with the following local memorandum:—Willimoteswick, the chief seat of the ancient family of Ridley, is situated two miles above the confluence of the Allen and Tyne. It was a house of strength, as appears from one oblong tower, still in tolerable preservation.13 It has been long in possession of the Blacket family. Hardriding Dick is not an epithet referring to horsemanship, but means Richard Ridley of Hardriding,14 the seat of another family of that name, which, in the time of Charles I., was sold on account of expenses incurred by the loyalty of the proprietor, the immediate ancestor of Sir Matthew Ridley. Will of the Wa' seems to be William Ridley of Walltown, so called from its situation on the great Roman wall. Thrirlaw Castle, whence the clan of Thrirlaws derived their name, is situated on the small river of Tippel, near the western boundary of Northumberland. It is near the wall, and takes its name from the rampart having been thirled, i. e., pierced, or breached, in its vicinity. Featherston Castle lies south of the Tyne, towards Alston-moor. Albany Featherstonhaugh, the chief of that ancient family, made a figure in the reign of Edward VI. A feud did certainly exist between the Ridleys and Featherstons, productive of such consequences as the ballad narrates.

24 Oct. 230 Henrici 8vi. Inquisitio capt. apud Haltwhistle, superiori corpin Alexander Featherston, Gen. apud Brunstibgh felonice interfecit. 22 Oct. per Nicolaum Ridley de Vuntanke, Gen. Hugon Ridle, Nicolaum Ridle, et alios ejusdem nominis. Nor were the Featherstons without their revenge; for 56to Henrici 8vi, we have—Ungatatio Nicolat Fetherston, ac Thome Nysson, &c., &c., pro homicidio Will. Ridde de Morale.

1 The Bailliff of Haltwhistle seems to have arrived when the fray was over. This supporter of social order is treated with characteristic irreverence by the moss-trooping poet.
2 An iron pot with two ears.
3 Willimoteswick was, in prior editions, confounded with Ridley Hall, situated two miles lower, on the same side of the Tyne, the hereditary seat of William C. Lowes, Esq.
4 Ridley, the bishop and martyr, was, according to some authorities, born at Hardriding, where a chair was preserved, called the Bishop's Chair. Others, and particularly his biographer and namesake, Dr. Gloucester Ridley, assign the honor of the martyr's birth to Willimoteswick.
land; and James IV, after conferring upon him in marriage his own relation, the Lady Catharine Gordon, made war on England in behalf of his pretensions. To retaliate an invasion of England, Surrey advanced into Berwickshire at the head of considerable forces, but retreated, after taking the insignificant fortress of Ayton. Ford, in his Dramatic Chronicle of Perkin Warbeck, makes the most of this inroad:

"SURREY.

"Are all our braving enemies shrunken back,

Hit in the fogges of their distemper'd climate,

Not daring to behold our colours wave

In sight of this infected ayre? Can they

Locke on the strength of Candrestine defact';

The glorie of Heydonhall devastated;

Of Edlington caste downe; the pike of Fulden

Orethrowne: And this, the strongest of their forts,

Old Ayton Castle, yeilded and demolished,

And yet not pepe abroad? The Scots are bold,

Hardie in battayle, but it seems the cause

They undertake considered, appearres

Unjoyted in the frame on't."

Note O.

—I true,

Nortans can find you guidas come;

For here be none have prick'd as far,

On Scottish ground, as to Dunbar;

Have drunk the monks of St. Bohan's ale,

And driven the beeches of Lauderdale;

Harried the wives of Greenlaw's goods,

And given them light to set their hoods.—P. 84.

The garrisons of the English castles of Wark, Norham, and Berwick, were, as may be easily supposed, very troublesome neighbors to Scotland. Sir Richard Maitland of Ledington wrote a poem, called "The Blind Baron's Comfort," when his barony of Blythe, in Lauderdale, was harried by Rowland Foster, the English captain of Wark, with his company, to the number of 300 men. They spoiled the poetical knight of 5000 sheep, 200 nolt, 30 horses and mares; the whole furniture of his house of Blythe, worth 100 pounds Scots (£3, 6s. 8d.), and every thing else that was portable. "This spoil was committed the 16th day of May, 1579 (and the said Sir Richard was three-score and fourteen years of age, and grown blind), in time of peace; when none of that country lippened [expected] such a thing."—"The Blind Baron's Comfort" consists in a string of puns on the word Blythe, the name of the lands thus despoiled. Like John Littewit, he had "a conceit left in his miscry—a miserable conceit."

The last line of the text contains a phrase, by which the Borderers jocularly intimated the burning a house. When the Maxwells, in 1685, burned the Castle of Lochwood, they said they did so to give the Lady Johnstone "light to set her hood." Nor was the phrase inapplicable; for, in a letter, to which I have mislaid the reference, the Earl of Northumberland writes to the King and Council, that he dressed himself at midnight, at Warkworth, by the blaze of the neighboring villages burned by the Scottish marauders.

Note P.

The priest of Shoreswood—he could sink

The wildest war-horse in your train.—P. 84.

This churchman seems to have been akin to Welsh, the vicar of St. Thomas of Exeter, a leader among the Cornish insurgents in 1549. "This man," says Holinshed, "had many good things in him. He was of no great stature, but well set, and mightie compact: He was a very good wrestler; shot well, both in the long bow and also in the cross-bow; he handled his hand-gun and peece very well; he was a very good woodman, and a hardie, and such a one as would not give his head for the polling, or his beard for the washing. He was a companion in any exercise of activitie, and of a courteous and gentle behaviour. He descended of a good honest parentage, being borne at Penevenin in Cornwall; and yet, in this rebellion, an arch-captain and a principal doer."—Vol. p. 585, 4to edition. This model of clerical talents had the misfortune to be hanged upon the steeple of his own church."

Note Q.

—that Grot where olives nod,

Where, darting of each heart and eye,

From all the youth of Sicily,

Saint Rosalia retired to God.—P. 84.

"Sante Rosalia was of Palermo, and born of a very noble family, and, when very young, abhorred so much the vanities of this world, and avoided the converse of mankind, resolving to dedicate herself wholly to God Almighty, that she, by divine inspiration, forsook her father's house, and never was more heard of till her body was found in that cleft of a rock, on that almost inaccessible mountain, where now the chapel is built; and they affirm she was carried up there by the hands of angels; for that place was not formerly so accessible (as now it is) in the days of the Saint; and even now it is a very bad, and steepy, and breakneck way. In this frightful place, this holy woman lived a great many years, feeding only on what she found growing on that barren mountain, and creeping into a narrow and dreadful cleft in a rock, which was always dropping wet, and was her place of retirement as well as prayer; having worn out even the rock with her knees in a certain place, which is now open'd on purpose to show it to those who come here. This chapel is very richly adorn'd; and on the spot where the Saint's dead body was discover'd, which is just beneath the hole in the rock, which is open'd on purpose, as I said, there is a very fine statue of marble, representing her in a lying posture, railed in all about with fine iron and brass work; and the altar, on which they say mass, is built just over it. Voyage to Sicily and Malta, by Mr. John Dryden (son to the poet), p. 107."

Note R.

Friar John

 Himself still sleeps before his head
Have mark'd ten arcs and two exceds.—P. 85.

Friar John understood the soporific virtue of his beads and breviary, as well as his namesake in Rabelais. "But Gargantua could not sleep by any means, on which side soever he turned himself. Whereupon the monk said to him, 'I never sleep soundly but when I am at sermon or prayers: Let us therefore begin, you and I, the seven penitential psalms, to try whether you shall not quickly fall asleep.' The conceit pleased Gargantua very well; and beginning the first of these psalms, as soon as they came to Beati quorum, they fell asleep, both the one and the other."

1 The reader needs hardly to be reminded of Ivanhoe.
APPENDIX TO MARMION. 151

NOTE S.

The summon'd Pilgrim came in place.—P. 55.

A Palmer, opposed to a Pilgrim, was one who made it his sole business to visit different holy shrines; travelling incessantly, and subsisting by charity; whereas the Pilgrim retired to his usual home and occupations, when he had paid his devotions at the particular spot which was the object of his pilgrimage. The Palmers seem to have been the Questionarii of the ancient Scottish canons 1242 and 1296. There is in the Bannatyne MS. a burlesque account of two such persons, entitled "Sinny and his brother." Their accomplishments are thus ludicrously described (I discard the ancient spelling):

"Syne shaped them up, to lope on less,
Two tabards of the tartan;
They counted nought what their cloths were
When sew'd them on, in certain.
Syne clampil it St. Peter's keys,
Mode of an old red gartane;
St. James's shells, on 'tither side, shows
As pretty as a partane
Toe,
Synnye and his brother."

NOTE T.

To fair St. Andrews bound,
Within the ocean-cair to pray,
Where good Saint Rule his holy ley,
From midnight to the dawn of day,
Sing to the billows' sound.—P. 56.

St. Regulus (Scotlè, St. Rule), a monk of Patra, in Achbia, warned by a vision, is said, A.D. 370, to have sailed westward, until he landed at St. Andrews in Scotland, where he founded a chapel and tower. The latter is still standing; and, though we may doubt the precise date of its foundation, is certainly one of the most ancient edifices in Scotland. A cave, nearly fronting the ruinous castle of the Archbishops of St. Andrews, bears the name of this religious person. It is difficult of access; and the rock in which it is hewed is washed by the German Ocean. It is nearly round, about ten feet in diameter, and the same in height. On one side is a sort of stone altar; on the other an aperture into an inner den, where the miserable ascetic, who inhabited this dwelling, probably slept. At full tide, cress and regress are hardly practicable. As Regulus first colonized the metropolis see of Scotland, and converted the inhabitants in the vicinity, he has some reason to complain that the ancient name of Killrule (Cola Reguli) should have been superseded, even in favor of the tutelar saint of Scotland. The reason of the change was, that St. Rule is said to have brought to Scotland the relics of Saint Andrew.

NOTE U.

Saint Fillan's blessed well,
Whose spring can fresned dreams dispel,
And the crazed brain restore.—P. 56.

St. Fillan was a Scottish saint of some reputation. Although Popery is, with us, matter of abomination, yet the common people still retain some of the superstitions connected with it. There are in Perthshire several wells and springs dedicated to St. Fillan, which are still places of pilgrimage and offerings, even among the Protestants. They are held powerful in cases of madness; and, in some of very late occurrence, lunatics have been left all night bound to the holy stone, in confidence that the saint would cure and unlock them before morning.—[See various notes to the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.]

NOTE V.

The scenes are desert now, and bare,
Where flourish'd once a forest fair.—P. 56.

Ettrick Forest, now a range of mountainous sheep-walks, was once, and still, reserved for the privilege and pleasure of the royal chase. Since it was dispossessed, the wood has been, by degrees, almost totally destroyed, although, wherever protected from the sheep, copes soon arise without any planting. When the King hunted there, he often summoned the array of the country to meet and assist his sport. Thus, in 1528, James V. "made proclamation to all lords, barons, gentlemen, landward-men, and freeholders, that they should appear at Edinburgh, with a month's victuals, to pass with the King where he pleased, to dantons the thieves of Tiviotdale, Annandale, Liddisdale, and other parts of that country; and also warned all gentlemen that had good dogs to bring them, that he might hunt in the said country as he pleased: The whilk the Earl of Argyle, the Earl of Huntley, the Earl of Athole, and so all the rest of the gentlemen of the Highland, did, and brought their hounds with them in like manner, to hunt with the King, as he pleased."

"The second day of June the King past out of Edinburgh to the hunting, with many of the nobles and gentlemen of Scotland with him, to the number of twelve thousand men; and then past to Meggittland, and hounded and hawked all the country and bounds; that is to say, Cranmat, Pappertlaw, St. Mary-laws, Carlawrick, Chapel, Ewinoores, and Longhope. I heard say, he slew, in these bounds, eighteen score of harts." These huntsings had, of course, a military character, and attendance upon them was a part of the duty of a vassal. The act for abolishing war or military tenures in Scotland enumerates the services of hunting, hosting, watching, and warding, as those which were in future to be illegal.

Taylor, the water-poet, has given an account of the mode in which these huntsings were conducted in the Highlands of Scotland, in the seventeenth century, having been present at Braemar upon such an occasion:

"There did I find the truly noble and right honourable lords, John Erskine, Earl of Mar; James Stewart, Earl of Murray; George Gordon, Earl of Ewygny, son and heir to the Marquis of Huntley; James Erskine, Earl of Buchan; and John, Lord Erskine, son and heir to the Earl of Mar, and their Countesses, with my much honoured, and my last assured and approved friend, Sir William Murray, knight of Abercarney, and hundreds of others, knights, esquires, and their followers; all and every man, in general, in one habit, as if Lycurgus had been there, and made laws of equality; for once in the year, which is the whole month of August, and sometimes part of September, many of the nobility and gentry of the kingdom (for their pleasure) do come into these Highland countries to hunt; where they do conform themselves to the habit of the Highlandmen, who, for the most part, speak nothing but Irish; and, in former time, were those people which were called the Red-sanks. Their habit is—shoes, with but one sole a-piece; stockings (which they call short hose), made of a warm stuff of diverse colours, which they call tartan; as for breeches, many of them, nor their forefathers, never wore any, but a jerkin of the same stuff that their hose is of; their garters being bands or wreaths of hay or straw; with a plaid about their shoulders; which is a mantle of diverse colours, much finer and lighter stuff than their hose; with blue flat caps on their heads; a handkerchief knotted with two knots, about their necks: and thus are they attired. Now their weapons are—long bowes and forked arrows, swords and targets, barquebusses, muskets, darts, and Lochaber axes. With these arms I found many of them armed for the hunting. As for their attire, any man, of what degree soever, that comes amongst them, must not disdain to wear it; for, if they do, then they will disdain to hunt, or willingly to bring in their dogs; but if men be kind unto them, and be in their habit, then are they conquer'd with kindness, and the sport will be plentiful. This was the reason that I found so many noblemen and gentlemen in those shapes. But to proceed to the hunting:—

1 Pittsottie's History of Scotland, folio edition, p. 143.

"My good Lord of Mar having put me into that shape, I rode with him from his house, where I saw the ruins of an old castle, called the Castle of Kindrogan. It was built by King Malcolm Canmore (for a hunting-house), who reigned in Scotland, when Edward the Confessor, Harold, and Norman William, reigned in England. I speak of it, because it was the last house I saw in those parts; for I was the space of twelve days after, before I saw either house, corn-field, or habitation for any creature, but deer, wild horses, wolves, and such like creatures,—which made me doubt that I should never have seen a house again.

"Thus, the first day, we travelled eight miles, where there were small cottages, built on purpose to lodge in, which they call Lonquhards. I thank my good Lord Erskine, he commanded that I should always be lodged in his lodging; the kitchen being always on the side of a bank; many kettles and pots boiling, and many spits turning and winding, with great variety of cheer,—as venison baked; sodden, rest, and stewed beef; mutton, goats, kil, hares, fresh salmon, pigeons, hens, capons, chickens, partridges, muscr-coots, heath-cooks, caperkellies, and tarmagants; good ale, sake, white and claret, tent (or allegant), with most potent aquavitae.

"All these, and more than these, we had continually in superfluous abundance, caught by falconers, fowlers, fishers, and brought by my lord's tenants and purveyors to viatual our camp, which consisteth of fourteen or fifteen hundred men and horses. The manner of the hunting is this: Five or six hundred men do rise early in the morning; and they do disperse themselves divers ways, and seven, eight, or ten miles compass, they do bring, or chase in, the deer in many herds (two, three, or four hundred in a herd); to such or such a place, as the noblemen shall appoint them; then, when day is come, the lords and gentlemen of their companies do ride or go to the said places, sometimes wailing up to the middles, through burns and rivers; and then, they being come to the place, do lie down on the ground, till these foresaid scouts, which are called the Tinkhill, do bring down the deer; but, as the proverb says of the bad cook, so these tinkhill men do lick their own fingers; for, besides their bows and arrows, which they carry with them, we can hear, now and then, a barquebus or a musket go off, which they do seldom discharge in vain. Then, after we had staid there three hours, or thereabouts, we might perceive the deer appear on the hills round about us (their heads making a show like a wood), which, being followed close by the tinkhill, are chased down into the valley where we lay; then all the valley, on each side, being way-laid with a hundred couple of strong Irish greyhounds, they are all let loose, as occasion serves, upon the herd of deer, that with dogs, guns, arrows, darts, and daggers, in the space of two hours, fourscore fat deer were slain; which after are disposed of, some one way, and some another, twenty and thirty miles, and more than enough left for us, to make merry withall, at our rendezvous."

Note W.

By lone Saint Mary's silent lake.—P. 88.

This beautiful sheet of water forms the reservoir from which the Yarrow takes its source. It is connected with a smaller lake, called the Loch of the Lowes, and surrounded by mountains. In the winter, it is still frequented by flights of wild swans; hence my friend Mr. Wordsworth's lines:

"The swan on sweet St. Mary's lake Floats double, swan and shadow."

Near the lower extremity of the lake are the ruins of Dryhope tower, the birth-place of Mary Scott, daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope, and famous by the traditional name of the Flower of Yarrow. She was married to Walter Scott of Harden, no less renowned for his depredations, than his bride for her beauty. Her romantic appellation was, in later days, with equal justice, conferred on Miss Mary Lillas Scott, the last of the elder branch of the Harden family. The author well remembers the talent and spirit of the latter Flower of Yarrow, though age had then injured the charms which procured her the name. The words usually sung to the air of "Tweedside," beginning, "What beauties does Flora disclose," were composed in her honor.

Note X.

*In feudal strife, a foe
Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low.—P. 88.*

The chapel of St. Mary of the Lowes (de locubus) was situated on the eastern side of the lake to which it gives name. It was injured by the clan of Scott, in a feud with the Cranstouns; but continued to be a place of worship during the seventeenth century. The vestiges of the building can now scarcely be traced; but the burial ground is still used as a cemetery. A funeral, in a spot so very retired, has an uncommonly striking effect. The vestiges of the chaplain's house are yet visible. Being in a high situation, it commanded a full view of the lake, with the opposite mountain of Bourhope, belonging, with the lake itself, to Lord Napier. On the left hand is the tower of Dryhope, mentioned in a preceding note.

Note Y.

---the Wizard's grave;

That Wizard Priefts, whose bones are thrust From company of holy dust.—P. 88.

At one corner of the burial-ground of the demolished chapel, but without its presents, is a small mound, called Binram's Crome, where tradition deposits the remains of a necromantic priest, the former tenant of the chaplainry. His story much resembles that of Ambrosio in "The Monk," and has been made the theme of a ballad, by my friend Mr. James Hogg, more poetically designated the Ellrich Shepherd. To his volume, entitled "The Mountain Bard," which contains this and many other legendary stories and ballads of great merit, I refer the curious reader.
Note Z.

Some ruder and more savage scene,
Like that which nowos round dark Loch-skene.—P. 89.

Loch-skene is a mountain lake, of considerable size, at the head of the Moffat-water. The character of the scenery is uncommonly savage; and the earn, or Scottish eagle, has, for many ages, built its nest yearly upon an islet in the lake. Loch-skene discharges itself into a brook, which, after a short and precipitate course, falls from a cataract of immense height, and glossy grandeur, called, from its appearance, the “Gray Man’s Tail.” The “Giant’s Grave,” afterwards mentioned, is a sort of trench, which bears that name, a little way from the foot of the cataract. It has the appearance of a battery, designed to command the pass.

Note 2 A.

high Whitby’s cloister’d pite.—P. 89.

The Abbey of Whitby, in the Archdeaconry of Cleveland, on the coast of Yorkshire, was founded A. D. 657, in consequence of a vow of Oswy, King of Northumberland. It contained both monks and nuns of the Benedictine order; but, contrary to what was usual in such establishments, the abbess was superior to the abbot. The monastery was afterwards ruined by the Danes, and rebuilt by William Percy, in the reign of the Conqueror. There were no nuns there in Henry the Eighth’s time, nor long before it. The ruins of Whitby Abbey are very magnificent.

Note 2 B.

St. Cuthbert’s Holy Isle.—P. 89.

Lindisfarne, an isle on the coast of Northumberland, was called Holy Island, from the sanctity of its ancient monastery, and from its having been the episcopal seat of the see of Durham during the early ages of British Christianity. A succession of holy men held that office; but their merits were swallowed up in the superior fame of St. Cuthbert, who was sixth Bishop of Durham, and who bestowed the name of his “patrimony” upon the extensive property of the sea. The ruins of the monastery upon Holy Island betoken great antiquity. The arches are, in general, strictly Saxon; and the pillars which support them, short, strong, and massive. In some places, however, there are pointed windows, which indicate that the building had been repaired at a period long subsequent to the original foundation. The exterior ornaments of the building, being of a light sandy stone, have been wasted, as described in the text. Lindisfarne is not properly an island, but rather, as the venerable Bede has informed it, a semi-isle; for, although surrounded by the sea at full tide, the ebb leaves the sands dry between it and the opposite coast of Northumberland, from which it is about three miles distant.

Note 2 C.

Then Whitby’s vans exulting told
How to their house three Baron bold
Most mortal serve do.—P. 91.

The popular account of this curious service, which was probably considerably exaggerated, is thus given in “A True Account,” printed and circulated at Whitby: “In the fifth year of the reign of Henry II., after the conquest of England by William, Duke of Normandy, the Lord of Ugbaharny, then called William de Bruce; the Lord of Sneacon, called Ralph de Percy; with a gentleman and freeholder called Allatson, did, on the 1oth of October, 1159, appoint to meet and hunt the wild-boar, in a certain wood, or desert place, belonging to the Abbot of Whitby: the place’s name was Eskdale-side; and the abbot’s name was Selmam. Then, these young gentlemen being met, with their hounds and boar-staves, in the place before mentioned, and there having found a great wild-boar, the hounds run him well near about the chapel and hermitage of Eskdale-side, where was a monk of Whitby, who was an hermit. The boar, being very sorely pursued and dead-run, took in at the chapel-door, there laid him down, and presently died. The hermit shut the hounds out of the chapel, and kept himself within at his meditations and prayers, the hounds standing at bay without. The gentlemen, in the thick of the wood, being just behind their game, followed the cry of their hounds, and so came to the hermitage, calling on the hermit, who opened the door and came forth; and within them found the boar lying dead: for which, the gentlemen, in a very great fury, because the hounds were put from their game, did most violently and cruelly run at the hermit with their boar-staves, whereby the soon after died. Thereupon the gentlemen, perceiving and knowing that they were in peril of death, took sanctuary at Scarborough: But at that time the abbot being in very great favor with the King, removed them out of the sanctuary; whereby they came in danger of the law, and not to be privileged, but likely to have the severity of the law, which was death for death. But the hermit, being a holy and devout man, and at the point of death, sent for the abbot, and desired him to send for the gentlemen who had wounded him. The abbot so doing, the gentlemen came; and the hermit, being very sick and weak, said unto them, ‘I am sure to die of those wounds you have given me.’—The abbot answered, ‘They shall as surely die for the same.’—But the hermit answered, ‘Not so, for I will freely forgive them my death, if they will be content to be enkindled the peneances I shall lay on them for the safeguard of their souls.’ The gentlemen being present, bade him save their lives. Then said the hermit, ‘You and yours shall hold your lands of the Abbot of Whitby, and his successors, in this manner: That, upon Ascension-day, you, or some of you, shall come to the wood of the stray-heals, which is in Eskdale-side, the same day at sun-rising, and there shall the abbot’s officer blow his horn, to the intent that you may know where to find him; and he shall deliver unto you, William de Bruce, ten staves, eleven stout stowers, and eleven yethers, to be cut by you, or some of you, with a knife of one penny price: and you, Ralph de Percy, shall take twenty-one of each sort, to be cut in the same manner; and you, Allatson, shall take nine of each sort, to be cut as aforesaid, and to be taken on your backs and carried to the town of Whitby, and to be there before nine of the clock the same day before mentioned. At the same hour of nine of the clock, if it be full sea, your labor and service shall cease; and if low water, each of you shall set your stakes to the brim, each stake one yard from the other, and so yether them on each side with your yethers; and so stake on each side with your stout stowers, that they may stand three tides without removing by the force thereof. Each of you shall do, make, and execute the said service, at that very hour, every year, except it be full sea at that hour; but when it shall so fall out, this service shall cease. You shall faithfully do this, in remembrance that you did most cruelly slay me; and that you may be better pleasing to God for mercy, repent unfeignedly of your sins, and do good works. The officer of Eskdale-side shall blow, Out on you! Out on you! Out on you! for this heinous crime. If you, or your successors, shall refuse this service, so long as it shall not be full sea at the aforesaid hour, you or yours shall forfeit your lands to the Abbot of Whitby, or his successors. This I entreat, and earnestly beg, that you may have lives and goods preserved for this service; and I request of you to promise, by your parts in Heaven, that it shall be done by you and your successors, as is aforesaid requested;
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

and I will confirm it by the faith of an honest man."—Then the hermit said, 'My soul longeth for the Lord: and I do as freely forgive these men my death as Christ forgave the thieves on the cross.' And, in the presence of the abbot and the rest, he said moreover these words: 'In manus tuas, Domine, con-
mendo spiritum meum, a visciula calm mortis redemisti me, Domine veritatis. Amen.'—So he yielded up the ghost the eighth day of December, anno Domini 1139, whose soul God have mercy upon. Amen.

"This service," it is added, "still continues to be performed with the prescribed ceremonies, though not by the proprietors in person. Part of the lands charged therewith are now held by a gentleman of the name of Herbert."

---

Note 2 D.

—in their convent-cell,

A Saxon princess once did dwell,
The lovely Edelfled.—P. 92.

She was the daughter of King Oswy, who, in gratitude to Heaven for the great victory which he won in 655, against Penda, the Pagan King of Mercia, dedicated Edelfleda, but a year old, to the service of God, in the monastery of Whitby, of which St. Hilda was then abbess. She afterwards adorned the place of her education with great magnificence.

---

Note 2 E.

—of thousand snakes, each one
Was changed into a coil of stone,
When holy Hilda prayed;
They told how sea-foe's pinions fall,
As over Whity's towers they sail.—P. 92.

These two miracles are much insisted upon by all ancient writers who have occasion to mention either Whitby or St.
Hilda. The relics of the snakes which infested the precincts of the convent, and were, at the abbess's prayer, not only beheaded, but petrified, are still found about the rocks, and are termed by Protestant fossilists, Annamites.

The other miracle is thus mentioned by Camden: "It is also ascribed to the power of her sanctity that these wild geese, which, in the winter, fly in great flocks to the lakes and rivers unfrozen in the southern parts, to the great amazement of every one, fall down suddenly upon the ground, when they are in their flight over certain neighboring fields hereabouts: a relation I should not have made, if I had not received it from several credible men. But those who are less inclined to heed superstition, attribute it to some occult quality in the ground, and to somewhat of antipathy between it and the geese, such as they say is betwixt wolves and skylarks.
For that such hidden tendencies and aversions, as we call sympathies and antipathies, are implanted in many things by provident Nature for the preservation of them, is a thing so evident that everybody grants it." Mr. Charlton, in his His-story of Whityt, points out the true origin of the fable, from the number of sea-gulls that, when flying from a storm, often alight near Whitby; and from the woodcocks, and other birds of passage, who do the same upon their arrival on shore, after a long flight.

---

Note 2 F.

His body's resting-place, of old,
How of their patron changed, they told.—P. 92.

St. Cuthbert was, in the choice of his sepulchre, one of the most mutable and unreasonable saints in the Calendar. He died A.D. 688, in a hermitage upon the Farne Islands, having resigned the bishopric of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, about two years before. 1 His body was brought to Lindisfarne, where it remained until a descent of the Danes, about 785, when the monastery was nearly destroyed. The monks fled to Scotland with what they deemed their chief treasure, the relics of St. Cuthbert. The Saint was, however, a most car-pious fellow-traveller; which was the more intolerable, as, like Sinbad's Old Man of the Sea, he journeyed upon the shoulders of his companions. They paraded him through Scotland for several years, and came as far west as Whithern, in Galloway, whence they attempted to sail for Ireland, but were driven back by tempests. He at length made a halt at Norham; from thence he went to Melrose, where he remained stationary for a short time, and then caused himself to be launched upon the Tweed in a stone coffin, which landed him at Tilmouth, in Northumberland. This boat is finely shaped, ten feet long, three feet and a half in diameter, and only four inches thick; so that, with very little assistance, it might certainly have swum: It still lies, or at least did so a few years ago, in two pieces, beside the ruined chapel of Tilmouth.
From Tilmouth to Cuthbert wandered into Yorkshire; and at length made a long stay at Chester-le-Street, to which the bishop's see was transferred. At length, the Danes continuing to infest the country, the monks removed to Rippon for a season; and it was in returning from thence to Chester-le-Street that, passing through a forest called Dunholme, the Saint and his carriage became immovable at a place named Wardlaw, or Wardillaw. Here the Saint chose his place of residence; and all who have seen Durham must admit that, if difficult in his choice, he excelled taste in at length fixing it. It is said that the Northumbrian Catholics still keep secret the precise spot of the Saint's sepulchre, which is only entrusted to three persons at a time. When one dies, the survivors associate with them, in his room, a person judged fit to be the depository of so valuable a secret.

[The resting-place of the remains of this Saint is not now matter of uncertainty. So recently as 17th May, 1827, 1139 years after his death, their discovery and disinterment were effected. Under a blue stone, in the middle of the shrine of St. Cuthbert, at the eastern extremity of the choir of Durham Cathedral, there was then found a walled grave, containing the coffin of the Saint. The first, or outer one, was ascerned as being of 1541; the second of 1401; the third, or inner one, answering in every particular to the description of that of 698, was found to contain, not indeed, as had been expected when, and even until 1588, the incorruptible body, but the entire skeleton of the Saint; the bottom of the grave being perfectly dry, free from offensive smell, and without the slightest symptom that a human body had ever undergone decomposition within its walls. The skeleton was found swathed in five silk robes of ornamental embroidery, the ornamental parts laid with gold leaf, and these again covered with a robe of linen. Beside the skeleton were also deposited several gold and silver insignia, and other relics of the Saint. The Roman Catholics now allow that the coffin was that of St. Cuthbert. The bones of the Saint were again restored to the grave in a new coffin, amid the fragments of the former ones.
Those portions of the inner coffin which could be preserved, including one of his rings, with the silver altar, golden cross, stole, comb, two maniple, bracelets, girdle, gold wire of the skeltone, and fragments of the five silk robes, and some of the rings of the outer coffin made in 1541, were deposited in the library of the Dean and Chapter, where they are now preserved.

---

1 He resumed the bishopric of Lindisfarne, which, owing to bad health, he again relinquished within less than three months before his death.—RAINE'S St. Cuthbert.
APPENDIX TO MARMION.

For ample details of the life of St. Cuthbert,—his coffin-journeys,—an account of the opening of his tomb, and a description of the silk robes and other relics found in it, the reader interested in such matters is referred to a work entitled "Saint Cuthbert, by James Bainie, M.A." (4to, Durham, 1828), where he will find much of antiquarian history, ceremonies, and superstitions, to gratify his curiosity.—Ed.

Note 2 G.

Even Scotland's dauntless king, and heir, &c.

Before his standard fled.—P. 92.

Every one has heard that when David L, with his son Henry, invaded Northumberland in 1136, the English host marched against them under the holy banner of St. Cuthbert; to the efficacy of which was imputed the great victory which they obtained in the bloody battle of Northallerton, or Cutenoor. The conquerors were at least as much indebted to the jealousy and intractability of the different tribes who composed David's army; among whom, as mentioned in the text, were the Galwegians, the Britons of Strath-Clyde, the men of Teviotdale and Lothian, with many Norman and German warriors, who asserted the cause of the Empress Maud. See Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. i. p. 622; a most laborious, curious, and interesting publication, from which considerable defects of style and manner ought not to turn aside the Scottish antiquary.

Note 2 H.

'Twas he, to vindicate his reign,

Edged Alfred's felchion on the Dane,

And turn'd the Conqueror back again.—P. 92.

Cuthbert, we have seen, had no great reason to spare the Danes, when opportunity offered. Accordingly, I find, in Simeon of Durham, that the Saint appeared in a vision to Alfred, when lurking in the marshes of Glastonbury, and promised him assistance and victory over his heathen enemies; a consolation which, as was reasonable, Alfred, after the victory of Ashendown, rewarded by a royal offering at the shrine of the Saint. As to William the Conqueror, the terror spread before his army, when he marched to punish the revolt of the Northumbrians, in 1066, had forced the monks to fly once more to Holy Island with the body of the Saint. It was, however, replaced before William left the north; and, to balance accounts, the Conqueror having intimated an indiscreet curiosity to view the Saint's body, he was, while in the act of commanding the shrine to be opened, seized with heat and sickness, accompanied with such a panic terror that, notwithstanding there was a sumptuous dinner prepared for him, he fled without eating a morsel (which the monkish historian seems to have thought so small part both of the miracle and the penance), and never drew his bridle till he got to the river Tweed.

Note 2 I.

*Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame

The sea-born bards that bear his name.—P. 92.*

Although we do not learn that Cuthbert was, during his life, such an artificer as Dunstan, his brother in sanctity, yet, since his death, he has acquired the reputation of forging those Entrochi which are found among the rocks of Holy Island, and pass there by the name of St. Cuthbert's Beads. While at this task, he is supposed to sit during the night upon a certain rock, and use another as his anvil. This story was perhaps credited in former days; at least the Saint's legend contains some not more probable.

Note 2 K.

Old Cuthwulf.—P. 92.

Cuthwulf, or Colwulf, King of Northumberland, flourished in the eighth century. He was a man of some learning; for the venerable Bede dedicates to him his "Ecclesiastical History." He abdicated the throne about 728, and retired to Holy Island, where he died in the odor of sanctity. Saint as Colwulf was, however, I fear the foundation of the penance-vault does not correspond with his character; for it is recorded among his memorabilia that, finding the air of the island raw and cold, he indulged the monks, whose rule had hitherto confined them to milk or water, with the comfortable privilege of using wine or ale. If any rigid antiquity insists on this objection, he is welcome to suppose the penance-vault was intended, by the founder, for the more genial purposes of a cellar.

These penitential vaults were the Geissel-gewölbe of German convents. In the earlier and more rigid times of monastic discipline, they were sometimes used as a cemetery for the lay benefactors of the convent, whose unsanctified corpses were then seldom permitted to pollute the choir. They also served as places of meeting for the chapter, when measures of uncommon severity were to be adopted. But their most frequent use, as is implied by the name, was as places for performing penances or undergoing punishment.

Note 2 L.

Tynemouth's hauty Prioressa.—P. 93.

That there was an ancient priory at Tynemouth is certain. Its ruins are situated on a high rocky point; and, doubtless, many a vow was made to the shrine by the distressed mariners who drove towards the iron-bound coast of Northumberland in stormy weather. It was anciently a nunnery; for Virca, abbess of Tynemouth, presented St. Cuthbert (yet alive) with a rare winding-sheet, in emulation of a holy lady called Tuda, who had sent him a cofin: But, as in the case of Whitby, and of Holy Island, the introduction of nuns at Tynemouth in the reign of Henry VIII. is an anachronism. The nunnery at Holy Island is altogether fictitious. Indeed, St. Cuthbert was unlikely to permit such an establishment; for, notwithstanding his accepting the mortuary gifts above mentioned, and his carrying on a visiting acquaintance with the Abbess of Coldingham, he certainly hated the whole female sex; and, in revenge of a slippery trick played to him by an Irish princess, he, after death, inflicted severe penances on such as presumed to approach within a certain distance of his shrine.

Note 2 M.

*On those the wall was to enclose,

Alive, within the tomb.—P. 94.*

It is well known that the religious who broke their vows... of chastity were subjected to the same penalty as the Roman vestals in a similar case. A small niche, sufficient to enclose their bodies, was made in the massive wall of the convent; a slender pittance of food and water was deposited in it, and the awful words, Vade in pace, were the signal for immuring the criminal. It is not likely that, in latter times, this punishment was often resorted to; but, among the ruins of the Abbey of Coldingham, which, from the shape of the niche, and position of the figure, seemed to be that of an immured nun.

[The Edinburgh Reviewer, on stanza xxxii. p. 20, suggests that the proper reading of the sentence is vade in pace—not part in peace, but go into peace, or into eternal rest, a pretty intelligible mнимus to another world.]

NOTE 2 N.

The village inn.—P. 99.

The accommodations of a Scottish hostelry, or inn, in the 16th century, may be collected from Dunbar's admirable tale of "The Friars of Berwick." Simon Lawler, "the gay ostler," seems to have lived very comfortably; and his wife decorated her person with a scarlet kirtle, and a belt of silk and silver, and rings upon her fingers; and feasted her paramour with rabbits, capons, partridges, and Bourdeaux wine. At least, if the Scottish inns were not good, it was not for want of encouragement from the legislature; who, so early as the reign of James I., not only enacted that in all boroughs and fairs there he hostellaries, having stables and chambers, and provision for man and horse, but by another statute ordained that no man, travelling on horse or foot, should presume to lodge anywhere except in these hostellaries; and that no person, save innkeepers, should receive such travellers, under the penalty of forty shillings, for exercising such hospitality. But, in spite of these provident enactments, the Scottish hostels are but indifferent, and strangers continue to find reception in the houses of individuals.

NOTE 2 O.

The death of a dear friend.—P. 101.

Among other omens to which faithful credit is given among the Scottish peasantry, is what is called the "dead-bell," explained by my friend James Hogg to be that tinkling in the cars which the country people regard as the secret intelligence of some friend's decease. He tells a story to the purpose in the "Mountain Bard," p. 26.

["O lady, 'tis dark, an' I heard the dead-bell!
An' I daren' gae yonder for gowd nor fee.

"By the dead-bell is meant a tinkling in the cars, which our peasantry in the country regard as a secret intelligence of some friend's decease. Thus this natural occurrence strikes many with a superstitious awe. This reminds me of a trifling anecdote, which I will here relate as an instance—Our two servant-girls agreed to go an errand of their own, one night after supper, to a considerable distance, from which I strove to persuade them, but could not prevail. So, after going to the apartment where I slept, I took a drinking-glass, and, coming close to the back of the door, made two or three sweeps round the lips of the glass with my finger, which caused a loud shrill sound. I then overheard the following dialogue—

1 James I. Parliament I. cap. 24; Parliament III. cap. 36.
APPENDIX TO MARMION.

Note 2 R.

"Magicians, as is well known, were very curious in the choice and form of their vestments. Their caps are oval, or like pyramids, with lappets on each side, and fur within. Their gowns are long, and furred with fox-skins, under which they have a linen garment reaching to the knee. Their girdles are three inches broad, and have many cabalistical names, with crosses, trines, and circles inscribed on them. Their shoes should be of new russet leather, with a cross cut upon them. Their knives are dagger-fashion; and their swords have neither guard nor scabbard."—See these, and many other particulars, in the Discourses concerning Devils and Spirits, annexed to Rheinhold Scott's Discovery of Witchcraft, edition 1653.

Note 2 S.

Upon his breast a pentacle.—P. 103.

"A pentacle is a piece of fine linen, folded with five corners, according to the five senses, and suitably inscribed with characters. This the magician extends towards the spirits which he invokes, when they are stubborn and rebellious, and refuse to be conformable unto the ceremonies and rites of magic."—See the Discourses, &c., above mentioned, p. 66.

Note 2 T.

As born upon that blessed night
When mourning graves, and dying groans,
Proclaim'd hell's empire overthrown.—P. 103.

It is a popular article of faith that those who are born on Christmas, or Good Friday, have the power of seeing spirits, and even of commanding them. The Spaniards imputed the haggard and downcast looks of their Philip II. to the disagreeable visions to which this privilege subjected him.

Note 2 U.

Yet still the knightly spear and shield
The Elfin Warrior doth wield
Upon the brown hill's breast.—P. 104.

The following extract from the Essay upon the Fairy Superstitions, in the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," vol. ii., will show whence many of the particulars of the combat between Alexander III. and the Goblin King are derived:—

Gervase of Tilbury (Odie Imperial ap. Script. rer. Brunsme, vol. i. p. 797) relates the following popular story concerning a fairy knight:—Osbert, a bold and powerful baron, visited a noble family in the vicinity of Wandelbury, in the bishopric of Ely. Among other stories related in the social circle of his friends, who, according to custom, amused each other by repeating ancient tales and traditions, he was informed that if any knight, unattended, entered an adjacent plain by moonlight, and challenged an adversary to appear, he would be immediately encountered by a spirit in the form of a knight. Osbert resolved to make the experiment, and set out, attended by a single squire, whom he ordered to remain without the limits of the plain, which was surrounded by an ancient inclosure. On repeating the challenge, he was instantly assailed by an adversary, whom he quickly unhorsed, and seized the reins of his steed. During this operation, his ghostly opponent sprung up, and darting his spear, like a javelin, at Osbert, wounded him in the thigh. Osbert returned in triumph with the horse, which he committed to the care of his servants. The horse was of a sable color, as well as all his accoutrements, and apparently of great beauty and vigor. He remained with his keeper till cock-crowing, when, with eyes flashing fire, he reared, spurned the ground, and vanished. On disarming himself, Osbert perceived that he was wounded, and that one of his steel boots was full of blood." Gervase adds that, "as long as he lived, the scar of his wound opened afresh on the anniversary of the eve on which he encountered the spirit." Less fortunate was the gallant Bohemian knight, who, travelling by night with a single companion, "came in sight of a fairy host, arrayed under displayed banners. Despising the remonstrances of his friend, the knight pricked forward to break a lance with a champion, who advanced from the ranks apparently in defence. His companion beheld the Bohemian overthrown, horse and man, by his aerial adversary; and returning to the spot next morning, he found the mangled corpses of the knight and steed."—Hierarchy of Blessed Angels, p. 164.

Besides these instances of Elfin chivalry above quoted, many others might be alleged in support of employing fairy machinery in this manner. The forest of Glenmore, in the North Highlands, is believed to be haunted by a spirit called Lham-dearg, in the army of an ancient warrior, having a bloody hand, from which he takes his name. He insists upon those with whom he meets doing battle with him; and the clergyman who makes up an account of the district, extant in the Macfarlane MS. in the Advocates' Library, gravely assures us that, in his time, Lham-dearg fought with three brothers whom he met in his walk, none of whom long survived the ghostly conflict. Barclay, in his "Euphoration," gives a singular account of an officer who had ventured, with his servant, rather to intrude upon a haunted house in a town in Flanders, than to put up with worse quarters elsewhere. After taking the usual precautions of providing fires, lights, and arms, they watched till midnight, when behold! the severed arm of a man dropped from the ceiling; this was followed by the legs, the other arm, the trunk, and the head of the body, all separately. The members rolled together, united themselves in the presence of the astonished soldiers, and formed a gigantic warrior, who defied them both to combat. Their blows, although they penetrated the body and amputated the limbs of their strange antagonist, had, as the reader may easily believe, little effect on an enemy who possessed such powers of self-defense; nor did his efforts make more effectual impression upon them. How the combat terminated I do not exactly remember, and have not the book by me; but I think the spirit made to the Intruders on his mansion the usual proposal, that they should renounce their redemption; which being declined, he was obliged to retract.

The most singular tale of the kind is contained in an extract communicated to me by my friend Mr. Surtess of Mainsforth, in the Bishopric, who copied it from a MS. note in a copy of Barthogge "On the Nature of Spirits, Svo, 1694," which had been the property of the late Mr. Gill, attorney-general to Egerton, Bishop of Durham. "It was not," says my obliging correspondent, "in Mr. Gill's own hand, but probably an hundred years older, and was said to be E libro Chronet. Donceln. per T. O extract, whom I believe to have been Thomas Crudelius, bishop, who held several offices under the See of Durham a hundred years ago. Mr. Gill was possessed of most of his manuscripts." The extract, which, in fact, suggested the introduction of the tale into the present poem, runs thus:

"Ren miram hujusmodi quae nostris temporebus event, tate vire nobili ad ficta digitationem, ennarrare hanc pipiget. Rodolphus Bulmer, eum e castri, quae tunc temporum prope Noram postea erant, obiectatis causa, crassit, ac in ulterior Teutica virid praudum cum cuncta leporaris inseceruntur, forte cum Scolio quorum nobili, sibi ante se, ut edulbar, familiariter cognit, congressus haps, in the degree of individual affection entertained for him by his friends, as well as in the general respect and esteem of Scotland at large. His "Life of Beattie," whom he befriended and patronized in life, as well as celebrated after his decease, was not long published, before the benevolent and affectionate biographer was called to follow the subject of his narrative. This melancholy event very shortly succeeded the marriage of the friend, to whom this introduction is addressed, with one of Sir William’s daughters.

Note 2 X.

--- Friar Rush.---P. 108.

Alias, "Will o’ the Wisp." This personage is a strolling demon, or espert follet, who, once upon a time, got admittance into a monastery as a scullion, and played the monks many pranks. He was also a sort of Robin Goodfellow, and Jack o’ Lanthern. It is in allusion to this mischievous demon that Milton’s cloun speaks,—

"She was pinched and pulled, she said,
And he by Friar’s lanthern led."

"The History of Friar Rush" is of extreme rarity, and, for some time, even the existence of such a book was doubted, although it is expressly alluded to by Reginald Scot, in his "Discovery of Witchcraft." I have perused a copy in the valuable library of my friend Mr. Heber; and I observe, from Mr. Beloe’s "Anecdotes of Literature," that there is one in the excellent collection of the Marquis of Stafford.

---

Note 2 Y.

Sir David Lindsay of the Mount, Lord Lion-Heart-at-arms.---P. 109.

The late elaborate edition of Sir David Lindsay’s Works, by Mr. George Chalmers, has probably introduced him to many of my readers. It is perhaps to be regretted that the learned Editor had not bestowed more pains in elucidating his author, even although he should have omitted, or at least reserved, his disquisitions on the origin of the language used by the poet.1 But, with all its faults, his work is an acceptable present to Scottish antiquaries. Sir David Lindsay was well known for his early efforts in favor of the Reformed doctrines; and, indeed, his play, coarse as it now seems, must have had a powerful effect upon the people of his age. I am uncertain if I abuse poetical license, by introducing Sir David Lindsay in the character of Lion-Herald, sixteen years before he obtained that office. At any rate, I am not the first who has been guilty of the anachronism; for the author of "Flod- den Field" despatches Dullantium, which can mean nobody but Sir David de la Mont, to France, on the message of defesay” and that the subsequent words begin another sentence—

----- "Upon the lute
Then played I twenty springis perqueir," &c.

In another place, "fasting lumis," i.e., looms, or implements of tilting, is facetiously interpreted "playful limbs." Many such minute errors could be pointed out; but these are only mentioned incidentally, and not as diminishing the real merit of the edition.

1 It is suggested by an ingenuous correspondent that Pas, da, lyn, ought rather to be interpreted, play, Dury Lyndsay.

---

Note 2 W.

--- Forbes.---P. 107.

Sir William Forbes of Pitsligo, Baronet; unequalled, per-

---

Note 2 V.

Close to the hut, no more his own,
Close to the aid he sought in vain,
The worm may find the stinjed’id swain.---P. 106.

I cannot help here mentioning that, on the night in which these lines were written, suggested, as they were, by a sudden full of snow, beginning after sunset, an unfortunate man perished exactly in the manner here described, and his body was next morning found close to his own house. The accident happened within five miles of the farm of Ashstiel.

---

est; ac, ut fas erat inter inimicos, flagrante bello, breviissima inter-rogationis modi interpassit, alter utroque invicem incitato cursum in visitis animis petiere. Noter, primo occurrer, eque praecocerrimo hostis insular furtive, in terram eversum et captat iuvenum, sanguinem, mortuo similis, evanuit. Quem ut se agere habenteri conteri allato est alter, politissimque modo auxilio non abnegat, monitisque obterpentem ab omni rerum sacrarum cogitatione abstinent, nec Deo, Delpharae Virginii, Sancto utto, proxim evis curat vel inter seco concepser, se brevem suam validissime restitueram esse. Prae angore oblati condicio accipiet, ae veterator ille nescio quid eloquent urmururis insanus, præhansa manu, dicta citius in pedes suum ut ante subverterat. Noter autem, maxima præ rei inaudlum notatam formulind percutens, Mi Jesu! exclamant, vel quid simile; ae subito irascintur nec hostem nec silum atum compellit, equei suum gravissimo nuper casu afflictum, per summam pacem in rivo fluvii pascentem. Ad castra utque ministratus revertens, iudici dabiis, rem primo occultat, dein, confecto bello, Consuefosi au tum asserunt. Delusoria procul dubio res tota, ac mala veterisacta illius aperit praes, qua hominem Christianam ad exitum totae auxilio pelliccerunt. Nomen atqueque illius (nobilis alias ac clari) recteundum duco, cum haud dubium sit quis Diabolis, Deo permetente, formam quem libenter, tuin angelo tecta, socero occult Dei tene, possit assumer." The Ms. chronicle, from which Mr. Crablocke took this curious extract, cannot now be found in the Chapter Library of Durham, or, at least, has hitherto escaped the researches of my friendly correspondent.

Lindesay is made to allude to this adventure of Ralph Bulmer, as a well-known story, in the 4th canto, stanza xxili. p. 113.

The northern champions of old were accustomed peculiarly to search for, and delight in, encounters with such military spectres. See a whole chapter on the subject in Belothi-nus, De Caussisi contempta Mortis a Danis, p. 253.

---

1 I beg leave to quote a single instance from a very interesting passage. Sir David, recouning his attention to King James V. in his infancy, is made, by the learned editor’s punctuation, to say,—

"The first sibillus, that thou didst mute,
Was pa, da, lyn, upon the lute;
Then played I twenty springis perqueir,
Quishlik was great pleaser for to hear."

Vol. i. p. 7. 257.

Mr. Chalmers does not inform us, by note or glossary, what is meant by the King “muting pa, da, lyn, upon the lute;” but any old woman in Scotland will bear witness that pa, da, lyn, are the first efforts of a child to say, "Where’s David Lindefiancée from James IV, to Henry VIII. It was often an office imposed on the Lion King-at-arms, to receive foreign ambassadors; and Lindsay himself did this honor to Sir Ralph Sadler, in 1539-40. Indeed, the oath of the Lion, in its first article, bears reference to his frequent employment upon royal messages and embassies.

The office of heralds, in feudal times, being held of the utmost importance, the inauguration of the Kings-at-arms, who presided over their colleges, was proportionally solemn. In fact, it was the ministration of a royal coronation, except that the unction was made with wine instead of oil. In Scotland, a namesake and kinsman of Sir David Lindsay, inaugurated in 1592, “was crowned by King James with the ancient crown of Scotland, which was used before the Scottish kings assumed a close crown;” and, on occasion of the same solemnity, dined at the King’s table, wearing the crown. It is probable that the coronation of his predecessor was not less solemn. So sacred was the herald’s office that, in 1515, Lord Drummond was by Parliament declared guilty of treason, and his lands forfeited, because he had struck with his fist the Lion King-at-arms, when he reproved him for his follies. 1 Nor was he restored but at the Lion’s earnest solicitation.

Note 2 Z.

Crichton Castle.—p. 110.

A large ruinous castle on the banks of the Tyne, about ten miles from Edinburgh. As indicated in the text, it was built at different times, and with a very differing regard to splendor and accommodation. The oldest part of the building is a narrow keep, or tower, such as formed the mansion of a lesser Scottish baron; but so many additions have been made to it, that there is now a large court-yard, surrounded by buildings of different ages. The eastern front of the court is raised above a portico, and decorated with entablatures, bearing anchors. All the stones of this front are cut into diamond facets, the angular proportions of which have an imposing appearance. The inside of this part of the building appears to have contained a gallery of great length and uncommon elegance. Access was given to it by a magnificent staircase, now quite destroyed. The soffits are ornamented with twining cording and rosettes; and the whole seems to have been far more splendid than was usual in Scottish castles. The castle belonged originally to the Chancellor, Sir William Crichton, and probably owed to him its first enlargement, as well as its being taken by the Earl of Douglas, who imputed to Crichton’s counsels the death of his predecessor, Earl William, beheaded in Edinburgh Castle, with his brother, in 1440. It is said to have been totally demolished on that occasion; but the present state of the ruins shows the contrary. In 1483, it was garrisoned by Lord Crichton, then its proprietor, against King James III., whose displeasure he had incurred by seducing his sister Margaret, in revenge, it is said, for the Monarch having dishonored his bed. From the Crichton family the castle passed to that of the Hepburns, Earls Bothwell; and when the forfeitures of Stewart, the last Earl Bothwell, were divided, the barony and castle of Crichton fell to the share of the Earl of Buteleuch. They were afterwards the property of the Pringles of Clifton, and are now that of Sir John Callander, Baronet. It was to be wished the proprietor would take a little pains to preserve these splendid remains of antiquity, which are at present used as a fold for sheep, and wintering cattle; although, perhaps, there are very few ruins in Scotland which display so well the style and beauty of ancient castle-architecture. The castle of Crichton has a dungeon vault, called the Mussey More. The epithet, which is not uncommonly applied to the prisons of other old castles in Scotland, is of Saracenic origin. It occurs twice in the “Epistole Itinerariorum” of Tobillini,—“Cavus subterraneus, et musa More.” 2 And again, “Cavator owes Capiteli sub noctem in crypto, superando, que Turres Altaezeroni vocat Mazmorras.” 3 p. 243. The same word applies to the dungeons of the ancient Moorish castles in Spain, and serves to show from what nation the Gothic style of castle-building was originally derived. 4

Note 3 A.

Earl Adam Hepburn.—p. 110.

He was the second Earl of Bothwell, and fell in the field of Flodden, where, according to an ancient English poet, he distinguished himself by a furious attempt to retrieve the day:

Then on the Scottish part, right proud,
The Earl of Bothwell then out brast,
And stepping forth, with stomach good,
Into the enemies’ thronge he thrust;
And Bothwell! Bothwell! cried bold,
To cause his soldiars to ensue,
But there he caught a welcome cold,
The Englishmen straight down him threw.
Thus Haborn through his hungry heart
His fatal fife in combatt found,” &c.

Flodden Field, a Poem; edited by H. Weber. Edin. 1808.

Adam was grandfather to James, Earl of Bothwell, too well known in the history of Queen Mary.

1 The record expresses, or rather is said to have expressed, the cause of forfeiture to be,—“Es quod Lecnam, armorum Regem pagno violaret dum eum de ineptis suis admonerit.” See Nisbet’s Heraldry, Part iv. chap. xvi.; and Leseur’s Historia ad Annam 1515.

2 [In Scotland, formerly, as still in some parts of Greece, the great chieftains required, as an acknowledgment of their authority, that those who passed through their lands should repair to their castle, to explain the purpose of their journey, and receive the hospitality suited to their rank. To neglect this was held discourtesy in the great, and insolence in the inferior traveller; and so strictly was the etiquette insisted on by some feudal lords, that the Lord Oliphant is said to have planted guns at his castle of Newtyle in Angus, so as to command the high road, and compel all restive passengers to do this act of homage.

It chanced when such ideas were predominant, that the Lord of Crichton Castle received intelligence that a Southern chieflain of high rank, some say Scott of Buccleuch, was to pass his dwelling on his return from court. The Lord of Crichton made great preparation to banquet his expected guest, who nevertheless rode past the castle without paying the expected visit. In his first burst of indignation, the Baron pursued the disconsolate traveller with a body of horse, mounted him prisoner, and confined him in the dungeon, while he himself and his vassals feasted upon the good cheer which had been provided. With the morning, however, came reflection, and anxiety for the desperate feud which impended as the necessary consequence of his rough proceeding. It is said that, by way of amende honorable, the Baron, upon the second day, placed his compelled guest in his seat of honor in the hall, while he himself retired into his own dungeon, and thus did at once penance for his rashness, satisfied the honor of the stranger chief, and put a stop to the feud which must otherwise have taken place between them.—Sir Walter Scott’s Miscellaneous Prose Works, vol. vii. pp. 192-3.]—Ed.
NOTE 3 B.

For that a messenger from heaven
In vain to James had counsel given
Against the English war.—P. 111.

This story is told by Pitscottie with characteristic simplicity:—"The King, seeing that France could get no support of him for that time, made a proclamation, full hastily, through all the realm of Scotland, both east and west, south and north, as well in the isles as in the main land, to all manner of men between sixty and sixteen years, that they should be ready, within twenty days, to pass with him, with forty days victual, and to meet at the Burrow-muir of Edinburgh, and there to pass forward where he pleased. His proclamations were hastily obeyed, contrary the Council of Scotland's will; but every man loved his prince so well that they would on no ways disobey him; but every man caused make his proclamation so hastily, conform to the charge of the King's proclamation.

"The King came to Lithgow, where he happened to be for the time at the Council, very sad and dolorous, making his devotion to God, to send him good chance and fortune in his voyage. In this meantime there came a man, clad in a blue gown, in at the kirk door, and banded about him in a roll of linen cloth; a pair of brockings 1 on his feet, to the great of his legs; with all other hose and clothes conform thereto: but he had nothing on his head, but syde 2 red yellow hair behind, and on his haffets, 3 which wan down to his shoulders; but his forehead was bald and bare. He seemed to be a man of two- and-fifty years, with a great pike-staff in his hand, and came first forward among the lords, crying and speiring 4 for the King, saying he desired to speak with him. While, at the last, he came where the King was sitting in the desk at his prayers; but when he saw the King, he made him little reverence or salutation, but leaned down groffling on the desk before him, and said to him in this manner, as after follows: 'Sir King, my mother hath sent me to you, desiring you not to pass, at this time, where thou art purposed; for if thou does, thou wilt not fare well in thy journey, nor none that passeth with thee. Further, she bade thee meel 5 with no woman, nor use their counsel, nor let them touch thy body, nor thou theirs; for, if thou do it, thou wilt be confounded and brought to shame.'

"By this man had spoken thir words unto the King's grace, the evening-song was near done, and the King paused on thir words, studying to give him an answer; but, in the meantime, before the King's eyes, and in the presence of all the lords that were about him for the time, this man vanished away, and could no ways he seen or comprehended, but vanished away as he had been a blink of the sun, or a whirl of the whirlwind, and could no more be seen. I heard say, Sir David Lindsay Lyon-herald, and John Inglis the marshal, who were, at that time, young men, and special servants to the King's grace, were standing presently beside the King, who thought to have laid hands on this man, that they might have spieded further tidings at him: But all for nought; they could not touch him; for he vanished away betwixt them, and was no more seen."

Buchanan, in more elegant though not more impressive language, tells the same story, and quotes the personal information of our Sir David Lindsay: "In eis (l. c. qui propriis astilram) fuit David Lindsaeus, Montanus, homo spectatue fidei et probitatis, nec a literarum studio alienus, et utraque viae tenor longissimae a scattering aberrat; a quo nisi ego hoc uti tradidit, pro certa accipiessem, ut vulgatum varis ramentibus fabulum, omis- surus eram."—Lib. xiii. The King's throne, in St. Catherine's aisle, which he had constructed for himself, with twelve stalls for the Knights Companions of the Order of the Thistle, is still shown as the place where the apparition was seen. I know not by what means St. Andrew got the credit of having been the celebrated monitor of James IV.; for the expression in Lindsay's narrative, "My mother has sent me," could only be used by St. John, the adopted son of the Virgin Mary. The whole story is so well attested that we have only the choice between a miracle or an imposture. Mr. Pinkerton plausibly argues, from the caution against inconstancy, that the queen was privy to the scheme of those who had recourse to this expedient to deter King James from his impolitic war.

NOTE 3 C.

The wild-buck bells.—P. 111.

I am glad of an opportunity to describe the cry of the deer by another word than braying, although the latter has been sanctified by the use of the Scottish metrical translation of the Psalms. Bell seems to be an abbreviation of bellow. This sylvan sound conveyed great delight to our ancestors, chiefly, I suppose, from association. A gentle knight in the reign of Henry VIII., Sir Thomas Worlsey, built Wanleith Lodge, in Wanleith Forest, for the pleasure (as an ancient inscription testifies) of "listening to the hart's bell."

NOTE 3 D.

June saw his father's overthrow.—P. 111.

The rebellion against James III. was signalized by the cruel circumstance of his son's presence in the hostile army. When the King saw his own banner displayed against him, and his son in the faction of his enemies, he lost the little courage he had ever possessed, fled out of the field, fell from his horse as it started at a woman and water-pitcher, and was slain, it is not well understood by whom. James IV., after the battle, passed to Stirling, and hearing the monks of the chapel-royal deploiring the death of his father, their founder, he was seized with deep remorse, which manifested itself in severe penances. See a following Note on stanza ix. of cantus v. The battle of Scone-burn, in which James III. fell, was fought 18th June, 1488.

NOTE 3 E.

—the Borough-moor.—P. 114.

The Borough, or Common Moor of Edinburgh, was of very great extent, reaching from the southern walls of the city to the bottom of Braid Hills. It was anciently a forest; and, in that state, was so great a nuisance that the inhabitants of Edinburgh had permission granted to them of building wooden galleries, projecting over the street, in order to encourage them to consume the timber, which they seem to have done very effectually. When James IV. mustered the array of the kingdom there, in 1513, the Borough-moor was, according to Hawthornden, "a field spacious, and delightful by the shades of many stately and aged oaks." Upon that and similar occasions, the royal standard is traditionally said to have been displayed from the Harc-Stane, a high stone, now built into the wall, on the left hand of the highway leading towards Braid, not far from the head of Brunstfield Links. The Harc-Stane probably derives its name from the British word Har, signifying an army.

1 Buskins. 2 Long. 3 Cheeks. 4 Asking. 5 Middle.
APPENDIX TO MARMION.

Note 3 F.

I do not exactly know the Scottish mode of encampment in 1513, but Patten gives a curious description of that which he saw after the battle of Pinkie, in 1547:—"Here now, to say somewhat of the manner of their camp. As they had no pavilions, or round houses, of any commendable compass, so wear there few other tents with posts, as the usual manner of making is; and of those few also, none of above twenty foot length, but most far under; for the most part all very sumptuously bessed (after their fashion), for the love of France, with fleur-de-lys, some of blue buckram, some of black, and some of some other colours. These white ridges, as I call them, that, as we stood on Faussxyre Bray, did make so great muster toward us, which I did take then to be a number of tentes, when we came, we found it a line drapery, of the earser cambyre in деле, for it was all of canvas sheets, and wear the tenticles, or rather cabynes and couches of their soldiers; the which (much after the common building of their country beside) had they framed of four sticks, about an ell long a piece, whereasof two fastened together at one end aloof, and the two ends beneath stuck in the ground, an ell asunder, standing in fashion like the bowes of a soxes yoke; over two such bowes (one, as it were, at their head, the other at their feet), they stretched a sheet down on both sides, whereby their cabin became roasted like a ridge, but skant shut at both ends, and not very close beneath on the sides, unless their sticks were the shorter, or their wives the more liberal to lend them larger napery; howbeit, when they had lined them, and stuff'd them so thick with straw, with the weather as it was not very cold, when they wear ones couched, they were so warm as they had been wrapt in horses dung:—Patten’s Account of Somerset’s Expedition."—P. 114.

Note 3 G.

The well-known arms of Scotland. If you will believe Boethius and Buchanan, the double tressure round the shield, mentioned, counter fleur-de-lysed or ligned and armed azure, was first assumed by Echais, King of Scotland, contemporary of Charlemagne, and founder of the celebrated League with France; but later antiquaries make poor Eochy, or Achy, little better than a sort of King of Brutford, whom old Grig (who has also swelled into Gregorius Magnus) associated with himself in the important duty of governing some part of the north-eastern coast of Scotland.—P. 114.

Note 3 H.

The Old Town of Edinburgh was secured on the north side by a lake, now drained, and on the south by a wall, which there was some attempt to make defensible even so late as 1745. The gates, and the greater part of the wall, have been pulled down, in the course of the late extensive and beautiful enlargement of the city. My ingenious and valued friend, Mr. Thomas Campbell, proposed to celebrate Edinburgh under the epithet here borrowed. But the "Queen of the North" has not been so fortunate as to receive from so eminent a pen the proposed distinction.—P. 116.

Note 3 I.

Since first, when conquering York arose, To Henry meek she gave repose.—P. 117.

Henry VI., with his Queen, his heirs, and the chiefs of his family, fled to Scotland after the fatal battle of Towton. In this note a doubt was formerly expressed whether Henry VI. came to Edinburgh, though his Queen certainly did; Mr. Pinkerton inclining to believe that he remained at Kirkcudbright. But my noble friend, Lord Napier, has pointed out to me a grant by Henry, of an annuity of forty marks to his Lordship’s ancestor, John Napier, subscribed by the King himself, at Edinburgh, the 28th day of August, in the thirty-ninth year of his reign, which corresponds to the year of God 1461. This grant, Douglas, with his usual neglect of accuracy, dates in 1568. But this error being corrected from the copy in Macfarlane’s MSS, p. 119-20, removes all skepticism on the subject of Henry VI. being really at Edinburgh. John Napier was son and heir of Sir Alexander Napier, and about this time was Provost of Edinburgh. The hospitable reception of the distressed monarch and his family called forth on Scotland the encomium of Molinet, a contemporary poet. The English people, he says,—

"Un nouveau roy croyent, Par despiteux croyant, Le vieil en deboutard, Des son legitime heur, Qui faisant alta prencontre, D’Escosse le gerard, De tons siecle le meneur, Et le plus tolentand."—Recollection des Aventures.

Note 3 K.

The romantic aroin, Whose Anglo-Norman touns whilere Could win the royal Henry’s art.—P. 117.

Mr. Ellis, in his valuable Introduction to the “Specimens of Romance,” has proved, by the concurring testimony of La Ravailiere, Tressan, but especially the Abbé de la Rue, that the courts of our Anglo-Norman Kings, rather than those of the French monarch, produced the birth of Romance literature. Marie, soon after mentioned, compiled from Armoricans originals, and translated into Norman-French, or romance language, the twelve curious Lays, of which Mr. Ellis has given us a précis in the Appendix to his Introduction. The story of Blondel, the famous and faithful minstrel of Richard I., needs no commentary.

Note 3 L.

The cloth-yard arrows.—P. 118.

This is no poetical exaggeration. In some of the counties of England, distinguished for archery, shafts of this extraordinary length were actually used. Thus, at the battle of Blackheath, between the troops of Henry VII. and the Cornish insurgents, in 1496, the bridge of Dartford was defended by a picked band of archers from the rebel army, “whose arrows,” says Holinshed, “were in length a full cloth yard.” The Scottish, according to Achaun, had a proverb, that every English archer carried under his belt twenty-four Scots, in allusion to his bundle of uncarring shafts.
A banquet rich, and costly wines.—P. 119.

In all transactions of great or petty importance, and among whosoever taking place, it would seem that a present of wine was a uniform and indispensable preliminary. It was not to Sir John Falstaff alone that such an introductory face was necessary, however well judged and acceptable on the part of Mr. Brook; for Sir Ralph Sadler, while on an embassy to Scotland in 1539-40, mentions, with complacency, "the same night came Rothesay (the herald so called) to me again, and brought me wine from the King, both white and red."—Clifford's Edition, p. 39.

Few readers need be reminded of this belt, to the weight of which James added certain ounces every year that he lived. Piscotte founds his belief that James was not slain in the battle of Flodden, because the English never had this token of the iron belt to show to any Scottishman. The person and character of James are delineated according to our best historians. His romantic disposition, which led him highly to relish gayety, approaching to license, was, at the same time, tinged with enthusiastic devotion. These propensities sometimes formed a strange contrast. He was wont, during his fits of devotion, to assume the dress, and conform to the rules, of the order of Franciscans; and when he had thus done penance for some time in Stirling, to plunge again into the tide of pleasure. Probably, too, with no unusual inconsistency, he sometimes laughed at the superstitious observances to which he at other times subjected himself. There is a very singular poem by Dunbar, seemingly addressed to James IV. on one of these occasions of monastic seclusion. It is a most daring and profane parody on the services of the Church of Rome, entitled,—

"Dunbar's Dirge to the King,
Eying our long in Strieltig.
We that are here, in heaven's glory,
To you that are in Purgatory,
Commend us on our hearty wise;
I mean we folks in Paradise,
In Edinbrough, with all merkines,
To you in Strieltig, with distress,
Where neither pleasure nor delight is,
For pity this epistle write,"

See the whole in Silbald's Collection, vol. i. p. 234.

It has been already noticed [see note to stanza xiii. of canto i.] that King James's acquaintance with Lady Heron of Ford did not commence until he marched into England. Our historians impute to the King's infatuated passion the delays which led to the fatal defeat of Flodden. The author of "The Genealogy of the Heron Family" endeavors, with laudable anxiety, to clear the Lady Ford from this scandal: that she came and went, however, between the armies of James and Surrey, is certain. See Pinkerton's History, and the authorities he refers to, vol. ii. p. 99. Heron of Ford had been, in 1511, in some sort accessory to the slaughter of Sir Robert Kerr of Cessford, Warden of the Middle Marches. It was committed by his brother the bastard, Lilburn, and Starkeld, three Borderers. Lilburn and Heron of Ford were delivered up by Henry to James, and were imprisoned in the fortress of Fastcastle, where the former died. Part of the pretence of Lady Ford's negotiations with James was the liberty of her husband.

Note 3 S.

— the fair Queen of France
Sent him a turquois ring and glove,
And charged him, as her knight and love,
For her to break a lance.—P. 120.

"Also the Queen of France wrote a love-letter to the King of Scotland, calling him her love, showing him that she had suffered much rebuke in France for the defending of his honor. She believed surely that he would recompense her again with some of his kingly support in her necessity; that is to say, that he would raise her an army, and come three feet of ground on English ground, for her sake. To that effect she sent him a ring off her finger, with fourteen thousand French crowns to pay his expenses."—Pitscottie, p. 110. A turquois ring; probably this fatal gift is, with James's sword and dagger, preserved in the College of Herald, London.

Note 3 T.

Archibald Bell-the-Cat.—P. 122.

Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, a man remarkable for strength of body and mind, acquired the popular name of Bell-the-Cat upon the following remarkable occasion.—James the Third, of whom Pitscottie complains that he delighted more in musick, and "policies of building," than in hunting, hawking, and other noble exercises, was so ill advised as to make favorites of his architects and musicians, whom the same historian irreverently terms masons and fiddlers. His nobility, who did not sympathize in the King's respect for the fine arts, were extremely incensed at the honors conferred on those persons, particularly on Cochran, a mason, who had been created Earl of Mar; and, seizing the opportunity, when, in 1482, the King had convoked the whole array of the country to march against the English, they held a midnight council in the church of Lander, for the purpose of forcibly removing these minions from the King's person. When all had agreed on the propriety of this measure, Lord Gray told the assembly the apologue of the Mouse, who had formed a resolution that it would be highly advantageous to their community to tie a bell round the cat's neck, that they might hear her approach at a distance; but which public measure unfortunately miscarried, from no mouse being willing to undertake the task of fastening the bell. "I understand the moral," said Angus, "and that what we propose may not lack execution, I will bell the cat." The rest of the strange scene is thus told by Pitscottie:—

"By this was advised and spoken by thir lords foresaid, Cochran, the Earl of Mar, came from the King to the council (which council was held in the kirk of Lander for the time), who was well accompanied with a band of men of war, to the number of three hundred light axes, all clad in white livery, and black bands thercon, that they might be known for Cochran the Earl of Mar's men. Himself was clad in a riding-ple of black velvet, with a great chain of gold about his neck, to the value of five hundred crowns, and four blowing horns, with both the ends of gold and silk, set with a precious stone, called a berry, hanging in the midst. This Cochran had his heumont borne before him, overgilt with gold, and so were all the rest of his horse, and all his pallions were of fine canvas of silk, and the cords thereof fine twined silk, and the chains upon his pallions were double overgilt with gold.

"This Cochran was so proud in his conceit that he counted no lords to be marrows to him, therefore he rushed rudely at the kirk-door. The council inquired who it was that perturbed them at that time, Sir Robert Douglas, Laird of Lochleven, was keeper of the kirk-door at that time, who inquired who that was that knocked so rudely? and Cochran answered, 'This is I, the Earl of Mar.' The which news pleased well the lords, because they were ready boun to cause take him, as is before rehearsed. Then the Earl of Angus passed hastily to the door, and with him Sir Robert Douglas of Lochleven, there to receive in the Earl of Mar, and so many of his complices with him, as they thought good. And the Earl of Angus met with the Earl of Mar, as he came in at the door, and pulled the golden chain from his craig, and said to him, a tow to set him better. Sir Robert Douglas syne pulled the blowing horn from him in like manner, and said, 'He had been the hunter of mischief over long.' This Cochran asked, 'My lords, is it mows, or earnest?' They answered, and said, 'It is good earnest, and so thou shalt find; for thou and thy complices have abused our prince this long time; of whom thou shalt have no more credence, but shalt have thy reward according to thy good service, as thou hast deserved in times bypast; right so the rest of thy followers.'

"Notwithstanding, the lords held them quiet till they caused certain armed men to pass into the King's paller, and two or three wise men to pass with them, and give the King fair pleasant words, till they laid hands on all the King's servants, and took them and hanged them before his eyes over the bridge of Lawder. Incontinent they brought forth Cochran, and his hands bound with a tow, who desired them to take one of his own paller tows and bind his hands, for he thought shame to have his hands bound with such tow of hemp, like a thief. The lords answered, he was a traitor, he deserved no better; and, for despight, they took a hair thenter, and hanged him over the bridge of Lawder, above the rest of his complices."—Pitscottie, p. 78, folio edit.

Note 3 U.

Against the war had Angus stood,
And cheatied his royal lord.—P. 122.

Angus was an old man when the war against England was resolved upon. He earnestly spoke against that measure from its commencement; and, on the eve of the battle of Flodden, remonstrated so freely upon the impolicy of fighting that the King said to him, with scorn and indignation, "if he was afraid, he might go home." The Earl burst into tears at this insupportable insult, and retired accordingly, leaving his sons George, Master of Angus, and Sir William of Glenbervie, to command his followers. They were both slain in the battle, with two hundred gentlemen of the name of Douglas. The aged Earl, broken-hearted at the calamities of his house and his country, retired into a religious house, where he died about a year after the field of Flodden.

1 Rope.
2 Jest.
3 Halter.
NOTE 3 V.

Tantallon held.—P. 122.

The ruins of Tantallon Castle occupy a high rock projecting into the German Ocean, about two miles east of North Berwick. The building is not seen till a close approach, as there is rising ground betwixt it and the land. The circuit is of large extent, fenced upon three sides by the precipice which overhangs the sea, and on the fourth by a double ditch and very strong outworks. Tantallon was a principal castle of the Douglas family, and when the Earl of Angus was banished, in 1327, it continued to hold out against James V. The King went in person against it, and for its reduction, borrowed from the Castle of Dunbar, then belonging to the Duke of Albany, two great cannon, whose names, as Pitcovic informns us with laudable minuteness, were "Thrawn-mouth'd Meg and her Marrow;" also, "two great hot-cards, and two moyan, two double falcons, and four quarter falcons;"—for the safe guarding and re-delivery of which three lords were laid in pawn at Dunbar. Yet, notwithstanding all this apparatus, James was forced to raise the siege, and only afterwards obtained possession of Tantallon by treaty with the governor, Simon Panango. When the Earl of Angus returned from banishment, upon the death of James, he again obtained possession of Tantallon, and it actually afforded refuge to an English ambassador, under circumstances similar to those described in the text. This was no other than the celebrated Sir Ralph Sadler, who resided there for some time under Angus's protection, after the failure of his negotiation for matching the infant Mary with Edward VI. He says that though this place was poorly furnished, it was of such strength as might warrant him against the malice of his enemies, and that he now thought himself out of danger.1

There is a military tradition that the old Scottish March was meant to express the words,

Ding down Tantallon,

Mak a brig to the Bass.

Tantallon was at length "dung down" and ruined by the Corenthers; its lord, the Marquis of Douglas, being a favorer of the royal cause. The castle and barony were sold in the beginning of the eighteenth century to President Dalrymple of North Berwick, by the then Marquis of Douglas.

NOTE 3 W.

their motto on his blade.—P. 122.

A very ancient sword, in possession of Lord Douglas, bears, among a great deal of flourishing, two hands pointing to a heart, which is placed betwixt them, and the date 1329, being the year in which Bruce charged the Good Lord Douglas to carry his heart to the Holy Land. The following lines (the first couplet of which is quoted by Goderich as a popular saying in his time) are inscribed around the emblem:

"So mony guil as of ye Douglass beinge, Of ane surnamme was ne'er in Scotland seene, I will ye charge, efter yat I depart, To holy grawe, and their bairn my hart; Let it remane ever botie tym and hour, To ye last day I sie my Saviour."

1 The very curious State Papers of this able negotiator were, in 1819, published by Mr. Clifford, with some notes by the Author of Marmion.

I do protest in tym of al my ringe, Ye lyk subject had never ouy kening."

This curious and valuable relic was nearly lost during the civil war of 1745-6, being carried away from Douglas Castle by some of those in arms for Prince Charles. But great interest having been made by the Duke of Douglas among the chief partisans of the Stuart, it was at length restored. It resembles a Highland claymore, of the usual size, is of an excellent temper, and admirably poised.

NOTE 3 X.

Martin Scart.—P. 124.

A German general, who commanded the auxiliaries sent by the Duchess of Burgundy with Launbert Simmnel. He was defeated and killed at Stockfeld. The name of this German general is preserved by that of the field of battle, which is called, after him, Scart-moor. There were songs about him long current in England.—See Dissertation prefixed to Ritson's Ancient Songs, 1792, p. xxi.

NOTE 3 Y.

Perchance some form was unobserved; Perchance in prayer, or faith, he sorrowed.—P. 124.

It was early necessary for those who felt themselves obliged to believe in the divine judgment being enunciated in the trial by duell, to find salvos for the strange and obviously precarious chances of the combat. Various curious evasive shifts, used by those who took up an unrighteous quarrel, were supposed sufficient to convert it into a just one. Thus, in the romance of "Amys and Amelion," the one brother-in-arms, fighting for the other, disguised in his armor, swears that he did not commit the crime of which the Steward, his antagonist, truly, though maliciously, accused him whom he represented. Brantome tells the story of an Italian who entered the lists upon an unjust quarrel, but, to make his cause good, fled from his enemy at the first onset. "Turn, coward!" exclaimed his antagonist. "Thou liest," said the Italian, "coward am I none; and in this quarrel will I fight to the death, but my first cause of combat was unjust, and I abandon it." "Je vous laisse à penser," adds Brantome, "s'il n'y a pas de lâche là." Elsewhere he says, very sensibly, upon the confidence which these who had a righteous cause entertained of victory: "Un autre azav y avoit-il, que ceux qui avoit un juste sujet de querelle, et qu'on en fesoit jurer avant entrer au coq, pensanto estre ausi dux, victoires, voire en assurant-bon du tout, nemaus que leurs confesseurs, parrainz et confidents leurs en respondent tout-b-flot, comme si Dieu leur en eust donné une patente; et ne regardant point à d'autres fautes passées, et que Dieu en pard de le position à ce coq là pour plus grande, despitére, et exemplaire."—Discours sur les Duels.

NOTE 3 Z.

The Cross.—P. 125.

The Cross of Edinburg was an ancient and curious structure. The lower part was an octagonal tower, sixteen feet in diameter, and about fifteen feet high. At each angle there was a pillar, and between them an arch of the Grecian shape. Above these was a projecting battlement, with a turret at whole in the mercy of God, and Christ Jesus his son. Verily, the author of this, that caused me write the manner of this summons, was a landed gentleman, who was at that time twenty years of age, and was in the town the time of the said summons; and thereafter, when the field was stricken, he swore to me, there was no man that escaped that was called in this summons, but that one man alone which made his protestation, and appealed from the said summons; but all the law were perished in the field with the king."
APPENDIX TO MARMION.

NOTE 4 A.

This awful summons came.—P. 125.

This supernatural citation is mentioned by all our Scottish historians. It was, probably, like the apparition at Linlithgow, an attempt, by those averse to the war, to impose upon the superstitions temper of James IV. The following account from Pitscottie is characteristically minute, and furnishes, besides, some curious particulars of the equipment of the army of James IV. I need only add to it that Plotcock, or Phuto, is no other than Phuto. The Christians of the middle ages by no means believed in the existence of the heathen deities; they only considered them as devils; and Plotcock, so far from implying anything fabulous, was a synonym of the grand enemy of mankind. "Yet all thine heralds, and unseath tidings, nor no good counsel, might stop the King, at this present, from his vain purpose, and wicked enterprise, but hasted him fast to Edinburgh, and there to make his provision and furnishing, in having forth his army against the day appointed, that they should meet in the Burrow-muir of Edinburgh: That is to say, seven cannons that he had forth of the Castle of Edinburgh, which were called the Seven Sisters, casten by Robert Borthwick, the master-gunner, with other small artillery, bullet, powder, and all manner of order, as the master-gunner could devise."

"In this meantime, when they were taking forth their artillery, and the King being in the Abbey for the time, there was a cry heard at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, at the hour of midnight, proclaiming as it had been a summons, which was named and called by the proclaimer thereof, The Summons of Plotcock; which desired all men to comepar, both Earl, and Lord, and Baron, and all honest gentlemen within the town (every man specified by his own name), to comepar, within the space of forty days, before his master, where it should happen him to appoint, and be for the time, under the pain of disobedience. But whether this summons was proclaimed by vain persons, night-walkers, or drunken men, for their pastime, or if it was a spirit, I cannot tell truly; but it was shewn to me that an indweller of the town, Mr. Richard Lawson, being evil-disposed, gauging in his gallery-stair foremoste the Cross, hearing this voice proclaiming this summons, thought marve what it should be, cried on his servant to bring him his purse; and when he had brought it him, he took out a crown, and cast over the stair, saying, 'I appeal from that summons, judgment, and sentence thereof, and takes me all

1 See, on this curious subject, the Essay on Fairies, in the "Border Minstrelsy," vol. ii. under the fourth head; also, Jackson on Unbelief, p. 133. Chaucer calls Pluto the "King of Faerie?" and Dunbar names him, "Pluto, that elich incubus." If he was not actually the devil, he must be con

NOTE 4 B.

— one of his own ancestry

Drove the monks forth of Coventry.—P. 127.

This relates to the catastrophe of a real Robert de Marmion, in the reign of King Stephen, whom William of Newbury describes with some attributes of his fictitious hero: "Homo bellucusus, feroxia, et estocia, fere nullo suo tempore tipus." This Baron, having expelled the monks from the church of Coventry, was not long of experiencing the divine judgment, as the same monks, no doubt, termed his disaster. Having waged a feudal war with the Earl of Chester, Marmion's horse fell, as he charged in the van of his troop, against a bally of the Earl's followers: the rider's thigh being broken by the fall, his head was cut off by a common foot-soldier, ere he could receive any succor. The whole story is told by William of Newbury.

NOTE 4 C.

— the savage Dune

At Id more deep the wood did druin.—P. 128.

The irl of the heathen Dunes (a word still applied to Christmas in Scotland) was solemnized with great festivity. The humor of the Dunes at table displayed itself in pelting each other with bones; and Torfneus tells a long and curious story, in the History of Hrolfe Kraka, of one Hottus, an inmate of the Court of Denmark, who was so generally assailed with these missiles, that he constructed, out of the bones with which he was overwhelmed, a very respectable intrenchment, against those who continued the raillery. The dances of the northern warriors round the great fires of pine-trees are commemorated by Olaves Magnus, who says they danced with such fury, holding each other by the hands, that, if the grasp of any failed, he was pitched into the fire with the velocity of a sling. The sufferer, on such occasions, was instantly plucked out, and obliged to quaff off a certain measure of ale, as a penalty for "spilling the king's fire."

NOTE 4 D.

On Christmas eve.—P. 128.

In Roman Catholic countries, mass is never said at night, except on Christmas eve. Each of the frolies with which that holiday used to be celebrated might admit of a long and curious note; but I shall content myself with the following considered as the "prince of the power of the air." The most remarkable instance of these surviving classical superstitions is that of the Germans concerning the Hill of Venus, into which she attempts to entice all gallant knights, and detains them there in a sort of Fools' Paradise.
description of Christmas and his attributes, as personified in one of Ben Jonson’s Masques for the Court:—

"Enter Christmas, with two or three of the Guard. He is attired in round hose, long stockings, a close doublet, a high-crowned hat, with a brooch, a long thin beard, a truncheon, little ruffs, white shoes, his scars and garters tied cross, and his drum beaten before him.—The names of his children, with their attires: Miss-Role, in a velvet cap, with a sprig, a short cloak, great yellow ruff, like a reveller; his torch-bearer bearing a rope, a cheese, and a basket;—Caroll, a long tawny coat, with a red cap, and a flute at his girdle; his torch-bearer carrying a song-book open:—Minc’d-pie, like a fine cook’s wife, drest neat, her man carrying a pie, dish, and spoons;—Gambold, like a tumbler, with a hoop and bellies; his torch-bearer armed with cane-staff and blinding cloth;—Post and Pot, with a pair-royal of axes in his hat, his garment all done over with pairs and purs; his squire carrying a box, cards, and counters;—New-year’s Gift, in a blue coat, serving-man like, with an orange, and a sprig of rosemary gilt on his head, his hat full of brooches, with a collar of gingerbread; his torch-bearer carrying a march-pain, with a bottle of wine on either arm;—Mumming, in a masquing pied suit, with a visor; his torch-bearer carrying the box, and ringing it;—Wasos, like a neat sempster and songster; her page bearing a brown bowl, drest with ribbands, and rosemary, before her;—Offering, in a short gown, with a porter’s staff in his hand; a wytth borne before him, and a bason, by his torch-bearer;—Baby Cheek, drest like a boy, in a fine long coat, biggin, bib, muckender, and a little dagger; his usher bearing a great cake, with a bean and a pease."

Note 4 E.

Who lists may in their mumming see
Traces of ancient mystery.—P. 129.

It seems certain that the Mummers of England, who (in Northumberland at least) used to go about in disguise to the neighboring houses, bearing the then useless ploughshare, and the Gutsiards of Scotland, not yet in total disperse, present, in some indistinct degree, a shadow of the old mysteries, which were the origin of the English drama. In Scotland (see above text), we were wont, during my boyhood, to take the characters of the apostles, at least of Peter, Paul, and Judas Iscariot; the first had the keys, the second carried a sword, and the last the bag, in which the dale of our neighbors’ plum-cake was deposited. One played a champion, and recited some traditional rhymes; another was

. . . . "Alexander, King of Macedon, Who conquer’d all the world but Scotland alone: When he came to Scotland his courage grew cold, To see a little nation courageous and bold."

These, and many such verses, were repeated, but by rote, and unconnectedly. There was also, occasionally, I believe, a Saint George. In all, there was a confused resemblance of the ancient mysteries, in which the characters of Scripture, the Nine Worthies, and other popular personages, were usually exhibited. It were much to be wished that the Chester Mysteries were published from the MS. in the Museum, with the annotations which a diligent investigator of popular antiquities might still supply. The late acute and valuable antiquary, Mr. Ritson, showed me several memoranda towards such a task, which are probably now dispersed or lost. See, however, his Remarks on Shakespeare, 1873, p. 58.

Since the first edition of Marmion appeared, this subject has received much elucidation from the learned and extensive labors of Mr. Donne; and the Chester Mysteries [edited by J. H. Markland, Esq.] have been printed in a style of great elegance and accuracy (in 1818) by Bensley & Sons, London, for the Roxburghe Club. 1830.

Note 4 F.

Where my great-grand sire came of old,
With amber beard, and flaxen hair.—P. 129.

Mr. Scott of Harden; my kind and affectionate friend, and distant relation, has the original of a poetical invitation, addressed from his grandfather to my relative, from which a few lines in the text are imitated. They are dated, as the epistle in the text, from Mertoun House, the seat of the Harden family.

"With amber beard, and flaxen hair,
And reverend apostolic air,
Free of anxiety and care,
Come hither, Christmas-day, and dine;
We’ll mix sobriety with wine,
And easy mirth with thoughts divine.
We Christians think it holiday,
On it no sin to feast or play;
Others, in spite, may fast and pray.
No superstition in the use
Our ancestors made of a goose;
Why may not we, as well as they,
Be innocently blithe that day,
On goose or pie, on wine or ale,
And scorn enthusiastic zeal?—
Pray come, and welcome, or plague roth
Your friend and landlord, Walter Scott."

"Mr. Walter Scott, Lassuden."

The venerable old gentleman, to whom the lines are addressed, was the younger brother of William Scott of Raeburn. Being the cadet of a cadet of the Harden family, he had very little to lose; yet he contrived to lose the small property he had, by engaging in the civil wars and intrigues of the house of Stuart. His veneration for the exiled family was so great that he swore he would not shave his beard till they were restored: a mark of attachment, which, I suppose, had been common during Cromwell’s usurpation; for, in Cowley’s “Cutter of Coleman Street,” one drunken cavalier upbraids another that, when he was not able to afford to pay a barber, he affected to “wear a beard for the King.” I sincerely hope this was not absolutely the original reason of my ancestor’s beard; which, as appears from a portrait in the possession of Sir Henry Hay MacDougal, Bart., and another painted for the famous Dr. Pitcairn, was a beard of a most dignified and venerable appearance.

Note 4 G.

—the spirit’s Blasted Tree.—P. 130.

I am permitted to illustrate this passage, by inserting "Owlen or Ellyfit, or The Spirit’s Blasted Tree," a legendary tale, by the Reverend George Warrington:

1 Now Lord Polwarth.
2 The old gentleman was an intimate of this celebrated genius. By the favor of the late Earl of Kellie, descended on the maternal side from Dr. Pitcairn, my father became possessed of the portrait in question.
APPENDIX TO MARMION.

167

"The event on which this tale is founded is preserved by tradition in the family of the Vaughans of Hengwyr; nor is it entirely lost, even among the common people, who still point out this oak to the passenger. The enmity between the two Welsh chieftains, Howel Sele and Owen Glendwr, was extreme, and marked by vile treachery in the one and fercious cruelty in the other.1 The story is somewhat changed and softened, as more favorable to the character of the two chiefs, and as better answering the purpose of poetry, by admitting the passion of pity and a greater degree of sentiment in the description. Some trace of Howel Sele's mansion was to be seen a few years ago, and may perhaps be still visible, in the park of Nannau, now belonging to Sir Robert Vaughan, Baronet, in the wild and romantic tracks of Merionethshire. The abbey mentioned passes under two names, Vener and Cymmer. The former is retained, as more generally used.

THE SPIRIT'S BLASTED TREE.

Cwmbren yr Eflyl.

"Through Nannau's Chase as Howel pass'd,
A chief esteem'd both brave and kind,
Far distant borne, the stag-hounds' cry
Came murmur'd on the hollow wind.

"Starting, he bent an eager ear,—
How should the sounds return again?
His hounds lay wearied from the chase,
And all at home his hunter train.

"Then sudden anger flash'd his eye,
And deep revenge he vow'd to take,
On that bold man who dared to force
His red-deer from the forest brake.

"Unhappy Chief! would nought avail,
No signs impress thy heart with fear,
Thy lady's dark mysterious dream,
Thy warning from the hoary seer?

"Three ravens gave the note of death,
As through mid air they wing'd their way;
Then o'er his head, in rapid flight,
They croak,—they scent their destined prey.

"Ill-omen'd bird! as legends say,
Who hast the wondrous power to know,
While health fills high the throbbing veins,
The fated hour when blood must flow.

"Blinded by rage, alone he pass'd,
Nor sought his ready vassals' aid;
But what his fate lay long unknown,
For many an anxious year delay'd.

"A peasant mark'd his angry eye,
He saw him reach the lake's dark bourne,
He saw him near a Blasted Oak,
But never from that hour return.

"Three days pass'd o'er, no tidings came;—
Where should the Chief his steps delay?
With wild alarm the servants ran,
Yet knew not where to point their way.

"His vassals ranged the mountain's height,
The covert close, the wide-spread plain;
But all in vain their eager search,
They ne'er must see their lord again.

Yet Fancy, in a thousand shapes,
Bore to his home the Chief once more:
Some saw him on high Moel's top,
Some saw him on the winding shore.

"With wonder fraught the tale went round,
Amazement chain'd the hearer's tongue:
Each peasant felt his own sail loss,
Yet fondly o'er the story hung.

"Oft by the moon's pale shadowy light,
His aged nurse and steward gray
Would lean to catch the storied sounds,
Or mark the flitting spirit stray.

"Pale lights on Cader's rocks were seen,
And midnight voices heard to moan;
'Twas even said the Blasted Oak,
Convulsive, heaved a hollow groan:

"And to this day the peasant still,
With cautious fear, avoids the ground:
In each wild branch a spectre sees,
And trembles at each rising sound.

"Ten annual suns had held their course,
In summer's smile, or winter storm;
The lady shed the widow's tear,
As oft she traced his manly form.

"Yet still to hope her heart would cling,
As o'er the mind illusions play,—
Of travel fond, perhaps her lord
To distant lands had steer'd his way.

"Twas now November's cheerless hour,
Which drenching rain and clouds debase;
Dreary bleak Robell's tract appear'd,
And dull and dank each valley's space.

"Loud o'er the weir the hoarse flood fell,
And dash'd the foaming spray on high:
The west wind bent the forest tops,
And angry frown'd the evening sky.

"A stranger pass'd Llanelli'd bourne,
His dark-gray steed with sweat besprent,
Which, wearied with the lengthen'd way,
Could scarcely gain the hill's ascent.

"The portal reach'd,—the iron bell
Loud sounded round the outer wall;
Quick sprang the warden to the gate,
To know what meant the clam'rous call.

"Oh! lead me to your lady soon;—
Say,—it is my sad lot to tell,
To clear the fate of that brave knight,
She long has proved she loved so well.'

"Then, as he cross'd the spacious hall,
The mensials took surprise and fear;
Still o'er his harp old Madred hung,
And touch'd the notes for grief's worn ear.

"The lady sat amidst her train;
A mellow'd sorrow mark'd her look;
Then, asking what his mission meant,
The graceful stranger sigh'd and spoke:—

"Oh could I spread one ray of hope,
One moment raise thy soul from woe,

1 The history of their feud may be found in Pennant's Tour in Wales.
Gladly my tongue would tell its tale,
My words at ease unfetter'd flow!

"Now, lady, give attention due,
The story claims thy full belief;
Even in the worst events of life,
Suspense removed is some-relief.

"Though worn by care, see Madoc here,
Great Glyndwr's friend, thy kindred's foe:
Ah, let his name no anger raise,
For now that mighty Chief lies low.

"Fen from the day when, chain'd by fate,
By wizard's dream, or potent spell,
Lingerin' from sad Salopin's field,
'Reft of his aid the Percy fell;—

"Fen from that day misfortune still,
As if for violated faith,
Pursued him with unwearied step;
Vindictive still for Hotspur's death.

"Vanish'd at length, the Glyndwr fled,
Where winds the Wye her devious flood;
To find a casual shelter there,
In some lone cot, or desert wood.

"Clothed in a shepherd's humble guise,
He gain'd by toil his scanty bread;
He who had Cambria's sceptre borne,
And her brave sons to glory led!

"To penury, extreme, and grief,
The Chieftain fell a lingering prey;
I heard his last few faltering words,
Such as with pain I now convey.

"To Seile's sad widow bear the tale,
Nor let our horrid secret rest;
Give but his corse to sacred earth,
Then may my parting soul be blest.—

"Dim wax'd the eye that fiercely shone,
And faint the tongue that proudly spoke,
And weak that arm, still raised to me,
Which oft had dealt the mortal stroke.

"How could I then his mandate bear?
Or how his last behest obey?
A rebel deem'd, with him I fled;
With him I shunn'd the light of day.

"Proscribed by Henry's hostile rage,
My country lost, despoil'd my land,
Desperate, I fled my native soil,
And fought on Syria's distant strand.

"Oh, had thy long-lamented lord
The holy cross and banner view'd,
Died in the sacred cause! who fell
Sad victim of a private feud!

"Led by the ardor of the chase,
Far distant from his own domain,
From where Garthmaclan spreads her shades,
The Glyndwr sought the opening plain.

"With head aloft and antlers wide,
A red buck roused then cross'd in view:
Stung with the sight, and wild with rage,
Swift from the wood fierce Howell flew.

"With bitter taunt and keen reproach,
He, all impetuous, pour'd his rage;
Reviled the Chief as weak in arm,
And bade him loud the battle wage.

"Glyndwr for once restrain'd his sword,
And, still averse, the light delays;
But soft'n'd words, like oil to fire,
Made auger more intensely blaze.

"They fought; and doubtful long the fray:
The Glyndwr gave the fatal wound!
Still mournful must my tale proceed,
And its last act all dreadful sound.

"How could we hope for wish'd retreat,
His eager vassals ranging wide,
His bloodhounds' keen sagacious scent,
O'er many a trackless mountain trud'd?

"I mark'd a bread and Blasted Oak,
Scorch'd by the lightning's livid glare
Hollow its stem from branch to root,
And all its shrivell'd arms were bare.

"Be this, I cried, his proper grave:—
(That thought in me was deadly sin.)
Aloft we raised the hapless Chief,
And dropp'd his bleeding corpse within.'

"A shriek from all the daunses burst,
That pierc'd the vaulted roofs below;
While horror-struck the Lady stood,
A living form of sculptured woe.

"With stupid stare and vacant gaze,
Full on her face her eyes were cast,
Absorb'd!—she lost her present grief,
And faintly thought of things long past.

"Like wild-fire o'er a mossy heath,
The rumor through the hamlet ran;
The peasants crowd at morning dawn,
To hear the tale—behold the man.

"He led them near the Blasted Oak,
Then, consciens, from the scene withdrew;
The peasants work with trembling haste,
And lay the whiten'd bones to view!—

"Back they recoff'd—the right hand still,
Contracted, grasped a rusty sword.
Which erst in many a battle glean'd,
And proudly deck'd their slaughter'd lord.

"They bore the corse to Vener's shrine,
With holy rites and prayers address'd;
Nine white-robed monks the last dirge sang,
And gave the angry spirit rest."

NOTE 4 II.

The Highlander
Will, on a Friday morne, look pale,
If ask'd to tell a fairy tale."—P. 139.

The Doone Shë, or Mon of Peace, of the Scottish Highlanders, rather resemble the Scandinavian Duergar than the English Fairies. Notwithstanding their name, they are, if not absolutely malevolent, at least peevish, discontented, and apt to do mischief on slight provocation. The belief of their existence is deeply impressed on the Highlanders, who think they are particularly offended at mortals who talk of them, who wear their favorite color, green, or in any respect interfere with their affairs. This is especially to be avoided on Friday, when, whether as dedicated to Venus, with whom, in Germany, this subterraneous people are held nearly connected, or for a more solemn reason, they are more active, and possessed of greater power. Some curious particulars concerning the popular superstitions of the Highlanders may be found in Dr. Graham's Pictoresque Sketches of Perthshire.

---

Note 4 I.

The journal of the friend to whom the fourth canto of the Poem is inscribed furnished me with the following account of a striking superstition:—

"Passed the pretty little village of Franchémont (near Spaw), with the romantic ruins of the old castle of the Counts of that name. The road leads through many delightful vales on a rising ground; at the extremity of one of them stands the ancient castle, now the subject of many superstitious legends. It is firmly believed by the neighboring peasantry that the last Baron of Franchémont deposited, in one of the vaults of the castle, a ponderous chest, containing an immense treasure in gold and silver, which, by some magic spell, was intrusted to the care of the Devil, who is constantly found sitting on the chest in the shape of a huntsman. Any one adventurous enough to touch the chest is instantly seized with the palsy. Upon one occasion, a priest of noted piety was brought to the vault; he used all the arts of exorcism to persuade his infernal majesty to vacate his seat, but in vain; the huntsman remained immovable. At last, moved by the earnestness of the priest, he told him that he would agree to resign the chest if the exorciser would sign his name with blood. But the priest understood his meaning, and refused, as by that act he would have delivered over his soul to the Devil. Yet if any body can discover the mystic words used by the person who deposited the treasure, and pronounce them, the fiend must instantly decamp. I had many stories of a similar nature from a peasant, who had himself seen the Devil in the shape of a great cat."

---

Note 4 K.

The very form of Hilda fair,

_Hovering upon the many air,
And smiling on her votaries' prayer._—P. 132.

"I shall only produce one instance more of the great veneration paid to Lady Hilda, which still prevails even in these our days; and that is, the constant opinion that she rendered, and still renders, herself visible, on some occasions, in the Abbey of St. Mary of Whitby, where she so long resided. At a particular time of the year (viz. in the summer months), at ten or eleven in the forenoon, the sunbeams fall in the inside of the northern part of the choir; and 'tis then that the spectators, who stand on the west side of Whitby churchyard, so just as to see the most northerly part of the abbey past the north end of Whitby church, imagine they perceive, in one of the highest windows there, the resemblance of a woman arrayed in a shroud. Though we are certain this is only a reflection caused by the splendor of the sunbeams, yet fame reports it, and it is constantly believed among the vulgar, to be an appearance of Lady Hilda in her shroud, or rather in a glorified state; before which, I make no doubt, the Papists, even in these our days, offer up their prayers with as much zeal and devotion as before any other image of their most glorified saint."—Charlton's History of Whitby, p. 33.

---

Note 4 L.

*—the huge and sweeping brand
Which scint of yore, in battle fray,*

_His fiendish limbs to shroud away,*

_As wood-knife cops the sapling spray._—P. 134.

The Earl of Angus had strength and personal activity corresponding to his courage. Spens of Kilipinde, a favorite of James IV., having spoken of him lightly, the Earl met him while hawking, and, compelling him to single combat, at one blow cut asunder his thighbone, and killed him on the spot. But ere he could obtain James's pardon for this slaughter, Angus was obliged to yield his castle of Hermitage, in exchange for that of Bothwell, which was some diminution to the family greatness. The sword with which he struck so remarkable a blow was presented by his descendant James, Earl of Morton, afterwards Regent of Scotland, to Lord Lindsay of the Byres, when he defied Bothwell to single combat on Carberry Hill.—See Introduction to the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

---

Note 4 M.

And hopest thou hence unwaisted to go—
_No, by Saint Bride of Bothwell, no!*
_Up draughtide, grooms!—setbat, Warder, ho!*
_Let the portcullis fall._—P. 135.

This ebullition of violence in the potent Earl of Angus is not without its example in the real history of the house of Douglas, whose chiefest possessed the ferocity, with the heroic virtues, of a savage state. The most curious instance occurred in the case of Maclean, Tutor of Bombay, who, having refused to acknowledge the pre-eminence claimed by Douglas over the gentlemen and Barons of Galloway, was seized and imprisoned by the Earl in his castle of the Thrieve, on the borders of Kirkcudbrightshire. Sir Patrick Gray, commander of King James the Second's guard, was nailed to the Tutor of Bombay, and obtained from the King a "sweet letter of supplication," praying the Earl to deliver his prisoner into Gray's hand. When Sir Patrick arrived at the castle, he was received with all the honor due to a favorite servant of the King's household; but while he was at dinner, the Earl, who suspected his errand, caused his prisoner to be led forth and beheaded. After dinner, Sir Patrick presented the King's letter to the Earl, who received it with great affectation of reverence, "and took him by the hand, and led him forth to the green, where the gentleman was lying dead, and showed him the manner, and said, 'Sir Patrick, you are come a little too late; yonder is your sister's son lying, but he wants the head: take his body, and do with it what you will. '"—Sir Patrick answered again, with a sore heart, and said, 'My lord, if ye have taken from him his head, dispose upon the body as ye please; and with that called for his horse, and leaped thereon; and when he was on horseback, he said to the Earl on this manner, 'My lord, if I live you shall be rewarded for your labors that you have used at this time, according to your demerits.'

"At this saying the Earl was highly offended, and cried for horse. Sir Patrick, seeing the Earl's fury, spurred his horse, but he was chased near Edinburgh ere they left him; and had it not been his led horse was so tried and good, he had been taken."—Pitscottie's History, p. 59.

---

Note 4 N.

A letter forged! Saint Jude to speed!
Did ever knight so foul a deed!—P. 135.

Lest the reader should partake of the Earl's astonishment, and consider the crime as inconsistent with the manners of the period, I have to remind him of the numerous forgeries (partly executed by a female assistant) devised by Robert of Artois, to forward his suit against the Countess Matilda; which, being detected, occasioned his flight into England, and proved the remote cause of Edward the Third's memorable wars in France. John Harding, also, was expressly hired by Edward VI. to forge such documents as might appear to establish the claim of feeity asserted over Scotland by the English monarchs.

---

Note 4 O.

—Lennel's convent.—P. 136.

This was a Cistercian house of religion, now almost entirely demolished. Lennel House is now the residence of my venerable friend, Patrick Brydone, Esquire, so well known in the literary world.1 It is situated near Coldstream, almost opposite to Cornhill, and consequently very near to Flodden Field.

---

Note 4 P.

—Twisel Bridge.—P. 135.

On the evening previous to the memorable battle of Flodden, Surrey's head-quarters were at Barmoor Wood, and King James held an inaccessible position on the ridge of Flodden hill, one of the last and lowest eminences detached from the ridge of Cheviot. The Till, a deep and slow river, winds between the armies. On the morning of the 9th September, 1513, Surrey marched in a north-western direction, and crossed the Till, with his van and artillery, at Twisel Bridge, nigh where that river joins the Tweed, his rear-guard column passing about a mile higher, by a ford. This movement had the double effect of placing his army between King James and his supplies from Scotland, and of striking the Scottish monarch with surprise, as he seems to have relied on the depth of the river in his front. But as the passage, both over the bridge and through the ford, was difficult and slow, it seems possible that the English might have been attacked to great advantage while struggling with these natural obstacles. I know not if we are to impute James's forbearance to want of military skill, or to the romantic declaration which Pitscottie puts in his mouth, "that he was determined to have his enemies before him on a plain field," and therefore would suffer no interruption to be given, even by artillery, to their passing the river.

The ancient bridge of Twisel, by which the English crossed the Till, is still standing beneath Twisel Castle, a splendid pile of Gothic architecture, as now rebuilt by Sir Francis Blake, Bart., whose extensive plantations have so much improved the country around. The glen is romantic and delightful, with steep banks on each side, covered with copses, particularly with hawthorn. Beneath a tall rock, near the bridge, is a plentiful fountain, called St. Helen's Well.

---

Note 4 Q.

Hence might they see the full array
Of either host, for deadly fray.—P. 137.

The reader cannot here expect a full account of the battle of Flodden; but, so far as is necessary to understand the romance, I beg to remind him that, when the English army, by their skilful countermarch, were fairly placed between King James and his own country, the Scottish monarch resolved to fight; and, setting fire to his tents, descended from the ridge of Flodden to secure the neighboring eminence of Brankstone, on which that village is built. Thus the two armies met, almost without seeing each other, when, according to the old poem of "Flodden Field,"

"The English line stretch'd east and west,
And southward were their faces set;
The Scottish northward proudly prest,
And manfully their foes they met."

The English army advanced in four divisions. On the right, which first engaged, were the sons of Earl Surrey, namely, Thomas Howard, the Admiral of England, and Sir Edmund, the Knight Marshal of the army. Their divisions were separated from each other; but, at the request of Sir Edmund, his brother's battalion was drawn very near to his own. The centre was commanded by Surrey in person; the left wing by Sir Edward Stanley, with the men of Lancashire and of the palatinate of Chester. Lord Dacre, with a large body of horse, formed a reserve. When the smoke, which the wind had driven between the armies, was somewhat dispersed, they perceived the Scots, who had moved down the hill in a similar order of battle, and in deep silence.2 The Earls of Huntly and of Home commanded their left wing, and charged Sir Edmund Howard with such success as entirely to defeat his part of the English right wing. Sir Edmund's banner was beaten down, and he himself escaped with difficulty to his brother's division. The Admiral, however, stood firm; and Dacre advancing to his support with the reserve of cavalry, probably between the interval of the divisions commanded by the brothers Howard, appears to have kept the victors in effectual check. Home's men, chiefly Borderers, began to pillage the baggage of both armies; and their leader is branded ordre, en la manière que marchent les Allemands sans parler, ne faire aucun bruit."—Gazette of the battle, Pinkerton's History, Appendix, vol. ii. p. 426.

1 First Edition.—Mr. Brydone has been many years dead. 1825.

2 "Les Scotz Ecossois descendirent la montaigne en bonne
APPENDIX TO MARMION.

by the Scottish historians with negligence or treachery. On the other hand, Huntly, on whom they bestow many eulogisms, is said by the English historians to have left the field after the first charge. Meanwhile the Admiral, whose flank these chiefs ought to have attacked, availed himself of their inactivity, and pushed forward against another large division of the Scottish army in his front, headed by the Earls of Crawford and Montrose, both of whom were slain and their forces routed. On the left, the success of the English was yet more decisive; for the Scottish right wing, consisting of undisciplinary Highlanders, commanded by Lennox and Argyle, was unable to sustain the charge of Sir Edward Stanley, and especially the severe execution of the Lancashire archers. The King and Surrey, who commanded the respective centres of their armies, were meanwhile engaged in close and dubious conflict. James, surrounded by the flower of his kingdom, and impatient of the galling discharge of arrows, supported also by his reserve under Bothwell, charged with such fury that the standard of Surrey was in danger. At that critical moment, Stanley, who had routed the left wing of the Scotch, pursued his career of victory, and arrived on the right flank, and in the rear of James's division, which, throwing itself into a circle, disputed the battle till night came on. Surrey then drew back his forces; for the Scottish centre not having been broken, and their left wing being victorious, he yet doubted the event of the field. The Scottish army, however, felt their loss, and abandoned the field of battle in disorder before dawn. They lost, perhaps, from eight to ten thousand men; but that included the very prime of their nobility, gentry, and even clergy. Scarcely a family of eminence but has an ancestor killed at Flodden; and there is no province in Scotland, even at this day, where the battle is mentioned without a sensation of terror and sorrow. The English lost also a great number of men, perhaps within one-third of the vanquished, but they were of inferior note.—See the only distinct detail of the Field of Flodden in Pinkerton's History, book xi.; all former accounts being full of blunders and inconsistency.

The spot from which Clara views the battle must be supposed to have been on a hillock commanding the rear of the English right wing, which was defeated, and in which conflict Marmion is supposed to have fallen.¹

Note 4 R.

— Brian Tunstall, stainless knight.—P. 133.

Sir Brian Tunstall, called, in the romantic language of the time, Tunstall the Undeified, was one of the few Englishmen of rank slain at Flodden. He figures in the ancient English poem, to which I may safely refer my readers; as an edition, with full explanatory notes, has been published by my friend Mr. Henry Weber. Tunstall, perhaps, derived his epithet of undeified from his white armer and banner, the latter bearing a white cock, about to crow, as well as from his unstained loyalty and knightly faith. His place of residence was Thurland Castle.

¹ "In 1810, as Sir Carnaby Haggerstone's workmen were digging at Flodden Field, they came to a pit filled with human bones, and which seemed of great extent; but, alarmed at the sight, they immediately filled up the excavation, and proceeded no farther."

"In 1817, Mr. Gray of Millfield Hill found, near the traces of an ancient encampment, a short distance from Flodden hill, a tumulus, which, on removing, exhibited a very singular sepulchre. In the centre a large urn was found, but in a

Note 4 S.

Rockless of life, he desperate fought, And fell on Flodden plain: And well in death his trait'ry brand, Firm clenched'd within his manly hand, Beseech'd the Monarch slain.—P. 142.

There can be no doubt that King James fell in the battle of Flodden. He was killed, says the curious French Gazette, within a lane's length of the Earl of Surrey; and the same account adds that none of his division were made prisoners, though many were killed; a circumstance that testifies the desperation of their resistance. The Scottish historians record many of the idle reports which passed among the vulgar of their day. Home was accused by the popular voice not only of failing to support the King, but even of having carried him out of the field and murdered him. And this tale was revived in my remembrance by an unauthentic account of a skeleton, wrapped in a bull's hide, and surrounded with an iron chain, said to have been found in the well of Home Castle; for which, on inquiry, I could never find any better authority than the sexton of the parish having said that, if the well were cleaned out, he would not be surprised at such a discovery. Home was the chamberlain of the King, and his prime favorite; he had much to lose (in fact did lose all) in consequence of James's death, and nothing earthly to gain by that event; but the retreat or inactivity of the left wing which he commanded, after defeating Sir Edmund Howard, and even the circumstance of his returning unhurt and loaded with spoil from so fatal a conflict, rendered the propagation of any calumny against him easy and acceptable. Other reports gave a still more romantic turn to the King's fate, and averred that James, weary of greatness after the carnage among his nobles, had gone on a pilgrimage, to merit absolution for the death of his father and the breach of his oath of fidelity to Henry. In particular, it was objected to the English that they could never show the token of the iron belt; which, however, he was likely enough to have laid aside on the day of battle as encumbering his personal exertions. They produce a better evidence, the monarch's sword and dagger, which are still preserved in the Herald's College in London. Stowe has recorded a degrading story of the disgrace with which the remains of the unfortunate monarch were treated in his time. An unheavenly column marks the spot where James fell, still called the King's Stone.

Note 4 T.

The fair cathedral storm'd and took.—P. 142.

This storm of Lichfield cathedral, which had been garrisoned on the part of the King, took place in the Great Civil War. Lord Brook, who, with Sir John Gill, commanded the assailants, was shot with a musket ball through the visor of his helmet. The royalists remarked that he was killed by a shot fired from St. Chad's cathedral, and upon St. Chad's Day, and received his death-wound in the very eye with which, he had said, he hoped to see the ruin of all the cathedrals in England. The magnificent church in question suffered cruelly upon this and other occasions; the principal spire being ruined by the fire of the besiegers.

thousand pieces. It had either been broken to pieces by the stones falling upon it when digging, or had gone to pieces on the admission of the air. This urn was surrounded by a number of cells formed of flat stones, in the shape of graves, but too small to hold the body in its natural state. These sepulchral recesses contained nothing except ashes, or dust of the same kind as that in the urn."—Syrac' Local Records (2 vols. 8vo, 1838), vol. ii. pp. 60 and 192.
INTRODUCTION TO EDITION 1830.

AFTER the success of "Marmion," I felt inclined to exclaim with Ulysses in the "Odyssey"—

Οὔτος μὲν ἔσθος ἄστος ἐκτεταλείπται,
Νῦν αὐτὲ σκοπών ἄλλον.

"One venturesome game my hand has won to-day—
Another, gallants, yet remains to play."

The ancient manners, the habits and customs of the aboriginal race by whom the Highlands of Scotland were inhabited had always appeared to me peculiarly adapted to poetry. The change in their manners, too, had taken place almost within my own time, or at least I had learned many particulars concerning the ancient state of the Highlands from the old men of the last generation. I had always thought the old Scottish Gaël highly adapted for poetical composition. The feuds and political dissensions which, half a century earlier, would have rendered the richer and wealthier part of the kingdom indisposed to countenance a poem, the scene of which was laid in the Highlands, were now sunk in the generous compassion which the English, more than any other nation, feel for the misfortunes of an honorable foe. The Poems of Ossian had, by their popularity, sufficiently shown that if writings on Highland subjects were qualified to interest the reader, mere national prejudices were, in the present day, very unlikely to interfere with their success.

I had also read a great deal, seen much, and heard more, of that romantic country, where I was in the habit of spending some time every autumn; and the scenery of Loch Katrine was connected with the recollection of many a dear friend and merry expedition of former days. This poem, the action of which lay among scenes so beautiful, and so deeply imprinted on my recollection, was a labor of love; and it was no less so to recall the manners and incidents introduced. The frequent custom of James IV., and particularly of James V., to walk through their kingdom in disguise, afforded me the hint of an incident which never fails to be interesting if managed with the slightest address or dexterity.

I may now confess, however, that the employment, though attended with great pleasure, was not without its doubts and anxieties. A lady to whom I was nearly related, and with whom I lived, during her whole life, on the most brotherly terms of affection, was residing with me at the time when the work was in progress, and used to ask me what I could possibly do to rise so early in the morning (that happening to be the most convenient time to me for composition). At last I told her the subject of my meditations; and I can never forget the anxiety and affection expressed in her reply. "Do not be so rash," she said, "my dearest cousin. You are already popular—more so, perhaps, than you yourself will believe, or than even I, or other partial friends, can fairly allow to your merit. You stand high—do not rashly attempt to climb higher, and incur the risk of a fall; for, depend upon it, a favorite will not be permitted even to stumble with impunity." I replied to this affectionate expostulation in the words of Montrose—

"He either fears his fate too much,
Or his deserts are small,
Who dares not put it to the touch
To gain or lose it all."

1 "These Highland visits were repeated almost every summer for several successive years, and perhaps even the first of them was in some degree connected with his professional business. At all events, it was to his allotted task of enforcing the execution of a legal instrument against some Macalrens, refractory tenants of Stewart of Appin, brother-in-law to Inverarnayle, that Scott owed his introduction to the scenery of the Lady of the Lake. 'An escort of a sergeant and six men,' he says, 'was obtained from a Highland regiment lying in Stirling; and the author, then a writer's apprentice, equivalent to the honorable situation of an attorney's clerk, was invested with the superintendence of the expedition, with directions to see that the messenger discharged his duty fully, and that the gallant sergeant did not exceed his part by committing violence or plunder. And thus it happened, oddly enough, that the author first entered the romantic scenery of Loch Katrine, of which he may perhaps say he has somewhat extended the reputation, riding in all the dignity of danger, with a front and rear guard, and loaded arms.'—Life of Scott, vol. i. p. 193.

2 "The lady with whom Sir Walter Scott held this conversation was, no doubt, his aunt, Miss Christian Rutherford; there was no other female relation dead when this Introduction was written, whom I can suppose him to have consulted on literary questions. Lady Capulet, on seeing the corpse of Tybalt, exclaims,—

'Tybalt, my cousin! Oh, my brother's child!'"

3 Lines in praise of women.—Wishart's Memoirs of Montrose, p. 497.
"If I fail," I said, for the dialogue is strong in my recollection, "it is a sign that I ought never to have succeeded, and I will write prose for life: you shall see no change in my temper, nor will I eat a single meal the worse. But if I succeed,

'Up with the bonnie blue bonnet,
The dirk, and the feather, and a'!"

Afterwards, I showed my affectionate and anxious critic the first canto of the poem, which reconciled her to my imprudence. Nevertheless, although I answered thus confidently, with the obstinacy often said to be proper to those who bear my surname, I acknowledge that my confidence was considerably shaken by the warning of her excellent taste and unbiased friendship. Nor was I much comforted by her retractation of the unfavorable judgment, when I recollected how likely a natural partiality was to effect that change of opinion. In such cases, affection rises like a light on the canvas, improves any favorable tints which it formerly exhibited, and throws its defects into the shade.

I remember that about the same time a friend started in to "heezie up my hope," like the "sportsman with his cutty gun," in the old song. He was bred a farmer, but a man of powerful understanding, natural good taste, and warm poetical feeling, perfectly competent to supply the wants of an imperfect or irregular education. He was a passionate admirer of field-sports, which we often pursued together.

As this friend happened to dine with me at Ashestiel one day, I took the opportunity of reading to him the first canto of "The Lady of the Lake," in order to ascertain the effect the poem was likely to produce upon a person who was but too favorable a representative of readers at large. It is, of course, to be supposed that I determined rather to guide my opinion by what my friend might appear to feel than by what he might think fit to say. His reception of my recitation, or prelection, was rather singular. He placed his hand across his brow, and listened with great attention through the whole account of the stag-hunt, till the dogs threw themselves into the lake to follow their master, who embarks with Ellen Douglas. He then started up with a sudden exclamation, struck his hand on the table, and declared, in a voice of censure calculated for the occasion, that the dogs must have been totally ruined by being permitted to take the water after such a severe chase. I own I was much encouraged by the species of reverence which had possessed so zealous a follower of the sports of the ancient Nimrod, who had been completely surprised out of all doubts of the reality of the tale. Another of his remarks gave me less pleasure. He detected the identity of the King with the wandering knight, Fitz-James, when he winds his bugle to summon his attendants. He was probably thinking of the lively, but somewhat licentious, old ballad, in which the denouement of a royal intrigue takes place as follows:

"He took a bugle frae his side,
He blew both loud and shrill,
And four-and-twenty belted knights
Came skipping over the hill;
Then he took out a little knife,
Let a' his daddies fa',
And he was the brawest gentleman
That was amang them a'.
And we'll go no more a-roving," &c.

This discovery, as Mr. Pepys says of the rent in his camlet cloak, was but a trifle, yet it troubled me; and I was at a good deal of pains to efface any marks by which I thought my secret could be traced before the conclusion, when I relied on it with the same hope of producing effect with which the Irish post-boy is said to reserve a "trot for the avenue."

I took uncommon pains to verify the accuracy of the local circumstances of this story. I recollect, in particular, that to ascertain whether I was telling a probable tale, I went into Perthshire, to see whether King James could actually have ridden from the banks of Loch Venachar to Stirling Castle within the time supposed in the Poem, and had the pleasure to satisfy myself that it was quite practicable.

After a considerable delay, "The Lady of the Lake" appeared in May, 1810; and its success was certainly so extraordinary as to induce me for the moment to conclude that I had at last fixed a nail in the proverbially inconstant wheel of Fortune, whose stability in behalf of an individual who had so boldly courted her favors for three successive times had not as yet been shaken. I had attained, perhaps, that degree

---

1 The Jolly Beggar, attributed to King James V.—Herd's Collection, 1776.

2 I believe the shrewd critic here introduced was the poet's excellent cousin, Charles Scott, now lord of Knowes-south, The story of the Irish position's troth he owed to Mr. Moore."—Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 239.

3 "Mr. Robert Cadell, who was then a young man in training for his profession in Edinburgh, retains a strong impression of the interest which the Lady of the Lake excited there for two or three months before it was on the counter. 'James Ballantyne,' he says; 'read the cantos from time to time to select coteries, as they advanced at press. Common fame was loud in their favor; a great poem was on all hands anticipated. I do not recollect that any of all the author's works was ever looked for with more intense anxiety, or that any one of them excited a more extraordinary sensation when it did appear. The whole country rang with the praises of the poet—crowds set off to view the scenery of Loch Katrine, till then comparatively unknown; and as the book came out just before the season for excursions, every house and inn in that neighborhood was crammed with a constant succession of visitors. It is a well-ascertained fact that from the date of the publication of the Lady of the Lake, the post-horse duty in Scotland rose in an extraordinary degree; and indeed it continued so regularly for a number of years, the author's succeeding works keeping up the enthusiasm for our scenery which he had thus originally created.'

"I owe to the same correspondent the following details:—'The quarto edition of 2050 copies disappeared instantly, and was followed, in the course of the same year, by four editions in octavo, viz., one of 3600, a second of 3250, and a third and a fourth each of 6000 copies; thus, in the space of a few months, the extraordinary number of 20,000 copies were disposed of. In the next year (1811) there was another edition of 3000..." of public reputation at which prudence, or certainly timidity, would have made a halt, and discontinued efforts by which I was far more likely to diminish my fame than to increase it. But, as the celebrated
John Wilkes is said to have explained to his late Majesty that he himself, amid his full tide of popularity, was never a Wilkite, so I can, with honest truth, exculpate myself from having been at any time a partisan of my own poetry, even when it was in the highest fashion with the million. It must not be supposed that I was either so ungrateful or so superabundantly candid as to despise or scorn the value of those whose voice had elevated me so much higher than my own opinion told me I deserved. I felt, on the contrary, the more grateful to the public, as receiving that from partiality to me which I could not have claimed from merit; and I endeavored to deserve the partiality by continuing such exertions as I was capable of for their amusement.

It may be that I did not, in this continued course of scribbling, consult either the interest of the public or my own. But the former had effectual means of defending themselves, and could, by their coldness, sufficiently check any approach to intrusion; and for myself, I had now for several years dedicated my hours so much to literary labor that I should have felt difficulty in employing myself otherwise; and so, like Dogberry, I generously bestowed all my tedious-ness on the public, comforting myself with the reflection that, if posterity should think me undeserving of the favor with which I was regarded by my contemporaries, "they could not but say I had the crown," and had enjoyed for a time that popularity which is so much coveted.

I conceived, however, that I held the distinguished situation I had obtained, however unworthy, rather like the champion of pugilism, on the condition of being always ready to show proofs of my skill, than in the manner of the champion of chivalry, who performs his duties only on rare and solemn occasions. I was in any case conscious that I could not long hold a situation which the caprice, rather than the judgment, of the public had bestowed upon me, and preferred being deprived of my precedence by some more worthy rival, to sinking into contempt for my indolence, and losing my reputation by what Scottish lawyers call the negative prescription. Accordingly those who choose to look at the Introduction to Rokeby, in the present edition, will be able to trace the steps by which I declined as a poet to figure as a novelist; as the ballad says Queen Eleanor sunk at Charing-Cross to rise again at Queenhithe.

It only remains for me to say that, during my short pre-eminence of popularity, I faithfully observed the rules of moderation which I had resolved to follow before I began my course as a man of letters. If a man is determined to make a noise in the world, he is as sure to encounter abuse and ridicule as he who gallops furiously through a village must reckon on being followed by the curs in full cry. Experienced persons know that in stretching to flog the latter, the rider is very apt to catch a bad fall; nor is an attempt to chastise a malignant critic attended with less danger to the author. On this principle, I let parody, burlesque, and squibs, find their own level; and while the latter hissed most fiercely, I was cautious never to catch them up, as school-boys do, to throw them back against the naughty boy who fired them off, wisely remembering that they are, in such cases, apt to explode in the handling. Let me add that my reign (since Byron has so called it) was marked by some instances of good-nature as well as patience.
I never refused a literary person of merit such services in smoothing his way to the public as were in my power; and I had the advantage, rather an uncommon one with our irritable race, to enjoy general favor, without incurring permanent ill-will, so far as is known to me, among any of my contemporaries.

W. S.

ABBOTSFORO, April, 1830.

1 "In twice five years the 'greatest living poet,'
Like to the champion in the styty ring,
Is call'd on to support his claim, or show it,
Although 'tis an imaginary thing," &c.

Don Juan, canto xi, st. 35.

2 "Sir Walter reign'd before me," &c.

Don Juan, canto xi, st. 57.
The Lady of the Lake.

TO THE

MOST NOBLE

JOHN JAMES, MARQUIS OF ABERCORN,

&c., &c., &c.,

THIS POEM IS INSCRIBED BY

THE AUTHOR.

ARGUMENT.

The Scene of the following Poem is laid chiefly in the Vicinity of Loch Katrine, in the Western Highlands of Perthshire. The time of Action includes Six Days, and the transactions of each Day occupy a Canto.

1 Published by John Ballantyne & Co. in quarto, with engraved frontispiece of Saxon's portrait of Scott, in May, 1810.

2 "Never, we think, has the analogy between poetry and painting been more strikingly exemplified than in the writings of Mr. Scott. He sees everything with a painter's eye. Whatever he represents has a character of individuality, and is drawn with an accuracy and minuteness of discrimination which we are not accustomed to expect from verbal description. Much of this, no doubt, is the result of genius: for there is a quick and comprehensive power of discernment, an intensity and keenness of observation, an almost intuitive glance, which Nature alone can give, and by means of which her favorites are enabled to discover characteristic differences where the eye of dullness sees nothing but uniformity; but something also must be referred to discipline and exercise. The liveliest fancy can only call forth those images which are already stored up in the memory; and all that invention can do is to unite these into new combinations, which must appear confused and ill-defined if the impressions originally received by the senses were deficient in strength and distinctness. It is because Mr. Scott usually delineates those objects with which he is perfectly familiar, that his touch is so easy, correct, and animated. The rocks, the ravines, and the torrents which he exhibits, are not the imperfect sketches of a hurried traveller, but the finished studies of a resolute artist deliberately drawn from different points of view; each has its true shape and position; it is a portrait; it has its name by which the spectator is invited to examine the exactness of the resemblance. The figures which are combined with the landscape are painted with the same fidelity. Like those of Salvator Rosa, they are perfectly appropriate to the spot on which they stand. The boldness of feature, the lightness and compactness of form, the wildness of air, and the careless ease of attitude of these mountaineers, are as congenial to their native Highlands as the birch and the pine which darken their glens, the sedge which fringes their lakes, or the heath which waves over their moors."—Quarterly Review, May, 1810.

"It is honorable to Mr. Scott's genius that he has been able to interest the public so deeply with this third presentation of the same chivalrous scenes; but we cannot help thinking that both his glory and our gratification would have been greater if he had changed his hand more completely, and actually given us a true Celtic story, with all its drapery and accompaniments in a corresponding style of decoration. Such a subject, we are persuaded, has very great capabilities, and only wants to be introduced to public notice by such a hand as Mr. Scott's, to make a still more powerful impression than he has already exerted by the resurrection of the tales of romance. There are few persons, we believe, of any degree of poetical susceptibility, who have wandered among the secluded valleys of the Highlands, and contemplated the singular people by whom they are still tenanted—with their love of music and of song—their hardy and irregular life, so unlike the unvarying toils of the Saxon mechanic—their devotion to their chiefs—their wild and lofty traditions—their national enthusiasm—the melancholy grandeur of the scenes they inhabit—and the multiplied superstitions which still linger among them—without feeling that there is no existing people so well adapted for the purposes of poetry, or so capable of furnishing the occasions of new and striking inventions.

"We are persuaded that if Mr. Scott's powerful and creative genius were to be turned in good earnest to such a subject, something might be produced still more impressive and original than even this age has yet witnessed."—Jeffrey, Edinburgh Review, No. xvi. for 1810.

"The subject of The Lady is a common Highland irruption, but at a point where the neighborhood of the Lowlands affords the best contrast of manners—where the scenery affords the noblest subject of description—and where the wild clan is so near to the Court that their robberies can be connected with the romantic adventures of a disguised
The Lady of the Lake.

CANTO FIRST.

The Chase.

HARP of the North! that mouldering long hast hung
On the witch-elm that shades Saint Fillan's spring,
And down the fitful breeze thy numbers flung,
Till envious ivy did around thee cling,
Muffling with verdant ringlet every string,—
O minstrel Harp, still must thine accents sleep?
Mid rustling leaves and fountains murmuring,
Still must thy sweeter sounds their silence keep,
Nor bid a warrior smile, nor teach a maid to weep?

Not thus, in ancient days of Caledon,
Was thy voice mute amid the festal crowd,
When lay of hopeless love, or glory won,
Aroused the fearful, or subdued the proud.
At each according pause was heard aloud?
Thine ardent symphony sublime and high!
Fair dames and crested chiefs attention bow'd;
For still the burden of thine minstrelsy
Was Knighthood's dauntless deed, and Beauty's matchless eye.

Oh, wake once more! how rude soe'er the hand
That ventures o'er thy magic maze to stray;
Oh, wake once more! though scarce my skill command
Some feeble echoing of thine earlier lay:
Though harsh and faint, and soon to die away,
And all unworthy of thy nobler strain,
Yet if one heart throb higher at its sway,
The wizard note has not been touched in vain.
Then silent be no more! Enchantress, wake again!

I.
The stag at eve had drank his fill,
Where danced the moon on Monan's rill,

And deep his midnight lair had made
In lone Glenartney's hazel shade;
But, when the sun his beacon red
Had kindled on Benvoirlich's head,
The deep-mouth'd blood-bound's heavy bay
Resounded up the rocky way,

As Chief who hears his warden call,
"To arms! the foemen storm the wall,"
The antler'd monarch of the waste
Sprung from his heathery crouch in haste.
But, ere his fleet career he took,
The dewdrops from his flanks he shook;
Like crested leader, proud and high,
Toss'd his beam'd frontlet to the sky;
A moment gazed adown the dale,
A moment smelt'd the tainted gale,
A moment listen'd to the cry
That thicken'd as the chase drew nigh;
Then, as the headmost foes appear'd,
With one brave bound the cope he clear'd,
And, stretching forward free and far,
Sought the wild heaths of Uam-Var.

III.

Yell'd on the view the opening pack;
Rock, glen, and cavern, paid them back;
To many a mingled sound at once
The awaken'd mountain gave response.
A hundred dogs bay'd deep and strong,
Clatter'd a hundred steeds along,
Their peal the merry horns rung out,
A hundred voices join'd the shout;
With hark and whoop and wild halloo,
No rest Benvoirlich's echoes knew.
Far from the tumult fled the roe,
Close in her covert cower'd the doe;
The falcon, from her caign on high,
Cast on the rout a wondering eye,
Till far beyond her piercing ken
The hurricane had swept the glen.
Faint and mere faint, its failing din
Return'd from cavern, cliff, and linn,

1 MS.: "And on the fitful breeze thy numbers flung,
Till envious ivy, with her verdant band,
Manled and muffled each melodious string,—
O wizard Harp, still must thine accents sleep?"

2 MS.: "At each according pause thou spok'st aloud Thine ardent sympathy."

3 MS.: "The blood-bound's notes of heavy bass
Resounded hoarsely up the pass."

4 Benvoirlich, a mountain comprehended in the cluster of the Grampians, at the head of the valley of the Garry, a river which springs from its base. It rises to an elevation of 3330 feet above the level of the sea.
And silence settled, wide and still,
On the lone wood and mighty hill.

IV.

Less loud the sounds of sylvan war
Disturb'd the heights of Uam-Var,
And roused the cavern where, 'tis told,
A giant made his den of old;
For ere that steep ascent was won,
High in his pathway hung the sun,
And many a gallant, stay'd perforce,
Was fain to breathe his faltering horse,
And of the truckers of the deer,
Scarce half the lessening pack was near;
So shrewdly on the mountain side
Had the bold burst their mettle tried.

V.

The noble stag was pausing now
Upon the mountain's southern brow,
Where broad extended, far beneath,
The varied realms of fair Menteith.
With anxious eye he wandered o'er
Mountain and meadow, moss and moor,

1 See Appendix, Note A.
2 "About a mile to the westward of the inn of Aberfoyle, Lochard opens to the view. A few hundred yards to the cast of it, the Avantow, which has just issued from the lake, tumbles its waters over a rugged precipice of more than thirty feet in height, forming, in the rainy season, several very magnificent cataracts.
3 "The first opening of the lower lake, from the east, is uncommonly picturesque. Directing the eye nearly westward, Benlomond raises its pyramidal mass in the background. In nearer prospect, you have gentle eminences, covered with oak and birch to the very summit; the bare rock sometimes peeping through amongst the clumps. Immediately under the eye, the lower lake, stretching out from narrow beginnings to a breadth of about half a mile, is seen in full prospect. On the right, the banks are skirted with extensive oak woods which cover the mountain more than half way up.
4 "Advancing to the westward, the view of the lake is lost for about a mile. The upper lake, which is by far the most extensive, is separated from the lower by a stream of about 200 yards in length. The most advantageous view of the upper lake presents itself from a rising ground near its lower extremity, where a footpath strikes off to the south, into the wood that overhangs this connecting stream. Looking westward, Benlomond is seen in the background, rising, at the distance of six miles, in the form of a regular cone, its sides presenting a gentle slope to the N.W. and S.E. On the right is the lofty mountain of Benoghrich, running west towards the deep vale in which Lochcon lies concealed from the eye. In the foreground, Lochard stretches out to the west in the fairest prospect; its length three miles, and its breadth a mile and a half. On the right, it is skirted with woods; the northern and western extremity of the lake is diversified with meadows, and corn-fields, and farm-houses. On the left, few marks of cultivation are to be seen.
5 Farther on, the traveller passes along the verge of the lake under aledge of rock, from thirty to fifty feet high; and, standing immediately under this rock, towards its western extremity, he has a double echo, of uncommon distinctness. Upon pronouncing, with a firm voice, a line of ten syllables, and ponder'd refuge from his toil
By far Lochard? or Aberfoyle.
But nearer was the copsewood gray
That waved and wept on Loch Achray,
And mingled with the pine-trees blue
On the bold cliffs of Benvenue.
Fresh vigor with the hope return'd,
With flying foot the heath he spur'n,
Held westward with unwearied race,
And left behind the panting chase.

VI.

'Twere long to tell what steeds gave o'er
As swept the hunt through Cambus-more;
What reins were tightened in despair
When rose Benledi's ridge in air;
Who fagg'd upon Bothcastle's heath,
Who shunn'd to stem the flooded Teith,—
For twice that day, from shore to shore,
The gallant stag swam stoutly o'er.
Few were the strangers, following far,
That reach'd the lake of Vennachar;
And when the Brigg of Turk was won,
The headmost horseman rode alone.

it is returned, first from the opposite side of the lake; and when that is finished, it is repeated with equal distinctness from the wood on the east. The day must be perfectly calm, and the lake as smooth as glass, for otherwise no human voice can be returned from a distance of at least a quarter of a mile."

—GRAHAM'S Sketches of Perthshire, 2d edit, p. 182, &c.

3 MS.: "Fresh vigor with the thought return'd,
With flying hoof the heath he spur'n."
4 Cambus-more, within about two miles of Callender, on the wooded banks of the Keltie, a tributary of the Teith, is the seat of a family of the name of Buchanan, whom the Poet frequently visited in his younger days.

5 Benledi is a magnificent mountain, 3900 feet in height, which bounds the horizon on the north-west from Callender. The name, according to Celtic etymologists, signifies the Mountain of God.

6 Two mountain streams—the one flowing from Loch Veil, by the pass of Leny, the other from Loch Katrine, by Loch Achray and Loch Vennachar—unite at Callender; and the river thus formed henceforth takes the name of Teith. Hence the designation of the territory of Menteith.

7 "Loch Vennachar, a beautiful expanse of water, of about five miles in length by a mile and a half in breadth."

—GRAHAM.

8 "About a mile above Loch Vennachar, the approach (from the east) to the Brig or Bridge of Turk (the scene of the death of a wild-hare famous in Celtic tradition), leads to the summit of an eminence, where there bursts upon the traveller's eye a sudden and wide prospect of the windings of the river that issues from Loch Achray, with that sweet lake itself in front; the gently rolling river pursues its serpentine course through an extensive meadow; at the west end of the lake, on the side of Aberfoyle, is situated the delightful farm of Achray, the level field, a denomination justly due to it, when considered in contrast with the rugged rocks and mountains which surround it. From this eminence are to be seen also, on the right hand, the entrance to Glenfinlas, and in the distance Benvenue."—GRAHAM.
VII.

Alone, but with unbated zeal,
That horseman plied the scourge and steel;
For jaded now, and spent with toil,
Emboss'd with foam, and dark with soil,
While every gust with sobs he drew,
The laboring stag strain'd full in view.

Two dogs of black Saint Hubert's breed,
Unmatch'd for courage, breath, and speed,¹
Fast on his flying traces came,
And all but won that desperate game;
For, scarce a spear's length from his haunch,
Vindictive toil'd the blood-hounds stanch;
Nor nearer might the dogs attain,
Nor farther might the quarry strain.
Thus up the margin of the lake,
Between the precipice and brake,
O'er stock and rock their race they take.

VIII.

The Hunter mark'd that mountain high,
The lone lake's western boundary,
And deem'd the stag must turn to bay
Where that huge rampart barr'd the way;
Already glorying in the prize,
Measured his antlers with his eyes;
For the death-wound and death-hallow,
Muster'd his breath, his winyard drew;—²
But thundering as he came prepared,
With ready arm and weapon bared,
The wily quarry shunn'd the shock,
And turn'd him from the opposing rock;
Then, dashing down a darksome glen,
Soon lost to hound and Hunter's ken,
In the deep Trosachs³ wildest nook
His solitary refuge took.
There, while close couch'd, the thickest shed
Cold dews and wild-flowers on his head,
He heard the bailed dogs in vain
Rave through the hollow pass amain,
Chiding the rocks that yell'd again.

IX.

Close on the bounds the Hunter came,
To cheer them on the vanish'd game;
But, stumbling in the rugged dell,
The gallant horse exhausted fell,
The impatient rider strove in vain
To rouse him with the spur and rein,
For the good steed, his labors o'er,
Stretch'd his stiff limbs, to rise no more;
Then, touch'd with pity and remorse,
He sorrow'd o'er the expiring horse.

"I little thought, when first thy rein
I slack'd upon the banks of Seine,
That Highland eagle e'er should feed
On thy fleet limbs, my matchless steed!
Woe worth the chase, woe worth the day,
That costs thy life, my gallant gray!"

X.

Then through the dell his horn resounds
From vain pursuit to call the hounds.
Back limp'd, with slow and crippled pace,
The sulky leaders of the chase;
Close to their master's side they press'd,
With dropping tail and humbled crest;
But still the dingle's hollow throat
Prolong'd the swelling bugle-note.
The owlets started from their dream,
The eagles answer'd with their scream,
Round and around the sounds were cast,
Till echo seem'd an answering blast;
And on the Hunter hied his way,⁴
To join some comrades of the day;
Yet often paused, so strange the road,
So wondrous were the scenes it show'd.

XI.

The western waves of ebbing day
Roll'd o'er the glen their level way;
Each purple peak, each flinty spire,
Was bathed in floods of living fire.
But not a setting beam could glow
Within the dark ravines below,
Where twined the path, in shadow hid,
Round many a rocky pyramid,
Shooting abruptly from the dell
Its thunder-splinter'd pinnacle;
Round many an insulated mass,
The native bulwarks of the pass,⁵
Huge as the tower which builders vain
Presumptuous piled on Shinar's plain.
The rocky summits, split and rent,
Form'd turret, dome, or battlement,
Or seem'd fantastically set
With cupola or minaret,
Wild cressis as pagod ever deck'd,
Or mosque of Eastern architect.
Nor were these earth-born castles bare,⁶
Nor lack'd they many a banner fair;
For, from their shiver'd brows display'd,
Far o'er the unfathomable glade,
All twinkling with the dewdrops sheen,
The brier-rose fell in streamers green,
And creeping shrubs, of thousand dyes,
Waved in the west wind's summer sighs.

¹ See Appendix, Note B.  ² Ibid, Note C.  ³ "The term Trosachs signifies the rough or bristled territory."—GRAHAM.  ⁴ MS.: "And on the Hunter hied his pace,
To meet some comrades of the chase."  ⁵ MS.: "The mimic castles of the pass."  ⁶ The Tower of Babel.—Genesis xi. 1-9.  ⁷ MS.: "Nor were these mighty bulwarks bare."  ⁸ MS.: "Bright glistening with the dewdrops sheen."
XII.

Boon nature scatter'd, free and wild,
Each plant or flower, the mountain's child.
Here egantine embalm'd the air,
Hawthorn and hazel mingled there;
The primrose pale and violet flower
Found in each cliff a narrow bower;
Fox-glove and night-shade, side by side,
Emblems of punishment and pride,
Group'd their dark hues with every stain
The weather-beaten crags retain.
With boughs that quaked at every breath,
Gray birch and aspen wept beneath;
Aloft, the ash and warrior oak
Cast anchor in the rifted rock;
And, higher yet, the pine-tree hung
His shatter'd trunk, and frequent flung,
Where seem'd the cliffs to meet on high,
His boughs athwart the narrow'd sky.
Highest of all, where white peaks glanced,
Where glist'ning streamers waved and danced,
The wanderer's eye could barely view
The summer heaven's delicious blue;
So wondrous wild, the whole might seem
The scenery of a fairy dream.

XIII.

Onward, amid the cope 'gan peep
A narrow inlet, still and deep,
Affording scarce such breadth of brim
As served the wild duck's brood to swim.
Lost for a space, through thickets veering,
But broader when again appearing,
Tall rocks and tufted knolls their face
Could on the dark-blue mirror trace;
And farther as the Hunter stray'd,
Still broader sweep its channels made.
The shaggy mounds no longer stood,
Emerging from entangled wood,
But, wave-encircled, seem'd to float,
Like castle girdled with its moat;
Yet broader floods extending still
Divide them from their parent hill,
Till each, retiring, claims to be
An islet in an inland sea.

XIV.

And now, to issue from the glen,
No pathway meets the wanderer's ken,
Unless he climb, with footing nice,
A far projecting precipice.
The broom's tough roots his ladder made,
The hazel saplings lent their aid;
And thus an airy point he won,
Where, gleaming with the setting sun,
One burnish'd sheet of living gold,
Loch Katrine lay beneath him roll'd,
In all her length far winding lay,
With promontory, creek, and bay,
And islands that, empurpled bright,
Float'ed amid the livelier light,
And mountains, that like giants stand,
To sentinel enchanted land.
High on the south, huge Benvenue
Down on the lake in masses threw
Craggs, knoll's, and mounds, confusedly hurl'd,
The fragments of an earlier world;
A wildering forest feather'd o'er
His ruin'd sides and summit hoar,
While on the north, through middle air,
Ben-an heaved high his forehead bare.

XV.

From the steep promontory gazed
The stranger, raptured and amazed;
And, "What a scene were here," he cried,
"For princely pomp, or churchman's pride!
On this bold brow, a lordly tower;
In that soft vale, a lady's bower;
On yonder meadow, far away,
The turrets of a cloister gray;
How blithely might the bugle-horn
Chide, on the lake, the lingering morn!
How sweet, at eve, the lover's lute
Chime, when the groves were still and mute!
And, when the midnight moon should have
Her forehead in the silver wave,
How solemn on the ear would come
The holy matins' distant hum,
While the deep peal's commanding tone
Should wake, in yonder islet lone,

1 MS. : "His scathed trunk, and frequent flung,
Where seem'd the cliffs to meet on high,
His rugged arms athwart the sky,
Highest of all, where white peaks glanced,
Where twinkling streamers waved and danced."

2 MS. : "Affording scarce such breadth of flood
As served to float the wild duck's brood."

3 MS. : "Emerging dry-shod from the wood."

4 See Appendix, Note D.

5 Loch Ketturin is the Celtic pronunciation. In his Notes to "The Fair Maid of Perth," the author has signified his belief that the lake was named after the Catrinia, or wild robbers, who haunted its shores.

6 Benvenne is literally the little mountain—i.e., as contrasted with Benlodi and Benlomond.

7 MS. : "His ruin'd sides and fragments hoar,
While on the north, to middle air."

8 According to Graham, Ben-an, or Benann, is a mere diminutive of Ben—mountain.

9 Perhaps the art of landscape painting in poetry has never been displayed in higher perfection than in these stanzas, to which rigid criticism might possibly object that the picture is somewhat too minute, and that the contemplation of it detains the wanderer somewhat too long from the main purpose of his pilgrimage, but which it would be an act of the greatest injustice to break into fragments and present by piccemeal. Not so the magnificent scene which bursts upon the bewildered hunter as he emerges at length from the dell, and commands at one view the beautiful expanse of Loch Katrine. —Critical Review, August, 1820.

10 MS. : "From the high promontory gazed
The stranger, awe-struck and amazed."
A sainted hermit from his cell,
To drop a bead with every knell—
And bugle, lute, and bell, and all,
Should each bewilder'd stranger call
To friendly feast, and lighted hall.

XVI.
"Blithe were it then to wander here!
But now,—beshrew you nimble deer,—
Like that same hermit's, thin and spare,
The copse must give my evening fare;
Some mossy bank my couch must be,
Some rustling oak my canopy.
Yet pass we that; the war and chase
Give little choice of resting-place;—
A summer night in Greenwood spent
Were but to-morrow's merriment:
But hosts may in these wilds abound,
Such as are better miss'd than found;
To meet with Highland plunderers here
Were worse than loss of steed or deer,—
I am alone;—my bugle-strain
May call some straggler of the train;
Or, fall the worst that may betide,
Ere now this falchion has been tried."

XVII.
But scarce again his horn he wound,
When lo! forth starting at the sound,
From underneath an aged oak,
That slanted from the islet rock,
A damsel guider of its way,
A little skill shot to the bay,
That round the promontory steep
Led its deep line in graceful sweep,
Eddying, in almost viewless wave,
The weeping willow twig to have,
And kiss, with whispering sound and slow,
The beach of pebbles bright as snow.
The boat had touch'd this silver strand,
Just as the Hunter left his stand,
And stood conceal'd amid the brake,
To view this Lady of the Lake.

The maiden paused, as if again
She thought to catch the distant strain.
With head upraised, and look intent,
And eye and ear attentive bent,
And locks flung back, and lips apart,
Like monument of Grecian art,
In listening mood, she seem'd to stand,
The guardian Naiad of the strand.

1 MS.: "To hospitable feast and hall."
2 MS.: "And hollow truss of some old tree
My chamber for the night must be."
3 See Appendix, Note E.
4 MS.: "The bugle shrill again he wound,
And lo! forth starting at the sound."
5 MS.: "A little skiff shot to the bay,
The Hunter left his airy stand,"
6 MS.: "A finer form, a fairer face,
Had never marble Nymph or Grace
That boasts the Grecian chisel's trace."
7 MS.: "The accents of a stranger tongue."
8 See Note on canto iii. stanza v.

XVIII.
And ne'er did Grecian chisel trace
A Nymph, a Naiad, or a Grace,
Of finer form, or lovelier face!
What though the sun, with ardent brow,
Had slightly tinged her cheek with brown,—
The sportive toil, which, short and light,
Had dyed her glowing hue so bright,
Served too in hastier swell to show
Short glimpses of a breast of snow:
What though no rule of courtly grace
To measured mood had train'd her pace,—
A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the flow'r-studded dash'd the dew;
E'en the slight harebell raised its head,
Elastic, from her airy tread:
What though upon her speech there hung
The accents of the mountain tongue,—
Those silver sounds, so soft, so dear,
The listener held his breath to hear!

XIX.
A Chieftain's daughter seem'd the maid;
Her satin snood, her silken plaid,
Her golden brooch, such birth betray'd.
And seldom was a snood amid
Such wild luxuriant ringlets hid,
Whose glossy black to shame might bring
The plumage of the raven's wing,
And seldom o'er a breast so fair
Mantled a plaid with modest care,
And never brooch the folds combined
Above a heart more good and kind.
Her kindness and her worth to spy,
You need but gaze on Ellen's eye;
Not Katrine, in her mirror blue,
Gives back the shaggy banks more true,
Than every free-born glance confess'd
The guileless movements of her breast;
Whether joy danced in her dark eye,
Or woe or pity claim'd a sigh,
Or filial love was glowing there,
Or meek devotion pour'd a prayer,
Or tale of injury call'd forth
The indignant spirit of the North.
One only passion unreveal'd,
With maiden pride the maid conceal'd,
Yet not less purely felt the flame—:
Oh, need I tell that passion's name!

And when the boat had touch'd the sand,
Conceal'd he stood amid the brake,
To view this Lady of the Lake."

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.
XX.

Impatient of the silent horn,
Now on the gale her voice was borne:
"Father!" she cried; the rocks around
Loved to prolong the gentle sound.
A while she paused, no answer came,— "Malcolm, was thine the blast?" the name
Less resolutely utter'd fell,
The echoes could not catch the swell.
"A stranger I," the Huntsman said,
Advancing from the hazel shade.
The maid, alarm'd, with hasty ear
Push'd her light shallop from the shore,
And when a space was gain'd between,
Closer she drew her bosom's screen;
(For forth the startled swan would swing,
So turn to prune his ruffled wing.)
Then safe, though flutter'd and amazed,
She paused, and on the stranger gazed.
Not his the form, nor his the eye,
That youthful maidens wont to fly.

XXI.

On his bold visage middle age
Had slightly press'd its signet sage,
Yet had not quench'd the open truth
And fiery vehemence of youth;
Forward and frolic glee was there,
The will to do, the soul to dare,
The sparkling glance, soon blown to fire,
Of hasty love, or headlong ire.
His limbs were cast in manly mould,
For hardy sports or contest bold;
And though in peaceful garb array'd,
And weaponless, except his blade,
His stately mien as well implied
A high-born heart, a martial pride,
As if a Baron's crest he wore,
And sheathed in armor trod the shore.
Slighting the petty need he show'd,
He told of his benighted road;
His ready speech flow'd fair and free,
In phrase of gentlest courtesy;
Yet seem'd that tone, and gesture bland,
Less used to sue than to command.

XXII.

A while the maid the stranger eyed,
And, reassured, at length replied,
That Highland halls were open still
To wilder'd wanderers of the hill.

"Nor think you unexpected come
To you lone isle, our desert home;
Before the heath had lost the dew,
This morn, a couch was pull'd for you;
On yonder mountain's purple head
Have ptarmigan and heath-cock bled,
And our broad nets have swept the mere,
To furnish forth your evening cheer."—
"Now, by the rood, my lovely maid,
Your courtesy has err'd," he said;
"No right have I to claim, misplaced,
The welcome of expected guest.
A wanderer, here by fortune tost,
My way, my friends, my courser lost,
I ne'er before, believe me, fair,
Have ever drawn your mountain air,
Till on this lake's romantic strand
I found a fay in fairy land!"

XXIII.

"I well believe," the maid replied,
As her light skiff approach'd the side,—
"I well believe that ne'er before
Your foot has trod Loch Katrine's shore;
But yet, as far as yesternight,
Old Allan-bane foretold your plight,—
A gray-hair'd sire, whose eye intent
Was on the vision'd future bent.
He saw your steed, a dappled gray,
Lie dead beneath the birchen way;
Painted exact your form and mien,
Your hunting suit of Lincoln green,
That tassell'd horn so gayly girt,
That falchion's crooked blade and hilt,
That cap with heron plumage trim,
And yon two hounds so dark and grim.
He bade that all should ready be
To grace a guest of fair degree;
But light I held his prophecy,
And deem'd it was my father's horn
Whose echoes o'er the lake were borne."

XXIV.

The stranger smiled:—"Since to your home
A destined errant-knight I come,
Announced by prophet sooth and old,
Doom'd doubtless for achievement bold,
I'll lightly front each high emprise,
For one kind glance of those bright eyes.
Permit me, first, the task to guide
Your fairy frigate o'er the tide."

1 MS.: "A space she paused, no answer came:
Άlpen, was thine the blast?" the name
Less resolutely utter'd fell,
The echoes could not catch the swell.
"Nor foe nor friend," the stranger said,
Advancing from the hazel shade.
The startled maid, with hasty ear,
Push'd her light shallop from the shore."

2 MS.: "So o'er the lake the swan would spring,
Then turn to prune its ruffled wing."

3 MS.: "Her father's hall was open still."

4 MS.: "Till on this lake's enchanting strand."

5 MS.: "Is often on the future bent."—See Appendix,
Note F.
The maid, with smile suppress'd and sly,
The toil unwonted saw him try;
For seldom sure, if e'er before,
His noble hand had grasp'd an oar:¹
Yet with main strength his strokes he drew,
And o'er the lake the shallop flew;
With heads erect, and whimpering cry,
The hounds behind their passage ply;
Nor frequent does the bright oar break
The darkening mirror of the lake,
Until the rocky isle they reach,
And moor their shallop on the beach.

XXV.
The stranger view'd the shore around;
'Twas all so close with copsewood bound,
Nor track nor pathway might declare
That human foot frequented there,
Until the mountain maiden show'd
A clambering unsuspected road,
That winded through the tangled screen,
And open'd on a narrow green,
Where weeping birch and willow round
With their long fibres swept the ground.
Here, for retreat in dangerous hour,
Some chief had framed a rustic bower.²

XXVI.
It was a lodge of ample size,
But strange of structure and device;
Of such materials as around
The workman's hand had readiest found.
Lopp'd of their boughs, their hoar trunks bared,
And by the hatchet rudely squared,
To give the walls their destined height,
The sturdy oak and ash unite;
While moss and clay and leaves combined
To fence each crevice from the wind.
The lighter pine-trees, overhead,
Their slender length for rafters spread,
And wither'd heath and rushes dry
Supplied a russet canopy,
Due westward, fronting to the green,
A rural portico was seen,
Aloft on native pillars borne,
Of mountain fir, with bark unshorn,
Where Ellen's hand had taught to twine
The ivy and Ician vine,
The Clematis, the favor'd flower
Which boasts the name of virgin bower,
And every hardy plant could bear
Loch Katrine's keen and searching air.
An instant in this porch she staid,
And gayly to the stranger said,

"On heaven and on thy lady call,
And enter the enchanted hall!"—

XXVII.
"My hope, my heaven, my trust must be,
My gentle guide, in following thee."—
He cross'd the threshold—and a clang
Of angry steel that instant rang.
To his bold brow his spirit rush'd,
But soon for vain alarm he blush'd,
When on the floor he saw display'd,
Cause of the din, a naked blade
Dropp'd from the sheath, that careless flung
Upon a stag's huge antlers swung;
For all around, the walls to grace,
Hung trophies of the fight or chase:
A target there, a bugle here,
A battle-axe, a hunting-spear,
And broadswords, bows, and arrows store
With the task'd trophies of the boar.
Here grins the wolf as when he died,
And there the wild-cat's brindled hide
The frontlet of the elk adorns,
Or mantles o'er the bison's horns;
Pennons and flags defaced and stain'd,
That blackening streaks of blood retain'd,
And deer-skins, dappled, dun, and white,
With otter's fur and seal's unite,
In rude and uncounted tapestry all,
To garnish forth the sylvan hall.

XXVIII.
The wondering stranger round him gazed,
And next the fallen weapon raised:—
Few were the arms whose sinewy strength
Sufficed to stretch it forth at length;
And as the brand he poised and sway'd,
"I never knew but one," he said,
"Whose stalwart arm might brook to wield
A blade like this in battle-field."
She sigh'd, then smiled, and took the word:
"You see the guardian champion's sword
As light it trembles in his hand
As in my grasp a hazel wand;
My sire's tall form might grace the part
Of Ferragus or Ascabart;"³
But in the absent giant's hold
Are women now, and menials old."

XXIX.
The mistress of the mansion came,
Matute of age, a graceful dame;
Whose easy step and stately port
Had well become a princely court,

¹ MS.: "This gentle hand had grasp'd an oar:
Yet with main strength the oars he drew."
² See Appendix, Note G.
³ MS.: "Here grins the wolf as when he died,
There hung the wild-cat's brindled hide,

Above the elk's branch'd brow and skull,
And frontlet of the forest bull."
To whom, though more than kindred knew,
Young Ellen gave a mother's due.
Meet welcome to her guest she made,
And every courteous rite was paid
That hospitality could claim,
Though unask'd his birth and name.
Such then the reverence to a guest,
That fittest foe might join the feast,
And from his deadliest foe's door
Unquestion'd turn, the banquet o'er.
At length his rank the stranger names,—  "The Knight of Snowdoun, James Fitz-James
Lord of a barren heritage,
Which his brave sires, from age to age,
By their good swords held with toil;
His sire had fallen in such turmoil,
And he, God wot, was forced to stand
Oft for his right with blade in hand.
This morning, with Lord Moray's train,
He chased a stalwart stag in vain,
Outstripp'd his comrades, miss'd the deer,
Lost his good steed, and wander'd here."

XXX.
Fain would the Knight in turn require
The name and state of Ellen's sire.
Well show'd the elder lady's mien
That courts and cities she had seen;
Ellen, though more her looks display'd
The simple grace of sylvan maid,
In speech and gesture, form and face,
Show'd she was come of gentle race.
'Twere strange, in ruder rank, to find
Such looks, such manners, and such mind.
Each hint the Knight of Snowdoun gave,
Dame Margaret heard with silence grave;
Or Ellen, innocently gay,
Turn'd all inquiry light away:
"Weird women we! by dale and down
We dwell, afar from tower and town.
We stem the flood, we ride the blast,
On wandering knights our spells we cast;
While viewless minstrels touch the string,
'Tis thus our charmed rhymes we sing."
She sung, and still a harp unseen
Fill'd up the symphony between.

XXXI.
Song.
"Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking;
Dream of battled fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking.
In our isle's enchanted hall,
Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,
Fairy strains of music fall,
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Dream of fighting fields no more:
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking.

"No rude sound shall reach thine ear,"
Armor's clang, or war-steed champing,
Trump nor pibroch summon here
Mustering clan, or squadron tramping.
Yet the lark's shrill life may come
At the day-break from the fallow,
And the bitter sound his drum,
Booming from the sedgy shallow.
Ruder sounds shall none be near.
Guards nor warders challenge here,
Here's no war-steed's neigh and champing,
Shouting clans, or squadrons stamping."

XXXII.
She paused—then, blushing, led the lay
To grace the stranger of the day.
Her mellow notes a while prolong
The cadence of the flowing song,
Till to her lips in measured frame
The minstrel's verse spontaneous came.

Song continued.
"Huntsman, rest! thy chase is done;
While our slumberous spells assial ye,
Dream not with the rising sun
Bugles here shall sound reveillé.
Sleep! the deer is in his den;
Sleep! thy hounds are by thee lying;
Sleep! nor dream in yonder glen,
How thy gallant steed lay dying.
Huntsman, rest! thy chase is done;
Think not of the rising sun,
For at dawning to assail ye,
Here no bugles sound reveillé."

XXXIII.
The hall was clear'd—the stranger's bed
Was there of mountain heather spread,
Where oft a hundred guests had lain,
And dream'd their forest sports again.
But vainly did the heath-flower shed
Its moorland fragrance round his head;
Not Ellen's spell had lul'd to rest
The fever of his troubled breast.
In broken dreams the image rose
Of varied perils, pains, and woes:
His steed now flounders in the brake,
Now sinks his barge upon the lake;
Now, leader of a broken host,
His standard falls, his honor's lost.
Then,—from my couch may heavenly might
Chase that worst phantom of the night!—
Again return'd the scenes of youth,
Of confident undoubting truth;
Again his soul he interchanged
With friends whose hearts were long estranged.
They come, in dim procession led,
The cold, the faithless, and the dead;
As warm each hand, each brow as gay,
As if they parted yesterday.
And doubt distracts him at the view:
Oh, were his senses false or true!
Dream'd he of death, or broken vow,
Or is it all a vision now!?

XXXIV.
At length, with Ellen in a grove
He seem'd to walk, and speak of love;
She listen'd with a blush and sigh,
His suit was vain, his hopes were high;
He sought her yielded hand to clasp,
And a cold gauntlet met his grasp:
The phantom's sex was changed and gone,
Upon its head a helmet shone;
Slowly enlarged to giant size,
With darken'd cheek and threatening eyes,
The grisly visage, stern and hoar,
To Ellen still a likeness bore.—
He woke, and, panting with affright,
Recall'd the vision of the night. 2
The hearth's decaying brands were red,
And deep and dusky lustre shed,
Half showing, half concealing, all
The uncouth trophies of the hall.
Mid those the stranger fix'd his eye,
Where that huge fideleon hung on high,
And thoughts on thoughts, a countless throng,
Rush'd, chasing countless thoughts along,
Until, the giddy whirl to cure,
He rose, and sought the moonshine pure.

XXXV.
The wild-rose, eglantine, and broom, 3
Wasted around their rich perfume:
The birch-trees wept in fragrant balm,
The aspens slept beneath the calm;
The silver light, with quivering glance,
Play'd on the water's still expanse,—
Wild were the heart whose passions' sway
Could rage beneath the sober ray!
He felt its calm, that warrior guest,
While thus he communed with his breast:—
"Why is it, at each turn I trace
Some memory of that exiled race?
Can I not mountain maiden spy,
But she must bear the Douglas eye?
Can I not view a Highland brand,
But it must match the Douglas hand?
Can I not frame a fever'd dream,
But still the Douglas is the theme?
I'll dream no more—oy manly mind
Not even in sleep is will resign'd.
My midnight orisons said o'er,
I'll turn to rest, and dream no more."
His midnight orisons he told,
A prayer with every bead of gold,
Consign'd to heaven his cares and woes,
And sunk in undisturb'd repose;
Until the heath-cook shrilly crew,
And morning dawn'd on Benvenue.

The Lady of the Lake.
CANTO SECOND.
The Island.
I.
At morn the black-cock trims his jetty wing,
'Tis morning prompts the finnet's blitest lay,
All Nature's children feel the matin spring
Of life reviving with reviving day;

The woods, the mountains, and the warbling maze
Of the wild brooks."—Castle of Indolence, canto i.

"Or are you sportive?—bid the morn of youth
Rise to new light, and beam afresh the days
Of innocence, simplicity, and truth,
To cares estranged, and manhood's thorny ways.
What transport to retrace our boyish plays,
Our easy bliss, when each thing joy supplied;

1 "Ye guardian spirits, to whom man is dear,
   From these foul demons shield the midnight gloom;
   Angels of fancy and of love, be near,
   And o'er the blank of sleep diffuse a gloom;
   Evoke the sacred shades of Greece and Rome,
   And let them virtue with a look impart;
   But chief, a while, oh lend us from the tomb
   Those long-lost friends for whom in love we smart,
   And fill with pious awe and joy-mixt woe the heart.

2 "Or are you sportive?—bid the morn of youth
   Rise to new light, and beam afresh the days
   Of innocence, simplicity, and truth,
   To cares estranged, and manhood's thorny ways.
   What transport to retrace our boyish plays,
   Our easy bliss, when each thing joy supplied;

3 MS: "Play'd on the bosom of the lake,
   Loch Katrine's still expanse,
   The birch, the wild-rose, and the broom,
   Wasted around their rich perfume; . . .
   The aspen slept on Benvenue;
   Wild were the heart whose passions' power
   Defied the influence of the hour."

9 In a second dated January 28, 1824, Sir Walter Scott wrote Lock Katrine's still expanse, and in a later draft, the birch, the wild-rose, and the broom, were added. The final version of the poem, as printed in the first edition of The Lady of the Lake, uses the latter version.

Critical Review.

185.

"Ye guardian spirits, to whom man is dear,
   From these foul demons shield the midnight gloom;
   Angels of fancy and of love, be near,
   And o'er the blank of sleep diffuse a gloom;
   Evoke the sacred shades of Greece and Rome,
   And let them virtue with a look impart;
   But chief, a while, oh lend us from the tomb
   Those long-lost friends for whom in love we smart,
   And fill with pious awe and joy-mixt woe the heart."—Critical Review.
And while you little bark glides down the bay,
Wafting the stranger on his way again,
Morn's genial influence roused a minstrel gray,
And sweetly o'er the lake was heard thy strain,
Mix'd with the sounding harp, O white-hair'd Allan-bane!

II.

Song.

"Not faster yonder rowers' might
Flings from their oars the spray,
Not faster yonder rippling bright,
That tracks the shallop's course in light,
Molts in the lake away,
Than men from memory erase
The benefits of former days;
Then, stranger, go! good speed the while,
Nor think again of the lonely isle.

"High place to thee in royal court,
High place in battle line,
Good hawk and hound for sylvan sport,
Where beauty sees the brave resort,
The honor'd meed be thine!
True be thy sword, thy friend sincere,
Thy lady constant, kind, and dear,
And lost in love and friendship's smile
Be memory of the lonely isle.

III.

Song continued.

"But if beneath yon southern sky
A plaided stranger roam,
Whose drooping crest and stifled sigh,
And sunken cheek and heavy eye,
Pine for his Highland home;
Then, warrior, then be thine to show
The care that soothes a wanderer's woe;
Remember then thy hap ere while,
A stranger in the lonely isle.

"Or if on life's uncertain main
Mishap shall mar thy sail;
If faithful, wise, and brave in vain,
Woe, want, and exile thou sustain
Beneath theickle gale;
Waste not a sigh on fortune changed,
On thankless courts, or friends estranged,
But come where kindred worth shall smile,
To greet thee in the lonely isle."

IV.

As died the sounds upon the tide,
The shallop reach'd the mainland side,
And ere his onward way he took,
The stranger cast a lingering look,
Where easily his eye might reach
The Harper on the islet beach,

Reclined against a blighted tree,
As wasted, gray, and worn as he.
To minstrel meditation given,
His reverend brow was raised to heaven,
As from the rising sun to claim
A sparkle of inspiring flame.
His hand, reclined upon the wire,
Seem'd watching the awakening fire;
So still he sat, as those who wait
Till judgment speak the doom of fate;
So still, as if no breeze might dare
To lift one lock of hoary hair;
So still, as life itself were fled,
In the last sound his harp had sped.

V.

Upon a rock with lichens wild,
Beside him Ellen sat and smiled,—
Smiled she to see the stately drake
Lead forth his fleet upon the lake,
While her vex'd spaniel, from the beach,
Bay'd at the prize beyond his reach?
Yet tell me, then, the maid who knows,
Why deepen'd on her cheek the rose?—
Forgive, forgive, Fidelity!
Perchance the maiden smiled to see
Yon parting lingerer wave adieu,
And stop and turn to wave anew;
And, lovely ladies, ere you're
Condemn the heroine of my lyre,
Show me the fair would scorn to spy,
And prize such conquest of her eye!

VI.

While yet he hoister'd on the spot,
It seem'd as Ellen mark'd him not;
But when he turn'd him to the glade,
One courteous parting sign she made;
And after, oft the knight would say;
That not when prize of festal day
Was dealt him by the brightest fair
Who e'er were jewel in her hair,
So highly did his bosom swell
As at that simple mate farewell,
Now with a trusty mountain guide,
And his dark stag-hounds by his side,
He parts—the maid, unconscious still,
Watch'd him wind slowly round the hill;
But when his stately form was hid,
The guardian in her bosom cried—
"Thy Malcolm! vain and selfish maid!"
'Twas thus upbraiding conscience said,—
"Not so had Malcolm idly hung
On the smooth phrase of southern tongue;
Not so had Malcolm strain'd his eye,
Another step than thine to spy.
Wake, Allan-bane," alon she cried,
To the old Minstrel by her side,—

1 See Appendix, Note L.
2 MS.: "At tourneys where the brave resort."
3 MS.: "The loveliest Lowland fair to spy."
"Arouse thee from thy moody dream!
I'll give thy harp heroic theme,
And warm thee with a noble name;
Pour forth the glory of the Graeme!"¹
Scarse from her lips the word had rush'd,
When deep the conscious maiden blush'd;
For of his elan, in hall and bower,
Young Malcolm Graeme was held the flower.

VII.
The Minstrel waked his harp—three times
Arose the well-known martial chimes,
And thrice their high heroic pride
In melancholy murmurs died.
"Vainly thou bidst, oh, noble maid," Clasping his wither'd hands, he said,
"Vainly thou bidst me wake the strain,
Though all unwont to bid in vain.
Alas! than mine a mightier hand
Has tuned my harp, my strings has spann'd!
I touch the chords of joy, but low
And mournful answer notes of woe;
And the proud march, which victors tread,
Sink in the wailing for the dead,
Oh well for me, if mine alone
That dirge's deep prophetic tone!
If, as my tuneful fathers said,
This harp, which erst Saint Modan sway'd,²
Can thus its master's fate foretell,
Then welcome be the Minstrel's knell!

VIII.
"But ah! dear lady, thus it sigh'd
The eve thy sainted mother died;
And such the sounds which, while I strove
To wake a lay of war or love,
Came marring all the festal mirth,
Appalling me who gave them birth,
And, disobedient to my call,
Wail'd loud through Bothwell's banner'd hall,
Ere Douglasses, to ruin driven,³
Were exiled from their native heaven.—
Oh! if yet worse mishap and woe
My master's house must undergo,
Or aught but weal to Ellen fair
Brood in these accents of despair,
No future bard, sad Harp! shall sing
Triumph or rapture from thy string;
One short, one final strain shall flow,
Fraught with unutterable woe,
Then shiver'd shall thy fragments lie,
Thy master cast him down and die!"¹

IX.
Soothing she answer'd him, "Assuage,
Mine honor'd friend, the fears of age;
All melodies to thee are known,
That harp has rang, or pipe has blown,
In Lowland vale or Highland glen,
From Tweed to Spey—what marvel, then,
At times, unbidden notes should rise,
Confusely bound in memory's ties,
Entangling, as they rush along,
The war-march with the funeral song?—
Small ground is now for boding fear;
Obscure, but safe, we rest us here.
My sire, in native virtue great,
Resigning lordship, lands, and state,
Not then to fortune more resign'd
Than yonder oak might give the wind;
The graceful foliage storms may reave,
The noble stem they cannot grieve.
For me,"—she stoop'd, and, looking round,
Pluck'd a blue harebell from the ground,—
"For me, whose memory scarce conveys
An image of more splendid days,
This little flower, that loves the lea,
May well my simple emblem be;
It drinks heaven's dew as blithe as rose;
That in the king's own garden grows;
And when I place it in my hair,
Allan, a bard is bound to swear
He ne'er saw coronet so fair."—
Then playfully the chaplet wild
She wreathe'd in her dark locks, and smiled.

(X.)
Her smile, her speech, with winning sway,
Wiled the old harper's mood away.
With such a look as hermits throw,
When angels stoop to soothe their woe,
He gazed, till fond regret and pride
Thrill'd to a tear, then thus replied:
"Loveliest and best! thou little know'st
The rank, the honors, thou hast lost!
Oh might I live to see thee grace,
In Scotland's court, thy birth-right place,
To see my favorite's step advance,
The lightest in the courtly dance,
The cause of every gallant's sigh,
And leading star of every eye,
And theme of every minstrel's art,
The Lady of the Bleeding Heart!"—⁶

XI.
"Fair dreams are these," the maiden cried
(Light was her accent, yet she sigh'd);
"Yet is this mossy rock to me
Worth splendid chair and canopy;⁷
Nor would my footsteps spring more gay
In courtly dance than blithe strathspey,
Nor half so pleased mine ear incline
To royal minstrel's lay as thine.
And then for suitors proud and high,
To bend before my conquering eye,—
Thou, flattering bard! thyself wilt say,
That grim Sir Roderick owns its sway.
The Saxon scourge, Clan-Alpine's pride,
The terror of Loch Lomond's side,
Would, at my suit, thou know'st, delay
A Lennox foray—for a day.'—

XII.
The ancient bard his glee repress'd:
"Ill hast thou chosen theme for jest!
For who, through all this western wild,
Named Black Sir Roderick e'er, and smiled!
In Holy-Rood a knight he slew;¹
I saw, when back the dirk he drew,
Courtiers give place before the stride
Of the undaunted homilie;²
And since, though outlaw'd, hath his hand
Full sternly kept his mountain land,
Who else dared give—ah! woe the day,³
That I such hated truth should say—
The Douglas, like a stricken deer,
Disown'd by every noble peer,⁴
Even the rude refuge we have here?
Alas, this wild marauding Chief
Alone might hazard our relief,
And, now thy maiden charms expand,
Looks for his gerdon in thy hand;
Full soon may dispensation sought,
To back his suit, from Rome be brought.
Then, though an exile on the hill,
Thy father, as the Douglas, still
Be hold in reverence and fear;
And though to Roderick thou'rt so dear,
That thou mightst guide with silken thread,
Slave of thy will, this Chieftain dwell;
Yet, oh, loved maid, thy mirth refrain!
Thy hand is on a lion's mane,'—

XIII.
"Minstrel," the maid replied, and high
Her father's soul glanced from her eye,
"My debts to Roderick's house I know;
All that a mother could bestow
To Lady Margaret's care I owe,
Since first an orphan in the wild
She sorrow'd o'er her sister's child;
To her brave chieftain, son from ire
Of Scotland's king who shrouds my sire,
A deeper, holier debt is owed;
And, could I pay it with my blood,

Allan! Sir Roderick should command
My blood, my life,—but not my hand.
Rather will Ellen Douglas dwell
A votaress in Maronnan's cell;⁵
Rather through realms beyond the sea,
Seeking the world's cold charity,
Where ne'er was spoke a Scottish word,
And ne'er the name of Douglas heard,
An outcast pilgrim will she rove,
Than wuld the man she cannot love.⁶

XIV.
"Thou shakest, good friend, thy tresses gray,—
That pleading look, what can it say
But what I own?—I grant him brave,
But wild as Bracklinn's thundering wave?⁷
And generous—save vindictive mood,
Or jealous transport, chase his blood:
I grant him true to friendly band
As his claymore is to his hand;
But oh! that very blade of steel
More mercy for a foe would feel:
I grant him liberal, to fling
Among his clan the wealth they bring,
When back by lake and glen they wind,
And in the Lowland leave behind,
Where once some pleasant hamlet stood,
A mass of ashes shaked with blood.
The hand that for my father fought,
I honor, as his daughter ought;
But can I clasp it recking red,
From peasants slaughter'd in their shed?
No! wildly while his virtues gleam,
They make his passions darker seem,
And flash along his spirit high
Like lightning o'er the midnight sky.
While yet a child,—and children know,
Instinctive taught, the friend and foe,—
I shudder'd at his brow of gloom,
His shadowy plaid, and sable plume;
A maiden grown, I ill could bear
His haughty mien and lordly air:
But, if thou join'st a suitor's claim,
In serious mood, to Roderick's name,
I thrill with anguish! or, if e'er
A Douglas knew the word, with fear.
To change such odious theme were best,—
What think'st thou of our stranger guest?'—

XV.
"What think I of him? woe the while
That brought such wanderer to our isle!
Thy father's battle-brand, of yore
For T'ime-man forged by fairy lore,⁸

¹ See Appendix, Note P.
² MS.: "Courtiers give place with heartless stride
Of the retiring homilie."²
³ MS.: "Who else dared own the kindred claim
That bound him to thy mother's name?
Who else dared give," &c.
⁴ See Appendix, Note Q.
⁵ Ibid. Note R.
⁶ "Ellen is most exquisitely drawn, and could not have been improved by contrast. She is beautiful, frank, affectionate, rational, and playful, combining the innocence of a child with the elevated sentiments and courage of a heroine."—Quarterly Review.
⁷ See Appendix, Note S.
⁸ See Appendix, Note T.
"But wild as Beadnell's thundering wave;"
What time he leagued, no longer foes,
His Border spears with Hotspur's bows,
Did, self-unscabarded, foreshow
The footstep of a secret foe.1
If courtly spy hath harbor'd here,
What may we for the Douglas fear?
What for this island, deem'd of old
Clan-Alpine's last and surest hold?
If neither spy nor foe, I pray
What yet may jealous Roderick say?—
Nay, wave not thy disdainful head:
Bethink thee of the discord dread
That kindled when at Beltane game
Thou ledst the dance with Malcolm Graeme;
Still, though thy sire the peace renew'd,
Smoulders in Roderick's breast the feud;
Beware!—But hark, what sounds are these?2
My dull ears catch no faltering breeze,
No weeping birch, nor aspens wake,
No breath is dimpling in the lake,
Still is the canna's3 hoary beard,
Yet, by my minstrel faith, I heard—
And hark again! some pipe of war
Sends the bold pibroch from afar."

XVI.

Far up the length'n'd lake were spied
Four darkening specks upon the tide,
That, slow enlarging on the view,
Four mann'd and masted barges grew,
And, bearing downwards from Glengyle,
Seek'd full upon the lonely isle;
The point of Brianchoil they pass'd,
And, to the windward as they cast,
Against the sun they gave to shine
The bold Sir Roderick's banner'd Pine,
Nearer and nearer as they bear,
Spears, pikes, and axes flash in air.
Now might you see the tartans brave,
And plaids and plumage dance and wave;
Now see the bonnets sink and rise,
As his tough oar the rower plies;
See, flashing at each sturdy stroke,
The wave ascending into smoke;
See the proud pipers on the bow,
And mark the gaudy streamers flow
From their loud chanters4 down, and sweep
The furrow'd bosom of the deep,
As, rushing through the lake amain,
They plied the ancient Highland strain.

XVII.

Ever, as on they bore, more loud
And louder rung the pibroch proud.
At first the sound, by distance tame,
Mellow'd along the waters came,
And, lingering long by cape and bay,
Wail'd every harsher note away;
Then bursting bolder on the ear,
The clan's shrill Gathering they could hear;
Those thrilling sounds, that call the might
Of old Clan-Alpine to the fight.5
Thick beat the rapid notes, as when
The mustering hundreds shake the glen,
And, hurrying at the signal dread,
The batter'd earth returns their tread,
Then prelude light, of livelier tone,
Express'd their merry marching on,
Ere peal of closing battle rose,
With mingled outcry, shrieks, and blows;
And mimie din of stroke and ward,
As broadsword upon target jarr'd;
And groaning pause, ere yet again,
Condensed, the battle yell'd amain;
The rapid charge, the rallying shout,
Retreat borne headlong into rout,
And bursts of triumph, to declare
Clan-Alpine's conquest—all were there.
Nor ended thus the strain: but slow,
Sunk in a moan prolong'd and low,
And changed the conquering clarion swell,
For wild lament o'er those that fell.

XVIII.

The war-pipes ceased; but lake and hill
Were busy with their echoes still;
And, when they slept, a vocal strain
Rade their hoarse chorus wake again,
While loud a hundred clansmen raise
Their voices in their Chieftain's praise.
Each boatman, heading to his oar,
With measured sweep the burden bore,
In such wild cadence as the breeze
Makes through December's leafless trees,
The chorus first could Allan know,
"Roderick Vich Alpine, ho! iro!"
And near and nearer as they row'd,
Distinct the martial ditty flow'd.

XIX.

Beat Song.

Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances!
Honor'd and bless'd be the ever-green Pine!
Long may the tree, in his banner that glances,
Flourish, the shelter and grace of our line!
Heaven send it happy dew,
Earth lend it sap anew,
Gayly to bourgeoyn, and broadly to grow,
While every Highland glen Sends our shout back a'gen
"Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroc!"6 procession, are given with inimitable spirit and power of expression."—JEFFREY.

1 See Appendix, Note U.
2 "The moving picture—the effect of the sounds—and the wild character and strong peculiar nationality of the whole
3 Cotton-grass.
4 The pipe of the bagpipe.
5 See Appendix, Note V.
6 Ibid. Note W.
SCOTT’S POETICAL WORKS.

Ours is no sapling, chance-rown by the fountain,
Blooming at Beltane, in winter to fade;
When the whirlwind has stripp’d every leaf on the mountain,

The more shall Clan-Alpine exult in her shade.
Moor’d in the rifled rock,
Proof to the tempest’s shock,
Firmer he roots him the ruder it blow;
Menteith and Breadalbane, then,
Echo his praise a-gen,
“Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!”

XX.

Proudly our pibroch has thrill’d in Glen Fruin,
And Bannochar’s groans to our slogan replied;
Glen Luss and Ross-dhu, they are smoking in ruin,
And the best of Loch Lomond lie dead on her side.
Widow and Saxon maid
Long shall lament our raid,
Think of Clan-Alpine with fear and with woe;
Lennox and Leven-glen
Shake when they hear a-gen,
“Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!”

Row, vassals, row, for the pride of the Highlands!
Stretch to your oars, for the ever-green Pine!
Oh that the rose-bud that graces your islands
Were wreathe in a garland around him to twine!
Oh that some sowing gem
Worthy such noble stem,
Honour’d and bless’d in their shadow might grow!
Loud should Clan-Alpine then
Ring from her deepmost glen,
“Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!”

XXI.

With all her joyful female band
Had Lady Margaret sought the strand.
Loose on the breeze their tresses flew,
And high their snowy arms they throw,
As echoing back with shrill acclaim,
And chorus wild, the Chieftain’s name;
While, prompt to please, with mother’s art,
The darling passion of his heart,
The Dame call’d Ellen to the strand,
To greet her kinsman ere he land:
“Come, loiterer, come! a Douglas thou,
And shun to wreathe a victor’s brow?”—
Reluctantly and slow, the maid
The unwelcome summoning obey’d,
And, when a distant bugle rung,
In the mid-path aside she sprung:—

“List, Allan-bane! From mainland cast,
I hear my father’s signal blast.
Be ours,” she cried, “the skiff to guide,
And waft him from the mountain side.”
Then, like a sunbeam, swift and bright,
She darted to her sloop light,
And, eagerly while Roderick sawn’d,
For her dear form, his mother’s band,
The islet far behind her lay,
And she had landed in the bay.

XXII.

Some feelings are to mortals given
With less of earth in them than heaven:
And if there be a human tear
From passion’s dross refined and clear,
A tear so limpid and so meek,
It would not stain an angel’s cheek;
’Tis that which pious fathers shed
Upon a duteous daughter’s head!
And as the Douglas to his breast
His darling Ellen closely press’d,
Such holy drops her tresses steep’d,
Though ’twas a hero’s eye that weep’d.
Nor while on Ellen’s faltering tongue
Her filial welcomes crowded hung,
Mark’d she that fear (affection’s proof)
Still held a graceful youth aloof;
No! not till Douglas named his name,
Although the youth was Malcolm Grame.

XXIII.

Allan, with wistful look the while,
Mark’d Roderick landing on the isle;
His master piteously he eyed,
Then gazed upon the Chieftain’s pride.
Then dash’d, with hasty hand, away
From his dimm’d eye the gathering spray;
And Douglas, as his hand he laid
On Malcolm’s shoulder, kindly said,
“Canst thou, young friend, no meaning spy
In my poor follower’s glistening eye?
I’ll tell thee:—he recalls the day
When in my praise he led the lay
O’er the arch’d gate of Bothwell proud,
While many a minstrel answer’d loud,
When Percy’s Norman pennon, won
In bloody field, before me shone,
And twice ten knights, the least a name
As mighty as yon Chief may claim,
Gracing my pomp, behind me came.

1 See Appendix, Note X.
2 “However we may dislike the geographical song and chorus, half English and half Erse, which is sung in praise of the warrior, we must allow that in other respects the hero of a poem has seldom, if ever, been introduced with finer effect, or in a manner better calculated to excite the expectations of the reader, than on the present occasion.”—Critical Review.
3 MS.: “The chorus to the Chieftain’s fame.”
4 MS.: “Nor while on Ellen’s faltering tongue
Her filial greetings eager hung,
Mark’d not that awe (affection’s proof)
Still held you gentle youth aloof;
No! not till Douglas named his name,
Although the youth was Malcolm Grame.
Then, with flash’d cheek and domineer eye,
Their greeting was confused and shy.”
Yet trust me, Malcolm, not so proud
Was I of all that marshall'd crowd,
Though the waned crescent own'd my might,
And in my train troop'd lord and knight,
Though Blantyre hymn'd her holiest lays,
And Bothwell's bards flung back my praise,
As when this old man's silent tear,
And this poor maid's affection dear,
A welcome give more kind and true
Than aught my better fortunes knew.
Forgive, my friend, a father's boast;
Oh, it out-beggars all I lost!"

XXIV.
Delightful praise!—Like summer rose,
That brighter in the dew-drop glows,
The bashful maiden's cheek appear'd,
For Douglas spoke, and Malcolm heard.
The flush of shamefaced joy to hide,
The hounds, the hawk, her cares divide;
The loved caresses of the maid
The dogs with crouch and whimper paid,
And, at her whistle, on her hand
The falcon took his favorite stand,
Closed his dark wing, relax'd his eye,
Nor, though unhooded, sought to fly,
And trust, while in such guise she stood,
Like fabled goddess of the wood,
That if a father's partial thought
Overweigh'd her worth and beauty aught,
Well might the lover's judgment fail
To balance with a juster scale;
For with each secret glance he stole,
The fond enthusiast sent his soul.

XXV.
Of stature tall, and slender frame,
But finely knit, was Malcolm Greme.
The belted plaid and tartan hose
Did ne'er more graceful limbs disclose;
His flexed hair, of sunny hue,
Curled closely round his bonnet blue.
Train'd to the chase, his eagle eye
The ptarmigan in snow could spy:
Each pass, by mountain, lake, and heath,
He knew, through Lennox and Menteith;
Vain was the bound of dark-brown doe
When Malcolm bent his sounding bow,
And scarce that doe, though wing'd with fear,
Outstripp'd in speed the mountaineer:
Right up Benlomond could he press,
And not a sob his toil confess.
His form accorded with a mind
Lively and ardent, frank and kind;
A blither heart, till Ellen came,
Did never love nor sorrow tame;
It danced as lightsome in his breast
As play'd the feather on his crest.

Yet friends who nearest knew the youth,
His scorn of wrong, his zeal for truth,
And bards, who saw his features bold,
When kindled by the tales of old,
Said, were that youth to manhood grown,
Not long should Roderick Dhu's renown
Be foremost voiced by mountain fame,
But quail to that of Malcolm Greme.

XXVI.
Now back they wend their watery way;
And, "Oh, my sire!" did Ellen say,
"Why urge thy chase so far astray?
And why so late return'd? And why"—
The rest was in her speaking eye.
"My child, the chase I follow far,
'Tis mimicry of noble war;
And with that gallant pastime reft
Were all of Douglas I have left.
I met young Malcolm as I stray'd
Far eastward, in Glenfinlas' shade,
Nor stray'd I safe; for, all around,
Hunters and horsemens scorn'd the ground.
This youth, though still a royal ward,
Risk'd life and land to be my guard,
And through the passes of the wood
Guided my steps, not pursu'd;
And Roderick shall his welcome make,
Despite old spleen, for Douglas's sake.
Then must he seek Strath-Endrick glen,
Nor peril aught for me ajen."

XXVII.
Sir Roderick, who to meet them came,
Redden'd at sight of Malcolm Greme,
Yet not in action, word, or eye,
Fail'd aught in hospitality.
In talk and sport they whiled away
The morning of that summer day;
But at high noon a courier light
Held secret parley with the knight,
Whose moody aspect soon declared
That evil were the news he heard.
Deep thought seem'd toiling in his head;
Yet was the evening banquet made,
Ere he assembled round the flame
His mother, Douglas, and the Greme,
And Ellen too; then east around
His eyes, then fix'd them on the ground,
As studying phrase that might avail
Best to convey unpleasant tale.
Long with his dagger's hilt he play'd,
Then raised his haughty brow, and said:—

XXVIII.
"Short be my speech;—nor time affords,
Nor my plain temper, glozing words,
Kinsman and father—if such name
Douglas vouchsafe to Roderick's claim;—
Mine honor'd mother;—Ellen—why,
My cousin, turn away thine eye?—
And Graeme—in whom I hope to know
Full soon a noble friend or foe,
When age shall give thee thy command
And leading in thy native land,—
List all!—The King's vindictive pride
Boasts to have tamed the Border-side,
Where chiefs, with hound and hawk who came
To share their monarch's sylvan game,
Themselves in bloody toils were snared;
And when the banquet they prepared,
And wide their loyal portals flung,
O'er their own gateway struggling hung.
Loud cries their blood from Meggat's mead,
From Yarrow braes, and banks of Tweed,
Where the lone streams of Ettrick glide,
And from the silver Teviot's side;
The dales, where martial clans did ride,
Are now one sheep-walk, waste and wide.
This tyrant of the Scottish throne,
So faithless and so ruthless known,
Now hither comes; his end the same,
The same pretext of sylvan game.
What grace for Highland Chiefs, judge ye
By fate of Border chivalry.
Yet more: amid Glenfinlas green,
Douglas, thy stately form was seen;
This by espial sure I know:
Your counsel in the straitest I show."

XXIX.
Ellen and Margaret fearfully
Sought comfort in each other's eye,
Then turn'd their ghastly look, each one,
This to her sire—that to her son.
The hasty color went and came
In the bold cheek of Malcolm Graeme;
But from his glance it well appear'd
'Twas but for Ellen that he fear'd;
While, sorrowful but undismay'd,
The Douglas thus his counsel said:—
"Brave Roderick, though the tempest roar,
It may but thunder and pass o'er;
Nor will I here remain an hour,
To draw the lightning on thy bower;
For well thou know'st, at this gray head
The royal bolt were fiercest sped.
For thee, who, at thy King's command,
Canst aid him with a gallant band,
Submission, homage, humbled pride,
Shall turn the Monarch's wrath aside.
Poor remnants of the Bleeding Heart,
Ellen and I will seek, apart,
The refuge of some forest cell,
There, like the hunted quarry, dwell,
Till on the mountain and the moor
The stern pursuit be pass'd and o'er."—

XXX.
"No, by mine honor," Roderick said,
"So help me Heaven, and my good blade! No, never! Blastèd be you Pine,
My father's ancient crest and mine,
If from its shade in danger part
The lineage of the Bleeding Heart!
Hear my blunt speech: grant me this
To wife, thy counsel to mine aid;
To Douglas, leagued with Roderick Dhu,
Will friends and allies flock now;—
Like cause of doubt, distrust, and grief,
Will bind to us each Western Chief.
When the loud pipes my bridal tell,
The Links of Forth shall hear the knell,
The guards shall start in Stirling's porch;
And, when I light the nuptial torch,
A thousand villages in flames
Shall scent the slumber's of King James!
—Nay, Ellen, blest not thus away,
And, mother, cease these signs, I pray;
I meant not all my heart might say.—
Small need of inroad, or of fight,
When the sage Douglas may unite
Each mountain clan in friendly band,
To guard the passes of their land,
Till the foil'd King, from pathless glen,
Shall bootless turn him home agen."

XXXI.
There are who have, at midnight hour,
In slumber sealed a dizzy tower,
And, on the verge that beetle d o'er
The ocean-tide's incessant roar,
Dream'd calmly out their dangerous dream,
Till waken'd by the morning beam;
When, dazzled by the eastern glow,
Such startler cast his glance below,
And saw unmeasured depth around,
And heard uninterrupted sound,
And thought the battled fence so frail,
It waved like cobweb in the gale;—
Amid his senses' giddy wheel,
Did he not desparate impulse feel
Headlong to plunge himself below,
And meet the worst his fears foreshow?—
Thus Ellen, dizzy and astound,
As sudden ruin yawn'd around,
By crossing terrors wildly toss'd,
Still for the Douglas fearing most,

1 See Appendix, Note Y.
2 MS.: "The dales where clans were wont to bide."
3 See Appendix, Note Z.
4 MS.: "Till the foil'd King, from hill and glen."
5 MS.: "Dream'd calmly out their desperate dream."
THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

Could scarce the desperate thought withstand,
To buy his safety with her hand.

XXXII.
Such purpose dread could Malcolm spy
In Ellen's quivering lip and eye,
And eager rose to speak—but ere
His tongue could hurl forth his fear,
Had Douglas mark'd the hectic strife,
Where death seem'd combating with life;
For to her cheek, in feverish flood,
One instant rush'd the throbbing blood,
Then ebbing back, with sudden sway,
Left its domain as wan as clay.
"Roderick, enough! enough!" he cried,
"My daughter cannot be thy bride;
Not that the blush to wooer dear,
Nor paleness that of maiden fear.
It may not be—forbid her, Chief,
Nor hazard aught for our relief.
Against his sovereign, Douglas ne'er
Will level a rebellious spear.
'Twas I that taught his youthful hand
To rein a steed and wield a brand:
I see him yet, the princely boy!
Not Ellen more my pride and joy;
I love him still, despite my wrongs,
By hasty wrath, and slanderous tongues.
Oh seek the grace you well may find
Without a cause to mine combined."

XXXIII.
Twice through the hall the Chieftain strode;
The wave of his tartans broad,
And darken'd brow, where wounded pride
With ire and disappointment vied,
Seem'd, by the torch's gloomy light,
Like the ill Demon of the night,
Stooping his pinions shadowy sway
Upon the nighted pilgrim's way:
But, unrequited Love! thy dart
Plunged deepest in envenom'd heart,
And Roderick, with thine anguish stung,
At length the band of Douglas wrung,
While eyes, that mock'd at tears before,
With bitter drops were running o'er.
The death-pangs of long-cherish'd hope
Scare in that ample breast had scope,
But, struggling with his spirit proud,
Convulsive heaved its chequer'd shroud.
While every sob—so mutely were all—
Was heard distinctly through the hall.

1 MS.: "The deep-toned anguish of despair
Flash'd, in fierce jealousy, to air."
2 "There is something foppish and out of character in Malcolm's rising to lead Ellen out from her own parlor; and the sort of wrestling match that takes place between the rival chieftains on the occasion is humiliating and indecorous."—JEFFREY.
3 MS.: "Thus as they strove, each better hand
Grasp'd for the dagger or the brand."

The son's despair, the mother's look,
Ill might the gentle Ellen brook;
She rose, and to her side there came,
To aid her parting steps, the Græme.

XXXIV.
Then Roderick from the Douglas broke—
As flashes flame through sable smoke,
Kindling its wreaths, long, dark, and low,
To one broad blaze of ruddy glow,
So the deep anguish of despair
Burst, in fierce jealousy, to air.
With stalwart grasp his hand he laid
On Malcolm's breast and belted plaid:
"Back, ye lads!" he sternly cried,
"Back, ye lads!" he sternly said,
"Back, ye lads! hold thy Anne.

The lesson I so lately taught?
This roof, the Douglas, and that maid,
Thank thou for punishment delay'd."
Eager as greyhound on his game,
Fiercely with Roderick grappled Græme;
"Perish my name, if aught afford
Its Chieftain safety save his sword!"
Thus as they strove, their desperate hand
Gripped to the dagger or the brand,
And death had been—but Douglas rose,
And thrust between the struggling foes.
His giant strength:—"Chieftains, forego!
I hold the first who strikes, my foe."
Madmen, forbear your frantic jar!
What! is the Douglas fall'n so far,
His daughter's hand is doom'd the spoil
Of such dishonorable broil!"
Sullen and slowly they unclasp,
As struck with shame, their desperate grasp,
And each upon his rival glared,
With foot advanced, and blade half bared.

XXXV.
Ere yet the brands aloft were flung,
Margaret on Roderick's mantle hung,
And Malcolm heard his Ellen's scream,
As falter'd through terrific dream.
Then Roderick plunged in sheath his sword,
And veil'd his wrath in scornful word.
"Rest safe till morning; pity 'twere
Such cheek should feel the midnight air!"
Then mayest thou to James Stuart tell,
Roderick will keep the lake and fell,
Nor lackey, with his freeborn clan,
The pageant pomp of earthly man.

4 The author has to apologize for the inadvertent appropriation of a whole line from the tragedy of "Douglas"—
"I hold the first who strikes, my foe."

Note to the second edition.

5 MS.: "Sullen and slow the rivals bold
Loosed, at his hest, their desperate hold,
But either still on other glaring," &c.

6 See Appendix, Note 2 A.
More would he of Clan-Alpine know,
Thou canst our strength and passes show.—
Malise, what ho!—his heichman came;
"Give our safe-conduct to the Graeme."
Young Malcolm answer'd, calm and bold,
"Fear nothing for thy favorite hold;
The spot, an angel deign'd to grace,
Is bless'd, though robbers haunt the place.
Thy churlish courtesy for those
Reserve, who fear to be thy foes.
As safe to me the mountain way
At midnight as in blaze of day,
Though with his boldest at his back
Even Roderick Dhu beset the track.—
Brave Douglas,—lovely Ellen,—nay,
Nought here of parting will I say.
Earth does not hold a lonesome glen
So secret, but we meet again.—
Chieftain! we too shall find an hour;"—
He said, and left the sylvan bower.

XXXVI.

Old Allan follow'd to the strand
(Such was the Douglas's command),
And anxious told how, on the morn,
The stern Sir Roderick deep had sworn
The Fiery Cross should circle o'er
Dale, glen, and valley, down, and moor.
Might were the peril to the Graeme
From those who to the signal came;
Far up the lake 't were safest land,
Himself would row him to the strand.
He gave his counsel to the wind,
While Malcolm did, unheedng, bind,
Round dirk and pouch and broadsword roll'd,
His ample plaid in titter'd fold,
And stripp'd his limbs to such array
As best might suit the watery way,—

XXXVII.

Then spoke abrupt: "Farewell to thee,
Pattern of old fidelity!"
The Minstrel's hand he kindly press'd,—
"Oh! could I point a place of rest!
My sovereign holds in ward my land,
My uncle leads my vassal band;
To tame his foes, his friends to aid,
Poor Malcolm has but heart and blade.
Yet, if there be one faithful Grame
Who loves the Chieftain of his name,
Not long shall honor'd Douglas dwell
Like hunted stag in mountain cell;
Nor, ere ye pride-swol'n robber dare,—
I may not give the rest to air!
Tell Roderick Dhu, I owed him nought,
Not the poor service of a boat,
To waft me to yon mountain side."
Then plunged he in the flashing tide,
Bold o'er the flood his head he bore,
And stoutly steer'd him from the shore;
And Allan strain'd his anxious eye,
Far 'mid the lake his form to spy.
Darkening across each puny wave,
To which the moon her silver gave,
Fast as the cormorant could skim,
The swimmer plied each active limb;
Then landing in the moonlight dell,
Loud shouted of his weal to tell.
The Minstrel heard the far halloo,
And joyful from the shore withdrew.

The Lady of the Lake.

CANTO THIRD.

The Gathering.

I.

TIME rolls his ceaseless course. The race of yore,
Who danced our infancy upon their knee,
And told our marvelling boyhood legends store
Of their strange ventures happ'd by land or sea,
How are they blotted from the things that be!
How few, all weak and wither'd of their force,
Wait on the verge of dark eternity,
Like stranded wrecks, the tide returning hoarse,
To sweep them from our sight! Time rolls his ceaseless course.

Yet live there still who can remember well
How, when a mountain chief his bugle blew,
Both field and forest, dingle, cliff, and dell,
And solitary heath, the signal knew;
And fast the faithful clan around him drew,
What time the warning note was keenly wound,
What time aloft their kindred banner flew,
While clamorous war-pipes yell'd the gathering sound,
And while the Fiery Cross glanced, like a meteor, round.

II.

The summer dawn's reflected hue
To purple changed Loch Katrine blue;
Mildly and soft the western breeze
Just kiss'd the lake, just stirr'd the trees,
And the pleased lake, like maiden coy,
Trembled but dimpled not for joy;
The mountain shadows on her breast
Were neither broken nor at rest;

1 See Appendix, Note 2 B.
2 MS.: "He spoke, and plunged into the tide."
3 "There are no separate introductions to the cantos of this poem; but each of them begins with one or two stanzas in the measure of Spenser, usually containing some reflections connected with the subject about to be entered on, and written, for the most part, with great tenderness and beauty. The following, we think, is among the most striking."—JEFFREY.
4 See Appendix, Note 2 C.
In bright uncertainty they lie,
Like future joys to Fancy's eye.
The water-lily to the light
Her chalice rear'd of silver bright;
The doe awoke, and to the lawn,
Begemmed with dewdrops, led her fawn;
The gray mist left the mountain side,
The torrent show'd its glistening pride;
Invisible in flecked sky,
The lark sent down her revelry;
The blackbird and the speckled thrush
Good-morrow gave from brake and bush;¹
In answer cool'd the cushat dove
Her notes of peace, and rest, and love.

III.
No thought of peace, no thought of rest,
Assumed the storm in Roderick's breast.
With sheathed broadsword in his hand,
Abrupt he paced the islet strand,
And eyed the rising sun, and laid
His hand on his impatient blade.
Beneath a rock, his vassals' care²
Was prompt the ritual to prepare,
With deep and deathful meaning fraught;
For such Antiquity had taught
Was preface meet, ere yet abroad
The Cross of Fire should take its road.
The shrinking band stood aghast
At the impatient glance he cast;—
Such glance the mountain eagle threw,
As, from the cliffs of Benvenne,
She spread her dark sails on the wind,
And, high in middle heaven reclined,
With her broad shadow on the lake,
Silenced the warblers of the brake.

IV.
A heap of wither'd boughs was piled,
Of juniper and rowan wild,
Mingled with shivers from the oak,
Rent by the lightning's recent stroke.
Brian, the Hermit, by it stood,
Barefooted, in his frock and hood.

The Lady of the Lake.

His grised hair and matted hair
Obscured a visage of despair;
His naked arms and legs, seem'd o'er,
The sears of frantic penance bore.
That monk, of savage form and face,⁴
The impending danger of his race
Had drawn from deepest solitude,
Far in Benharrow's bosom rude.
Not his the mien of Christian priest,
But Druid's, from the grave released,
Whose harden'd heart and eye might brook
On human sacrifice to look;
And much, 'twas said, of heathen lore
Mix'd in the charms he mutter'd o'er.
The hallow'd creed gave only worse⁵
And deadlier emphasis of curse;
No peasant sought that Hermit's prayer,
His cave the pilgrim shunn'd with care,
The eager huntsman knew his bound,
And in mid chase call'd off his hound;
Or if, in lonely glen or strath,
The desert dweller met his path,
He pray'd, and sign'd the cross between,
While terror took devotion's mien.⁶

V.
Of Brian's birth strange tales were told,⁷
His mother watch'd a midnight fold,
Built deep within a dreary glen,
Where scatter'd lay the bones of men,
In some forgotten battle slain,
And blest by drifting wind and rain.
It might have tamed a warrior's heart⁸
To view such mockery of his art!
The knot-grass fetter'd there the hand
Which once could burst an iron band;
Beneath the broad and ample bone,
That buckler'd heart to fear unknown,
A feeble and a timorous guest,
The field-fare framed her lowly nest;
There the slow blind-worm left his slime
On the fleet limbs that mock'd at time;
And there, too, lay the leader's skull,⁹
Still wreathed with chaplet, flusk'd and full,

For Fame is there to say who bleeds,
And Honor's eye on daring deeds.
But when all is past, it is humbling to tread
Over the werting field of the tombless dead,
And see worms of the earth, and fowls of the air,
Beasts of the forest, all gathering there;
All regarding man as their prey,
All rejoicing in his decay.—Byron. Siege of Corinth.

⁴ "Remove you skull from out the scatter'd heaps.
Is that a temple where a god may dwell?
Why, 'e'en the worm at last discards her shatter'd cell!
Look on its broken arch, its ruin'd wall,
Its chambers desolate, and portals foul!
Yes, this was once ambition's airy hall,
The dome of thought, the palace of the soul;
Behold through each lack-lustre, eyeless hole,
The gay recess of wisdom and of wit,

¹ MS. "The doe awoke, and to the lawn,
Begemmed with dewdrops, led her fawn;
Invisible in fleecy cloud,
The lark sent down her matrons loud;
The light mist left," &c.

² "The green hills Are clothed with early blossoms; through the grass
The quick-eyed lizard rustles, and the bills
Of summer birds sing welcome as ye pass."—Childe Harold.

³ MS. "Hard by, his vassals' early care
The mystic ritual prepare."}

⁴ See Appendix, Note 2 D.

⁵ MS. "While the bless'd creed gave only worse."

⁶ MS. "If pray'd with many a cross between,
And terror took devotion's mien."

⁷ See Appendix, Note 2 E.

⁸ "There is something of pride in the perilous hour,
Whate'er be the shape in which death may lower;"
For heath-bell, with her purple bloom,
Supplied the bonnet and the plume.
All night, in this sad glen, the maid
Sat, shrouded in her mantle's shade:
—She said, no shepherd sought her side,
No hunter's hand her snood untied,
Yet ne'er again to braid her hair
The virgin snood did Alice wear:
Gone was her maiden glee and sport,
Her maiden girdle all too short,
Nor sought she, from that fatal night,
Or holy church or blessed rites,
But lock'd her secret in her breast,
And died in travail, unconfess'd.

VI.
Alone, among his young compeers,
Was Brian from his infant years;
A moody and heart-broken boy,
Strang'd from sympathies and joy,
Bearing each taunt which careless tongue
On his mysterious lineage hung.
Whole nights he spent by moonlight pale,
To wood and stream his hap to wait,
Till, frantic, he as truth receiv'd;
What of his birth the crowd believed,
And sought, in mist and meteor fire,
To meet and know his Phantom Sire!
In vain, to soothe his wayward fate,
The elop'd oped her pitting gate;
In vain the learning of the age
Uncas'd the sable-letter'd page;
Even in its treasures he could find
Food for the fever of his mind,
Eager he read whatever tells
Of magic, cabala, and spells,
And every dark pursuit allied
To curious and presumptuous pride;
Till with fired brain and nerves o'er-strung,
And heart with mystic horrors wrung,
Desperate he sought Benharrow's den,
And hid him from the haunts of men.

VII.
The desert gave him visions wild,
Such as might suit the spectre's child:
Where with black cliffs the torrents toil,
He watch'd the wheeling eddies boil,
Till, from their foam, his dazzled eyes
Beheld the River Demon rise;

And passion's host, that never brook'd control:
Can all saint, sage, or sophist ever writ
People this lonely tower, this tenement reft?"—Childe Harold.

1 "These reflections on an ancient field of battle afford the most remarkable instance of false taste in all Mr. Scott's writings. Yet the brevity and variety of the images serve well to show that even in his errors there are traces of a powerful genius."—Jeffrey.

The mountain mist took form and limb,
Of mooncide hug, or goblin grim;
The midnight wind came wild and dread,
Swell'd with the voices of the dead;
Far on the future battle-heath
His eye beheld the ranks of death:
Thus the lone Seer, from mankind hurl'd,
Shaped forth a disembodied world.
One lingering sympathy of mind
Still bound him to the mortal kind;
The only parent he could claim
Of ancient Alpine's lineage came.
Late had he heard, in prophet's dream,
The fatal Ben-Shie's doleful scream
Sounds, too, had come in midnight blast,
Of charging steeds, career fast
Along Benharrow's singly side,
Where mortal horseman ne'er might ride;
The thunderbolt had split the pine,—
All augur'd ill to Alpine's line.
He girt his loins, and came to show
The signals of impending woe,
And now stood prompt to bless or ban,
As bade the Chieftain of his clan.

VIII.
'Twas all prepared;—and from the rock,
A goat, the patriarch of the flock,
Before the kindling pile was laid,
And pierced by Roderick's ready blade,
Patient the sickening victim eyed
The life-blood ebb in crimson tide,
Down his clogg'd beard and shaggy limb,
Till darkness glaz'd his eyeballs dim.
The grisly priest, with murmuring prayer,
A slender croslet form'd with care,
A cubit's length in measure due;
The shaft and limbs were rods of yew,
Whose parents in Inch-Cailliach wave'd,
Their shadows o'er Clan-Alpine's grave,
And, answering Lomond's breezes deep,
Sooth'd many a chieftain's endless sleep.
The Cross, thus form'd, he held on high,
With wasted hand, and haggard eye,
And strange and mingled feelings woke,
While his anathema he spoke:

IX.
"Woe to the clansman who shall view
This symbol of sepulchral yew,
Forgetful that its branches grew
Where weep the heavens their holiest dew

2 See Appendix, Note 2 F.
3 Ms.: "Till, driven to frenzy, he believed
The legend of his birth received."
4 See Appendix, Note 2 G.
5 Ms.: "The fatal Ben-Shie's distant scream;
And seen her wrinkled form, the sign
Of woe and death to Alpine's line."
6 See Appendix, Note 2 L.
7 Ibid. Note 2 K.
On Alpine's dwelling low!
Deserter of his Chieftain's trust,
He ne'er shall mingle with their dust,
But, from his sires and kindred thrust,
Each clansman's execution just Shall doom him wrath and woe."1
He paused;—the word the vassals took,
With forward step and fiery look,
On high their naked brands they shook,
Their clattering targets wildly strook;
And first in murmur low,2
Then, like the billow in his course,
That far to seaward finds his source,
And flings to shore his master'd force,
Burst, with loud roar, their answer hoarse,
"Woe to the traitor, woe!"
Ben-an's gray scalp the accents knew,
The joyous wolf from covert drew,
The exulting eagle scream'd afar,—
They knew the voice of Alpine's war.

X.
The shout was hush'd on lake and fell,—
The monk resumed his mutter'd spell:
Dismal and low its accents came,
The while he seathed the Cross with flame;
And the few words that reach'd the air,
Although the holiest name was there,3
Had more of blasphemy than prayer.
But when he shook above the crowd
Its kindled points, he spoke aloud:
"Woe to the wretch who fails to rear
At this dread sign the ready spear!
For, as the flames this symbol near,
His home, the refuge of his fear,
A kindred fate shall know;
Far o'er its roof the volumed flame
Clan-Alpine's vengeance shall proclaim,
While maid and matron on his name
Shall call down wretchedness and shame,
And infamy and woe."4
Then rose the cry of females, shrill
As goss-hawk's whistle on the hill,
Denouncing misery and ill,
Mingled with childhood's babbling trill
Of curses stammer'd slow;
Answering, with imprecation dread,
"Sunk be his home in embers red!
And cursed be the meanest shed
That e'er shall hide the houseless head
We doom to want and woe!"5
A sharp and shrieking echo gave,
Coir-Uriskin, thy goblin cave!
And the gray pass where birches wave,
On Beal-na-nam-bo.

XI.
Then deeper paused the priest anew,
And hard his laboring breath he drew,
While with set teeth and clenched hand,
And eyes that glow'd like fiery brand,
He meditated curse more dread,
And deadlier, on the clansman's head
Who, summon'd to his Chieftain's aid,
The signal saw and disobey'd.
The crosset's points of sparkling wood
He quench'd among the bubbling blood,
And, as again the sign he rear'd,
Hollow and hoarse his voice was heard:
"When fits this Cross from man to man,
Vich-Alpine's summons to his clan,
Burst be the ear that fails to heed!
Palsied the foot that shuns to speed!
May ravens tear the careless eyes,
Wolves make the coward heart their prize!
As sinks that blood-stream in the earth,
So may his heart's blood drench his heart!
As dies in hissing gore the spark,
Quench thou his light, Destruction dark!
And be the grace to him denied,
Bought by this sign to all beside!"6
He ceased; no echo gave agen
The murmur of the deep Amen.4

XII.
Then Roderick, with impatient look,
From Brian's hand the symbol took:
"Speed, Malise, speed!" he said, and gave
The crosset to his henchman brave.
"The muster-place be Laurick mead—5
Instant the time—speed, Malise, speed!"
Like heath-bird when the hawks pursue,
A barge across Loch Katrine flew;
High stood the henchman on the prow;
So rapidly the barge-men row,
The bubbles, where they launch'd the boat,
Were all unbroken and afloat,
Dancing in foam and ripple still,
When it had near'd the mainland hill;
And from the silver beach's side
Still was the prow three fathom wide,
When lightly bounded to the land
The messenger of blood and brand.

XIII.
Speed, Malise, speed! the dun deer's hide
On fleeter foot was never tied;6
Speed, Malise, speed! such cause of haste
Thine active sinews never braced.
Bend 'gainst the steepy hill thy breast,
Burst down like torrent from its crest;

1 MS.: "Our warriors, on his worthless bust,
Shall speak disgrace and woe."
2 MS.: "Their clattering targets hardly strook;
And first they mutter'd low."
3 MS.: "Although the holy name was there."
4 MS.: "The murther-mutter'd deep Amen."
5 MS.: "Marlagon is the spot decreed."
6 See Appendix, Note 2 L.
With short and springing footstep pass
The trembling bog and false morass;
Across the brook like roebeck bound,
And thread the brake like questing hound;
The crag is high, the sceur is deep,
Yet shrink not from the desperate leap:
Parch’d are thy burning lips and brow,
Yet by the fountain pause not now;
Herald of battle, fate, and fear,
Stretch onward in thy fleet career!
The wounded hind thou track’st not now,
Pursue not maid through Greenwood bough,
Nor pliest thou now thy flying pace
With rivals in the mountain race;
But danger, death, and warrior deed,
Are in thy course—speed, Malise, speed!

XIV.
Fast as the fatal symbol flies,
In arms the huts and hamlets rise;
From winding glen, from upland brown,
They pour’d each hardly tenant down.
Nor slack’d the messenger his pace;
He show’d the sign, he named the place,
And, pressing forward like the wind,
Left clmor and surprise behind,²
The fisherman forsook the strand,
The swarthy smith took dirk and brand;
With changed cheer, the mower blithe
Left in the half-cut swath the scythe;
The herds without a keeper stray’d,
The plough was in mid-furrow staid,
The falconer toss’d his hawk away,
The hunter left the stag at bay;
Prompt at the signal of alarms,
Each son of Alpine rush’d to arms;
So swept the tumult and affray
Along the margin of Achray.
Alas, thou lovely lake! that e’er
Thy banks should echo sounds of fear!
The rocks, the bosky thickets, sleep
So stilly on thy bosom deep,
The lark’s blithe carol, from the cloud,
Seems for the scene too gayly loud.³

XV.
Speed, Malise, speed! the lake is past,
Duncraggan’s huts appear at last,
And peep, like moss-grown rocks, half seen,
Half hidden in the copese so green;
There mayest thou rest, thy labor done,
Their lord shall speed the signal on.—
As stoops the hawk upon his prey,
The henchman shot him down the way.
—What woeful accents load the gale?
The funeral yell, the female wail!⁴
A gallant hunter’s sport is o’er,
A valiant warrior fights no more.
Who, in the battle or the chase,
At Roderick’s side shall fill his place?—
Within the hall, where torches’ ray
Supplies the excluded beams of day,
Lies Duncan on his lowly bier,
And o’er him streams his widow’s tear.
His stripling son stands mournful by,
His youngest weeps, but knows not why;
The village maids and matrons round
The dismal coronach resound.⁵

XVI.
Coronach.
He is gone on the mountain,
He is lost to the forest,
Like a summer-dried fountain,
When our need was the sorest.
The font, reappearing,
From the raindrops shall borrow,
But to us comes no cheering,
To Duncan no morrow!
The hand of the reaper
Takes the ears that are hoary,
But the voice of the weeper
Wails manhood in glory.
The autumn winds rushing
Waft the leaves that are scarest,
But our flower was in flushing
When blighting was nearest.
Fleet foot on the corri,⁶
Sage counsel in cumber,
Red hand in the foray,
How sound is thy slumber!
Like the dew on the mountain,
Like the foam on the river,
Like the bubble on the fountain,
Thou art gone, and for ever!⁷

¹ MS.: “Dread messenger of fate and fear,”
   “Herald of danger, fate, and fear,”
   Stretch onward in thy fleet career,
   Nor slack’d the messenger his pace.
   Nor maiden coy through Greenwood bough.”
² “The description of the starting of the 'fiery cross' bears more marks of labor than most of Mr. Scott's poetry, and borders, perhaps, upon straining and exaggeration; yet it shows great power.”—Jeffrey.
³ MS.: “Seems all too lively and too loud.”
⁴ MS.: “Tis woman’s scream, 'tis childhood's wail.”
⁵ See Appendix, Note 2 M.
⁶ Or corri—the hollow side of the hill, where game usually Hies.
⁷ “Mr. Scott is such a master of versification that the most complicated metre does not for an instant arrest the progress of his imagination; its difficulties usually operate as a salutary excitement to his attention, and not unfrequently suggest to him new and unexpected graces of expression. If a careless rhyme or an ill-constructed phrase occasionally escape him amidst the irregular torrent of his stanza, the blashem is often imperceptible by the hurried eye of the reader; but when the short lines are yoked in pairs, any dissimace in the jingle or interruption of the construction cannot fail to give offence. We learn from Horace that in the course of a long work a poet may legitimately indulge in a momentary slumber—but we do not wish to hear him snore.”—Quarterly Review.
 XVII.

See Stumah, whose bier besides,
His master's corpse with wonder eyed;
Poor Stumah! whom his least hallou
Could send like lightning o'er the dew,
Bristles his crest, and points his ears,
As if some stranger step he hears.
'Tis not a mourner's muffled tread,
Who comes to sorrow o'er the dead,
But headlong haste, or deadly fear,
Urge the precipitate career.
All stand aghast:—unheeding all,
The henchman bursts into the hall;
Before the dead man's bier he stood;
Held forth the Cross hesmear'd with blood:
"The muster-place is Lanrick mead;
Speed forth the signal! clansmen, speed!"

 XVIII.

Angus, the heir of Duncan's line;
Sprung forth and seized the fatal sign.
In haste the stripling to his side
His father's dirk and broadsword tied;
But when he saw his mother's eye
Watch him in speechless agony,
Back to her open'd arms he flew,
Press'd on her lips a fond adieu—
"Alas!" she sobb'd,—"and yet be gone,
And speed thee forth like Duncan's son!"

One look he cast upon the bier,
Dash'd from his eye the gathering tear,
Breathed deep to clear his laboring breast,
And toss'd aloft his bonnet crest,
Then, like the high-bred colt, when freed,
First he essays his fire and speed,
He vanish'd, and o'er moor and moss
Sped forward with the Fiery Cross.

Suspended was the widow's tear,
While yet his footsteps she could hear;
And when she mark'd the henchman's eye
Wet with unwonted sympathy,
"Kinsman," she said, "his race is run
That should have sped thine errand on;
The oak has fall'n,—the sapling bough
Is all Duncraggan's shelter now.
Yet trust I well, his duty done,
The orphan's God will guard my son.—
And you, in many a danger true,
At Duncan's hest your blades that drew,
To arms, and guard that orphan's head!
Let babes and women wait the dead."—
Then weapon-clang, and martial call,
Resounded through the funeral hall,
While from the walls the attendant band
Snatch'd sword and targe, with hurried hand;
And short and stitting energy
Glanced from the mourner's sunken eye,
As if the sounds to warrior dear
Might rouse her Duncan from his bier.
But fade soon that borrow'd force;
Grief claim'd his right, and tears their course.

 XIX.

Benledi saw the Cross of Fire,
It glanced like lightning up Strath-Ire;—
O'er dale and hill the summons flew,
Nor rest nor pause young Angus knew.
The tear that gather'd in his eye
He left the mountain breeze to dry;
Until, where Teith's young waters roll
Betwixt him and a wooded knoll,
That graced the sable strath with green,
The chapel of St. Bride was seen.

Sworn was the stream, remote the bridge,
But Angus paused not on the edge;
Though the dark waves danced dizzily,
Though reed'd his sympathetic eye,
He dash'd amid the torrent's roar:
His right hand high the crosslet bore,
His left the pole-axe grasp'd, to guide
And stay his footing in the tide.

He stumbled twice—the foam splash'd high,
With hoarser swell the stream raced by;
And had he fall'n,—for ever there
Farewell Duncraggan's orphan heir!
But still, as if in parting life,
Firmer he grasp'd the Cross of strife,
Until the opposing bank he gain'd,
And up the chapel pathway strain'd.

 XX.

A blithesome rout, that morning tide,
Had sought the chapel of Saint Bride.
Her troth Tombea's Mary gave
To Norman, heir of Armandave,
And, issuing from the Gothic arch,
The bridal now resumed their march.
In rude but glad procession came
Bonneted sire and coil-clad dame;
And plaided youth, with jest and jeer,
Which snooded maiden would not hear;
And children, that, unwitting why,
Lent the gay shout their shrill cry;
And minstrels, that in measures vied
Before the young and bonny bride,
Whose downcast eye and cheek disclose
The tear and blush of morning rose.
With virgin step, and bashful hand,
She held the 'kerchief's snowy band;

 In haste the stripling to his side
His father's targe and faclion tied."

See Appendix, Note 2 N.

MS.: "And where a steep and wooded knoll Graced the dark strath with emerald green."
The gallant bridegroom by her side
Beheld his prize with victor's pride,
And the glad mother in her ear
Was closely whispering word of cheer.

XXI.
Who meets them at the churchyard gate?
The messenger of fear and fate!
Haste in his hurried accent lies,
And grief is swimming in his eyes.
All dripping from the recent flood,
Panting and travel-soiled he stood,
The fatal sign of fire and sword
Held forth, and spoke the appointed word:
"The muster-place is Lanrick mead;
Speed forth the signal! Norman, speed!" And must he change so soon the hand,\(^1\)
Just link'd to his by holy band,
For the fell Cross of blood and brand?
And must the day, so blithe that rose,
And promised rapture in the close,
Before its setting hour, divide
The bridegroom from the plighted bride?
Oh fatal doom!—it must! it must!
Clan-Alpine's cause, her Chieftain's trust,
Her summons dread, brook no delay;
Stretch to the race—away! away!

XXII.
Yet slow he laid his plaid aside,
And, lingering, eyed his lovely bride,
Until he saw the starting tear
Speak woe he might not stop to cheer;
Then, trusting not a second look,
In haste he sped him up the brook,
Nor backward glanced, till on the heath
Where Lubnaig's lake supplies the Teith.
—What in the racer's bosom stirr'd?
The sickening pang of hope deferred,
And memory, with a torturing train\(^2\)
Of all his morning visions vain.
Mingled with love's impatience, came
The manly thirst for martial fame;
The stormy joy of mountaineers,
Ere yet they rush upon the spears;
And zeal for Clan and Chieftain burning,
And hope, from well-fought field returning,
With war's red honors on his crest,
To clasp his Mary to his breast.
Stung by such thoughts, o'er bank and brae
Like fire from flint he glanced away,
While high resolve, and feeling strong,
Burst into voluntary song.

---

1 MS.: "And must he then exchange the hand?"
2 MS.: "And memory brought the torturing train
Of all his morning visions vain;
But mingled with impatience came
The manly love of martial fame."

XXIII.
Song.
The heath this night must be my bed,
The bracken\(^3\) curtain for my head,
My lullaby the wander's tread,
Far, far, from love and thee, Mary;
To-morrow eve, more stilly laid,
My couch may be my bloody plaid,
My vesper song, thy wail, sweet maid!
It will not waken me, Mary!
I may not, dare not, fancy now\(^4\)
The grief that clouds thy lovely brow,
I dare not think upon thy vow,
And all it promised me, Mary.
No fond regret must Norman know;
When bursts Clan-Alpine on the foe,
His heart must be like bended bow,
His foot like arrow free, Mary.
A time will come with feeling fraught,
For, if I fall in battle fought,
Thy hapless lover's dying thought
Shall be a thought on thee, Mary.
And if return'd from conquer'd foes,
How blithely will the evening close,
How sweet the liltet sing repose,
To my young bride and me, Mary!

XXIV.
Not faster o'er thy heathery braes,
Balquidder, speeds the midnight blaze,\(^5\)
Rushing, in conflagration strong,
Thy deep ravines and dells along,
Wrapping thy cliffs in purple glow,
And reddening the dark lakes below;
Nor faster speed's it, nor so far,
As o'er thy heaths the voice of war.
The signal roused to martial coil
The sullen margin of Loch Voil,
Waked still Loch Doine, and to the source
Alarm'd, Balvaig, thy swampy course;
Thence southward turn'd its rapid road
Adown S'rath-Gartney's valley broad,
Till rose in arms each man might claim
A portion in Clan-Alpine's name,
From the gray scire, whose trembling hand
Could hardly buckle on his brand,
To the raw boy, whose shaft and bow
Were yet scarce terror to the crow.
Each valley, each sequester'd glen,
Muster'd its little horde of men,
That met as torrents from the height
In Highland dalest their streams unite,

---

6 MS.: "A time will come for love and faith,
For should thy bridegroom yield his breath,
'Twill cheer him in the hour of death,
The boasted right to thee, Mary!"
7 See Appendix, Note 2 0.
8 "The eager fidelity with which this fatal signal is hurrried on and obeyed is represented with great spirit and felicity."—JEFREY.
Still gathering, as they pour along,
A voice more loud, a tide more strong,
Till at the rendezvous they stood
By hundreds prompt for blows and blood;
Each train'd to arms since life began,
Owning no tie but to his clan,
No oath but by his Chieftain's hand,
No law but Roderick Dhu's command.\(^1\)

XXV.
That summer morn had Roderick Dhu
Survey'd the skirts of Benvenue,
And sent his scouts o'er hill and heath,
To view the frontiers of Menteith.
All backward came with news of truce;
Still lay each martial Grame and Bruce,
In Rednock courts no horsemen wait,
No banner waved on Cardross gate,
On Duchray's towers no beacon shone,
Nor scared the herons from Loch Con;
All seem'd at peace. — Now, wot ye why
The Chieftain, with such auxions eye,
Ere to the muster he repair,
This western frontier scan'd with care?—
In Benvenue's most darksome cleft,
A fair, though cruel, pledge was left;
For Douglas, to his promise true,
That morning from the isle withdrew,
And in a deep sequester'd dell
Had sought a low and lonely cell.
By many a baird, in Celtic tongue,
Has Coir-nan-Uriskin been sung;\(^2\)
A softer name the Saxons gave,
And call'd the grot the Goblin Cave.

XXVI.
It was a wild and strange retreat,
As e'er was trod by outlaw's feet.
The dell, upon the mountain crest,
Yawn'd like a gash on warrior's breast;
Its trench had stain'd many a rock,
Hurld by primeval earthquake shock
From Benvenue's gray summit wild,
And here, in random ruin piled,
They frown'd incumbent o'er the spot,
And form'd the rugged sylvan grot.\(^3\)
The oak and birch, with mingled shade,
At noon tide there a twilight made,
Unless when short and sudden shine
Some stragguling beam on cliff or stone,
With such a glimpse as prophet's eye
Gains on thy depth, Futurity.

No murmur waked the solemn still,
Save tinkling of a fountain rill;
But when the wind chafed with the lake,
A sullen sound would upward break,
With dashing hollow voice, that spoke
The incessant war of wave and rock.
Suspected cliffs, with hideons sway,
Seem'd nodding o'er the cavern gray.
From such a den the wolf had sprung,
In such the wild-cat leaves her young;
Yet Douglas and his daughter fair
Sought for a space their safety there.
Gray Superstition's whisper dread
Deharr'd the spot to vulgar tread;
For there, she said, did fays resort,
And satyrs\(^4\) hold their sylvan court,
By moonlight tread their mystic maze,
And blast the rash beholder's gaze.

XXVII.
Now eve, with western shadows long,
Floated on Katrine bright and strong,
When Roderick, with a chosen few,
Repass'd the heights of Benvenue.
Above the goblin cave they go,
Through the wild pass of Beal-nam-bo;\(^5\)
The prompt retainers speed before,
To launch the shallop from the shore,
For 'cross Loch Katrine lies his way
To view the passes of Achray,
And place his clansmen in array.
Yet lags the chief in musing mind,
Unwonted sight, his men behind.
A single page, to bear his sword,
Alone attended on his lord;\(^6\)
The rest their way through thickets break,
And soon await him by the lake.
It was a fair and gallant sight,
To view them from the neighboring height,
By the low-level'd sunbeam's light!
For strength and stature, from the clan
Each warrior was a chosen man,
As even afar might well be seen,
By their proud step and martial mien.
Their feathers dance, their tartans float,
Their targets gleam, as by the boat
A wild and warlike group they stand,
That well became such mountain strand.

XXVIII.
Their Chief, with step reluctant, still
Was lingering on the craggy hill, uriant trees. On the south and west it is bounded by the previous shoulder of Benvenue, to the height of least 500 feet; towards the east the rock appears at some former period to have tumbled down, strewd the whole course of its fall with immens fragments, which now serve only to give shelter to axes, wild-cats, and badgers."—Dr. Graham.

4 The Urisk, or Highland satyr. See Note on the previous canto.
\(^5\) See Appendix, Note 2 R.
\(^6\) Ibid. Note 2 S.
Hard by where turn'd apart the road
To Douglas's obscure abode.
It was but with that dawning morn
That Roderick Dhu had proudly sworn
To drown his love in war's wild roar;¹
Nor think of Ellen Douglas more;
But he who stems a stream with sand,
And fetters flame with flaxen band,
Has yet a harder task to prove—
By firm resolve to conquer love!
Eve finds the Chief, like restless ghost,
Still hovering near his treasure lost;
For though his haughty heart deny
A parting meeting to his eye,
Still fondly stains his anxious car,
The accents of her voice to hear,
And inly did he curse the breeze
That waked to sound the rustling trees.
But hark! what mingles in the strain?
It is the harp of Allan-bane,
That wakes its measure slow and high,
Attuned to sacred minstrelsy.
What melting voice attends the strings?
’Tis Ellen, or an angel, sings.

XXIX.
Hymn to the Virgin.

Ave Maria! maiden mild!
Listen to a maiden’s prayer!
Thou canst hear though from the wild,
Thou canst save amid despair.
Safe may we sleep beneath thy care,
Though banish’d, outcast, and reviled—
Maiden! hear a maiden’s prayer;
Mother! hear a suppliant child!

Ave Maria!

Ave Maria! undefiled!
The flinty couch we now must share²
Shall seem with down of elder piled,
If thy protection hover there.
The murky cavern’s heavy air³
Shall breathe of balm if thou hast smiled;
Then, Maiden! hear a maiden’s prayer;
Mother! list a suppliant child!

Ave Maria!

Ave Maria! stainless styled!
Foul demons of the earth and air,
From this their wonted haunt exiled,
Shall flee before thy presence fair.
We bow us to our lot of care,
Beneath thy guidance reconciled;
Hear for a maid a maiden’s prayer,
And for a father hear a child!

Ave Maria!

XXX.
Died on the harp the closing hymn—
Unmoved in attitude and limb,
As list’ning still, Clan-Alpine’s lord
Stood leaning on his heavy sword,
Until the page, with humble sign,
Twice pointed to the sun’s decline.
Then while his plaid he round him cast,
“It is the last time—tis the last,”
He muttered three,—“the last time e’er
That angel voice shall Roderick hear!”
It was a gloating thought—his stride
Hied hasty down the mountain side;
Sullen he flung him in the boat,
And instant crossed the lake it shot,
They landed in that silvery bay,
And eastward held their hasty way,
Till, with the latest beams of light,
The band arrived on Laurick height,
Where muster’d, in the vale below,⁴
Clan-Alpine’s men in martial show.

XXXI.
A various scene the clansmen made,
Some sat, some stood, some slowly stray’d;
But most, with mantles folded round,
Were couch’d to rest upon the ground,
Scarce to be known by curious eye
From the deep heather where they lie,
So well was match’d the tartan screen
With heath-bell dark and brackens green;
Unless where, here and there, a blade,
Or lance’s point, a glimmer made,
Like glow-worm twinkling through the shade.
But when, advancing through the gloom,
They saw the Chieftain’s eagle plume,
Their shout of welcome, shrill and wide,
Shook the steep mountain’s steady side.
Thrice it arose, and lake and fell
Three times return’d the martial yell;
It died upon Bochastle’s plain,
And Silence claim’d her evening reign.

The Lady of the Lake.

CANTO FOURTH.

The Prophecy.

I.

*THE rose is fairest when t’is budding new,
And hope is brightest when it dawns from fears;⁵
The rose is sweetest wash’d with morning dew,
And love is loveliest when embalm’d in tears.

¹ MS.: “To drown his grief in war’s wild roar, Nor think of love and Ellen more.”
² MS.: “The flinty couch my sire must share.”
³ MS.: “The murky groves’s noxious air.”
⁴ MS.: “Where broad extending far below,
Muster’d Clan-Alpine’s martial show.”
⁵ MS.: “And rapture dearest when obscured by fears.”
O wilding rose, whom fancy thus endears,
I bid your blossoms in my bonnet wave,
Emblem of hope and love through future years!"—
Thus spoke young Norman, heir of Armandave,
What time the sun arose on Vennachar's broad wave.

II.

Such fond conceit, half said, half sung,
Love prompted to the bridegroom's tongue,
All while he stripp'd the wild-rose spray,
His axe and bow beside him lay,
For on a pass 'twixt lake and wood,
A wakeful sentinel he stood.
Hark! on the rock a footstep rung,
And instant to his arms he sprung.
"Stand, or thou diest!—What, Malise?—soon
Art thou return'd from Braes of Doune.
By thy keen step and glance I know
Thou bring'st us tidings of the foe."—
(For while the Fiery Cross bled on,
On distant scout had Malise gone.)
"Where sleeps the Chief?" the henchman said.
"Apart, in yonder misty glade;
To his lone couch I'll be your guide."—
Then call'd a slumberer by his side,
And stirr'd him with his slacken'd bow—
"Up, up, Glentarkin! rouse thee, ho!
We seek the Chieftain; on the track,
Keep eagle watch till I come back."

III.

Together up the pass they sped:
"What of the foemen?" Norman said.—
"Varying reports from near and far;
This certain,—that a band of war
Has for two days been ready bounk,
At prompt command, to march from Doune;
King James, the while, with princely powers,
Holds revelry in Stirling towers.
Soon will this dark and gathering cloud
Speak on our glens in thunder loud.
Inured to bide such bitter bount,
The warrior's plaid may bear it out;
But, Norman, how wilt thou provide
A shelter for thy bonny bride?"—
"What! know ye not that Roderick's care
To the lone isle hath cauzed repair
Each maid and matron of the clan,
And every child and aged man
Unfit for arms; and given his charge,
Nor skiff nor shallop, boat nor barge,
Upon these lakes shall float at large,
But all beside the islet moor,
That such dear pledge may rest secure?"—

IV.

"Tis well advised—the Chieftain's plan
Bespeaks the father of his clan.

But wherefore sleeps Sir Roderick Dhu
Apart from all his followers true?"—
"It is because last evening-tide
Brian an augury hath tried,
Of that dread kind which must not be
Unless in dread extremity,
The Taghairm call'd; by which, afar,
Our sires foresaw the events of war.²

MALISE.

"Ah! well the gallant brute I knew!
The choicest of the prey we had,
When swept our merry-men Gallangad.³
His hide was snow, his horns were dark,
His red eye glow'd like fiery spark;
So fierce, so tameless, and so fleet,
Sore did he cumber our retreat,
And kept our stoutest kerns in awe,
Even at the pass of Beal 'maha.
But steep and flinty was the road,
And sharp the hurrying pikeman's goad,
And when we came to Dennan's Row,
A child might deathless stroke his brow."—

V.

NORMAN.

"That bull was slain: his recking hide
They stretch'd the cataract beside,
Whose waters their wild tumult toss
Adown the black and craggy boss
Of that huge cliff whose ample verge
Tradition calls the Hero's Targe.⁴
Couch'd on a shelf beneath its brink,
Close where the thundering torrents sink,
Rocking beneath their headlong sway,
And drizzled by the ceaseless spray,
Midst groan of rock, and roar of stream,
The wizard waits prophetic dream.
Nor distant rests the Chief;—but hush!
See, gliding slow through mist and bush,
The hermit gains you rock, and stands
To gaze upon our slumbering bands,
Seems he not, Malise, like a ghost,
That hovers o'er a slaughter'd host?
Or raven on the blasted oak,
That, watching while the deer is broke,⁵
His morsel claims with sullen croak?"

MALISE.

—"Peace! peace! to other than to me,
Thy words were evil augury;
But still I hold Sir Roderick's blade
Clan-Alpine's omen and her aid,
Not aught that, gleam'd from heaven or hell,
Yon fiend-begotten monk can tell.
The Chieftain joins him, see—and now
Together they descend the brow."

1 MS.: "Tis well advised—a prudent plan,
Worthy the father of his clan."

2 See Appendix, Note 2 T.
3 Ibid. Note 2 U.
4 See Appendix, Note 2 V.
5 Ibid. Note 2 W.
VI.
And, as they came, with Alpine's Lord
The Hermit Monk held solemn word:—
"Roderick! it is a fearful strife,
For man endow'd with mortal life,
Whose shroud of sentient clay can still Feel feverish pang and fainting chill,
Whose eye can stare in stony trance,
Whose hair can rouse like warrior's lance,—
'Tis hard for such to view unfurl'd
The curtain of the future world.
Yet, witness every quaking limb,
My sunken pulse, my eyeballs dim,
My soul with harrowing anguish torn,—
This for my Chieftain have I borne!—
The shapes that sought my fearful couch
A human tongue may ne'er avouch;
No mortal man,—save he who, bred
Between the living and the dead,
Is gifted beyond nature's law,—
Had e'er survived to say he saw.
At length the fatal answer came,
In characters of living flame!
Not spoke in word, nor blazed in scroll,
But borne and branded on my soul—
WHICH SPLILLS THE FOREMOST FOEMAN'S LIFE,¹
THAT PARTY CONQUERS IN THE STRIFE."—²

VII.
"Thanks, Brian, for thy zeal and care!
Good is thine augury, and fair.
Clan-Alpine ne'er in battle stood,
But first our broadswords tasted blood.
A surer victim still I know,
Self-offer'd to the auspicious blow:
A spy has sought my land this morn,—
No ear shall witness his return!
My followers guard each pass's mouth,
To east, to westward, and to south;
Red Murdoch, bribed to be his guide,³
Has charge to lead his steps aside,
Till, in deep path or dingle brown,
He light on those shall bring him down.⁴
—But see, who comes his news to show!
Malise! what tidings of the foe?"—

VIII.
"At Donne, o'er many a spear and glaive
Two Barons proud their banners wave.

I saw the Moray's silver star,
And mark'd the sable pale of Mar."—³
"By Alpine's soul, high tidings those!
I love to hear of worthy foes.
When move they on?"—⁵ "To-morrow's noon
Will see them here for battle borne."—⁶
"Then shall it see a meeting stern!—
But, for the place—say, couldst thou learn
Nought of the friendly clans of Earn?
Strengthen'd by them, we well might hide
The battle on Benledi's side.
Thou couldst not?—Well! Clan-Alpine's men
Shall man the Trosachs' shaggy glen;
Within Loch Katrine's gorge we'll fight,
All in our maids' and matrons' sight,
Each for his hearth and household fire,
Father for child, and son for sire,—
Lover for maid beloved!—But why
Is it the breeze affects mine eye?
Or dost thou come, ill-omen'd tear!
A messenger of doubt or fear?
No! sooner may the Saxon lance
Unfix Benledi from his stance,
Than doubt or terror can pierce through
The unyielding heart of Roderick Dhu!
'Tis stubborn as his trusty targe.—⁷
Each to his post!—all know their charge."—
The pibroch sounds, the bands advance,
The broadswords gleam, the banners dance,
Obedient to the Chieftain's glance.
—I turn me from the martial roar,
And seek Coir-Uriskin once more.

IX.
Where is the Douglas?—he is gone;
And Ellen sits on the gray stone
Fast by the cave, and makes her moan;
While vainly Allan's words of cheer
Are pour'd on her unheeding ear.—
"He will return—Dear lady, trust!—
With joy return;—he will—he must.
Well was it time to seek, afar,
Some refuge from impending war,
When e'en Clan-Alpine's rugged swarm
Are cow'd by the approaching storm.
I saw their boats, with many a light,
Floating the live-long yesternight,
Shifting like flashes darted forth³
By the red streamers of the north;

¹ MS.: "Which foremost spills a foeman's life.
² See Appendix, Note 2 X.
³ MS.: "The clansman, vainly deem'd his guide.
⁴ MS.: "He light on those shall stab him down."
⁵ MS.: "When move they on?—" "This sun" at noon
'Tis said will see them march from Donne.
'To-morrow then makes (sees) meeting stern."
⁶ For battle borne—ready for battle.
⁷ MS.: "'Tis stubborn as his Highland targe."
⁸ MS.: "Thick as the flashes darted forth
By morrice-dancers of the north;
And saw at morn their barges side
Close moor'd by the lone islet's side,
Since this rude race dare not abide
Upon their native mountain side,
'Tis fit that Douglas should provide
For his dear child some safe abode,
And soon he comes to point the road."
I mark'd at morn how close they ride,
Thick moor'd by the lone islet's side,
Like wild ducks cooing in the fen,
When stoops the hawk upon the glen.
Since this rude race dare not abide
The peril on the mainland side,
Shall not thy noble father's care
Some safe retreat for thee prepare?"—

X.
ELLEN.
"No, Allan, no! Pretecture so kind!
My wakeful terrors could not blind.
When in such tender tone, yet grave,
Douglas a parting blessing gave,
The tear that glisten'd in his eye
Drown'd not his purpose fix'd on high.
My soul, though feminine and weak,
Can image his; e'en as the lake,
Itself disturb'd by slightest stroke, 2
Reflects the invulnerable rock.
He hears report of battle rife,
He deems himself the cause of strife,
I saw him readden when the theme
Turn'd, Allan, on thine idle dream
Of Malcolm Grame in fetters bound,
Which I, thou saidst, about him wound.
Think'st thou he 'twould thine omen aught?
Oh no! 'twas apprehensive thought
For the kind youth,—for Roderick too—
(Let me be just) that friend so true;
In danger both, and in our cause!
Minstrel, the Douglas dare not pause.
Why else that solemn warning given,
'If not on earth, we meet in heaven?'
Why else, to Cambus-kenneth's fane,
If ever return him not again,
Am I to hie, and make me known?
Alas! he goes to Scotland's throne,
Buys his friend's safety with his own;—
He goes to do—what I had done,
Had Douglas' daughter been his son!"—

XI.
"Nay, lovely Ellen!—dearest, nay!
If aught should his return delay,
He only named you holy fane
As fitting place to meet again.
Be sure he's safe; and for the Grame,—
Heaven's blessing on his gallant name!—
My vision'd sight may yet prove true,
Nor bode of ill to him or you.
When did my gifted dream beguile?
Think of the stranger at the isle,
And think upon the harpings slow
That presaged this approaching woe!
Sooth was my prophecy of fear;
Believe it when it augurs cheer.
Would we had left this dismal spot!
Ill luck still haunts a fairy grot.
Of such a wondrous tale I know—
Dear lady, change that look of woe;
My harp was wont thy grief to cheer."—

ELLEN.
"Well, be it as thou wilt; I hear,
But cannot stop the bursting tear."
The Minstrel tried his simple art,
But distant far was Ellen's heart.

XII.
BALLAD. 3
ALICE BRAND.
Merry it is in the good Greenwood,
When the mavis 4 and merle 5 are singing,
When the deer sweeps by, and the hounds are in cry,
And the hunter's horn is ringing.

"Oh, Alice Brand, my native land
Is lost for love of you;
And we must hold by wood and wold,
As outlaws wont to do.

"Oh, Alice, 'twas all for thy locks so bright,
And 'twas all for thine eyes so blue,
That on the night of our luckless flight
Thy brother held I slew.

"Now must I teach to hew the beech
The hand that held the glaive,
For leaves to spread our lowly bed,
And stakes to fence our cave.

"And for vest of pall, thy fingers small,
That went on harp to stray,
A cloak must shear from the slaughter'd deer,
To keep the cold away."—

"Oh, Richard! if my brother died,
'Twas but a fatal chance;
For darkling was the battle tried,
And fortune sped the lance. 5

"If pall and vair no more I wear,
Nor thou the crimson sheen,
As warm, we'll say, is the russet gray,
As gay the forest-green.

1 MS.: "No, Allan, no! His words so kind
Were but pretexts my fears to blind,
When in such solemn tone, and grave
Douglas a parting blessing gave."
2 MS.: "Itself disturb'd by slightest stroke,
Reflects the adamantine rock."
3 See Appendix, Note 2 Y.
4 Thrush.
5 Blackbird.
"And, Richard, if our lot be hard,
And lost thy native land,
Still Alice has her own Richard,
And he his Alice Brand."

XIII.
Ballad continued.
'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in good Greenwood,
So blithe Lady Alice is singing;
On the beech's pride, and oak's brown side,
Lord Richard's axe is ringing.

Up spoke the moody Elfin King,
Who worn'd within the hill,—
Like wind in the porch of a ruin'd church,
His voice was ghostly shrill.

"Why sounds you stroke on beech and oak,
Our moonlight circle's screen?"
Or who comes here to chase the deer,
Beloved of our Elfin Queen?
Or who may dare on wold to wear
The fairies' fatal green?

"Up, Urgan, up! to you mortal be,
For thou wert christen'd man;
For cross or sign thou wilt not fly,
For murther'd word or ban.

"Lay on him the curse of the wither'd heart,
The curse of the sleepless eye;
Till he wish and pray that his life would part,
Nor yet find leave to die."

XIV.
Ballad continued.
'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in good Greenwood,
Though the birds have still'd their singing;
The evening blaze doth Alice raise,
And Richard is fagots bringing.

Up Urgan starts, that hideous dwarf,
Before Lord Richard stands,
And, as he cross'd and bless'd himself,
"I fear not sign," quoth the grisly elf,
"That is made with bloody hands."

But out then spoke she, Alice Brand,
That woman void of fear,—
"And if there's blood upon his hand,
'Tis but the blood of deer."—

"Now loud thy liest, thou bold of mood!
It cleaves unto his hand,
The stain of thine own kindly blood,
The blood of Ethert Brand."

Then forward stepp'd she, Alice Brand,
And made the holy sign,—
"And if there's blood on Richard's hand,
A spotless hand is mine.

"And I conjure thee, Demon elf,
By Him whom Demons fear,
To show us whence thou art thyself,
And what thine errand here?"—

XV.
Ballad continued.
"'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in Fairy-land,
When fairy birds are singing,
When the court doth ride by their monarch's side,
With bit and bridle ringing:

"And gayly shines the Fairy-land—
But all is glistening show.
Like the idle gleam that December's beam
Can dart on ice and snow.

"And fading, like that varied gleam,
Is our inconstant shape,
Who now like knight and lady seem,
And now like dwarf and ape.

"It was between the night and day,
When the Fairy King has power,
That I sunk down in a sinful fray,
And, 'twixt life and death, was snatch'd away
To the joyless Elfin bower."

"But wist I of a woman bold
Who thrice my brow durst sign,
I might regain my mortal mould,
As fair a form as thine."

She cross'd him once—she cross'd him twice—
That lady was so brave;
The fouler grew his goblin hue,
The darker grew the cave.

She cross'd him three, that lady bold;
He rose beneath her hand
The fairest knight on Scottish mould,
Her brother, Ethert Brand!

Merry it is in good Greenwood,
When the mavis and merle are singing,
But merrier were they in Dunfermline gray,
When all the bells were ringing.

XVI.
Just as the minstrel sounds were staid,
A stranger climb'd the steepy glade;

1 See Appendix, Note 2 Z.
2 MS.: "Our fairy ringlet's screen."
3 See Appendix, Note 3 A.
4 See Appendix, Note 3 B.
5 See Appendix, Note 3 C.
6 See Appendix, Note 3 D.
7 Ibid. Note 3 E.
His martial step, his stately mien,
His hunting suit of Lincoln green,
His eagle glance, remembrance claims—
'Tis Snowdoun's Knight, 'tis James Fitz-James.
Ellen beheld as in a dream,
Then, starting, scarce suppress'd a scream:
"Oh, stranger! in such hour of fear,
What evil hap has brought thee here?"—
"An evil hap how can it be,
That bids me look again on thee?
By promise bound, my former guide
Met me betimes this morning tide,
And marshall'd, over bank and bourne,
The happy path of my return,"—
"The happy path!—what! said he nought
Of war, of battle to be fought,
Of guarded pass?"—"No, by my faith!
Nor saw I aught could augur seethe."—
"Oh haste thee, Allan, to the kern,
—Yonder his tartans I discern;
Learn thou his purpose, and conjure
That he will guide the stranger safe!—
What prompted thee, unhappy man?
The meanest serf in Roderick's clan
Had not been bribed by love or fear,
Unknown to him, to guide thee here."—

XVII.
"Sweet Ellen, dear my life must be,
Since it is worthy care from thee;
Yet life I hold but idle breath,
When love or honor's weigh'd with death.
Then let me profit by my chance,
And speak my purpose bold at once.
I come to bear thee from a wild,
Where ne'er before such blossom smiled
By this soft hand to lead thee far
From frantic scenes of feud and war
Near Bochastle my horses wait;¹
They bear us soon to Stirling gate.
I'll place thee in a lovely bower,
I'll guard thee like a tender flower"—
"Oh hush, Sir Knight! 'twere female art
To say I do not read thy heart;
Too much, before, my selfish ear
Was idly soothed my praise to hear,²
That fatal bane hath hush'd thee back,
In deathful hour, o'er dangerous track
And how, oh how, can I atone
The wreck my vanity brought on!—
One way remains—I'll tell him all—
Yes! struggling bosom, forth it shall!
Thou, whose light folly bears the blame,
Buy thine own pardon with thy shame!
But first—my father is a man
Outlaw'd and exiled, under ban;

The price of blood is on his head—
With me 'twere infamy to wed.
Still wouldst thou speak?—then hear the truth!
Fitz-James, there is a noble youth,—
If yet he is!—exposed for me
And mine to dread extremity.
Thou hast the secret of my heart;
Forgive, be generous, and depart!"²

XVIII.
Fitz-James knew every wily train
A lady's fickle heart to gain;
But here he knew and felt them vain.
There shot no glance from Ellen's eye
To give her steadfast speech the lie;
In maiden confidence she stood,
Though mantled in her cheek the blood,
And told her love with such a sigh
Of deep and hopeless agony,
As death had seal'd her Malcolm's doom,
And she sat sorrowing on his tomb.
Hope vanish'd from Fitz-James's eye,
But not with hope fled sympathy.
He proffer'd to attend her side,
As brother would a sister guide.—
"Oh, little know'st thou Roderick's heart!
Safer for both we go apart.
Oh haste thee, and from Allan learn
If thou may'st trust thy wily kern."³
With hand upon his forehead laid,
The conflict of his mind to shade,
A parting step or two he made;
Then, as some thought had cross'd his brain,
He paused, and turn'd, and came again.

XIX.
"Hear, lady, yet a parting word!—
It chanced in fight that my poor sword
Preserved the life of Scotland's lord,
This ring the grateful Monarch gave,³
And bade, when I had boon to erave,
To bring it back, and boldly claim
The recompense that I would name.
Ellen, I am no courtly lord,
But one who lives by lance and sword,
Whose castle is his helm and shield,
His lordship the embattled field.
What from a prince can I demand,
Who neither reck of state nor land?
Ellen, thy hand—the ring is thine;⁴
Each guard and usher knows the sign.
Seek thou the King without delay;⁵
This signet shall secure thy way;
And claim thy suit, whate'er it be,
As ransom of his pledge to me."
XX.
All in the Trosachs' glen was still,
Noontide was sleeping on the hill:
Sudden his guide whoop'd loud and high—
"Murdoch! was that a signal cry?"—
He stammer'd forth,—"I shout to scare
Yon raven from his dainty hue."
He look'd—he knew the raven's prey,
His own brave steed,—"Ah! gallant gray!
For thee—for me, perchance—'twere well
We ne'er had seen the Trosachs' dell.—
Murdoch, move first—but silently;
Whistle or whoop, and thou shalt die!"
Jealous and sullen, on they fared,
Each silent, each upon his guard.

XXI.
Now wound the path its dizzy ledge,
Around a precipice's edge,
When lo! a wasted female form,
Blighted by wrath of sun and storm,
In tatter'd weeds and wild array,
Stood on a cliff beside the way,
And glancing round her restless eye,
Upon the wood, the rock, the sky,
Seem'd nought to mark, yet all to spy.
Her brow was wreath'd with gaudy broom;
With gesture wild she waved a plume
Of feathers, which the eagles fling
To crag and cliff from dusky wing;
Such spoils her desperate step had sought
Where scarce was footing for the goat.
The tartan plaid she first descried,
And shriek'd till all the rocks replied;
As loud she laugh'd when near they drew,
For then the Lowland garb she knew;
And then her hands she wildly wrung,
And then she wept, and then she sung—
She sung!—the voice, in better time,
Perchance to harp or lute might chime;
And now, though strain'd and rough'n'd, still
Rung wildly sweet to dale and hill.

My name and this shall make thy way,
He put the little signet on."

1 MS.: "He stammer'd forth confused reply:
'Saxon, sir knight,' I shout'd but to scare
Yon raven from his dainty hue."

2 MS.: "Wrap'd in a tatter'd mantle gray."

3 The Allan and Devan are two beautiful streams—the lat-
XXIV.
"Hush thee, poor maiden, and be still!"—
"Oh, thou look'st kindly, and I will,—
Mine eye has dried and wasted been,
But still it loves the Lincoln green;
And, though mine ear is all unstrung,
Still, still it loves the Lowland tongue,
“For oh my sweet William was forester true,¹
He stole poor Blanche’s heart away!
His coat it was all of the greenwood hue,
And so blithely he trill’d the Lowland lay!

“It was not that I meant to tell . . .
But thou art wise, and guessest well.”
Then, in a low and broken tone,
And hurried note, the song went on.
Still on the Clansman, fearfully,
She fix’d her apprehensive eye;
Then turn’d it on the Knight, and then
Her look glanced wildly o’er the glen.

XXV.
“The toils are pitch’d, and the stakes are set,
Ever sing merrily, merrily;
The bows they bend, and the knives they whet,
Hunters live so cheerily.

“It was a stag, a stag of ten,²
Bearing its branches sturdily;
He came stately down the glen,
Ever sing hardily, hardily.

“It was there he met with a wounded doe,
She was bleeding deathfully;
She warn’d him of the toils below,
Oh so faithfully, faithfully!

“He had an eye, and he could heed,
Ever sing warily, warily;
He had a foot, and he could speed—
Hunters watch so narrowly.”³

XXVI.
Fitz-James’s mind was passion-toss’d,
When Ellen’s hints and fears were lost;
But Murdoch’s shout suspicion wrought,
And Blanche’s song conviction brought.

¹ MS.: “Sweet William was a woodman true,
He stole poor Blanche’s heart away!
His coat was of the forest hue,
And sweet he sung the Lowland lay.”
² Having ten branches on his antlers.
³ “No machinery can be conceived more clumsy for effecting the deliverance of a distressed hero than the introduction of a mad woman, who, without knowing or caring about the wanderer, warns him, by a song, to take care of the ambush that was set for him. The maniacs of poetry have indeed had a prescriptive right to be musical since the days of Ophelia downwards; but it is rather a rash extension of this privilege to make them sing good sense, and to make sensible people be guided by them.”—JEFFREY.

Not like a stag that spies the snare,
But lion of the hunt aware,
He waved at once his blade on high:
“Disclose thy treachery, or die!”
Forth at full speed the Clansman flew,⁴
But in his race his bow he drew;
The shaft just grazed Fitz-James’s crest,
And thrill’d in Blanche’s faded breast.—
Murdoch of Alpine! prove thy speed,
For ne’er had Alpine’s son such need!
With heart of fire, and foot of wind,
The fierce avenger is behind!
Fate judges of the rapid strife—
The forfeit death—the prize is life!
Thy kindred ambush lies before,
Close couch’d upon the heathery moor;
They couldst thou reach!—it may not be—⁵
Thine ambush’d kin thou ne’er shalt see,
The fiery Saxon gains on thee!
—Resistless speeds the deadly thrust,
As lightning strikes the pine to dust;
With foot and hand Fitz-James must strain
Ere he can win his blade again.
Bent o’er the fall’n, with falcon eye,⁶
He grimly smiled to see him die;
Then slower wended back his way,
Where the poor maiden bleeding lay.

XXVII.
She sat beneath the birchen-tree,
Her elbow resting on her knee;
She had withdrawn the fatal shaft,
And gazed on it, and feebly laugh’d;
Her wreath of broom and feathers gray,
Daggled with blood, beside her lay.
The Knight to stanch the life-stream tried,— “Stranger, it is in vain!” she cried.
“This hour of death has given me more
Of reason’s power than years before;
For, as these ebbing veins decay,
My frenzied visions fade away.
A helpless injured wretch I die,
And something tells me in thine eye,
That thou wert mine avenger born.—
Seest thou this tress?—Oh, still I’ve worn
This little tress of yellow hair,
Through danger, frenzy, and despair!
It once was bright and clear as thine,
But blood and tears have dimm’d its shine.

⁴ MS.: “Forth at full speed the Clansman went;
But in his race his bow he bent,
Halted, and back an arrow sent.”
⁵ MS.: “It may not be—
The fiery Saxon gains on thee,
Thine ambush’d kin thou ne’er shalt see!
Resistless as the lightning’s flame,
The thrust betwixt his shoulders came.”
⁶ MS.: “Then o’er him hung, with falcon eye,
And grimly smiled to see him die.”
⁷ MS.: “A guiltless injured wretch I die.”
I will not tell thee when 'twas shred,
Nor from what guiltless victim's head—
My brain would turn!—but it shall wave!
Like plumage on thy helmet brave,
Till sun and wind shall bleach the stain,
And thou wilt bring it me again.—
I waver still.—O God! more bright
Let reason beam her parting light!—
Oh, by thy knighthood's honor'd sign,
And for thy life preserved by mine,
When thou shalt see a darksome man,
Who boasts him Chief of Alpine's Clan,
With tartans broad and shadowy plume,
And hand of blood, and brow of gloom,
Be thy heart bold, thy weapon strong,
And wreak poor Blanche of Devan's wrong!
They watch for thee by pass and fell . . .
Avoid the path . . . O God! . . . farewell."

XXVIII.
A kindly heart had brave Fitz-James;
Fast pour'd his eyes at pity's claims,
And now, with mingled grief and ire,
He saw the murder'd maid expire.
"God, in my need, be my relief,"
As I wreak this on yonder Chief!"
A lock from Blanche's tresses fair
He blended with her bridegroom's hair;
The mingled braid in blood he dyed,
And placed it on his bonnet side:
"By Him whose word is truth! I swear,
No other favor will I wear,
Till this sad token I imbrue
In the best blood of Roderick Dhu!
—But hark! what means you faint halloo?
The chase is up,—but they shall know,
The stag at bay's a dangerous foe."
Barr'd from the known but guarded way,
Through copse and cliffs Fitz-James must stray,
And oft must change his desperate track,
By stream and precipice turn'd back.
Heartless, fatigued, and faint, at length,
From lack of food and loss of strength,
He couched him in a thicket hoar,
And thought his toils and perils o'er:—
"Of all my rash adventures past,
This frantic feat must prove the last!
Who o'er so mad but might have guess'd
That all this Highland hornet's nest
Would muster up in swarms so soon
As e'er they heard of bands at Doune?—
Like blood-hounds now they search me out,—
Hark, to the whistle and the shout!—
If farther through the wilds I go,
I only fall upon the foe:

I'll couch me here till evening gray,
Then darkling try my dangerous way."

XXIX.
The shades of eve come slowly down,
The woods are wrap't in deeper brown,
The owl awakens from her dell,
The fox is heard upon the fell;
Enough remains of glimmering light
To guide the wanderer's steps aright,
Yet not enough from far to show
His figure to the watchful foe.
With cautious step, and ear awake,
He climbs the rag and threads the brake;
And not the summer solstice, there,
Temper'd the midnight mountain air,
But every breeze that swept the wold
Benumb'd his drenched limbs with cold.
In dread, in danger, and alone,
Famish'd and chill'd, through ways unknown,
Tangled and steep, he journey'd on;
Till, as a rock's huge point he turn'd,
A watch-fire close before him burn'd.

XXX.
Beside its embers red and clear
Bask'd, in his plaid, a mountaineer;
And up he sprang with sword in hand,—
"Thy name and purpose! Saxon, stand!"—
"A stranger."—"What dost thou require?"—
"Rest and a guide, and food and fire.
My life's beset, my path is lost,
The gale has chill'd my limbs with frost."—
"Art thou a friend to Roderick?"—"No."—
"Thou darest not call thyself a foe?"—
"I dare! to him and all the band."—
He brings to aid his murderous hand."—
"BOLD words! but, though the beast of game
The privilege of chase may claim,
Though space and law the stag we lend,
Ere hound we slip, or bow we bend,
Who ever reck'd where, how, or when,
The prowling fox was trap'd or slain?—
Thus treacherous scouts,—yet sure they lie
Who say thou cam'st a secret spy!"—
"They do, by heaven!—Come Roderick Dhu,
And of his clan the boldest two,
And let me but till morning rest,
I write the falsehood on their crest."—
"If by the blaze I mark aright,
Thou be'st the belt and spur of Knight."—
"Then by these tokens may'st thou know
Each proud oppressor's mortal foe."—
"Enough, enough; sit down and share
A soldier's couch, a soldier's fare."—

1 MS.: "But now, my champion, it shall wave."
2 MS.: "God, in my need, to me be true,
As I wreak this on Roderick Dhu."
3 MS.: "By the decaying flame was laid
A warrior in his Highland plaid."
4 MS.: "I dare! to him and all the swarm
He brings to aid his murderous arm."
5 See Appendix, Note 2 F.
XXXI.

He gave him of his Highland cheer,
The harden’d flesh of mountain deer; 1
Dry fuel on the fire he laid,
And bade the Saxon share his plaid.
He tended him like welcome guest,
Then thus his further speech address’d:—

"Stranger, I am to Roderick Dhu
A clansman born, a kinsman true;
Each word against his honor spoke
Demands of me avenging stroke;
Yet more,—upon thy fate, ’tis said,
A mighty augury is laid.
It rests with me to wind my horn,—
Thou art with numbers overborne;
It rests with me here, brand to brand,
Worn as thou art, to bid thee stand:
But not for clan nor kindred’s cause
Will I depart from honor’s laws;
To assail a wearied man were shame,
And stranger is a holy name;
Guidance and rest, and food and fire,
In vain he never must require.
Then rest thee here till dawn of day;
Myself will guide thee on the way,
O’er stock and stone, through watch and ward,
Till past Clan-Alpine’s outmost guard,
As far as Coilantogle’s ford;
From thence thy warrant is thy sword."—

"I take thy courtesy, by heaven,
As freely as ’tis nobly given!"—

"Well, rest thee; for the bittern’s cry
Sings us the lake’s wild lullaby."

With that he shook the gird’r’d heath,
And spread his plaid upon the wraith;
And the brave foemen, side by side,
Lay peaceful down, like brothers tried,
And slept until the dawning beam 2
Purpled the mountain and the stream.

And lights the fearful path on mountain side;— 3
Fair as that beam, although the fairest far,
Giving to horror grace, to danger pride,
Shine martial Faith, and Courtesy’s bright star,
Through all the wreckful storms that cloud the brow
of War.

II.

That early beam, so fair and sheen,
Was twinkling through the hazel screen,
When, rousing at its glimmer red,
The warriors left their lowly bed,
Look’d out upon the dappled sky,
Mutter’d their soldier matins by,
And then awaked their fire, to steal,
As short and rude, their soldier meal.
That o’er, the Gael 4 around him threw
His graceful plaid of varied hue,
And, true to promise, led the way
By thicket green and mountain gray.
A wildering path!—they wound now
Along the precipice’s brow,
Commanding the rich scenes beneath,
The windings of the Forth and Teith,
And all the vales between that lie,
Till Stirling’s turrets melt in sky;
Then, sunk in copse, their farthest glance
Gain’d not the length of horseman’s lance.
’Twas oft so steep, the foot was faint
Assistance from the hand to gain;
So tangled oft, that, bursting through,
Each Hawthorn shed her showers of dew,—
That diamond dew, so pure and clear,
It rivals all but Beauty’s tear!

III.

At length they came where, stern and steep, 5
The hill sinks down upon the deep.
Here Vennachar in silver flows,
There, ridge on ridge, Benledi rose;
Ever the hollow path twined on,
Beneath steep bank and threatening stone;
An hundred men might hold the post
With hardihood against a host.
The rugged mountain’s scanty cloak
Was dwarfish shrubs of birch and oak, 6
With shingles bare, and cliffs between,
And patches bright of bracken oak,
And heather black, that waved so high,
It held the copse in rivalry.
But where the lake slept deep and still,
Dank osiers fringed the swamp and hill;
And oft both path and hill were torn,
Where wintry torrents down had borne,

1 See Appendix, Note 3 G.

2 MS.: "And slept until the dawning streak
Purpled the mountain and the lake."

3 MS.: "And lights the fearful way along its side."

4 The Scottish Highlander calls himself Gaed or Gaul, and terms the Lowlanders Sassenach or Saxons.

5 MS.: "At length they paced the mountain’s side,
And saw beneath the waters wide."

6 MS.: "The rugged mountain’s stunted screen
Was dwarfish [shrubs] with cliffs between."
And heap'd upon the cumber'd land
Its wreck of gravel, rocks, and sand.
So toilsome was the road to trace,
The guide, abating of his pace,
Led slowly through the pass's jaws,
And ask'd Fitz-James by what strange cause
He sought these wilds, traversed by few
Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.

IV.
"Brave Gael, my pass, in danger tried,
Hangs in my belt, and by my side;
Yet, sooth to tell," the Saxon said,
"I dreamt not now to claim its aid, 1
When here, but three days since, I came,
Bewilder'd in pursuit of game,
All seem'd as peaceful and as still
As the mist slumbering on yon hill;
Thy dangerous Chief was then afar,
Nor soon expected back from war.
Thus said, at least, my mountain guide,
Though deep, perchance, the villain lied."—
"Yet why a second venture try?"—
"A warrior thou, and ask me why!—
Moves our free course by such fix'd cause
As gives the poor mechanic laws?
Enough, I sought to drive away
The lazy hours of peaceful day;
Slight cause will then suffice to guide
A Knight's free footsteps far and wide,— 2
A falcon flown, a greyhound stray'd,
The merry glance of mountain maid;
Or, if a path be dangerous known,
The danger's self is lure alone."—

V.
"Thy secret keep, I urge thee not;— 3
Yet, ere again ye sought this spot,
Say, heard ye nought of Lowland war,
Against Clan-Alpine, raised by Mar?"—
"No, by my word;—of bands prepared
To guard King James's sports I heard;
Nor doubt I aught but, when they hear
This master of the mountaineer,
Their pennons will abroad be flung,
Which else in Doune had peaceful hung,"— 4
"Free be they flung!—for we were loth
Their silken folds should feast the moth;
Free be they flung!—as free shall wave
Clan-Alpine's Pine in banner brave.
But, Stranger, peaceful since you came,
Bewilder'd in the mountain game,
Whence the bold boast by which you show
Vich-Alpine's vow'd and mortal foe?"—
"Warrior, but yester morn I knew
Nought of thy Chieftain, Roderick Dhu,
Save as an outlaw'd desperate man,
The chief of a rebellious clan,
Who, in the Regent's court and sight,
With ruffian dagger stabb'd a knight:
Yet this alone might from his part
Sever each true and loyal heart."—

VI.
Wrothful at such arraignmen't foul,
Dark lower'd the Clansman's sable scowl.
A space he paused, then sternly said,
"And hearest thou why he drew his blade?
Hearrest thou that shameful word and blow
Brought Roderick's vengeance on his foe?
What reck'd the Chieftain if he stood
On Highland heath, or Holy-Rood?
He rights such wrong where it is given,
If it were in the court of heaven."—
"Still was it outrage;—yet, 'tis true,
Not then claim'd sovereignty his due;
While Albany, with feeble hand,
Held borrow'd truncheon of command, 5
The young King, mew'd in Stirling tower,
Was stranger to respect and power.
But then, thy Chieftain's robber life!—
Winning mean prey by causeless strife,
Wrenching from ruin'd Lowland swain
His herds and harvest rear'd in vain.—
Methinks a soul like thine should scorn
The spoils from such foul foray borne."—

VII.
The Gael beheld him grim the while,
And answer'd with disdainful smile,—
"Saxon, from yonder mountain high
I mark'd thee send delighted eye
Far to the south and east, where lay,
Extended in succession gay,
Deep waving fields and pastures green,
With gentle slopes and groves between:
These fertile plains, that soften'd vale,
Were once the birthright of the Gael;
The stranger came with iron hand,
And from our fathers reft the land.
Where dwell we now! See, rudely swell
Crag over crag, and fell o'er fell.
Ask we this savage hill we tread
For fatten'd steer or household bread,
Ask we for flocks these shingles dry,
And well the mountain might reply,—
'To you, as to your sires of yore,
Belong the target and claymore!
I give you shelter in my breast,
Your own good blades must win the rest.'
Pent in this fortress of the North,
Think'st thou we will not sally forth

1 MS.: "I dream'd not now to draw my blade."
2 MS.: "My errant footsteps
   'A knight's bold wanderings' far and wide."
3 MS.: "Thy secret keep, I ask it not."
4 MS.: "Which else in hall had peaceful hung."
5 See Appendix, Note 3 II.
To spoil the spoiler as we may,
And from the robber rend the prey?
Ay, by my soul!—While on you plain
The Saxon rears one shock of grain,—
While, of ten thousand herds, there strays
But one alone you river's maze,—
The Gael, of plain and river heir,
Shall with strong hand redeem his share.1
Where live the mountain Chiefs who hold
That plundering Lowland field and fold
Is aught but retribution true?
Seek other cause 'gainst Roderick Dhu.'

VIII.
Answer'd Fitz-James,—'And, if I sought,
Think'st thou no other could be brought?
What deem ye of my path waylaid?
My life given o'er to ambuscade?'—
'As of a need to rashness due:
Hadst thou sent warning fair and true,
I seek my hound, or falcon stray'd,—
I seek, good faith, a Highland maid,—
Free hadst thou been to come and go;
But secret path marks secret foe.
Nor yet, for this, even as a spy
Hadst thou, unheard, been doom'd to die,
Save to fulfill an augury.'—
'Well, let it pass; nor will I now
Fresh cause of enmity awow,
To chafe thy mood and cloud thy brow.
Enough, I am by promise tied
To match me with this man of pride.
Twice have I sought Clan-Alpine's glen
In peace; but when I come agen,
I come with banner, brand, and bow,
As leader seeks his mortal foe:
For love-lorn swain, in lady's bower,
Ne'er panted for the appointed hour,
As I, until before me stand
This rebel Chieftain and his band?'—2

IX.
"Have, then, thy wish!"—He whistled shrill,
And he was answer'd from the hill;
Wild as the scream of the curlew,
From craig to craig the signal flew,3
Instant, through cope and heath, arose
Bonnets and spears and bended bows;
On right, on left, above, below,
Sprung up at once the lurking foe;
From shingles gray their lance's start,
The bracken bush sends forth the dart,4
The rushes and the willow wand
Are bristling into axe and brand,
And every tuft of broom gives life5
To plaided warrior arm'd for strife.
That whistle garrison'd the glen
At once with full five hundred men,
As if the yawning hill to heaven
A subterranean host had given,6
Watching their leader's beck and will,7
All silent there they stood, and still.
Like the loose crags whose threatening mass
Lay tottering o'er the hollow pass,
As if an infant's touch could urge
Their headlong passage down the verge,
With step and weapon forward flung,
Upon the mountain side they hung.
The Mountaineer cast glance of pride
Along Benlaid's living side,
Then fix'd his eye and sable brow
Full on Fitz-James—'How say'st thou now?
These are Clan-Alpine's warriors true;
And, Saxon,—I am Roderick Dhu!'"—

X.
Fitz-James was brave:—Though to his heart
The life-blood thrill'd with sudden start,
He mann'd himself with dauntless air,
Return'd the Chief his haughty stare,
His back against a rock he bore,
And firmly placed his foot before:
"Come one, come all! this rock shall fly
From its firm base as soon as I."8
Sir Roderick mark'd—and in his eyes
Respect was mingled with surprise,
And the stern joy which warriors feel
In foes worthy of their steel.

1 See Appendix, Note 3 I.
2 MS.: "This dark Sir Roderick) and his band."
   "This savage Chieftain."
3 MS.: "From cope to cope the signal flew.
   Instant, through cope and crags, arose."
4 MS.: "The bracken bush shoots forth the dart."
5 MS.: "And each lone tuft of broom gives life
   To plaided warrior arm'd for strife.
   That whistle mann'd the lonely gane
   With full five hundred armed men."
6 The Monthly Reviewer says:—"We now come to the cheif wearer of Walter Scott,—a scene of more vigor, nature, and animation than any other in all his poetry. Another anonymous critic of the poem is not afraid to quote, with reference to the effect of this passage, the sublime language of the prophet Ezekiel:—'Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army."—chap. xxxvii. v. 9, 10.

7 MS.: "All silent, too, they stood, and still,
   Watching their leader's beck and will,
   While forward step and weapon show
   They long to rush upon the foe.
   Like the loose erkas whose tottering mass
   Hung threatening o'er the hollow pass."5
8 David de Strathbogie, Earl of Athole, when about to engage Sir Andrew Moray at the battle of Killibnie, in 1335, in which he was slain, made an apostrophe of the same kind:—
   "At a little path was there
   All same they assembled were Even in the path was Earl Davy
   And to a great stone that lay by Short space he stood—then waved his hand:
Down sunk the disappearing band;
Each warrior vanish'd where he stood,
In broom or bracken, heath or wood;
Sunk brand and spear and bended bow,
In osiers pale and copse's low;
It seem'd as if their mother Earth
Had swallow'd up her warlike birth.
The wind's last breath had toss'd in air
Pennon, and plaid, and plumage fair,—
The next but swept a lone hill-side,
Where heath and fern were waving wide;
The sun's last glance was glinted back
From spear and glaive, from targe and jack,—
The next, all unreflected, shone
On bracken green, and cold gray stone.

XI.

Fitz-James look'd round—yet scaree believed
The witness that his sight received;
Such apparition well might seem
Delusion of a dreadful dream.
Sir Roderick in suspence he eyed,
And to his look the Chief replied,
"Fear nought—nay, that I need not say—
But—doubt not aught from mine array.
Thou art my guest;—I pledged my word
As far as Collantogle ford:
Nor would I call a clansman's brand
For aid against one valiant hand,¹
Though on our strife lay every vale
Rent by the Saxon from the Gael.²
So move we on;—I only meant
To show the reed on which you leant,
Deeming this path you might pursue
Without a pass from Roderick Dhu,"³
They moved.—I said Fitz-James was brave
As ever knight that belted glaive;
Yet dare not say that now his blood
Kept on its wont and temper'd flood,
As, following Roderick's stride, he drew
That seeming lonesome pathway through,
Which yet, by fearful proof, was rife
With lances that, to take his life,
Waited but signal from a guide
So late dishonour'd and defied.
Ever by stealth his eye sought round
The vanish'd guardians of the ground,
And still, from copse and heather deep,
Fancy saw spear and broadsword peep,⁴

And in the plover's shrilly strain
The signal whistle heard again.
Nor breathed he free till far behind
The pass was left; for then they wind
Along a wide and level green,
Where neither tree nor tuft was seen,
Nor rush nor bush of 'broom was near
To hide a bonnet or a spear.

XII.

The Chief in silence strode before,
And reach'd that torrent's sounding shore
Which, daughter of three mighty lakes,
From Vennachar in silver breaks,
Sweeps through the plain, and ceaseless mines
On Bochastle the mouldering lines.⁵
Where Rome, the Empress of the world,
Of yore her eagle wings unfurl'd.⁶
And here his course the Chieftain said,
Threw down his target and his plaid,
And to the Lowland warrior said—
"Bold Saxon! to his promise just,
Vich-Alpine has discharged his trust.
This murderous Chief, this ruthless man,
This head of a rebellious clan,
Hath led thee safe, through watch and ward,
Far past Clan-Alpine's outmost guard.
Now, man to man, and steel to steel,
A Chieftain's vengeance thou shalt feel.
See, here all vantageless I stand,
Arm'd, like thyself, with single brand:⁷
For this is Collantogle ford,
And thou must keep thee with thy sword."

XIII.

The Saxon paused:—"I ne'er delay'd
When foeman bade me draw my blade;
Nay more, brave Chief, I vow'd thy death:
Yet sure thy fair and generous faith,
And my deep debt for life preserved,
A better meed have well deserved.
Can nought but blood our feud atone?
Are there no means?"—"No, Stranger, none!
And hear,—to fire thy flagging zeal,—
The Saxon cause rests on thy steel;
For thus spoke Fate, by prophet bred
Between the living and the dead:
'Who spills the foremost foeman's life,
His party conquers in the strife,'"⁸
"Then, by my word," the Saxon said,
"The riddle is already read.

him safely on his way the next morning, although he has spoken threatening and violent words against Roderick, whose kinsman the mountaineer professeth himself to be,—these circumstances are all admirably imagined and related."—Monthly Review.

¹ MS.: "For aid against one brave man's hand."

² This scene is excellently described. The frankness and high-souled courage of the two warriors; the reliance which the Lowlander places on the word of the Highlander to guide him safely on his way the next morning, although he has spoken threatening and violent words against Roderick, whose kinsman the mountaineer professeth himself to be,—these circumstances are all admirably imagined and related."—Monthly Review.

³ See Appendix, Note 3 K.

⁴ MS.: "And still, from copse and heather bush,
Fancy saw spear and broadsword rush."

⁵ MS.: "On Bochastle the martial lines."

⁶ See Appendix, Note 3 L.

⁷ Ibid. Note 3 M.
Seek yonder brake beneath the cliff,—
There lies Red Murdoch, stark and stiff.
Thus Fate hath solved her prophecy,
Then yield to Fate, and not to me;
To James, at Stirling, let us go,
When, if thou wilt be still his foe,
Or if the King shall not agree
To grant thee grace and favor free,
I plight mine honor, oath, and word,
That, to thy native strengths restored,
With each advantage shalt thou stand
That aids thee new to guard thy land."

XIV.

Dark lightning flash'd from Roderick's eye—
"Seas thy presumption, then, so high,
Because a wretched kern ye slew,
Homage to name to Roderick Dhu?
He yields not, he, to man nor Fate?
Thou addst but fuel to my hate:—
My clansman's blood demands revenge.
Not yet prepared?—By heaven, I change
My thought, and hold thy valor light
As that of some vain carpet knight,
Who ill deserved my courteous care,
And whose best boast is but to wear
A braid of his fair lady's hair."—
"I thank thee, Roderick, for the word!
It nerves my heart, it steels my sword;
For I have sworn this braid to stain
In the best blood that warms thy vein.
Now, truce, farewell! and, ruth, begone!—
Yet think not that by thee alone,
Proud Chief! can courtesy be shown;
Though not from copse, or heath, or cairn,
Start at my whistle clansmen stern,
Of this small horn one feeble blast
Would fearful odds against thee cast.
But fear not—doubt not—which thou wilt—
We try this quarrel hilt to hilt."
Then each at once his falchion drew,
Each on the ground his seabbard threw,
Each look'd to sun, and stream, and plain,
As what they ne'er might see again;
Then foot, and point, and eye opposed,
In dubious strife they darkly closed.3

XV.

Ill fared it then with Roderick Dhu
That on the field his targe he threw,4
Whose brazen studs and tough bull-hide
Had death so often dash'd aside;
For, train'd abroad his arms to wield,
Fitz-James's blade was sword and shield.
He practiced every pass and ward,
To thrust, to strike, to feint, to guard;
While less expert, though stronger far,
The Gael maintain'd unequal war.5
Three times in closing strife they stood,
And thrice the Saxon blade drank blood;
No stinted draught, no scanty tide,
The gushing flood the tartans dyed.
Fierce Roderick felt the fatal drain,
And shower'd his blows like wintry rain;
And, as firm rock, or castle roof,
Against the winter shower is proof,
The foe, invulnerable still,
Foil'd his wild rage by steady skill;
Till, at advantage ta'en, his brand
Forced Roderick's weapon from his hand,
And, backward borne upon the lea,
Brought the proud Chieftain to his knee.6

XVI.

"Now yield thee, or by Him who made
The world, thy heart's blood dyes my blade!"—
"Thy threats, thy mercy, I defy!
Let recreant yield, who fears to die."7
—Like adder darting from his coil,
Like wolf that dashes through the toil,
Like mountain cat who guards her young,
Full at Fitz-James's throat he sprung;8
Received, but reck'd not of, a wound,
And lock'd his arms his foeman round.—
Now, gallant Saxon, hold thine own!
No maiden's hand is round thee thrown!
That desperate grasp thy frame might feel
Through bars of brass and triple steel!—
They tug, they strain! down, down they go,
The Gael above, Fitz-James below.
The Chieftain's gripe his throat compress'd,
His knee was planted on his breast;
His clotted locks he backward threw,
Across his brow his hand he drew,
From blood and mist to clear his sight,
Then gleam'd aloft his dagger bright!—
—But hate and fury ill supplied
The stream of life's exhausted tide,
And all too late the advantage came
To turn the odds of deadly game;

---

1 MS.: "In lightning flash'd the Chief's dark eye."
2 MS.: "He stag'd not, he, to James nor Fate."
3 "The two principal figures are contrasted with uncommon felicity. Fitz-James, who more nearly resembles the French Henry IV, than the Scottish James V., is gay, amorous, fickle, intrepid, impetuous, affectionate, courteous, graceful, and dignified. Roderick is gloomy, vindictive, arrogant, undaunted, but constant in his affections, and true to his engagements; and the whole passage in which these personages are placed in opposition, from their first meeting to their final conflict, is conceived and written with a sublimity which has been rarely equalled."—Quarterly Review, 1810.
4 See Appendix, Note 3 N.
5 MS.: "Not Roderick thus, though stronger far,
More tall, and more inured to war."
6 This couplet is not in the MS.
7 See Appendix, Note 3 O.
8 MS.: "Yield they alone who fear to die."
—Like mountain cat who guards her young,
Full at Fitz-James's throat he sprung."
For, while the dagger gleam'd on high,
Reel'd soul and sense, reel'd brain and eye,
Down came the blow! but in the heath
The erring blade found bloodless sheath.
The struggling foe may now unclasp
The fainting Chief's relaxing grasp;
Unwounded from the dreadful close,
But breathless all, Fitz-James arose.

XVII.
He falter'd thanks to Heaven for life,
Redeem'd, unhoped, from desperate strife;
Next on his foe his look he cast,
Whose every gasp appear'd his last;
In Roderick's gore he dipp'd the brail,—
"Poor Blanche! thy wrongs are dearly paid:
Yet with thy foe must die, or live,
The praise that faith and valor give."
With that he blew a bugle-note,
Undid the collar from his throat,
Unbonneted, and by the wave Sat down his brow and hands to lave,
Then faint afar are heard the feet Of rushing steeds in gallop fleet;
The sounds increase, and now are seen
Four mounted squires in Lincoln green;
Two who bear lance, and two who lead, By loosen'd rein, a saddled steed; Each onward held his headlong course, And by Fitz-James rein'd up his horse,— With wonder view'd the bloody spot— "Exclaim not, gallants! question not.— You, Herbert and Luffness, alight, And bind the wounds of yonder knight; Let the gray palfrey bear his weight, We destin'd for a fairer freight, And bring him on to Stirling straight; I will before at better speed, To seek fresh horse and fitting weed. The sun rides high;—I must be boun To see the archer-game at noon; But lightly Bayard clears the lea.— De Vaux and Herries, follow me.

XVIII.
"Stand, Bayard, stand!"—the steed obey'd,
With arching neck and bended head,
And glancing eye and quivering ear,
As if he loved his lord to hear.

No foot Fitz-James in stirrup staid,
No grasp upon the saddle laid,
But wrench'd his left hand in the mane,
And lightly bound from the plain,
Turn'd on the horse his armed heel,
And stirr'd his courage with the steel,
Bounded the fiery steed in air,
The rider sat erect and fair,
Then like a bolt from steel crossbow
Forth launch'd, along the plain they go,
They dash'd that rapid torrent through,
And up Carhonic's hill they flew;
Still at the gallop prick'd the Knight,
His merry-men follow'd as they might.
Along thy banks, swift Teith! they ride,
And in the race they mock thy tide;
Torry and Lendrick now are past,
And Deanstown lies behind them cast;
They rise, the banner'd towers of Doune, They sink in distant woodland soon;
Blair-Drummond sees the hoofs strike fire, They sweep like breeze through Ochtertyre;
They mark just glance and disappear
The lofty brow of ancient Kier;
They bathe their coursers' sweltering sides,
Dark Forth! amid thy sluggish tides,
And on the opposing shore take ground,
With plash, with scramble, and with bound.
Right-hand they leave thy cliffs, Craig-Forth! And soon the bulwark of the North,
Gray Stirling, with her towers and town,
Upon their fleet career look'd down.

XIX.
As up the flinty path they strain'd, Sudden his steed the leader rein'd; A signal to his squire he flung, Who instant to his stirrup sprung:— "Seest thou, De Vaux, yon woodsman gray, Who townward holds the rocky way, Of stature tall and poor array? Mark'st thou the firm yet active stride With which he scales the mountain side? Know'st thou from whence he comes, or whom?"— "No, by my word,—a brawly groom He seems, who in the field or chase A baron's train would nobly grace."— "Out, out, De Vaux! can fear supply, And jealousy, no sharper eye?"

1 MS.: "Panting and breathless on the sands, But all unwounded, now he stands."
2 MS.: "Redeem'd, unhoped, from deadly strife;
Next on his foe his look he cast,
Threw,
Whose every breath appear'd his last."
3 MS.: "Faint and afar are heard the feet."
4 The ruins of Doune Castle, formerly the residence of the Earls of Menteith, now the property of the Earl of Moray, are situated at the confluence of the Ardoch and the Teith.
5 MS.: "Blair-Drummond saw their hoofs of fire."
6 It may be worth noting that the poet marks the progress of the king by naming in succession places familiar and dear to his own early recollections—Blair-Drummond, the seat of the Homes of Kaimes; Kier, that of the principal family of the name of Stirling; Ochtertyre, that of John Ramsay, the well-known antiquary, and correspondent of Burns; and Craigforth, that of the Callenders of Craigforth, almost under the walls of Stirling Castle,—all hospitable roads, under which he had spent many of his younger days.—Ed.
Afar, ere to the hill he drew,
That stately form and step I knew;
Like form in Scotland is not seen,
Treads not such step on Scottish green.
'Tis James of Douglas, by Saint Serle!
The uncle of the banish'd Earl.
Away, away, to court, to show
The near approach of dreaded foe:
The King must stand upon his guard;
Douglas and he must meet prepared."
Then right-hand wheel'd their steeds, and straight
They won the castle's postern gate.

XX.
The Douglas, who had bent his way
From Cambus-kenneth's abbey gray,
Now, as he clumb'd the rocky shelf,
Held sad communion with himself:—
"Yes! all is true my fears could frame;
A prisoner lies the noble Graeme,
And fiery Roderick soon will feel
The vengeance of the royal steel.
I, only I, can ward their fate,—
God grant the ransom come not late!
The Abbess hath her promise given,
My child shall be the bride of Heaven;—
—Be pardon'd one repining tear!
For he who gave her knows how dear,
How excellent,—but that is by,
And now my business is—to die.
—Ye towers! within whose circuit dread
A Douglas by his sovereign bled;
And thou, O sad and fatal mound?
That oft hast heard the death-axe sound,
As on the noblest of the land
Fell the stern headsmen's bloody hand,—
The dungeon, block, and nameless tomb
Prepare—for Douglas seeks his doom!
—But hark! what blithe and jolly peal
Makes the Fr ancisean steeple reel?
And see! upon the crowded street,
In motley groups what masquers meet!
Banner and pageant, pipe and drum,
And merry morrice-dancers come,
I guess, by all this quaint array,
The burghers hold their sports to-day.
James will be there; he loves such show,
Where the good yeoman bends his bow,
And the tough wrestler foils his foe,

As well as where, in proud career,
The high-born tilter shivers spear.
I'll follow to the Castle-park,
And play my prize;—King James shall mark
If age has tamed these sinews stark,
Whose force so oft, in happier days,
His boyish wonder loved to praise."

XXI.
The Castle gates were open flung,
The quivering drawbridge rock'd and rung,
And echo'd loud the flinty street
Beneath the coursers' clattering feet,
As slowly down the steep descent
Fair Scotland's King and nobles went,
While all along the crowded way
Was jubilee and loud huzza.
And ever James was bending low
To his white jennet's saddle-bow,
Doffing his cap to city dame,
Who smiled and blush'd for pride and shame;
And well the simperer might be vain,—
He chose the fairest of the train.
Gravely he greets each city sire,
Commends each pageant's quaint attire,
Gives to the dancers thanks aloud,
And smiles and nods upon the crowd,
Who rend the heavens with their acclam's,
"Long live the Commons' King, King James!"
Behind the King throng'd peer and knight,
And noble dame and damsel bright,
Whose fiery steeds ill brook'd the stay
Of the steep street and crowded way.
—But in the train you might discern
Dark lowering brow and visage stern;
There nobles mourn'd their pride restrain'd,
And the mean burgher's joys disdain'd;
And chiefs, who, hostage for their clan,
Were each from home a banish'd man,
There thought upon their own gray tower,
Their waving woods, their feudal power,
And deem'd themselves a shameful part
Of pageant which they cursed in heart.

XXII.
Now, in the Castle-park, drew out
Their chequer'd bands the joyous rout.
There morrice's, with bell at heel,
And blade in hand, their mazes wheel.

1 The Edinburgh Reviewer remarks on "that unhappy couple, where the King himself is in such distress for a rhyme as to be obliged to supply one of the obscurest saints in the calendar." The reading of the MS. is—
"Tis James of Douglas, by my word,
The uncle of the banish'd Lord."
2 See Appendix, Note 3 P.
3 Ibid. Note 3 Q.
4 MS. "King James and all his nobles went . . .
Ever the King was bending low
To his white jennet's saddle-bow,
Doffing his cap to burgher dame,
Who smiling blush'd for pride and shame."
5 MS.: "Nobles who mourn'd their power restrain'd,
And the poor burgher's joys disdain'd;
Dark chief, who, hostage for his clan,
Was from his home a banish'd man,
Who thought upon his own gray tower,
The waving woods, his feudal lower,
And deem'd himself a shameful part
Of pageant that he cursed in heart."
6 The MS. adds:
"With awkward stride there city groom
Would part of fabled knight assume."
But chief, beside the butts, there stand
Bold Robin Hood, and all his band,—
Friar Tuck with quarterstaff and cowl,
Old Scaulthelocke with his surly scowl,
Maid Marion, fair as ivory bone,
Scarlet, and Mutch, and Little John;
Their bugles challenge all that will
In archery to prove their skill.
The Douglas bent a bow of might,—
His first shaft centred in the white,
And when in turn he shot again,
His second split the first in twain.
From the King’s hand must Douglas take
A silver dart, the archer’s stake;
Fondly he watch’d, with watery eye;
Some answering glance of sympathy,—
No kind emotion made reply!
Indifferent as to archer wight,
The Monarch gave the arrow bright.

XXIII.
Now, clear the ring! for, hand to hand,
The manly wrestlers take their stand,
Two o’er the rest superior rose,
And proud demanded mightier foes;
Nor call’d in vain,—for Douglas came.
—For life is Hugh of Larbert lane;
Scarce better John of Allon’s fare,
Whom senseless home his comrades bear.
Prize of the wrestling match, the King
To Douglas gave a golden ring,
While coldly glanced his eye of blue,
As frozen drop of wintry dew.
Douglas would speak, but in his breast
His struggling soul his words suppress’d;
Indignant then he turn’d him where
Their arms the brawny yeomen bare,
To hurl the massive bar in air.
When each his utmost strength had shown,
The Douglas rent an earth-fast stone
From its deep bed, then heaved it high,
And sent the fragment through the sky,
A road beyond the farthest mark;—
And still in Stirling’s royal park,
The gray-hair’d sires, who know the past,
To strangers point the Douglas east,
And moralize on the decay
Of Scottish strength in modern day.

XXIV.
The vale with loud applause rang,
The Ladies’ Rock sent back the clang;
The King, with look unmoved, bestow’d
A purse well fill’d with pieces broad.

Indignant smiled the Douglas proud,
And threw the gold among the crowd,¹
Who now, with anxious wonder, sear,
And sharper glance, the dark gray man;
Till whispers rose among the throng,
That heart so free, and hands so strong,
Must to the Douglas blood belong;
The old men mark’d, and shook the head,
To see his hair with silver spread,
And wink’d aside, and told each son
Of feats upon the English done,
Ere Douglas of the stalwart hand²
Was exiled from his native land.
The women praised his stately form,
Though wreck’d by many a winter’s storm;³
The youth with awe and wonder saw
His strength surpassing Nature’s law.
Thus judged, as is their wont, the crowd,
Till murmur rose to clamors loud.
But not a glance from that proud ring
Of peers who circled round the King
With Douglas held communion kind,
Or call’d the banish’d man to mind;⁴
No, not from those who, at the chase,
Once held his side the honor’d place,
Begirt his board, and, in the field,
Found safety underneath his shield;
For he whom royal eyes disown,
When was his form to courtiers known!

XXV.
The Monarch saw the gambols flag,
And bade let loose a gallant stag,
Whose pride, the holiday to crown,
Two favorite greyhounds should pull down,
That venison free, and Bordeaux wine,
Might serve the archery to dine.
But Lufra,—whom from Douglas’ side
Nor bire nor threat could e’er divide,
The fleetest hound in all the North,—
Brave Lufra saw, and darted forth.
She left the royal hounds mid-way,
And, dashing on the antler’d prey,
Sunk her sharp muzzle in his flank,
And deep the flowing life-blood drank.
The King’s stout huntsman saw the sport
By strange intruder broken short,
Came up, and with his leach unbound,
In anger struck the noble hound.
—The Douglas had endured, that morn,
The King’s cold look, the nobles’ scorn,
And last, and worst to spirit proud,
Had borne the pity of the crowd;

¹ MS.: “Of mortal strength in modern day.”
² MS.: “Scatter’d the gold among the crowd.”
³ MS.: “Ere James of Douglas’ stalwart hand.”
⁴ MS.: “Though worn by many a winter storm.”
⁵ MS.: “Or call’d his stately form to mind.”

1 See Appendix, Note 3 R.
2 MS.: “Fondly he watch’d, with watery eye,
For answering glance of sympathy,—
But no emotion made reply!
Indifferent as to unknown wight,
Odd as to unknown yeoman,
The King gave forth the arrow bright.”

3 See Appendix, Note 3 S.
4 Ibid. Note 3 T.
5 MS.: “A purse well fill’d with pieces broad.”
6 MS.: “Or call’d his stately form to mind.”
THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

But Lufra had been fondly bred,
To share his board, to watch his bed,
And oft would Ellen Lufra's neck
In maiden glee with garlands deck;
They were such playmates, that with name
Of Lufra, Ellen's image came.
His stiffled wrath is brimming high,
In darken'd brow and flashing eye;
As waves before the bark divide,
The crowd gave way before his stride;
Needs but a buffalo and no more,
The groom lies senseless in his gore:
Such blow no other hand could deal,
Though gauntleted in glove of steel.

XXVI.
Then clamor'd loud the royal train,
And brandish'd swords and staves amain.
But stern the Baron's warning—"Back!"
Back, on your lives, ye menial pack!
Beware the Douglas.—Yes! behold,
King James! the Douglas, doom'd of old,
And vainly sought for near and far,
A victim to atone the war,
A willing victim, now attends,
Nor craves thy grace but for his friends;"—
"Thus is my clemency repaid?
Presumptuous Lord!" the Monarch said;
"Of thy misproud ambitious clan,
Thou, James of Bothwell, wert the man,
The only man, in whom a foe
My woman-mercy would not know:
But shall a Monarch's presence brook?
Injurious blow, and haughty look?—
What ho! the Captain of our Guard!
Give the offender fitting ward.—
Break off the sports?"—for tumult rose,
And yeomen 'gan to bend their bows,—
"Break off the sports!" he said, and frown'd;
"And bid our horsemen clear the ground;"

XXVII.
Then uproar wild and misarray
Marr'd the fair form of festal day.
The horsemen prick'd among the crowd,
Repell'd by threats and insult loud;
To earth are borne the old and weak,
The timorous fly, the women shriek;
With flint, with shaft, with staff, with bar,
The hardwood urge tumultuous war.
At once round Douglas darkly sweep
The royal spears in circle deep,
And slowly scale the pathway steep;

While on the rear in thunder pour
The rabble with disorder'd roar.
With grief the noble Douglas saw
The Commons rise against the law,
And to the leading soldier said,—
"Sir John of Hyndford! 'twas my blade
That knighthood on thy shoulder laid;
For that good deed, permit me then
A word with these misguided men.

XXVIII.
"Hear, gentle friends! ere yet for me
Ye break the bands of fealty:
My life, my honor, and my cause,
I tender free to Scotland's laws.
Are these so weak as must require
The aid of your misguided ire?
Or, if I suffer causeless wrong,
Is then my selfish rage so strong,
My sense of public weal so low,
That, for mean vengeance on a foe,
Those cords of love I should unbind
Which kni my country and my kind?
Oh no! Believe, in yonder tower
It will not soothe my captive hour
To know those spears our foes should dread
For me in kindred gore are red;
To know, in fruitless brawl begun,
For me that mother wails her son;
For me that widow's mate expires;
For me that orphans weep their sires;
That patriots mourn insulted laws,
And curse the Douglas for the cause.
Oh let your patience ward such ill,
And keep your right to love me still!"

XXIX.
The crowd's wild fury sunk again
In tears, as tempests melt in rain.
With lifted hands and eyes, they pray'd
For blessings on his generous head,
Who for his country felt alone,
And prized her blood beyond his own.
Old men, upon the verge of life,
Bless'd him who staid the civil strife;
And mothers held their babes on high,
The self-devoted Chief to spy,
Triumphant over wrongs and ire,
To whom the prattlers owed a sire.
Even the rough soldier's heart was moved;
As if behind some bier beloved,
With trailing arms and drooping head,
The Douglas up the hill he led,
And at the Castle's battled verge
With sighs resign'd his honor'd charge.

1 MS.: "Clamor'd his comrades of the train;"
2 MS.: "But stern the warrior's warning—"Back?"
3 MS.: "But in my court insidious blow,
And beard talk and thus un-laid?
What ho! the Captain of our Guard!"
4 MS.: "Their threats repell'd by insults loud."
5 MS.: "The crowd's wild fury ebb'd amain,
In tears, as tempests sink in rain."
XXX.
The offended Monarch rode apart,
With bitter thought and swelling heart,
And would not now vouchsafe again
Through Stirling streets to lead his train.
"Oh, Lennox, who would wish to rule
This chancing crowd, this common fool?
Hear'st thou," he said, "the loud acclaim
With which they shout the Douglas name?
With like acclaim, the vulgar throat
Strain'd for King James their morning note;
With like acclaim they hail'd the day
When first I broke the Douglas' sway;
And like acclaim would Douglas greet
If he could hurl me from my seat.
Who o'er the herd would wish to reign,
Fantastic, fickle, fierce, and vain!
Vain as the leaf upon the stream,¹
And fickle as a changeful dream;
Fantastic as a woman's mood,
And fierce as Frenzy's fever'd blood.
Thou many-headed monster thing,²
Oh who would wish to be thy king!

XXXI.
"But soft! what messenger of speed
Spurs hitherward his panting steed?
I guess his cognizance afar—
What from our cousin, John of Mar?"—
"He prays, my liege, your sports keep bound
Within the safe and guarded ground:
For some foul purpose yet unknown,—
Most sure for evil to the throne,—
The outlaw'd Chief'stair, Roderick Dhu,
Has summon'd his rebellious crew;
'Tis said, in James of Bothwell's aid
These loose banditti stand array'd.
The Earl of Mar, this morn, from Doune
To break their muster march'd, and soon
Your grace will hear of battle fought;
But earnestly the Earl besought,
Till for such danger he provide,
With scanty train you will not ride."—³

XXXII.
"Thou warn'st me I have done amiss,—
I should have earlier look'd to this:
I lost it in this bustling day,
—Retrace with speed thy former way;
Spare not for spoiling of thy steed,
The best of mine shall be thy mace.
Say to our faithful Lord of Mar,
We do forbid the intended war:

1 MS.: "Vain as the sleek man's idle dream."
2 MS.: "Who deserves greatness,
Deserves your hate; and your affections are
A sleek man's appetite, who desires most that
Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favors, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust ye!

Roderick, this morn, in single fight,
Was made our prisoner by a knight;
And Douglas hath himself and cause
Submitted to our kingdom's laws.
The tidings of their leader lost
Will soon dissolve the mountain host,
Nor would we that the vulgar feel,
For their Chief's crimes, avenging steel.
Bear Mar our message, Braco: fly!"—
He turn'd his steed,—"My liege, I lie,—
Yet, ere I cross this lily lawn,
I fear the broadswords will be drawn."
The turf the flying courser spurn'd,
And to his towers the King return'd.

XXXIII.
Ill with King James's mood that day
Suited gay feast and minstrel lay;
Soon were dismiss'd the courtly throng,
And soon cut short the festal song.
Nor less upon the sadden'd town
The evening sunk in sorrow down.
Theburghers spoke of civil jar,
Of rumor'd feuds and mountain war,
Of Moray, Mar, and Roderick Dhu,
All up in arms—the Douglas too,
They mourn'd him pent within the hold
"Where stout Earl William was of old"—⁴
And there his word the speaker staid,
And finger on his lip he laid,
Or pointed to his dagger blade.
But jaded horsemen, from the west,
At evening to the Castle press'd;
And busy talkers said they bore
Tidings of fight on Katrine's shore;
At noon the deadly fray begun,
And lasted till the set of sun.
Thus giddy rumor shook the town,
Till closed the Night her pennis brown.

The Lady of the Lake.

CANTO SIXTH.

The Guard-room.

I.
The sun, awakening, through the smoky air
Of the dark city casts a sullen glance,
Rousing each caftiff to his task of care,
Of sinful man the sad inheritance;

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland."

Coriolanus, act i. scene 1.

5 MS.: "On distant chase you will not ride."

⁴ Stabbed by James II. in Stirling Castle.
Summoning revellers from the lagging dance,
Searing the prowling robber to his den;
Gilding on battled tower the warder's lance,
And warning student pale to leave his pen,
And yield his drowsy eyes to the kind nurse of men.

What various scenes, and, oh! what scenes of woe,
Are witness'd by that red and struggling beam!
The fever'd patient, from his pallet low,
Through crowded hospital beholds its stream;
The ruin'd maiden trembles at its gleam,
The debtor wakes to thought of gyve and jail,
The love-lorn wretch starts from tormenting dream;
The wakeful mother, by the glimmering pale,
Trims her sick infant's couch, and soothes his feeble wail.

II.
At dawn the towers of Stirling rang
With soldier step and weapon clang,
While drums, with rolling note, foretell
Relief to weary sentinel.
Through narrow loop and casement barr'd,¹
The sunbeams sought the Court of Guard,
And, struggling with the smoky air,
Deaden'd the torches' yellow glare.
In comfortless alliance shone²
The lights through arch of blacken'd stone,
And show'd wild shapes in garb of war,
Faces deform'd with beard and scar,
All haggard from the midnight watch,
And fever'd with the stern debauch;
For the oak table's massive board,
Flooded with wine, with fragments stored,
And beakers drain'd, and cups o'erthrown,
Show'd in what sport the night had flown.
Some, weary, snored on floor and bench;
Some labor'd still their thirst to quench;
Some, chill'd with watching, spread their hands
O'er the huge chimney's dying brands,
While round them or beside them flung,
At every step their harness rung.

III.
These drew not for their fields the sword,
Like tenants of a feudal lord,
Nor own'd the patriarchal claim
Of Chieflain in their leader's name;
Adventurers they, from far who roved,
To live by battle which they loved.³
There the Italian's clouded face,
The swarthy Spaniard's there you trace;
The mountain-loving Switzer there
More freely breathed in mountain air;
The Fleming there despised the soil,
That paid so ill the laborer's toil;

¹ MS.: "Through blacken'd arch and casement barr'd."
² MS.: "The lights in strange alliance shone
Beneath the arch of blacken'd stone."
³ MS.: "These drew not for their fields the sword,
Like tenants of a feudal lord,
Nor own'd the patriarchal claim
Of Chieflain in their leader's name;"
⁴ MS.: "Sad burden to the ruffian jest,
And rude oaths vented by the rest."
⁵ Bacchanalian interjection, borrowed from the Dutch.
And 'tis right of his office poor laymen to lurch,
Who infringe the domains of our good Mother Church.
Yet whoop, bully boys! off with your liquor,
Sweet Marjorie's the word, and a fig for the vicar! —

VI.
The warden's challenge, heard without,
Staid in mid-roar the merry shout.
A soldier to the portal went,—
"Here is old Bertram, sirs, of Ghent;
And,—beat for jubilice the drum!—
A maid and minstrel with him come."
Bertram, a Fleming, gray and soarr'd,
Was entering now the Court of Guard,
A harper with him, and in plaid
All muffled close, a mountain maid,
Who backward shrunk to 'scape the view
Of the loose scene and boisterous crew.
"What news?" they roar'd. —"I only know,
From noon till eve we fought with foe
As wild and as untamable
As the rude mountains where they dwell;
On both sides store of blood is lost,
Nor much success can either boast."—
"But whence thy captives, friend? such spoil
As theirs must needs reward thy toil."
Old dost thou wax, and wars grow sharp;
Thou now hast glee-maiden and harp!
Get thee an ape, and trudge the land,
The leader of a juggler band."

VII.
"No, comrade;—no such fortune mine,
After the fight these sought our line,
That aged harper and the girl,
And, having audience of the Earl,
Mar bade I should purvey them steed,
And bring them hitherward with speed.
Forbear your mirth and rude alarm,
For none shall do them shame or harm."—
"Hear ye his boast?" cried John of Brent,
Ever to strife and jangling bent;

"Shall he strike doe beside our lodge,
And yet the jealous niggard grudge
To pay the forester his fee?
I'll have my share, however it be,
Despite of Moray, Mar, or thee."
Bertram his forward step withstood;—
And, burning in his vengeful mood,
Old Allan, though unfit for strife,
Laid hand upon his dagger knife;
But Ellen boldly stepp'd between,
And droppt' at once the tartan screen:—
So, from his morning cloud, appears
The sun of May, through summer tears.
The savage soldiery, amazed;—
As on descended angel gazed;
Even hardly Brent, abash'd and tamed,
Stood half admiring, half ashamed.

VIII.
Boldly she spoke,—"Soldiers, attend!
My father was the soldier's friend;
Cheer'd him in camps, in marches led,
And with him in the battle bled.
Not from the valiant, or the strong,
Should exile's daughter suffer wrong."—
Answer'd De Brent, most forward still
In every feat or good or ill,—
"I shame me of the part I play'd:
And thou an outlaw's child, poor maid!
An outlaw I by forest laws,
And merry Needwood knows the cause.
Poor Rose,—if Rose be living now,"—
He wiped his iron eye and brow,—
"Must bear such age, I think, as thou.
Hear ye, my mates—I go to call
The Captain of our watch to hall;
There lies my halberd on the floor;
And he that steps my halberd o'er,
To do the maid injurious part,
My shaft shall quiver in his heart!—
Beware loose speech, or jesting rough:
Ye all know John de Brent. Enough."

1 "The greatest blemish in the poem is the ribaldry and dull vulgarity which is put into the mouths of the soldiery in the guard-room. Mr. Scott has condescended to write a song for them which will be read with pain, we are persuaded, even by his warmest admirers; and his whole genius, and even his power of versification, seems to desert him when he attempts to repeat their conversation. Here is some of the stuff which has dropped, in this insipidious attempt, from the pen of one of the first of poets of his age or country," &c. &c.—JEFFREY.

2 The MS. reads after this:
"Get thee an ape, and then at once
Thou may'st renowne the warden's lance,
And trudge through borough and through land,
The leader of a juggler band."

3 See Appendix, Note 3 V.

4 "Bertram (his) violence withstood."

5 MS.: "While the rude soldiery, amazed.

6 MS.: "Should Ellen Douglas suffer wrong."

7 MS.: "'My Rose,—he wiped his iron eye and brow,—
'Poor Rose,—if Rose be living now.'"
IX.
Their Captain came, a gallant young
(Or Tullibardine's house he sprung),
Nor wore he yet the spurs of knight;
Gay was his mien, his humor light,
And, though by courtesy controll'd,
Forward his speech, his bearing bold.
The high-born maiden ill could brook
The scanning of his curious look
And dauntless eye;—and yet, in sooth,
Young Lewis was a generous youth;
But Ellen's lovely face and mien,
Ill suited to the garb and scene,
Might lightly bear construction strange,
And give loose fancy scope to range.
"Welcome to Stirling towers, fair maid!
Come ye to seek a champion's aid,
On palfrey white, with harper hoar,
Like errant damosel of yore?
Does thy high quest a knight require,
Or may the venture suit a squire?"
Her dark eye flash'd;—she paused and sigh'd,—
"Oh what have I to do with pride!—
Through scenes of sorrow, shame, and strife,
A suppliant for a father's life,
I crave an audience of the King.
Behold, to back my suit, a ring,
The royal pledge of grateful claims,
Given by the Monarch to Fitz-James."

X.
The signet-ring young Lewis took,
With deep respect and alter'd look;
And said,—"This ring our duties own;
And pardon, if to worth unknown,
In semblance mean obscurely veil'd,
Lady, in aught my folly fail'd.
Soon as the day dings wide his gates,
The King shall know what suitor waits.
Please you, meanwhile, in fitting bower
Repose you till his waking hour;
Female attendance shall obey
Your hest, for service or array,
Permit I marshal you the way."
But, ere she followed, with the grace
And open bounty of her race,
She bade her slender purse be shared
Among the soldiers of the guard,
The rest with thanks their guerdon took;
But Brent, with shy and awkward look,
On the reluctant maiden's hold
Forced bluntly back the proffer'd gold;—
"Forgive a haughty English heart,
And oh, forget its ruder part!
The vacant purse shall be my share,"
Which in my barrel-cap I'll bear,

Perehance, in jeopardy of war,
Where gayer crests may keep afar."
With thanks—'twas all she could—the maid
His rugged courtesy repaid.

XI.
When Ellen forth with Lewis went,
Allan made suit to John of Brent:—
"My lady safe, oh let your grace
Give me to see my master's face!
His minstrel I,—to share his doom
Bound from the cradle to the tomb.
Tenth in descent, since first my sires
Waked for his noble house their lyres,
Nor one of all the race was known
But prized its weal above their own.
With the Chief's birth begins our care;
Our harp must sooth the infant heir,
Teach the youth tales of fight, and grace
His earliest feat of field or chase;
In peace, in war, our rank we keep,
We cheer his board, we soothe his sleep,
Nor leave him till we pour our verse—
A doleful tribute!—o'er his hearse.
Then let me share his captive lot;
It is my right—deny it not?"—
"Little we reck," said John of Brent,
"We Southern men, of long descent;
Nor wot we how a name—a word—
Makes clansmen vassals to a lord:
Yet kind my noble landlord's part,—
God bless the house of Beaudesert!
And, but I loved to drive the deer
More than to guide the laboring steer,
I had not dwelt an outcast here.
Come, good old Minstrel, follow me;
Thy Lord and Chieftain thou shalt see."

XII.
Then, from a rusted iron hook,
A bunch of ponderous keys he took,
Lighted a torch, and Allan led Through grated arch and passage dread.
Portals they pass'd, where, deep within,
Spoke prisoner's moan, and fetters' din;
Through rugged vaults, where, loosely stored,
Lay wheel, and axe, and headsmen's sword,
And many a hideous engine grim,
For wrenching joint, and crushing limb,
By artist form'd who deem'd it shame
And sin to give their work a name.
They halted at a low-brow'd porch,
And Brent to Allan gave the torch,
While bolt and chain he backward roll'd,
And made the bar unhasp its hold.

1 MS.: "The Monarch gave to James Fitz-James."
2 MS.: "The silken purse shall serve for me,
And in my barrel-cap shall flee."
3 MS.: —— "low broad vaults."
4 MS.: —— "stretching."
They enter'd:—"twas a prison-room
Of stern security and gloom,
Yet not a dungeon; for the day
Through lofty gratings found its way,
And rude and antique garniture
Deck'd the sad walls and oaken floor1
Such as the rugged days of old
Deen'd fit for captive noble's hold.
"Here," said De Brent, "thou may'st remain2
Till the Leech visit him again.
Strict is his charge, the warders tell,
To tend the noble prisoner well."
Retiring then, the bolt he drew,
And the lock's murmurs grow'd anew.
Roused at the sound, from lowly bed
A captive feebly raised his head;
The wondering Minstrel look'd, and knew—
Not his dear lord, but Roderick Dhu!
For, come from where Clan-Alpine fought,
They, erring, deem'd the Chief he sought.

XIII.
As the tall ship, whose lofty proe
Shall never stem the billows more,
Deserted by her gallant hand,
Amid the breakers lies a strand,—
So, on his couch, lay Roderick Dhu!
And oft his fever'd limbs he threw
In toss abrupt, as when her sides
Lie rocking in the advancing tides,
That shake her frame with ceaseless beat,
Yet cannot heave her from her seat;—
Oh, how unlike her course at sea,3
Or his free step on hill and lea!—
Soon as the Minstrel he could scan,
"What of thy lady?—of my clan?—
My mother?—Douglas?—tell me all!
Have they been ruin'd in my fall?
Ah, yes! or wherefore art thou here?
Yet speak,—speak boldly,—do not fear."—
(For Allan, who his mood well knew,
Was chok'd with grief and terror too.)—
"Who fought—who fled?—Old man, be brief;—
Some might—for they had lost their Chief.
Who basely live?—who bravely die?—"
"Oh calm thee, Chief!" the Minstrel cried;
"Ellen is safe?"—"For that thank Heaven!"—
"And hopes are for the Douglas given;—
The Lady Margaret, too, is well;
And, for thy clan,—on field or fell,
Has never harp of minstrel told!
Of combat fought so true and bold,
Thy stately Pine is yet unbent,
Though many a goodly bough is rent."

XIV.
The Chieftain rear'd his form on high,
And fever's fire was in his eye;
But ghastly, pale, and livid streaks
Chequer'd his swarthy brow and cheeks.
—"Hark, Minstrel! I have heard thee play,
With measure bold, on festal day,
In yon lone isle, . . . again where ne'er
Shall Harper play, or warrior hear! . . .
That stirring air that peals on high
O'er Dermid's race our victory,—
Strike it!—and then (for well thou canst),
Free from thy minstrel-spirit glanced,
Fling me the picture of the fight,
When met my clan the Saxon might.
I'll listen, till my fancy hears
The clang of swords, the crash of spears!
These grates, these walls, shall vanish then,
For the fair field of fighting men,
And my free spirit burst away,
As if it soar'd from battle fray."

The trembling Bard with awe obey'd,—
Slow on the harp his hand he laid;
But soon remembrance of the sight
He witness'd from the mountain's height,
With what old Bertram told at night;6
Awaken'd the full power of song,
And bore him in career along;—
As shallop launch'd on river's tide,
That slow and fearful leaves the side,
But, when it feels the middle stream,
Drives downward swift as lightning's beam.

XV.
Battle of Braf' an Dun{l}

"The Minstrel came once more to view
The eastern ridge of Benvenue,
For, ere he part'd, he would say
Farewell to lovely Loch Achray;—
Where shall he find, in foreign land,
So lone a lake, so sweet a strand?
There is no breeze upon the fern,
Nor ripple on the lake,
Upon her eyry nods the erne,
The deer has sought the brake;
The small birds will not sing aloud,
The springing trout lies still,
So darkly glooms yon thunder cloud,
That swathes, as with a purple shroud,
Benledi's distant hill.
Is it the thunder's solemn sound
That mutters deep and dread,
Or echoes from the groaning ground
The warrior's measured tread?"

1 MS.: ———— "flinty floor."
2 MS.: ———— "thou may'st remain,"
   And then, retiring, bolt and chain,
   And rusty bar, he drew again.
   Roused at the sound," &c.
3 MS.: "Oh, how unlike her course on main,
   Or his free step on hill and plain?"
4 MS.: "Shall never harp of minstrel tell
   Of combat fought so fierce and well."
5 See Appendix, Note 3 W.
6 The MS. has not this line. 7 See Appendix, Note 3 X.
Is it the lightning's quivering glance
That on the thicket streams,
Or do they flash on spear and lance
The sun's retiring beams?
— I see the dagger-crest of Mar,
I see the Moray's silver star,
Wave o'er the cloud of Saxon war,
That up the lake comes winding far!
To hero bound for battle-strife,
Or bard of martial lay,
'Twere worth ten years of peaceful life,
One glance at their array!

XVI.
"Their light-arm'd archers far and near
Survey'd the tangled ground,
Their centre ranks, with pike and spear,
A twilight forest drown'd,
Their barbed horsemen, in the rear,
The stern battalia crown'd,
No cymbal clash'd, no clarion rang,
Still were the pipe and drum;
Save heavy tread, and armor's clang,
The sullen march was dumb.
There breathed no wind their crests to shake,
Or wave their flags abroad;
Searce the frail aspen seem'd to quake,
That shadow o'er their road.
Their vanward scouts no tidings bring,
Can rouse no lurking foe,
Nor spy a trace of living thing,
Save when they stirr'd the roe;
The host moves, like a deep-sea wave,
Where rise no rocks its pride to brave,
High-swelling, dark, and slow.
The lake is pass'd, and now they gain
A narrow and a broken plain,
Before the Trosachs' rugged jaws;
And here the horse and spearmen pause,
While, to explore the dangerous glen,
Dive through the pass the archer-men.

XVII.
"At once there rose so wild a yell
Within that dark and narrow dell,
As all the fiends from heaven that fell
Had peal'd the banner-cry of hell!
Forth from the pass in tumult driven,
Like chaff before the wind of heaven,
The archery appear;
For life! for life! their plight they ply—
And shriek, and shout, and battle-cry,
And plaid and bonnets waving high,
And broadswords flashing to the sky,
Are maddening in the rear.

Onward they drive, in dreadful race,
Pursuers and pursued;
Before that tide of flight and chase,
How shall it keep its rooted place,
The spearman's twilight wood?—
'Down, down,' cried Mar, 'your lances down!
Bear back both friend and foe!'—
Like reeds before the tempest's frown,
That 서ried grove of lances brown
At once lay level'd low;
And closely shouldering side to side,
The bristling ranks the onset side.—
'W'e'll quell the savage mountaineer,
As their Tinchei caws the game!'
They come as fleet as forest deer,
We'll drive them back as tame.'—

XVIII.
"Bearing before them, in their course,
The relics of the archer force,
Like wave with crest of sparkling foam,
Right onward did Clan-Alpine come.
Above the tide, each broadsword bright
Was brandishing like beam of light,
Each targe was dark below;
And with the ocean's mighty swing,
When heaving to the tempest's wing,
They hurl'd them on the foe.
I heard the lance's shivering crash,
As when the whirlwind rends the ash,
I heard the broadsword's deadly clang,
As if an hundred anvils rang!
But Moray wheel'd his rearward rank
Of horsemen on Clan-Alpine's flank,
—'My banner-man, advance!' I see,' he cried, 'their column shake.—
Now, gallants! for your ladies' sake,
Upon them with the lance'!—
The horsemen dash'd among the rout,
As deer break through the broom;
Their steeds are stout, their swords are out,
They soon make lightsome room.
Clan-Alpine's best are backward borne—
Where, where was Roderick then!
One blast upon his bugle-horn
Were worth a thousand men!
And roulent through the pass of fear
The battle's tide was pour'd;
Vanish'd the Saxons struggling spear,
Vanish'd the mountain sword,
As Bracklinn's chasm, so black and steep,
Receives her roaring linn,
As the dark caverns of the deep,
Suck the wild whirlpool in,

1 The MS. has not this couplet.
2 A circle of sportsmen, who, by surrounding a great space and gradually narrowing, brought immense quantities of deer together, which usually made desperate efforts to break through the Tinchei.
3 MS.: "And roulent down the darksome pass
The battle's tide was pour'd;
There told the spearman's struggling spear,
There raged the mountain sword."
So did the deep and darksome pass
Devour the battle's mingled mass:
None linger now upon the plain
Save those who ne'er shall fight again.

XIX.
"Now westward rolls the battle's din,
That deep and doubling pass within.
—Minstrel, away! the work of fate!
Is bearing on: its issue wait
Where the rude Trosachs' dread defile
Opens on Katrine's lake and isle.—

Gray Benvenue I soon repass'd,
Loch Katrine lay beneath me east.
The sun is set;—the clouds are met,
The lowering sowl of heaven
An inky hue of livid blue
To the deep lake has given;
Strange gusts of wind from mountain glen
Swept o'er the lake, then sunk again.
I heeded not the eddying surge,
Mine eye but saw the Trosachs' gorge,
Mine ear but heard the sullen sound
Which like an earthquake shook the ground,
And spoke the stern and desperate strife
That parts not but with parting life,
Seeming, to minstrel ear, to toll
The dirge of many a passing soul.
Nearer it comes—the dim-wood glen
The martial flood disgorged aghen,
But not in mingled tide;
The plaided warriors of the North
High on the mountain thunder forth,
And overhang its side;
While by the lake below appears
The dark'ning cloud of Saxon spears.
At weary bay each shatter'd band,
Eyeing their foemen, sternly stand;
Their banners stream like tatter'd sail,
That flings its fragments to the gale,
And broken arms and disarray
Mark'd the fall havoc of the day.

XX.
"Viewing the mountain's ridge askance,
The Saxon stood in sullen trance,
Till Moray pointed with his lance,
And cried—'Behold yon isle!—
See! none are left to guard its strand,
But women weak, that wring the hand:
'Tis there of yore the robber band
Their booty wont to pile;—

My purse, with bonnet-pieces store,
To him will swim a bowshot o'er,
And loose a shallop from the shore.
Lightly we'll tame the war-wolf then,
Lord's of his mate, and brood, and den.
Forth from the ranks a spearman sprung,
On earth his casque and corselet rung,
He plunged him in the wave:—
All saw the deed, the purpose knew,
And to their clamors Benvenue
A mingled echo gave;
The Saxons shout their mate to cheer,
The helpless females scream for fear,
And yells for rage the mountaineer.
'Twas then, as by the outery riven,
Pour'd down at once the lowering heaven;
A whirlwind swept Loch Katrine's breast,
Her billows rear'd their snowy crest.
Well for the swimmer swell'd they high,
To mar the Highland marksman's eye;
For round him shower'd, 'mid rain and hail,
The vengeful arrows of the Gael.—
In vain—He nears the isle—and lo!
His hand is on a shallop's bow.
—Just then a flash of lightning came,
It tinged the waves and strand with flame;
I mark'd Dunraggan's widow'd dame,
Behind an oak I saw her stand,
A naked dirk gleam'd in her hand:
It darken'd—but, amid the moan
Of waves, I heard a dying groan;
Another flash!—the spearman floats
A writhing corse beside the boats,
And the stern matron o'er him stood,
Her hand and dagger streaming blood.

XXI.
"'Revenge! revenge!' the Saxons cried,
The Gaels' exulting shout replied.
Despite the elemental rage,
Again they hurry to engage;
But, ere they closed in desperate fight,
Bloody with spurring came a knight,
Sprung from his horse, and, from a crag,
Waved 'twixt the hosts a milk-white flag.
Clarion and trumpet by his side
Rung forth a truce-note high and wide,
While, in the Monarch's name, afar
A herald's voice forbade the war,
For Bothwell's lord, and Roderick bold,
Were both, he said, in captive hold."
THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

—But here the lay made sudden stand;—
The harp escaped the Minstrel's hand!—
Oft had he stolen a glance, to spy
How Roderick brook'd his minstrelsy:
At first, the Chieftain, to the chime,
With lifted hand, kept feeble time;
That motion ceased,—yet feeling strong
Varied his look as changed the song:—
At length, no more his deafen'd ear
The Minstrel melody can hear;
His face grows sharp,—his hands are clenched,
As if some pang his heart-strings wrench'd;
Set are his teeth, his fading eye;—
Is sternly fix'd on vacancy;
Thus, motionless and meanless, drew
His parting breath stout Roderick Dhin:—
Old Allan-bane look'd on aghast,
While grim and still his spirit pass'd;
But when he saw that life was fled,
He pour'd his wailing o'er the dead.

XXII.

Lament.

"And art thou cold and lowly laid, 4
Thy foemen's dread, thy people's aid,
Breadalbane's boast, Clan-Alpine's shade!—
For thee shall none a requiem say?—
For thee,—who loved the minstrel's lay,
For thee, of Bothwell's house the stay,
The shelter of her exiled line,— 5
E'en in this prison-house of thine,
I'll wait for Alpine's honor'd Pine!

"What groans shall yonder valleys fill!
What shrieks of grief shall rend thy hill!
What tears of burning rage shall thrill,
When mourns thy tribe thy battles done,
Thy fall before the race was won,
Thy sword ungirt ere set of sun!
There breathes not clansman of thy line
But would have given his life for thine.—
Oh, woe for Alpine's honor'd Pine!

"Sad was thy lot on mortal stage!—
The captive thrush may brook the cage,
The prison'd eagle dies for rage.

Brave spirit, do not scorn my strain!
And, when its notes awake again,
Even she, so long beloved in vain,
Shall with my harp her voice combine,
And mix her woe and tears with mine,
To wail Clan-Alpine's honor'd Pine."— 6

XXIII.

Ellen, the while, with bursting heart,
Remain'd in lordly bower apart,
Where play'd, with many-color'd gleams,
Through storyed pane the rising beams.
In vain on gilded roof they fall,
And lighten'd up a tapestried wall,
And for her use a menial train
A rich collation spread in vain.
The banquet proud, the chamber gay; 7
Searce drew one curious glance astray;
Or, if she look'd, 'twas but to say,
With better omen dawnd the day
In that lone isle, where waved on high
The dun deer's hide for canopy;
Where oft her noble father shared
The simple meal her care prepared,
While Lutra, crouching by her side,
Her station claim'd with jealous pride,
And Douglas, bent on woodland game, 8
Spoke of the chase to Malcolm Graeme,
Whose answer, oft at random made,
The wandering of his thoughts betray'd.—
Those who such simple joys have known
Are taught to prize them when they're gone.

But sudden, see, she lifts her head!
The window seeks with cautious tread;
What distant music has the power
To win her in this woeful hour!
'Twas from a turret that o'erhung
Her latticed bower, the strain was sung.

XXIV.

Lay of the Imprisoned Huntsman.

"My hawk is tired of perch and hood,
My idle greyhound loathes his food,
My horse is weary of his stall,
And I am sick of captive thrall.

1 MS. "Glowi'd in his look, as swell'd the song."
2 MS. "his [glazing] eye."
3 "Rob Roy, while on his deathbed, learned that a person with whom he was at enmity proposed to visit him. 'Raise me from my bed,' said the invalid; 'throw my plug around me, and bring me my claymore, dirk, and pistols.' It shall never be said that a foeman saw Rob Roy MacGregor defenceless and unarmed." His foeman, conjectured to be one of the Maclarens before and after mentioned, entered and paid his compliments, inquiring after the health of his formidable neighbor. Rob Roy maintained a cold, haughty civility during their short conference; and so soon as he had left the house, 'Now,' he said, 'all is over—let the piper play Ha till mi tuladh! [we return no more]; and he is said to have expired before the dirge was finished."—Introduction to Rob Roy.
4 MS. "And art thou gone," the Minstrel said.
5 MS. "The mightiest of a mighty line.
6 MS. "To the Printer."—I have three pages ready to be copied; you may send them in about an hour. The rest of my flax is on the spindle, but not yet twisted into proper yarn. I am glad you like the battle of Beal an Duline. It is rather too long, but that was unavoidable. I hope you will push on the notes. To save time I shall send the copy when ready to St. John street.—W. S."
7 MS. "The banquet gay, the chamber's pride, Scare drew one curious glance aside."
8 MS. "earnest on his game."
As when the setting sun has given
Ten thousand hues to summer even,
And from their tinee, fancy frames
Aéral knights and fairy dames.
Still by Fitz-James her footing staid;
A few faint steps she forward made,
Then slow her drooping head she raised,
And fearful round the presence gazed;
For him she sought, who own'd this state,
The dreaded prince whose will was fate.
She gazed on many a princely port,
Might well have ruled a royal court;
On many a splendid garb she gazed,
Then turn'd bewild'er'd and amazed,
For all stood bare; and, in the room,
Fitz-James alone wore cap and plume.
To him each lady's look was lent;
On him each courtier's eye was bent;
Midst furs, and silks, and jewels sheen,
He stood, in simple Lincoln green,
The centre of the glittering ring,
And Snowdoun's Knight is Scotland's King!

XXV.

As wreath of snow on mountain breast
Slides from the rock that gave it rest,
Poor Ellen glided from her stay,$^6$
And at the Monarch's feet she lay;
No word her choking voice commands,—
She show'd the ring, she claspy'd her hands.
Oh, not a moment could he brook,
The generous Prince, that suppliant look!
Gently he raised her; and, the while,
Cheek'd with a glance the circle's smile;
Graceful, but grave, her brow he kiss'd,
And bade her terrors be dismiss'd:—
"Yes, Fair; the wandering poor Fitz-James
The fealty of Scotland claims.
To him thy woes, thy wishes, bring;
He will redeem his signet ring.
Ask nought for Douglas; yester even,
His Prince and he have much forgiven.
Wrong hath he had from slanderous tongue,
I, from his rebel kinsmen, wrong.
We would not, to the vulgar crowd,
Yield what they craved with clamor loud;
Calmly we heard and judged his cause,
Our council aided, and our laws.
I stanch'd thy father's death-feud stern
With stent De Vaux and Gray Gleanoirn;
And Bothwell's Lord henceforth we own
The friend and bulwark of our throne.
But, lovely infidel, how now?
What clouds thy misbelieving brow?

XXVI.

Within 'twas brilliant all and light,$^5$
A thronging scene of figures bright;
It glowed on Ellen's dazzled sight,

I wish I were, as I have been,
Hunting the hart in forest green,
With bended bow and blood-hound free,
For that's the life is meet for me.$^1$
I hate to learn the chb of time
From you dull? steeple's drowsy chime,
Or mark it as the sunbeams crawl,
Inch after inch, along the wall.
The lark was wont my matins ring,$^3$
The sable rook my vespers sing;
These towers, although a king's they be,
Have not a hall of joy for me.$^4$
No more at dawning morn I rise
And sun myself in Ellen's eyes,
Drive the fleet deer the forest through,
And homewardwend with evening dew;
A blithesome welcome blithely meet,
And lay my trophies at her feet,
While fled the eve on wing of glee,—
That life is lost to love and me!"

XXV.
The heart-sick lay was hardly said,
The list'ner had not turn'd her head,
It trickled still, the starting tear.
When light a footstep struck her ear,
And Snowdoun's graceful Knight was near.
She turn'd the haistker, lest again
The prisoner should renew his strain.—
"Oh welcome, brave Fitz-James!" she said;
"How may an almost orphan maid
Pay the deep debt?"—"Oh, say not so!
To me no gratitude you owe.
Not mine, alas! the boon to give,
And bid thy noble father live;
I can but be thy guide, sweet maid,
With Scotland's King thy suit to aid.
No tyrant he, though ire and pride
May lay his better mood aside.
Come, Ellen, come! 'tis more than time,
He holds his court at morning prime."
With beating heart, and bosom wrung,
As to a brother's arm she clung.
Gently he dried the falling tear,
And gently whisper'd hope and cheer;
Her faltering steps half led, half staid,
Through gallery fair, and high arcade,
Till, at his touch, its wings of pride
A portal arch unfolded wide.

XXVI.
Within 'twas brilliant all and light,$^5$
A thronging scene of figures bright;
It glowed on Ellen's dazzled sight,

$^1$ MS. : "was meant for me."
$^2$ MS. : "From darken'd steeple's."
$^3$ MS. : "The lively lark my matins rung,
The sable rook my vespers sung."
$^4$ MS. : "Have not a hall should harbor me."
$^5$ MS. : "Within 'twas brilliant all, and bright
The vision glowed on Ellen's sight."
$^6$ MS. : "For him who own'd this royal state."
$^7$ See Appendix, Note 3 Y.
$^8$ MS. : "shrinking, quits her stay."
Lord James of Douglas, lend thine aid;
Thou must confirm this doubting maid."

XXVIII.

Then forth the noble Douglas sprung,
And on his neck his daughter hung.
The Monarch drunk, that happy hour,
The sweetest, holiest draught of Power,—
When it can say, with godlike voice,
Arise, and Virtue, and rejoice!
Yet would not James the general eye
On Nature's raptures long should pry;
He stepp'd between—"Nay, Douglas, nay,
Steal not my proselyte away!
The riddle 'tis my right to read,
That brought this happy chance to speed.
Yes, Ellen, when disguised I stay
In life's more low but happier way,
'Tis under name which veils my power,
Nor falsely veils—for Stirling's tower
Of yore the name of Snowdon claims,
And Normans call me James Fitz-James.
Thus watch I o'er insulted laws,
Thus learn to right the injured cause."—
Then, in a tone apart and low,—
"Ah, little traitress! none must know
What idle dream, what lighter thought,
What vanity full dearly bought,
Join'd to thine eye's dark witchcraft, drew
My spell-bound steps to Benvenue,
In dangerous hour, and all but gave Thy Monarch's life to mountain glaive!"—
Aloud he spoke—"Thou still dost hold
That little talisman of gold,
Pledge of my faith, Fitz-James's ring—
What seeks fair Ellen of the King?"

XXIX.

Full well the conscious maiden guess'd
He prob'd the weakness of her breast;
But, with that consciousness, there came
A lightening of her fears for Graeme,
And more she deemed the Monarch's ire
Kindled 'gainst him who, for her sake,
Rebellious broadsword boldly drew;
And, to her generous feeling true,
She craved the grace of Roderick Dhu.
"Forbear thy suit,—the King of kings
Alone can stay life's parting wings.
I know his heart, I know his hand,
Have shared his cheer, and proved his brand:—
My fairest earldom would I give
To bid Clan-Alpine's Chieftain live!—
Hast thou no other boon to crave?
No other captive friend to save?"
Blushing, she turn'd her from the King,
And to the Douglas gave the ring,
As if she wish'd her sire to speak
The suit that stain'd her glowing cheek,—
"Nay, then, my pledge has lost its force,
And stubborn justice holds her course.—
Malcolm, come forth!"—and, at the word,
Down kneel'd the Graeme to Scotland's Lord,
"For thee, rash youth, no suppliant sue,
From thee may Vengeance claim her dues,
Who, nurtured underneath our smile,
Hast paid our care by treacherous wife,
And sought amid thy faithful clan
A refuge for an outlaw'd man,
Dishonoring thus thy loyal name.—
Fetters and warder for the Graeme!"—
His chain of gold the King unstrung,
The links o'er Malcolm's neck he flung,
Then gently drew the glittering band,
And laid the clasp on Ellen's hand."

HARP of the North, farewell!
The hills grow dark,
On purple peaks a deeper shade descending;
In twilight cope the glow-worm lights her spark,
The deer, half-seen, are to the covert wending.

1 MS.: "In lowly life's more happy way."
2 See Appendix, Note 3 Z.
3 MS.: "Thy sovereign's steps."
4 MS.: "Pledge of Fitz-James's faith, the ring."
5 MS.: "And in her breast strove maiden shame;
More deep she deemed the Monarch's ire
Kindled 'gainst him who, for her sake,
Against his Sovereign broadsword drew;
And, with a pleading word and true,
She craved the grace of Roderick Dhu."
6 "Malcolm Graeme has too insignificant a part assigned him, considering the favor in which he is held by both Ellen and the author; and in bringing out the shaded and imperfect character of Roderick Dhu, as a contrast to the purer virtue of his rival, Mr. Scott seems to have fallen into the common error of making him more interesting than him whose virtues he was intended to set off, and converted the villain of the piece in some measure into its hero.
A modern poet, however, may perhaps be pardoned for an error of which Milton himself is thought not to have kept clear, and for which there seems so natural a cause in the difference between poetical and amiable characters."—Jeffrey.

7 "And now, waiving myself, let me talk to you of the Prince Regent.
He ordered me to be presented to him at a ball; and after some sayings peculiarly pleasing from royal lips as to my own attempts, he talked to me of you and your immortalities; he preferred you to every bard past and present, and asked which of your works pleased me most. It was a difficult question. I answered, I thought the 'Lay.' He said his own opinion was nearly similar. In speaking of the other, I told him that I thought you more particularly the poet of Princea, as they never appeared more fascinating than in 'Marmion' and the 'Lady of the Lake.' He was pleased to coincide, and to dwell on the description of your Jameses as no less royal than poetical. He spoke alternately of Homer yourself, and seemed well acquainted with both," &c.—
Letter from Lord Byron to Sir Walter Scott, July 6, 1812.—

8 MS.: To the Printer.—"I send the grand finale, and so exit the 'Lady of the Lake' from the head she has tormented for six months. In canto vi. stanza 21,—stern and still, read grim and still; sternly occurs four lines higher.
For a similar reason, stanza 24—dun deer, read fleet deer.
I will probably call this morning.—Yours truly,
W. S."
Resume thy wizard elm! the fountain lending,
   And the wild breeze, thy wilder minstrelsy;
Thy numbers sweet with nature’s vespers blending,
   With distant echo from the fold and lea,
And herd-boy’s evening pipe, and hum of housing bee.

Yet once again, farewell, thou Minstrel harp!
Yet once again, forgive my feeble sway,
And little reck I of the censure sharp
May idle cavil at an idle lay,
Much have I owed thy strains on life’s long way,
Through secret woes the world has never known,
When on the weary night dawn’d wearier day,

And bitterer was the grief devour’d alone.
That I o’erlive such woes, Enchantress! is thine own.

Hark! as my lingering footsteps slow retire,
Some Spirit of the Air has waked thy string!
’Tis now a seraph bold, with touch of fire,
’Tis now the brush of fairy’s frolic wing.
Receding now, the dying numbers ring
Fainter and fainter down the rugged dell,
And now the mountain breezes scarcely bring
A wandering witch-note of the distant spell—
And now, ’tis silent all!—Enchantress, fare thee well!

1 “On a comparison of the merits of this poem with the two former productions of the same unquestioned genius, we are inclined to bestow on it a very decided preference over both. It would perhaps be difficult to select any one passage of such genuine inspiration as one or two that might be pointed out in the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel;’ and perhaps, in strength and discrimination of character, it may fall short of ‘Marmion;’ although we are both to resign either the rude and savage generosity of Roderick, the romantic chivalry of James, or the playful simplicity, the affectionate tenderness, the modest courage of Ellen Douglas, to the claims of any competitors in the last-mentioned poem. But, for interest and artificial management in the story, for general ease and grace of versification, and correctness of language, the ‘Lady of the Lake’ must be universally allowed, we think, to excel, and very far excel, either of her predecessors.”—Critical Review.

“There is nothing in Mr. Scott of the severe and majestic style of Milton—or of the terse and fine composition of Pope—or of the elaborate elegance and melody of Campbell—or even of the flowing and redundant diction of Southey,—but there is a medley of bright images and glowing, set carelessly and loosely together—a diction tinged successively with the careless richness of Shakespeare—the harshness and antique simplicity of the old romances—the homeliness of vulgar ballads and anecdotes—and the sentimental glitter of the most modern poetry,—passing from the borders of the ridiculous to those of the sublime—alternately minute and energetic—sometimes artificial, and frequently negligent, but always full of spirit and vivacity—abounding in images that are striking at first sight to minds of every constitution—and never expressing a sentiment which it can cost the most ordinary reader any exertion to comprehend. Upon the whole, we are inclined to think more highly of the ‘Lady of the Lake’ than of either of his author’s former publications. We are more sure, however, that it has fewer faults than that it has greater beauties; and as its beauties bear a strong resemblance to those with which the public has been already made familiar in these celebrated works, we should not be surprised if its popularity were less splendid and remarkable. For our own parts, however, we are of opinion that it will be oftener read hereafter than either of them; and that, if it had appeared first in the series, their reception would have been less favorable than that which it has experienced. It is more polished in its diction, and more regular in its versification; the story is constructed with infinitely more skill and address; there is a greater proportion of pleasing and tender passages, with much less antiquarian detail; and, upon the whole, a larger variety of characters, more artfully and judiciously contrasted. There is nothing so fine, perhaps, as the battle in ‘Marmion,’ or so picturesque as some of the scattered sketches in the ‘Lay;’ but there is a richness and a spirit in the whole piece which does not pervade either of these poems—a profusion of incident, and a shifting brilliancy of coloring, that reminds us of the witchery of Ariosto—and a constant elasticity and occasional energy, which seem to belong more peculiarly to the author now before us.”—Jeffrey.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

the heights of Uam-Var,
And roused the cavern where, 'tis told,
A giant made his den of old.—P. 178.

Ua-var, as the name is pronounced, or more properly Uighmor, is a mountain to the north-east of the village of Callender in Menteith, deriving its name, which signifies the great den, or cavern, from a sort of retreat among the rocks on the south side, said, by tradition, to have been the abode of a giant. In latter times, it was the refuge of robbers and banditti, who have been only extirpated within these forty or fifty years. Strictly speaking, this stronghold is not a cave, as the name would imply, but a sort of small enclosure, or recess, surrounded with large rocks, and open above head. It may have been originally designed as a toil for deer, who might get in from the outside, but would find it difficult to return. This opinion prevails among the old sportsmen and deer-stalkers in the neighborhood.

NOTE B.

Two dogs of black Saint Hubert's breed,
Unmatch'd for courage, breath, and speed.—P. 179.

"The bounds which we call Saint Hubert's bounds, are commonly all blacke, yet nevertheless, the race is so mingled at these days, that we find them of all colours. These are the bounds which the abbots of Saint Hubert have always kept some of their race or kind, in honour or remembrance of the saint, which was a hunter with S. Eustace. Whereupon we may conclude that (by the grace of God) all good huntsmen shall follow them into paradise. To return unto my former purpose, this kind of dogs hath bene dispersed through the counties of Henault, Lorayne, Flanders, and Burgoyne. They are mighty of body, nevertheless their legs are low and short, likewise they are not swift, although they be very good of scent, hunting chases which are farre straggled, fearing neither water nor cold, and doe more couet the chases that smell, as foxes, where, and such like, than other, because they find themselves neither of swiftness nor courage to hunt and kill the chases that are lighter and swifter. The bloodhounds of this colour prove good, especially those that are cole blacke, but I made no great account to breed on them, or to keep the kind, and yet I found a book which a hunter did dedicate to a prince of Lorayne, which seemed to love hunting much, wherein was a blazon which the same hunter gave to his bloodhound, called Souyllard, which was white:—

'My name came first from holy Hubert's race,
Souyllard my sire, a hound of singular grace.'

Whereupon we may presume that some of the kind prove white sometimes, but they are not of the kind of the Grefflers or Bouxes, which we have at these dayes."—The noble Art of Venerie or Hunting, translated and collected for the Use of all Noblemen and Gentlemen. Lond. 1611, 4to, p. 15.

NOTE C.

For the death-ward and death-bottom,
Myste'd his breath, his whiggar drew.—P. 179.

When the stag turned to bay, the ancient hunter had the perilous task of going in upon him and disabling the desperate animal. At certain times of the year this was held particularly dangerous, a wound received from a stag's horn being then deemed poisonous, and more dangerous than one from the tasks of a bear, as the old rhyme testifies:—

"If thou be hurt with hart, it brings thee to thy bier,
But barber's hand will boar's hurt heal, therefore thou needest not fear."

At all times, however, the task was dangerous, and to be adventured upon wisely and warily, either by getting behind the stag while he was gazing on the bounds, or by watching an opportunity to gallop roundly in upon him, and kill him with the sword. See many directions to this purpose in the Books of Hunting, chap. 41. Wilson the historian has recorded a providential escape which befell him in this hazardous sport, while a youth and follower of the Earl of Essex:—

"Sir Peter Lee, of Lime, in Cheshire, invited my lord one summer to hunt the stag. And having a great stag in chase, and many gentlemen in the pursuit, the stag took soyle, And divers, whereof I was one, alighted, and stood with swords drawne, to have a cut at him, at his coming out of the water. The staggs there being wonderfully fierce and dangerous, made us youths more eager to be at him. But he escaped us all. And it was my misfortune to be hindered of my coming nere him, the way being slipperie, by a fall; which gave occasion to some, who did not know mee, to speak as if I had fulne for feare. Which being told mee, I left the stag, and followed the gentleman who [first] spake it. But I found him of that cold temper, that it seems his words made an escape from him; as by his denial and repentance it appeared. But this made mee more violent in the pursuit of the stag, to recover my reputation. And I happened to be the only horse-man in, when the dogs sett him up at bay; and approaching nere him on horsebacke, he broke through the dogs, and run at mee, and tore my horse's side with his horns, close by my thigh. Then I quitted my horse, and grew more cunning (for the dogs had sette him up again), stealing behind him with my sword, and cut his hamstrings; and then got upon his back, and cut his throat; which, as I was doing, the company came in, and blamed my rashness for running such a hazard."—Peck's Desiderata Carmina, II. 464.
NOTE D.

And now, to issue from the glen,
No pathway meets the wanderer’s ken,
Unless he climb, with footing nice,
A far projecting precipice.—P. 189.

Until the present road was made through the romantic pass which I have presumptuously attempted to describe in the preceding stanzas, there was no mode of issuing out of the defile called the Trosachs, excepting by a sort of ladder, composed of the branches and roots of trees.

NOTE E.

To meet with Highland plunderers here
Were worse than loss of steel or doorn.—P. 181.

The clans who inhabited the romantic regions in the neighborhood of Loch Katrine were, even until a late period, much addicted to predatory excursions upon their Lowland neighbors. “In former times, those parts of this district which are situated beyond the Grampian range were rendered almost inaccessible by strong barriers of rocks and mountains and lakes. It was a border country, and, though on the very verge of the low country, it was almost totally sequestered from the world, and, as it were, insulated with respect to society. ‘Tis well known that in the Highlands it was, in former times, accounted not only lawful, but honorable, among hostile tribes, to commit depredations on one another; and these habits of the age were perhaps strengthened in this district by the circumstances which have been mentioned. It bordered on a country the inhabitants of which, while they were richer, were less warlike than they, and widely differenced by language and manners.”—GRAHAM’S Sketches of Scenery in Perthshire. Edn. 1806, p. 97. The reader will therefore be pleased to remember that the scene of this poem is laid in a time

“When tooming faults, or sweeping of a glen,
Had still been held the deed of gallant men.”

NOTE F.

A gray-hair’d sire, whose eye intent
Was on the vision’d future bent.—v. 182.

If force of evidence could authorize us to believe facts inconsistent with the general laws of nature, enough might be produced in favor of the existence of the second-sight. It is called in Gaelic Taischbrath, from Taisch, an unreal or shadowy appearance; and those possessed of the faculty are called Taisbhratrain, which may be aptly translated visionary. Martin, a steady believer in the second-sight, gives the following account of it:

“The second-sight is a singular faculty, of seeing an otherwise invisible object, without any previous means used by the person that used it for that end: the vision makes such a lively impression upon the seers, that they neither see, nor think of anything else, except the vision, as long as it continues; and then they appear pensive or jovial, according to the object that was represented to them.

“At the sight of a vision, the eyelids of the person are erected, and the eyes continue staring until the object vanish. This is obvious to others who are by, when the person happens to see a vision, and occurred more than once to my own observation, and to others that were with me.

“There is one in Skie, of whom his acquaintance observed, that when he sees a vision, the inner part of his eyelids turns so far upwards, that, after the object disappears, he must draw them down with his fingers, and sometimes employ others to draw them down, which he finds to be the much easier way.

“This faculty of the second-sight does not linearly descend in a family, as some imagine, for I know several parents who are endowed with it, but their children not, and vice versa; neither is it acquired by any previous compact. And, after a strict inquiry, I could never learn that this faculty was communicable any way whatsoever.

“The seer knows neither the object, time, nor place of a vision, before it appears; and the same object is often seen by different persons living at a considerable distance from one another. The true way of judging as to the time and circumstance of an object, is by observation; for several persons of judgment, without this faculty, are more capable to judge of the design of a vision, than a novice that is a seer. If an object appear in the day or the night, it will come to pass sooner or later accordingly.

“If an object is seen early in the morning (which is not frequent), it will be accomplished in a few hours afterwards. If at noon, it will commonly be accomplished that very day. If in the evening, perhaps that night; if after candles be lighted, it will be accomplished that night: the later always in accomplishment, by weeks, months, and sometimes years, according to the time of night the vision is seen.

“When a shroud is perceived about one, it is a sure prognostic of death; the time is judged according to the height of it about the person; for if it is seen above the middle, death is not to be expected for the space of a year, and perhaps some months longer; and as it is frequently seen to ascend higher towards the head, death is concluded to be at hand within a few days, if not hours, as daily experience confirms. Examples of this kind were shewn me, when the persons of whom the observations were then made, enjoyed perfect health.

“One instance was lately foretold by a seer, that was a novice, concerning the death of one of my acquaintance; this was communicated to a few only, and with great confidence: I being one of the number, did not in the least regard it, until the death of the person, about the time foretold, did confirm me of the certainty of the prediction. The novice mentioned above, is now a skilful seer, as appears from many late instances; he lives in the parish of St. Mary’s, the most northern in Skie.

“If a woman is seen standing at a man’s left hand, it is a presage that she will be his wife, whether they be married to others, or unmarried at the time of the apparition.

“If two or three women are seen at once near a man’s left hand, she that is next him will undoubtedly be his wife first, and so on, whether all three, or the man, be single or married at the time of the vision or not; of which there are several late instances among those of my acquaintance. It is an ordinary thing for them to see a man that is to come to the house shortly after: and if he is not of the seer’s acquaintance, yet he gives such a lively description of his stature, complexion, habit, &c., that upon his arrival he answers the character given him in all respects.

“If the person so appearing be one of the seer’s acquaintance, he will tell his name, as well as other particulars; and he can tell by his countenance whether he comes in a good or bad humour.

“I have been seen thus myself by seers of both sexes, at some hundred miles’ distance; some that saw me in this manner had never seen me personally, and it happened according to their vision, without any previous design of mine to go to those places, my coming there being purely accidental.
"It is ordinary with them to see houses, gardens, and trees, in places void of all three; and this in progress of time uses to be accomplished: as at Mogshot, in the Isle of Skye, where there were but a few sorry cow-houses, thatched with straw, yet in a very few years after, the vision, which appeared often, was accomplished, by the building of several good houses on the very spot represented by the seers, and by the planting of orchards there.

"To see a spark of fire fall upon one's arm or breast, is a forerunner of a dead child to be seen in the arms of those persons; of which there are several fresh instances.

"To see a seat empty at the time of one sitting in it, is a presage of that person's death soon after.

"When a novice, or one that has lately obtained the second-sight, sees a vision in the night-time without doors, and he be near a fire, he presently falls into a swoon.

"Some find themselves as it were in a crowd of people, having a corpse which they carry along with them; and after such visions, the seers come in sweating, and describe the people that appeared: if there be any of their acquaintance among 'em, they give an account of their names, as also of the bearers, but they know nothing concerning the corpse.

"All those who have the second-sight do not always see these visions at once, though they be together at the time. But if one who has this faculty, design'dly touch his fellow-seer at the instant of a vision's appearing, then the second sees it as well as the first; and this is sometimes discern'd by those that are near them on such occasions."—Martin's Description of the Western Islands, 1716, 8vo, p. 300, et seq.

To these particulars innumerable examples might be added, all attested by grave and credible authors. But, in despite of evidence which neither Bacon, Boyle, nor Johnson was able to resist, the Twaich, with all its visionary properties, seems now to be universally abandoned to the use of poetry. The exquisitely beautiful poem of "Lochiel," will at once occur to the recollection of every reader.

NOTE G.

Here, for retreat in dangerous hour,
Some chief had framed a rustic bower.—P. 183.

The Celtic chieftains, whose lives were continually exposed to peril, had usually, in the most retired spot of their domains, some place of retreat for the hour of necessity, which, as circumstances would admit, was a tower, a cavern, or a rustic hut, in a strong and secluded situation. One of these last gave refuge to the unfortunate Charles Edward, in his perilous wanderings after the battle of Culloden.

"It was situated in the face of a very rough, high, and rocky mountain, called Letternilleich, still a part of Bencor, full of great stones and crevices, and some scattered wood interspersed. The habitation called the Cage, in the face of that mountain, was within a small thick bush of wood. There were first some rows of trees laid down, in order to level the floor for a habitation; and as the place was steep, this raised the lower side to an equal height with the other: and these trees, in the way of joists or planks, were levelled with earth and gravel. There were betwixt the trees, growing naturally on their own roots, some stakes fixed in the earth, which, with the trees, were interwoven with ropes, made of heath and birch twigs, up to the top of the Cage, it being of a round or rather oval shape; and the whole thatched and covered over with fag. The whole fabric hung, as it were, by a large tree, which reclined from the one end, all along the roof, to the other, and which gave it the name of the Cage; and by chance there happened to be two stones at a small distance from one another, in the side next the prespeace, resembling the pillars of a chimney, where the fire was placed. The smoke had its vent out here, all along the fall of the rock, which was so much of the same color, that one could discover no difference in the clearest day."—Home's History of the Rebellion. Lond. 1802, 4to, p. 381.

NOTE H.

My sire's tall form might grace the part
Of Ferragus or Ascabart.—P. 183.

These two sons of Anak flourished in romantic fable. The first is well known to the admirers of Ariosto by the name of Ferron. He was an antagonist of Orlando, and was at length slain by him in single combat. There is a romance in the Auchenleck MS., in which Ferragus is thus described:—

"On a day come tidings
Unto Charls the King,
Al of a doughti knight
Was comen to Navers,
Stout he was and fers,
Vernaghe he hight,
Of Balibon the souden
Thider him sende gan,
With King Charls to fight.
So hard he was to fond
That no dint of brod
No greud he, aiplight.
He hadde twenti men strength
And fordi fet of lengthe;
Thilleke palmin heele;
And four feet in the face,
Y-meten9 in the place,
And fifteen in brede;
His nose was a fat and more;
His brow, as bristles wore;
He that it seighe it sede.
He lokd lotheliche,
And was swart10 as any piche,
Of him men might admire."—

Romance of Charlemagne, 1. 461-484.
Auchenleck MS., folio 265.

Ascapart, or Ascabart, makes a very material figure in the History of Bevis of Hampton, by whom he was conquered. His effigies may be seen guarding one side of a gate at Southamptow, while the other is occupied by Sir Bevis himself. The dimensions of Ascapart were little inferior to those of Ferragus, if the following description be correct:—

"They metten with a geanunt,
With a lotheliche semblunt.
He was wonderliche strong,
Rome7 thretti fote long.
His berd was bot grete and rowe,
A space of a fot between 18 and 8.
His chob was, to yene10 a streg,
A lute bof of an oak.11

"Benes hadde of him wondred grete,
And askede him what a bet,"12
And yafe12 men of his contré
Were ase mebe14 ase was he.
'Me name?' a seode,15 is Ascopard,
Garcil sent hiderward,"

11 The stem of a little oak-tree. — 12 He hight, was called. — 13 If...— 14 Great. — 15 He said.
For to bring this quene ayn,
And the Blues her of-sken.¹
Icham Garcia is champion,
And was i-draw out of me² three
All for that ich was so hie;³
Euer man me wolde smite,
Ich was so lite and so morugh,⁴
Euer man me epede dwerugh,⁵
And now Icham in this londe,
I wax mor? I understande,
And stranger than other tene;⁶
And that schel on us be sene."⁷

Sir Bevis of Hampton, 1. 2712.
Auchinleck MS., fol. 189.

---

NOTE I.

Though all unask'd his birth and name.—P. 184.

The Highlanders, who carried hospitality to a punctilious excess, are said to have considered it as churlish to ask a stranger his name or lineage before he had taken refreshment. Feuds were so frequent among them that a contrary rule would in many cases have produced the discovery of some circumstance which might have excluded the guest from the benefit of the assistance he stood in need of.

---

NOTE K.

—and still a harp unseen
Fell'd up the symphony between. —P. 184.

"They" (meaning the Highlanders) "delight much in musick, but chiefly in harps and clairsoches of their own fashion. The strings of the clairsoches are made of brass wire, and the strings of the harps, of sinews; which strings they strike either with their nails, growing long, or else with an instrument appointed for that use. They take great pleasure to decke their harps and clairsoches with silver and precious stones; the poore ones that cannot attayne hereunto, decke them with christall. They sing verses pretillly comound, contaying (for the most part) praises of valiant men. There is not almost any other argument, whereof their rhymes intreat. They speak the ancient French language alter a little."⁸—"The harp and clairsoches are now only heard of in the Highlands in ancient song. At what period these instruments ceased to be used is not on record; and tradition is silent on this head. But, as Irish harpers occasionally visited the Highlanders and Western Isles till lately, the harp might have been extant so late as the middle of the last century. Thus far we know, that from remote times down to the present, harpers were received as welcome guests, particularly in the Highlanders of Scotland; and so late as the latter end of the sixteenth century, as appears by the above quotation, the harp was in common use among the natives of the Western Isles. How it happened that the noisy and unharmonious bagpipe banished the soft and expressive harp, we cannot say; but certain it is that the bagpipe is now the only instrument that obtains universally in the Highland districts."—CAMPBELL'S Journey through North Britain. Lond. 1808, 4to, I, 175.

Mr. Gunn, of Edinburgh, has lately published a curious Essay upon the Harp and Harp Music of the Highlands of Scotland. That the instrument was once in common use there is most certain. Cledell numbers an acquaintance with it among the few accomplishments which his satire allows to the Highlanders:—

"In nothing they're accounted sharp, Except in bagpipe or in harp."

---

NOTE L.

Morn's genial influence roused a minstrel grey.—P. 186.

That Highland chieftains, to a late period, retained in their service the bard, as a family officer, admits of very easy proof. The author of the Letters from the North of Scotland, an officer of engineers, quartered at Inverness about 1720, who certainly cannot be deemed a favorable witness, gives the following account of the office, and of a bard whom he heard exercise his talent of recitation:—"The bard is skilled in the genealogy of all the Highland families, sometimes preceptor to the young laird, celebrates in Irish verse the original of the tribe, the famous warlike actions of the successive heads, and sings his own lyrics as an opiate to the chief when indisposed for sleep; but poets are not equally esteemed and honoured in all countries. I happened to be a witness of the dishonour done to the muse at the house of one of the chiefs, where two of these bards were set at a good distance, at the lower end of a long table, with a parcel of Highlanders of no extraordinary appearance, over a cup of ale. Poor inspiration! They were not asked to drink a glass of wine at our table, though the whole company consisted only of the great man, one of his near relations, and myself. After some little time, the chief ordered one of them to sing me a Highland song. The bard readily obeyed, and with a hoarse voice, and in a tune of few various notes, began, as I was told, one of his own lyrics; and when he had proceeded to the fourth or fifth stanza, I perceived, by the names of several persons, glens, and mountains, which I had known or heard of before, that it was an account of some clan battle. But in his going on, the chief (who piques himself upon his school-learning), at some particular passage, bid him cease, and cried out, 'There's nothing like that in Virgil or Homer.' I bowed, and told him I believed so. This you may believe was very edifying and delightful."—Letters, ii. 167.

---

NOTE M.

—the Greme.—P. 187.

The ancient and powerful family of Graham (which, for metrical reasons, is here spelt after the Scottish pronunciation) held extensive possessions in the counties of Dumblarton and Stirling. Few families can boast of more historical renown, having claim to three of the most remarkable characters in the Scottish annals. Sir John the Greme, the faithful and unhaunted partaker of the labors and patriotic warfare of Wallace, fell in the unfortunate field of Falkirk, in 1298. The celebrated Marquis of Montrose, in whom De Retz saw realized his abstract idea of the heroes of antiquity, was the second of these worthies. And, notwithstanding the severity of his temper, and the rigor with which he executed the oppressive mandates of the princes whom he served, I do not hesitate to name as a third, John Greme of Caverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, whose heroic death in the arms of victory may be allowed to cancel the memory of his cruelty to the non-conformists, during the reigns of Charles II. and James II.

¹ Slay. — ² His. — ³ My. — ⁴ Little. — ⁵ Lean. — ⁶ Dwarf. — ⁷ Greater, taller. — ⁸ Vide Certayne Matters concerning the Reston of Scotland, &c. as they were Annex Dominie 1597. Lond. 1600, 4to.
NOTE N.

This harp, which erst Saint Modan swung.—P. 187.

I am not prepared to show that Saint Modan was a performer on the harp. It was, however, no unsightly accomplishment; for Saint Dunstan certainly did play upon that instrument, which retaining, as was natural, a portion of the sanctity attached to its master’s character, announced future events by its spontaneous sound. “But labouring once in these mechanic arts for a devout matrone that had sett him on work, his violl, that hung by him on the wall, of its own accord, without any man’s help, distantly sounded this anthem:—Gaudet in cella enim sanctorvm qui Christi vestigia sunt uoci; et quia pro eius amore sanguinem suum fuderunt, tene cum Christo gaudent aeternum. Whereat all the company being much astonished, turned their eyes from beholding him working, to looke on that strange accident.” * * *

“Not long after, manie of the court that hitherto had borne a kind of fayned friendship towards him, began now greatly to envie at his progress and rising in goodness, using manie crooked, backbiting means to displace his vertues with the blacke masks of hypocrisie. And the better to authorize their calumny, they brought in this that happened in the violl, affirming it to have beene done by art magicke. What more? This wicked rumour encreased daily, till the king and others of the nobilitie taking hould thereof, Dunstan grew odious in their sight. Therefore he resolved to leave the court and go to Elphesus, surnamed the Bauld, then Bishop of Winechester, who was his cozen. Which his enemies understanding, they layd way for him in the way, and hauing throwne him off his horse, beat him, and dragged him in the durt in the most miserable manner, meaning to have slaine him, had not a companie of maistue dogges that came unbooke uppem defended and redeemed him from their crueltie. When with sorrow he was ashamed to see dogges more humane than they. And gilding thanks to Almighty God, he sensibly againe pereceived that the tunes of his violl had given him a warning of future accidents.”—Flower of the Lives of the most renowned Saints of England, Scotland, and Ireland, by the R. Father Hierome Porter. Doway, 1632, 4to, tome i. p. 438.

The same supernatural circumstance is alluded to by the anonymous author of “Grim, the Collier of Croydon.”

“—— —[Dunstan’s harp sounds on the wall.]”

“Forest. Hark, hark, my lords, the holy abbot’s harp Sounds by itself so hanging on the wall!”

“Dunstan. Unhallowed man, that scornst the sacred rede, Hark, how the testimony of my truth Sounds heavenly music with an angel’s hand, To testify Dunstan’s integrity, And prove thy active boast of no effect.”

NOTE O.

Ere Douglasses, to ruts driven, Were eell’d from their native heaven.—P. 187.

I The downfall of the Douglasses of the house of Angus during the reign of James V. is the event alluded to in the text. The Earl of Angus, it will be remembered, had married the queen dowager, and availed himself of the right which he thus acquired, as well as of his extensive power, to retain the king in a sort of tutelage, which approached very near to captivity. Several open attempts were made to rescue James from this thralldom, with which he was well known to be deeply disgusted; but the valor of the Douglasses and their allies gave them the victory in every conflict. At length the king, while residing at Falkland, contrived to escape by night out of his own court and palace, and rode full speed to Stirling Castle, where the governor, who was of the opposite faction, joyfully received him. Being thus at liberty, James speedily summoned around him such peers as he knew to be most inimical to the domination of Angus, and laid his complaint before them, says Pitcaottie, “with great lamentations; showing to them how he was holden in subjection, this years bygone, by the Earl of Angus and his kin and friends, who oppressed the whole country and spoiled it, under the pretence of justice and his authority; and had slain many of his lieges, kinsmen, and friends, because they would have had it mended at their hands, and put him at liberty, as he ought to have been, at the counsel of his whole lords, and not have been subjected and corrected with no particular men, by the rest of his nobles. Therefore, said he, I desire, my lords, that I may be satisfied of the said earl, his kin, and friends; for I avow that Scotland shall not hold us both while [i. e. till] I be revenged on him and his.”

“The lords, hearing the king’s complaint and lamentation, and also the great rage, fury, and malice that he bore toward the Earl of Angus, his kin and friends, they concluded all, and thought it best that he should be summoned to underly the law; if he found no caution, nor yet compense himself, that he should be put to the horn, with all his kin and friends, so many as were contained in the letters. And further, the lords ordained, by advice of his majesty, that his brother and friends should be summoned to find caution to underly the law within a certain day, or else be put to the horn. But the earl appeared not, nor none for him; and so he was put to the horn, with all his kin and friends: so many as were contained in the summons that compared not were banished, and bolden traitors to the king.”

NOTE P.

In Holy-Rood a knight he slew.—P. 188.

This was by no means an uncommon occurrence in the Court of Scotland; nay, the presence of the sovereign himself scarcely restrained the rascious and inveigleate frauds which were the perpetual source of bloodshed among the Scottish nobility. The following instance of the murder of Sir William Stuart of Ochiltree, called The Bloody, by the celebrated Francis, Earl of Bothwell, may be produced among many; but as the offence given in the royal court will hardly bear a vernacular translation, I shall leave the story in Johnstone’s Latin, referring for further particulars to the naked simplicity of Birrell’s Diary, 30th July, 1588.

NOTE Q.

The Douglas, like a stricken deer,
Dismayed by every noble peer.—P. 188.

The exiled state of this powerful race is not exaggerated in this and subsequent passages. The hatred of James against the race of Douglas was so invenerate that numerous as their allies were, and disregarded as the regal authority had usually been in similar cases, their nearest friends, even in the most remote parts of Scotland, durst not entertain them, unless under the strictest and closest disguise. James Douglas, son of the banished Earl of Angus, afterwards well known by the title of Earl of Morton, lurked, during the exile of his family, in the north of Scotland, under the assumed name of James Innes, otherwise James the Griev (i. e. Reave or Balliff). "And as he bore the name," says Godscroft, "so did he also execute the office of a griever or overseer of the lands and rents, the corn and cattle of him with whom he lived." From the habits of frugality and observation which he acquired in his humble situation, the historian traces that intimate acquaintance with popular character which enabled him to rise so high in the state, and that honorable economy by which he repaired and established the shattered estates of Angus and Morton.—History of the House of Douglas. Edinburgh, 1743, vol. ii. p. 160.

NOTE R.

Maronnan's cell.—P. 188.

The parish of Kilmaronock, at the eastern extremity of Loch Lomond, derives its name from a cell or chapel, dedicated to Saint Maronock, or Marnock, or Maronnan, about whose sanctity very little is now remembered. There is a fountain devoted to him in the same parish; but its virtues, like the merits of its patron, have fallen into oblivion.

NOTE S.

Bracklinn's thundering wave.—P. 188.

This is a beautiful cascade made by a mountain stream called the Kettle, at a place called the Bridge of Bracklinn, about a mile from the village of Callender in Menteith. Above a chasm, where the brook precipitates itself from a height of at least fifty feet, there is thrown, for the convenience of the neighborhood, a rustic footbridge, of about three feet in breadth, and without ledges, which is scarcely to be crossed by a stranger without awe and apprehension.

NOTE T.

For Tine-man forged by fairy lore.—P. 188.

Archibald, the third Earl of Douglas, was so unfortunate in all his enterpises that he acquired the epithet of Tine-man, because he tined, or lost, his followers in every battle which he fought. He was vanquished, as every reader must remember, in the bloody battle of Homildon-hill, near Wooler, where he himself lost an eye, and was made prisoner by Hotspur. He was no less unfortunate when allied with Percy, being wounded and taken at the battle of Shrewsbury. He was so unsuccessful in an attempt to besiege Roxburgh Castle that it was called the Fouf Raid, or disgraceful expedition. His ill fortune left him indeed at the battle of Beaugé, in France; but it was only to return with double emphasis at the subsequent action of Vernio, the last and most unlucky of his encounters, in which he fell, with the flower of the Scottish chivalry, then serving as auxiliaries in France, and about two thousand common soldiers, A. D. 1424.

NOTE U.

Did, self-uncathedred, foreshow
The footsteps of a secret foe.—P. 189.

The ancient warriors, whose hope and confidence rested chiefly in their blades, were accustomed to declare omens from them, especially from such as were supposed to have been fabricated by enchanted skill, of which we have various instances in the romances and legends of the time. The wonderful sword Skofnung, wielded by the celebrated Hrolf Krak, was of this description. It was deposited in the tomb of the monarch at his death, and taken from thence by Skegg, a celebrated pirate, who bestowed it upon his son-in-law, Kormak, with the following curious directions:—"The manner of using it will appear strange to you. A small bag is attached to it, which take heed not to violate. Let not the rays of the sun touch the upper part of the handle, nor unsheathe it, unless thou art ready for battle. But when thou conest to the place of fight, go aside from the rest, grasp and extend the sword, and breathe upon it. Then a small worm will creep out of the handle; lower the handle, that he may more easily return into it." Kormak, after having received the sword, returned home to his mother. He showed the sword, and attempted to draw it, as unnecessarily as ineffectually, for he could not pluck it out of the sheath. His mother, Iulla, exclaimed, 'Do not despise the counsel given to thee, my son.' Kormak, however, repeating his efforts, pressed down the handle with his feet, and tore off the bag, when skofnung emitted a hollow groan; but still he could not unsheathe the sword. Kormak then went out with Bessus, whom he had challenged to fight with him, and drew apart at the place of combat. He sat down upon the ground, and ungirding the sword, which he bore above his vestments, did not remember to shield the hilt from the rays of the sun. In vain he endeavored to draw it, till he placed his foot against the hilt; then the worm issued from it. But Kormak did not rightly handle the weapon, in consequence whereof good fortune deserted it. As he unsheathe skofnung, it emitted a hollow murmur.—BARTIROLINI, De Canosis Contemptis a Danis adhibe Gentilibus Mortis, Libri Tres. Hafniae, 1689, 4to, p. 374.

To the history of this sentient and prescient weapon, I beg leave to add, from memory, the following legend, for which I cannot produce any better authority. A young nobleman, of high hopes and fortune, chanced to lose his way in the town which he inhabited, the capital, if I mistake not, of a German province. He had accidentally involved himself among the narrow and winding streets of a suburb inhabited by the lowest order of the people, and an approaching thunder-shower determined him to ask a short refuge in the most decent habitation that was near him. He knocked at the door, which was opened by a tall man, of a grisly and ferocious aspect, and sordid dress. The stranger was readily ushered to a chamber, where swords, scourges, and machines, which seemed to be implements of torture, were suspended on the wall. One of these swords dropped from its scabbard, as the nobleman, after a moment's hesitation, crossed the threshold. His best immediately stared at him with such a marked expression that the young man could not help wondering his name and business, and the meaning of his looking at him so fixedly.

"I am," answered the man, "the public executioner of this city; and the incident you have observed is a sure augury that I shall, in discharge of my duty, one day cut off your head with the weapon which has just now spontaneously unsheathed itself." The nobleman lost no time in leaving his place of refuge; but, engaging in some of the plots of the period, was shortly after decapitated by that very man and instrument.

Lord Lovat is said, by the author of the Letters from Scotland, to have affirmed that a number of swords that hung up in the hall of the mansion-house leaped of themselves out of the scabbard at the instant he was born. The story passed current among his clan, but, like that of the story I have just quoted, proved an unfortunate omen.—Letters from Scotland, vol. ii. p. 214.

Note V.

Those thrilling sounds, that call the might
Of old Clan-Alpine to the fight.—P. 189.

The connoisseurs in pipe-music affect to discover in a well-composed pibroch the imitative sounds of march, conflict, flight, pursuit, and all the "current of a heady flight." To this opinion Dr. Beatie has given his suffrage, in the following elegant passage:—"A pibroch is a species of tune, peculiar, I think, to the Highlands and Western Isles of Scotland. It is performed on a bagpipe, and differs totally from all other music. Its rhythm is so irregular, and its notes, especially in the quick movement, so mixed and huddled together, that a stranger finds it impossible to reconcile his ear to it, so as to perceive its modulation. Some of these pibrochs, being intended to represent a battle, begin with a grave motion resembling a march; then gradually quicken into the onset; run off with noisy confusion and turbulent rapidity to imitate the conflict and pursuit; then swell into a few flourishes of triumphant joy; and perhaps close with the wild and slow wailings of a funeral procession."—Essay on Laughter and Ludicrous Composition, chap. iii. Note.

Note W.

Roderigh Vich Alpin ch dhu, ho! I beroe!—P. 189.

Besides his ordinary name and surname, which were chiefly used in the intercourse with the Lowlands, every Highland chief had an epithet expressive of his patriarchal dignity as head of the clan, and which was common to all his predeces- sors and successors, as Pharaoh to the kings of Egypt, or Ar- saces to those of Parthia. This name was usually a patrony- mie, expressive of his descent from the founder of the family. Thus the Duke of Argyle is called MacCallum More, or the son of Odin the Great. Sometimes, however, it is derived from armorial distinctions, or the memory of some great feat; thus Lord Seaforth, as chief of the Mackenzies, or Clan-Ken- net, bears the epithet of Cabr-fac, or Buch's Head, as representative of Colin Fitzgerald, founder of the family, who saved the Scottish king when endangered by a stag. But be- sides this title, which belonged to his office and dignity, the chieftain had usually another peculiar to himself, which dis- tinguished him from the chieftains of the same race. This was sometimes derived from complexion, as dhu or ray; some- times from size, as beg or more; at other times from some peculiar exploit, or from some peculiarity of habit or appearance. The line of the text therefore signifies,

Black Roderick, the descendant of Alpine.

The song itself is intended as an imitation of the jorranas, or boat songs, of the Highlanders, which were usually com- posed in honor of a favorite chief. They are so adapted as to keep time with the sweep of the oars, and it is easy to dis- tinguish between those intended to be sung to the oars of a galley, where the stroke is lengthened or doubled, as it were, and those which were timed to the rowers of an ordi-

Note X.

—the best of Loch Lomond lie dead on her side.—P. 190.

The Lennox, as the district is called, which encircles the lower extremity of Loch Lomond, was peculiarly exposed to the incursions of the mountainers, who inhabited the inac- cessible fastnesses at the upper end of the lake, and the neighboring district of Loch Katrine. These were often marked by circumstances of great ferocity, of which the noted conflict of Glen-frair is a celebrated instance. This was a clan-battle, in which the Macgregors, headed by Alkaster Macgregor, chief of the clan, encountered the sept of Colqu- houns, commanded by Sir Humphrey Colquhoun of Luss. It is on all hands allowed that the action was desperately fought, and that the Colquhouns were defeated with great slaughter, leaving two hundred of their name dead upon the field. But popular tradition has added other horrors to the tale. It is said that Sir Humphrey Colquhoun, who was on horseback, escaped to the castle of Bencrara, or Bannoch, and was next day dragged out and murdered by the victorious Macgregors in cold blood. Buchanan of Auchmar, however, speaks of his slaughter as a subsequent event, and as perpetrated by the Macfarlanes. Again, it is reported that the Macgregors mur- dered a number of youths, whom report of the intended bat- tle had brought to be spectators, and whom the Colquhouns, anxious for their safety, hastened to shut up in a barn to be out of danger. One account of the Macgregors denies this circum- stance entirely; another ascribes it to the savage and blood- thirsty disposition of a single individual, the bastard brother of the laird of Macgregor, who amused himself with this second massacre of the innocents, in express disobedience of the chief, by whom he was left their guardian during the pur- suit of the Colquhouns. It is added that Macgregor bitterly lamented this atrocious action, and prophesied the ruin which it must bring upon their ancient clan. The following account of the conflict, which is indeed drawn up by a friend of the Clan-Gregor, is altogether silent on the murder of the youths: In the spring of the year 1592, there happened great dissen- sions and troubles between the laird of Luss, chief of the Col- quhouns, and Alexander, laird of Macgregor. The origin of these quarrels proceeded from injuries and provocations mutually given and received, not long before. Macgregor, however, wanting to have them ended in friendly conferences, marched at the head of two hundred of his clan to Leven, which borders on Luss, his country, with a view of settling matters by the mediation of friends; but Luss had no such intentions, and projected his measures with a different view; for he privately drew together a body of 300 horse and 500 foot, composed partly of his own clan and their followers, and partly of the Buchanans, his neighbors, and resolved to cut off Macgregor and his party to a man, in case the issue of the conference did not answer his inclination. But mat- ters fell otherwise than he expected; and though Macgregor had previous information of his insidious design, yet dissimblasting his resentment, he kept the appointment, and parted good friends in appearance.

"No sooner was he gone, than Lass, thinking to surprise him and his party in full security, and without any dread or apprehension of his treachery, followed with all speed, and came up with him at a place called Glenfroom. Macgregor, upon the alarm, divided his men into two parties, the greatest part whereof he commanded himself, and the other he committed to the care of his brother John, who, by his orders, led them about another way, and attacked the Colquhouns in flank. Here it was fought with great bravery on both sides for a considerable time; and, notwithstanding the vast disproportion of numbers, Macgregor, in the end, obtained an absolute victory. So great was the rout, that 200 of the Colquhouns were left dead upon the spot, most of the leading men were killed, and a multitude of prisoners taken. But what seemed most surprising and incredible in this defeat, was, that none of the Macgregors were missing, except John, the laird's brother, and one common fellow, though indeed many of them were wounded."—Professor Ross's History of the Family of Sutherland, 1831.

The consequences of the battle of Glenfruin were very calamitous to the family of Macgregor, who had already been considered as an unruly clan. The widows of the slain Colquhouns, sixty, it is said, in number, appeared in dolorous procession before the king at Stirling, each riding upon a white palfrey, and bearing in her hand the bloody skirt of her husband displayed upon a pike. James VI. was so much moved by the complaints of this "choir of mourning dames" that he let loose his vengeance against the Macgregors, without either bounds or moderation. The very name of the clan was proscribed, and those by whom it had been borne were given up to sword and fire, and absolutely hunted down by blood-hounds like wild beasts. Argyle and the Campbells, on the one hand, Montrose, with the Grahames and Buchanans, on the other, are said to have been the chief instruments in suppressing this devoted clan. The laird of Macgregor surrendered to the former, on condition that he would take him out of Scottish ground. But to use Birrel's expression, he kept "a Highlandman's promise;" and, although he fulfilled his word to the letter, by carrying him as far as Berwick, he afterwards brought him back to Edinburgh, where he was executed with eighteen of his clan.—BIRREL'S Diary, 24 Oct. 1603. The Clan-Gregor, being thus driven to utter despair, seem to have renounced the laws from the benefit of which they were excluded, and their deprivations produced new acts of council, confirming the severity of their proscription, which had only the effect of rendering them still more united and desperate. It is a most extraordinary proof of the ardent and invincible spirit of chivalry, that notwithstanding the repeated proscriptions providently ordained by the legislature, "for the timeous preventing the disorders and oppressions that may fall out by the said name and clan of Macgregors and their followers," they were in 1715 and 1745 a potent clan, and continue to subsist as a distinct and numerous race.

NOTES.

Y. The King's vindicative pride
Beasts to have tamed the Border-side.—P. 192.

In 1529, James V. made a convention at Edinburgh for the purpose of considering the best mode of quelling the Border robbers, who, during the license of his minority, and the troubles which followed, had committed many exorbitances. Accordingly, he assembled a flying army of ten thousand men, consisting of his principal nobility and their followers, who were directed to bring their hawks and dogs with them, that the monarch might refresh himself with sport during the intervals of military execution. With this army he swept through Ettrick Forest, where he hanged over the gate of his own castle Pierre Cockburn of Henderland, who had prepared, according to tradition, a feast for his reception. He caused Adam Scott of Tushielaw also to be executed, who was distinguished by the title of King of the Border. But the most noted victim of justice, during that expedition, was John Armstrong of Gilnockie,1 famous in Scottish song, who, confiding in his own supposed innocence, met the king with a retinue of thirty-six persons, all of whom were hanged at Carlenrig, near the source of the Tievot. The effect of this severity was such that, as the vulgar expressed it, "the rush-bush kept the cow," and "thereafter was great peace and rest a long time, wherethrough the king had great profit; for he had ten thousand sheep going in the Ettrick Forest in keeping by Andrew Bell, who made the king as good count of them as they had gone in the bounds of Fife."—Pitscotte's History, p. 153.

Z. What grace for Highland Chiefs, judge ye
By rate of Border chivalry.—P. 192.

James was in fact equally attentive to restrain rapine and feudal oppression in every part of his dominions. "The king past to the Isles, and there held justice courts, and punished both thief and traitor according to their demerit. And also he caused great men to show their holdings, where-through he found many of the said lands in non-entry; the which he confiscate and brought home to his own use, and afterwards annexed them to the crown, as ye shall hear. Syne brought many of the great men of the Isles captive with him, such as Mudyart, M'Connel, M'Loyd of the Lewes, M'Neil, M'Lane, M'Intosh, John Mudyart, M'Kay, M'Renzle, with many other that I cannot rehearse at this time. Some of them he put in ward and some in court, and some he took pledges for good rule in time coming. So he brought the Isles, both north and south, in good rule and peace; wherefore he had great profit, service, and obedience of people a long time thereafter; and as long as he had the heads of the country in subjection, they lived in great peace and rest, and there was great riches and policy by the king's justice."—Pitscotte, p. 152.

2 A. Rest safe till morning; pity you're
Such cheek should feel the midnight air.—P. 193.

Hardihood was in every respect so essential to the character of a Highlander that the reproach of effeminacy was the most bitter which could be thrown upon him. Yet it was sometimes hazarded on what we might presume to think slight grounds. It is reported of Old Sir Ewen Cameron of Lochiel, who was the son of the last, that he was surprised by night on a hunting or military expedition. He wrapped him in his plaid, and lay contentedly down upon the snow, with which the ground happened to be covered. Among his attendants, who were preparing to take their rest in the same manner, he observed that one of his grandsons, for his better accommodation, had rolled a large snow-ball, and placed it below his head. The wrath of the ancient chief was awakened by a symptom of what he conceived to be degenerate luxury.

1 See Border Minstrelsy, vol. 1, p. 302.
"Out upon thee!" said he, kicking the frozen bolster from the head which it supported; "art thou so effeminate as to need a pillow?" The officer of engineers, whose curious letters from the Highlands have been more than once quoted, tells a similar story of Macdonald of Keppoch, and subjoins the following remarks:—"This and many other stories are romantic; but there is one thing, that at first thought might seem very romantic, of which I have been credibly assured, that when the Highlanders are constrained to lie among the hills, in cold dry windy weather, they sometimes soak the plaid in some river or burn (i.e. brook), and then, holding up a corner of it a little above their heads, they turn themselves round and round, till they are enveloped by the whole mantle. They then lay themselves down on the heath, upon the leeward side of some hill, where the wet and the warmth of their bodies make a steam like that of a boiling kettle. The wet, they say, keeps them warm by thickening the stuff, and keeping the wind from penetrating. I must confess I should have been apt to question this fact, had I not frequently seen them wet from morning to night, and, even at the beginning of the rain, not so much as stir a few yards to shelter, but continue in it without necessity, till they were, as we say, wet through and through. And that is soon effected by the looseness and spunginess of the plaiding; but the bonnet is frequently taken off and wrung like a dish-clout, and then put on again. They have been accustomed from their infancy to be often wet, and to take the water like spaniels, and this is become a second nature, and can scarcely be called a hardship to them, insomuch that I used to say, they seemed to be of the duck kind, and to love water as well. Though I never saw this preparation for sleep in windy weather, yet setting out early in a morning from one of the huts, I have seen the marks of their lodging, where the ground has been free from rime or snow, which remained all round the spot where they had lain."—Letters from Scotland. Lond. 1754, 8vo, ii. p. 108.

NOTE 2 B.

This officer is a sort of secretary, and is to be ready, upon all occasions, to venture his life in defence of his master; and at drinking-bouts he stands behind his seat, at his launch, from whence his title is derived, and watches the conversation, to see if any one offends his patron. An English officer being in company with a certain chiefman, and several other Highland gentlemen, near Killilchumen, had an argument with the great man; and both being well warmed with whisky, at last the dispute grew very hot. A youth who was henchman, not understanding one word of English, imagined his chief was insulted, and thereupon drew his pistol from his side, and snapped it at the officer's head; but the pistol missed fire, otherwise it is more than probable he might have suffered death from the hands of that little villain. But it is very disagreeable to an Englishman over a bottle, with the Highlanders, to see every one of them have his gilly, that is, his servant, standing behind him all the while, let what will be the subject of conversation."—Letters from Scotland, ii. 159.

NOTE 2 C.

And while the Fiery Cross glanced, like a meteor, round.—P. 194.

When a chiefman designed to summon his clan, upon any sudden or important emergency, he slew a goat, and making a cross of any light wood, seared its extremities in the fire, and extinguished them in the blood of the animal. This was called the Fiery Cross, also Crean Turish, or the Cross of Stane, because disobedience to what the symbol implied involved infamy. It was delivered to a swift and trusty messenger, who ran full speed with it to the next hamlet, where he presented it to the principal person, with a single word, implying the place of rendezvous. He who received the symbol was bound to send it forward, with equal dispatch, to the next village; and thus it passed with incredible celerity through all the district which owed allegiance to the chief, and also among his allies and neighbors, if the danger was common to them. At sight of the Fiery Cross, every man, from sixteen years old to sixty, capable of bearing arms, was obliged instantly to repair, in his best arms and accoutrements, to the place of rendezvous. He who failed to appear suffered the extremities of fire and sword, which were emphatically denounced to the disobedient by the bloody and burnt marks upon this warlike signal. During the civil war of 1745-6, the Fiery Cross often made its circuit; and upon one occasion it passed through the whole district of Breadalbane, a tract of thirty-two miles, in three hours. The late Alexander Stewart, Esq., of Invernahlye, described to me his having sent round the Fiery Cross through the district of Appline, during the same commotion. The coast was threatened by a descent from two English frigates, and the flower of the young men were with the army of Prince Charles Edward, then in England; yet the summons was so effectual that even old age and childhood obeyed it; and a force was collected in a few hours, so numerous and enthusiastic that all attempt at the intended diversion upon the country of the absent warriors was in prudence abandoned, as desperate.

This practice, like some others, is common to the Highlanders with the ancient Scandinavians, as will appear by the following extract from Olau Magnus:—

"When the enemy is upon the sea-coast, or within the limits of northern kingdoms, then presently, by the command of the principal governments, with the counsel and consent of the old soldiers, who are notably skilled in such like business, a staff of three hundred men, in the common sight of them all, is carried, by the speedy running of some active young man, unto that village or city, with this command,—that on the third, fourth, or eighth day, one, two, or three, or else every man in particular; from fifteen years old, shall come with his arms, and expenses for ten or twenty days, upon pain that his or her houses shall be burnt (which is intimated by the burning of the staff) or else the master to be hanged (which is signified by the cord tied to it), to appear speedily on such a bank, or field, or valley, to hear the cause he is called, and to hear orders from the said provincial governors what he shall do. Wherefore that messenger, swifter than any post or waggon, having done his commission, comes slowly back again, bringing a token with him that he hath done all legally, and every moment one or another runs to every village, and tells those places what they must do." "The messengers, therefore, of the footmen, that are to give warning to the people to keep for the battle, run fiercely and swiftly; for no snow, no rain, nor heat can stop them, nor night hold them; but they will soon run the race they undertake. The first messenger tells it to the next village, and that to the next; and so the hubbub runs all over till they all know it in that stiff or territory, where, when and wherefore they must meet."—Olaus Magnus' History of the Goths, Englished by J. S. Lond. 1658, book iv. chap. 3, 4.

NOTE 2 D.

That monk, of savage form and face.—P. 195.

The state of religion in the middle ages afforded considerable facilities for those whose mode of life excluded them from regular worship to secure, nevertheless; the ghostly assistance of confessors, perfectly willing to adapt the nature of their
To make the English subjectes taste the Irish rebels' roodie.
To spoile, to kill, to burne,
this frier's counsell is;
And for the doing of the same,
he warrantes heavenlie blisse.
He tells a holy tale;
the white he toursnes to black;
And through the pardons in his male,
he works a knavage knacks."

The wreckful invasion of a part of the English pale is then described with some spirit; the burning of houses, driving off cattle, and all pertaining to such predatory inroads, are illustrated by a rude cut. The defeat of the Irish, by a party of English soldiers from the next garrison, is then commemorated, and in like manner adorned with an engraving, in which the friar is exhibited mourning over the slain chieftain; or, as the rubric expresses it,

"The frier then, that treacherous knave; with ough, ough-
hone lament,
To see his cousin Devill's-son to have so foul event."

The matter is handled at great length in the text, of which the following verses are more than sufficient sample:

"The frier seyng this,
laments that lucklesse parte,
And curseth to the pitte of hell
the death man's stolde hearte;
Yet for to quight them with the frier taketh paine,
For all the synnes that ere he did remission to obtaine.
And therefore serves his booke,
the candell and the bell;
But thinke you that such apishe todes brings damned souls from hell?
It longs not to my parte
infernall things to knowe;
But I believe till later daie,
that rise not from belowe.
Yet hope that friers give to this rebellious rout,
If that their souls should chance in hell,
to bringe them quicklie out,
Deeth make them lead suche lives,
as neither God nor man,
Without revenge for their desartes, permitte or suffer can.
Thus friers are the cause,
the fountain, and the spring,
Of hurleburles in this lande,
of ceehe unappacable thing.
Thel cause them to rebell against their soveraigne quene,
And through rebellion often tynes,
their lives do vanish cleane.
So as by friers meannes,
in whom all folie swimme,
The Irise karne doe often lose the life, with hedle and limme."

As the Irish tribes, and those of the Scottish Highlands, are much more intimately allied, by language, manners, dress, and customs, than the antiquaries of either country have been willing to admit, I flatter myself I have here produced a strong warrant for the character sketched in the text. The following picture, though of a different kind, serves to establish the existence of ascetic religionists, to a comparatively late period, in the Highlands and Western Isles. There is a great deal of simplicity in the description, for which, as for much similar information, I am obliged to Dr. John Martin, who visited the Hebrides at the suggestion of Sir Robert Sibbald, a Scottish antiquarian of eminence, and early in the eighteenth century published a description of them, which procured him admission into the Royal Society. He died in London about 1719. His work is a strange mixture of learning, observation, and gross credulity.

"I remember," says this author, "I have seen an old lay-capuchin here (in the island of Benbecula), called in their language Brahir-booth, that is, Poor Brother; which is literally true; for he answers this character, having nothing but what is given him; he holds himself fully satisfied with food and rayment, and lives in as great simplicity as any of his order; his diet is very mean, and he drinks only fair water; his habit is no less mortifying than that of his brethren elsewhere: he wears a short coat, which comes no farther than his middle, with narrow sleeves like a waistcoat; he wears a plaid above it, girt about the middle, which reaches to his knee: the plaid is fastened on his breast with a wooden pin, his neck bare, and his feet so often to see: he wears a hat for ornament, and the string about it is a bit of a fisher's line, made of horse-hair. This plaid he wears instead of a gown, worn by those of his order in other countries. I told him he wanted the flaxen girdle that men of his order usually wear; he answered me, that he wore a leathern one, which was the same thing. Upon the matter, if he is spoke to when at meat, he answers again; which is contrary to the custom of his order. This poor man frequently diverts himself with angling of trout; he lies upon straw, and has no bell (as others have) to call him to his devotions, but only his conscience, as he told me."—Martin's Description of the Western Highlands, p. 82.

Note 2 E.

Of Brian's birth strange tales were told.—P. 193.

The legend which follows is not of the author's invention. It is possible he may differ from modern critics in supposing that the records of human superstition, if peculiar to and characteristic of the country in which the scene is laid, are a legitimate subject of poetry. He gives, however, a ready assent to the narrower proposition which condemns all attempts of an irregular and disorderly fancy to excite terror by accumulating a train of fantastic and incoherent horrors, whether borrowed from all countries and patched upon a narrative belonging to one which knew them not, or derived from the author's own imagination. In the present case, therefore, I appeal to the record which I have transcribed, with the variation of a few words, from the geographical collections made by the laird of Macfarlane. I know not whether it be necessary to remark that the miscellaneous concourse of youth and maidens on the night and on the spot where the miracle is said to have taken place might, even in a credulous age, have somewhat diminished the wonder which accompanied the conception of Gilli-Doir-Magrevollich.

"There is but two myles from Inverlochgie, the church of Kilmalie, in Lochyeld. In ancient times there was one church builded upon one hill, which was above this church, which doeth now stand in this toune; and ancient men doth say, that there was a battell foughten on ale little hill not the tenth part of a myle from this church, be certaine men which they did not know what they were. And long tyme thereafter, certaine herds of that toune, and of the next toune, called Unnati, both wenches and yoythes, did on a tyme comm enhance with others on that hille, and the day being somewhat cold, did gather the bones of the dead men that were slayne long tyme before in that place, and did make a fire to warm them. At last they did all remove from the fire, except one maid or wench, which was verie cold, and she did remaine there for a space. She being quystie her alone, without anie other companie, took up her ashes above her knees, or thereby, to warm her; a wind did come and cast the ashes upon her, and she was conceived of ane man-chyld. Several tymes thereafter she was verie sick, and at last she was knowne to be with chyld. And then her parents did ask at her the matter heiroff, which the wench could not well answer which way to satisfie them. At last she resolved them with ane answer. As fortune fell upon her concerning this marvellous miracle, the chyld being borne, her name was called Gilg-Doir-Magrevollich, that is to say, the Black Child, Son to the Bones. So called, his grandfather sent him to school, and so he was a good scholar, and godlie. He did build this church which doeth now stand in Lochyeld, called Kilmalie."—Macfarlane, ut supra, l. 188.

Note 2 F.

Yet ne'er again to braid her hair
The virgin snood did Alice wear.—P. 196.

The snood, or ribbon, with which a Scottish lass braided her hair, had an emblematical signification, and applied to her maiden character. It was exchanged for the cure, toy, or cull, when she passed, by marriage, into the matron state. But if the damsel was so unfortunate as to lose pretensions to the name of maiden, without gaining a right to that of matron, she was neither permitted to use the snood, nor advanced to the greater dignity of the cure. In old Scottish songs there occur many sly allusions to such misfortune; as in the old words to the popular tune of "Ower the muir amang the heather!"

"Down amang the broom, the broom,
Down amang the broom, my dearie,
The laise lost her silken snood,
That gaird her greet till she was wareie."

Note 2 G.

The desert gave him visions wild,
Such as might suit the spectre's child.—P. 196.

In adopting the legend concerning the birth of the founder of the church of Kilmalie, the author has endeavored to trace the effects which such a belief was likely to produce, in a barbarous age, on the person to whom it related. It seems likely that he must have become a fanatic or an impostor, or that mixture of both which forms a more frequent character than either of them as existing separately. In truth, mad delusions are frequently more a chaos to impose upon others a faith in their visions than they are themselves confirmed in their reality; as, on the other hand, it is difficult for the most cool-headed impostor long to personate an enthusiast, without in some degree believing what he is so eager to have believed. It was a natural attribute of such a character as the supposed hermit, that he should credit the numerous superstitions with which the minds of ordinary Highlanders are almost always imbued. A few of these are slightly alluded to in this stanza.
The River Demon, or River-horse—for it is that form which he commonly assumes—is the Kobý of the Lowlands, an evil and malicious spirit, delighting to forbode and to witness calamity. He frequents most Highland lakes and rivers; and one of his most memorable exploits was performed upon the banks of Loch Yennachar, in the very district which forms the scene of our action: it consisted in the destruction of a funeral procession with all its attendants. The "moonlight hag," called in Gaelic Glas-lich, a tall, emaciated, gigantic female figure, is supposed in particular to haunt the district of Knodart. A goblin, dressed in antique armor, and having one hand covered with blood, called from that circumstance Lham-dearg, or Red-hand, is a tenant of the forests of Glenmore or Rothiemurchus. Other spirits of the desert, all frightful in shape and malignant in disposition, are believed to frequent different mountains and glens of the Highlands, where any unusual appearance, produced by mist, or the strange lights that are sometimes thrown upon particular objects, never fails to present an apparition to the imagination of the solitary and melancholy mountaineer.

NOTE 2 II.

The fatal Ben-Shie's boding scream.—P. 196.

Most great families in the Highlands were supposed to have a tutelar, or rather a domestic, spirit attached to them, who took an interest in their prosperity, and intimated, by its wailings, any approaching disaster. That of Grant of Grant was called May Mountach, and appeared in the form of a girl, who had her arm covered with hair. Grant of Rothiemurchus had an attendant called Zoedach-an-dun, or the Ghost of the Hill; and many other examples might be mentioned. The Ban-Schie implies a female fairy, whose lamentations were often supposed to precede the death of a chief or of particular families. When she is visible, it is in the form of an old woman, with a blue mantle and streaming hair. A superstition of the same kind is, I believe, universally received by the inferior ranks of the native Irish.

The death of the head of a Highland family is also sometimes supposed to be announced by a chain of lights of different colors, called Droog, or death of the Druid. The direction which it takes marks the place of the burial. [See the "Essay on Fairy Superstitions" in the Border Minstrelsy.

NOTE 2 I.

Sounds, too, had come in midnight blast,
Of charging steeds, covering fast
Along Benharrow's shingly side,
Where mortal horseman ne'er might ride.—P. 196.

A presage of the kind alluded to in the text is still believed to announce death to the ancient Highland family of McLean of Lochbuy. The spirit of an ancestor slain in battle is heard to gallop along a stony bank, and then to ride thrice around the family residence, ringing his fairy bridle, and thus intimating the approaching calamity. How89 easily the eye, as well as the ear, may be deceived upon such occasions, is evident from the stories of armies in the air, and other spectral phenomena with which history abounds. Such an apparition is said to have been witnessed upon the side of Southfell mountain, between Penrith and Keswick, upon the 22d June, 1744, by two persons, William Lancaster of Bellehills and Daniel Stricket, his servant, whose attestation to the fact, with a full account of the apparition, dated the 21st July, 1745, is printed in Clarke's Survey of the Lakes. The apparition consisted of several troops of horses moving in regular order, with a steady rapid motion, making a curved sweep around the fell, and seeming to the spectators to disappear over the ridge of the mountain. Many persons witnessed this phenomenon, and observed the last, or last but one, of the supposed troop occasionally leave his rank, and pass at a gallop to the front, when he resumed the same steady pace. This curious appearance, making the necessary allowance for imagination, may be perhaps sufficiently accounted for by optical delusion.—Survey of the Lakes, p. 25.

Supernatural intimations of approaching fate are not, I believe, confined to Highland families. Howel mentions having seen at a laphary's, in 1632, a monumental stone, prepared for four persons of the name of Oxenham, with marks from death of each of whom the inscription stated a white bird had appeared and fluttered around the bed while the patient was in the last agony.—Familiar Letters, ed. 1726, 247. Glanville mentions one family, the members of which received this solemn sign by music, the sound of which floated from the family residence, and seemed to die in a neighboring wood; another, that of Captain Wood of Hamp ton, to whom the signal was given by knocking. But the most remarkable instance of this kind occurs in the MS. Memoirs of Lady Fanshaw, so exemplary for her conjugal affection. Her husband, Sir Richard, and she chanced, during their abode in Ireland, to visit a friend, the head of a sept, who resided in his ancient baronial castle, surrounded with a moat. At midnight she was awakened by a ghastly and supernatural scream had, looking out of bed, beheld, by the moonlight, a female face and part of the form hovering at the window. The distance from the ground, as well as the circumstance of the moat, excluded the possibility that what she beheld was of this world. The face was that of a young and rather handsome woman, but pale; and the hair, which was reddish, was loose and dishevelled. The dress, which Lady Fanshaw's terror did not prevent her remarking accurately, was that of the ancient Irish. This apparition continued to exhibit itself for some time, and then vanished with two shrieks, similar to that which had first excited Lady Fanshaw's attention. In the morning, with infinite terror, she communicated to her host what she had witnessed, and found him prepared not only to witness, but to account for the apparition. "A near relation of my family," said he, "expired last night in this castle. We disguised our certain expectation of the event from you, lest it should throw a cloud over the cheerful reception which was due you. Now, before such an event happens in this family and castle, the female spectre whom you have seen always is visible. She is believed to be the spirit of a woman of inferior rank, whom one of my ancestors degraded himself by marrying, and whom afterwards, to expiate the dishonor done his family, he caused to be drowned in the castle moat."

NOTE 2 K.

Whose parents in Inch-Caillieach wore
Their shadows o'er Clan-Alpine's grave.—P. 196.

Inch-Caillieach, the Isle of Nuns, or of Old Wohen, is a most beautiful island at the lower extremity of Loch Lomond. The church belonging to the former nunnery was long used as the place of worship for the parish of Buchanan, but scarce any vestiges of it now remain. The burial-ground continues to be used, and contains the family places of sepulture of several neighboring clans. The monuments of the lairds of Macgregor, and of other families claiming a descent from the old Scottish King Alpine, are most remarkable. The Highlanders are as zealous of their rights of sepulture as may be expected from a people whose whole laws and government, if clanship can be called so, turned upon the single principle of family descent. "May his ashes be scattered on the water," was one of the deepest and most solemn imprecations which they used against an enemy. [See a detailed description of the funeral ceremonies of a Highland chieftain in the "Fair Maid of Perth." Waterlow Novels, vol. 45, chap. x. and xi. edit. 1854.]

NOTE 2 L.

the dun deer's hide
On fleeter foot was never tied.—P. 197.

The present brogue of the Highlanders is made of half-dried leather, with holes to admit and let out the water; for walking the moors dry-shod is a matter altogether out of the question. The ancient buskin was still ruder, being made of undressed deer's hide, with the hair outwards; a circumstance which procured the Highlanders the well-known epithet of Red-shanks. The process is very accurately described by one Elder (himself a Highlander) in the project for a union between England and Scotland, addressed to Henry VIII. "We go a-hunting, and after that we have slain red-deer, we play off the skin by-and-by, and setting of our bare foot on the inside thereof, for want of cunning shoemakers, by your grace's pardon, we play the cobbler's, compassing and measuring so much thereof as shall reach up to our ankles, pricking the upper part thereof with holes, that the water may repass where it enters, and stretching it up with a strong thong of the same above our said ankles. So, and please your noble grace, we make our shoes. Therefore, we using such manner of shoes, the rough hairy side outwards, in your grace's dominions of England, we be called Roughfaced Scots!"—Pinkerton's History, vol. ii. p. 357.

NOTE 2 M.

The dismal coronach.—P. 198.

The Coronach of the Highlanders, like the Udalatus of the Romans, and the Ultuso of the Irish, was a wild expression of lamentation, pouréd forth by the mourners over the body of a departed friend. When the words of it were articulate, they expressed the praises of the deceased, and the loss the clan would sustain by his death. The following is a lamentation of this kind, literally translated from the Gaelic, to some of the ideas of which the text stands indebted. The tune is so popular that it has since become the war-march or Gathering of the clan:

Coronach on Sir Louchlan, Chief of Maclean.

"Which of all the Sennaichs
Can trace thy line from the root up to Paradise,
But Macnairlich, the son of Fergus?
No sooner had thine ancient stately tree
Taken firm root in Albyn,
Than one of thy forefathers fell at Harlaw.—
'Twas then we lost a chief of deathless name.

"Tis no base weed—no planted tree,
Nor a seedling of last Autumn;
Nor a sapling planted at Beltain;²
Wide, wide around were spread its lofty branches—
But the topmost bough is lowly laid!
Thou hast forsaken us before Sawaine.²

¹ Bell's fire, or Whit Sunday.

² Hallow'even.

"Thy dwelling is the winter house;—
Loud, sad, sad, and mighty is thy death song!
Oh, courteous champion of Montrose!
Oh, stately warrior of the Celtic Isles!
Thou shalt buckle thy harness on no more!"

The coronach has for some years past been superseded at funerals by the use of the bagpipe; and that also is, like many other Highland peculiarities, falling into disuse, unless in remote districts.

NOTE 2 N.

Bentalt saw the Cross of Fire,
It glanced like lightning up Strath-Ire.—P. 199.

Inspection of the provincial map of Perthshire, or any large map of Scotland, will trace the progress of the signal through the small district of lakes and mountains, which, in exercise of my poetical privilege, I have subjected to the authority of my imaginary chieftain, and which, at the period of my romance, was really occupied by a clan who claimed a descent from Alpine; a clan the most unfortunate and most persecuted, but neither the least distinguished, least powerful, nor least brave, of the tribes of the Gael.

"Sloch non rigirrigh duchaisich
Bha-shios an Dun-Stalobhinish
Aig an roubh crun na Halla othus
'Stag a chell duchas fast ris."

The first stage of the Flory Cross is to Duncraggan, a place near the Brig of Turk, where a short stream divides Loch Achray from Loch Vennachar. From thence it passes towards Callander, and then, turning to the left up the pass of Leny, is consigned to Norman at the chapel of Saint Bride, which stood on a small and romantic knoll in the middle of the valley called Strath-Ire. Tombea and Armandave, or Ardmandare, are names of places in the vicinity. The alarm is then supposed to pass along the lake of Lubnaig, and through the various glens in the district of Balquidder, including the neighboring tracts of Glenfiddlas and Strathgartney.

NOTE 2 O.

Not faster o'er thy heathery braes,
Balquidder, speeds the midnight blaze.—P. 200.

It may be necessary to inform the southern reader that the heath on the Scottish moorlands is often set fire to, that the sheep may have the advantage of the young herbage produced, in room of the tough old heather plants. This custom (execrated by sportsmen) produces occasionally the most beautiful nocturnal appearances, similar almost to the discharge of a volcano. This simile is not new to poetry. The charge of a warrior, in the fine ballad of Hardyknute, is said to be "like fire to heather set.

NOTE 2 P.

No oath but by his Chiefestin's hand,
No law but Rodbertich Dhu's command.—P. 201.

The deep and implicit respect paid by the Highland clansmen to their chief rendered this both a common and a sol-
In other respects they were like most savage nations, capricious in their ideas concerning the obligatory power of oaths. One solemn mode of swearing was by kissing the dirk, impregnating upon themselves death by that, or a similar weapon, if they broke their vow. But for oaths in the usual form they are said to have had little respect. As for the reverence due to the chief, it may be guessed from the following odd example of a Highland point of honor:

"The clan whero to the above-mentioned tribe belongs is the only one I have heard of which is without a chief; that is, being divided into families, under several chieftains, without any particular patriarch of the whole name. And this is a great reproach, as may appear from an affair that fell out at my table, in the Highlands, between one of that name and a Cameron. The provocation given by the latter was 'Name your chief! The return of it at once was, 'You are a fool.' They went out next morning, but having early notice of it, I sent a small party of soldiers after them, which, in all probability, prevented some barbarous mischief that might have ensued: for the chiefless Highlander, who is himself a petty chieftain, was going to the place appointed with a smallsword and pistol, whereas the Cameron (an old man) took with him only his broadsword, according to the agreement.

"When all was over, and I had, at least seemingly, reconciled them, I was told the words, of which I seemed to think but slightly, were, to one of the clan, the greatest of all provocations."—Letters from Scotland, vol. ii. p. 225.

Note 2 Q.

By many a bard, in Celtic tongue,
Has Coir-nan-Uriskin been sung.—P. 291.

This is a very steep and most romantic hollow in the mountain of Benvenue, overhanging the southwestern extremity of Loch Katrine. It is surrounded with stupendous rocks, and overshadowed with birch-trees, mingled with oaks, the spontaneous production of the mountain, even where its cliffs appear denuded of soil. A dale in so wild a situation, and amid a people whose genius bordered on the romantic, did not remain without appropriate deities. The name literally implies the Corri, or Den, of the Wild or Shaggy men. Perhaps this, as conjectured by Mr. Alexander Campbell, may have originally only implied its being the haunt of a ferocious banditti. But tradition has ascribed to the Urisk, who gives name to the cavern, a figure between a goat and a man; in short, however much the classical reader may be startled, precisely that of the Grecian satyr. The Urisk seems not to have inherited, with the form, the petulance of the sylvan deity of the classics: his occupation, on the contrary, resembled those of Milton's Lysander Fiend, or of the Scottish Brownie, though he differed from both in name and appearance. "The Urisks," says Dr. Graham, "were a set of lubberly supernatural, who, like the Brownies, could be gained over by kind attention to perform the drudgeries of the farm, and it was believed that many of the families in the Highlands had one of the order attached to it. They were supposed to be dispersed over the Highlands, each in his own wild recess, but the solemn stated meetings of the order were regularly held in this Cave of Benvenue. This current superstition, no doubt, alludes to some circumstance in the ancient history of this country."—Scenery on the Southern Confinse of Perthshire, p. 19, 1806. It must be owned that the Coir, or Den, does not, in its present state, meet our ideas of a subterraneous grotto or cave, being only a small and narrow cavity, among huge fragments of rocks rudely piled together. But such a scene is liable to convulsions of nature which a Lowlander cannot

Note 2 T.

The Taghairm called; by which, afar,
Our sires foreseem the events of war.—P. 203.

The Highlanders, like all rude people, had various superstitious modes of inquiring into futurity. One of the most noted was the Taghairm, mentioned in the text. A person was wrapped up in the skin of a newly-slain bullock, and deposited beside a waterfall, or at the bottom of a precipice, or in some other strange, wild, and unusual situation, where the scenery around him suggested nothing but objects of horror. In this situation, he revolved in his mind the question proposed; and whatever was impressed upon him by his exalted imagination passed for the inspiration of the demoniacal influence. By the drive of his reason, or the dictates of the Hebrides, they attributed the same oracular power to a large black stone by the sea-shore, which they approached with certain solemnities, and considered the first fancy which came into their own minds, after they did so, to be the undoubted dictate of the tutelary deity of the stone, and, as such, to be, if possible, punctually complied with. Martin has recorded the following curious modes of Highland augury, in which the Taghairm, and its effects upon the person who was subjected to it, may serve to illustrate the text:
APPENDIX TO THE LADY OF THE LAKE. 245

"It was an ordinary thing among the over-curios to consult an invisible oracle concerning the fate of families and battles, &c. This was performed three different ways: the first was by a company of men, one of whom, being detached by the others, was afterwards, while it was light, to go in search of the stone. He entered between two villages; four of the company laid hold on him, and, having shut his eyes, they took him by the legs and arms, and then, tossing him to and again, struck his hips with force against the bank. One of them cried out, What is it you have got here? another answers, A log of birch-wood. The other cries again, But his invisible friends appear from all quarters, and let them relieve him by giving an answer to our present demands; and in a few minutes after, a number of little creatures came from the sea, who answered the question, and disappeared suddenly. The man was then set at liberty, and they all returned home, to take their measures according to the prediction of their false prophets; but the poor deluded fools were abused, for their answer was still ambiguous. This was always practiced in the night, and may literally be called the works of darkness.

"I had an account from the most intelligent and jocund men in the Isle of Skye, that about sixty-two years ago, the oracle was thus consulted only once, and that was in the parish of Kilmartin, on the east side, by a wicked and mischievous race of people, who are now extinguished, both root and branch.

"The second way of consulting the oracle was by a party of men, who first retired to solitary places, remote from any house, and there they singled out one of their number, and wrapped him in a big cow's hide, which they folded about him; his whole body was covered with it, except his head, and so left in this posture all night, until his invisible friends relieved him, by giving a proper answer to the question in hand; which he received, as he fancied, from several persons that he found about him all that time. His consorts returned to him at the break of day, and then he communicated his news to them; which often proved fatal to those concerned in such unwarrantable inquiries.

"There was a third way of consulting, which was a confirmation of the second above mentioned. The same company who put the man into the hide took a live cat and put him on a spit; one of the number was employed to turn the spit, and one of his consorts inquired of him, What are you doing? he answered, I roast this cat until his friends answer the question; which must be the same that was proposed by the man shut up in the hide. And afterwards, a very big cat comes, attended by a number of lesser cats, desiring to relieve the cat turned upon the spit, and then answers the question.

If this answer proved the same that was given to the man in the hide, then it was taken as a confirmation of the other, which, in this case, was believed infallible.

"Mr. Alexander Cooper, present minister of North-Vist, told me that one John Erach, in the Isle of Lewis, assured him, it was his fate to have been led by his curiosity with some who consulted this oracle, and that he was a night within the hide, as above mentioned; during which time he heard and heard such terrible things that he could not express them; the impression it made on him was such as could never go off, and he said, for a thousand worlds he would never again be concerned in the like performance, for this had disordered him to a high degree. He confessed it ingenuously, and with an air of great remorse, and seemed to be very penitent under a just sense of so great a crime: he declared this about five years since, and is still living in the Lewis for anything I know."—Description of the Western Isles, p. 110. See also Pennant's Scottish Tour, vol. ii. p. 361.

Note 2 U.

The choice of the prey we had,
When swept our merry-men Gallangad.—P. 203.

I know not if it be worth observing that this passage is taken almost literally from the mouth of an old Highland kern or Ketteran, as they were called. He used to narrate the merry doings of the good old time when he was follower of Rob Roy MacGregor. This leader, on one occasion, thought proper to make a descent upon the lower part of the Loch Lomond district, and summoned all the herdsmen and farmers to meet at the Kirk of Drymen, to pay him black-mail, &c. to contribute for forbearance and protection. As this invitation was supported by a band of thirty or forty stout fellows, only one gentleman, an ancestor, if I mistake not, of the present Mr. Grahame of Gartmore, ventured to decline compliance. Rob Roy instantly swept his land of all he could drive away, and among the spoil was a bull of the old Scottish wild breed, whose ferocity occasioned great plague to the Ketterans. "But ere we had reached the Row of Dennan," said the old man, "a child might have scratched his ears." The circumstance is a minute one, but it paints the times when the poor beave was compelled "To hoof it over as many weary miles,

With maddening pikemen hollowing at his heels,
As ever the bravest antler of the woods."—Ehwild.

Note 2 V.

— that huge cliff whose ample verge
Tradition calls the Hero's Torse.—P. 295.

There is a rock so named in the Forest of Glenfinlas, by which a tumultuary cataract takes its course. This wild place is said in former times to have afforded refuge to an outlaw, who was supplied with provisions by a woman, who lowered them down from the brink of the precipice above. His water he procured for himself, by letting down a fagon tied to a string, into the black pool beneath the fall.

dribed to Gregor MacGregor of Glengyle, called Ghlune Dha, or Black-knee, a relation of Rob Roy, but, as I have been assured, not addicted to his predatory excesses.—Note to Third Edition.

1 The reader may have met with the story of the "King of the Cats," in Lord Littleton's Letters. It is well known in the Highlands as a nursery tale.

2 This anecdote was, in former editions, inaccurately as-
Note 2 W.

Or raven—
That, watching while the deer is brook,
His morall claims with sullen crook—P. 293.

Broke, quartered. Everything belonging to the chase was matter of solemnity among our ancestors; but nothing was more so than the mode of cutting up, or, as it was technically called, breaking, the slaughtered stag. The forester had his allotted portion; the hounds had a certain allowance; and, to make the division as general as possible, the very birds had their share also. "There is a little gristle," says Tuberville, "which is upon the spoon of the brisket, which we call the raven's bone; and I have seen in some places a raven so wont and accustomed to it, that she would never fail to croak and cry for it all the time you were in breaking up of the deer, and would not depart till she had it." In the very ancient metrical romance of Sir Tristan, that peerless knight, who is said to have been the very deviser of all rules of chase, did not omit the ceremony:—

"The raven he yaye his yiftes
    Sat on the foureched tre."—Sir Tristan.

The raven might also challenge his rights by the Book of St. Albans; for thus says Dame Juliana Berners:—

"'Slitteth anon
    The bely to the side, from the corbyn bone;
    That is corbyn's fee, at the death he will be."

Jonson, in "The Sad Shepherd," gives a more poetical account of the same ceremony:

"Marian.—He that undoes him,
    Doth cleave the brisket bone, upon the spoon
    Of which a little gristle grows—you call it—
Robin Hood.—The raven's bone.
Marian.—Now o'er he' th ead sat a raven
    On a sere bough, a grown, great bird, and hoarse,
    Who, all the while the deer was breaking up,
    So croak'd and cried for't, as all the huntsmen,
     Especially old Scathlock, thought it ominous."

Note 2 X.

Which spils the foremost forren's life,
    That party conquer in the strife.—P. 294.

Though this be in the text described as a response of the Taghaimr, or Oracle of the Hills, it was of itself an augury frequently attended to. The fate of the battle was often anticipated in the imagination of the combatants, by observing which party first shed blood. It is said that the Highlanders under Montrose were so deeply imbued with this notion that, on the morning of the battle of Tippermoor, they murdered a defenceless herdsman, whom they found in the fields, merely to secure an advantage of so much consequence to their party.

Note 2 Y.

Alice Brand.—P. 295.

This little fairy tale is founded upon a very curious Danish ballad, which occurs in the Kempe Viser, a collection of heroe songs, first published in 1591, and reprinted in 1655, inscribed by Anders Sofresen, the collector and editor, to Sophia, Queen of Denmark. I have been favored with a literal translation of the original, by my learned friend Mr. Robert Jamieson, whose deep knowledge of Scandinavian antiquities will, I hope, one day be displayed in illustration of the history of Scottish Ballad and Song, for which no man possesses more ample materials. The story will remind the readers of the Border Minstrelsy of the tale of Young Tamlane. But this is only a solitary and not very marked instance of coincidence, whereas several of the other ballads in the same collection find exact counterparts in the Kempe Viser. Which may have been the originals will be a question for future antiquaries. Mr. Jamieson, to secure the power of literal translation, has adopted the old Scottish idiom, which approaches so near to that of the Danish as almost to give word for word, as well as line for line, and indeed in many verses the orthography alone is altered. As Wester Hof, mentioned in the first stanzas of the ballad, means the West Sea, in opposition to the Baltic or East Sea, Mr. Jamieson inclines to be of opinion that the scene of the disenchantment is laid in one of the Orkney or Hebride Islands. To each verse in the original is added a burden, having a kind of meaning of its own, but not applicable, at least not uniformly applicable, to the sense of the stanza to which it is subjoined; this is very common both in Danish and Scottish song.

THE ELFIN GRAY.

TRANSLATED FROM THE DANISH KEMPE VISER, P. 143, AND FIRST PUBLISHED IN 1591.

Der ligger et vold i Wester Hof,
Der agter en bonde at bygge;
Han ferkor dog baad og hund,
Og agter der om viateren at bygge.

(DE VLDE DIUR OG DURERNE UDI SKOFVEN.)

1. There ligges a wold in Wester Hof,
    There a husbande means to bigg,
    And thither he carries baith hawk and hound,
    There meaning the winter to ligge.

 (The wild deer and does t' the shaw out.)

2. He takes wi' him baith bound and cock,
    The larger he means to stay,
    The wild deer in the shaws that are
     May sairly rue the day.

 (The wild deer, &c.)

3. He's hew'd the beech, and he's fell'd the alk,
    Sae has he the poplar gray;
And grinn'd in mood was the growsome Elf,
That be sae bali he may.

4. He hew'd him kipples, he hew'd him bawsks,
    Wi' mickle moff and haste;
    Syne speerd'd the Elf t' the knock that bade,
    "Wha's hacking here sae fast?"

5. Syne upp and spak the weicest Elf,
    Cram'd as an immort sma:
    "It's here is come a Christian man:—
     I'll sye him or he ga."
6.  It's up synce started the firsten Elf,
   And glower'd about sae grim:
   "It's we'll aw to the husbande's house,
   And hald a court on him."

7.  "Here hews he down baith skugg and shaw,
   And works us saith and scorn;
   His huswife he saill g'le to me—
   They's rue the day they were born!"

8.  The Elfen a' i' the knock that were,
   Gae dancing in a string;
   They nighed near the husbande's house;
   Sae lang their tails did hing.

9.  The bound he yows l' the yard,
   The herd tools in his horn;
   The earn scraughes, and the cock craws,
   As the husbande has g'len him his corn.1

10. The Elfen were five score and seven,
    Sae lairdly and sae grim;
    And they the husbande's guests maun be,
    To eat and drink wi' him.

11. The husbande, out o' Villenshaw,
    At his winnock the Elves can see;
    "Help me, now, Jesu, Mary's son;
    Thir Elves they mist at me!"

12. In every nook a cross he cost,
    In his chamler maist ava;
    The Elfen a' were they'd thereat,
    And flew to the wild-wood shaw.

13. And some flew east, and some flew west,
    And some to the norwart flew;
    And some they flew to the deep dale dow;
    There still they are, I trow.2

14. It was then the weist Elf,
    In at the door bràbhe he;
    Agast was the husbande, for that Elf
    For cross nor sign wad flee.

15. The huswife she was a canny wife,
    She set the Elf at the board;
    She set before him baith ale and meal,
    Wi' mony a weel-waled word.

16. "Hear thou, Gudeman o' Villenshaw,
    What now I say to thee;
    Wha bade thee bigg within our bounds,
    Without the leave o' me?"

17. "But, an thou in our bounds will bigg,
    And bide, as well as may be,
    Then thou thy dearest huswife maun
    To me for a lemmman gie."

18. Up skap the luckless husbande then,
    As God the grace him gae;
    "Eline she is to me sae dear,
    Her thou may nae-gate ha'e."

19. Till the Elf he answer'd as he couth:
    "Let but my huswife be,
    And tak what'er, o' gude or gear,
    Is mine, awa wi' thee."

20. "Then I'll thy Eline tak and thee,
    Ancath my feet to tread;
    And hide thy good and white monie
    Ancath my dwelling stead."

21. The husbande and his household a'
    In sary rode they join:
    "Far better that she be now forfairn,
    Nor that we a' should tyne."

22. Up, will of rede, the husbande stood,
    Wi' heart fa' sad and salr;
    And he has g'len his huswife Eline
    Wi' the young Elf to fare.

23. Then blyth grew he, and sprang about:
    He took her in his arm;
    The rud it left her comely cheek;
    Her heart was clem'd wi' harm.

24. A waefu' woman then she was ane,
    And the moody tears loot fa':
    "God row on me, unseely wife,
    How hard a weird I fa!"

25. "My fay I plight to the fairest wight
    That man on mald mat sec;—
    Maun I now mell wi' a laddy El,
    His light lemmman to be?"

26. He minted ane—he minted twie,
    Wae wax'd her heart that syth:
    Syne the laddiest fiend he grew that e'er
    To mortal ee did kyth.

27. When he the thirde time can mint,
    To Mary's son she prayd,
    And the laddy Elf was clean awa,
    And a fair knight in his stead.

1 This singular quatrain stands thus in the original:—
   "Hunden hand giőr i gaarden;
    Hiorden tuđe i sit horn;
    Gören skriger, og hanen galer,
    Som bonden hafđe giftet sit horn."

2 In the Danish:—
   "Sommb flød øster, og sommb flød øster,
    Nogle flød nør paa;
    Nogle flød nøl i dyben dale,
    Jeg troer de er den endnu."
28. This fell under a linden green,
That again his shape he found;
O' were and care was the word nae mair,
A' were sae glad that stood.

29. "O dearest Eline, hear thou this,
And thou my wife shall be,
Auld a' the good in merry England
Sae freely I'll gi'e thee!

30. "When I was but a little wee bairn,
My mither died me free;
My stepmother sent me awa fra her;
I turn'd till an Elin Gray.

31. "To thy husbande I a gift will gi'e,
Wf mickle state and gear,
As mends for Eline his huswife;—
Thou's be my heartis dear."—

32. "Thee noble knight, we thank now God
That has freed us frae skaith;
Sae wed thou thee a maiden free,
And joy attend ye baith!

33. "Sin' I to thee nae maik can be,
My dochter may be thine;
And thy gud will right to fulfill,
Lat this be our propine."—

34. "I thank thee, Eline, thou wise woman;
My praise thou worth sall ha';
And thy love gin I fail to win,
Thou here at hame shall stay!"

35. The husbande bighitt now on his ëe,
And nae me wrocht him wrang;
His dochter wore crown in England,
And happy lived and lang.

36. Now Eline, the husbande's huswife, has
Coud a' her grief and harms;
She's mither to a noble queen
That sleeps in a kingis arms.

GLOSSARY.

Str. 1. Wald, a wood; woody fastness.

Husband, from the Dan. bus, with, and bonde, a villain, or bondsman, who was a cultivator of the ground, and could not quit the estate to which he was attached, without the permission of his lord. This is the sense of the word in the old Scottish records. In the Scottish "Burse Lawes," translated from the Eng. Majest. (Auchinleck 38. in the Adv. Lib.), it is used indiscriminately with the Dan. and Swed. bonde, Bigg, build.

Digg, lie.

Doe, does.

Shaw, wood.

Sairly, sorely.

Aik, oak.

Grousome, terrible.

Bold, bold.

4. Kipples (couples), beams joined at the top, for supporting a roof, in building.

Banks, balks; cross beams.

Mait, laborious industry.

Sper'd, asked.

Knoch, hillock.

5. Wide, smallest.

Crewd, shrank, diminished; from the Gaelic crian, very small.

Immert, emmet; ant.

Christian, used in the Danish ballads, &c., in contradistinction to demoniac, as it is in England in contradistinction to brute; in which sense, a person of the lower class in England would call a Jew or a Turk a Christian.

Flej, frighten.

Hold, hold.

7. Skugg, shade.

Skath, harm.

Yous, bowls.

Tots, i.e. In the Dan. tude is applied both to the howling of a dog and the sound of a horn.

Scrathys, screams.

9. Laidly, loathly; disgustingly ugly.

Griev, fierce.

10. Winnock, window.

Mint, aim at.

11. Coast, east.

Chalmor, chamber.

Mast, most.

Avo, of all.

True, believe.

13. Braids, strikes quickly forward.

Wed, would.

Mony, many.

Wed-wasted, well chosen.

15. An, if.

Bide, abide.

Leman, mistress.

17. Couth, could, knew how to.

Lot be, let alone.

Gude, goods; property.

18. An toth, beneath.

Dwelling-stead, dwelling-place.

Ride, counsel; consultation.

Forlorn, forlorn; lost; gone.

Tyne (verb next), be lost; perish.

20. An, the.

21. Will of rode, bewildered in thought; in the Danish original "vidrauadjer;" Lat. "inopis consilli;" Gr. ἀγάμως. This expression is left among the desiderata in the Glossary to Ritson's Romances, and has never been explained. It is obsolete in the Danish as well as in the English.

Fors, go.

22. Raud, red of the check.

Cleum'd, in the Danish, blæst (which in the north of England is still in use, as the word sturred is with us); brought to a dying state. It is used by our old comedians.

Harm, grief; as in the original, and in the old Teutonic, English, and Scottish poetry.

23. Wisfn', woesful.

Moody, strongly and willfully passionate.

Rau, take ruth; pity.

Unseely, unhappy; unblest.

24. Weird, fate.
And renowned how time meant a gift. The lad plying his manner showed a mind, or intention to the original:—

"Hand minde hende forst—og anden gang;—
Hun gjorlis i hlortet sae vee:—
End blef hand den bolsste delf-vel
Mand kunde med òyen see.
Der hand vilde minde den trolle gang;" &c.

Syle, tide; time.
Kyth, appear.

29. Merry (old Teut, mere), famous; renowned; answering, in its etymological meaning, exactly to the Latin ma-
tus. Hence merry-men, as the address of a chief to his followers; meaning, not men of mirth, but of renown. The term is found in its original sense in the Gael, mara, and the Welsh mawr, great; and in the eldest Teut. Romances, mar, mer, and mere, have sometimes the same signification.

30. Mendis, amends; recompense.

31. Mak, match; pect; equal.

35. Be, an island of the second magnitude; an island of the first magnitude being called a land, and one of the third magnitude a holm.

36. Our'd, recovered.

THE GAIST'S WARNING.

TRANSLATED FROM THE DANISH KEMPE VISER, P. 721.

By the permission of Mr. Jamieson, this ballad is added from the same curious collection. It contains some passages of great pathos.

"Swead Dyring hand rider sig op under ð2, (Være jeg selver ung)
Der først hand sig saa ven en mid. (Mig lyser vii bynden at ride,) &c.

Child Dyring has ridden him up under ð2, (And O gi ven young) There wedded he him sae fair a may, (I' the greenwood it lists me to ride,

Thegither they lived for seven lang year, (And O, &c.)
And they seven bairns he've gotten in fere. (I' the greenwood, &c.)

Sae Death's come there intill that stead, And that winsome lily flower is dead.
That swain he has ridden him up under ð, And syne he has married another may.
He's married a may, and he's fessen her name; But she was a grim and lably dame.
When into the castell court drave she, The seven bairns stood wi' the tear in their ee.
The bairns they stood wi' dule and doubt;—
She up wi' her foot, and she kick'd them out.
Nor ale nor mead to the bairnies she gave:
"But hunger and hate frae me ye's have."
She took frae them the bowser blue, And said, "Ye sall ligg i' the bare strae!"
She took frae them the groff' wax light:
Says, "Now ye sall ligg i' the mirk a' night!"
'Twas lang i' the night, and the bairnies grat; Their mither she under the mools heard that;
That heard the wife under the card that lay:
"For sooth maun I to my bairnies gae!"
That wife can stand up at our Lord's knee, And "May I gang and my bairnies see?"
She prigged sae sair, and she prigged sae lang, That he at the last ga' he' leave to gang.

"And thou sall come back when the cock does craw, For thou nae langer sall bide awa."
"Wi' her banes sae stark a bawl she gae; She's riven baith wa' and marble gray.

When near to the dwelling she can gang, The dogs they wou'd till the lift it rang.

When she came to the castell yett, Her eldest dochter stood thereat.

"Why stand ye here, dear dochter mine? How are saa' brithers and sisters thine?"

"For sooth ye're a woman baith fair and fine; But ye are nae dear nither of mine."

"Och! how should I be fine or fair? My cheek it is pale, and the ground's my hair."

"My mither was white, wi' check sae red; But thou art wan, and liker ane dead."

"Och! how should I be white and red, Sae lang as I've been cauld and dead?"

When she cam till the chalmer in, Down the bairnies' checks the tears did rin.

1 "Under ð."—The original expression has been preserved here and elsewhere, because no other could be found to supply its place. There is just as much meaning in it as in the translation as in the original; but it is a standard Danish ballad phrase, and as such, it is hoped, will be allowed to pass.

2 "Fair."—The Dan. and Swed. ven, ven, or venne, and the Gael. bcn, in the oblique cases bdn (dhn), is the origin of the Scottish bonny, which has so much puzzled all the etym-ologists.

3 The original of this and the following stanza is very fine.

"Hun skild op sinz modigé been,
Der revenedé muur og graa mormorsteen,
Der hun gik igennem den by.
De hundè de tald saa höjt i sky."
She buskit the tane, and she brush'd it there;
She ken'd and plaited the tither's hair.

The thirden she dood'd upon her knee,
And the fourthen she dichted sae cannie.

She's ta'en the fiften upon her lap,
And sweetly sucked it at her pap.

Till her eldest dochter sune said she,
"Ye bid Child Dyring come here to me."

When he cam till the chalmer in,
Wi' angry mood she said to him:

"I left you routh o' ale and bread;
My bairnies quail for hunger and need.

"I left abhind me braw bowsters blue;
My bairnies are liggin' i' the bare strae.

"I left ye sae mony a grough wax-light;
My bairnies lig i' the mirk a' night.

"Gin aft I come back to visit thee, Wae, dowy, and weary thi luck shall be."

Up spak little Kirstin in bed that lay:
To thy bairnies I'll do the best I may."

Aye whan they heard the dog nirra and bell,
Sae gae'th the bairnies bread and ale.

Aye whan the dog did wow, in haste
They cross'd and sain'd themsells frae the ghast.

Aye whan the little dog yowld, with fear
(And O gin I were young!)
They shook at the thought the dead was near.
(I' the greenwood it lists me to ride.)
or,
(Fair words see mony a heart they cheer.)

Glossary.

1. May, maid.
Lists, please.
2. Stead, place.
In fare, together.
Winsome, engaging; giving joy (old Teut.)
4. Syn, then.
5. Fessen, fetched; brought.
6. Drez, drove.
7. Dale, sorrow.
Boult, fear.
8. Bower, bolster; cushion; bed.
Blue, blue.
Straw, straw.
9. Grough, great; large in girth.
Mark, mirk; dark.
10. Lang 't the night, late.
Grat, wept.
Mools, mould; earth.
Gar, go.
12. Preged, entreated earnestly and perseveringly.
Ging, go.
Stark, strong.
15. Bolt, bolt; elastic spring, like that of a bolt or arrow from a bow.
Riven, split asunder.
Weel, wall.
16. Wean'd, howled.
Lift, sky, firmament; air.
17. Yett, gate.
18. Smo', small.
19. Lire, complexion.
20. Cold, colt.
21. Till, to.
Kin, run.
22. Buskit, dressed.
Kem'd, combed.
Tither, the other.
23. Youth, plenty.
Quail, are quelled; die.
Need, want.
Braw, brave; fine.
25. Dowy, sorrowful.
26. NIRR, snarl.
Bell, bark.
27. Sained, blessed; literally, signed with the sign of the cross. Before the introduction of Christianity, fields were used in saining, as a spell against the power of enchantment and evil genii.
Ghast, ghost.

Note 2 Z.

the moody Elfin King.—P. 206.

In a long dissertation upon the "Fairy Superstitions," published in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, the most valuable part of which was supplied by my learned and indefatigable friend, Dr. John Leyden, most of the circumstances are collected which can throw light upon the popular belief which even yet prevails respecting them in Scotland. Dr. Grahame, author of an entertaining work upon the Scenery of the Perthshire Highlands, already frequently quoted, has recorded, with great accuracy, the peculiar tenets held by the Highlanders on this topic, in the vicinity of Loch Katrine.

The learned author is inclined to deduce the whole mythology from the Druidical system,—an opinion to which there are many objections.

"The Doine Shle, or Men of Peace of the Highlanders, though not absolutely malevolent, are believed to be a peevish, repining race of beings, who, possessing themselves but a scanty portion of happiness, are supposed to envy mankind their more complete and substantial enjoyments. They are supposed to enjoy in their subterraneous recesses a sort of shadowy happiness,—a tinsel grandeur; which, however, they would willingly exchange for the more solid joys of mortality.

"They are believed to inhabit certain round grassy eminences, where they celebrate their nocturnal festivities by the light of the moon. About a mile beyond the source of the Forth above Locheon, there is a place called Cuirch'fan, or the Cove of the Men of Peace, which is still supposed to be a favorite place of their residence. In the neighborhood are to be seen many round conical eminences; particularly one, near the head of the lake, by the skirts of which many are still afraid to pass after sunset. It is believed that if, on Hallow-eye, any person, alone, goes round one of these hills nine times, towards the left hand (sinistrorum), a door shall open, by which he will be admitted into their subterraneous abodes. Many, it is said, of mortal race have been entertained in their secret recesses. There they have been received into the most splendid apartments, and regaled with the most sumptuous banquets and delicious wines. Their females surpass the daughters of men in beauty. The seemingly happy inhabitants pass their time in festivity, and in dancing to notes of the softest music. But unhappy is the mortal who joins in their joys, or ventures to partake of their dainties. By this indulgence he forfeits for ever the society of men, and is bound down irrevocably to the condition of Sh'lich, or Man of Peace.
APPENDIX TO THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

“A woman, as is reported in the Highland tradition, was conveyed, in days of yore, into the secret recesses of the Men of Peace. There she was recognized by one who had formerly been an ordinary mortal, but who had, by some fatality, become associated with the Sh’lichs. This acquaintance, still retaining some portion of human benevolence, warned her of her danger, and counselled her, as she valued her liberty, to abstain from eating and drinking with them for a certain space of time. She complied with the counsel of her friend; and when the period assigned was elapsed, she found herself again upon earth, restored to the society of mortals. It is added that when she examined the viands which had been presented to her, and which had appeared so tempting to the eye, they were found, now that the enchantment was removed, to consist only of the refuse of the earth.”—P. 107-111.

NOTE 3 A.

Why sounds you stroke on beech and oak,
Our moonlight circle's screen?
Or who comes here to chase the deer,
Beloved of our Elfin Queen?—P. 206.

It has been already observed that fairies, if not positively malevolent, are capricious, and easily offended. They are, like other proprietors of forests, peculiarly jealous of their rights of vert and ominous, as appears from the cause of offence taken, in the original Danish ballad. This jealousy was also an attribute of the northern Duergar, or dwarfs; to many of whom distinctions the fairies seem to have succeeded, if, indeed, they are not the same class of beings. In the huge metrical record of German Chivalry, entitled the Heldens-Buch, Sir Hildebrand, and the other heroes of whom it treats, are engaged in one of their most desperate adventures, from a rash violation of the rose-garden of an Elfin or Dwarf King.

There are yet traces of a belief in this worst and most malicious order of fairies, among the Border wilds. Dr. Leyden has introduced such a dwarf into his ballad entitled the "Cout of Keeldar," and has not forgot his characteristic des- testation of the chase.

"The third blast that young Keeldar blew,
Still stood the limber fern,
And a wee man, of swarthly hue,
Upstart by a cairn.

"His russet weeds were brown as heath
That clothes the upland fell;
And the hair of his head was frizzly red
As the purple heather-bell.

"An archin, clad in prickles red,
Cling cow'ring to his arm;
The hounds they howl'd, and backward fled,
As struck by fairy charm.

"Why rises high the stag-hound's cry,
Where stag-hound never should be?
Why wakes that horn the silent morn,
Without the leave of me?—"
Note 3 B.

—who may dare on wold to wear
The fairies' faulch green?—P. 206.

As the Dodine Shi, or Men of Peace, wore green habits, they were supposed to take offence when any mortals ventured to assume their favorite color. Indeed, from some reason which has been, perhaps, originally a general superstition, green is held in Scotland to be unlucky to particular tribes and counties. The Caithness men, who held this belief, allege as a reason that their bands wore that color when they were cut off at the battle of Flodden; and for the same reason they avoid crossing the Ond on a Monday, being the day of the week on which their ill-omened array set forth. Green is also disliked by those of the name of Ogilvy; but more especially is it held fatal to the whole clan of Graham. It is remembered of an aged gentleman of that name that when his horse fell in a fox-chase, he accounted for it at once by observing that the whipcord attached to his lash was of this unlucky color.

Note 3 C.

For they went christen'd man.—P. 206.

The elves were supposed greatly to envy the privileges acquired by Christian initiation, and they gave to those mortals who had fallen into their power a certain precedence, founded upon this advantageous distinction. Tamlane, in the old ballad, describes his own rank in the fairy procession:

"For I ride on a milk-white steed,
And aye near the town;
Because I was a christen'd knight,
They gave me that renown."

I presume that, in the Danish ballad of the Elfia Græg (see Appendix, Note 3 A), the obstinacy of the "welest Elf," who would not flee for cross or sign, is to be derived from the circumstance of his having been "christen'd man."

How eager the elves were to obtain for their offspring the prerogatives of Christianity will be proved by the following story:—"In the district called Haga, in Iceland, dwelt a nobleman called Sigward Forster, who had an intrigue with one of the subterranean females. The elf became pregnant, and, exacted from her lover a firm promise that he would procure the baptism of the infant. At the appointed time, the mother came to the churchyard, on the wall of which she placed a golden cup, and a stole for the priest, agreeable to the custom of making an offering at baptism. She then stood a little apart. When the priest left the church, he inquired the meaning of what he saw, and demanded of Sigward if he avowed himself the father of the child. But Sigward, ashamed of the connection, denied the paternity. He was then interrogated if he desired that the child should be baptized; but

This also he answered in the negative, lest, by such request, he should admit himself to be the father. On which the child was left untouched and unbaptized. Whereupon the mother, in extreme wrath, snatched up the infant and the cup, and retired, leaving the priestly cope, of which fragments are still in preservation. But this female denounced and imposed upon Sigward and his posterity, to the ninth generation, a singular disease, with which many of his descendants are afflicted at this day." Thus wrote Einar Daudmond, pastor of the parish of Garpedale, in Iceland, a man profoundly versed in learning, from whose manuscript it was extracted by the learned Torfaeus.—Historia Herofl Kralki. Hofniæ, 1715, preface.

Note 3 D.

And gaily shines the Fairy-land—
But all is glistening show.—P. 206.

No fact respecting Fairy-land seems to be better ascertained than the fantastic and illusory nature of their apparent pleasure and splendor. It has been already noticed in the former quotations from Dr. Graham's entertaining volume, and may be confirmed by the following Highland tradition:—"A woman, whose new-born child had been conveyed by them into their secret abodes, was also carried thither herself, to remain, however, only until she should suckle her infant. She one day, during this period, observed the Shielachs busily employed in mixing various ingredients in a boiling caldron; and, as soon as the composition was prepared, she remarked that they all carefully anointed their eyes with it, laying the remainder aside for future use. In a moment when they were all absent, she also attempted to anoint her eyes with the precious drug, but had time to apply it to one eye only, when the Dodine Shi returned. But with that eye she was henceforth enabled to see everything as it really passed in their secret abodes. She saw every object, not as she hitherto had done, in deceptive splendor and elegance, but in its genuine colors and form. The gaudy ornaments of the apartment were reduced to the walls of a gloomy cavern. Soon after, however, this child was dismissed from her mother and sent home. Still, however, she retained the faculty of seeing, with her medicated eye, everything that was done, any where in her presence, by the deceptive art of the order. One day, amidst a throng of people, she chanced to observe the Shielach, or man of peace, in whose possession she had left her child; though to every other eye invisible. Prompted by maternal affection, she inadvertently accosted him, and began to inquire after the welfare of her child. The man of peace, astonished at being thus recognized by one of mortal race, demanded how she had been enabled to discover him. Awed by the terrible frown of his countenance, she acknowledged what she had done. He spat in her eyes, and extinguished it for ever."—GRAHAME'S Sketches, p. 110-118. It is very remarkable that this story, translated by Dr. Graham from popular Gaelic tradition, is to be found in Osia Imperialis of Gervase of Tilbury. A work of great interest might have served a number of persons all dressed in green, issuing from one of those round eminences which are commonly accounted fairy hills. Each of them in succession called upon a person by name to fetch his horse. A caparisoned steed instantly appeared; they all mounted, and sallied forth into the regions of air. The young man, like Ali Baba in the Arabian Nights, ventured to pronounce the same name, and called for his horse. The steed immediately appeared; he mounted, and was soon joined to the fairy choir. He remained with them for a year, going about with them to fairs and weddings, and feasting, though unseen by mortal eyes, on the victuals that

1 [This story is still current in the moors of Staffordshire, and adapted by the peasantry to their own meridian. I have repeatedly heard it told, exactly as here, by rustics who could not read. My last authority was a walker near Chedale.—R. JAMESON.]

"One other legend, in a similar strain, lately communicated by a very intelligent young lady, is given, principally because it furnishes an opportunity of pursuing an ingenious idea suggested by Mr. Scott, in one of his learned notes to the "Lady of the Lake":—

["A young man, roaming one day through the forest, ob-compiled upon the origin of popular fiction, and the transmission of similar tales from age to age and from country to country. The mythology of one period would then appear to pass into the romance of the next century, and that into the nursery tale of the subsequent ages. Such an investigation, while it went greatly to diminish our ideas of the richness of human invention, would also show that these fictions, however wild and childish, possess such charms for the populace as enable them to penetrate into countries unconnected by manners and language, and having no apparent intercourse to afford the means of transmission. It would carry me far beyond my bounds to produce instances of this community of fable among nations who never borrowed from each other any thing intrinsically well learning. Indeed, the wide diffusion of popular fictions may be compared to the facility with which straws and feathers are dispersed abroad by the wind, while valuable metals cannot be transported without trouble and labor. There lives, I believe, only one gentleman whose unlimited acquaintance with this subject might enable him to do it justice; I mean my friend, Mr. Francis Douce, of the British Museum, whose usual kindness will, I hope, pardon my mentioning his name while on a subject so closely connected with his extensive and curious researches.

---

Note 3 E.

—I sunk down in a sinful fray,
And, 'twixt life and death, was snatch'd away
To the joyless Elfin bower.—P. 206.

The subjects of Fairy-land were recruited from the regions of humanity by a sort of cramping system, which extended to adults as well as to infants. Many of those who were in this world supposed to have discharged the debt of nature had only become denizens of the "Londe de Faery." In the beautiful Fairy Romance of Orfece and Heurodils (Orpheus and Eurydice) in the Auchinleck MS, is the following striking enumeration of persons thus abstracted from middle earth. Mr. Ritson unfortunately published this romance from a copy in which the following and many other highly poetic passages do not occur:

"Then he gan bhholde about al,
And seigne ful liggeand with in the wal,
Of folk that were thibled y-brught,
And thought dede and nere nought;
Sum stode withouten hadde;
And sum norr nares nae;
And sum thurc the bell hadde wounde;
And sum lay wode y-lounde;
And sum armed on hors sete;
And sum astranged as thai ece;
And sum war in water adreynt;
And sum with fire al forschreynt;
Wives ther lay on childe bedde;
Sum dede, and sum awedde;
And wonder fele ther lay besides,
Right as thai slepe her undertides
Eche was thus in the wai y-nome,
With faeri thider y-come."

were exhibited on those occasions. They had one day gone to a weding where the cheer was abundant. During the feast, the bridegroom sneezed. The young man, according to the usual custom, said, 'God bless you!' The fairies were offended at the pronunciation of the sacred name, and assured him that if he dared to repeat it they would punish him. The bridegroom sneezed a second time. He repeated his bless-

Note 3 F.

Who ever reck'd where, how, or when,
The provest fox was trapped or slain?—P. 210.

St. John actually used this illustration when engaged in confuting the plea of law proposed for the unfortunate Earl of Stratford: "It was true, we gave laws to hares and deer, because they are beasts of chase; but it was never accounted either cruelty or foul play to knock foxes or wolves on the head as they can be found, because they are beasts of prey. In a word, the law and humanity are alike; the one being more fallacious, and the other more barbarous, than in any age had been vented in such an authority."—Clarendon's History of the Rebellion. Oxford, 1792, 6th vol. p. 188.

---

Note 3 G.

—his Highland cheer,
The harden'd flesh of mountain deer.—P. 211.

The Scottish Highlanders, in former times, had a concise mode of cooking their venison, or rather of dispensing with cooking it, which appears greatly to have surprised the French whom chance made acquainted with it. The Vidame of Chartres, when a hostage in England, during the reign of Edward VI, was permitted to travel into Scotland, and penetrated as far as to the remote Highlands (au fin fond des Sauvages). After a great hunting party, at which a most wonderful quantity of game was destroyed, he saw these Scottish Sauvages devour a part of their venison raw, without any further preparation than compressing it between two batons of wood, so as to force out the blood, and render it extremely hard. This they reckoned a great delicacy; and when the Vidame partook of it, his compliance with their taste rendered him extremely popular. This curious trait of manners was communicated by Mons. de Montmorency, a great friend of the Vidame, to Brantome, by whom it is recorded in Vies des Hommes Illustres, Discours lxxix. art. 14. The process by which the raw venison was rendered eatable is described very minutely in the romance of Pereforest, where Estonne, a Scottish knight-errant, having slain a deer, says to his companion Claudius: "Sire, or manglez vous et moy aussi. Voire si nous aulions de feu, dit Claudius. Par Pame de mon pere, dest Estonne, le vous atournery curiary a la maniere de nostre pays comme pour chevalier errant. Lors tira son espee, et sen vint a la branche dung arbre, et y fait vng grant trou, et puis fond la branche bien dieux pieux, et bout la cuisse du serf entrelaxe, et puis prent le boc de son cheval, et en lye la branche, et debrant si fort, qui le sang et les humeurs de la chair saillent hors, et demeure la chair douce et seiche. Lors prent la chair, et ose ius le cuir, et la chair demeure aussi blanche comme si ce feast dung chappon. Dont dist a Claudius, Sire, le de la vous aulisse a la guise de mon pays, vous en ponez manger hardemement, car le mangeray premier. Lors met sa main a sa selle en vng lieu qu'il aulit, et tire hors sol et poudre de polaire et gingembre, mese ensemble, et le iecte dessus, et le frote aus bien fort, puis le couppe a moytce, et en donne a Claudius l'une des pieces, et puis mort en l'autre aussi sauconnurellement qu'il est aulus que il en feist la poulver voler. Quant Claudius veilt qu'il le man-

—ing; they threatened more tremendous vengeance. He sneezed a third time; he blessed him as before. The fairies were enraged; they tumbled him from a precipice; but he found himself unhurt, and was restored to the society of mortals."—Dr. Graham's Sketches, second edit. p. 255-7. See Note, "Fairy Superstitions," Bob Roy, N. edit.]
geoit de tel goust, il en print grant falm, et commence a mangger tresvouilhenters, et dist a Estonne: Par l'ame de moy, je me mancy oncesmais de chaif atournue de telle guise;
mais dorensaunet je ne me retornroye par hors de mon chemin par auoir la cuite. Sire, dist Estonne, quant is suis en deses d'Ecosse, dont le seu selgneur, le cheuauchery huit jours ou quinze que je n'entreay en chastel ne en maison, et si ne verry feu ne personne vivate fors que bestes sauaghe, et de celles mangeray atournues en ceste maniere, et mieux me plaia que la viande de l'empereur. Ainsi sen vont man-genant et cheuauchant iusques adone quilz arrinrion sur une moutl belle fontaine que estoi en vne vale. Quant Estonne lav il dist a Claudius, allons boire a ceste fontaine. Or beuons, dist Estonne, du boire que le grant dieu a pourceu a toutes gens, et que me plaist miqule que les ecreoules d'Angletteer:"—La Triesteignante Histoire du tremblable Roy Percy-forest. Paris, 1531, fol. tome i, fol. iv. vers.
After all, it may be doubted whether la chaire nostre, for so the French called the venison thus summarily prepared, was any thing more than a mere rude kind of deer-ham.

NOTE 3 II.

Not then clot'md sovereignty his due;
While Albany, with feeble hand,
Held borrow'd trancheon of command.—P. 212.

There is scarcely a more disorderly period in Scottish history than that which succeeded the battle of Flodden, and occupied the minority of James V. Feuds of ancient standing broke out like old wounds, and every quarrel among the independent nobility, which occurred daily, and almost hourly, gave rise to fresh bloodshed. "There arose," says Fits-cottie, "great trouble and deadly feuds in many parts of Scotland, both in the north and west parts. The Master of Forbes, in the north, slew the Laird of Meldrum, under tryst" (i.e. at an agreed and secure meeting). "Likewise, the Laird of Drummetzier slew the Lord Fleming at the hawking; and likewise there was slaughter among many other great lords."
—P. 121.

Nor was the matter much medled under the government of the Earl of Angus: for though he caused the king to ride through all Scotland, "under the pretence and color of justice, to punish thief and traitor, none were found greater than were in their own company. And none at that time durst strive with a Douglas, nor yet a Douglas's man; for if they would, they got the worst. Therefore, none durst plainly of no extortion, theft, reft, nor slaughter, done to them by the Douglases, or their men; in that cause they were not heard, so long as the Douglas had the court in guard-ning."—Ibid. p. 133.

NOTE 3 I.

The Gael, of plain and river heir,
Shalt with strong hand redeem his share.—P. 213.

The ancient Highlanders verified in their practice the lines of Gray:

"An iron race the mountain cliffs maintain,
Foes to the gentler genius of the plain;
For where unweary'd sinews must be found,
With side-long plough to quell the flinty ground,
To turn the torrent's swift descending flood,
To tame the savage rushing from the wood,—
What wonder if, to patient valor train'd,
They guard with spirit what by strength they gain'd;

And while their rocky ramparts round they see
The rough abode of want and liberty
(As lawless force from confidence will grow),
Insult the plente of the vales below?"

Fragment on the Alliance of Education and Government.

So far, indeed, was a Cregh, or foray, from being held disgraceful, that a young chief was always expected to show his talents for command so soon as he assumed it, by leading his clan on a successful enterprise of this nature, either against a neighboring sept, for which constant feuds usually furnished an apology, or against the Staarmach, Saxons, or Lowlanders, for which no apology was necessary. The Gael, great traditional historians, never forgot that the Lowlands had, at some remote period, been the property of their Celtic forefathers, which furnished an ample vindication of all the ravages that they could make on the unfortunate districts which lay within their reach. Sir James Grant of Grant is in possession of a letter of apology from Cameron of Lochiel, whose men had committed some depredation upon a farm called Moines, occupied by one of the Grants. Lochiel assures Grant that, however the mistake had happened, his instructions were precise that the party should foray the province of Moray (a Low-land district), where, as he coolly observes, "all men take their prey."

NOTE 3 K.

I only meant
To show the road on which you bound,
Deeming this path you might pursue
Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.—P. 214.

This incident, like some other passages in the poem, illustrative of the character of the ancient Gael, is not imaginary, but borrowed from fact. The Highlanders, with the inco-sistency of most nations in the same state, were alternately capable of great exertions of generosity and of cruel revenge and perfidy. The following story I can only quote from tradition, but with such an assurance from those by whom it was communicated as pervails me little doubt of its authenticity.
Early in the last century, John Gunn, a noted Catcmar, or Highland robber, infested Inverness-shire, and levied blackmail up to the walls of the provincial capital. A garrison was then maintained in the castle of that town, and their pay (country banks being unknown) was usually transmitted in specie, under the guard of a small escort. It chanced that The officer who commanded this little party was unexpectedly obliged to halt, about thirty miles from Inverness, at a miserable inn. About nightfall, a stranger, in the Highland dress, and of very prepossessing appearance, entered the same house.
Separate accommodation being impossible, the Englishman offered the newly-arrived guest a part of his supper, which was accepted with reluctance. By the conversation he found his new acquaintance knew well all the passes of the country, which induced him eagerly to request his company on the ensuing morning. He neither disguised his business and charge, nor his apprehensions of that celebrated freebooter, John Gunn. The Highlander hesitated a moment, and then frank-lly consented to be his guide. Forth they set in the morning; and, in travelling through a solitary and dreary glen, the discourse again turned on John Gunn. "Would you like to see him?" said the guide; and, without waiting an answer to this alarming question, he whisked, and the English officer, with his small party, was surrounded by a body of Highlanders, whose numbers put resistance out of question, and who were all well armed. "Stranger," resumed the guide,
"I am that very John Gunn by whom you feared to be intercepted, and not without cause: for I came to the inn last night with the express purpose of learning your route, that I and my followers might ease you of your charge by the road.
But I am incapable of betraying the trust you reposed in me, and having convinced you that you were in my power, I can only dismiss you unqualified and uninjured." He then gave the officer directions for his journey, and disappeared with his party as suddenly as they had presented themselves.

Note 3 L.

On Bochastle the wond'ring lines,
Where Rome, the Empress of the world,
Of yore her eagle wings unfurled.—P. 214.

The torrent which discharges itself from Loch Vennachar, the lowest and eastmost of the three lakes which form the scenery adjoining to the Trosachs, sweeps through a flat and extensive moor, called Bochastle. Upon a small eminence, called the Den of Bochastle, and indeed on the plain itself,
are some intrenchments, which have been thought Roman.
There is, adjacent to Callender, a sweet villa, the residence of Captain Fairfax, entitled the Roman Camp.

[1] One of the most entire and beautiful remains of a Roman encampment now to be found in Scotland is to be seen at Ardoch, near Greenleaning, about six miles to the eastward of Dunblane. This encampment is supposed, on good grounds, that the Romans constructed during the fourth campaign of Agricola in Britain; it is 1000 feet in length, and 900 in breadth; and it could contain 20,000 men, according to the ordinary distribution of the Roman soldiers in their encampments. There appears to have been three or four ditches, strongly fortified, surrounding the camp. The four entries crossing the lines are still to be seen distinctly. The general's "quarter" rises above the level of the camp, but is not exactly in the centre.
It is a regular square of twenty yards, enclosed with a stone wall, and containing the foundations of a house, 30 feet by 20.
There is a subterraneous communication with a smaller encampment at a little distance, in which several Roman helmets, spears, &c., have been found. From this camp at Ardoch, the great Roman highway runs east to Perth, about fifty miles distant, while the Roman army is believed to have passed over the Tay into Strathmore."—Graham.

Note 3 M.

See, here all vanaglless I stand,
Armed, like thyself, with single brand.—P. 214.

The duellists of former times did not always stand upon those punctillo respecting equality of arms which are now judged essential to fair combat. It is true that in former combats in the lists the parties were, by the judges of the field, put as nearly as possible in the same circumstances; but in private duel it was often otherwise. In that desperate combat which was fought between Quelus, a minion of Henry
III. of France, and Antraguet, with two seconds on each side, from which only two persons escaped alive, Quelus complained that his antagonist had over him the advantage of a poland which he used in parrying, while his left hand, which he was forced to employ for the same purpose, was cruelly mangled.
When he charged Antraguet with this odds, "Thou hast done wrong," answered he, "to forget thy dagger at home. We are here to fight, and not to settle punctillos of arms." In a similar duel, however, a younger brother of the house of Aubanye, in Angoulesme, behaved more generously on the like occasion, and at once threw away his dagger when his enemy challenged it as an undue advantage. But at this time hardly any thing can be conceived more horribly brutal and savage than the mode in which private quarrels were conducted in France.
Those who were most jealous of the point of honor, and acquired the title of Ruffins, did not scruple to take every advantage of skill, numbers, surprise, and arms, to accomplish their revenge. The Sieur de Joignes, in whose Discourse on Duels I am obliged for these particulars, gives the following account of the death and principles of his friend, the Baron de Vitaux:

"J'ay oui conter a un Tieur d'armes, qui aprrit a Millaud a en tirer, lequel s'appelloit Seigneur le Jacques Perron, de la ville d'Ast, qui avoit esté a moy, il fut despis tue a Sainte-Basille en Gascogne, lors que Monsieur du Mayne l'assègèu lui servant d'Ingénieur; et de malheur, je l'avoir adressé audit Baron quelques trois mots auparavant, pour l'exercer to tirer, bien qu'il en eust prou; mais il n'eust fit compte; et de laissant, Millaud s'en servit, et le rendit fort adroit. Ce Seigneur Jacques d'ou me raconta, qu'il s'estoit monté sur un noyer, assez Loing, pour en voir le combat, et qu'il ne vist jamais homme y aller plus bravement, ny plus résolutely, y de grace plus assurée ny déterminée. Il commençia de marcher de cinquante pas vers son ennemy, relevant souvent ses moustaches en haut d'une main; et estant a vingt pas de son ennemy, (non plussto,) il mit la main a l'espée qu'il tennit e la main, non qu'il l'est tirée encore; mais en marchant, il fit vóllier le fourreau en l'air, en le seconant, ce qui est le beau de cela, et qui monstroit bien une grace de combat bien assusée et froide, et nullement téméraire, comme il y a en qui tirent leurs espées de cinq cents pas de l'ennemy, voire 4e mille, comme j'en ay vu aucuns. Ainsi mourut ce brave Baron, le paragone de France, qu'en nommoit tel, a bien ven-gere ses querelles, par grandes et dëterminées resolutions.
Il n'estoit pas seulement estimé en France, mais en Italie, Espaigne, Allemagne, en Boulogne et Angleterre; et desiroi son fort les Etrangers, venant en France, le voir; car je l'ay veu, tant sa renommee voillot. Il estoit fort petit de corps, mais fort grand de courage. Ses ennemis disoient qu'il ne tuoit pas bien ses gens, que par avantages et supercheries.
Cortes, je tiens de grands capitaines, et mesme d'Italiens, qui ont esté d'autres fois les premiers vengeurs du monde, en omni modo, disoient-ils, qui ont tenu cette maxime, qu'une supercherie ne se devoit payer que par semblable monnoye, ny l'ayloit point tât de déshonneur.—"Oeuvres de Brantome, Paris, 1757-8. Tome viii. p. 90-92. It may be necessary to inform the reader that this paragon of France was the most foul assassino of his time, and had committed many desperate murders, chiefly by the assistance of his hired banditti; from which it may be conceived how little the point of honor of the period deserved its name. I have chosen to give my heroes, who are indeed of an earlier period, a stronger tincture of the spirit of chivalry.

Note 3 N.

Ill chace it then with Roderick Dhu
That on the field his targe he threw, . . . .
For, train'd abroad his arms to wield,
Fitz-James's blade was sword and shield.—P. 215.

A round target of light wood, covered with strong leather, and studded with brass or iron, was a necessary part of a Highlander's equipment. In charging regular troops, they received the thrust of the bayonet in this buckler, twisted it aside, and used the broadsword against the encumbered soldier. In the civil wa of 1745, most of the front rank of the clans were thus armed; and Captain Grose informs us that, in 1747, the privates of the 242 regiment, then in Flanders, were, for the most part, permitted to carry targets.—Military Antiquities, vol. i. p. 164. A person thus armed had a considerable advantage in private fray. Among verses between Swift and Sheridan, lately published by Dr. Barret, there is an account of such an encounter, in which the circumstances, and consequently the relative superiority, of the combatants are precisely the reverse of those in the text:—

"A Highlander once fought a Frenchman at Margate, The weapons, a rapier, a backsword, and target; Brisk Monsieur advanced as fast as he could, But all his fine thrusts were caught in the wood, And Sawney, with backsword, did slash him and nick him, While 'tother, enraged, that he could not once prick him, Cried, 'Sirrah, you rascal, you son of a whore, Me will fight you, be gar! if you'll come from your door.'"

The use of defensive armor, and particularly of the buckler or target, was general in Queen Elizabeth's time, although that of the single rapier seems to have been occasionally practiced much earlier. 1 Rowland Yorke, however, who betrayed the fort of Zutphen to the Spaniards, for which good service he was afterwards poisoned by them, is said to have been the first who brought the rapier fight into general use. Fuller, speaking of the swash-bucklers, or bullies, of Queen Elizabeth's time, says:—"West Smithfield was formerly called Ruffians' Hall, where such men usually met, casually or otherwise, to try masteries with sword and buckler. More were frightened than hurt, more hurt than killed therewith, it being accounted unmanny to strike beneath the knee. But since that desperate traitor Rowland Yorke first introduced thrusting with rapiers, sword and buckler are disused." In The Two Angry Women of Abington, a comedy, printed in 1599, we have a pathetic complaint:—"Sword and buckler fight begins to grow out of use. I am sorry for it: I shall never see good manhood again. If it be once gone, this poking fight of rapier and dagger will come up; then a tall man, and a good sword-and-buckler man, will be spitted like a cat or rabbit." But the rapier had upon the continent long superseded, in private duel, the use of sword and shield. The masters of the noble science of defence were chiefly Italians. They made great mystery of their art and mode of instruction, never suffered any person to be present but the scholar who was to be taught, and even examined closets, beds, and other places of possible concealment. Their lessons often gave the most treacherous advantages; for the challenger, having the right to choose his weapons, frequently selected some strange, unusual, and inconvenient kind of arms, the use of which he practiced under these instructors, and thus killed at his ease his antagonist, to whom it was presented for the first time on the field of battle. See Brantome's Discourse on Duels, and the work on the same subject, "ai gentemen errit," by the venerable Dr. Paris de Futuo. The Highlanders continued to use broadsword and target until disarmed after the affair of 1745-6.

Note 3 O.

Thy threats, thy mercy, I defy!

Let recreant yield, who fears to die.—P. 215.

I have not ventured to render this duel so savagely desperate as that of the celebrated Sir Ewan of Lochiel, chief of the clan Cameron, called, from his sable complexion, Ewan Dhu. He was the last man in Scotland who maintained the royal cause during the great Civil War, and his constant incursions rendered him a very unpleasant neighbor to the republican garrison at Inverlochy, now Fort William. The governor of the fort detached a party of three hundred men to lay waste Lochiel's possessions, and cut down his trees; but, in a sudden and desperate attack made upon them by the chieftain with very inferior numbers, they were almost all cut to pieces. The skirmish is detailed in a curious memoir of Sir Ewan's life, printed in the Appendix of Pennant's Scottish Tour:

"In this engagement, Lochiel himself had several wonderful escapes. In the retreat of the English, one of the strongest and bravest of the officers retired behind a bush, when he observed Lochiel pursuing, and seeing him unaccompanied with any, he leapt out, and thought him his prey. They met one another with equal fury. The combat was long and doubtful: the English gentleman had by far the advantage in strength and size; but Lochiel, exceeding him in nimbleness and agility, in the end tripped the sword out of his hand: they closed and wrestled, till both fell to the ground in each other's arms. The English officer got above Lochiel, and pressed him hard, but stretching forth his neck, by attempting to disengage himself, Lochiel, who by this time had his hands at liberty, with his left hand seized him by the collar, and jumping at his extended throat, he bit it with his teeth quite through, and kept such a hold of his grasp that he brought away his mouthful: this, he said, was the sweetest bit he ever had in his lifetime."—Vol. I. p. 375.

Note 3 P.

Ye towers! within whose circuit dread

And thou, O sound and fatal sound!

That oft hast heard the death-azo sound.—P. 217.

An eminence on the northeast of the Castle, where state criminals were executed. Stirling was often polluted with noble blood. It is thus apostrophized by J. Johnston:

---

"Disconsilia triits*

Hoc uno infelix, et felix cetera; nasquam Lector aut euli froms geniusve soli.

The fate of William, eighth Earl of Douglas, whom James II. stabbed in Stirling Castle with his own hand, and while under his royal safe-conduct, is familiar to all who read Scottish history. Murdock, Duke of Albany, Duncan, Earl of Lennox, his father-in-law, and his two sons, Walter and Alexander Stuart, were executed at Stirling, in 1425. They were beheaded upon an eminence without the castle walls, but making part of the same hill, from whence they could behold their strong castle of Doune, and their extensive possessions. This "heading hill," as it was sometimes termed, bears commonly the less terrible name of Hurly-hacket, from its having been the scene of a courtly amusement alluded to by Sir David Lindsay, who says of the pastimes in which the young king was engaged, which consisted in sliding, in some sort of chair it may be supposed, from top to bottom of a smooth bank. The boys of Edinburgh, about twenty years ago, used to play at the hurly-hacket on the Calton Hill, using for their seat a horse's skull.

"Some harled him to the Hurly-hacket;"

Note 3 Q.

The burgheirs hold their sports to-day.—P. 217.

Every burgh of Scotland, of the least note, but more especially the considerable towns, had their solemn play or festi-

---

1 See Douce's Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 61.
val, when feats of archery were exhibited, and prizes distributed to those who excelled in wrestling, hurling the bar, and the other gymnastic exercises of the period. Stirling, a usual place of royal residence, was not likely to be deficient in pomp upon such occasions, especially since James V. was very partial to them. His ready participation in these popular amusements was one cause of his acquiring the title of King of the Commons, or Rex Plebeiorum, as Lesley has Latinized it. The usual prize to the best shot was a silver arrow. Such a one is preserved at Selkirk and at Peebles. At Dumfries, a silver gun was substituted, and the contention transferred to firearms. The ceremony, as there performed, is the subject of an excellent Scottish poem, by Mr. John Mayne, entitled the "Siller Gun," 1806, which surpasses the efforts of Ferguson, and comes near to those of Burns.

Of James's attachment to archery, Fittscottie, the faithful though rude recorder of the manners of that period, has given us evidence:

"In this year there came an ambassador out of England, named Lord William Howard, with a bishop with him, with many other gentlemen, to the number of threescore horse, which were all able men and waled [picked] men for all kinds of games and pastimes, shooting, louping, running, wrestling, and casting of the stone, but they were well sayed [essay'd or tried] ere they passed out of Scotland, and that by their own pronocration; but ever they tint: till at last, the Queen of Scots and the king's mother, favored the English-men, because she was the King of England's sister; and therefore she took an enterprise of archery upon the English-men's hands, contrary her son the king, and any six in Scotland that he would wale, either gentlemen or yeomen, that the English-men should shoot against them, either at pricks, revors, or buts, as the Scots pleased.

"The king, hearing his of this his mother, was content, and gart her pawn a hundred crowns, and a tun of wine, upon the English-men's hands; and he incontinent laid down as much for the Scottish-men. The field and ground was chosen in St. Andrews, and three landed men and three yeomen chosen to shoot against the English-men,—to wit, David Wemyss of that ilk, David Arnot of that ilk, and Mr. John Welderburn, vicar of Dundee; the yeomen, John Thomsen, in Leith, Steven Taburner, with a piper, called Alexander Balfie; they shot very near, and warred [worst'd] the English-men of the enterprise, and won the hundred crowns and the tun of wine, which made the king very merry that his men wan the victory."—P. 147.

Note 3 R.

Robin Hood.—P. 218.

The exhibition of this renowned outlaw and his band was a favorite folktale at such festivals as we are describing. This sporting, in which kings did not disdain to be actors, was prohibited in Scotland upon the Reformation, by a statute of the 6th Parliament of Queen Mary, c. 61, A.D. 1553, which ordered, under heavy penalties, that "no manner of person be chosen Robert Hude, nor Little John, Abbot of Unreason, Queen of May, nor otherwise." But in 1561, the "rascal multitude," says John Knox, "were stirred up to make a Robin Hude, whilk enormity was of many years left and banned by statute and act of Parliament; yet would they not be forbidden." Accordingly, they raised a very serious tumult, and at length made prisoners the magistrates who endeavored to suppress it, and would not release them till they extorted a formal promise that no one should be punished for his share of the disturbance. It would seem, from the complaints of the General Assembly of the Kirk, that these profane festivities were continued down to 1592. 1 Bold Robin was, to say the least, equally successful in maintaining his ground against the reformed clergy of England; for the simple and evangelical Latimer complains of coming to a country church, where the people refused to hear him because it was Robin Hood's day; and his mitre and rochet were fain to give way to the village pastime. Much curious information on this subject may be found in the Preliminary Dissertation to the late Mr. Ritson's edition of the songs respecting this memorable outlaw. The game of Robin Hood was usually acted in May; and he was associated with the merrie-dancers, on whom so much illustration has been bestowed by the commentators on Shakspeare. A very lively picture of these festivities, containing a great deal of curious information on the subject of the private life and amusements of our ancestors, was thrown, by the late ingenious Mr. Strutt, into his romance entitled Queen-hoo Hall, published after his death, in 1808.

Note 3 S.

Indifferent as to archer weight,
The Monarch gave the arrow bright.—P. 218.

The Douglas of the poem is an imaginary person, a supposed uncle of the Earl of Angus. But the king's behavior during an unexpected interview with the Laird of Kilspindie, one of the banished Douglasses, under circumstances similar to those in the text, is imitated from a real story told by Hume of Godscroft. I would have availed myself more fully of the simple and affecting circumstances of the old history had they not been already woven into a pathetic ballad by my friend Mr. Finlay.

"His (the king's) implacability (towards the family of Douglas) did also appear in his carriage towards Archibald of Kilspindie, whom he, when he was a child, loved singularly well for his ability of body, and was wont to call him his Gray-Steill. 2 Archibald, being banished into England, could not well comport with the humor of that nation, which he thought to be too proud, and that they had too high a conceit of themselves, joined with a contempt and despising of all others. Wherefore, being wearied of that life, and remembering the king's favor of old towards him, he determined to try the king's mercifulness and clemency. So he comes into Scotland, and taking occasion of the king's hunting in the park at Stirling, he casts himself to be in his way, as he was coming home to the castle. So soon as the king saw him afar off, ere he came near, he guessed it was he, and said to one of his courtiers, yonder is my Gray-Steill Archibald of Kilspindie, if he be alive. The other answered that it could not be he, and that he durst not come into the king's presence. The king approaching, he fell upon his knees and craved pardon, and promised from thenceforward to abstain from meddling in public affairs, and to lead a quiet and private life. The king went by without giving him any answer, and trotted a good round pace up the hill. Kilspindie followed, and though he wore on him a secret, or shirt of mail, for his particular enemies, was as soon at the castle gate as the king. There he sat him down upon a stone without, and entreated some of the king's servants for a cup of drink, being weary and thirsty; but they, fearing the king's displeasure, durst

---

1 A champion of popular romance. See Ellis' Romances, vol. iii.

---
give him none. When the king was set at his dinner, he asked what he had done, what he had said, and whither he had gone? It was told him that he had desired a cup of drink, and had gotten none. The king reproved them very sharply for their discourtesy, and told them, that if he had not taken an oath that no Douglas should ever serve him, he would have received him into his service, for he had seen him sometime a man of great ability. Then he sent him word to go to Leith, and expect his further pleasure. Then some kinsman of David Falconer, the cannonier, that was slain at Tantallon, began to quarrel with Archibald about the matter, wherewith the king showed himself not well pleased when he heard of it. Then he commanded him to go to France for a certain space, till he heard farther from him. And so he did, and died shortly after. This gave occasion to the King of England (Henry VIII.) to blame his nephew, alleging the old saying, That a king's face should give grace. For this Archibald (whatsoever were Angus's or Sir George's fault) had not been principal actor of anything, nor no counsellor nor stirrer up, but only a follower of his friends, and that noways cruelly disposed.—Hume of Godscroft, ii. 107.

NOTE 3 T.

Prize of the wrestling match, the King To Douglas gave a golden ring.—P. 218.

The usual prize of a wrestling was a ram and a ring, but the animal would have embarrassed my story. Thus, in the "Cokes Tale of Gamelyn," ascribed to Chaucer:

"There happe to be there beside Tried a wrestling;
And therefore there was y-setten
A ram and ais a ring."

Again the "Littil Geste of Robin Hood:"

—"By a bridge was a wrestling,
And there tayred was he,
And there was all the best yemen
Of all the west country.
A full fayre game ther was set up,
A white bull up y-pight,
A great consers with sable and brydle,
With gold burnished full bryght;
A payre of gloves, a red golde ringe,
A pipe of wyne, good fay;
What man bereth him best, I wis,
The prise shall bear away."

Rutson's Robin Hood, vol. i.

NOTE 3 U.

*These drew not for their fields the sword,
Like tenants of a feudal lord,
Nor own'tl the patriarchal claim
Of Chieftain in their leader's name;
Adventurers they ———— P. 221.*

The Scottish armies consisted chiefly of the nobility and barons, with their vassals, who held lands under them, for military service by themselves and their tenants. The patriarchal influence exercised by the heads of clans in the Highlands and Borders was of a different nature, and sometimes at variance with feudal principles. It flowed from the Patria Potestas, exercised by the chieftain as representing the original father of the whole name, and was often obeyed in contradiction to the feudal superior. James V. seems first to have introduced, in addition to the militia furnished from these sources, the service of a small number of mercenaries, who formed a body-guard, called the Foot-Band. The satirical poet, Sir David Lindsay (or the person who wrote the prologue to his play of the Three Estates), has introduced Finlay of the Foot-Band, who, after much Swaggering upon the stage, is at length put to flight by the Fool, who terrifies him by means of a shepherd's ye-wib up a pole. I have rather chosen to give them the harsh features of the mercenary soldiers of the period, than of this Scottish Thrasoe. These partook of the character of the Adventurous Companions of Froissart or the Condottieri of Italy.

One of the best and liveliest traits of such manner is the last will of a leader, called Geoffrey Tete Noir, who having been slightly wounded in a skirmish, his intemperance brought on a mortal disease. When he found himself dying, he summoned to his bedside the adventurers whom he commanded, and thus addressed them:

"Fayre sirs, quod Geffray, I know well ye have always served and honour'd me as men ought to serve their sovereign and captyaine, and I shall be the gladder if ye will agree to have to your captyaine one that is discended of my bode. Beholdre here Aleyn Rouge, my cosyn, and Peter his brother, who are men of armes and of my bode. I require you to make Aleyn your captyaine, and to swere to hym faytie, obeyssance, love, and loyalty, here in my presence, and also to his brother: bowe be it, I wyll that Aleyn have the sovereignty charge. Sir, quod they, we are well content, for ye haue ryght well chosen. There all the companies made them breke no poynt of that ye haue ordained and commanded.—Lord Bernells' Froissart.

NOTE 3 V.

*Thou now hast glee-maiden and harp;
Get thee an ape, and trudge the land,
The leader of a juggler band.—P. 222.*

The jongleurs or jugglers, as we learn from the elaborate work of the late Mr. Strutt on the sports and pastimes of the people of England, used to call in the aid of various assistants to render these performances as captivating as possible. The glee-maiden was a necessary attendant. Her duty was tumbling and dancing; and therefore the Anglo-Saxon version of Saint Mark's Gospel states Herodias to have vaulted or tumbled before King Herod. In Scotland, these poor creatures seem, even at a late period, to have been bondswomen to their masters, as appears from a case reported by Founstainhall:—"Reid the mountebank pursues Scott of Harden and his lady, for stealing away from him a little girl, called the tumbling-fascie, that danced upon his stage; and he claimed damages, and produced a contract, whereby he bought her from her mother for £30 Scots. But we have no slaves in Scotland, and mothers cannot sell their bairns; and physicians attested the employment of tumbling would kill her; and her joints were now grown stiff, and she declined to return; though she was at least a 'prentice, and so could not run away from her master: yet some cited Moses's law, that if a servant sheltered himself with thee, against his master's cruelty, then shalt surely not deliver him up. The Lords, remitente cancellario,
The facitious qualities of the aee soon rendered him an acceptable addition to the strolling band of the jongleur. Ben Jonson, in his spenetic introduction to the comedy of Bartholomew Fair, is at pains to inform the audience "that he has never a sword-and-buckler man in his Fair, nor a juggler, with a well-educated ape, to come over the chaine for the King of England, and back again for the Prince, and sit still on his hunches for the Pope and the King of Spain."

---

NOTE 3 W.

That stiring air that peats on high
O'er Derrida's race our victory.—
Strike it!—P. 224.

There are several instances, at least in tradition, of persons so much attached to particular tunes as to require to hear them on their deathbed. Such an anecdot is mentioned by the late Mr. Riddel of Glenriddel, in his collection of Border tunes, respecting an air called the Davalling of the Bairs, for which a certain Gallovidian laid is said to have evinced this strong mark of partiality. It is popularly told of a famous freebooter that he composed the tune known by the name of Macpherson's Rant, while under sentence of death, and played it at the gallows-tree. Some spirited words have been adapted to it by Burns. A similar story is recounted of a Welsh bard, who composed and played on his deathbed the air called Doffdydd Garreg Wy. But the most curious example is given by Brontome, of a maid of honor at the court of France, entitled Mademoiselle de Linoeull—"Durant sa maladie, dont elle trespassa, jamais elle ne cessa, ains causas toujours; car elle estoit fort grande parleuse, brocaduelle, et tres-bien et fort a propos, et tres-belle avec cela. Quand l'heure de sa fin fut venue, elle fit venir a son yec valut (ains le filles de la cour en ont chacune un), qui s'appelloit Julien, et seavoit tres-bien jouer du violon. 'Julien,' luy dit elle, 'prenez votre violon, et sonnez moy toujours jusques a ce que vous me voyez morte (car je m'y en vais) la defaite des Suisses, et le mieux que vous pourrez, et quand vous serez sur le mot, 'Tout est perdu,' sonnez le par quatre ou cinq fois le plus pitieusement que vous pourrez; ce qui fit l'autre, et elle-meme luy aidoit de la voix, et quand ce vint 'tout est perdu,' elle le revertra par deux fois; et se tournant de l'autre cote du chevet, elle dit a ses compagnes: 'Tout est perdu a ce coup, et a bon escient;' et ainsi d'ac youngest. Voila une morte joyeuse et plaisante. Je tient ce conte de deux de ses compagnes, dites de foi, qui virent jouer ce mystere.'—Oeuvres de Brontome, iii. 507. The tune to which this fair lady chose to make her final exit was composed on the defeat of the Swiss at Marignano. The burden is quoted by Panurge, in Rabelais, and consists of these words, imitating the jargon of the Swiss, which is a mixture of French and German:

"Tout est verlore,
La Tintelore,
Tout est verlore, la Got!"

---

1 Though less to my purpose, I cannot help noticing a circumstance respecting another of this Mr. Reid's attendants, which occurred during James II.'s zeal for Catholick proselytism, and is told by Fountainhall, with dry Scotch irony:—

"January 17th, 1687.—Reid the mountebank is received into the Popish church, and one of his blackamoors was persuaded to accept of baptism from the Popish priests, and to turn Christian papist; which was a great trophy: he was called James, after the king and chancellor, and the apostle James."—Ibid. p. 416.

2 That at the eastern extremity of Loch Katrine, so often mentioned in the text.

---

NOTE 3 X.

Battle of Beat on Dune.—P. 224.

A skirmish actually took place at a pass thus called in the Trosachs, and closed with the remarkable incident mentioned in the text. It was greatly posterior in date to the reign of James V.

"In this roughly-wooded island, the country people secured their wives and children, and their most valuable effects, from the rapacity of Cromwell's soldiers, during their inroad into this country, in the time of the republie. These invaders, not venturing to ascend by the ladders, along the side of the lake, took a more circuitous road, through the heart of the Trosachs, the most frequented path at that time, which penetrates the wilderness about half way between Binean and the lake, by a tract called Yea-chilleach, or the Old Wife's Bog.

"In one of the defiles of this by-road, the men of the country at that time hung upon the rear of the invading enemy, and shot one of Cromwell's men, whose grave marks the scene of action, and gives name to that pass. In revenge of this insult, the soldiers resolved to plunder the island, to violate the women, and put the children to death. With this brutal intention, one of the party, more expert than the rest, swam towards the island, to fetch the boat to his comrades, which had carried the women to their asylum, and lay moored in one of the creeks. His companions stood on the shore of the mainland, in full view of all that was to pass, waiting anxiously for his return with the boat. But just as the swimmer had got to the nearest point of the island, and was laying hold of a black rock, to get on shore, a heroine, who stood on the very point where he meant to land, hastily snatching a dagger from below her apron, with one stroke severed his head from the body. His party seeing this disaster, and relinquishing all hope of revenge or conquest, made the best of their way out of their perilous situation. This Amazon's great-grandson lives at Bridge of Turk, who, besides others, attests the anecdot."—Sketch of the Scenery near Callander. Stirling, 1806, p. 20. I have only to add to this account that the heroine's name was Helen Stuart.

---

NOTE 3 Y.

And Snowdoun's Knight is Scotland's King!—P. 223.

This discovery will probably remind the reader of the beautiful Arabian tale of H Bemboocani. Yet the incident is not borrowed from that elegant story, but from Scottish tradition. James V., of whom we are treating, was a monarch whose good and benevolent intentions often rendered his romantic freaks venial, if not respectable, since, from his anxious attention to the interests of the lower and most oppressed class of his subjects, he was, as we have seen, popularly termed the King of the Commons. For the purpose of seeing that justice was regularly administered, and frequently from the less justifiable motive of gallantry, he used to traverse the wilds of of his several palaces in various disguises. The two excellent comic songs, entitled "The Gabelunzie Man" and "We'll gae nae mair a roving," are said to have been founded upon the success of his numerous adventures when travelling in the disguise of a beggar. The latter is perhaps the best comic ballad in any language.

Another adventure, which had nearly cost James his life, is said to have taken place at the village of Cranond, near Edinburgh, where he had rendered his addresses acceptable to a pretty girl of the lower rank. Four or five persons, whether relations or lovers of his mistress is uncertain, beset the disguised monarch as he returned from his rendezvous. Naturally gallant, and an admirable master of his weapon, the king took post on the high and narrow bridge over the Almond river, and defended himself bravely with his sword. A peasant, who was threshing in a neighboring barn, came out upon the noise, and whether moved by compassion or by natural gallantry, took the weaker side, and laid about with his flail so effectually as to disperse the assailants, well threshed, even according to the letter. He then conducted the king into his barn, where his guest requested a basin and a towel, to remove the stains of the broil. This being procured with difficulty, James employed himself in learning what was the sumit of his deliverer's earthly wishes, and found that they were bounded by the desire of possessing, in property, the farm of Braehead, upon which he labored as a bondsman. The lands chanced to belong to the crown; and James directed him to come to the palace of Holyrood, and inquire for the Guideman (i.e. farmer) of Ballengiech, a name by which he was known in his excursions, and which answered to the Il Bondoceni of Haroun Acraschid. He presented himself accordingly, and found, with due astonishment, that he had saved the monarch's life, and that he was to be gratified with a crown charter of the lands of Braehead, under the service of presenting a ewer, basin, and towel, for the king to wash his hands when he shall happen to pass the Bridge of Cranond. This person was ancestor of the Howisons of Braehead, in Mid-Lothian, a respectable family, who continue to hold the lands (now passed into the female line) under the same tenure.

Another of James's jollities is thus narrated by Mr. Campbell from the Statistical Account:—"Being once benighted when out a-hunting, and separated from his attendants, he happened to enter a cottage in the midst of a moor at the foot of the Ochil hills, near Alloa, where, unknown, he was kindly received. In order to regale their unexpected guest, the guideman (i.e. landlord, farmer) desired the gudewife to fetch the hen that roosted nearest the cock, which is always the plumpest, for the stranger's supper. The king, highly pleased with his night's lodging and hospitable entertainment, told mine host at parting that he should be glad to return his civility, and requested that the first time he came to Stirling, he would call at the castle, and inquire for the Guideman of Ballengiech, when his astonishment at finding that the king had been his guest afforded no small amusement to the merry monarch and his courtiers; and, to carry on the pleasantry, he was thenceforth designated by James with the title of King of the Moors, which name and designation have descended from father to son ever since, and they have continued in possession of the identical spot, the property of Mr. Erskine of Mar, till very lately, when this gentleman, with reluctance turned out the descendant and representative of the King of the Moors, on account of his majesty's invincible indulgence, and great dislike to reform or innovation of any kind, although, from the spirited example of his neighbor tenants on the same estate, he is convinced similar exertion would promote his advantage."

The author requests permission yet further to verify the subject of his poem by an extract from the genealogical work of Buchanan of Auchmar, upon Scottish surnames:—

"This John Buchanan of Auchmar and Arnpryor was afterwards termed King of Kippen; 2 according upon the following account: King James V., a very sociable, debonair prince, residing at Stirling, in Buchanan of Arnpryor's time, carriers were very frequently passing along the common road, being near Arnpryor's house, with necessaries for the use of the king's family; and he, having some extraordinary occasion, ordered one of these carriers to leave his load at his house, and he would pay him for it; which the carrier refused to do, telling him he was the king's carrier, and his load for his majesty's use; to which Arnpryor seemed to have small regard, compelling the carrier, in the end, to leave his load; telling him, if King James was King of Scotland, he was King of Kippen, so that it was reasonable he should share with his neighbor king in some of these loads, so frequently carried that road. The carrier representing this usage, and telling the story, as Arnpryor spoke it, to some of the king's servants, it came at length to his majesty's ears, who, shortly thereafter, with a few attendants, came to visit his neighbor king, who was in the meantime at dinner. King James, having sent a servant to demand access, was denied the same by a tall fellow with a battle-axe, who stood porter at the gate, telling, there could be no access till dinner was over. This answer not satisfying the king, he sent to demand access a second time; upon which he was desired by the porter to desist, otherwise he would find cause to repent his rudeness. His majesty finding this method would not do, desired the porter to tell his master that the Goodman of Ballagleside desired to speak with the King of Kippen. The porter telling Arnpryor so much, he, in all humble manner, came and received the king, and having entertained him with much sumptuousness and jollity, became so agreeable to King James that he allowed him to take so much of any provision he found carrying that road as he had occasion for; and seeing he made the first visit, desired Arnpryor in a few days to return him a second to Stirling, which he performed, and continued in very much favor with the king, always thereafter being termed King of Kippen while he lived."—Buchanan's Essay upon the Family of Buchanan. Edin. 1773, 5vo, p. 74.

The readers of Ariosto must give credit for the amiable features with which he is represented, since he is generally considered as the prototype of Zerbino, the most interesting hero of the Orlando Furioso.

---

Note 3 Z.

Stirling's tower
Of yore the name of Snowdon claimed.—P. 229.

William of Worcester, who wrote about the middle of the fifteenth century, calls Stirling Castle Snowdon. Sir David Lindsay bestows the same epithet upon it in his complaint of the Papigo:

father, vol. iii. p. 37. The heir of Braehad discharged his duty at the banquet given to King George IV. in the Parliament House at Edinburgh, in 1822.—Ed.

1 A small district of Perthshire.
“Adieu, fair Snawdoun, with thy towers high,
Thy chaple-royal, park, and table round;
May, June, and July, would I dwell in thee,
Were I a man, to hear the birds sound,
Whilk doth againe thy royal rock rebound.”

Mr. Chalmers, in his late excellent edition of Sir David Lindsay’s works, has refuted the chimerical derivation of Snawdoun from smedding, or cutting. It was probably derived from the romantic legend which connected Stirling with King Arthur, to which the mention of the Round Table gives countenance. The ring within which justs were formerly practiced, in the castle park, is still called the Round Table. Snawdoun is the official title of one of the Scottish heralds, whose epithets seem in all countries to have been fantastically adopted from ancient history or romance.

It appears (see Note 3 Y) that the real name by which James was actually distinguished in his private excursions was the Goodman of Ballengwich—derived from a steep pass leading up to the Castle of Stirling, so called. But the epithet would not have suited poetry, and would besides at once, and prematurely, have announced the plot to many of my countrymen, among whom the traditional stories above mentioned are still current.
The Vision of Don Roderick.

Quid dignum memorare tuis, Hispania, terris,
Vox humana vale! ——— CLAUDIAN.

PREFACE.

The following poem is founded upon a Spanish tradition, particularly detailed in the Notes; but bearing, in general, that Don Roderick, the last Gothic King of Spain, when the invasion of the Moors was impending, had the temerity to descend into an ancient vault, near Toledo, the opening of which had been denounced as fatal to the Spanish monarchy. The legend adds that his rash curiosity was mortified by an emblematical representation of those Saracens who, in the year 714, defeated him in battle, and reduced Spain under their dominion. I have presumed to prolong the Vision of the Revolutions of Spain down to the present eventful crisis of the Peninsula; and to divide it, by a supposed change of scene, into THREE PERIODS. The FIRST of these represents the Invasion of the Moors, the Defeat and Death of Roderick, and closes with the peaceful occupation of the country by the Victor. The SECOND PERIOD embraces the state of the Peninsula, when the conquests of the Spaniards and Portuguese in the East and West Indies had raised to the highest pitch the renown of their arms; sullied, however, by superstition and cruelty. An allusion to the inhumanities of the Inquisition terminates this picture. The LAST PART of the poem opens with the state of Spain previous to the unparalleled treachery of BONAPARTE; gives a sketch of the usurpation attempted upon that unsuspicuous and friendly kingdom, and terminates with the arrival of the British succours. It may be further proper to mention that the object of the poem is less to commemorate or detail particular incidents than to exhibit a general and impressive picture of the several periods brought upon the stage.

I am too sensible of the respect due to the public, especially by one who has already experienced more than ordinary indulgence, to offer any apology for the inferiority of the poetry to the subject it is chiefly designed to commemorate. Yet I think it proper to mention that while I was hastily executing a work written for a temporary purpose, and on passing events, the task was most cruelly interrupted by the successive deaths of LORD PRESIDENT BLAIR and LORD VISCOUNT MELVILLE. In those distinguished characters, I had not only to regret persons whose lives were most important to Scotland, but also whose notice and patronage honored my entrance upon active life; and, I may add with melancholy pride, who permitted my more advanced age to claim no common share in their friendship. Under such interruptions, the following verses, which my best and happiest efforts must have left far unworthy of their theme, have, I am myself sensible, an appearance of negligence and incoherence which, in other circumstances, I might have been able to remove.

EDINBURGH, June 24, 1811.

1 The "Vision of Don Roderick" appeared in quarto on July 15, 1811, and in the course of the same year was also inserted in the second volume of the Edinburgh Annual Register, which work was the property of Sir Walter Scott's then publishers, Messrs. John Ballantine & Co.

2 The Right Hon. Robert Blair of Avontoun, President of the Court of Sessions, was the son of the Rev. Robert Blair, author of "The Grave." After long filling the office of Solicitor-General in Scotland with high distinction, he was elevated to the Presidency in 1808. He died very suddenly on the 29th May, 1811, in the 70th year of his age; and his intimate friend, Henry Dundas, first Viscount Melville, having gone into Edinburgh on purpose to attend his remains to the grave, was taken ill not less suddenly, and died there the very hour that the funeral took place, on the 28th of the same month.

3 In a letter to J. B. S. Morriss, Esq., Edinburgh, July 1, 1811, Scott says—"I have this moment got your kind letter, just as I was packing up 'Don Roderick' for you. This patriotic puppet-show has been finished under wretched auspices: poor Lord Melville's death so quickly succeeding that of President Blair, one of the best and wisest judges that ever distributed justice, broke my spirit sadly. My official situation placed me in daily contact with the President, and his ability and candor were the source of my daily admiration. As for poor dear Lord Melville, 'tis vain to name him whom we mourn in vain.' Almost the last time I saw him, he was talking of you in the highest terms of regard, and expressing great hopes of again seeing you at Dunira this summer, where I proposed to attend you. Hei mihi! quid hei mihi? humana perpeius sumus. His loss will be long and severely felt here, and Envy is already paying her cold tribute of applause to the worth which she maligned while it walked upon earth."
The Vision of Don Roderick.

TO

JOHN WHITMORE, ESQ.,

AND TO THE

COMMITTEE OF SUBSCRIBERS FOR RELIEF OF THE PORTUGUESE SUFFERERS, IN WHICH HE PRESIDES,

THIS POEM

(THE VISION OF DON RODERICK),

COMPOSED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FUND UNDER THEIR MANAGEMENT,

IS RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED BY

WALTER SCOTT.

INTRODUCTION.

I.

LIVES there a strain whose sounds of mounting fire
May rise distinguish'd o'er the din of war;
Or died it with yon Master of the Lyre
Who sung beleaguer'd Ilion's evil star? 1
Such, WELLINGTON, might reach thee from afar,
Wafting its descant wide o'er Ocean's range;
Nor shouts, nor clashing arms, its mood could mar,
All as it swell'd 'twixt each loud trumpet-change; 3
That clangs to Britain victory, to Portugal revenge! 4

---

1 "The letters of Scott to all his friends have sufficiently shown the unflagging interest with which, among all his personal labors and anxieties, he watched the progress of the great contest in the Peninsula. It was so earnest that he never on any journey, not even in his very frequent passages between Edinburgh and Ashiestiel, omitted to take with him the largest and best map he had been able to procure of the seat of war; upon this he was perpetually poring, tracing the marches and countermarches of the French and English by means of black and white pins; and not seldom did Mrs. Scott complain of this constant occupation of his attention and her carriage. In the beginning of 1811 a committee was formed in London to collect subscriptions for the relief of the Portuguese, who had seen their lands wasted, their vines torn up, and their houses burned in the course of Massena's last unfortunate campaign; and Scott, on reading the advertisement, immediately addressed Mr. Whitmore, the chairman, begging that the committee would allow him to contribute to their fund the profits, to whatever they might amount, of a poem which he proposed to write upon a subject connected with the localities of the patriotic struggle. His offer was of course accepted; and the 'Vision of Don Roderick' was begun as soon as the spring vacation enabled him to retire to Ashiestiel.

---

2 MS.: "Who sung the changes of the Phrygian jar."

---

3 MS.: "Claiming thine ear 'twixt each loud trumpet-change."

---

4 "The too monotonous close of the stanza is sometimes diversified by the adoption of fourteen-foot verse,—a license in poetry which, since Dryden, has (we believe) been altogether abandoned, but which is nevertheless very deserving of revival, so long as it is only rarely and judiciously used. The very first stanza in this poem affords an instance of it; and, introduced thus in the very front of the battle, we cannot help considering it as a fault, especially clogged as it is with the association of a defective rhyme—change, revenge."—Critical Review, Aug. 1811.
III.
But we, weak minstrels of a laggard day,
Skill'd but to imitate an elder age,
Timid and raptureless, can we repay?
The debt thou claim'st in this exhausted age?
Thou givest our lyres a theme that might engage
Those that could send thy name o'er sea and land,
While sea and land shall last; for Homer's rage
A theme; a theme for Milton's mighty hand—
How much unmeet for us, a faint degenerate band?¹

IV.
Ye mountains stern! within whose rugged breast
The friends of Scottish freedom found repose;
Ye torrents! whose hoarse sounds have soothed their rest,
Returning from the field of vanquish'd foes;
Say, have ye lost each wild majestic close
That erst the choir of Bards or Druids flung,
What time their hymn of victory arose,
And Cattraeth's glens with voice of triumph rung,
And mystic Merlin harp'd, and grayhair'd Llywarch sung!²

V.
Oh, if your wilds such minstrelsy retain,
As sure your changeful gales seem oft to say,
When sweeping wild and sinking soft again,
Like trumpet-jubilee, or harp's wild sway;
If ye can echo such triumphant lay,
Then lend the note to him has loved you long!
Who pious gather'd each tradition gray
That floats your solitary wastes along,
And with affection vain gave them new voice in song.

VI.
For not till now, how oft soe'er the task
Of truant verse hath lighten'd graver care,
From Muse or Sylvan was he wont to ask,
In phrase poetic, inspiration fair;
Careless he gave his numbers to the air,
They came unsought for, if applause came;
Nor for himself prefers he now the prayer;
Let but his verse beft a hero's fame,
Immortal be the verse! forgot the poet's name.

VII.
Hark, from you misty cairn their answer tost:³
"Minstrel! the fame of whose romantic lyre,
Capricious swelling now, may soon be lost,
Like the light flickering of a cottage fire;
If to such task presumptuous thou aspire,
Seek not from us the need to warrior due:
Age after age has gather'd son to sire;

Since our gray cliffs the din of conflict knew,
Or, pealing through our vales, victorious bugles blew.

VIII.
"Decay'd our old traditional lore,
Save where the lingering lays renew their ring,
By milkmaid seen beneath the hawthorn hoar,
Or round the marge of Minchmore's haunted spring;⁴
Save where their legends grayhair'd shepherds sing,
That now scarce win a listening ear but thine,
Of feuds obscure, and Border ravaging,
And rugged deeds recount in rugged line,
Of moonlight foray made on Tejot, Tweed, or Tyne.

IX.
"No! search romantic lands, where the near Sun
Gives with unstinted boon ethereal flame,
Where the rude villager, his labor done,
In verse spontaneous⁶ chants some favor'd name,
Whether Olalia's charms his tribute claim,
Her eye of diamond, and her locks of jet;
Or whether, kindling at the deeds of Greme,⁶
He sing, to wild Morisco measure set,
Old Albin's red claymore, green Erin's bayonet!

X.
"Explore those regions where the flinty crest
Of wild Nevada ever gleams with snows,
Where in the proud Alhambra's ruin'd breast
Barbaric monuments of pomp repose;
Or where the banners of more ruthless foes
Than the fierce Moor float o'er Toledo's fame,
From whose tall towers even now the patriot throws
An anxious glance, to spy upon the plain
The blended ranks of England, Portugal, and Spain.

XI.
"There, of Numantian fire a swarthy spark
Still lightens in the sunburnt native's eye;
The stately port, slow step, and visage dark,
Still mark enduring pride and constancy.
And, if the glow of feudal chivalry
Beam not, as once, thy nobles' dearest pride,
Iberia! oft thy crestless pannantry
Have seen the plumed Hidalgo quit their side,
Have seen, yet dauntless stood—'gainst fortune fought
And died.

XII.
"And cherish'd still by that unchanging race⁸
Are themes for minstrelsy more high than thine;
Of strange tradition many a mystic trace,
Legend and vision, prophecy and sign;

¹ MS.: "Uniform'd for rapture, how shall we repay."
² MS.: "Thou givest our verse a theme that might engage Lyres that could richly yield thee back its due;
A theme might kindle Homer's mighty rage;
A theme more grand than Maro ever knew—
How much unmeet for us, degenerate, frail, and few!"
³ See Appendix, Note A.
⁴ MS.: "Hark, from gray Needpath's mists, the Brothers' cairn.
"Hark, from the Brothers' cairn the answer tost.)"
⁵ See Appendix, Note B. ⁶ Ibid. Note C. ⁷ Ibid. Note D.
⁸ MS.: "And lingering still 'mid that unchanging race."
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

Who, for the cap of steel and iron mace,
Bear slender darts, and casques bedeck'd with gold,
While silver-studded belts their shoulders grace,
Where ivory quivers ring in the broad falchion's place.

IV.

In the light language of an idle court,
They murmur'd at their master's long delay,
And held his lengthen'd orisons in sport:

"What! will Don Roderick here till morning stay,
To wear in shrift and prayer the night away?
And are his hours in such dull penance past,
For fair Florida's plunder'd charms to pay?"—

Then to the east their weary eyes they cast,
And wish'd the lingering dawn would glimmer forth at last.

V.

But, far within, Toledo's Prelate lent
An ear of fearful wonder to the King;
The silver lamp a fitful lustre sent,
So long that sad confession witnessing:
For Roderick told of many a hidden thing,
Such as are lothly utter'd to the air,
When Fear, Remorse, and Shame, the bosom wring,
And Guilt his secret burden cannot bear,
And Conscience seeks in speech a respite from Despair.

VI.

Full on the Prelate's face, and silver hair,
The stream of failing light was feebly roll'd.
But Roderick's visage, though his head was bare,
Was shadow'd by his hand and mantle's fold,
While of his hidden soul the sins he told,
Proud Alarie's descendant could not brook
That mortal man his bearing should behold,
Or boast that he had seen, when Conscience shook,
Fear tame a monarch's brow, Remorse a warrior's look.

of Mr. Scott's unrivalled excellence in the descriptions both of natural scenery and romantic manners and costume; these stanzas will be thought no mean addition."

—the Quarterly Reviewer, having quoted stanzas i. ii. and iii., says—"To the specimens with which his former works abound,"
THE VISION OF DON RODERICK.

VII.
The old man's faded cheek wax'd yet more pale,
As many a secret sad the King bewray'd;
As sign and glance eked out the unfinished tale,
When in the midst his faltering whisper said.—
"Thus royal Witiza¹ was slain," he said;
"Yet, holy Father, deem not it was I."
Thus still Ambition strives her crimes to shade.—
"Oh! rather deem 'twas stern necessity!
Self-preservation bade, and I must kill or die.

VIII.
"And if Florinda's shrieks alarm'd the air,
If she invoked her absent sire in vain,
And on her knees implored that I would spare,
Yet, reverend priest, thy sentence rash refrain!—
All is not as it seems—the female train
Know by their bearing to disguise their mood."—
But Conscience here, as if in high disdain,
Sent to the Monarch's cheek the burning blood;
He stay'd his speech abrupt—and up the Prelate stood.

IX.
"Oh hardest offsprong of an iron race!
What of thy crimes, Don Roderick, shall I say?
What alms, or prayers, or penance, can efface
Murder's dark spot, wash treason's stain away?
For the foul ravisher how shall I pray,
Who, scarce repentant, makes his crime his boast?
How hope Almighty vengeance shall delay,
Unless, in mercy to thy Christian host,
He spare the shepherd, lest the guiltless sheep be lost?"

X.
Then kindled the dark Tyrant in his mood,
And to his brow return'd its dauntless gloom;
"And welcome then," he cried, "be blood for blood,
For treason treachery, for dishonor doom!
Yet will I know whence come they, or by whom.
Show, for thou canst—give forth the fated key,
And guide me, Priest, to that mysterious room,
Where, if aught true in old tradition be,
His nation's future fates a Spanish King shall see."—¹⁴

XI.
"Ill-fated Prince! recall the desperate word,
Or pause ere yet the omen thou obey!
Bethink, you spell-bound portal would afford²
Never to former Monarch entrance-way;
Nor shall it ever ope, old records say,
Save to a King, the last of all his line,
What time his empire totters to decay,
And treason digs, beneath, her fatal mine,
And, high above, impedes avenging wrath divine."—

XII.
"Prelate! a Monarch's fate brooks no delay;
Lead on!"—The ponderous key the old man took,
And held the winking lamp, and led the way,
By winding stair, dark aisle, and secret nook,
Then on an ancient gateway bent his look;
And, as the key the desperate King essay'd,
Low mutter'd thunders the Cathedral shook,
And twice he stopp'd, and twice new effort made,
Till the huge bolts roll'd back, and the loud hinges Bray'd.

XIII.
Long, large, and lofty, was that vaulted hall;
Roof, walls, and floor, were all of marble stone,
Of polish'd marble, black as funeral pall,
Carved o'er with signs and characters unknown.
A paly light, as of the dawning, shone
Through the sad bounds, but whence they could not spy,
For window to the upper air was none;
Yet, by that light, Don Roderick could desery
Wonders that ne'er till then were seen by mortal eye.

XIV.
Grim sentinels, against the upper wall,
Of molten bronze, two Statues held their place;
Massive their naked limbs, their stature tall,
Their frowning foreheads golden circles grace.
Moulded they seem'd for kings of giant race,
That lived and sinn'd before the avenging flood;
This grasp'd a scythe, that rested on a mace; [stood;
This spread his wings for flight, that pondering
Each stubborn seem'd and stern, immutable of mood.

Raised to the Monk, like one who from his voice Expected life or death."—
Mr. Southey, in a note to these lines, says, "The 'Vision of Don Roderick' supplies a singular contrast to the picture which is represented in this passage. I have great pleasure in quoting the stanzas (v. and vi); if the contrast had been intentional, it could not have been more complete."
¹ The predecessor of Roderick upon the Spanish throne, and slain by his connivance, as is affirmed by Rodriguez of Toledo, the father of Spanish history.
² MS.: "He spare to smite the shepherd, lest the sheep be lost!"
³ MS.: "And guide me, Prelate, to that secret room."
⁴ See Appendix, Note P.
⁵ MS.: "Or pause the omen of thy fate to weigh!
Bethink, that brazen portal would afford."
XV.

Fix'd was the right-hand Giant's brazen look
Upon his brother's glass of shifting sand,
As if its cbb he measured by a book,
Whose iron volume loaded his huge hand;
In which was wrote of many a fallen land,
Of empires lost, and kings to exile driven:
And o'er that pair their names in scroll expand—
"Lo, DESTINY and TIME! to whom by Heaven
The guidance of the earth is for a season given."—

XVI.

Even while they read, the sand-glass wastes away;
And, as the last and lagging grains did creep,
That right-hand Giant 'gan his club
dash upsway,
As one that startles from a heavy sleep.
Full on the upper wall the mace's sweep
At once descended with the force of thunder,
And hurtling down at once, in crumbled heap,
The marble boundary was rent asunder,
And gave to Roderick's view new sights of fear and wonder.

XVII.

For they might spy, beyond that mighty breach,
Realms as of Spain in vision'd prospect laid,
Castsles and towers, in due proportion each,
As by some skillful artist's hand portray'd:
Here, crossed by many a wild Sierra's shade,
And boundless plains that tire the traveller's eye;
There, rich with vineyard and with olive glade,
Or deep-embrownd by forests huge and high,
Or wash'd by mighty streams, that slowly murmur'd by.

XVIII.

And here, as erst upon the antique stage,
Pass'd forth the band of masquers trimly led,
In various forms, and various equipage,
While fitting strains the hearer's fancy fed;
So, to sad Roderick's eye in order spread,
Successive pageants fill'd that mystic scene,
Shewing the fate of battles ere they bled,
And issue of events that had not been;
And, ever and anon, strange sounds were heard between.

XIX.

First shrill'd an unrepeat'd female shriek!—
It seem'd as if Don Roderick knew the call,
For the bold blood was blanching in his cheek.
Then answer'd kettle-drum and atabal,
Gong-peal and cymbal-clank the ear appall;
The Teobir war-cry, and the Lelie's yell,
Kings wildly dissonant along the hall.
Needs not to Roderick their dread import tell—
"The Moor!" he cried, "the Moor!—ring out the Toecin bell!"

XX.

"They come! they come! I see the groaning lands
White with the turbans of each Arab horde;
Swart Zaarah joins her misbelieving bands,
Alla and Mahomet their battle-word,
The choice they yield, the Koran or the Sword:
See how the Christians rush to arms again!—
In yonder shout the voice of conflict roar'd,
The shadowy hosts are closing on the plain:—
Now, God and Saint Iago strike for the good cause of Spain!"

XXI.

"By heaven, the Moors prevail! the Christians yield!
Their coward leader gives for flight the sign!
The sleeted craven mounts to quit the field—
Is not yon steed Orelia?—Yes, 'tis mine!
But never was she turn'd from battle-line:
Lo! where the recreant spurs o'er stock and stone!
Curses pursue the slave, and wrath divine! [tune
Rivers ingulf him!"—"Hush," in shuddering
The Prelate said;—"rash Prince, thy vision'd form's thine own."

XXII.

Just then, a torrent cross'd the flier's course;
The dangerous ford the Kingly Likeness tried;
But the deep eddies whelm'd both man and horse,
Swept like benighted peasant down the tide:
And the proud Moslemah spread far and wide,
As numerous as their native locust band;
Berber and Ismael's sons the spoils divide,
With naked scimitars mete out the land,
And for the bondsmen base the freeborn natives brand.

1 MS.: "Arm—mace—club."
2 See Appendix, Note G.
3 "Oh, who could tell what deeds were wrought that day;
Or who endure to hear the tale of rage,
Hatred, and madness, and despair, and fear,
Horror, and wounds, and agony, and death,
The cries, the blasphemies, the shrieks, and groans,
And prayers, which mingled in the din of arms,
In one wild uproar of terrific sounds."

4 See Appendix, Note H.
5 "Upon the banks
Of Sella was Orelia found, his legs

And shanks incarnadine, his pottrel smear'd
With froth and foam and gore, his silver mane
Sprinkled with blood, which hung on every hair,
Aspersed like dewdros; trembling there he stood,
From the toil of battle, and at times sent forth
His tremendous voice, far-echoing, loud, and shrill,
A frequent, anxious cry, with which he seem'd to call the master whom he loved so well,
And who had thus again forsaken him.
Siverian's helm and cuirass on the grass
Lay near; and Julian's sword, its hilt and chain
Clotted with blood; but where was he whose hand
Had wielded it so well that glorious day?"

SOUTHEY'S Roderick.
XXIII.
Then rose the grated Harem, to enclose
The loveliest maidens of the Christian line;
Then, menials, to their misbelieving foes
Castile's young nobles held forbidden wine;
Then, too, the holy Cross, salvation's sign,
By impious hands was from the altar thrown,
And the deep aisles of the polluted shrine
Echo'd, for holy hymn and organ-tone,
The Santon's frantic dance, the Fakir's gibbering morn.

XXIV.
How fares Don Roderick?—E'en as one who spies
Flames dart their glare o'er midnight's sable woof,
And hears around his children's piercing cries,
And sees the pale assistants stand aloof;
While cruel Conscience brings him bitter proof,
His folly or his crime have caused his grief;
And while above him nods the crumbling roof,
He curses earth and Heaven—himself in chief—
Desperate of earthly aid, despairing Heaven's relief!

XXV.
That setth'arm'd Giant turn'd his fatal glass,
And Twilight on the landscape closed her wings;
Far to Asturian hills the war-sounds pass,
And in their stead rebeck or timbrel rings;
And to the sound the bell-deck'd dancer springs,
Bazaars resound as when their marts are met,
In tourney light the Moor his jerrid flings,
And on the land as evening seem'd to set,
The Imam's chant was heard from mosque or minaret.1

XXVI.
So pass'd that pageant. Ere another came,2
The visionary scene was wrapp'd in smoke,
Whose sulph'rous wreaths were cross'd by sheets of flame;
With every flash a bolt explosive broke,
Till Roderick deem'd the fiends had burst their yoke,
And waved 'gainst heaven the infernal gonfalone!
For War a new and dreadful language spoke,
Never by ancient warrior heard or known;
Lightning and smoke her breath, and thunder was her tone.

1 "The manner in which the pageant disappears is very beautiful."—Quarterly Review.

2 "We come now to the Second Period of the Vision; and we cannot avoid noticing with much commendation the dexterity and graceful ease with which the first two scenes are connected. Without abruptness, or tellious apology for transition, they melt into each other with very harmonious effect; and we strongly recommend this example of skill, perhaps, exhibited without any effort, to the imitation of contemporary poets."—Monthly Review.

XXVII.
From the dim landscape roll the clouds away—
The Christians have regain'd their heritage;
Before the Cross has waned the Crescent's ray,
And many a monastery deck's the stage,
And lofty church, and low-brow'd hermitage.
The land obeys a Hermit and a Knight,—
The Genit those of Spain for many an age;
This clad in sackcloth, that in armor bright,
And that was VALOR named, this BIGOTRY was high.3

XXVIII.
VALOR was harness'd like a chief of old,
Arm'd at all points, and prompt for knightly gest;4
His sword was temper'd in the Ebro cold,
Morena's eagle plume adorn'd his crest,
The spoils of Afric's lion bound his breast.
Fierce he stepp'd forward and flung down his gage,
As if of mortal kind to brave the best,
Him follow'd his Companion, dark and sage,
As he, my Master, sung the dangerous Archimage.

XXIX.
Haughty of heart and brow the Warrior came,
In look and language proud as proud might be,
Vanishing his lordship, lineage, fights, and fame:
Yet was that barefoot Monk more proud than he;
And as the ivy climbs the tallest tree,
So round the loftiest soul his toils he wound,
And with his spells subdued the fierce and free,
Till ermined Age and Youth in arms renown'd,
Honoring his scourg'd and hair-cloth, meekly kiss'd the ground.

XXX.
And thus it chanced that VALOR, peerless knight,
Who ne'er to King or Kaiser veil'd his crest,
Victorious still in bull-feast or in fight,
Since first his limbs with mail he did invest,
Stoop'd ever to that Anchoret's behest;
Nor reason'd of the right, nor of the wrong,
But at his bidding laid the lance in rest,
And wrought fell deeds the troubled world along,
For he was fierce as brave, and pitiless as strong.

3 "These allegorical personages, which are thus described, are sketched in the true spirit of Spenser; but we are not sure that we altogether approve of the association of such imaginary beings with the real events that pass over the stage; and these, as well as the form of ambition which precedes the path of Bonaparte, have somewhat the air of the immortals of the Luxemburg gallery, whose naked limbs and tridents, thunderbolts and caduceus, are so singularly contrasted with the ruffs and whiskers, the queens, archbishops, and cardinals of France and Navarre."—Quarterly Review.

4 "Armed at all points, exactly cap-a-pie."—Hamlet.
XXXI.

Oft his proud galleys sought some new-found world,
That latest sees the sun, or first the morn;
Still at that Wizard's feet their spoils he hurl'd,— Ingot of ore from rich Potosi borne,
Crowns by Caciques, aigretes by Omrahs worn,
Wrought of rare gems, but broken, rent, and foul;
Idols of gold from heathen temples torn,
Bedabbled all with blood.—With grisly scowl
The Hermit mark'd the stains, and smiled beneath his cowl.

XXXII.

Then did he bless the offering, and bade make
Trage to Heaven of gratitude and praise;
And at his word the choral hymns awake,
And many a hand the silver censer sways;
But with the incense-breath these censors raise,
Mix steams from corpses smouldering in the fire;
The groans of prison'd victoms mar the lays,
And shrieks of agony confound the quire;
While, 'mid the mingled sounds, the darken'd scenes expire.

XXXIII.

Preluding light, were strains of music heard,
As once again revolved that measured sand;
Such sounds as when, for sylvan dance prepared,
Gay Xeres summons forth her vintage band;
When for the light bolero ready stand
The mozo blithe, with gay muchacha met,1
He conscious of his brother'd cap and band,
She of her netted locks and light corsette,
Each tiptoe perch'd to spring, and shake the castanet.

XXXIV.

And well such strains the opening scene became;
For Valor had relax'd his ardent look,
And at a lady's feet, like lion tame,
Lay stretch'd, full loth the weight of arms to
And soften'd Bigotry, upon his book, [brook]
Patter'd a task of little good or ill:
But the blithe peasant plied his pruning-hook,
Whisted the muleteer o'er vale and hill,
And rung from village-green the merry seguidille.2

1 See Appendix, Note I.
2 "The third scene, a peaceful state of indolence and obscurity, where, though the court was degenerate, the peasant was merry and contented, is introduced with exquisite lightness and gayety."—Quarterly Review.

"The three grand and comprehensive pictures in which Mr. Scott has delineated the state of Spain, during the three periods to which we have alluded, are conceived with much genius, and executed with very considerable, though unequal, felicity. That of the Moorish dominion is drawn, we think, with the greatest spirit. The reign of Chivalry and Superstition we do not think so happily represented, by a long and labored description of two allegorical personages called Bigotry and Valor. Nor is it very easy to conceive how Don Roderick was to learn the fortunes of his country merely by inspecting the physiognomy and furnishing of these two figurantes. The truth seems to be that Mr. Scott has been tempted on this occasion to extend a mere metaphor into an allegory, and to prolong a figure which might have given great grace and spirit to a single stanza, into the heavy subject of seven or eight. His representation of the recent state of Spain, we think, displays the talent and address of the author to the greatest advantage; for the subject was by no means inspiring; nor was it easy, we should imagine, to make the picture of decay and inglorious indolence so engaging."—Edinburgh Review, which then quotes stanzas XXXIV. and XXXV.

"The opening of the third period of the Vision is, perhaps necessarily, more abrupt than that of the second. No circumstance equally marked with the alteration in the whole system of ancient warfare could be introduced in this compartment of the poem; yet, when we have been told that 'Valor had relaxed his ardent look,' and that 'Bigotry was softened,' we are reasonably prepared for what follows."—Monthly Review.

XXXV.

Gray Royalty, grown impotent of toil,3
Let the grave scepvre slip his lazy hold;
And, careless, saw his rule become the spoil
Of a loose Female and her minion bold,
But peace was on the cottage and the fold,
From court intrigue, from bickering faction far;
Beneath the chestnut-tree Love's tale was told,
And to the tinkling of the light guitar [star.
Sweet stoo'd the western sun, sweet rose the evening

XXXVI.

As that sea-cloud, in size like human hand,
When first from Carmel by the Tishbite seen,
Came slowly overshadowing Israel's land;4
A while, perchance, bedeck'd with colors sheen,
While yet the sunbeams on its skirts had been,
Linning with purple and with gold its shroud,
Till darker folds obscured the blue serene,
And blotted heaven with one broad sable cloud,
Then sheeted rain burst down, and whirlwinds how'd aloud:—

XXXVII.

Even so upon that peaceful scene was pour'd,
Like gathering clouds, full many a foreign band,
And He, their Leader, wore in sheath his sword,
And offer'd peaceful front and open hand,
Veiling the perjured treachery he plan'd,
By friendship's zeal and honor's specious guise,
Until he won the passes of the land;
Then burst were honor's oath, and friendship's ties!
[his prize.
He clutch'd his vulture-grasp, and call'd fair Spain.

XXXVIII.

An Iron Crown his anxious forehead bare;
And well such diadem his heart became,
Who ne'er his purpose for remorse gave o'er,
Or check'd his course for pietie or shame;
Who, train'd a soldier, deem'd a soldier's fame
Might flourish in the wreath of battles won,
Though neither truth nor honor deck'd his name;
Who, placed by fortune on a Monarch's throne,
Rack'd not of Monarch's faith, or Mercy's kingly tone.
XXXIX.
From a rude isle his ruder lineage came;
The spark that, from a suburban-hovel's hearth
Ascending, wraps some capital in flame,
Hath not a meaner or more sordid birth.
And for the soul that bade him waste the earth—
The sable land-flood from some swamp obscure,
That poisons the glad husband-field with death,
And by destruction bids its fame endure,
Hath not a source more sullen, stagnant, and impure.1

XL.
Before that Leader strode a shadowy Form;
Her limbs like mist, her torch like meteor show'd,
With which she beckon'd him through fight and storm,
And all he crush'd that cross'd his desperate road,
Nor thought, nor fear'd, nor look'd on what he trode.
Realms could not glut his pride, blood could not slake,
So oft as e'er she shook her torch abroad:
It was AMBITION bade her terrors wake,
Nor deign'd she, as of yore, a milder form to take.

XL.1
No longer now she spurn'd at mean revenge,
Or staid her hand for conquer'd foeman's mean;
As when, the fates of aged Rome to change,
By Caesar's side she cross'd the Rubicon.
Nor joy'd she to bestow the spoils she won,
As when the banded powers of Grecce were task'd:
To war beneath the Youth of Macedon:
No seemly veil her modern minion ask'd,—
He saw her hideous face, and loved the fiend unmask'd.

XLII.
That Prelate mark'd his march—On banners blazed
With battles won in many a distant land,
On eagle-standards and on arms he gazed;
"And hopest thou then," he said, "thy power shall stand?
Oh, thou hast builded on the shifting sand,
And thou hast temper'd it with slaughter's flood;
And know, fell scourge in the Almighty's hand,
Gore-moisten'd trees shall perish in the bud,
And by a bloody death shall die the Man of Blood."2

XLIII.
The ruthless Leader beckon'd from his train
A wan fraternal Shade, and bade him kneel,
And paled his temples with the crown of Spain,
While trumpets rang, and heralds cried "Castle!"3
Not that he loved him—No!—In no man's weal,
Scarcely in his own, e'er joy'd that sullen heart;
Yet round that throne he bade his warriors wheel,
That the poor Puppet might perform his part,
And be a sceptred slave, at his stern beck to start.

XLIV.
But on the Natives of that Land misused,
Not long the silence of amazement hung,
Nor brook'd they long their friendly faith abused;
For, with a common shriek, the general tongue
Exclaim'd, "To arms!"—and fast to arms they sprung.
And VALOR woke, that Genius of the Land!
Pleasure, and ease, and sloth, aside he flung,
As burst the awakening Nazarite's band,
When 'gainst his treacherous foes he clench'd his dreadful hand.4

XLV.
That Minnie Monarch now cast anxious eye
Upon the Satraps that begirt him round,
Now duff'd his royal robe in act to fly,
And from his brow the diadem unbound.
So oft, so near, the Patriot bugle wound,
From Tarik's walls to Bilboa's mountains blown,
These martial satellites hard labor found
To guard a while his substituted throne—
Light reeking of his cause, but battling for their own.

XLVI.
From Alphuraha's peak that bugle rung,
And it was echo'd from Corunna's wall;
Stately Seville responsive war-shot flung,
Grenada caught it in her Moorish hall;
Galicia bade her children fight or fall,
Wild Biscay shook his mountain corolet,
Valencia roosed her at the battle-cull,
And, foremost still where Valor's sons are met,
First started to his gun each fiery Miquelet.

1 "We are as ready as any of our countrymen can be to designate Bonaparte's invasion of Spain by its proper epithets; but we must decline to join in the author's declamation against the low birth of the invader; and we cannot help reminding Mr. Scott that such a topic of censure is unworthy of him, both as a poet and as a Briton."—Monthly Review.

2 "The picture of Bonaparte, considering the difficulty of all contemporary delineations is not ill executed."—Edinburgh Review.

3 See Appendix, Note K.

4 See Book of Judges, chap. xv. 9-16.
XLVII.
But unappall’d, and burning for the fight,
The Invaders march, of victory secure;
Skillful their force to sever or unite,
And train’d alike to vanquish or endure,
Nor skillful less cheap conquest to ensure,
Discord to breathe, and jealousy to sow;
To quell by boasting, and by bribes to lure;
While nought against them bring the unpracticed foe,
[dom’s blow.
Save hearts for Freedom’s cause, and hands for Free-

XLVIII.
Proudly they march—but, oh! they march not forth
By one hot field to crown a brief campaign,
As when their Eagles, sweeping through the North,
Destroy’d at every stoop an ancient reign!
Far other fate had Heaven decreed for Spain;
In vain the steel, in vain the torch was plied,
New Patriot armies started from the slain,
High blazed the war, and long, and far, and wide,¹
And oft the God of Battles blest the righteous side.

XLIX.
Nor unatoned, where Freedom’s foes prevail,
Remain’d their savage waste. With blade and
By day the Invaders ravaged hill and dale, [brand, But, with the darkness, the Guerilla band
Came like night’s tempest, and avenged the land,
And claim’d for blood the retribution due,
Probed the hard heart, and lopp’d the murderous hand;
[threw,
And Dawn, when o’er the scene her beams she Midst ruins they had made, the spoilers’ corpses knew.

L.
What minstrel verse may sing, or tongue may tell,
Amid the vision’d strife; from sea to sea,
How oft the Patriot banners rose or fell,
Still honor’d in defeat as victory!
For that sad pageant of events to be
Show’d every form of fight by field and flood;
Slaughter and Ruin, shouting forth their glee,
Beheld, while riding on the tempest send,[blood!
The waters choked with slain, the earth bedrench’d with

LI.
Then Zaragoza—blighted be the tongue
That names thy name without the honor due!
For never hath the harp of minstrel rung,
Of faith so felony proved, so firmly true!

¹ See Appendix, Note L.
² See Appendix, Note M.
³ MS.: “Don Roderick turn’d him at the sudden cry.”
⁴ MS.: “Right for the shore unnumber’d barges row’d.”
⁵ Compare with this passage, and the Valor, Bigotry, and Ambition of the previous stanzas, the celebrated personification of War, in the first canto of Child Halforl:—

LII.
Yet raise thy head, sad city! Though in chains,
Enthral’n dost thou canst not be! Arise and claim
Reverence from every heart where Freedom reigns,
For what thou worshippst!—thy sainted dame,
She of the Column, honor’d be her name
By all, whate’er their creed, who honor love!
And like the sacred relics of the flame
That gave some martyr to the bless’d above,
To every loyal heart may thy sad embers prove!

LIII.
Nor thine alone such wreck. Gerona fair!
Faithful to death thy heroes shall be sung,
Manning the towers, while o’er their heads the air
Swart as the smoke from raging furnaces hung;
Now thicker dark’n ing where the mine was sprung,
Now briefly lighten’d by the cannon’s flare,
Now arch’d with fire-sparks as the bomb was flung,
And redd’n ing now with conflagration’s glare,
While by the fatal light the foes for storm prepare.

LIV.
While all around was danger, strife, and fear,
While the earth shook, and darkness was the sky,
And wide Destruction stunn’d the listening ear,
Appall’d the heart, and stipefied the eye,—
Afar was heard that thrice-repeated cry
In which old Albion’s heart and tongue unite,
Whene’er her soul is up, and pulse beats high,
Whether it hail the wine-cup or the fight,
And bid each arm be strong, or bid each heart be light.

LV.
Don Roderick turn’d him as the shout grew loud—³
A varied scene the changeful vision show’d,
For, where the ocean mingled with the cloud,
A gallant navy steem’d the billows broad.
From mast and stern St. George’s symbol flow’d,
Blent with the silver cross to Scotland dear;
Mottling the sea their landward barges row’d,⁴
And flash’d the sun on bayonet, brand, and spear,
And the wild beach return’d the seaman’s jovial cheer.⁵

¹ Lo! where the Giant on the mountain stands,
His blood-red tresses deepening in the sun,
With death-shot glowing in his fiery hands,
And eye that scorcheth all it glares upon;
Restless it rolls, now fix’d, and now anon
Flashing afar,—and at his iron feet
Destmction crowns, to mark what deeds are done;
For on this morn three potent nations meet
To shed before his shrine the blood he deems most sweet.

² MS.: “Don Roderick turn’d him at the sudden cry.”
³ MS.: “Right for the shore unnumber’d barges row’d.”
⁴ MS.: “Don Roderick turn’d him at the sudden cry.”
⁵ Compare with this passage, and the Valor, Bigotry, and Ambition of the previous stanzas, the celebrated personification of War, in the first canto of Child Harold:—
LVI.
It was a dread yet spirit-stirring sight!
The billows foam'd beneath a thousand oars;
Fast as they land the red-cross ranks unite,
Legions on legions bright'ning all the shores.
Then banners rise, and cannon-signal roars,
And Patriot hopes awake, and doubts are dumb,
For, bold in Freedom's cause, the bands of Ocean come!

LX.
But ne'er in battle-field throbb'd heart so brave
As that which beats beneath the Scottish plaid;
And when the piobroch bids the battle rave,
And level for the charge your arms are laid,
Where lives the desperate foe that for such onset staid!

LXI.
Hark! from yon stately ranks what laughter rings,
Mingling wild mirth with war's stern minstrelsy,
His jest while each blithe comrade round him flings,
And moves to death with military glee:
Boast, Erin, boast them! timeless, frank, and free,
In kindness warm, and fierce in danger known,
Rough Nature's children, humorous as she:
And He, yon Chieftain—strike the proudest tone
Of thy bold harp, green Isle!—the Hero is thine own.

LXII.
Now on the scene Vimeira should be shown,
On Talavera's fight should Roderick gaze,
And hear Corunna wall her battle won,
And see Busaco's crest with lightning blaze:
But shall fond fable mix with heroes' praise?
 Hath Fiction's stage for Truth's long triumphs room?
And dare her wild-flowers mingle with the bays
That claim a long eternity to bloom
Around the warrior's crest, and o'er the warrior's tomb?

LXIII.
Or may I give adventurous Fancy scope,
And stretch a bold hand to the awful veil
That hides futurity from anxious hope,
Bidding beyond it scenes of glory hail,
And painting Europe rousing at the tale
Of Spain's invaders from her confines hurl'd,
While kindling nations buckle on their mail,
And Fame, with clarion-blast and wings unfurl'd,
To Freedom and Revenge awakes an injured World.

---

"By heaven! It is a splendid sight to see
(For one who hath no friend, no brother there),
Their rival scars of mix'd embroidery,
Their various arms, that glitter in the air!
What gallant war-bounds raise them from their lair
And gnash their fangs, loud yelling for the prey!
All join the chase, but few the triumph share;
The grave shall bear the chiefest prize away,
And Havoc scare for joy can number their array.

"Three hosts combine to offer sacrifice;
Three tongues prefer strange orisons on high;
Three gaudy standards flout the pale blue skies;
The shouts are France, Spain, Albion, Victory!
The foe, the victim, and the fond ally
That fights for all, but ever fights in vain,
Are met—as if at home they could not die—
To feel the crow on Talavera's plain,
And fertilize the field that each pretends to gain."

1 MS. — "the dusty mead."

2 "The landing of the English is admirably described; nor is there any thing finer in the whole poem than the following passage (stanzas lv. lv. lvii.), with the exception always of the three concluding lines, which appear to us to be very nearly as bad as possible."—JEFFREY.

3 "The three succeeding stanzas (lviii. lxx. lx.) are elaborate; but we think, on the whole, successful. They will probably be oftener quoted than any other passage in the poem."—JEFFREY.

4 MS.: "His jest each careless comrade round him sings."

5 For details of the battle of Vimeira, fought 21st Aug., 1808—of Corunna, 16th Jan., 1809—of Talavera, 26th July, 1809—and of Busaco, 27th Sept., 1810—see Sir Walter Scott's Life of Napoleon, volume vi., under these dates.

6 "The nation will arise regenerate;
Strong in her second youth and beautiful,
And like a spirit that hath shaken off
The clog of dull mortality, shall Spain
Arise in glory."—SOUTHEY'S Roderick.
LXIII.
Oh vain, though anxious, is the glance I cast,
Since Fate has mark'd futurity her own:
Yet Fate resigns to worth the glorious past,
The deeds recorded, and the laurels won.
Then, though the Vault of Destiny be gone,
King, Prelate, all the phantoms of my brain,
Melted away like mist-wreaths in the sun,
Yet grant for faith, for valor, and for Spain,
One note of pride and fire, a Patriot's parting strain!

The Vision of Don Roderick.

CONCLUSION.
I.
"Who shall command Estrella's mountain tide?
Back to the source, when tempest-chafed, to hie?
Who, when Gascogne's vex'd gulf is raging wide,
Shall hush it as a nurse her infant's cry?
His magic power let such vain booster try,
And when the torrent shall his voice obey,
And Biscay's whirlwinds list his lullaby,
Let him stand forth and bar mine eagles' way,
And they shall heed his voice, and at his bidding stay.

II.
"Else ne'er to stoop, till high on Lisbon's towers
They close their wings, the symbol of our yoke,
And their own sea hath whelm'd you red-cross Powers!"
Thus on the summit of Alverea's rock,
To Marshal, Duke, and Peer, Gaul's Leader spoke.
While downward on the land his legions press,
Before them it was rich with vine and flock,
And smiled like Eden in her summer dress;—
Behind their wasteful march, a reeking wilderness.

1 See Appendix, Note N.
2 "For a mere introduction to the exploits of our English commanders, the story of Don Roderick's sins and confessions,—the minute description of his army and attendants,—and the whole interest and machinery of the enchanted vault, with the greater part of the Vision itself, are far too long and elaborate. They withdraw our curiosity and attention from the objects for which they had been bespoken, and gradually engage them upon a new and independent series of romantic adventures, in which it is not easy to see how Lord Wellington and Bonaparte can have any concern. But, on the other hand, no sooner is this new interest excited,—no sooner have we surrendered our imaginations into the hands of this dark enchantor, and heated our fancies to the proper pitch for sympathizing in the fortunes of Gothic kings and Moorish invaders, with their imposing accompaniments of harnessed knights, ravished damsels, and enchanted statues,—than the whole romantic group vanishes at once from our sight; and we are hurried, with minds yet disturbed with those powerful apparitions, to the comparatively sober and cold narration of Bonaparte's villainies, and to drawn battles between mere mortal combatants in English and French uniforms. The vast and elaborate vestibule, in short, in which we had been so long detained,

III.
And shall the boastful Chief maintain his word,
Though Heaven hath heard the wailings of the land,
Though Lusitania whet her vengeful sword,
Though Britons arm, and WELLINGTON command?
No! grim Busaco's iron ridge shall stand
An adamantine barrier to his force;
And from its base shall wheel his shatter'd band,
As from the unshaken rock the torrent hoarse
Bears off its broken waves, and seeks a devious course.

IV.
Yet not because Aleoba's mountain hawk
Hath on his best and bravest made her food,
In numbers confident, yon Chief shall baulk
His Lord's imperial thirst for spoil and blood:
For full in view the promised conquest stood,
And Lisbon's matrons from their walls might sun
The myriads that had half the world subdued,
And hear the distant thunders of the drum
That bids the bands of France to storm and havoc come.

V.
Four moons have heard these thunders idly roll'd,
Have seen these wistful myriads eye their prey,
As famish'd wolves survey a guarded fold—
But in the middle path a Lion lay!
At length they move—but not to battle-fray,
Nor blaze yon fires where meets the manly fight;
Beacons of infamy, they light the way
Where cowardice and cruelty unite
To damn with double shame their ignominious flight!

VI.
Oh, triumph for the Fiends of Lust and Wrath!—
Ne'er to be told, yet ne'er to be forgot,
What wanton horrors mark'd their wreckful path!
The peasant butcher'd in his ruin'd cot,
The hoary priest even at the altar shot,
Childhood and age given o'er to sword and flame,
Woman to infamy;—no crime forgot,

Where wonders wild of Arabelos combine
With Gothic imagery of darker shade, has no corresponding palace attached to it; and the long novitiate we are made to serve to the mysterious powers of romance is not repaid, after all, by an introduction to their awful presence."—JEFFREY.
3 MS.: "Who shall command the torrent's headlong tide."
4 See Appendix, Note O.
By which inventive demons might proclaim
Immortal hate to man, and scorn of God's great name!

VII.
The rudest sentinel, in Britain born,
With horror paused to view the havoc done,
Gave his poor crust to feed some wretch forlorn,1
Wiped his stern eye, then fiercer grasp'd his gun.
Nor with less zeal shall Britain's peaceful son
Exult the debt of sympathy to thy Riches nor poverty the tax shall shun,
Nor prince nor peer, the wealthy nor the gay,
Nor the poor peasant's mite, nor bard's more worthless lay.2

VIII.
But thou—unfoughten wilt thou yield to Fate,
Minion of Fortune, now miscall'd in vain!
Can vantage-ground no confidence create,
Marcella's pass, nor Guarda's mountain chain?
Vainglorious fugitive? yet turn again!
Behold where, named by some prophetic Seer,
Flows Honor's Fountain,3 as foredoom'd the stain
From thy dishonour'd name and arms to clear—
Fallen Child of Fortune, turn, redeem her favor here!

IX.
Yet, ere thou turn'st, collect each distant aid;
Those chief that never heard the lion roar!
Within whose souls lives not a trace portray'd
Of Talavera, or Mondego's shore!
Marshal each band thou hast, and summon more;
Of war's fell stratagems exhaust the whole;
Rank upon rank, squadron on squadron pour,
Legion on legion on thy foeman roll,
And weary out his arm—thou canst not quell his soul,

X.
Oh vainly gleams with steel Agneda's shore,
Vainly thy squadrons hide Assuava's plain,
And front the flying thunders as they roar,
With frantic charge and tenfold odds, in vain!5
And what avails thee that, for CAMERON slain,6
Wild from his plaided ranks the yell was given?
Vengeance and grief gave mountain rage the rein,

1 See Appendix, Note P.
2 The MS. has, for the preceding five lines—
   "And in pursuit vindictive hurried on.
   And oh, survivors said! to you belong
   Tributes from each that Britain calls her son,
   From all her nobles, all her wealthier throng,
   To her poor peasant's mite, and minstrel's poorer song."
3 See Appendix, Note Q.
4 The literal translation of Fuentes d'Honora.
5 See Appendix, Note R.
6 See Appendix, Note S.
7 On the 5th of April, 1811, Scott writes thus to Mr. Morrill:
   "I rejoice with the heart of a Scotsman in the success of Lord Wellington, and with all the pride of a seer to boot.
   I have been for three years proclaiming him as the only man we had to trust to—a man of talent and genius—not deterred by
   And, at the bloody spear-point headlong driven,
   Thy Despot's giant guards died like the rack of heaven.

XI.
Go, baffled boaster! teach thy haughty mood
To plead at thine imperious master's throne,
Say, thou hast left his legions in their blood,
Deceived his hopes, and frustrated thine own;
Say that thine utmost skill and valor shown,
By British skill and valor were outvied;
Last say, thy conqueror was WELLINGTON?7
And if he chafe, be his own fortune tried—
God and our cause to friend, the venture we'll abide.

XII.
But you, ye heroes of that well-fought day,
How shall a bard, unknowing and unknown,
His meed to each victorious leader pay,
Or bind on every brow the laurels won?8
Yet fain my harp would wake its boldest tone,
O'er the wide sea to hail CADOGAN brave;
And he, perchance, the minstrel note might own,
Mindful of meeting brief that Fortune gave
Mid you far western isles that hear the Atlantic rave.

XIII.
Yes! hard the task, when Britons wield the sword,
To give each Chief and every field its fame:
Hark! Albuera thunders BERESFORD,
And Red Barosa shouts for damnable GREENE!
Oh for a verse of tumult and of flame,
Bold as the bursting of their cannon sound,
To bid the world re-echo to their fame!
For never, upon gory battle-ground,
With conquest's well-bought wreath were braver victors crown'd!

XIV.
Oh, who shall grudge him Albuera's bays,9
Who brought a race regenerate to the field,
Roused them to emulate their fathers' praise,
Temper'd their headlong rage, their courage steel'd,10
And raised fair Lusitania's fallen shield, obstacles, nor fettered by prejudices, not immured within the pedantries of his profession, but playing the general and the hero when most of our military commanders would have exhibited the drill sergeant, or at best the adjutant. These campaigns will teach us what we have long needed to know, that success depends not on the nice drilling of regiments, but upon the grand movements and combinations of an army.

We have been hitherto polishing hinges, when we should have studied the mechanical union of a huge machine. Now, our army begin to see that the grand secret, as the French call it, consists only in union, joint exertion, and concerted movement. This will enable us to meet the dogs on fair terms as to numbers, and for the rest, 'My soul and body on the action both.'"—Life, vol. iii. p. 313.

8 See Appendix, Editor's Note T.
9 MS.: "Oh, who shall grudge you chief the victor's bays."
10 See Appendix, Note U.
And gave new edge to Lusitania's sword,
And taught her sons forgotten arms to wield?
Shiver'd my harp, and burst its every chord,
If it forget thy worth, victorious BERESFORD!

XV.
Not on that bloody field of battle won,
Though Gaul's proud legions roll'd like mist away,
Was half his self-devoted valor shown,—
He gaged but life on that illustrious day;
But when he toil'd those squadrons to array,
Who fought like Britons in the bloody game,
Sharper than Polish pike or assagay,
He braved the shafts of censure and of shame,
And, dearer far than life, he pledged a soldier's fame.

XVI.
Nor be his praise o'erpast who strove to hide
Beneath the warrior's vest affection's wound,
Whose wish Heaven for his country's weal denied;
Danger and fate he sought, but glory found,
From clime to clime, where'er war's trumpets sound,
The wanderer went; yet, Caledonia! still
Thine was his thought in march and tented ground;

He dream'd 'mid Alpine cliffs of Athonle's hill,
And heard in Ebro's roar his Lyndoeh's lovely rill.

XVII.
Oh, hero of a race renown'd of old,
Whose war-cry oft has waked the battle-swell,
Since first distinguish'd in the onset bold,
Wild sounding when the Roman rampart fell!
By Wallace' side it rung the Southron's knell,
Alderne, Kilsythe, and Tibber, own'd its fame,
Tummell's rude pass can of its terrors tell,
But ne'er from prouder field arose the name
Than when wild Ronda learn'd the conquering shout of GREME.

XVIII.
But all too long, through seas unknown and dark
(With Spenser's parable I closse my tale).
By shoal and rock hath steer'd my venturesome bark,
And landward now I drive before the gale.
And now the blue and distant shore I hail,
And nearer now I see the port expand,
And now I gladly furl my weary sail,
And as the prow light touches on the strand,
I strike my red-cross flag, and bind my skiff to land.

"No comparison can be fairly instituted between compositions so wholly different in style and designation as the present poem and Mr. Scott's former productions. The present poem neither has, nor, from its nature, could have the interest which arises from an eventful plot, or a detailed delineation of character; and we shall arrive at a far more accurate estimation of its merits by comparing it with 'The Bard' of Gray, or that particular scene of Arleston where Bintambeth beholds the wonders of Merlin's tomb. To this it has many strong and evident features of resemblance; but, in our opinion, greatly surpasses it both in the dignity of the objects represented and the picturesque effect of the machinery.

"We are inclined to rank the 'Vision of Don Roderick' not only above 'The Bard,' but (excepting Adam's Vision from the Mount of Paradise, and the matchless beauties of the sixth book of Virgil) above all the historical and poetical prospects which have come to our knowledge. The scenic representation is at once gorgeous and natural; and the language and imagery is altogether as spirited, and bears the stamp of more care and polish than even the most celebrated of the author's former productions. If it pleases us less than these, we must attribute it in part perhaps to the want of contrivance, and in a still greater degree to the nature of the subject itself, which is deprived of all the interest derived from suspense or sympathy, and, as far as it is connected with modern politics, represents a scene too near our immediate inspection to admit the interposition of the magic glass of fiction and poetry."—Quarterly Review, October, 1811.

"The 'Vision of Don Roderick' has been received with less interest by the public than any of the author's other performances; and has been read, we should imagine, with some degree of disappointment even by those who took it up with the most reasonable expectations. Yet it is written with very considerable spirit, and with more care and effort than most of the author's compositions;—with a degree of effort, indeed, which could scarcely have failed of success if the author had not succeeded so splendidly on other occasions without any
THE VISION OF DON RODERICK.

The Edinburgh Reviewers have been down on my poor Don hand to fist; but, truly, as they are too fastidious to approve of the campaign, I should be very unreasonable if I expected them to like the celebration of it. I agree with them, however, as to the lumbering weight of the stanza, and I shrewdly suspect it would require a very great poet indeed to prevent the tedium arising from the recurrence of rhymes. Our language is unable to support the expenditure of so many for each stanza; even Spenser himself, with all the license of using obsolete words and uncommon spellings, sometimes fatigues the ear. They are also very wroth with me for omitting the merits of Sir John Moore; but as I never exactly discovered in what these lay, unless in conducting his advance and retreat upon a plan the most likely to verify the desponding speculations of the foresaid reviewers, I must hold myself excused for not giving praise where I was unable to see that much was due."—Scott to Mr. Morriss, Sept. 26, 1811. Life, vol. iii. p. 328.

"The 'Vision of Don Roderick' had features of novelty, both as to the subject and the manner of the composition, which excited much attention, and gave rise to some sharp controversy. The main fable was indeed from the most picturesque region of old romance; but it was made throughout the vehicle of feelings directly adverse to those with which the Whig critics had all along regarded the interference of Britain in behalf of the nations of the Peninsula; and the silence which, while celebrating our other generals on that scene of action, had been preserved with respect to Scott's own gallant countryman, Sir John Moore, was considered or represented by them as an odious example of genius hoodwinked by the influence of party. Nor were there wanting persons who affected to discover that the charm of Scott's poetry had to a great extent evaporated under the severe test to which he had exposed it, by adopting, in place of those comparatively light and easy measures in which he had hitherto dealt, the most elaborate one that our literature exhibits. The production, notwithstanding the complexity of the Spenserian stanza, had been very rapidly executed; and it shows, accordingly, many traces of negligence. But the patriotic inspiration of it found an echo in the vast majority of British hearts; many of the Whig oracles themselves acknowledged that the difficulties of the metre had been on the whole successfully overcome; and even the hardest critics were compelled to express unqualified admiration of various detached pictures and passages, which, in truth, as no one now disputes, neither he nor any other poet ever excelled. The whole setting or framework—whatever relates in short to the last of the Goths himself—was, I think, even then unanimously pronounced admirable; and no party feeling could blind any man to the heroic splendor of such stanzas as those in which the three equally gallant elements of a British army are contrasted."—Lockhart. Life, vol. ii. p. 319.

1 See Appendix, Editor's Note T.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

And Catraeth's gies with voice of triumph rung,
And mystic Merlin harp'd, and graybeard'd Lywarch sung?—P. 265.

This locality may startle those readers who do not recollect that much of the ancient poetry preserved in Wales refers less to the history of the Principality to which that name is now limited than to events which happened in the northwest of England and southwest of Scotland, where the Britons for a long time made a stand against the Saxons. The battle of Catraeth, lamented by the celebrated Aneurin, is supposed by the learned Dr. Leyden to have been fought on the skirts of Etrick Forest. It is known to the English reader by the paraphrase of Gray, beginning,

"Had I but the torrent's might,
With headlong rage and wild alight," &c.;

but it is not so generally known that the champions mourned in this beautiful dirge were the British inhabitants of Edinburgh, who were cut off by the Saxons of Deiria, or Northumberland, about the latter part of the sixth century. —Turner's History of the Anglo-Saxons, edition 1799, vol. i. p. 222. Lywarch, the celebrated bard and monarch, was Prince of Argoed, in Cumberland; and his youthful exploits were performed upon the Border, although in his age he was driven into Powys by the successors of the Anglo-Saxons. As for Merlin Wyllt, or the Savage, his name of Caledonia, and his retreat into the Caledonian wood, appropriate him to Scotland. For dun dedicates the thirty-first chapter of the third book of his Scott-Chronicon to a narration of the death of this celebrated bard and prophet near Drumelzier, a village upon Tweed, which is supposed to have derived its name (quasi Tomina Merlinit) from the event. The particular spot in which he is buried is still shown, and appears, from the following quotation, to have partaken of his prophetic qualities:—"There is one thing remarkable here, which is that the burn called Pausayl runs by the east side of this churchyard into the Tweed; at the side of which burn, a little below the churchyard, the famous prophet Merlin is said to be buried. The particular place of his grave, at the root of a thorn tree, was shown me, many years ago, by the old and reverend minister of the place, Mr. Richard Brown; and here was the old prophecy fulfilled, delivered in Scots rhyme, to this purpose:—

'When Tweed and Pausayl meet at Merlin's grave,
Scotland and England shall one monarch have.'

For the same day that our King James the Sixth was crowned King of England, the river Tweed, by an extraordinary flood, so far overflowed its banks that it met and joined with the Pausayl at the said grave, which was never before observed to fall out."—Pennycuick's Description of Tweeddale. Edin. 1715, lv. p. 26.

NOTE B.

Minchmore's haunted spring.—P. 265.

A belief in the existence and nocturnal revels of the fairies still lingers among the vulgar in Selkirkshire. A copious fountain upon the ridge of Minchmore, called the Cheesewell, is supposed to be sacred to these fanciful spirits, and it was customary to propitiate them by throwing in something upon passing it. A pin was the usual oblation; and the ceremony is still sometimes practiced, though rather in jest than earnest.

NOTE C.

— the rude villagers, his labor done,
In verse spontaneous chants some favor'd name.—P. 265.

Theflexibility of the Italian and Spanish languages, and perhaps the liveliness of their genius, renders these countries distinguished for the talent of improvisation, which is found even among the lowest of the people. It is mentioned by Baretti and other travellers.

NOTE D.

— kindling at the deeds of Graeme.—P. 265.

Over a name sacred for ages to heroic verse, a poet may be allowed to exercise some power. I have used the freedom, here and elsewhere, to alter the orthography of the name of my gallant countryman, in order to apprise the Southern reader of its legitimate sound;—Graeme being, on the other side of the Tweed, usually pronounced as a dissyllable.

NOTE E.

What! will Don Roderick here till morning stay,
To wear in shrift and prayer the night away?
And are his hours in such dull penance past,
For fair Florinda's plunder'd charms to pay?—P. 266.

Almost all the Spanish historians, as well as the voice of tradition, ascribe the invasion of the Moors to the forcible violation committed by Roderick upon Florinda, called by the Moors Cuba or Cava. She was the daughter of Count Julian, one of the Gothic monarch's principal lieutenants, who, when the crime was perpetrated, was engaged in the defence of Ceuta against the Moors. In his indignation at the ingratitude of his sovereign, and the dishonor of his daughter, Count Julian forgot the duties of a Christian and a patriot, and, forming an alliance with Musa, then the Caliph's Lieutenant. in Africa, he countenanced the invasion of Spain by a body of Saracens and Africans, commanded by the celebrated Tarik; the issue of which was the defeat and death of Roderick, and the occupation of almost the whole peninsula by the Moors. Voltaire, in his General History, expresses his doubts of this popular story, and Gibbon gives him some countenance; but the universal tradition is quite sufficient for the purposes of poetry. The Spaniards, in detestation of Florida's memory, are said, by Cervantes, never to bestow that name upon any human female, except it be for their dogs. The tradition long inveterate among the Moors, since the same author mentions a promontory on the coast of Barbary, called "The Cape of the Caba Rumia, which, in our tongue, is the Cape of the Wicked Christian Woman; and it is a tradition among the Moors that Caba, the daughter of Count Julian, who was the cause of the loss of Spain, lies buried there, and they think it ominous to be forced into that bay; for they never go in other ways than by necessity.

Note F.

And guide me, Priest, to that mysterious room,
Where, if taught true in old tradition be,
His nation's future fate a Spanish King shall see.—P. 267.

The transition of an incident from history to tradition, and from tradition to fable and romance, becoming more marvellous at each step from its original simplicity, is not ill exemplified in the account of the "Fated Chamber" of Don Roderick, as given by his namesake, the historian of Toledo, contrasted with subsequent and more romantic accounts of the same subterranean discovery. I give the Archbishop of Toledo's tale in the words of Nonius, who seems to intimate (though very modestly) that the fatal patulium of which so much had been said was only the ruins of a Roman amphitheatre.

"Extra muros, sepulturionem versus, vestigia magnum olim theatris sparsa vivuntur. Auctor est Rodericus, Toletanus Archichapaeus ante Arabum in Hispanias irruptionem, his patulium fuisse; quod invicti vectes actena ferri robora clasuletum, ne reseratum Hispaniae excidium afferret; quod in fatis non vulgus solum, sed et prudentissimique quique credebant. Sed Roderici ultimus Gothorum Regis annium infulx curiositas subbit, scienti quid sub tot vetitis clausuris observaret; ingentes ibi superiorum regum opus et aegros theasau servar ratus. Scirias et pessulos perfringi curat, invitus omnibus; nihil praeter arcellam repertum, et in ea linitum, quo explicato nove et insolentes hominum facies habiturosque appauere, cum inscripstone Latinae, Hispaniae excidium ab ilia gente iuminere; Vultus habituique Maurorum erant. Quamobrem ex Africa tantam claslem instare regi caeteris persueam; nec fals ut Hispaniae annales etiamnum quemvixurunt."—Hispania Ludovic. Nomi, cap. ixi.

But, about the term of the expulsion of the Moors from Grenada, we find, in the Historia Veridérega del Rey Don Rodrigo, a (pretended) translation from the Arabic of the sage Alcyade Abulacem Tarif Abentarique, a legend which puts to shame the modesty of the historian Roderick, with his chest and prophetic picture. The custom of ascribing a pretended Moorish original to these legendary histories is ridiculed by Cervantes, who affects to translate the History of the Knight of the Worldly Figure from the Arabic of the Wise Hamet Benengeli. As I have been indebted to the Historia Veridérega for some of the imagery employed in the text, the following literal translation from the work itself may gratify the inquisitive reader:

"One mile on the east side of the city of Toledo, among some rocks, was situated an ancient tower, of a magnificent structure, though much dilapidated by time, which consumes all: four estadoes (i.e., four times a man's height) below it, there was a cave with a very narrow entrance, and a gate cut out of the solid rock, lined with a strong covering of iron, and fastened with many locks; above the gate some Greek letters are engraved, which, although abbreviated, and of doubtful meaning, were thus interpreted, according to the exposition of learned men:—'The king who opens this cave, and can discover the wonders, will discover both good and evil things.' Many kings desired to know the mystery of this tower, and sought to find out the secret of the door with much care; but when they opened the gate, such a tremendous noise arose in the cave that it appeared as if the earth was bursting; many of those present sickened with fear, and others lost their lives. In order to prevent such great perils (as they supposed a dangerous enchantment was contained within), they secured the gate with new locks, concluding that, though a king was destined to open it, the fated time was not yet arrived. At last King Don Rodrigo, led on by his evil fortune and unlucky destiny, opened the tower; and some bold attendants, whom he had brought with him, entered, although agitated with fear. Having proceeded a good way, they fled back to the entrance, terrified with a frightful vision which they had beheld. The king was greatly moved, and ordered many torches, so constructed that the test light was extinguished, to be lighted. Then the king entered, not without fear, before all the others. They discovered, by degrees, a splendid hall, apparently built in a very sumptuous manner; in the middle stood a Bronze Statue of very ferocious appearance, which held a battle-axe in its hands. With this he struck the floor violently, giving it such heavy blows that the noise in the cave was occasioned by the motion of the air. The king, greatly affrighted and astonished, began to conjure this terrible vision, promising that he would return without doing any injury in the cave, after he had obtained a sight of what was contained in it. The statue ceased to strike the floor, and the king, with his followers, somewhat assured, and recovering their courage, proceeded into the hall; and on the left of the statue they found this inscription: 'To the unhappy king, thou hast entered here in evil hour.' On the right side of the wall these words were inscribed, 'By strange nations thou shalt be dispossessed, and thy subjects foully degraded.' On the shoulders of the statue the other words were written, which said, 'I call upon the Arabs.' And upon his breast was written, 'I do my office.' At the entrance of the hall there was placed a round bowl, from which a great noise, like the fall of waters, proceeded. They found no other thing in the hall; and when the king, sorrowful and greatly affected, had scarcely turned about to leave the cave, the statue again commenced its accustomed blows upon the floor. After they had mutually promised to conceal what they had seen, they again closed the tower, and blocked up the gate of the cavern with earth, that no memory might remain in the world of such a portentous and evil-boding prodigy. The ensuing midnight they heard great cries and clamor from the cave, resounding like the noise of battle, and the ground shaking with a tremendous roar; the whole edifice of the old tower fell to the ground, by which they were greatly affrighted, the vision which they had beheld appearing to them as a dream. 'The king, having left the tower, ordered wise men to explain what the inscriptions signified; and having consulted upon and studied their meaning, they declared that the statue of bronze, with the motion which it made with its battle-axe, signified Time; and that its office, alluded to in the inscription that its breast, was that he never rests a single moment. The words on the shoulders, 'I call upon the Arabs,' they expounded that, in time, Spain would be conquered by the Arabs. The words upon the left wall signified the destruction of King Rodrigo; those on the right, the dreadful calamities which were to fall upon the Spaniards and Goths, and that the unhappy king would be dispossessed of all his states. Finally, the letters on the portal indicated that evil would betide to the conquerors, and evil to the conquered, of which experience proved the truth."—História Verdadeira del Rey Don Rodrigo. Quinta impression. Madrid, 1654, i. p. 23.

NOTE G.

The Téobir war-cry, and the Leite's yell.—P. 268.

The Téobir (derived from the words Allá achar, God is most mighty) was the original war-cry of the Saracens. It is celebrated by Hughes in the "Siege of Damascus:"—

"We heard the Téobir; so those Arabs call
Their shout of onset, when, with loud appeal,
They challenge Heaven, as if demanding conquest."

The Leite, well known to the Christians during the Crusades, is the shout of Allá illa Allá, the Mohammedan confession of faith. It is twice used in poetry by my friend Mr. W. Stewart Rose, in the romance of "Partenopex" and in the "Crusade of St. Lewis."

NOTE H.

By heaven, the Moors prevail! the Christians yield!
Their coward leader gives for flight the sign!
The sceptred craven mounts to quit the field—
Is not your steed Orelia?—Yes, 'tis mine!—P. 268.

Count Julian, the father of the injured Florinda, with the connivance and assistance of Oppas, Archbishop of Toledo, invited, in 719, the Saracens into Spain. A considerable army arrived under the command of Tarik, or Taríf, who bequeathed the well-known name of Gibraltar (Gibel al Tarik, or the mountain of Tarik) to the place of his landing. He was joined by Count Julian, ravaged Andalusia, and took Seville. In 714 they returned with a still greater force, and Roderick marched into Andalusia at the head of a great army to give them battle. The field was chosen near Xeres, and Mariana gives the following account of the action:—

"Both armies being drawn up, the king, according to the custom of the Gothic kings when they went to battle, appeared in an ivory chariot, clothed in cloth of gold, encouraging his men; Taríf, on the other side, did the same. The armies, thus prepared, waited only for the signal to fall on; the Goths gave the charge, their drums and trumpets sounding, and the Moors received it with the noise of kettle-drums. Such were the shouts and cries on both sides that the mountains and valleys seemed to meet. First, they began with slings, darts, javelins, and lances, then came to the swords; a long time the battle was dubious; but the Moors seemed to have the worst, till D. Oppas, the archbishop, having to that time concealed his treachery, in the heat of the fight, with a great body of his followers, went over to the infidels. He joined Count Julian, with whom was a great number of Goths, and both together fell upon the flank of our army. Our men, terrified with that unparalleled treachery, and tired with fighting, could no longer sustain that charge, but were easily put to flight. The king performed the part not only of a wise general, but of a resolute soldier, relieving the weakest, bringing on fresh men in place of those that were tired, and stopping those that turned their backs. At length, seeing no hope left, he alighted out of his chariot for fear of being taken, and mounting on a horse called Orelia, he withdrew out of the battle. The Goths who still stood, missing him, were most part put to the sword, the rest betook themselves to flight. The camp was immediately entered, and the baggage taken. What number was killed was not known: I suppose they were so many it was hard to count them; for this single battle robbed Spain of all its glory, and in it perished the renowned name of the Goths. The king's horse, upper garment, and buskins, covered with pearls and precious stones, were found on the bank of the river Guadalte, and there being no news of him afterwards, it was supposed he was drowned passing the river."—Mariana's History of Spain, book vi. chap. 9.

Orelia, the courser of Don Roderick, mentioned in the text, and in the above quotation, was celebrated for her speed and form. She is mentioned repeatedly in Spanish romance, and also by Cervantes.

NOTE I.

When for the light bolero ready stand
The mozo blithe, with gay muchacha met.—P. 270.

The bolero is a very light and active dance, much practiced by the Spaniards, in which castanets are always used. Mozo and muchacha are equivalent to our phrase of lad and lass.

NOTE K.

While trumpets rang, and heralds cried "Castille!"—P. 271.

The heralds, at the coronation of a Spanish monarch, proclaim his name three times, and repeat three times the word Castilla, Castilla, Castilla; which, with all other ceremonies, was carefully copied in the mock inauguration of Joseph Bonaparte.

NOTE L.

High blazed the war, and long, and far, and wide.—P. 272.

Those who were disposed to believe that mere virtue and energy are capable of themselves to work forth the salvation of an oppressed people, surprised in a moment of confidence, deprived of their officers, armies, and fortresses, who had every means of resistance to seek in the very moment when they were to be made use of, and whom the numerous treasons among the higher orders deprived of confidence in their natural leaders,—those who entertained this enthusiastic but delusive opinion may be pardoned for expressing their disappointment at the protracted warfare in the Peninsula. There are, however, another class of persons, who, having themselves the highest dread or veneration, or something allied to both, for the power of the modern Attila, will nevertheless give the herculean Spaniards little or no credit for the long, stubborn, and unsubdued resistance of three years to a power before whom their former well-prepared, well-armed, and numerous adversaries fell in the course of as many months. While these gentlemen plead for deference to Bonaparte, and crave

"Respect for his great place, and bid the devil
Be duly honor'd for his burning throne,"

it may not be altogether unreasonable to claim some modification of censure upon those who have been long and to a great extent successfully resisting this great enemy of mankind. That the energy of Spain has not uniformly been directed by conduct equal to its vigor has been too obvious; that her armies, under their complicated disadvantages, have shared the fate of such as were defeated after taking the field with every possible advantage of arms and discipline, is surely not to be wondered at. But that a nation, under the circumstances of repeated discomfiture, internal treason, and the mismanagement Incident to a temporary and hastily adopted government, should have wasted, by its stubborn, uniform, and prolonged resistance, myriads after myriads of those soldiers who had overrun the world; that some of its provinces should, like Galicia, after being abandoned by their allies and overrun by their enemies, have recovered their freedom by their own unassisted exertions; that others, like Catalonia, undismayed by the treason which betrayed some fortresses, and the force which subdued others, should not only have continued their resistance, but have attained over their victorious enemy a superiority which is even now enabling them to besiege and retake the places of strength which had been wrested from them,—is a tale hitherto untold in the revolutionary war. To say that such a people cannot be subdued would be presumption similar to that of those who protested that Spain could not defend herself for a year, or Portugal for a month; but that a resistance which has been continued for so long a space, when the usurper, except during the short-lived Austrian campaign, had no other enemies on the continent, should be now less successful, when repeated defeats have broken the reputation of the French armies, and when they are likely (it would seem almost in desperation) to seek occupation elsewhere, is a prophecy as improbable as ungracious. And while we are in the humor of severely censuring our allies, gallant and devoted as they have shown themselves in the cause of national liberty, because they may not instantly adopt those measures which we in our wisdom may deem essential to success, it might be well if we endeavored first to resolve the previous question,—1st, Whether we do not at this moment know much less of the Spanish armies than those of Portugal, which were so promptly condemed as totally inadequate to assist in the preservation of their country? 2d, Whether, independently of any right we have to offer more than advice and assistance to our independent allies, we can expect that they should renounce entirely the national pride, which is inseparable from patriotism, and at once descend not only to be saved by our assistance, but to be saved in our own way? 3d, Whether, if it be an object (as undoubtedly it is a main one) that the Spanish troops should be trained, under British discipline, to the flexibility of movement and power of rapid concert and combination which is essential to modern war, such a consummation is likely to be produced by abusing them in newspapers and periodical publications? Lastly, since the undoubted authority of British officers makes us now acquainted with part of the horrors that attend invasion, and which the providence of God, the valor of our navy, and perhaps the very efforts of these Spaniards, have hitherto diverted from us, it may be modestly questioned whether we ought to be too forward to estimate and condemn the feeling of temporary stupefaction which they create; lest, in so doing, we should resemble the worthy clergyman who, while he had himself never snuffed a candle with his fingers, was disposed severely to criticise the conduct of a martyr who winced a little among his flames.

Note M.

They won not Zaragoza, but her children's bloody tomb,—

P. 372.

The interesting account of Mr. Vaughan has made most readers acquainted with the first siege of Zaragoza.1 The last and fatal siege of that gallant and devoted city is detailed with great precision, in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1809,—a work in which the affairs of Spain have been treated of with attention corresponding to their deep interest, and to the peculiar sources of information open to the historian. The following are a few brief extracts from this splendid historical narrative:

"A breach was soon made in the mud walls, and then, as in the former siege, the war was carried on in the streets and houses; but the French had been taught by experience that in this species of warfare the Zaragozans derived a superiority from the feeling and principle which inspired them, and the cause for which they fought. The only means of conquering Zaragoza was to destroy it house by house and street by street; and upon this system of destruction they proceeded. Three companies of miners and eight companies of sappers carried on this subterraneous war; the Spaniards, it is said, attempted to oppose them by countermines; these were operations to which they were wholly unused, and, according to the French statement, their miners were every day discovered and suffocated. Meantime, the bombardment was incessantly kept up. 'Within the last 48 hours,' said Falafax in a letter to his friend General Doyle, '6000 shells have been thrown in. Two-thirds of the town are in ruins, but we shall perish under the ruins of the remaining third rather than surrender.' In the course of the siege, above 17,000 bombs were thrown at the town; the stock of powder with which Zaragoza had been stored was exhausted; they had none at last but what they manufactured day by day; and no other cannon-balls than those which were shot into the town and which they collected and fired back upon the enemy."

In the midst of these horrors and privations, the pestilence broke out in Zaragoza. To various causes enumerated by the annalist he adds "scantiness of food, crowded quarters, unusual exertion of body, anxiety of mind, and the impossibility of recruiting their exhausted strength by needful rest, in a city which was almost incessantly bombarded, and where every hour their sleep was broken by the tremendous explosion of mines. There was now no respite, either by day or night, for this devoted city; even the natural order of light and darkness was destroyed in Zaragoza; by day it was involved in a red sulphureous atmosphere of smoke, which hid the face of heaven; by night, the fire of cannons and mortars, and the flames of burning houses, kept it in a state of terrific illumination."

"When once the pestilence had begun, it was impossible to check its progress, or confine it to one quarter of the city. Hospitals were immediately established,—there were above thirty of them; as soon as one was destroyed by the bombardment, the patients were removed to another, and thus the infection was carried to every part of Zaragoza. Famine aggravated the evil; the city had probably not been sufficiently provided at the commencement of the siege, and of the provisions which it contained, much was destroyed in the daily ruin which the mines and bombs effected. Had the Zaragozans and their garrison proceeded according to military rules, they ought to have been provisioned for two years. By January; their batteries had then been demolished, there were open breaches in many parts of their weak walls, and the enemy were already within the city. On the 30th, above sixty houses were blown up, and the French obtained possession of the monasteries of the Augustines and Las Monicas, which adjoined each other, two of the last defensible places left. The enemy forced their way into the church; every column, every chapel, every altar, became a point of defence, which was repeatedly attacked, taken, and retaken; the pavement was covered with blood, the ables and body of the church strewn with the dead, who were trampled under foot by the combatants. In the midst of this conflict, the roof, shattered by repeated bombs, fell in; the few who were not crushed, after a short pause, which this tremendous shock, and their own unexpected escape, occasioned, renewed the fight with redimplned fury; fresh parties of the enemy poured in; monks, and citizens, and soldiers, came to the defence, and the contest was continued upon the ruins, and the bodies of the dead and the dying.

1 See Narrative of the Siege of Zaragoza, by Richard Charles Vaughan, Esq., 1809. The Right Honorable R. C. Vaughan is now British Minister at Washington, 1833.

Yet, seventeen days after sustaining these extremities, did the heroic inhabitants of Zaragoza continue their defence; nor did they then surrender until their despair had extracted from the French generals a capitulation more honorable than has been granted to fortresses of the first order.

Who shall venture to refuse the Zaragozans the eulogium conferred upon them by the eloquence of Wordsworth?

"Most gloriously have the citizens of Zaragoza proved that the true army of Spain, in a contest of this nature, is the whole people. The same city has also exemplified a melancholy, yea, a dismal truth, yet consolatory and full of joy,—that when a people are called suddenly to fight for their liberty, and are sorely pressed upon, their best field of battle is the floors upon which their children have played; the chambers where the family of each man has slept (his own or his neighbours'); upon or under the roofs by which they have been sheltered; in the gardens of their recreation; in the street or in the market-place; before the altars of their temples, and among their congregated dwellings, blazing or uprooted.

"The government of Spain must never forget Zaragoza for a moment. Nothing is wanting to produce the same effects everywhere but a leading mind, such as that city was blessed with. In the latter contest this has been proved; for Zaragoza contained, at that time, bodies of men from almost all parts of Spain. The narrative of those two agens should be the manual of every Spaniard. He may add to it the ancient stories of Numantia and Saguntum; let him sleep upon the book as a pillow, and, if he be a devout adherent to the religion of his country, let him wear it in his bosom for his crucifix to rest upon."—Wordsworth on the Conquest of Outria.

NOTE N.

the Vault of Destiny.—P. 274.

Before finally dismissing the enchanted cavern of Don Roderick, it may be noticed that the legend occurs in one of Calveron's plays, entitled "La Virgin del Sagarro." The scene opens with the noise of the chase, and Reciusundo, a predecessor of Roderick upon the Gothic throne, enters pursuing a stag. The animal assumes the form of a man, and defies the king to enter the cave, which forms the bottom of the scene, and engage with him in single combat. The king accepts the challenge, and they engage accordingly, but without advantage on either side, which induces the Genie to inform Reciusundo that he is not the monarch for whom the adventure of the enchanted cavern is reserved, and he proceeds to predict the downfall of the Gothic monarchy and of the Christian religion which shall attend the discovery of its mysteries. Reciusundo, appalled by these prophecies, orders the cavern to be secured by a gate and bolts of iron. In the second part of the same play, we are informed that Don Roderick had removed the barrier and transgressed the prohibition of his ancestor, and had been apprised by the prodigies which he discovered of the approaching ruin of his kingdom.

NOTE O.

While downward on the land his legions press,
Before them it was rich with vine and flock,
And smiled like Eden in her summer dress,—
Behind their wasteful march, a reeking wilderness.—P. 274.

I have ventured to apply to the movements of the French army that sublime passage in the prophecies of Job which seems applicable to them in more respects than that I have adopted in the text. One would think their ravages, their military appointments, the terror which they spread among invaded nations, their military discipline, their arts of political intrigue and deceit, were distinctly pointed out in the following verses of Scripture:

"2. A day of darknesses and of gloominesses, a day of clouds and of thick darknesses, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong, there hath not been over the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations. 3. A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind him a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them. 4. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses and as horsesmen, so shall they runne. 5. Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains, shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong army set in battle array. 6. Before their face shall the people be much pained; all faces shall gather blackness. 7. They shall run like mighty men, they shall climb the wall like men of warre, and they shall march every one in his ways, and they shall not break their ranks. 8. Neither shall one thrust another, they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded. 9. They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses: they shall enter in at the windows like a thief. 10. The earth shall quake before them, the heavens shall tremble, the sunne and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining."

In verse 20 also, which announces the retreat of the northern army, described in such dreadful colors, into a "land barren and desolate," and the dishonor with which God afflicted them for having "magnified themselves to do great things," there are particulars not applicable to the retreat of Massena; divine Providence having, in all ages, attached disgrace as the natural punishment of cruelty and presumption.

NOTE P.

The rudest sentinel, in Britain born,
With horror pause to view the havoc done,
Gave his poor crust to feed some wretched forlorn.—P. 275.

Even the unexampled gallantry of the British army in the campaign of 1810-11, although they never fought but to conquer, will do them less honor in history than their humanity, attentive to soften to the utmost of their power the horrors which war, in its mildest aspect, must always inflict upon the defenceless inhabitants of the country in which it is waged, and which, on this occasion, were tenfold augmented by the barbarous cruelties of the French. Soup-kitchens were established by subscription among the officers, wherever the troops were quartered for any length of time. The commissaries contributed the heads, feet, &c., of the cattle slaughtered for the soldiers; rice, vegetables, and bread where it could be had, were purchased by the officers. Fifty or sixty starving peasants were daily fed at one of these regimental establishments, and carried home the relics to their finished houses.
holds. The emaciated wretches, who could not crawl from weakness, were specially employed in pruning their vines. While pursuing Massena, the soldiers evinced the same spirit of humanity, and in many instances, when reduced themselves to short allowance, from having out-marched their supplies, they shared their pittance with the starving inhabitants, who had ventured back to view the ruins of their habitations, burnt by the retreating enemy, and to bury the bodies of their relations whom they had butchered. Is it possible to know such facts without feeling a sort of confidence that those who so well deserve victory are most likely to attain it? It is not the least of Lord Wellington's military merits that the slightest disposition towards marauding meets immediate punishment. Independently of all moral obligation, the army which is most orderly in a friendly country has always proved most formidable to an armed enemy.

Note Q.
Vainglorious fugitive!—P. 275.

The French conducted this memorable retreat with much of the fanfares of war proper to their country, by which they attempt to impose upon others, and perhaps on themselves, a belief that they are triumphing in the very moment of their discomfiture. On the 30th March, 1811, their rear-guard was overtaken near Pega by the British cavalry. Being well posted, and conceiving themselves safe from infantry (who were indeed many miles in the rear) and from artillery, they indulged themselves in parading their bands of music, and actually performed "God save the King." Their mistreatment was, however, deranged by the undesired accompaniment of the British horse-artillery, on whose part in the concert they had not calculated. The surprise was sudden, and the rout complete; for the artillery and cavalry did execution upon them for about four miles, pursuing at a gallop as often as they got beyond the range of the guns.

Note R.
Vainly thy squadrons hide Assurâd's plain,
And from the flying thunder's as they rear,
With frantic charge and tenfold odds, in vain!—P. 275.

In the severe action of Fuentes d'Honoro, upon 5th May, 1811, the grand mass of the French cavalry attacked the right of the British position, covered by two guns of the horse-artillery and two squadrons of cavalry. After suffering considerably from the fire of the guns, which annoyed them in every attack at formation, the enemy turned their wrath entirely towards them, distributed brandy among their troopers, and advanced to carry the field-pieces with the desperation of drunken fury. They were in nowise checked by the heavy loss which they sustained in this daring attempt, but closed, and fairly mingled with the British cavalry, to whom they bore the proportion of ten to one. Captain Ramsay (let me be permitted to name a gallant countryman), who commanded the two guns, dismissed them at the gallop, and putting himself at the head of the mounted artillerymen, ordered them to fall upon the French, sabre in hand. This very unexpected conversion of artillerymen into dragons contributed greatly to the defeat of the enemy, already disconcerted by the reception they had met from the two British squadrons; and the appearance of some small reinforcements, notwithstanding the immense disproportion of force, put them to absolute rout. A colonel or major of their cavalry and many prisoners (almost all intoxicated) remained in our possession. Those who consider for a moment the difference of the services, and how much an artilleryman is necessarily and naturally led to identify his own safety and utility with abiding by the tremendous implement of war to the exercise of which he is chiefly, if not exclusively, trained, will know how to estimate the presence of mind which commanded so bold a manœuvre, and the steadiness and confidence with which it was executed.

Note S.
And what awaits thee that, for Cameron slain,
Wild from his plaided rank the yell was given?—P. 275.

The gallant Colonel Cameron was wounded mortally during the desperate contest in the streets of the village called Fuentes d'Honoro. He fell at the head of his native Highlanders, the 71st and 79th, who raised a dreadful shriek of grief and rage. They charged, with irresistible fury, the finest body of French grenadiers ever seen, being a part of Bonaparte's selected guard. The officer who led the French, a man remarkable for stature and symmetry, was killed on the spot. The Frenchman who stepped out of his rank to take aim at Colonel Cameron was also bayoneted, pierced with a thousand wounds, and almost torn to pieces by the furious Highlanders, who, under the command of Colonel Cadogan, bore the enemy out of the contested ground at the point of the bayonet. Massena pays my countrymen a singular compliment in his account of the attack and defence of this village, in which he says the British lost many officers, and Scotch.

Note T.
But you, ye heroes of that well-fought day, &c.—P. 275.

[The Edinburgh Reviewer offered the following remarks on what he considered as an unjust omission in this part of the poem:—

"We are not very apt," he says, "to quarrel with a poet for his politics; and really supposed it next to impossible that Mr. Scott should have given us any ground of dissatisfaction on this score, in the management of his present theme. Lord Wellington and his fellow soldiers well deserve the laurels they have won; nor is there one British heart, we believe, that will not feel proud and grateful for all the honors with which British genius can invest their names. In the praises which Mr. Scott has bestowed, therefore, all his readers will sympathize; but for those which he has withheld, there are some that will not so readily forgive him; and in our eyes, we will confess, it is a sin not easily to be expiated that in a poem written substantially for the purpose of commemorating the brave who have fought or fallen in Spain or Portugal—and written by a Scotchman—there should be no mention of the name of Moore:—of the only commander-in-chief who has fallen in this memorable contest:—of a commander who was acknowledged as the model and pattern of a British soldier, when British soldiers stood most in need of such an example; and was, at the same time, distinguished not less for every manly virtue and generous affection, than for skill.
and gallantry in his profession. A more pure or a more exalted character certainly has not appeared upon that scene which Mr. Scott has sought to illustrate with the splendor of his genius; and it is with a mixture of shame and indignation that we find him grudging a single ray of that profuse and readily yielded glory to gild the grave of his lamented countryman. To offer a lavish tribute of praise to the living, whose task is still incomplete, may be generous and munificent; but to depart from such precepts, it is due in strictness of justice. Who will deny that Sir John Moore was all that we have now said of him? or who will doubt that his untimely death in the hour of victory would have been eagerly seized upon by an impartial poet as a noble theme for generous lamentation and eloquent praise? But Mr. Scott's political friends have fanned it for their interest to calumniate the memory of this illustrious and accomplished person,—and Mr. Scott has permitted the spirit of party to stand in the way, not only of poetical justice, but of patriotic and generous feeling.

"It is this for which we grieve and feel ashamed,—this hardening and deadening effect of political animosities, in cases where politics should have nothing to do; this apparent perversion, not merely of the judgment, but of the heart; this palatable resentment, which wars not only with the living, but with the dead, and thinks it a reason for withdrawing a departed warrior of his glory, that a political antagonist has been zealous in his praise. These things are lamentable, and they cannot be alluded to without some emotions of sorrow and resentment. But they affect not the fame of him on whose account these emotions are suggested. The wars of Spain and the merits of Sir John Moore will be commemorated in a more impartial and a more imperishable record than the "Vision of Don Rodrigo;" and his humble monument in the citadel of Corunna will draw the tears and the admiration of thousands who concern not themselves about the exploits of his more fortunate associates."—Edinburgh Review, vol. xviii. 1811.

The reader who desires to understand Sir Walter Scott's deliberate opinion on the subject of Sir John Moore's military character and conduct is referred to the Life of Napoleon Bouvart, vol. vi. chap. xlvii. But perhaps it may be neither unamusing nor instructive to consider, along with the diatribe just quoted from the Edinburgh Review, some reflections from the pen of Sir Walter Scott himself on the injustice done to a name greater than Moore's in the noble stanzas on the battle of Waterloo, in the third canto of "Childe Harold"—an injustice which did not call forth any rebuke from the Edinburgh critics. Sir Walter, in reviewing this canto, said:

"Childe Harold arrives on Waterloo—a scene where all men, where a poet especially, and a poet such as Lord Byron, must needs pause, and amid the quiet simplicity of whose scenery is excited a moral Interest deeper and more potent even than that which is produced by gazing upon the sublimest efforts of Nature in her most romantic recesses.

"That Lord Byron's sentiments do not correspond with ours is obvious, and we are sorry for both our sakes. For our own, because we have lost that note of triumph with which his harp would otherwise have rung over a field of glory such as Britain never reaped before; and on Lord Byron's account, because it is melancholy to see a man of genius damped by the mere cant of words and phrases, even when facts are most broadly confronted with them. If the poet has mixed with the original, wild, and magnificent creations of his imagination prejudices which he could only have caught by the contagion which he most professes to despise, it is in himself that must be the loser. If his lofty muse has soared in all her brilliancy over the field of Waterloo without dropping even one leaf of laurel on the head of Wellington, his merit can dispense even with the praise of Lord Byron. And as when the images of Brutus were excluded from the triumphal procession, his memory became only the more powerfully imprinted on the souls of the Romans, the name of the British hero will be but more eagerly recalled to remembrance by the very lines in which his praise is forgotten."—Quarterly Review, vol. xvi. 1816. Ed.

---

NOTE U.

Oh, who shall grudge him Atrown's lays, Who brought a race regenerate to the field, Downd them to emulate their fathers' praise, Temler their headlong rage, their courage steel'd, And raised fair Lusitania's fallen shield.—P. 275.

Nothing during the war of Portugal seems, to a distinct observer, more deserving of praise than the self-devotion of Field-Marshal Beresford, who was contented to undertake all the hazard of obloquy which might have been founded upon any miscarriage in the highly important experiment of training the Portuguese troops to an improved state of discipline. In exposing his military reputation to the censure of imprudence from the most moderate, and all manner of unutterable calamities from the ignorant and malignant, he placed at stake the dearest pledge which a military man had to offer, and nothing but the deepest conviction of the high and essential importance attached to success can be supposed an adequate motive. How great the chance of miscarriage was supposed may be estimated from the general opinion of officers of unquestioned talents and experience, possessed of every opportunity of information; how completely the experiment has succeeded, and how much the spirit and patriotism of our ancient allies had been underrated, is evident not only from these victories in which they have borne a distinguished share, but from the liberal and highly honorable manner in which those opinions have been retracted. The success of this plan, with all its important consequences, we owe to the indefatigable exertions of Field-Marshal Beresford.

---

NOTE V.

—a race renown'd of old,
Whose war-ory oft has waked the battle-swell.
—The conquering shout of Grome.—P. 276.

This stanzal alludes to the various achievements of the warlike family of Grome, or Graham. They are said by tradition to have descended from the Scottish chief under whose command his countrymen stormed the wall built by the emperor Severus between the Friths of Forth and Clyde, the fragments of which are still popularly called Grome's Dyke. Sir John the Grome, "the hardy, wight, and wise," is well known as the friend of Sir William Wallace. Alderine, Kilisye, and Tibbermaiir, were scenes of the victories of the heroic Marquis of Montrose. The pass of Killyrankie is famous for the action between King William's forces and the Highlanders in 1689.

"Where glad Dundee in faint huzzas expired." It is seldom that one line can number so many heroes, and yet more rare when it can appeal to the glory of a living descendant in support of its ancient renown. The allusions to the private history and character of General Graham may be illustrated by referring to the eloquent and affecting speech of Mr. Sheridan upon the vote of thanks to the Victor of Barossa.
NOTICE TO EDITION 1833.

SIR WALTER SCOTT commenced the composition of "Rokeby" at Abbotsford, on the 15th of September, 1812, and finished it on the last day of the following December.

The reader may be interested with the following extracts from his letters to his friend and printer, Mr. Ballantyne:

ABBOTSFORD, 28th Oct. 1812.

"DEAR JAMES,—I send you to-day better than the third sheet of canto ii., and I trust to send the other three sheets in the course of the week. I expect that you will have three cantos complete before I quit this place—on the 11th of November. Surely, if you do your part, the poem may be out by Christmas; but you must not dawdle over your typographical scruples. I have too much respect for the public to neglect any thing in my poem to attract their attention; and you misunderstood me much when you supposed that I designed any new experiments in point of composition. I only meant to say that, knowing well that the said public will never be pleased with exactly the same thing a second time, I saw the necessity of giving a certain degree of novelty, by throwing the interest more on character than in my former poems, without certainly meaning to exclude either incident or description. I think you will see the same sort of difference taken in all my former poems, of which I would say, if it is fair for me to say any thing, that the force in the 'Lay' is thrown on style, in 'Marmion' on description, and in the 'Lady of the Lake' on incident."

A November.—"As for my story, the conduct of the plot, which must be made natural and easy, prevents my introducing any thing light for some time. You must advert, that in order to give poetical effect to any incident, I am often obliged to be much longer than I expected in the detail. You are too much like the country squire in the what d'ye call it, who commands that the play should not only be a tragedy and comedy, but that it should be crowned with a spice of your pastoral. As for what is popular, and what people like, and so forth, it is all a joke. Be interesting; do the thing well, and the only difference will be, that people will like what they never liked before, and will like it so much the better for the novelty of their feelings towards it. Dullness and tameness are the only irreparable faults."

December 31st.—"With kindest wishes on the return of the season, I send you the last of the copy of 'Rokeby.' If you are not engaged at home, and like to call in, we will drink good luck to it; but do not derange a family party.

"There is something odd and melancholy in concluding a poem with the year, and I could be almost silly and sentimental about it. I hope you think I have done my best. I assure you of my wishes the work may succeed; and my exertions to get out in time were more inspired by your interest and John's than my own. And so vogue la galère. W. S."
is, or at least was then, indispensable to the comfort of a family residing in a solitary country-house; but although this was the favorite amusement of many of my friends, I have never been able to consider it as a source of pleasure. I never could think it a matter of passing importance that my cattle or crops were better or more plentiful than those of my neighbors; and nevertheless I began to feel the necessity of some more quiet out-door occupation, different from those I had hitherto pursued. I purchased a small farm of about one hundred acres, with the purpose of planting and improving it, to which property circumstances afterwards enabled me to make considerable additions; and thus an era took place in my life, most equal to the important one mentioned by the Vicar of Wakefield, when he removed from the Blue-room to the Brown. In point of neighborhood, at least, the change of residence made little more difference. Abbotsford, to which we removed, was only six or seven miles down the Tweed, and lay on the same beautiful stream. It did not possess the romantic character of Ashestiel, my former residence; but it had a stretch of meadow-land along the river, and possessed, in the phrase of the landscape-gardener, considerable capabilities. Above all, the land was my own, like Uncle Toby’s Bowling-green, to do what I would with. It had been, though the gratification was long postponed, an early wish of mine to connect myself with my mother earth, and prosecute those experiments by which a species of creative power is exercised over the face of nature. I can trace, even to childhood, a pleasure derived from Dodgley’s account of Shenstone’s Lensowes, and I envied the poet much more for the pleasure of accomplishing the objects detailed in his friend’s sketch of his grounds, than for the possession of pipe, crook, flock, and Phillis to boot. My memory, also, tenacious of quaint expressions, still retained a phrase which it had gathered from an old almanac of Charles the Second’s time (when every thing down to almanacs affected to be smart), in which the reader, in the month of June, is advised for health’s sake to walk a mile or two every day before breakfast, and, if he can possibly so manage, to let his exercise be taken upon his own land.

With the satisfaction of having attained the fulfillment of an early and long-cherished hope, I commenced my improvements, as delightful in their progress as those of the child who first makes a dress for a new doll. The nakedness of the land was in time hidden by woodlands of considerable extent; the smallest of possible cottages was progressively expanded into a sort of dream of a mansion-house, whimsical in the exterior, but convenient within. Nor did I forget what is the natural pleasure of every man who has been a reader—I mean the filling the shelves of a tolerably large library. All these objects I kept in view, to be executed as convenience should serve; and, although I knew many years must elapse before they could be attained, I was of a disposition to comfort myself with the Spanish proverb, “Time and I against any two.”

The difficult and indispensable point, of finding a permanent subject of occupation, was now at length attained; but there was annexed to it the necessity of becoming again a candidate for public favor; for, as I was turned improver on the earth of the every-day world, it was under condition that the small tenement of Parmassus, which might be accessible to my labors, should not remain uncultivated.

I meditated, at first, a poem on the subject of Bruce, in which I made some progress, but afterwards judged it advisable to lay it aside, supposing that an English story might have more novelty; in consequence, the precedence was given to “Rokeby.”

If subject and scenery could have influenced the fate of a poem, that of “Rokeby” should have been eminently distinguished; for the grounds belonged to a dear friend, with whom I had lived in habits of intimacy for many years, and the place itself united the romantic beauties of the wilds of Scotland with the rich and smiling aspect of the southern portion of the island. But the Cavaliers and Roundheads, whom I attempted to summon up to tenant this beautiful region, had for the public neither the novelty nor the peculiar interest of the primitive Highlanders. This, perhaps, was scarcely to be expected, considering that the general mind sympathizes readily and at once with the stamp which Nature herself has affixed upon the manners of a people living in a simple and patriarchal state; whereas it has more difficulty in understanding or interesting itself in manners founded upon those peculiar habits of thinking or acting which are produced by the progress of society. We could read with pleasure the tale of the adventures of a Cossack or a Mongol Tartar, while we only wonder and stare over those of the lovers in the “Pleasing Chinese History,” where the embarrassments turn upon difficulties arising out of unintelligible delicacies peculiar to the customs and manners of that affected people.

The cause of my failure had, however, a far deeper root. The manner, or style, which, by its novelty, attracted the public in an unusual degree, had now, after having been three times before them, exhausted the patience of the reader, and began in the fourth to lose its charms. The reviewers may be said to have apostrophized the author in the language of Parnell’s Edwin:

“And here reverse the charm, he cries,
And let it fairly now suffice,
The gambol has been shown.”

The licentious combination of rhymes, in a manner not perhaps very congenial to our language, had not been confined to the author. Indeed, in most similar cases, the inventors of such novelties have their reputation destroyed by their own imitators, as Acteon fell under the fury of his own dogs. The present author, like Bobadil, had taught his trick of fence to a hundred gentlemen (and ladies!), who could fence very nearly or quite as well as himself. For this there was no remedy; the harmony became tiresome and ordinary, and both the original inventor and his invention must have fallen into contempt if he had not found out another road to public favor. What has been said of the metre only must be considered to apply equally to the structure of the poem and of the style. The very best passages of any popular style are not, perhaps, susceptible of imitation, but they may be approached by men of talent; and those who are less able to copy them at least lay hold of their peculiar features, so as to produce a strong burlesque. In either way, the effect of the manner is rendered cheap and common, and, in the latter case, ridiculous to boot. The evil consequences to an author’s reputation are at least as fatal as those which come upon the musical composer, when his melody falls into the hands of the street ballad-singer.

Of the unfavorable species of imitation, the author’s style gave room to a very large number, owing to an appearance of facility to which some of those who used the measure unquestionably leaned too far. The effect of the more favorable imitations, composed by persons of talent, was almost equally unfortunate to the original minstrel, by showing that they could overshoot him with his own bow. In short, the popularity which once attended the School, as it was called, was now fast decaying.

* * * * *

Besides all this, to have kept his ground at the crisis when “Rokeby” appeared, its author ought to have put forth his utmost strength, and to have possessed at least all his original advantages, for a mighty and unexpected rival was advancing on the stage—a rival not in poetical powers only, but in that art of attracting popularity in which the present writer had hitherto proceeded better men than himself. The reader will easily see that Byron is here meant, who, after a little vetilating of no great promise, now appeared as a serious candidate, in the first two cantos of “Childe Harold.” I was astonished at the power evinced by that work, which neither the “Hours of Idleness” nor the “English Bards and Scotch Reviewers” had prepared me to expect from its author. There was a depth in his thought, an eager abundance in his diction, which argued full confidence in the inexhaustible resources of which he felt himself possessed; and there was some appearance of that labor of the file which indicates that the author is conscious of the necessity of doing every justice to his work, that it may pass warrant. Lord Byron was also a traveller, a man whose ideas were fired by having seen, in distant scenes of difficulty and danger, the places whose very names are recorded in our bosoms as the shrines of ancient poetry. For his own misfortune, perhaps, but certainly to the high increase of his poetical character, nature had mixed in Lord Byron’s system those passions which agitate the human heart with most violence, and which may be said to have hurried his bright career to an early close. There would have been little wisdom in measuring my force with so formidable an antagonist; and I was as likely to tire of playing the second fiddle in the concert, as my audience of hearing me. Age also was advancing.

I was growing insensible to those subjects of excitation by which youth is agitated. I had around me, the most pleasant but least exciting of all society, that of kind friends and affectionate family. My circle of employments was a narrow one; it occupied me constantly, and it became daily more difficult for me to interest myself in poetical composition.

“How happily the days of Thalaba went by!”

Yet, though conscious that I must be, in the opinion of good judges, inferior to the place I had for four or five years held in letters, and feeling alike that the latter was one to which I had only a temporary right, I could not brook the idea of relinquishing literary occupation, which had been so long my chief diversion. Neither was I disposed to choose the alternative of sinking into a mere editor and commentator, though that was a species of labor which I had practiced, and to which I was attached. But I could not endure to think that I might not, whether known or concealed, do something of more importance. My inmost thoughts were those of the Trojan captain in the gallant race,—

“Non jam, prima pete, Mnestheus, neque vincere certo; Quanquam O!—sed superent, quibus hoc, Neptune, dedisti; Extremos pudcat redisse: hoc vincite, cives, Et prohibite nefas.”—EN. lib. v. 194.

I had, indeed, some private reasons for my “Quanquam O!” which were not worse than those of Mnes-had been witnessed in this country for at least two generations. ‘I awoke one morning,’ he says, ‘and found myself famous.’ In truth, he had fixed himself, at a single bound, on a summit such as no English poet had ever before attained but after a long succession of painful and comparatively neglected efforts.”—Advertizement to Byron’s Life and Works, vol. viii.

3 “I seek not now the foremost palm to gain; Though yet—but ah! that haughty wish is vain! Let those enjoy it whom the gods ordain. But to be last, the lags of all the race!—Redeem yourselves and me from that disgrace.”

Dryden.
theus. I have already hinted that the materials were collected for a poem on the subject of Bruce, and fragments of it had been shown to some of my friends and received with applause. Notwithstanding, therefore, the eminent success of Byron, and the great chance of his taking the wind out of my sails, there was, I judged, a species of cowardice in desisting from the task which I had undertaken, and it was time

1. "George Ellis and Murray have been talking something about Scott and me, George pro Scotto,—and very right too. If they want to depose him, I only wish they would not set me up as a competitor. I like the man, and admire his works to what Mr. Braham calls Enthusiasm. All such stuff can only vex him, and do me no good."—Byron's Diary, Nov. 1813—Works, vol. ii. p. 259.

2. The quarto edition was published by John Ballantyne & Co., in January, 1813.
Rokeby.

TO

JOHN B. S. MORRITT, ESQ.,

THIS POEM,

THE SCENE OF WHICH IS LAID IN HIS BEAUTIFUL DEMESNE OF ROKEBY,

IS INScribed, IN TOKEN OF SINCERE FRIENDSHIP, BY

WALTER SCOTT.¹

ADVERTISEMENT.

The Scene of this Poem is laid at Rokeby, near Greta Bridge, in Yorkshire, and shifts to the adjacent fortress of Barnard Castle, and to other places in that Vicinity.

The Time occupied by the Action is a space of Five Days, Three of which are supposed to elapse between the end of the Fifth and beginning of the Sixth Canto.

The date of the supposed events is immediately subsequent to the great Battle of Marston Moor, 3d July, 1644. This period of public confusion has been chosen without any purpose of combining the Fable with the Military or Political Events of the Civil War, but only as affording a degree of probability to the Fictitious Narrative now presented to the Public.²

Kante FIRST.

I.

The Moon is in her summer glow,
But hoarse and high the breezes blow,
And, racking o'er her face, the cloud
Varies the tincture of her shroud;
On Barnard's towers, and Tees's stream,³
She changes as a guilty dream,

When Conscience, with remorse and fear,
Goads sleeping Fancy's wild career.
Her light seems now the blush of shame,
Seems now fierce anger's darker flame,
Shifting that shade, to come and go,
Like apprehension's hurried glow;
Then sorrow's livery dims the air,
And dies in darkness, like despair.
Such varied hues the warder sees
Reflected from the woodland Tees,
Then from old Baliol's tower looks forth,
Sees the clouds mustering in the north,

1 December 31, 1812.
2 "Behold another lay from the harp of that indefatigable minstrel who has so often provoked the censure and extorted the admiration of his critics; and who, regardless of both, and following every impulse of his own inclination, has yet raised himself at once, and apparently with little effort, to the pinnacle of public favor.

"A poem thus recommended may be presumed to have already reached the whole circle of our readers, and we believe that all those readers will concur with us in considering 'Rokeby' as a composition which, if it had preceded instead of following 'Marmion' and the 'Lady of the Lake,' would have contributed, as effectually as they have done, to the establishment of Mr. Scott's high reputation. Whether, timed as it now is, it be likely to satisfy the just expectations which that reputation has excited, is a question which, perhaps, will not be decided with the same unanimity. Our own opinion is in the affirmative, but we confess that this is our revised opinion; and that when we concluded our first perusal of 'Rokeby,' our gratification was not quite unmixed with disappointment. The reflections by which this impression has been subsequently modified arise out of our general view of the poem; of the interest inspired by the fable; of the masterly delineations of the characters by whose agency the plot is unravelled; and of the spirited, nervous conciseness of the narrative."—Quarterly Review, No. xvi.

3 See Appendix, Note A.
Hears, upon turret roof and wall,
By fits the flashing raindrop fall,
Lists to the breeze’s bodging sound,
And wraps his shaggy mantle round.

II.
Those towers, which in the changeful gleam
Throw murky shadows on the stream,
Those towers of Barnard hold a guest,
The emotions of whose troubled breast,
In wild and strange confusion driven,
Rival the flitting rack of heaven.

Ere sleep stern Oswald’s senses tied,
Oft had he changed his weary side,
Composed his limbs, and vainly sought
By effort strong to banish thought.
Sleep came at length, but with a train
Of feelings true and fancies vain,
Mingling, in wild disorder cast,
The expected future with the past.
Conscience, anticipating time,
Already rues the enacted crime,
And calls her furies forth, to shake
The sounding scourge and hissing snake;
While her poor victim’s outward throws
Bear witness to his mental woes,
And show what lesson may be read
Beside a sinner’s restless bed.

III.
Thus Oswald’s laboring feelings trace
Strange changes in his sleeping face,
Rapid and ominous as these
With which the moonbeams tinge the Tees.
There might be seen of shame the blush,
There anger’s dark and fiercer flush,
While the perturbed sleeper’s hand
Seem’d grasping dagger-knife or brand.

Relax’d that grasp, the heavy sigh,
The tear in the half-opening eye,
The pal pid cheek and brow, confess’d
That grief was busy in his breast;
Nor paused that mood—a sudden start
Impell’d the life-blood from the heart;
Features convulsed, and mutterings dread,
Show terror reigns in sorrow’s stead,
That pang the painful slumber broke,
And Oswald with a start awoke.

IV.
He woke, and fear’d again to close
His eyelids in such dire repose;
He woke,—to watch the lamp, and tell
From hour to hour the castle bell,
Or listen to the owlet’s cry,
Or the sad breeze that whispers by,
Or catch by fits the tuneless rhyme
With which the warder cheats the time,
And envying think how, when the sun
Bids the poor soldier’s watch be done,
Couch’d on his straw, and fancy-free,
He sleeps like careless infancy.

V.
Far townward sounds a distant tread,
And Oswald, starting from his bed,
Hath caught it, though no human ear,
Unsharpen’d by revenge and fear,
Could o’er distinguish horse’s clank,
Until it reach’d the castle bank.

Now nigh and plain the sound appears,
The warder’s challenge now he hears,
Then clanking chains and levers tell
That o’er the moat the drawbridge fell,
And, in the castle court below,
Voices are heard, and torches glow,

The spar hath lanced his courser’s sides;
Away, away, for life he rides.
’Twas but a moment that he stood,
Then sped as if by death pursued,
But in that instant o’er his soul,
Winters of memory seem’d to roll,
And gather in that drop of time
A life of pain, an age of crime.”

6 MS.: “’Till underneath the castle bank.
Nigh and more nigh the sound appears,
The warder’s challenge next he hears.”

7 See Appendix, Note B.

“The natural superiority of the instrument over the employer, of bold, unbolstering, practiced vice over timid, selfish, crafty iniquity, is very finely painted throughout the whole of this scene and the dialogue that ensues. That the mind of Wycliffe, wrought to the utmost agony of suspense, has given such acuteness to his bodily organs as to enable him to distinguish the approach of his hired bravo, while at a distance beyond the reach of common hearing, is grandly imagined, and admirably true to nature.”—Critical Review.
As marshalling the stranger's way,
Straight for the room where Oswald lay;
The cry was,—"Tidings from the host,"1
Of weight—a messenger comes post."
Stifling the tumult of his breast,
His answer Oswald thus express'd—
"Bring food and wine, and trim the fire;
Admit the stranger, and retire."

VI.
The stranger came with heavy stride,2
The mörion's plumes his visage hide,
And the buff-coat, an ample fold,
Mantles his form's gigantic mould.3
Full slender answer deigned he
To Oswald's anxious courtesy,
But mark'd, by a disdainful smile,
He saw and scorn'd the petty wile,
When Oswald changed the torch's place,
Anxious that on the soldier's face4
Its partial lustre might be thrown,
To show his looks, yet hide his own.
His guest, the while, laid low aside
The ponderous cloak of tough bull's hide,
And to the torch glanced broad and clear
The corselet of a cuirassier;
Then from his brows the casque he drew,
And from the dank plume dash'd the dew,
From gloves of mail relieved his hands.5
And spread them to the kindling brands,
And, turning to the genial board,6
Without a health, or pledge, or word
Of meet and social reverence said,
Deeply he drank, and fiercely fed;
As free from ceremony's sway
As famish'd wolf that tears his prey.

VII.
With deep impatience, tinged with fear,
His host beheld him gorge his cheer,
And quaff the full carouse, that lent
His brow a fiercer hardiment.
Now Oswald stood a space aside,
Now paced the room with hasty stride,
In feverish agony to learn
Tidings of deep and dreadful concern,
Cursing each moment that his guest
Protracted o'er his ruffian feast.8
Yet viewing with alarm, at last,
The end of that uncouth repast,
Almost he seem'd their haste to rue,
As, at his sign, his train withdrew,
And left him with the stranger, free
To question of his mystery.
Then did his silence long proclaim
A struggle between fear and shame.

VIII.
Much in the stranger's mien appears
To justify suspicious fears.
On his dark face a scorching clime,
And toil, had done the work of time,
Roughen'd the brow, the temples bared,
And sable hairs with silver shared,
Yet left—that age alone could tame—
The lip of pride, the eye of flame;9
The full-drawn lip that upward curl'd,
The eye that seem'd to scorn the world,
That lip had terror never blest;
Ne'er in that eye had teardrop quench'd
The flash severe of swarthy glow,
That mock'd at pain, and knew not woe.
Inured to danger's direst form,
Tornado and earthquake, flood and storm,
Death had he seen by sudden blow,
By wasting plague, by tortures slow,10
By mine or breach, by steel or ball,
Knew all his shapes, and scorn'd them all.

IX.
But yet, though Bertram's harden'd look,
Unmoved, could blood and danger brook,
Still worse than apathy had place
On his swart brow and callous face;
For evil passions, cherish'd long,
Had plough'd them with impressions strong.
All that gives gloss to sin, all gay
Light folly, past with youth away,
But rooted stood, in manhood's hour,
The weeds of vice without their flower.
And yet the soil in which they grew,
Had it been tamed when life was new,

---

1 MS.: "The cry was,—'Herningham comes post,
   With tidings of a battle lost.'
As one that roamed himself from rest,
His answer," &c.
2 MS.: — "with heavy pace,
The plumed morion hid his face."
3 See Appendix, Note C.
4 MS.: "That fell upon the stranger's face."
5 MS.: — "he freed his hands."
6 MS.: "Then turn'd to the replenish'd board."
7 "The description of Bertram which follows is highly picturesque; and the rude air of conscious superiority with which he treats his employer prepares the reader to enter into the full spirit of his character. These and many other little circumstances, which none but a poetical mind could have conceived, give great relief to the stronger touches with which this excellent sketch is completed."—Critical Review.
8 MS.: "Protracted o'er his savage feast.
Yet with alarm he saw at last."
9 "As Roderick rises above Marium, so Bertram ascends above Roderick Dhu in awfulness of stature and strength of coloring. We have trembled at Roderick; but we look with doubt and suspicion at the very shadow of Bertram—and, as we approach him, we shrink with terror and antipathy from 'The lip of pride, the eye of flame.'"—British Critic.
10 See Appendix, Note D.
Had depth and vigor to bring forth\(^1\)
The harder fruits of virtuous worth.
Not that, c'en then, his heart had known
The gentler feelings’ kindly tone;
But lavish waste had been refined
To bounty in his chasten’d mind,
And lust of gold, that waste to feed,
Been lost in love of glory’s meed,
And, frantic then no more, his pride
Had ta’en fair virtue for its guide.

X.
Even now by conscience unrestrain’d,
Clogg’d by gross vice, by slaughter stain’d,
Still knew his daring soul to soar,
And mastery o’er the mind he bore;
For meager guilt, or heart less hard,
Quail’d beneath Bertram’s bold regard.\(^2\)
And this felt Oswald, while in vain
He strove, by many a winding train,
To lure his sullen guest to show,
Unask’d, the news he long’d to know,
While on far other subject hung
His heart, than falter’d from his tongue.\(^3\)
Yet nought for that his guest did deign
To note or spare his secret pain,
But still, in stern and stubborn sort,
Return’d him answer dark and short,
Or started from the theme, to range
In loose digression wild and strange,
And forced the embarrass’d host to buy,
By query close, direct reply.

XI.
A while he glowed upon the cause
Of Commons, Covenant, and Laws,
And Church Reform’d—but felt rebuke
Beneath grim Bertram’s sneering look,
Then stammer’d—\(^4\) Has a field been fought?
Has Bertram news of battle brought?
For sure a soldier famed so far
In foreign fields for feats of war,

On eve of fight ne’er left the host,
Until the field were won and lost.”—\(^5\)
“Here, in your towers by circling Tees,
You, Oswald Wycliffe, rest at ease;\(^6\)
Why deem it strange that others come
To share such safe and easy home,
From fields where danger, death, and toil,
Are the reward of civil broil?”—\(^7\)
“Nay, mock not, friend! since well we know
The near advances of the foe,
To mar our northern army’s work,
Encamp’d before beleaguer’d York;
Thy horse with valiant Fairfax lay,\(^8\)
And must have fought—how went the day?”—

XII.
“Wouldst hear the tale?—On Marston heath?
Met, front to front, the ranks of death;
Flourish’d the trumpets fierce, and now
Fired was each eye, and flush’d each brow;
On either side loud clamors ring,
‘God and the Cause!’—‘God and the King!’
Right English all, they rush’d to blows,
With nought to win, and all to lose,
I could have laugh’d—but lack’d the time—
To see, in phrenesy sublime,
How the fierce zealots fought and bled,
For king or state, as humor led;
Some for a dream of public good,
Some for church-tippet, gown and hood,
Draining their veins, in death to claim,
A patriot’s or a martyr’s name.—
Led Bertram Risingham the hearts\(^9\)
That counter’d there on adverse parts,
No superstitious fool had I
Sought El Dorados in the sky!
Chili had heard me through her states,
And Lima oped her silver gates,
Rich Mexico I had march’d through,
And sack’d the splendors of Peru,
Till sunk Pizarro’s daring name,
And, Cortez, thine, in Bertram’s fame.”—

\(^1\) MS.: “Shew’d depth and vigor to bring forth
The nobler fruits of virtuous worth.
Then had the lust of gold accret
Been lost in glory’s nobler thirst,
And deep revenge for trivial cause
Been zeal for freedom and for laws,
And, frantic then no more, his pride
Had ta’en fair honor for its guide.”

\(^2\) MS.: “stern regard.”

\(^3\) “The ‘mastery’ obtained by such a being as Bertram over the timid wickedness of inferior villains is well delineated in the conduct of Oswald, who, though he had not hesitated to propose to him the number of his kinsman, is described as fearing to ask him the direct question whether the crime has been accomplished. We must confess, for our own parts, that we did not, till we came to the second reading of the canto, perceive the propriety, and even the moral beauty, of this circumstance. We are now quite convinced that, in introducing it, the poet has been guided by an accurate perception of the intricacies of human nature. The scene between King John

\(^4\) MS.: “Safe sit you, Oswald, and at ease.”

\(^5\) MS.: “Award the meed of civil broil.”

\(^6\) MS.: “Thy horsemen on the outposts lay.”

\(^7\) See Appendix, Note E.

\(^8\) MS.: “Led I but half of such bold hearts
As counter’d there,” &c.

\(^9\) The Quarterly Reviewer (No. xvi.) thus states the causes of the hesitation he had had in arriving at the ultimate opinion that “Rokeby” was worthy of the “high praise” already quoted from the commencement of his article:—“We confess, then, that in the language and versification of this poem, we were,
Complete the woeful tale, and say
Who fell upon that fatal day;
What leaders of repute and name
Bought by their death a deathless fame.\(^2\)
If such my direst foe’s doom,
My tears shall dew his honor’d tomb.—
No answer?—Friend, of all our host,
Thou know’st whom I should hate the most,
Whom thou too, once, Wert wont to hate,
Yet leavest me doubtful of his fate.”—
With look unmoved,—“Of friend or foe,
Aught,” answer’d Bertram, “wouldst thou know,
Demand in simple terms and plain;
A soldier’s answer shalt thou gain;—
For question dark, or riddle high,
I have nor judgment nor reply.”

XV.
The wrath his art and fear suppress’d
Now blaz’d at once in Wycliffe’s breast;
And brave, from man someanly born,
Roused his hereditary scorn.
“Wretch! hast thou paid thy bloody debt?
PHILIP OF MORHAM, lives he yet?
False to thy patron or thine oath,
Trait’rous or perjured, one or both,
Slave! hast thou kept thy promise plight,
To slay thy leader in the fight?”
Then from his seat the soldier sprung,
And Wycliffe’s hand he strongly wrung;
His grasp, as hard as glove of mail,
Forced the red blood-drop from the nail.
“A health!” he cried; and, ere he quaff’d,
Flung from him Wycliffe’s hand, and laugh’d:—
“Now, Oswald Wycliffe, speaks thy heart!
Now play’st thou well thy genuine part!
Worthy, but for thy craven fear,
Like me to roam a bucanier.
What reck’st thou of the Cause divine,
If Morham’s wealth and lands be thine?
What carest thou for beleaguer’d York,
If this good hand have done its work?
Or what, though Fairfax and his best
Are reddening Marston’s swarthy breast,

‘And, Cortez, thine, in Bertram’s fame’.

“The author, surely, cannot require to be told that the falsehood of these jingling couplets is less offensive than their obscurity. The first line is unintelligible, because the conditional word ‘if,’ on which the meaning depends, is neither expressed nor implied in it; and the third line is equally faulty, because the sentence, when restored to its natural order, can only express the exact converse of the speaker’s intention. We think it necessary to remonstrate against these barbarous inversions, because we consider the rules of grammar as the only shackles by which the Hudibrastic metre, already so licentious, can be confined within tolerable limits.”

\(^1\) MS.: “The doubtful tides of battle reel’d.”

\(^2\) MS.: “Chose death in preference to shame.”
If Philip Mortham, with them lie,
Lending his life-blood to the dye?—
Sit, then! and as his comrades boon
Carousing after victory,
When tales are told of blood and fear
That boys and women shrink to hear,
From point to point I frankly tell
The deed of death as it befell.

XVI.
"When purposed vengeance I forgo,
Term me a wretch, nor deem me foe;
And when an insult I forgive,4
Then brand me as a slave, and live!—
Philip of Mortham is with those Whom Bertram Risingham calls foes;
Or whom more sure revenge attends,5
If number'd with ungrateful friends, as was his wont, ere battle glow'd,
Along the marshall's ranks he rode,
And wore his visor up the while;
I saw his melancholy smile,
When, full opposed in front, he knew
Where Rookery's kindred banner flew.
'And thus,' he said, 'will friends divide!'—
I heard, and thought how, side by side,
We two had turn'd the battle's tide,
In many a well-debated field,
Where Bertram's breast was Philip's shield.
I thought on Darien's deserts pale,
Where death bestrides the evening gale,
How o'er my friend my cloak I threw,
And fenceless faced the deadly dew;
I thought on Quariana's cliff,
Where, rescued from our foundering ship,
Through the white breakers' wrath I bore
Exhausted Mortham to the shore;
And when his side an arrow found,
I suck'd the Indian's venom'd wound.
These thoughts like torrents rush'd along,6
To sweep away my purpose strong.

XVII.
"Hearts are not flint, and flints are rent;
Hearts are not steel, and steel is bent.
When Mortham bade me, as of yore,
Be near him in the battle's roar,
I scarcely saw the spears laid low,
I scarcely heard the trumpets blow;

Lost was the war in inward strife,
Debating Mortham's death or life.
'Twas then I thought how, lured to come
As partner of his wealth and home,
Years of piratical wandering o'er,
With him I sought our native shore.
But Mortham's lord grew far estranged
From the bold heart with whom he ranged;
Doubts, horrors, superstitious fears,
Sudden'd and dimm'd descending years;
The wily priests their victim sought,
And damn'd each free-born deed and thought.
Then must I seek another home,
My license shook his sober dome;
If gold he gave, in one wild day
I revell'd thrice the sum away.
An idle outcast then I stray'd,
Unfit for tillage or for trade,
Deem'd, like the steel of rusted lance,
Useless and dangerous at once.
The women fear'd my hardy look,
At my approach the peaceful shoo;
The merchant saw my glance of flame,
And lock'd his hoards when Bertram came;
Each child of coward peace kept far
From the neglected son of war.

XVIII.
"But civil discord gave the call,
And made my trade the trade of all.
By Mortham urged, I came again
His vessels to the fight to train.
What guerdon waited on my care?8
I could not cant of creed or prayer;
Sour fanatics each trust obtain'd,
And I, dishonor'd and disdain'd,
Gain'd but the high and happy lot
In these poor arms to front the shot!—
All this thou know'st, thy gestures tell
Yet hear it o'er, and mark it well.
'Tis honor bids me now relate
Each circumstance of Mortham's fate.

XIX.
"Thoughts, from the tongue that slowly part,
Glance quick as lightning through the heart.
As my spur press'd my courser's side,
Philip of Mortham's cause was tried,
And, ere the charging squadrons mix'd,
His plea was cast, his doom was fix'd.

1 MS.: "And heart's blood lend to aid the dye?—
   Sit, then! and as to comrades boon
   Carousing for achievement won."
5 MS.: "Whom surest his revenge attends,
   If number'd once among his friends."
2 MS.: "Frank, as from mate to mate, I tell
   What way the deed of death befell."
6 MS.: "These thoughts rush'd on, like torrent's away,
   To sweep my stern resolve away."
3 MS.: ——— "each liberal."
7 MS.: "But of my labor what the need?
   I could not cant of church or creed."
I watch'd him through the doubtful fray,
That changed as March's moody day,1
Till, like a stream that bursts its bank,2
Fierce Rupert rush'd on our flank.
'Twas then, midst tumult, smoke, and strife,
Where each man fought for death or life,
'Twas then I fired my petrelone,
And Mortham, steed and rider, fell.
One dying look he upward cast,
Of wrath and anguish—'twas his last.
Think not that there I stopp'd, to view
What of the battle should ensue;
But ere I clear'd that bloody press,
Our northern horse ran masterless;
Monckton and Mitton told the news,3
How troops of Roundheads chok'd the Ouse,
And many a bonny Scot, aghast,
Spurring his palfrey northward, past,
Cursing the day when zeal or meed
First lured their Lesley o'er the Tweed.4
Yet when I reach'd the banks of Swale,
Had rumor learn'd another tale;
With his bar'd horse, fresh tidings say,
Stout Cromwell has redeem'd the day.5
But whether false the news, or true,
Oswald, I reek as light as you."

XX.
Not then by Wycliffe might be shown
How his pride startled at the tone
In which his complie, fierce and free,
Asserted guilt's equality.
In smoothest terms his speech he wove,
Of endless friendship, faith, and love;
Promised and vow'd in courteous sort,
But Bertram broke professions short.
"Wycliffe, be sure not here I stay,
No, scarcely till the rising day;
Warn'd by the legends of my youth,6
I trust not an associate's truth.
Do not my native dales prolong
Of Percy Rede the tragic song,
Train'd forward to his bloody fall
By Girsonfield, that treacherous Hall?7
Oft, by the Pringle's haunted side,
The shepherd sees his spectre glide.
And near the spot that gave me name,
The moated mound of Risingham,8
Where Reed upon her margin sees
Sweet Woodburne's cottages and trees,

Some ancient sculptor's art has shown
An outlaw's image on the stone;9
Unmatch'd in strength, a giant he,
With quiver'd back,10 and kirtled knee.
Ask how he died, that hunter bold,
The tameless monarch of the wold,
And age and infancy can tell,
By brother's treachery he fell.
Thus warn'd by legends of my youth,
I trust to no associate's truth.

XXI.
"When last we reason'd of this deed,
Nought, I bethink me, was agreed,
Or by what rule, or when, or where,
The wealth of Mortham we should share;
Then list, while I the portion name
Our differing laws give each to claim.
Thou, vassal sworn to England's throne,
Her rules of heritage must own:
They deal thee, as to nearest heir,
Thy kinsman's lands and livings fair,
And these I yield:—do thou revere
The statutes of the Bucanier.11
Friend to the sea, and foeman sworn
To all that on her waves are borne,
When falls a mate in battle broil,
His comrade heirs his portion'd spoil;
When dies in fight a daring foe,
He claims his wealth who struck the blow;
And either rule to me assigns
Those spoils of Indian seas and mines
Hoarded in Mortham's caverns dark;
Ingot of gold and diamond spark,
Chalice and plate from churches borne,
And gems from shrieking beauty torn,
Each string of pearl, each silver bar,
And all the wealth of western war,
I go to search where, dark and deep,
Those transatlantic treasures sleep.
Thou must alone—for, lacking thee,
The heir will scarce find entrance free;
And then farewell. I haste to try
Each varied pleasure wealth can buy;
When cloy'd each wish, these wars afford
Fresh work for Bertram's restless sword."

XXII.
An undecided answer hung
On Oswald's hesitating tongue.

1 MS.: "That changed as with a whirlwind's sway."
2 "dashing
On thy war-horse through the ranks,
Like a stream which burst its banks."
3 MS.: "Hot Rapert on the spur pursues;
Whole troops of flyers choked the Ouse."
4 See Appendix, Note F.
5 See Appendix, Note G.
6 MS.: "Taught by the legends of my youth
To trust to no associate's truth."
7 See Appendix, Note II.
8 MS.: "Still by the spot that gave me name,
The moated camp of Risingham,
A giant form the stranger sees,
Half hid by rifted rocks and trees."
9 See Appendix, Note I.
10 MS.: "With bow in hand," &c.
11 See Appendix, Note K.
Despite his craft, he heard with awe
This ruffian stabber fix the law;
While his own troubled passions veer
Through hatred, joy, regret, and fear:—
Joy'd at the soul that Bertram flies,
He grudged the murderer's mighty prize,
Hated his pride's presumptuous tone,
And fear'd towend with him alone.
At length, that middle course to steer,
To cowardice and craft so dear,
"His charge," he said, "would ill allow
His absence from the fortress now;
Wilfrid on Bertram should attend,
His son should journey with his friend."

XXIII.
Contempt kept Bertram's anger down,
And wreathed to savage smile his frown.
"Wilfrid, or thou—tis one to me,
Whichever bears the golden key.
Yet think not but I mark, and smile
To mark, thy poor and selfish wife!
If injury from me you fear,
What, Oswald Wycliffe, shields thee here?
I've sprung from walls more high than these,
I've swam through deeper streams than Tees.
Might I not stab thee, ere one yell
Could rouse the distant sentinel?
Start not—it is not my design,
But, if it were, weak fence were thine;
And trust me that, in time of need,
This hand hath done more desperate deed.
Go, haste and rouse thy slumbering son;
Time calls, and I must needs be gone."

XXIV.
Nought of his sire's u ngenerous part
Polluted Wilfrid's gentle heart;
A heart too soft from early life
To hold with fortune needful strife.
His sire, while yet a hardier race
Of numerous sons were Wycliffe's grace,
On Wilfrid set contemptuous brand,
For feeble heart and forceless hand;
But a fond mother's care and joy
Were centred in her sickly boy.
No touch of childhood's frolic mood
Show'd the elastic spring of blood;

Hour after hour he loved to pore
On Shakspeare's rich and varied lore,
But turn'd from martial scenes and light,
From Falstaff's feast and Percy's fight,
To ponder Jaques' moral strain,
And muse with Hamlet, wise in vain;
And weep himself to soft repose
O'er gentle Desdemona's woes.

XXV.
In youth he sought not pleasures found
By youth in horse, and hawk, and hound,
But loved the quiet joys that wake
By lonely stream and silent lake;
In Deepdale's solitude to lie,
Where all is cliff and copse and sky;
To climb Catcacle's dizzy peak,
Or lone Pendragon's mound to seek.?
Such was his wont; and there his dream
Soar'd on some wild fantastic theme,
Of faithful love, or ceaseless spring,
Till Contemplation's weared wing
The enthusiast could no more sustain,
And sad he sunk to earth again.

XXVI.
He loved—as many a lay can tell,
Preserved in Stanmore's lonely dell;
For his was minstrel's skill, he caught
The art unteachable, untaught;
He loved—his soul did nature frame
For love, and fancy nursed the flame;
Vainly he loved—for seldom swain
Of such soft mould is loved again;
Silent he loved—in every gaze
Was passion, friendship in his phrase,
So mused his life away—till died
His brethren all, their father's pride.
Wilfrid is now the only heir
Of all his stratagems and care,
And destined, darkling, to pursue
Ambition's maze by Oswald's clue.4

XXVII.
Wilfrid must love and woo the bright
Matilda, heir of Rokeyb's Knight.
To love her was an easy hest,
The secret empress of his breast;
such overstrained and even morbid sensibility, as are portrayed in the character of Edwin, existing in so rude a state of society as that which Beattie has represented; but these qualities, even when found in the most advanced and polished stages of life, are rarely, very rarely, united with a robust and healthy frame of body. In both these particulars, the character of Wilfrid is exempt from the objections to which we think that of the Minstrel Hable. At the period of the Civil Wars, in the higher orders of society, intellectual refinement had advanced to a degree sufficient to give probability to its existence. The remainder of our argument will be best explained by the beautiful lines of the poet

1 MS.: ——— "while yet around him stood
A numerous race of hardier mood."
2 "And oft the craggy cliff he loved to climb,
When all in mist the world below was lost,
What dreadful pleasure! there to stand sublime,
Like shipwreck'd mariner on desert coast."
Beattie's Minstrel.
3 MS.: "Was love, but friendship in his phrase."
4 "The prototype of Wilfrid may perhaps be found in Beattie's Edwin; but in some essential respects it is made more true to nature than that which probably served for its original. The possibility may perhaps be questioned (its great improbability is unquestionable) of such excessive refinement,

5 MS.: "And first must Wilfrid woo," &c.
To woo her was a harder task
To one that durst not hope or ask.
Yet all Matilda could, she gave
In pity to her gentle slave;
Friendship, esteem, and fair regard,
And praise, the poet's best reward!
She read the tales his taste approved,
And sung the lays he framed or loved;
Yet, loth to nurse the fatal flame
Of hopeless love in friendship's name,
In kind captivity she oft withdrew
The favoring glance to friendship due;
Then grieved to see her victim's pain,
And gave the dangerous smiles again.

XXVIII.
So did the suit of Wilfrid stand,
When war's loud summons waked the land.
Three banners, floating o'er the Tees,
The woe-forbidding peasant sees;
In concert oft they braided of old
The bordering Scot's incursion bold;
Frowning defiance in their pride;
Their vassals now and lords divide.
From his fair hall on Greta banks,
The Knight of Rokeby led his ranks,
To aid the valiant northern Earls
Who drew the sword for royal Charles.
Mortham, by marriage near allied,—
His sister had been Rokeby's bride,
Though long before the civil fray
In peaceful grave the lady lay,—
Philip of Mortham raised his band,
And marched at Fairfax's command;
While Wycliffe, bound by many a train
Of kindred art with wily Vane,
Less prompt to brave the bloody field,
Made Barnard's battalions his shield,
Secured them with his Lunedale powers,
And for the Commons held the towers.

XXIX.
The lovely heir of Rokeby's Knight
Waits in his halls the event of flight;
For England's war revered the claim
Of every unprotected name,
And spared, amid its fiercest rage,
Childhood and womanhood and age.

But Wilfrid, son to Rokeby's foes,
Must the dear privilege forgo,
By Greta's side, in evening gray,
To steal upon Matilda's way,
Striving, with fond hypocrisy,
For careless step and vacant eye;
Calming each anxious look and glance,
To give the meeting all to chance,
Or framing, as a fair excuse,
The book, the pencil, or the muse:
Something to give, to sing, to say,
Some modern tale, some ancient lay.
Then, while the long'd-for minutes last,—
Ah! minutes quickly over-past!—
Recording each expression free,
Of kind or careless courtesy,
Each friendly look, each softer tone,
As food for fancy when alone.
All this is o'er—but still, unseen,
Wilfrid may lurk in Eastwood green,
To watch Matilda's wond'ring round,
While springs his heart at every sound.
She comes!—'tis but a passing sight,
Yet serves to cheat his weary night;
She comes not,—he will wait the hour
When her lamp lightens in the tower;
'Tis something yet, if, as she pass'd,
Her shade is o'er the lattice cast.
"What is my life, my hope?" he said;
"Alas! a transitory shade."

XXX.
Thus wore his life, though reason strove
For mastery in vain with love,
Forcing upon his thoughts the sum
Of present woe and ills to come,
While still he turn'd impatient ear
From Truth's intrusive voice severe,
Gentle, indifferent, and subdued,
In all but this, unmoved he view'd
Each outward change of ill and good:
But Wilfrid, doèle, soft, and mild,
Was Fancy's spoil'd and wayward child;
In her bright ear she bade him ride,
With one fair form to grace his side,
Or, in some wild and lone retreat,
Flung her high spells around his seat,
Bathed in her dews his languid head,
Her fairy mantle o'er him spread,
For him her opiates gave to flow,
Which he who tastes can ne'er forego,
And placed him in her circle, free
From every stern reality,
Till, to the Visionary, seem
Her day-dreams truth, and truth a dream.

XXXI.
Woe to the youth whom Fancy gains,
Winning from Reason's hand the reins—
Pity and woe! for such a mind
Is soft, contemplative, and kind;
And woe to those who train such youth,
And spare to press the rights of truth,
The mind to strengthen and anneal,
While on the styphyl glows the steel!
Oh teach him, while your lessons last,
To judge the present by the past;
Remind him of each wish pursued,
How rich it glow'd with promised good;
Remind him of each wish enjoy'd,
How soon his hopes possession cloy'd!
Tell him, we play unequal game
Where'er we shoot by Fancy's aim;¹
And, ere he strip him for her race,
Show the conditions of the chase.

Two sisters by the goal are set,
Cold Disappointment and Regret:
One disenchant's the winner's eyes,
And strips of all its worth the prize;
While one augments its gaudy show,
More to enhance the loser's woe.²
The victor sees his fairy gold,
Transfigur'd, when won, to drizzly mold,
But still the vanquish'd mourns his loss,
And rues, as gold, that glittering dross.

¹ In the MS., after this couplet, the following lines conclude the stanza:

"That all who on her visions press
Find disappointment dog success;
But, miss'd their wish, lamenting hold
Her gilding false for sterling gold."

² "Soft and smooth are Fancy's flowery ways;
And yet, even there, if left without a guide,
The young adventurer unsafely plays.
Eyes, dazzled long by Fiction's gaudy rays,
In modest Truth no light nor beauty find;
And who, my child, would trust the meteor-blaze
That soon must fail, and leave the wanderer blind,
More dark and helpless far than if it never had shone?

"Fancy enervates while it soothes the heart,
And, while it dazzles, wounds the mental sight;
To joy each heightening charm it can impart,
But wraps the hour of woe in tenfold night.
And often, where no real ills affright,
Its visionary fiends, an endless train,
Assail with equal or superior might,
And through the throbbing heart, and dizzy brain,

XXXII.
More wouldst thou know—yon tower survey,
You couch unpress'd since parting day,
You untrimm'd lamp, whose yellow gleam
Is mingling with the cold moonbeam,
And you thin form!—the hectic red
On his pale cheek unequal spread;²
The head reclined, the loosen'd hair,
The limbs relax'd, the mournful air.—
See, he looks up;—a woeful smile
Lightens his woé-worn cheek a while,—
'Tis Fancy wakes some idle thought,
To gild the ruin she has wrought;
For, like the bat of Indian brakes,
Her pinions fan the wond she makes,
And soothing thus the dreamer's pain,
She drinks his life-blood from the vein.⁴
Now to the lattice turn his eyes,
Vain hope! to see the sun arise.
The moon with clouds is still o'ercast,
Still howls by fits the stormy blast;
Another hour must wear away
Ere the east kindle into day;
And hark! to waste that weary hour,
He tries the minstrel's magic power.

XXXIII.

Song.

TO THE MOON.⁵

Hail to thy cold and clouded beam,
Pale pilgrim of the troubled sky!
Hail, though the mists that o'er thee stream
Lend to thy brow their sullen dye;⁶
How should thy pure and peaceful eye
Untroubled view our scenes below,
Or how a fearless beam supply
To light a world of war and woe!

And shivering nerves, shoot stings of more than mortal pain."

BEATTIE.

³ MS.: "On his pale cheek in crimson glow;
The short and painful sighs that show
The shrivell'd lip, the teeth's white row,
The head reclined," &c.

⁴ MS.: "the sleeper's pain
Drinks his dear life-blood from the vein."

⁵ The little poem that follows is, in our judgment, one of the best of Mr. Scott's attempts in this kind. He certainly is not in general successful as a song-writer; but, without any extraordinary effort, here are pleasing thoughts, polished expressions, and musical verisimilitude."—Monthly Review.

⁶ MS.: "Are tarnishing thy lovely dye!
A sad excuse let Fancy try—
How should so kind a planet show
Her stainless silver's lustre high,
To light a world of war and woe!"
Fair Queen! I will not blame thee now,
As once by Greta's fairy side;
Each little cloud that diad'm thy brow
Did then an angel's beauty hide.
And of the shades I then could chide,
Still are the thoughts to memory dear.
For, while a softer strain I tried,
They hid my blush, and calm'd my fear.

Then did I swear thy ray serene
Was form'd to light some lonely dell,
By two fond lovers only seen,
Reflected from the crystal well,
Or sleeping on their mossy cell,
Or quivering on the lattice bright,
Or glancing on their couch, to tell
How swiftly wanes the summer night!

XXXIV.
He starts—a step at this lone hour!
A voice!—his father seeks the tower,
With haggard look and troubled sense,
Fresh from his dreadful conference.
"Wilfrid! what, not to sleep address'd?
Thou hast no cares to chase thy rest.
Mortham has fall'n on Marston Moor;"
Bertram brings warrant to secure
His treasures, bought by spoil and blood,
For the state's use and public good.
The menials will thy voice obey;
Let his commission have its way,
In every point, in every word."—
Then, in a whisper,—"Take thy sword!
Bertram is—what I must not tell.
I hear his hasty step—farewell!"

Rokeby.

CANTO SECOND.

I.
Far in the chambers of the west
The gale had sigh'd itself to rest;

The moon was cloudless now and clear,
But pale, and soon to disappear.
The thin grey clouds wax dimly light
On Brusleton and Houghton height;
And the rich dale that eastward lay
Waited the wakening touch of day
To give its woods and cultured plain,
And towers and spires, to light again.
But, westward, Stanmore's shapeless swell,
And Lunedale wild, and Kelton-fell,
And rock-begirdled Gilmanscar,
And Arikingarth, lay dark afar;
While, as a livelier twilight falls,
Emerge proud Barnard's banner'd walls,
High crown'd he sits, in dawning pale,
The sovereign of the lovely vale.

II.
What prospects, from his watch-tower high,
Gleam gradual on the warden's eye!—
Far sweeping to the east he sees
Down his deep wood the course of Tees,
And tracks his wanderings by the steam
Of summer vapors from the stream;
And ere he paced his destined hour
By Brackenbury's dungeon tower,
These silver mists shall melt away,
And dew the woods with glittering spray.
Then in broad lustre shall be shown
That mighty trench of living stone,
And each huge trunk that from the side
Reclines him o'er the darksome dale,
Where Tees, full many a fathom low,
Wears with his rage no common foe;
For pebbly bank, nor sand-bed here,
Nor clay-mound, checks his fierce career,
Condemn'd to mine a channel'd way
O'er solid sheets of marble gray.

III.
Nor Tees alone, in dawning bright,
Shall rush upon the ravish'd sight;
But many a tributary stream
Each from its own dark dell shall gleam:

1 MS.: "Here's Risingham brings tidings sure,
Mortham has fall'n on Marston Moor;
And he hath warrant to secure," &c.

2 MS.: "See that they give his warrant way."

3 With the MS. of stanzas xxxviii. to xxxiv. Scott thus addresses his printer:"I send you the whole of the canto.
I wish Erskine and you would look it over together, and consider whether, upon the whole matter, it is likely to make an impression. If it does really come to good, I think there are no limits to the interest of that style of composition; for the variety of life and character are boundless.

"I don't know whether to give Matilda a mother or not. Decency requires she could have one; but she is as likely to be in my way as the gudeman's mother, according to the proverb, is always in that of the gudewife. Yours truly, W. S."—Abbotsford (Oct. 1812).

4 See Appendix, Note L.

5 MS.: "Betwixt the gate and Baliol's tower."

6 MS.: "Those deep-hewn banks of living stone."

"We cannot close the first canto without bestowing the highest praise on it. The whole design of the picture is excellent; and the contrast presented to the gloomy and fearful opening by the calm and innocent conclusion is masterly. Never were two characters more clearly and forcibly set in opposition than those of Bertram and Wilfrid. Oswald completes the group; and, for the moral purposes of the painter, is perhaps superior to the others. He is admirably designed — 'that middle course to steer,
To cowardice and craft so dear.'

Monthly Review."
Staindrop, who, from her sylvan bowers, 1
Salutes proud Raby’s battled towers;
The rural brook of Egliston,
And Balder, named from Odin’s son;
And Greta, to whose banks ere long
We lead the lovers of the song;
And silver Lune, from Stanmore wild,
And fairy Thorsgill’s murmuring child,
And last and least, but loveliest still,
Romantic Deepdale’s slender rill.
Who in that dimwood glen hath stray’d,
Yet long’d for Roslin’s magic glade?
Who, wandering there, hath sought to change
Even for that vale so stern and strange,
Where Cartland’s Crags, fantastic rent,
Through her green copese like spires are sent?
Yet, Albin, yet the praise be thine,
 Thy scenes and story to combine!
Thou bidst him who by Roslin strays
List to the deeds of other days;
 ‘Mid Cartland’s Crags thou show’st the cave,
The refuge of thy champion brave; 2
Giving each rock its storied tale,
Pouring a lay for every dale,
Knitting, as with a moral band,
Thy native legends with thy land,
To lend each scene the interest high
Which genius beams from Beauty’s eye.

IV.
Bertram awaited not the sight
Which sunrise shows from Barnard’s height,
But from the towers, preventing day,
With Wilfrid took his early way,
While misty dawn and moonbeam pale
Still mingled in the silent dale.
By Barnard’s bridge of stately stone
The southern bank of Tees they won;
Their winding path then eastward cast,
And Egliston’s gray ruins pass’d; 4
Each on his own deep visions bent,
Silent and sad they onward went.
Well may you think that Bertram’s mood 5
To Wilfrid savage seem’d and rude;
Well may you think bold Risingham
Held Wilfrid trivial, poor, and tame;
And small the intercourse, I ween,
Such ungenial souls between.

V.
Stern Bertram shunn’d the nearer way,
Through Rokeby’s park and chase that lay,
And, skirting high the valley’s ridge,
They cross’d by Greta’s ancient bridge.
Descending where her waters wind
Free for a space and unconfined,
As ’scape from Brignall’s darkwood glen,
She seeks wild Mortham’s deeper den.
There, as his eye glanced o’er the mound
Raised by that Legion’s long renown’d,
Whose votive shrine asserts their claim,
Of pious, faithful, conquering fame,
“Stern sons of war!” said Wilfrid sigh’d,
“Behold the boast of Roman pride!
What now of all your toils are known?
A grassy trench, a broken stone!”—
This to himself; for moral strain
To Bertram were address’d in vain.

VI.
Of different mood, a deeper sigh
Awoke when Rokeby’s turrets high 6
Were northward in the dawning seen
To rear them o’er the thicket green.
Oh then, though Spenser’s self had stray’d
Beside him through the lovely glade,
Lending his rich luxuriant glow
Of fancy, all its charms to show,
Pointing the stream rejoicing free,
As captive set at liberty,
Flashing her sparkling waves abroad, 8
And clamoring joyful on her road;
Pointing where, up the sunny banks,
The trees retire in scatter’d ranks,
Save where, advanced before the rest,
On knoll or hillock rears his crest,
Lonely and huge, the giant oak,
As champions, when their band is broke,
Stand forth to guard the rearward post,
The bulwark of the scatter’d host—
All this, and more, might Spenser say,
Yet waste in vain his magic lay,
While Wilfrid eyed the distant tower
Whose lattice lights Matilda’s bower.

VII.
The open vale is soon pass’d o’er,
Rokeby, though nigh, is seen no more; 9
And nought of mutual interest lay
To bind the comrades of the way.”

1 MS.: “Staindrop, who, on her sylvan way, Salutes proud Raby’s turrets gray.”
2 See Notes to the song of Fair Rosabelle, in the “Lay of the Last Minstrel.”
3 Cartland Crags, near Lanark, celebrated as among the favorite retreats of Sir William Wallace.
4 See Appendix, Note M.
5 MS.: “For brief the intercourse, I ween, Such ungenial souls between; Well may you think stern Risingham Held Wilfrid trivial, poor, and tame;”
6 See Appendix, Note N.
7 See Appendix, Note O.
8 MS.: “Flashing to heaven her sparkling spray, And clamoring joyful on her way.”
9 MS.: “And Rokeby’s tower is seen no more; Sinking ’mid Greta’s thickets green, Journeymen seek another scene.”
GLEN OF THE GRETA.

"The cliffs that rear their haughty head
High o'er the river's darksome bed."

ROKERY, Canto II.
Sinking 'mid Greta's thickets deep,
A wild and darker course they keep,
A stern and lone yet lovely road
As e'er the foot of minstrel trode!
Broad shadows o'er their passage fell,
Deeper and narrower grew the dell;
It seem'd some mountain, rent and riven,
A channel for the stream had given,
So high the cliffs of limestone gray
Hung beauteously o'er the torrent's way,
Yielding, along their rugged base,
A flinty footpath's niggard space,
Where he who winds 'twixt rock and wave
May hear the headlong torrent rave,
And like a steed in frantic fit,
That flings the froth from curb and bit,
May view her cha'ise her waves to spray,
O'er every rock that bars her way,
Till foam-globes on her eddies ride,
Thick as the schemes of human pride
That down life's current drive amain,
As frail, as frothy, and as vain!

VIII.

The cliffs that rear their haughty head
High o'er the river's darksome bed
Were now all naked, wild, and gray,
Now waving all with greenwood spray;
Here trees to every crevice clung,
And o'er the dell their branches hung;
And there, all splinter'd and uneven,
The shiver'd rocks ascend to heaven;
Oft, too, the ivy swath'd their breast,
And wreathed its garland round their crest,
Or from the spires bade loosely flare
Its tendrils in the middle air;
As pennons wont to wave of old
O'er the high feast of baron bold,
When revel'd loud the feudal rout,
And the arch'd halls return'd their shout.
Such and more wild is Greta's roar,
And such the echoes from her shore;
And so the ivy'd banners gleam,
Waved wildly o'er the brawling stream.

IX.

Now from the stream the rocks recede,
But leave between no sunny mead,
No, nor the spot of pebbly sand,
Oft found by such a mountain strand;
Forming such warm and dry retreat
As fancy deems the lonely seat
Where hermit, wandering from his cell,
His rosary might love to tell.
But here, 'twixt rock and river, grew
A dismal grove of sable yew,
With whose sad tints were mingled seen
The blighted fir's sepulchral green.
Seem'd that the trees their shadows cast,
The earth that nourish'd them to blast;
For never knew that swarthy grove
The verdant hue that fairies love;
Nor wilding green, nor woodland flower,
Arose within its baleful bower:
The dank and sable earth receives
Its only carpet from the leaves,
That, from the withering branches cast,
Bestrew'd the ground with every blast.
Though now the sun was o'er the hill,
In this dark spot 'twas twilight still,
Save that on Greta's farther side
Some straggling beams through copsewood glide;
And wild and savage contrast made
That dingle's deep and funeral shade
With the bright tints of early day,
Which, glimmering through the ivy spray,
On the opposing summit lay.

X.

The lated peasant shunn'd the dell;
For Superstition wont to tell
Of many a grisly sound and sight,
Scaring his path at dead of night.
When Christmas logs blaze high and wide,
Such wonders speed the festal tide;
While Curiosity and Fear,
Pleasure and Pain, sit crouching near,
Till childhood's cheek no longer glows,
And village maidens lose the rose.

1 See Appendix, Note P.
2 MS.: "Yielding their rugged base beside
A {flinty} path by Greta's side."
3 MS.: "That flings the foam from curb and bit,
Chasing her waves to {white} wrath,
O'er every rock that bars her path,
Till down her boiling eddies ride," &c.
4 MS.: "The frequent ivy swath'd their breast,
And wreathed its tendrils round their crest,
Or from their summit bade them fall,
And tremble o'er the Greta's brawl."
5 MS.: "And so the ivy's banners {gleam},
{Waved wildly trembling o'er the scene.}
{Waved wild above the clamorous stream.}
6 MS.: "{a torrent's strand;
Where in the warm and dry retreat
May fancy form some hermit's seat.}
7 MS.: "A darksome grove of funeral yew,
Where trees a baleful shadow cast,
The ground that nourish'd them to blast,
Mingled with whose sad tints were seen
The blighted fir's sepulchral green."
8 MS.: "In this dark grove 'twas twilight still,
Save that upon the rocks opposed
Some straggling beams of morn repos'd,
And wild and savage contrast made
That bleak and dark funereal shade
With the bright tints of early day,
Which, struggling through the greenwood spray,
Upon the rock's wild summit lay."
The thrilling interest rises higher,1
The circle closes high and higher,
And shuddering glance is cast behind,
As louder morns the wintry wind.
Believe that fitting scene was laid
For such wild tales in Northam glade;
For who had seen, on Greta's side,
By that dim light fierce Bertram stride,
In such a spot, at such an hour,—
If touch'd by Superstition's power,
Might well have deem'd that hell had given
A murderer's ghost to upper heaven,
While Wilfrid's form had seem'd to glide
Like his pale victim by his side.

XI.
Nor think to village swains alone
Are these unearthly terrors known;
For not to rank nor sex confined
In this vain ague of the mind:
Hearts firm as steel, as marble hard,
'Gainst faith, and love, and pity barr'd,
Have quaked, like aspen leaves in May,
Beneath its universal sway.
Bertram has listed many a tale
Of wonder in his native dale,
That in his secret soul retain'd
The credence they in childhood gain'd:
Nor less his wild adventurous youth
Believed in every legend's truth;
Learn'd when, beneath the tropic gale,
Full swell'd the vessel's steady sail,
And the broad Indian moon her light
Pour'd on the watch of middle night,
When seamen love to hear and tell
Of portent, prodigy, and spell; 2
What gales are sold on Lapland's shore, 3
How whistle rash bids tempests roar, 4
Of witch, of mermaid, and of sprite,
Of Erick's cap and Elmo's light; 5
Or of that Phantom Ship, whose form
Shoots like a meteor through the storm;
When the dark send comes driving hard,
And lower'd is every topsail-yard,
And canvas, wave in earthly looms,
No more to brave the storm presumes,
Then, 'mid the war of sea and sky,
Top and top-gallant hoisted high,
Full spread and crowded every sail,
The Demon Frigate braves the gale, 6
And well the doom'd spectators know
The harbinger of wreck and woe.

XII.
Then, too, were told, in stifled tone,
Marvels and omens all their own;
How, by some desert isle or key, 7
Where Spaniards wrought their cruelty,
Or where the savage pirate's mood
Repaid it home in deeds of blood,
Strange nightly sounds of woe and fear
Appall'd the listening Bucanier,
Whose light-arm'd shallap anchor'd lay
In ambush by the lonely bay.
The groan of grief, the shriek of pain,
Ring from the moonlight groves of cane;
The fierce adventurer's heart they scare,
Who wears for memory a prayer,
Curses the road-stead, and with gale
Of early morning lifts the sail,
To give, in thirst of blood and pray,
A legend for another bay.

XIII.
Thus, as a man, a youth, a child,
Train'd in the mystic and the wild,
With this on Bertram's soul at times
Rush'd a dark feeling of his crimes;
Such to his troubled soul their form,
As the pale Death Ship to the storm,
And such their omen dim and dread,
As shrieks and voices of the dead.
That pang, whose transitory force
Hover'd 'twixt horror and remorse,—
That pang, perchance, his bosom press'd,
As Wilfrid sudden he address'd:
"Wilfrid, this glen is never trod
Until the sun rides high abroad;"

they gave them unto the merchants; observing that rule, that when they unloosed the first, they should have a good gale of wind; when the second, a stronger wind; but when they united the third, they should have such cruel tempests, that they should not be able to look out of the forecastle to avoid the rocks, nor move a foot to pull down the sails, nor stand at the helm to govern the ship; and they made an unhappy trial of the truth of it who denied that there was any such power in those knots."—Olaf's Magnes' History of the Gotha, Sweden, and Vandals. Lond. 1638, fol. p. 47.——[See Note to "The Pirate," "Sale of Winds," Waverley Novels, vol. xxiv. p. 136.]

1 See Appendix, Note Q.
2 Ibid. Note R.
3 Ibid. Note S.
4 MS.: "Its fell though transitory force Hovers 'twixt pity and remorse."
Yet twice have I beheld to-day
A Form that seemed to dug our way;
Twice from my glance it seem'd to flee,
And shrou'd itself by cliff or tree.
How think'st thou?—Is our path waylaid?
Or hath thy sire my trust betray'd?
If so”—Ere, starting from his dream,
That turn'd upon a gentler theme,
Wilfrid had roused him to reply,
Bertram sprang forward, shouting high,
"What'er thou art, thou now shalt stand!"—
And forth he darted, sword in hand.

XIV.

As bursts the Levin in its wrath,1
He shot him down the sounding path;
Rock, wood, and stream, rang wildly out
To his loud step and savage shout.2
Seems that the object of his race
Hath scaled the cliffs; his frantic chase
Sidelong he turns, and now 'tis bent
Right up the rock's tall battlement;
Straining each sinew to ascend,
Foot, hand, and knee, their aid must lend.
Wilfrid, all dizzy with dismay,
Views from beneath his dreadful way:
Now to the oak's warp'd roots he clings,
Now trusts his weight to ivy strings;
Now, like the wild goat, must he dare
An unsupported leap in air,3
Hid in the shrubby rain-course now,
You mark him by the crashing bough,
And by his corselet's sullen clank,
And by the stones spurn'd from the bank,
And by the hawk scared from her nest,
And ravens creaking o'er their guest,
Who deem his forfeit limbs shall pay
The tribute of his bold essay.

XV.

See, he emerges!—desperate now4
All farther course—You beetling brow,
In craggy nakedness sublime,
What heart or foot shall dare to climb?
It bears no tendril for his clasp,
Presents no angle to his grasp:

Sole stay his foot may rest upon
Is yon earth-bedded jutting stone.
Balanced on such precarious prop,5
He strains his grasp to reach the top.
Just as the dangerous stretch he makes,
By heaven, his faithless footstool shakes!
Beneath his tottering bulk it bends,
It sways, ... it loosens, ... it descends!
And downward holds its headlong way,
Crashing o'er rock and copewood spray.
Loud thunders shake the echoing dell!—
Fell it alone?—alone it fell.
Just on the very verge of fate,
The hardy Bertram's falling weight
He trusted to his sinewy hands,
And on the top unharm'd he stands!—6

XVI.

Wilfrid a safer path pursued;
At intervals where, roughly hew'd,
Rude steps ascending from the dell
Render'd the cliffs accessible.
By circuit slow he thus attain'd
The height that Risingham had gain'd,
And when he issued from the wood,
Before the gate of Mortham stood,7
'Twas a fair scene! the sunbeam lay
On battled tower and portal gray;
And from the grassy slope he sees
The Greta flow to meet the Tees,
Where, issuing from her darksome bed,
She caught the morning's eastern red,
And through the softening vale below
Roll'd her bright waves, in rosy glow,
All blushing to her bridal bed,8
Like some shy maid in convent bred;
While linnet, lark, and blackbird gay,
Sing forth her nuptial roundelay.

XVII.

'Twas sweetly sung that roundelay;
That summer morn shone blithe and gay;
But morning beam, and wild bird's call,
Awaked not Mortham's silent hall.9
No porter, by the low-brow'd gate,
Took in the wonted niche his seat;

1 MS. : "As bursts the Levin-bolt \{ in \} wrath."
2 MS. : "To his fierce step and savage shout.
Seems that the object of his chase
Had scale'd the cliffs; his desperate chase."
3 MS. : "A desperate leap through empty air;
Hid in the cope-clad rain-course now."
4 MS. : "See, he emerges!—desperate now\nToward the naked beetling brow
His progress—heart and foot must fail
You upmost crag's bare peak to scale."
5 MS. : "Perch'd like an eagle on its top,
Balanced on its uncertain prop;"
6 Opposite to this line the MS. has this note, meant to amuse Mr. Ballantyne:—"If my readers will not allow that I have climbed Parnassus, they must grant that I have turned the *Little Nine Steps.*"—[See note to "Redgauntlet," Waverley Novels, vol. xxxv. p. 6.]
7 See Appendix, Note U.
8 MS. : "As some fair maid, in cloister bred,
Is blushing to her bridal bed."
9 "The beautiful prospect commanded by that eminence, seen under the cheerful light of a summer's morning, is finely contrasted with the silence and solitude of the place."
—Critical Review.
To the paved court no peasant drew;
Waked to their toil no menial crew;
The maiden's carol was not heard,
As to her morning task she fared;
In the void offices around
Rung not a hoof, nor bay'd a hound,
Nor eager steed, with shrilling neigh,
Accused the lagging groom's delay;
Untrimmed, undress'd, neglected now,
Was alley'd walk and orchard bough;
All spoke the master's absent ear,¹
All spoke neglect and disrepair.
South of the gate, an arrow flight,
Two mighty elms their limbs unite,
As if a canopy to spread
O'er the lone dwelling of the dead;
For their huge boughs in arches bent
Above a massive monument,
Carved o'er in ancient Gothic wise,
With many a scutcheon and device:
There, spent with toil and sunk in gloom,
Bertram stood pondering by the tomb.

XVIII.

"It vanish'd, like a fleeting ghost!
Behind this tomb," he said, "I was lost—
This tomb, where oft I deem'd lies stored
Of Mortham's Indian wealth the hoard.
'Tis true, the aged servant said
Here his lamented wife is laid;²
But weightier reasons may be guess'd
For their lord's strict and stern behest
That none should on his steps intrude
Whene'er he sought this solitude.—
An ancient mariner I knew,
What time I sail'd with Morgan's crew,
Who oft, 'mid our carousals, spake
Of Raleigh, Forbishir, and Drake;
Adventurous hearts! who barter'd, bold,
Their English steel for Spanish gold.
Trust not, would his experience say,
Captain or comrade with your prey;
But seek some charnel, when, at full,
The moon gilds skeleton and skull:
There dig, and tomb your precious heap,
And bid the dead your treasure keep;³
Sure stewards they, if fitting spell
Their service to the task compel.
Lacks there such charnel?—kill a slave,⁴
Or prisoner, on the treasure-grave,
And bid his discontented ghost
Stalk nightly on his lonely post.—

Such was his tale. Its truth, I ween,
Is in my morning vision seen.⁵

XIX.

Wilfrid, who scorn'd the legend wild,
In mingled mirth and pity smiled,
Much marvelling that a breast so bold
In such fond tale belief should hold;⁶
But yet of Bertram sought to know
The apparition's form and show.—
The power within the guilty breast,
Oft vanquish'd, never quite suppress'd,
That unsubdued and lurking lies
To take the felon by surprise,
And force him, as by magic spell,
In his despite his guilt to tell.—⁶
That power in Bertram's breast awoke;
Searce conscious he was heard, he spoke:
"Twas Mortham's form, from foot to head!
His morion, with the plume of red,
His shape, his mien—'twas Mortham, right
As when I slew him in the fight."—
"Thou say'st him?—thou?"—With conscious start
He heard, then mann'd his haughty heart—
"I slew him! I!—I had forgot
Thou, stripling, knew'st not of the plot
But it is spoken—nor will I
Deed done, or spoken word, deny,
I slew him—I—for thankless pride;
'Twas by this hand that Mortham died!"

XX.

Wilfrid, of gentle hand and heart,
Averse to every active part,
But most averse to martial broil,
From danger shrank, and turn'd from toil;
Yet the meek lover of the lyre
Nursed one brave spark of noble fire;
Against injustice, fraud, or wrong,
His blood beat high, his hand wax'd strong.
Not his the nerves that could sustain,
Unshaken, danger, toil, and pain;
But when that spark blazed forth to flame,⁷
He rose superior to his frame.
And now it came, that generous mood:
And, in full current of his blood,
On Bertram he laid desperate hand,
Placed firm his foot, and drew his brand,
"Should every fiend to whom thou'rt sold
Rise in thine aid, I keep my hold.—
Arouse there, ho! take spear and sword!
Attach the murderer of your lord!"

¹ MS.: "All spoke the master absent far,
All spoke neglect and civil war.
Close by the gate, an arch combined,
Two haughty elms their branches twined."

² MS.: "Here lies the partner of his bed;
But weightier reasons should appear
For all his moonlight wanderings here,

³ See Appendix, Note V.

⁴ MS.: "Lacks there such charnel-vault?—a slave,
Or prisoner, slaughter on the grave."

⁵ MS.: "Should faith in such a fable hold."

⁶ See Appendix, Note W.

⁷ MS.: "But when blazed forth that noble flame."
XXI.

A moment, fix'd as by a spell,
Stood Bertram—it seem'd miracle,
That one so feeble, soft, and tame,
Set grasp on warlike Risingham.¹
But when he felt a feeble stroke,²
The fiend within the rufian woke!
To wrench the sword from Wilfrid's hand,
To dash him headlong on the sand,
Was but one moment's work,—one more
Had drench'd the blade in Wilfrid's gore;
But, in the instant it arose,
To end his life, his love, his woes,
A warlike form, that mark'd the scene,
Presents his rapier sheathed between,
Parries the fast-descending blow,
And steps 'twixt Wilfrid and his foe;
Nor then unscarb'd his brand,
But, sternly pointing with his hand,
With monarch's voice forbade the fight,
And motion'd Bertram from his sight.
"Go, and repent," he said, "while time
Is given thee; add not crime to crime."

XXII.

Mute, and uncertain, and amazed,
As on a vision Bertram gazed!
'Twas Mortham's bearing, bold and high,³
His sinewy frame, his falcon eye,
His look and accent of command,
The martial gesture of his hand,
His stately form, spare-built and tall,
His war-bleach'd locks—'twas Mortham all.

Through Bertram's dizzy brain career⁴
A thousand thoughts, and all of fear;
His wavering faith received not quite
The form he saw as Mortham's sprite,
But more he fear'd it, if it stood
His lord, in living flesh and blood.—
What spectre can the charnel send
So dreadful as an injured friend?
Then, too, the habit of command,
Used by the leader of the band,
When Risingham, for many a day,
Had march'd and fought beneath his sway,
Tamed him—and, with reverted face,
Backwards he bore his sullen pace;⁵

¹ "The sudden impression made on the mind of Wilfrid by this avowal is one of the happiest touches of moral poetry. The effect which the unexpected burst of indignation and valor produces on Bertram is as finely imagined."—Critical Review.

² "This most animating scene is a worthy companion to the encounter of Fitz-James and Roderick Dhu, in the 'Lady of the Lake.'"—Monthly Review.

³ MS.: "'Twas Mortham's spare and sinewy frame,
His falcon eye, his glance of flame."

⁴ MS.: "A thousand thoughts, and all of fear,
Dizzied his brain in wild career;
Doubting, and not receiving quite
The form he saw as Mortham's sprite,
Still more he fear'd it, if it stood
His living lord, in flesh and blood."

⁵ MS.: "Slow he retreats with sullen pace."

⁶ MS.: "Retiring through the thickest wood."

⁷ MS.: "Rein'd up their steeds by Mortham tower."
XXV.

"Yes! I beheld his bloody fall,!
By that base traitor’s dastard ball,
Just when I thought to measure word,
Presumptuous hope! with Mortham’s lord.
And shall the murderer escape, who slew
His leader, generous, brave, and true?*
Escape, while on the dew you trace
The marks of his gigantic pace?
No! ere the sun that dew shall dry,³
False Risingham shall yield or die.—
Ring out the castle larum bell!
Arouse the peasants with the knell!
Meantime disperse—ride, gallants, ride!
Beset the wood on every side.
But if among you one there be
That honors Mortham’s memory,
Let him dismount and follow me!
Else on your crests sit fear and shame,
And foul suspicion dog your name!"*²

XXVI.

Instant to earth young Redmond sprung;*
Instant on earth the harness hung
Of twenty men of Wyelife’s band,
Who waited not their lord’s command.
Redmond his spurs from buskins drew,
His mantle from his shoulders threw,
His pistols in his belt he placed,
The greenwood gain’d, the footsteps traced,
Shouted like huntsman to his hounds,
"To cover, hark!"—and in he bounds.
Scarcely heard was Oswald’s anxious cry,
"Suspicion! yes—pursue him—fly—
But venture not, in useless strife,
On ruffian desperate of his life;
Whoever finds him shoot him dead!*
Five hundred nobles for his head?"*³

The horsemen gallop’d, to make good
Each path that issued from the wood.
Lou’d from the thickets rung the shout
Of Redmond and his eager rout;

With them was Wilfrid, stung with ire,
And envying Redmond’s martial fire,⁴
And emulous of fame.—But where
Is Oswald, noble Mortham’s heir?
He, bound by honor, law, and faith,
Avenger of his kin’sman’s death?—
Leaning against the elm tree,
With drooping head and shackle’d knee,
And clenched teeth, and close-clasp’d hands,
In agony of soul he stands!
His downcast eye on earth is bent,
His soul to every sound is lent;
For in each shout that cleaves the air,
May ring discovery and despair.⁶

XXVII.

What ‘vail’d it him that brightly play’d
The morning sun on Mortham’s glade?
All seems in giddy round to ride,
Like objects on a stormy tide,
Seen eddying by the moonlight dim,
Imperfectly to sink and swim.
What ‘vail’d it that the fair domain,
Its battled mansion, hill, and plain,
On which the sun so brightly shone,
Envied so long, was now his own?
The lowest dungeon, in that hour,
Of Brackenbury’s dismal tower,⁸
Had been his choice, could such a doom
Have open’d Mortham’s bloody tomb!
Forced, too, to turn unwilling ear
To each surmise of hope or fear
Murmur’d among the rusties round,
Who gather’d at the larum sound,
He dared not turn his head away,
E’en to look up to heaven to pray,
Or call on hell, in bitter mood,
For one sharp death-shot from the wood!

XXIX.

At length, o’erpast that dreadful space,
Back straggling came the scatter’d chase;
Jaded and weary, horse and man,
Return’d the troopers, one by one.

³ MS.: "A knight so generous, brave, and true?"*²
⁴ MS.: "That dew shall drain,
False Risingham shall be kill’d or ta’en."*³
⁵ MS.: "To the Printer.—On the disputed line, it may stand thus,— ‘Whoever finds him, strike him dead;’
or,
‘Who first shall find him, strike him dead.’
But I think the addition of felon, or any such word, will impair the strength of the passage. Oswald is too anxious to use epithets, and is hallowing after the men, by this time entering the wood. The simpler the line the better. In my humble opinion, shoot him dead was much better than any other. It implies, Do not even approach him; kill him at a distance. I leave it, however, to you, only saying that I never shun common words when they are to the purpose. As to your criticisms, I cannot but attend to them, because they touch passages with which I am myself discontented.—W. S.™
⁶ MS.: "Jealous of Redmond’s noble fire."*⁶
⁷ "Opposed to this animated picture of ardent courage and ingenuous youth, that of a guilty conscience, which immediately follows, is indescribably terrible, and calculated to achieve the highest and noblest purposes of dramatic fiction."—Critical Review.
⁸ "The contrast of the beautiful morning, and the prospect of the rich domain of Mortham, which Oswald was come to seize, with the dark remorse and misery of his mind, is powerfully represented (Non domus et fundus &c. &c.)"—Monthly Review.
⁹ See Appendix, Note X.
Wilfrid, the last, arrived to say,
All trace was lost of Bertram’s way,
Though Redmond still, up Brignall wood,¹
The hopeless quest in vain pursued.—
Oh, fatal doom of human race!
What tyrant passions passions chase!
Remorse from Oswald’s brow is gone,
Avarice and pride resume their throne;²
The pang of instant terror by,
They dictate thus their slave’s reply:—

XXX.
"Ay, let him range like hasty hound!
And if the grim wolf’s lair be found,
Small is my care how goes the game
With Redmond or with Risingham.—
Nay, answer not, thou simple boy!
Thy fair Matilda, all so coy
To thee, is of another mood
To that bold youth of Erin’s blood.
Thy ditties will she freely praise,
And pay thy pains with courtly phrase;
In a rough path will oft command—
Accept at least—thy friendly hand;
His she avoids, or, urged and pray’d,
Unwilling takes his proffer’d aid,
While conscious passion plainly speaks
In downcast look and blushing cheeks.
Whene’er he sings, will she glide nigh,
And all her soul is in her eye;
Yet doubts she still to tender free
The wonted words of courtesy.
These are strong signs!—yet whereabouts
Sigh,
And wipe, effeminate, thine eye?
Thine shall she be, if thou attend
The counsels of thy sire and friend.

XXXI.
"Scarce wert thou gone, when peep of light³
Brought genuine news of Marston’s fight,
Brave Cromwell turn’d the doubtful tide,
And conquer bless’d the rightful side;
Three thousand Cavaliers lie dead,
Rupert and that bold Marquis fled;
Nobles and knights, so proud of late,
Must fine for freedom and estate.
Of these, committed to my charge,
Is Rokeby, prisoner at large;
Redmond, his page, arrived to say
He reaches Barnard’s towers to-day.

Right heavy shall his ransom be,
Unless that maid compound with thee!IVER
Go to her now—be bold of cheer,
While her soul floats ’twixt hope and fear;
It is the very change of tide,
When best the female heart is tried—
Pride, prejudice, and modesty,
Are in the current swept to sea;⁵
And the bold swain who plies his oar,
May lightly row his bark to shore.\)"

Rokeby.

CANTO THIRD.

I.
The hunting tribes of air and earth
Respect the brethren of their birth;⁶
Nature, who loves the claim of kind,
Less cruel chase to each assign’d.
The falcon, poise on soaring wing,
Watches the wild duck by the spring;
The slow-hound wakes the fox’s lair;
The greyhound presses on the hare;
The eagle pounces on the lamb;
The wolf devours the fleecy dam:
Even tiger fell, and sullen bear,
Their likeness and their lineage spare;
Man, only, mars kind Nature’s plan,
And turns the fierce pursuit on man;
Plying war’s desultory trade,
Incursion, flight, and ambuscade,⁷
Since Nimrod, Cash’s mighty son,
At first the bloody game begun.

II.
The Indian, prowling for his prey,
Who hears the settlers track his way,
And knows in distant forest far
Camp his red brethren of the war;
He, when each double and disguise
To baffle the pursuit he tries,
Low crouching now his head to hide
Where swampy streams through rushes glide,⁸
Now covering with the wither’d leaves
The foot-prints that the dew receives.⁹

¹ MS.: “Though Redmond still, as unsubdued.”
² The MS. adds:
“Of Mortham’s treasure now he dreams,
Now nurses more ambitious schemes.”
³ MS.: “This Redmond brought, at peep of light,
The news of Marston’s happy fight.”
⁴ See Appendix, Note Y.
⁵ MS.: “In the warm ebb are swept to sea.”
⁶ MS.: “The lower tribes of earth and air
In the wild chase their kindred spare.”
⁷ The second couplet interpolated.
⁸ MS.: “Where the slow waves through rushes glide.”
⁹ See Appendix, Note Z.
He, skill'd in every sylvan guile,
Knows not, nor tries, such various wile
As Risingham, when on the wind
Arose the loud pursuit behind,
In Redesdale his youth had heard
Each art her wily dalesmen dared,
When Rooken-edge, and Redswair high,
To bugle rung and blood-bound's cry;¹
Announcing Jedwood-axe and spear,
And Lid'sdale riders in the rear;
And well his venturesome life had proved
The lessons that his childhood loved.

III.
Oft had he shown, in elimes afar,
Each attribute of roving war:
The sharpen'd ear, the piercing eye,
The quick resolve in danger nigh;
The speed that in the flight or chase
Outstripp'd the Charib's rapid race;
The steady brain, the sinewy limb,
To leap, to climb, to dive, to swim;
The iron frame, inured to bear
Each dire inclemency of air,
Nor less confirm'd to undergo
Fatigue's faint chill, and famine's throe.
These arts he proved, his life to save,
In peril oft by land and wave,
On Arawaca's desert shore,
Or where La Plata's billows roar,
When oft the sons of vengeful Spain
Track'd the marauder's steps in vain.
These arts, in Indian warfare tried,
Must save him now by Greta's side.

IV.
'Twas then, in hour of utmost need,
He proved his courage, art, and speed.
Now slow he stalk'd with stealthy pace,
Now started forth in rapid race,
Oft doubling back in mazy train,
To blind the trace the dews retain;²
Now clombe the rocks projecting high,
To baffle the pursuer's eye;
Now sought the stream, whose brawling sound
The echo of his footsteps drownd.
But if the forest verge he nears,
There trample steeds, and glimmer spears;
If deeper down the copse he drew,
He heard the rangers' loud hallow,
Beating each cover while they came,
As if to start the sylvan gamer.

¹ See Appendix, Note 2 A.
² MS.: "Where traces in the dew remain."
³ MS.: "And oft his soul within him rose,
Prompting to rush upon his foes;
And of, like tiger toil-beset,
That in each pass finds foe and net," &c.
⁴ In the MS. the stanza concludes thus:—
'Twas then—like tiger close beset²
At every pass with toil and net,
Counter'd, where'er he turns his glare,
By clashing arms and torches' flare,
Who meditates, with furious bound,
To burst on hunter, horse, and bound,—¹
'Twas then that Bertram's soul arose,
Prompting to rush upon his foes:
But as that crouching tiger, cow'd
By brandish'd steel and shouting crowd,
Retreats beneath the jungle's shroud,
Bertram suspends his purpose stern,
And couches in the brake and fern,
Hiding his face, lest foesmen spy
The sparkle of his swarthy eye.⁵

V.
Then Bertram might the bearing trace
Of the bold youth who led the chase;
Who paused to list for every sound,
Climb every height to look around,
Then rushing on with naked sword,
Each dingle's bosky depths explored.
'Twas Redmond—by the azure eye;
'Twas Redmond—by the locks that fly
Disorder'd from his glowing cheek;
Mien, face, and form, young Redmond speak.
A form more active, light, and strong,
Ne'er shot the ranks of war along;
The modest yet the manly mien
Might grace the court of maiden queen;
A face more fair you well might find,⁶
For Redmond's knew the sun and wind,
Nor boast'd, from their tinge when free,
The charm of regularity;
But every feature had the power
To aid the expression of the hour:
Whether gay wit, and humor sly,
Danced laughing in his light-blue eye;
Or bended brow, and glance of fire,
And kindling cheek, spoke Erin's ire;
Or soft and sudden'd glances show
Her ready sympathy with woe;
Or in that wayward mood of mind,
When various feelings are combined,
When joy and sorrow mingle near,
And hope's bright wings are check'd by fear,
And rising doubts keep transport down,
And anger lends a short-lived frown.
In that strange mood which maids approve
Even when they dare not call it love;

"Suspending yet his purpose stern,
He couched him in the brake and fern,
Hiding his face, lest foesmen spy
The sparkle of his swarthy eye."

¹ See Appendix, Note 2 B.
² These six couplets were often quoted by the late Lord Kinneliter as giving, in his opinion, an excellent portrait of the author himself.—Ed.
With every change his features play'd,
As aspens show the light and shade.¹

VI.
Well Risingham young Redmond knew;
And much he marvel'd that the crew,
Roused to revenge bold Mortham dead,
Were by that Mortham's foeman led;
For never felt his soul the woe
That wails a generous foeman low,
Far less that sense of justice strong
That wreaks a generous foeman's wrong.
But small his leisure now to pause;
Redmond is first, whate'er the cause;²
And twice that Redmond came so near Where Bertram couched like hunted deer,
The very boughs his steps displace
Rustled against the ruffian's face,
Who, desperate, twice prepared to start,
And plunged his dagger in his heart!
But Redmond turn'd a different way,
And the bent boughs resumed their sway,
And Bertram held it wise, unseen,
Deeper to plunge in coppice green.
Thus, circled in his coil, the snake,
When roving hunters beat the brake,
Watches with red and glistening eye,
Prepared, if heedless step draw nigh,
With forked tongue and venom'd fang
Instant to dart the deadly pang;
But if the intruders turn aside,
Away his coils unfolded glide,
And through the deep savannah wind,
Some undisturb'd retreat to find.

VII.
But Bertram, as he backward drew,
And heard the loud pursuit renew,
And Redmond's hallo on the wind,
Oft mutter'd in his savage mind—
"Redmond O'Neale! were thou and I
Alone this day's event to try,
With not a second here to see,
But the gray cliff and oaken tree,—
That voice of thine, that shouts so loud,
Should ne'er repeat its summons proud!
No! nor e'er try its melting power
Again in maiden's summer bower."
Eluded, now behind him die,
Faint and more faint, each hostile cry:

He stands in Scargill wood alone,
Nor hears he now a harsher tone
Than the hoarse cushat's plaintive cry,
Or Greta's sound that murmurs by;
And on the dale, so lone and wild,
The summer sun in quiet smiled.

VIII.
He listen'd long with anxious heart,
Ear bent to hear, and foot to start;⁴
And, while his stretch'd attention glows,
Refused his weary frame repose,
'Twas silence all—he laid him down,
Where purple heath profusely strown,
And throatwort with its azure bell,⁴
And moss and thyme, his cushion swell,
There, spent with toil, he listless eyed
The course of Greta's playful tide;
Beneath, her banks now eddying dun,
Now brightly gleaming to the sun,
As, dancing over rock and stone,
In yellow light her currents shone,
Matching in hue the favorite gem
Of Albin's mountain diadem.
Then, tired to watch the current's play,
He turn'd his weary eyes away,
To where the bank opposing show'd
Its huge, square cliffs through shaggy wood.⁶
One, prominent above the rest,
Rear'd to the sun its pale gray breast;
Around its broken summit grew
The hazel rude, and sable yew;
A thousand varied lichens dyed
Its waste and weatherbeaten side,
And round its rugged basis lay,
By time or thunder rent away,
Fragments that, from its frontlet torn,
Were mantled now by verdant thorn.
Such was the scene's wild majesty,
That fill'd stern Bertram's gazing eye.⁶

IX.
In sullen mood he lay reclined,
Revolving, in his stormy mind,
The felon deed, the fruitless guilt,
His patron's blood by treason spilt;
A crime, it seem'd, so dire and dread
That it had power to wake the dead.
Then, pondering on his life betray'd⁷
By Oswald's art to Redmond's blade,

¹ In the MS. this image comes after the line "To aid the expression of the hour," and the couplet stands:
   "And like a flexible aspen play'd
   Alternately in light and shade."
² MS.: "The chase he heads, whate'er the cause."
³ MS.: "And limbs to start,
   And, while his stretch'd attention glows,
   Scarce felt his weary frame repose."
⁴ The Campanula Latifolia, grand throatwort, or Canter- bury bells, grows in profusion upon the beautiful banks of the river Greta, where it divides the manors of Brignall and Scargill, about three miles above Greta Bridge.
⁵ MS.: ——— "show'd,
   With many a rocky fragment rude,
   Its old gray cliffs and shaggy wood."
⁶ The MS. adds:
   "Yet as he gazed he fail'd to find According image touch his mind."
⁷ MS.: "Then thought he on his life betray'd."
In treacherous purpose to withhold,
So seem’d it, Mortham’s promised gold,
A deep and full revenge he vow’d
On Redmond, forward, fierce, and proud;
Revenge on Wilfrid—on his sire
Redoubled vengeance, swift and dire!—
If, in such mood (as legends say,
And well believed that simple day),
The Enemy of Man has power
To prof’t by the evil hour,
Here stood a wretch, prepared to change
His soul’s redemption for revenge!
But though his vows, with such a fire
Of earnest and intense desire
For vengeance dark and fell, were made,
As well might reach hell’s lowest shade,
No deeper clouds the grove embrownd’,
No nether thunders shook the ground;
The demon knew his vassal’s heart,
And spared temptation’s needless art.

X.

Oft, mingled with the direful theme,
Came Mortham’s form—Was it a dream?
Or had he seen, in vision true,
That very Mortham whom he slew?
Or had in living flesh appear’d
The only man on earth he fear’d?—
To try the mystic cause intent,
His eyes, that on the cliff were bent,
Counter’d at once a dazzling glance,
Like sunbeam flash’d from sword or lance.
At once he started as for flight,
But not a foeman was in sight;
He heard the cushat’s murmur hoarse,
He heard the river’s sounding course;
The solitary woodlands lay
As slumbering in the summer ray.
He gazed, like lion roused, around,
Then sunk again upon the ground.
’Twas but, he thought, some fitful beam,
Glanced sudden from the sparkling stream;
Then plunged him from his gloomy train
Of ill-connected thoughts again,
Until a voice behind him cried,
“Bertram! well met on Greta side.”

XI.

Instant his sword was in his hand—
As instant sunk the ready brand;

Yet, dubious still, opposed he stood
To him that issued from the wood:
“Guy Denzil! is it thou?” he said;
“Do we two meet in Scargill shade?—
Stand back a space!—thy purpose show,
Whether thou comest as friend or foe.
Report hath said that Denzil’s name
From Rokeby’s band was razed with shame.”—
“A shame I owe that hot O’Neale,
Who told his knight, in peevish zeal,
Of my marauding on the clowns
Of Calverley and Bradford downs.
I reck not. In a war to strive,
Where, save the leaders, none can thrive,
Suits ill my mood; and better game
Awaits us both, if thou’rt the same
Unscrupulous, bold Risingham,
Who watched with me in midnight dark,
To snatch a deer from Rokeby park.
How think’st thou?”—“Speak thy purpose
out;
I love not mystery or doubt.”—

XII.

“Then list. Not far there lurk a crew
Of trusty comrades, stanch and true,
Glean’d from both factions—Roundheads, freed
From cant of sermon and of creed;
And Cavaliers, whose souls, like mine,
Spurn at the bonds of discipline.
War, we judge, by dale and wold
A warfare of our own to hold,
Than breathe our last on battle-down,
For cloak or surplice, mace or crown.
Our schemes are laid, our purpose set,
A chief and leader lack we yet.—
Thou art a wanderer, it is said;
For Mortham’s death, thy steps waylaid,
Thy head at price—so say our spies,
Who range the valley in disguise.
Join then with us:—though wild debate
And wrangling rend our infant state,
Each, to an equal lot to bow,
Will yield to chief renown’d as thou.”—

XIII.

“Even now,” thought Bertram, passion-stirr’d,
“I call’d on hell, and hell has heard!
What lack I, vengeance to command,
But of stanch comrades such a band?

—“The fiend
Saw undelighted all delight.”—Ed.

3 See Appendix, Note 2 C.
5 MS.: “For deep and dark revenge were made,
As well might weaie hell’s lowest shade.”
6 “Bertram is now alone: the landscape around is truly grand, partially illuminated by the sun; and we are reminded of the scene in the ‘Robbers,’ in which something of a similar contrast is exhibited between the beauties of external nature and the agitations of human passion. It is in such pictures that Mr. Scott delights and excels.”—Monthly Review. One is surprised that the reviewer did not quote Milton rather than Schiller:
This Denzil, vow'd to every evil,
Might read a lesson to the devil.
Well, be it so! each knave and fool
Shall serve as my revenge's tool."—
Aloud, "I take thy profiter, Guy;
But tell me where thy comrades lie."—
"Not far from hence," Guy Denzil said;
"Descend, and cross the river's bed,
Where rises yonder cliff so gray."—
"Do thou," said Bertram, "lead the way."
Then mutter'd, "It is best make sure;
Guy Denzil's faith was never pure."
He follow'd down the steep descent,
Then through the Greta's streams they went;
And, when they reach'd the farther shore,
They stood the lonely cliff before.

XIV.
With wonder Bertram heard within
The flinty rock a murmur'd din;
But when Guy pull'd the wilding spray
And brambles from its base away,
He saw, appearing to the air,
A little entrance, low and square,
Like opening cell of hermit lone,
Dark, wending through the living stone.
Here enter'd Denzil, Bertram here;
And loud and louder on their ear,
As from the bowels of the earth,
Resounded shouts of boisterous mirth.
Of old, the cavern, strait and rude,
In slaty rock the peasant hew'd;
And Brignall's woods, and Seargill's, wave,
E'en now, o'er many a sister cave;
Where, far within the darksome rift,
The wodge and revelry their thrill.
But war had silenced rural trade,
And the deserted mine was made
The banquet-hall and fortress too
Of Denzil and his desperate crew.—
There Guilt his anxious revel kept;
There, on his sordid pallet, slept
Guilt-born Excess, the goblet drain'd
Still in his slumbering grasp retain'd;
Regret was there, his eye still cast
With vain repining on the past;
Among the feasters waited near
Sorrow, and unrepentant Fear,
And Blasphemy, to frenzy driven,
With his own crimes reproaching Heaven;
While Bertram show'd, amid the crew,
The Master-Fiend that Milton drew.

XV.
Hark! the loud revel wakes again,
To greet the leader of the train.
Behold the group by the pale lamp,
That struggles with the earthy damp.
By what strange features Vice hath known
To single out and mark her own!
Yet some there are whose brows retain
Less deeply stamp'd her brand and stain.
See yon pale stripling? when a boy,
A mother's pride, a father's joy!
Now, 'gainst the vault's rude walls reclined,
An early image fills his mind:
The cottage, once his sire's, he sees,
Embower'd upon the banks of Tees;
He views sweet Winston's woodland scene,
And shares the dance on Gainford green.
A tear is springing—but the zest
Of some wild tale, or brutal jest,
Hath to loud laughter stirr'd the rest.
On him they call, the aptest mate
For jovial song and merry feast:
Past flies his dream—with dauntless air,
As one victorious o'er Despair,
He bids the ruddy cup go round,
Till sense and sorrow both are drown'd;
And soon, in merry wassail, he,
The life of all their revelry,
Peals his loud song!—The Muse has found
Her blossoms on the wildest ground,
'Mid noxious weeds at random strew'd,
Themselves all profitless and rude.—
With desperate merriment he sung,
The cavern to the chorus rung;
Yet mingled with his reckless glee
Remorse's bitter agony.

XVI.
Song."
Oh, Brignall banks are wild and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer queen.

---

1 MS.: "But when Guy Denzil pull'd the spray
And brambles from its base away,
He saw, forth issuing to the air."

2 See Appendix, Note 2 E.

3 "We should here have concluded our remarks on the characters of the drama, had not one of its subordinate personages been touched with a force of imagination which renders it worthy even of prominent regard and attention.
The poet has just presented us with the picture of a gang of banditti, on which he has bestowed some of the most gloomy coloring of his powerful pencil. In the midst of this horrible group is distinguished the exquisitely natural and interesting portrait which follows:
"See yon pale stripling? &c."

4 MS.: "And soon the loudest wassail he,
And life of all their revelry."

5 Scott revisited Rokeby in 1812, for the purpose of refreshing his memory; and Mr. Morriss says,—"I had, of course, had many previous opportunities of testing the almost conscientious fidelity of his local descriptions; but I could not help being singularly struck with the lights which this visit threw on that characteristic of his composition. The morn-

---
And as I rode by Dalton Hall,
Beneath the turrets high,
A maiden on the castle wall
Was singing merrily,—

CHORUS.

"Oh, Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
Than reign our English queen."—

"If, maiden, thou wouldst lend with me,
To leave both tower and town,
Thou first must guess what life lead we,
That dwell by dale and down;
And if thou canst that riddle read,
As read full well you may,
Then to the Greenwood shalt thou speed,
As blithe as Queen of May."—

CHORUS.

Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
Than reign our English queen.

XVII.

"I read you, by your bugle-horn,
And by your palfrey good,
I read you for a ranger, sworn
To keep the king's greenwood."—

"A ranger, lady, winds his horn,
And 'tis at peep of light;
His blast is heard at merry morn,
And mine at dead of night."—

CHORUS.

Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are gay;
I would I were with Edmund there,
To reign his Queen of May!

"With burnish'd brand and musketoon,
So gallantly you come,
I read you for a bold dragon,
That list the tuck of drum."—

"I list no more the tuck of drum,
No more the trumpet hear;
But when the beetle sounds his hum,
My comrades take the spear.

After he arrived he said, 'You have often given me materials for romance; now I want a good robber's cave and an old church of the right sort.' We rode out, and he found what he wanted in the ancient slate quarries of Brignall and the ruined Abbey of Egliston. I observed him noting down even the peculiar little wild flowers and herbs that accidentally grew round and on the side of a bold crag near his intended cave of Guy Denzil; and could not help saying that, as he was not to be upon oath in his work, daisies, violets, and primroses would he as poetical as any of the humble plants he was examining. I laughed, in short, at his scrupulousness; but I understood him when he replied that 'in nature herself no two scenes were exactly alike, and that whoever copied truly what was before his eyes would possess the same variety in his descriptions, and exhibit apparently

CHORUS.

"And oh, though Brignall's banks be fair,
And Greta woods be gay,
Yet mickle must the maiden dare
Would reign my Queen of May!"

XVIII.

"Maiden! a nameless life I lead,
A nameless death I'll die!
The fiend whose lantern lights the mead
Were better mate than I!
And when I'm with my comrades met,
Beneath the Greenwood bough,
What once we were we all forget,
Nor think what we are now.

CHORUS.

"Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer queen."

When Edmund ceased his simple song,
Was silence on the sullen throng,
Till waked some ruder mate their glee
With note of coarser minstrelsy.
But, far apart, in dark divan,
Denzil and Bertram many a plan,
Of import foul and fierce, design'd,
While still on Bertram's grasping mind
The wealth of murder'd Mortham hung;
Though half he fear'd his daring tongue,
When it should give his wishes birth,
Might rise a spectre from the earth!

XIX.

At length his wondrous tale he told:
When, scornful, smiled his comrade bold;
For, train'd in license of a court,
Religion's self was Denzil's sport;
Then judge in what contempt he held
The visionary tales of old!
His awe for Bertram scarce repress'd
The unbeliever's sneering jest.
"Twere hard," he said, "for sage or seer
To spell the subject of your fear;
Nor do I boast the art renown'd
Vision and omen to expound.

an imagination as boundless as the range of nature in the scenes he recorded; whereas whoever trusted to imagination would soon find his own mind circumscribed and contracted to a few favorite images."—Life of Scott, vol. iv. p. 19.

1 MS.: "The goblin-light on fen and mead."
2 MS.: "And were I with my true love set
Under the Greenwood bough,
What once I was she must forget,
Nor think what I am now."
3 MS.: "'Twere hard," he said, "for sage or seer
To spell the morning vision that you tell;
Nor am I seer, for art renown'd,
Dulk dreams and omens to expound.
Yet, if my faith I must afford," &c.
Yet, faith if I must needs afford
To spectre watching treasured hoard,
As ban-dog keeps his master's roof,
Bidding the plunderer stand awoke,
This doubt remains—thy goblin gaunt
Hath chosen ill his ghostly haunt;
For why his guard on Mortham hold,
When Rokeyb castle hath the gold
Thy patron won on Indian soil,
By stealth, by piracy, and spoil?"

XX.
At this he paused—for angry shame
Lower'd on the brow of Risingham,
He blush'd to think that he should seem
Asserter of an airy dream,
And gave his wrath another theme.
"Denzil," he says, "though lowly laid,
Wrong not the memory of the dead;
For, while he lived, at Mortham's look
Thy very soul, Guy Denzil, shook!
And when he tax'd thy breach of word
To your fair Rose of Allenford,
I saw thee crouch like chasten'd hound,
Whose back the huntsman's lash hath found.
Nor dare to call his foreign wealth
The spoil of piracy or steal;
He won it bravely with his brand,
When Spain waged warfare with our land."
Mark, too—I brook no idle jeer,
Nor couple Bertram's name with fear;
Mine is but half the demon's lot,
For I believe, but tremble not.—
Enough of this.—Say, why this hoard
Thou deemst at Rokeyb castle stored;
Or think'st that Mortham would bestow
His treasure with his faction's foe?"

XXI.
Soon quench'd was Denzil's ill-timed mirth;
Rather he would have seen the earth
Give to ten thousand spectres birth,
Than venture to awake to flame
The deadly wrath of Risingham.
Submit he answer'd,—"Mortham's mind,
Thou know'st, to joy was ill inclined,
In youth, 'tis said, a gallant free,
A lusty reveller, was he;
But since return'd from over sea,
A sullen and a silent mood
Hath numb'd the current of his blood.
Hence he refused each kindly call
To Rokeyb's hospitable hall,

And our stout knight, at dawn of morn
Who loved to hear the bugle-horn,
Nor less, when eve his oaks embrownd,'d
To see the ruddy cup go round,
Took umbrage that a friend so near
Refused to share his chase and cheer;
Thus did the kindred barons jar,
Ere they divided in the war.
Yet, trust me, friend, Matilda fair
Of Mortham's wealth is destined heir."—

XXII.
"Destined to her! to yon slight maid!
The prize my life had wellnigh paid,
When 'gainst Laroche, by Cayo's wave,
I fought my patron's wealth to save!
Denzil, I knew him long, yet ne'er
Knew him that joyous cavalier
Whom youthful friends and early fame
Call'd soul of gallantry and game.
A moody man he sought our crew,
Desperate and dark, whom no one knew;
And rose, as men with us must rise,
By scorning life and all its ties.
On each adventure rash he roved,
As danger for itself he loved;
On his sad brow nor mirth nor wine
Could e'er one wrinkled knot untwine;
Ill was the omen if he smiled,
For 'twas in peril stern and wild;
But when he laugh'd, each luckless mate
Might hold our fortune desperate.
Foremost he fought in every broil,
Then scornful turn'd him from the spoil;
Nay, often strove to bar the way
Between his comrades and their prey;
Preaching, even then, to such as we,
Hot with our dear-bought victory,
Of mercy and humanity.

XXIII.
"I loved him well—His fearless part,
His gallant leading, won my heart;
And after each victorious fight,
'Twas I that wrangled for his right;
Redeem'd his portion of the prey
That greedier mates had torn away:
In field and storm thrice saved his life,
And once amid our comrades' strife.—
Yes, I have loved thee! Well hath proved
My toil, my danger, how I loved!
Yet will I mourn no more thy fate,
Ingrate in life, in death ingrate.

And where his frown of hatred darkly fell,
Hope withering fell, and Mercy sigh'd farewell.

MS.: "And when the bloody fight was done,
I wrangled for the share he won."

1 MS. hath his gold, The gold he won on Indian soil.
2 MS. like rated hound. 3 See App. Note 2 P.
3 MS. Denzil's mood of mirth; He would have rather seen the earth, &c.
4 The MS. has not this couplet.
5 There was a laughing devil in his sneer, That raised emotions both of rage and fear;
Rise if thou canst!” he look’d around,
And sternly stamp’d upon the ground—
"Rise, with thy bearing proud and high,
Even as this morn it met mine eye,
And give me, if thou darest, the lie!"
He paused—then, calm and passion-freed,
Bade Denzil with his tale proceed.

XXIV.
"Bertram, to thee I need not tell
What thou hast cause to wet so well, 1
How Superstition’s nets were twined
Around the Lord of Mortham’s mind; 2
But since he drovethree from his tower,
A maid he found in Greta’s bower,
Whose speech, like David’s harp, had sway
To charm his evil fiend away.
I know not if her features moved
Remembrance of the wife he loved;
But he would gaze upon her eye,
Till his mood soften’d to a sigh.
He, whom no living mortal sought
To question of his secret thought,
Now every thought and care confess’d
To his fair niece’s faithful breast;
Nor was there aught of rich and rare,
In earth, in ocean, or in air,
But it must deck Matilda’s hair.
Her love still bound him unto life; 3
But then awoke the civil strife,
And menials bore, by his commands,
Three coffers, with their iron bands,
From Mortham’s vault, at midnight deep,
To her lone bower in Rokeby keep,
Ponderous with gold and plate of pride, 4
His gift, if he in battle died."—

XXV.
"Then Denzil, as I guess, lays train
These iron-banded chests to gain;
Else, wherefore should he hover here? 5
Where many a peril waits him near,
For all his feats of war and peace,
For plunder’d boors, and harts of grease, 6
Since through the hamlets as he fared,
What heart has Guy’s marauding spared,
Or where the chase that hath not run? 7
With Denzil’s bow, at midnight strung?"—
"I hold my wont—my rangers go
Even now to track a milk-white doe." 8

By Rokeby Hall she takes her hair,
In Greta wood she harbors fair,
And when my huntsman marks her way,
What think’st thou, Bertram, of the prey?
Were Rokeby’s daughter in our power,
We rate her ransom at her dower."—

XXVI.
"’Tis well!—there’s vengeance in the thought,
Matilda is by Wilfrid sought:
And hot-brain’d Redmond too, ’tis said,
Pays lover’s homage to the maid.
Bertram she scorn’d—if met by chance,
She turn’d from me her shuddering glance,
Like a nice dame, that will not brook
On what she hates and loathes to look;
She told to Mortham she could ne’er
Behold me without secret fear,
Foreboding evil;—She may rue
To find her prophecy fall true!—
The war has weeded Rokeby’s train,
Few followers in his halls remain;
If thy scheme miss, then, brief and bold,
We are enow to storm the hold,
Bear off the plunder and the dame,
And leave the castle all in flame."—

XXVII.
"Still art thou Valor’s venturous son!
Yet ponder first the risk to run:
The menials of the castle, true,
And stubborn to their charge, though few; 9
The wall to scale—the moat to cross—
The wicket-grate—the inner fosse"— —”Fool! If we bleench for toys like these,
On what fair guerdon can we seize?" 10
Our hardiest venture, to explore
Some wretched peasant’s fenceless door,
And the best prize we bear away,
The earnings of his sordid day."—
"A while thy hasty tandem forbear:
In sight of road more sure and fair,
Thou wouldst not choose, in blindfold wrath,
Or wantonness, a desperate path?
List, then;—for vantage or assault,
From gilded vane to dungeon-vault,
Each pass of Rokeby house I know:
There is one postern, dark and low,
That issues at a secret spot, 11
By most neglected or forgot.

1 Ms.: “To thee, my friend, I need not tell
What thou hast cause to know so well.”
2 Ms.: “Around thy captain’s moody mind.”
3 Ms.: “But it must be Matilda’s share.
This, too, still bound him unto life.”
4 Ms.: “From a strong vault in Mortham tower,
In secret to Matilda’s bower,
Ponderous with ore and gems of pride.”
5 Ms.: “Then may I guess thou hast some train
These iron-banded chests to gain;
Else, why should Denzil hover here.”
6 Deer in season.
7 Ms.; —”that doth not know.
The midnight clang of Denzil’s bow?—
I hold my sport,” &c.
8 See Appendix, Note 2 H.
9 Ms.: “The menials of the castle, few,
But stubborn to their charge, and true.”
10 Ms.: “What prize of vantage shall we seize?”
11 Ms.: “That issues level with the moat.”
ROKEBY.

Now, could a spial of our train
On fair pretext admittance gain,
That sally-port might be unbarr'd:
Then, vain were battlement and ward!—

XXVIII.
"Now speak'st thou well:—to me the same,
If force or art shall urge the game;
Indifferent, if like fox I wind,1
Or spring like tiger on the hind.—
But, hark! our merry-men so gay
Troll forth another roundelay."

SONG.
"A weary lot is thine, fair maid,
A weary lot is thine!
To pull the thorn thy brow to braid,
And press the rue for wine!
A lightsome eye, a soldier's mien,2
A feather of the blue,
A doublet of the Lincoln green,—
No more of me you knew,
My love! No more of me you knew.

"This morn is merry June, I trow,
The rose is budding fair;4
But she shall bloom in winter snow,
Ere we two meet again."
He turn'd his charger as he spake,
Upon the river shore,5
He gave his bridle-reins a shake,
Said, "Adieu for evermore,
My love! And adieu for evermore."—6

XXIX.
"What youth is this, your hand among,
The best for minstrelsy and song?
In his wild notes seem aptly met
A strain of pleasure and regret.—
"Edmund of Winston is his name;
The hamlet sounded with the fame
Of early hopes his childhood gave,—
Now centred all in Brignall cave!
I watch him well—his wayward course
Shows oft a tinture of remorse.

1 MS.: "I care not if a fox I wind."
2 MS.: "our merry-men again Are frolicking in blithesome strain."
3 MS.: "A laughing eye, a dauntless mien."
4 MS.: To the Printer.—The abruptness as to the song is unavoidable. The music of the drinking party could only operate as a sudden interruption to Bertram's conversation, however naturally it might be introduced among the feasters, who were at some distance.
5 MS.: "Upon the (Scottish) shore."
6 See Appendix, Note 2 I.
7 MS.: "scathed" his heart."
8 MS.: "Oft helps the weary night away."
9 The ruins of Ravensworth Castle stand in the North Riding of Yorkshire, about three miles from the town of Richmond, and adjoining to the waste called the Forest of Ackington. It belonged originally to the powerful family of Fitz-Hugh, from whom it passed to the lords Dacre of the South.
10 MS.: "But a score of good fellows," &c.
11 See Appendix, Note 2 K.
And she fled to the forest to hear a love-tale,
And the youth it was told by was Allen-a-Dale!

XXXI.
"Thou seest that, whether sad or gay,
Love mingles ever in his lay.
But when his boyish wayward fit
Is o'er, he hath address and wit;
Oh! 'tis a brain of fire, can ape
Each dialect, each various shape."—
"Nay, then, to aid thy project, Guy—
Soft! who comes here?"—"My trusty spy.
Speak, Hamlin! hast thou lodged our deer?"—
"I have—but two fair stags are near,
I watch'd her as she slowly stray'd
From Egliston up Thorngill glade;
But Wilfrid Wycliffe sought her side,
And then young Redmond, in his pride,
Shot down to meet them on their way:
Much, as it seem'd, was theirs to say;
There's time to pitch both toil and net,
Before their path be homeward set."
A hurried and a whisper'd speech
Did Bertram's will to Denzil teach;
Who, turning to the robber band,
Bade four, the bravest, take the brand.

Rokeby.

CANTO FOURTH.

I.

WHEN Denmark's raven soar'd on high,
Triumphant through Northumbrian sky,
Till, hovering near, her fatal crook
Bade Reged's Britons dread the yoke; ²
And the broad shadow of her wing
Blacken'd each cataract and spring,
Where Tées in tumult leaves its source,
Thundering o'er Caldron and High-Force,—³

Beneath the shade the Northmen came,
Fix'd on each vale a Rune name,⁴
Rear'd high their altar's rugged stone,
And gave their gods the land they won.
Then, Balder, one bleak garth was thine,
And one sweet brooklet's silver line,
And Woden's Croft did title gain
From the stern Father of the Slain;
But to the Monarch of the Mace,
That held in fight the foremost place,

To Odin's son, and Sifia's spouse,
Near Stratforth high they paid their vows,
Remember'd Thor's victorious fame,
And gave the dell the Thunderer's name.

II.

Yet Scald or Kempér err'd, I ween,
Who gave that soft and quiet scene,
With all its varied light and shade,
And every little sunny glade,
And the blithe brook that strolls along
Its pebbled bed with summer song,
To the grim god of blood and scar,
The grisly King of Northern War.
Oh, better were its banks assign'd
To spirits of a gentler kind!
For where the thicket-groups reede,
And the rath primrose decks the mead,⁵
The velvet grass seems carpet meet
For the light fairies' lively feet,
Yon tufted knoll, with daisies strown,
Might make proud Oberon a throne,
While, hidden in the thicket nigh,
Fack should brood o'er his frolic sly;
And where profuse the wood-vetch clings
Round ash and elm, in verdant rings,
Its pale and azure-pencill'd flower
Should canopy Titania's bower.

III.

Here rise no cliffs the vale to shade;
But, skirting every sunny glade,
In fair variety of green
The woodland lends its sylvan screen,
Hoary, yet haughty, frowns the oak,
Its boughs by weight of ages broke;
And towers erect, in sable spire,
The pine-tree seathed by lightning fire;
The drooping ash and birch, between,
Hang their fair tresses o'er the green,
And all beneath, at random grow
Each copper dwarf of varied show,
Or, round the stumps profusely twined,
Fling summer odors on the wind.
Such varied group Urbino's hand
Round him of Tarsus nobly plann'd,
What time he bade proud Athens own
On Mars's Mount the God Unknown!
Then gray Philosophy stood nigh,
Though bent by age, in spirit high:
There rose the scar-seam'd veteran's spear,
There Grecian Beauty bent to hear,
While Childhood at her foot was placed,
Or clung delighted to her waist.

¹ See Appendix, Note 2 L.
² See Appendix, Note 2 M.
³ The Tees rises about the skirts of Crossfell, and falls over the cataracts named in the text before it leaves the moun-
⁴ See Appendix, Note 2 N.
⁵ MS.: "The early primrose decks the mead,
   And the short velvet grass seems meet
   For the light fairies' frolic feet."
IV.
And "Rest we here," Matilda said,
And sat her in the varying shade.
"Chance-met, we well may steal an hour,
To friendship due, from fortune's power.
Thou, Wilfrid, ever kind, must lend
Thy counsel to thy sister-friend;
And, Redmond, thou, at my behest,
No further urge thy desperate quest:
For to my care a charge is left,
Dangerous to one of aid bereft,
Wellnigh an orphan, and alone,
Captive her sire, her house o'erthrown."
Wilfrid, with wonted kindness graced,
Beside her on the turf she placed;
Then paused, with downcast look and eye,
Nor bade young Redmond seat him nigh.
Her conscious diffidence he saw,
Drew backward, as in modest awe,
And sat a little space removed,
Unmark'd to gaze on her he loved.

V.
Wreathed in its dark-brown rings, her hair
Half hid Matilda's forehead fair,
Half hid and half reveal'd to view
Her full dark eye of hazel hue.
The rose, with faint and feeble streak,
So slightly tinged the maiden's cheek,
That you had said her hue was pale;¹
But if she faced the summer gale,
Or spoke, or sung, or quicker moved,
Or heard the praise of those she loved,
Or when of interest was express'd²
Aught that waked feeling in her breast,
The mantling blood in ready play
Rivell'd the blush of rising day.
There was a soft and pensive grace,
A cast of thought upon her face,
That suited well the forehead high,
The eyelash dark, and downcast eye;
The mild expression spoke a mind
In duty firm, composed, resign'd;
'Tis that which Roman art has given,
To mark their maiden Queen of Heaven.
In hours of sport, that mood gave way³
To fancy's light and frolic play;

And when the dance, or tale, or song,
In harmless mirth sped time along,
Full oft her doting sire would call
His Maud the merriest of them all.
But days of war and civil crime
Allow'd but ill such festal time,
And her soft pensiveness of brow
Had deepen'd into sadness now.
In Marston field her father ta'en,
Her friends dispersed, brave Mortham slain,
While every ill her soul foretold
From Oswald's thirst of power and gold,
And boding thoughts that she must part
With a soft vision of her heart,—⁴
All lower'd around the lovely maid,
To darken her dejection's shade.

VI.
Who has not heard—while Erin yet
Strove 'gainst the Saxon's iron bit—
Who has not heard how brave O'Neale
In English blood imbrued his steel,⁵
Against St. George's cross blazed high
The banners of his Tanistry,
To fiery Essex gave the foil,
And reign'd a prince on Ulster soil?
But chief arose his victor pride
When that brave marshal fought and died,⁶
And Avon-Duff to ocean bore
His billows red with Saxon gore.
'Twas first in that disastrous fight
Rokey and Mortham proved their might,⁷
There had they fallen 'mongst the rest,
But pity touch'd a chieftain's breast;
The Tanist he to great O'Neale;⁸
He chek'd his followers' bloody zeal,
To quarter took the kinsmen bold,
And bore them to his mountain hold,
Gave them each sylvan joy to know
Slieve-Donard's cliffs and woods could show,⁹
Shared with them Erin's festal cheer,
Show'd them the chase of wolf and deer,
And, when a fitting time was come,
Safe and unransom'd sent them home,
Loaded with many a gift, to prove
A generous foe's respect and love.

¹ MS.: "That you had said her cheek was pale;
But if she faced the morning gale,
Or longer spoke, or quicker moved."
² MS.: "Or aught of interest was express'd
That waked a feeling in her breast,
The mantling blood, 'like morning beam."
³ MS.: "In fitting hours the mood gave way
To Fancy's light and frolic play,
When the blithe dance, or tale, or song,
In harmless mirth sped time along,
When oft her doting sire would call
His Maudlin merriest of them all."
⁴ MS.: "With a soft vision of her heart,
That stole its seat, ere yet she knew
The guard to early passion due."
⁵ See Appendix, Note 2 O.
⁶ Ibid. Note 2 P.
⁷ MS.: "And, by the deep resounding Morn,
The English veterans heap'd the shore.
It was in that disastrous fight
That Rokey proved his youthful might."
Rokey and Mortham proved their
⁸ MS.: "A kinsman near to great O'Neale."
See Appendix, Note 2 Q.
⁹ MS.: "Gave them each varied joy to know
The woods of Ophalis could show."
VII.

Years speed away. On Rokeby's head
Some touch of early snow was shed;
Calm he enjoy'd, by Greta's wave,
The peace which James the Peaceful gave,
While Mortham, far beyond the main,
Waged his fierce wars on Indian Spain.—
It chanced upon a wintry night,¹
That whiten'd Stanmore's stormy height,
The chase was o'er, the stag was kill'd,
In Rokeby Hall the cups were fill'd,
And by the huge stone chimney sate
The Knight in hospitable state.
Moonless the sky, the hour was late,
When a loud summons shook the gate,
And sore for entrance and for aid
A voice of foreign accent pray'd.
The porter answer'd to the call,
And instant rush'd into the hall
A Man, whose aspect and attire²
Startled the circle by the fire.

VIII.

His plaited hair in elf-locks spread³
Around his bare and matted head;
On leg and thigh, close stretch'd and trim,
His vesture show'd the sinewy limb;
In saffron dyed, a linen vest
Was frequent fold'd round his breast;
A mantle long and loose he wore,
Shaggy with ice, and stain'd with gore.
He clasp'd a burden to his heart,
And, resting on a knotted dart,
The snow from hair and beard he shook,
And round him gazed with wilder look.
Then up the hall, with staggering pace,
He hasten'd by the blaze to place,
Half lifeless from the bitter air,
His load, a Boy of beauty rare.
To Rokeby, next, he louted low,
Then stood erect his tale to show,⁴
With wild majestic port and tone,⁵
Like envoy of some barbarous throne.⁶
"Sir Richard, Lord of Rokeby, hear!
Turlough O'Neale salutes thee dear;
He graces thee, and to thy care
Young Redmond gives, his grandson fair.
He bids thee breed him as thy son,
For Turlough's days of joy are done;
And other lords have seized his land,
And faint and feeble is his hand;
And all the glory of Tyrone
Is like a morning vapor flown,
To bind the duty on thy soul,
He bids thee think on Erin's bowl!⁷
If any wrong the young O'Neale,
He bides thee think of Erin's steel.
To Mortham first this charge was due,
But, in his absence, honors you.—
Now is my master's message by,
And Ferraght will contented die."²

IX.

His look grew fix'd, his cheek grew pale,
He sunk when he had told his tale;
For, hid beneath his mantle wide,
A mortal wound was in his side.
Vain was all aid—in terror wild,
And sorrow, scream'd the orphan Child.
Poor Ferraght raised his wistful eyes,
And faintly strove to soothe his cries;
All reckless of his dying pain,
He blest and blest him o'er again!
And kiss'd the little hands outspread,
And kiss'd and cross'd the infant head,
And, in his native tongue and phrase,
Pray'd to each saint to watch his days;
Then all his strength together drew
The charge to Rokeby to renew.
When half was falter'd from his breast,
And half by dying signs express'd,
"Bless the O'Neale!" he faintly said,
And thus the faithful spirit fled.

X.

'Twas long ere soothing might prevail
Upon the Child to end the tale;
And then he said that from his home
His grandsire had been forced to roam,
Which had not been if Redmond's hand
Had but had strength to draw the brand,
The brand of Lenaugh More the Red,
That hung beside the gray wolf's head.—
'Twas from his broken phrase descried,
His foster-father was his guide;⁸
Who, in his charge, from Ulster bore
Letters and gifts a goodly store;

¹ MS.: "stormy night,
When early snow clad Stanmore's height."

² MS.: "And instant into Rokeby Hall
A stranger rush'd, whose wild attire
Startled," &c.

³ See Appendix, Note 2 R.

⁴ MS.: "Shaggy with snow, and stain'd with gore.
His features as his dress were wild,
And in his arms he bore a child,
With staggering and unequal pace,
He hasten'd by the blaze to place,

Half lifeless from the bitter air,
His load, a Boy of beauty rare.
To Rokeby then, with solemn air,
He turn'd his errand to declare."

⁵ This couplet is not in the MS.

⁶ See Appendix, Note 2 S.

⁷ MS.: "To bind the charge upon thy soul,
Remember Erin's social bowl!"

⁸ See Appendix, Note 2 T.
But ruffians met them in the wood:
Ferraught in battle boldly stood,
Till wounded and o'erpower'd at length,
And stripp'd of all, his falling strength.
Just bore him here—and then the Child
Renew'd again his moaning wild.¹

XI.
The tear down childhood's cheek that flows
Is like the dewdrop on the rose;
When next the summer breeze comes by,
And waves the bush, the flower is dry,
Won by their care, the orphan Child
Soon on his new protector smiled,
With dimpled cheek and eye so fair,
Through his thick curls of flaxen hair.
But blithest laugh'd that cheek and eye
When Rokeby's little Maid was nigh;
'Twas his, with elder brother's pride,
Matilda's tottering steps to guide;²
His native lays in Irish tongue
To soothe her infant ear he sung,
And primrose twined with daisy fair,
To form a chaplet for her hair.
By lawn, by grove, by brooklet's strand,
The children still were hand in hand,
And good Sir Richard smiling eyed
The early knot so kindly tied.

XII.
But summer months bring wilding shoot
From bud to bloom, from bloom to fruit;
And years draw on our human span,
From child to boy, from boy to man;
And soon in Rokeby's woods is seen
A gallant boy in hunter's green.
He loves to wake the felon boar,
In his dark haunt on Greta's shore,
And loves against the deer so dun
To draw the shaft, or lift the gun:
Yet more he loves, in autumn prime,
The hazel's spreading boughs to climb,
And down its cluster'd stores to hail,
Where young Matilda holds her veil.
And she, whose veil receives the shower,³
Is alter'd too, and knows her power;
Assumes a monstress's pride,
Her Redmond's dangerous sports to chide;
Yet listens still to hear him tell
How the grim wild-boar⁴ fought and fell,
How at his fall the bugle rung,
Till rock and greenwood answer flung.

Then blesses her, that man can find
A pastime of such savage kind.⁵

XIII.
But Redmond knew to weave his tale
So well with praise of wood and dale,
And knew so well each point to trace
Gives living interest to the chase,
And knew so well o'er all to throw
His spirit's wild romantic glow,
That, while she blamed, and while she fear'd,
She loved each venturous tale she heard.
Oft, too, when drifted snow and rain
To bower and hall their steps restrain,
Together they explored the page
Of glowing bard or gifted sage;
Oft, placed the evening fire beside,
The minstrel art alternate tried,
While gladsome hark and lively lay
Bade winter night flit fast away:
Thus, from their childhood, blending still
Their sport, their study, and their skill,
An union of the soul they prove,
But must not think that it was love.
But though they dared not, envious Fame
Soon dared to give that union name;
And when so often, side by side,
From year to year the pair she eyed,
She sometimes blamed the good old Knight
As dull of ear and dim of sight,
Sometimes his purpose would declare
That young O'Neale should wed his heir.

XIV.
The suit of Wilfrid rent disguise
And bandage from the lovers' eyes;⁶
'Twas plain that Oswald, for his son,
Had Rokeby's favor wellnigh won.
Now must they meet with change of cheer,
With mutual looks of shame and fear;
Now must Matilda stray apart,
To school her disobedient heart;
And Redmond now alone must rue
The love he never can subdue.
But factions rose, and Rokeby sware,⁷
No rebel's son should wed his heir;
And Redmond, nurtured while a child
In many a bard's traditions wild,
Now sought the lonely wood or stream,
To cherish there a happier dream,
Of maiden won by sword or lance,
As in the regions of romance;

¹ Here follows in the MS. a stanza of sixteen lines, which the author subsequently dispersed through stanzas xvi. and xvii., post.⁹
² MS.: "Three years more old, 'twas Redmond's pride Matilda's tottering steps to guide."
³ MS.: "And she on whom these treasures shower."
⁴ MS.: "grim sangler."
⁵ MS.: "Then bless'd himself that man can find A pastime of such cruel kind."
⁶ MS.: "from their hearts and eyes."
⁷ MS.: "And Redmond, too, apart must rue The love he never can subdue; Then came the war, and Rokeby said, No rebel's son should wed his maid."
And count the heroes of his line,
Great Nial of the Pledges Nine,
Shane-Dymas wild, and Geraldine,
And Conman-More, who vow'd his race
For ever to the fight and chase,
And cursed him, of his lineage born,
Should sheathe the sword to reap the corn,
Or leave the mountain and the wold
To shroud himself in castled hold.
From such examples hope he drew,
And brighten'd as the trumpet blew.

XV.
If brides were won by heart and blade,
Redmond had both his cause to aid,
And all beside of nurture rare
That might beseem a baron's heir.
Turlough O'Neale, in Erin's strief,
On Rokeyby's Lord bestow'd his life,
And well did Rokeyby's generous Knight
Young Redmond for the deed requisite.
Nor was his liberal care and cost
Upon the gallant stripping lost:
Seek the North-Riding broad and wide,
Like Redmond none could steed bestride;
From Tynemouth search to Cumberland,
Like Redmond none could wield a brand;
And then of humor kind and free,
And bearing him to each degree
With frank and fearless courtesy,
There never youth was form'd to steal
Upon the heart like brave O'Neale.

XVI.
Sir Richard loved him as his son;
And when the days of peace were done,
And to the gales of war he gave
The banner of his sires to wave,
Redmond, distinguish'd by his care,
He chose that honor'd flag to bear,
And named his page, the next degree,
In that old time, to chivalry.
In five pitch'd fields he well maintain'd
The honor'd place his worth obtain'd,
And high was Redmond's youthful name
Blazed in the roll of martial fame,
Had fortune smiled on Marston fight,
The eve had seen him dubb'd a knight;
Twice, 'mid the battle's doubtful strife,
Of Rokeyby's Lord he saved the life,
But when he saw him prisoner made,
He kiss'd and then resign'd his blade,
And yielded him an easy prey
To those who led the Knight away;
Resolved Matilda's sire should prove
In prison, as in fight, his love.

XVII.
When lovers meet in adverse hour,
'Tis like a sun-glimpse through a shower,
A watery ray, an instant seen
The darkly closing clouds between.
As Redmond on the turf reclined,
The past and present fill'd his mind.
"It was not thus," Affection said,
"I dream'd of my return, dear maid!
Not thus, when from thy trembling hand
I took the banner and the brand,
When round me, as the bugles blew,
Their blades three hundred warriors drew,
And, while the standard I unroll'd,
Clash'd their bright arms with clamor bold.
Where is that banner now?—its pride
Lies whelm'd in Ouse's sullen tide!
Where now those warriors?—in their gore
They cumber Marston's dismal moor!
And what avails a useless brand,
Held by a captive's shackled hand,
That only would his life retain
To aid thy sire to bear his chain!"
Thus Redmond to himself apart;
Nor lighter was his rival's heart,—
For Wilfrid, while his generous soul
Disdain'd to profit by control,
By many a sign could mark too plain,
Save with such aid, his hopes were vain,—
But now Matilda's accents stole
On the dark visions of their soul,
And bade their mournful musing fly,
Like mist before the zephyr's sigh.

XVIII.
"I need not to my friends recall
How Mortham shunn'd my father's hall;
A man of silence and of woe,
Yet ever anxious to bestow

1 MS.: "Thought on the heroes of his line,
Great Nial of the Pledges Nine,
Shane-Dymas wild, and Conman-More,
Who vow'd his race to wounds and war,
And cursed all, of his lineage born,
Who sheathed the sword to reap the corn
Or left the greenwood and the wold,
To shroud himself in house or hold."

2 See Appendix, Note 2 U.
On my poor self whate'er could prove
A kinsman's confidence and love.
My feeble aid could sometimes chase
The clouds of sorrow for a space;
But oftener, fix'd beyond my power,¹
I mark'd his deep despondence lower.
One dismal cause, by all unguess'd,
His fearful confidence confess'd;²
And twice it was my hap to see
Examples of that agony
Which for a season can o'erstrain
And wreck the structure of the brain.
He had the awful power to know
The approaching mental overthrow,
And while his mind had courage yet
To struggle with the dreadful fit,
The victim writhed against its throes,³
Like wretch beneath a murderer's blows.
This malady, I well could mark,
Sprung from some direful cause and dark;
But still he kept its source conceal'd,
Till arming for the civil field;
Then in my charge he bade me hold
A treasure huge of gems and gold,
With this disjointed stray scroll,
That tells the secret of his soul,
In such wild words as oft betray
A mind by anguish forced astray."—

XIX.
MORTHAM'S HISTORY.
"Matilda! thou hast seen me start,
As if a dagger thrill'd my heart,
When it has happ'd some casual phrase
Waked memory of my former days.
Believe that few can backward cast
Their thoughts with pleasure on the past;
But I!—my youth was rash and vain,³
And blood and rage my manhood stain,
And my gray hairs must now descend
To my cold grave without a friend!
Even thou, Matilda, wilt disown
Thykinsman, when his guilt is known,
And must I lift the bloody veil
That hides my dark and fatal tale?
I must—I will—Pale phantom, cease!
Leave me one little hour in peace!
Thus haunted, think'st thou I have skill
Thine own commission to fulfill?
Or, while thou point'st with gesture fierce
Thy blighted cheek, thy bloody hearse,
How can I paint thee as thou wert,
So fair in face, so warm in heart!

XX.
"Yes, she was fair!—Matilda, thou
Hast a soft sadness on thy brow;
But hers was like the sunny glow
That laughs on earth and all below!
We wedded secret—there was need—
Differing in country and in creed;
And, when to Mortham's tower she came,
We mentioned not her race and name,
Until thy sire, who fought afar,⁴
Should turn him home from foreign war,
On whose kind influence we relied
To soothe her father's ire and pride.
Few months we lived retired, unknown
To all but one dear friend alone,
One darling friend—I spare his shame,
I will not write the villain's name!
My trespasses I might forget,⁵
And sue in vengeance for the debt
Due by a brother torn to me,
Ungrateful to God's clemency,⁶
That spared me penitential time,
Nor cut me off amid my crime.—

XXI.
"A kindly smile to all she lent,
But on her husband's friend 'twas bent
So kind that from its harmless glee
The wretch misconstrued villainy.
Repulsed in his presumptuous love,
A vengeful snare the traitor wove.
Alone we sat—the flask had flow'd,
My blood with heat unwonted flow'd,
When through the alley'd walk we spied
With hurried step my Edith glide,
Cowering beneath the verdant screen,
As one unwilling to be seen.
Words cannot paint the fiendish smile
That curl'd the traitor's check the while!
Fiercely I question'd of the cause;
He made a cold and artful pause,
Then pray'd it might not chase my mood—
'There was a gallant in the wood!'
We had been shooting at the deer;
My cross-bow (evil chance!) was near:
That ready weapon of my wrath
I caught, and, hasting up the path,⁷
In the yew grove my wife I found,
A stranger's arms her neck had bound!
I mark'd his heart—the bow I drew—
I loosed the shaft—'twas more than true!
I found my Edith's dying charms
Lock'd in her murder'd brother's arms!

¹ MS.: "But oftener 'twas my hap to see
Such storms of bitter agony
As for the moment would o'erstrain
And wreck the balance of the brain."
² MS.: __________ "beneath his throes.
³ MS.: —— "my youth was folly's reign."
⁴ MS.: "Until thy father, then afar,"
⁵ MS.: "I, a poor debtor, should forget."
⁶ MS.: "Forgetting God's own clemency."
⁷ MS.: "So kindly that from harmless glee."
He came in secret to inquire
Her state, and reconcile her sire.1

XXII.
"All fled my rage—the villain first
Whose craft my jealousy had nursed;
He sought in far and foreign clime
To 'scape the vengeance of his crime.
The manner of the slaughter done
Was known to few, my guilt to none;
Some tale my faithful steward framed—
I know not what—of shaft misaim’d;
And even from those the act who knew
He hid the hand from which it flew,
Untouched by human laws I stood,
But God had heard the cry of blood!
There is a blank upon my mind,
A fearful vision ill-defined,
Of raving till my flesh was torn,
Of dungeon-bolts and fetters worn—
And when I walked to woe more mild,
And question’d of my infant child—
(Have I not written that she bare
A boy, like summer morning fair?)—
With looks confused my menials tell
That armed men in Mortham dell
Bested the nurse’s evening way,
And bore her, with her charge, away.
My faithless friend, and none but he,
Could profit by this villainy;
Him then I sought, with purpose dread
Of treble vengeance on his head!
He ’scaped me—but my bosom’s wound
Some faint relief from wandering found;
And over distant land and sea
I bore my load of misery.

XXIII.
"’Twas then that fate my footsteps led
Among a daring crew and dread,
With whom full o’er my hated life
I ventured in such desperate strife,
That even my fierce associates saw
My frantic deeds with doubt and awe.
Much then I learn’d, and much can show,
Of human guilt and human woe,
Yet ne’er have, in my wanderings, known
A wretch whose sorrows match’d my own!—
It chanced that, after battle fray,
Upon the bloody field we lay;
The yellow moon her lustre shed
Upon the wounded and the dead,
While, sense in toil and wassail drown’d,
My ruffian comrades slept around,
There came a voice—its silver tone
Was soft, Matilda, as thine own—

‘Ah, wretch!’ it said, ‘what makest thou here,
While unavenged my bloody bier,
While unprotected lives mine heir,
Without a father’s name and care?’

XXIV.
"I heard—obey’d—and homeward drew;
The fiercest of our desperate crew
I brought at time of need to aid
My purposed vengeance, long delay’d,
But, humble be my thanks to Heaven,
That better hopes and thoughts has given,
And by our Lord’s dear prayer has taught,
Mercy by mercy must be bought!—
Let me in misery rejoice—
I’ve seen his face—I’ve heard his voice—
I claim’d of him my only child—
As he disown’d the theft he smiled!
That very calm and callous look,
That fiendish sneer his visage took,
As when he said, in scornful mood,
‘There is a gallant in the wood?’—
I did not slay him as he stood—
All praise be to my Maker given!
Long suffrance is one path to heaven.”

XXV.
Thus far the woeful tale was heard,
When something in the thicket stirr’d,
Up Redmond sprung; the villain Guy
(For he it was that lurk’d so nigh)
Drew back—he durst not e’er his steel
A moment’s space with brave O’Neale,
For all the treasured gold that rests
In Mortham’s iron-banded chests.
Redmond resumed his seat;—he said,
Some roe was rustling in the shade.
Bertram laugh’d grimly when he saw
His timorous comrade backward draw:
"A trusty mate art thou, to fear
A single arm, and aid so near!
Yet have I seen thee mark a deer,
Give me thy carabine—I’ll show
An art that thou wilt gladly know,
How thou may’st safely quell a foe.”

XXVI.
On hands and knees fierce Bertram drew
The spreading birch and hazels through,
Till he had Redmond full in view;
The gun he level’d—Mark like this
Was Bertram never known to miss,
When fair opposed to aim there sate
An object of his mortal hate.
That day young Redmond’s death had seen,
But twice Matilda came between

1 This couplet is not in the MS.

2 MS.; ‘’Twas then that fate my footsteps threw Among a wild and daring crew.”
ROKEBY.

The carabine and Redmond's breast,
Just ere the spring his finger press'd.
A deadly oath the ruffian swore,
But yet his fell design forbore.
"It ne'er," he mutter'd, "shall be said
That thus I scath'd thee, haughty maid!"
Then moved to seek more open aim,
When to his side Guy Denzil came:
"Bertram, forbear!—we are undone
For ever, if thou fire the gun.
By all the fiends, an armed force
Descends the dell, of foot and horse!
We perish if they hear a shot—
Madman! we have a safer plot—
Nay, friend, he ruled, and bear thee back!
Behold, down yonder hollow track,
The warlike leader of the band
Comes, with his broadsword in his hand,"
Bertram look'd up; he saw, he knew
That Denzil's fears had counsel'd true,
Then cursed his fortune and withdrew,
Threaded the woodlands undescribed,
And gain'd the cave on Greta side.

XXVII.
They whom dark Bertram, in his wrath,
Doom'd to captivity or death,
Their thoughts to one sad subject lent,
Saw not nor heard the ambushment.
Headless and unconcern'd they sate,
While on the very verge of fate;
Headless and unconcern'd remain'd,
When Heaven the murderer's arm restrain'd;
As ships drift darkling down the tide,
Nor see the shelves o'er which they glide.
Uninterrupted thus they heard
What Mortham's closing tale declared.
He spoke of wealth as of a load
By Fortune on a wretch bestow'd,
In bitter mockery of hate,
His careless woes to aggravate;
But yet he pray'd Matilda's care
Might save that treasure for his heir—
His Edith's son—for still he raved,
As confident his life was saved;
In frequent vision, he aver'd,
He saw his face, his voice he heard;
Then argued calm—had murder been,
The blood, the corpses, had been seen;
Some had pretended, too, to mark
On Windermere a stranger bark,
Whose crew, with jealous care, yet mild,
Guarded a female and a child.
While these faint proofs he told and press'd,
Hope seem'd to kindle in his breast;
Though inconsistent, vague, and vain,
It warp'd his judgment and his brain.¹

XXVIII.
These solemn words his story close:—
"Heaven witness for me, that I chose
My part in this sad civil fight,
Moved by no cause but England's right,
My country's groans have bid me draw
My sword for gospel and for law;—
These righted, I fling arms aside,
And seek my son through Europe wide.
My wealth, on which a kinsman nigh
Already casts a grasping eye,
With thee may unsuspected lie.
When of my death Matilda hears,
Let her retain her trust three years;
If none, from me, the treasure claim,
Perish'd is Mortham's race and name,
Then let it leave her generous hand,
And flow in bounty o'er the land;
Soften the wounded prisoner's lot,
Rebuild the peasant's ruin'd cot;
So spoils, acquired by fight ajar,
Shall mitigate domestic war."

XXIX.
The generous youths, who well had known
Of Mortham's mind the powerful tone,
To that high mind, by sorrow swerved,
Gave sympathy his woes deserved;²
But Wilfrid chief, who saw reveal'd
Why Mortham wish'd his life conceal'd,
In secret, doubtless, to pursue
The schemes his wilder'd fancy drew.
Thoughtful he heard Matilda tell
That she would share her father's cell,
His partner of captivity,
Where'er his prison-house should be;
Yet grief'd to think that Rokeby Hall,
Dismantled, and forsook by all,
Open to rapine and to stealth,
Had now no safeguard for the wealth
Intrusted by her kinsman kind,
And for such noble use design'd.
"Was Barnard Castle then her choice,"
Wilfrid inquired with hasty voice,
"Since there the victor's laws ordain
Her father must a space remain?"
A flutter'd hope his accents shook,
A flutter'd joy was in his look.
Matilda hasten'd to reply,
For anger flash'd in Redmond's eye;—
"Duty," she said with gentle grace,
"Kind Wilfrid, has no choice of place;
Else had I for my sire assign'd
Prison less galling to his mind,
Than that his wild-wood haunts which sees
And hears the murmur of the Tees,

¹ MS.: "Hope, inconsistent, vague, and vain,
Seem'd on the theme to warp his brain."

² MS.: "To that high mind, thus warp'd and swerved,
The pity gave his woes deserved."
Recalling thus, with every glance,
What captive's sorrow can enhance;
But where those woes are highest, there
Needs Rokeby most his daughter's care."

XXX.

He felt the kindly cheek she gave,
And stood abash'd—then answer'd grave:—
"I sought thy purpose, noble maid,
Thy doubts to clear, thy schemes to aid,
I have beneath mine own command,
So wills my sire, a gallant band,
And well could send some horsemen wight
To bear the treasure forth by night,
And so bestow it as you deem
In these ill days may safest seem."—
"Thanks, gentle Wilfrid, thanks," she said:
"Oh, be it not one day delay'd!
And, more, thy sister-friend to aid,
Be thou thyself content to hold,
In thine own keeping, Mortham's gold,
Safest with thee."—While thus she spoke,
Arm'd soldiers on their converse broke,
The same of whose approach afraid,
The ruffians left their ambuscade,
Their chief to Wilfrid bended low,
Then look'd around a fore a foe.
"What mean'st thou, friend?" young Wycliffe said,
"Why thus in arms beset the glade?"—
"That would I gladly learn from you;
For up my squadron as I drew,
To exercise our martial game
Upon the moor of Barninghame,¹
A stranger told you were waylaid,
Surrounded, and to death betray'd.
He had a leader's voice, I ween,
A falcon glance, a warrior's mien.
He bade me bring you instant aid;
I doubted not, and I obey'd."

XXXI.

Wilfrid changed color, and, amazed,
Turn'd short, and on the speaker gazed;
While Redmond every thicket round
Track'd earnest as a questing hound,
And Denzil's carabine he found;
Sure evidence, by which they knew
The warning was as kind as true,²
Wisest it seem'd, with cautious speed
To leave the dell. It was agreed
That Redmond, with Matilda fair,
And fitting guard, should home repair;³

At nightfall Wilfrid should attend,
With a strong band, his sister-friend,
To bear with her from Rokeby's bowers
To Barnard Castle's lofty towers,
Secret and safe, the banded chests
In which the wealth of Mortham rests.
This hasty purpose fix'd, they part,
Each with a grieved and anxious heart.

Rokeby.

CANTO FIFTH.

I.

The sultry summer day is done,
The western hills have hid the sun,
But mountain peak and village spire
Retain reflection of his fire.
Old Barnard's towers are purple still,
To those that gaze from Toller Hill;
Distant and high, the tower of Bowes
Like steel upon the anvil glows;
And Stanmore's ridge, behind that lay,
Rich with the spoils of parting day,
In crimson and in gold array'd,
Streaks yet a while the closing shade,
Then slow resigns to darkening heaven
The tints which brighter hours had given.
Thus aged men, full loth and slow,
The vanities of life forgo,
And count their youthful follies o'er,
Till Memory lends her light no more.⁴

II.

The eve, that slow on upland fades,
Has darker closed on Rokeby's glades,
Where, sunk within their banks profound,
Her guardian streams to meeting wound.
The stately oaks, whose sombre frown
Of noontide made a twilight brown,
Impervious now to fainter light,
Of twilight make an early night.⁵
Hoarse into middle air arose
The vespers of the roasting crows,
And with congenial murmurs seem
To wake the Genii of the stream;

And, foes so near them, known so late,
A guard should tend her to the gate.”

¹ "The fifth canto opens with an evening scene, of its acenstored beauty when delineated by Mr. Scott. The mountain fading in the twilight is nobly imagined."—Monthly Review.
² MS.: "It was agreed
That Redmond, with Matilda fair,
Should straight to Rokeby Hall repair,

³ MS.: "a darksome night."
"Then, as he cross'd the vaulted porch,
The old gray porter raised his torch."
For louder clamor'd Greta's tide,
And Tees in deeper voice replied,
And, fitful waked, the evening wind
Fitful in sighs its breath resign'd. 1
Wilfrid, whose fancy-nurtured soul
Felt in the scene a soft control,
With lighter step press'd the ground,
And often paused to look around;
And though his path was to his love,
Could not but linger in the grove,
To drink the thrilling interest dear,
Of awful pleasure check'd by fear.
Such inconsistent moods have we,
Even when our passions strike the key.

III.
Now, through the wood's dark mazes past,
The opening lawn he reach'd at last,
Where, silver'd by the moonlight ray,
The ancient Hall before him lay. 2
Those martial terrors long were fled
That frown'd of old around its head:
The battlements, the turrets gray,
Seem'd half abandon'd to decay; 3
On barbarian and keep of stone
Stern Time the foeman's work had done,
Where banners the invader braved,
The harebell now and wallflower waved;
In the rude guard-room, where of yore
Their weary hours the warders wore,
Now, while the cheerful fagots blaze,
On the paved floor the spindle plays; 4
The flanking guns dismounted lie,
The moat is ruinous and dry,
The grim portcullis gone—and all
The fortress turn'd to peaceful hall.

IV.
But yet precautions, lately ta'en, 5
Show'd danger's day revived again;
The court-yard wall show'd marks of care
The fall'n defences to repair,
Lending such strength as might withstand
The insult of marauding band.
The beams once more were taught to bear
The trembling drawbridge into air,
And not, till question'd o'er and o'er,
For Wilfrid oped the jealous door,
And when he enter'd, bolt and bar
Resumed their place with sullen jar;
Then, as he cross'd the vaulted porch,
The old gray porter raised his torch,
And view'd him o'er, from foot to head,
Ere to the hall his steps he led.
That huge old hall, of knightly state,
Dismantled seem'd and desolate.
The moon through transom-shafts of stone,
Which cross'd the latticed oriels, shone,
And by the mournful light she gave,
The Gothic vault seem'd funeral cave.
Pennon and banner waved no more
O'er beams of stag and tusk of boar,
Nor glimmering arms were marshall'd seen
To glance those sylvan spoils between.
Those arms, those ensigns, borne away,
Accomplish'd Rokeby's brave array,
But all were lost on Marston's day!
Yet here and there the moonbeams fall
Where armor yet adorns the wall,
Cumbrous of size, uncouth to sight,
And useless in the modern fight!
Like veteran relic of the wars,
Known only by neglected scars.

V.
Matilda soon to greet him came,
And bade them light the evening flame;
Said, all for parting was prepared,
And tarried but for Wilfrid's guard,
But then, reluctant to unfold
His father's avarice of gold,
He hinted that, lest jealous eye
Should on their precious burden pry,
He judged it best the castle gate
To enter when the night wore late;
And therefore he had left command
With those he trusted of his band,
That they should be at Rokeby met
What time the midnight watch was set.
Now Redmond came, whose anxious care
Till then was busied to prepare
All needful, meetly to arrange
The mansion for its mournful change.
With Wilfrid's care and kindness pleased,
His cold unready hand he seized,

1 MS.: "By fits awaked, the evening wind
By fits in sighs its breath resign'd."
2 MS.: "Old Rokeby's towers before him lay."
3 See Appendix, Note 2 Z.
4 MS.: "The weary night the warders wore,
Now, by the fagot's glancing light,
The maidens plied the spindle's slight.

5 MS.: "The beams had long forgot to bear
The trembling drawbridge into air;
The huge portcullis gone," &c.
6 MS.: "But yet precaution show'd, and fear,
That dread of evil times was here;
There were late marks of jealous care,
For there were recent marks of care,
The fall'n defences to repair;
And not till question'd o'er and o'er
For Wilfrid oped the [studded] door,
Resumed their place with sullen jar."
7 MS.: "Confused he stood, as loth to say
What might his sire's base mood display;
Then hinted, lest some curious eye,
Nor linger'd, still to read the covert clue,"

For Rokeby, with its alluvial isle,
Its portcullis and [studded] door,
Its marble crosier and sceptre tall,
Its eagle and storied shield,
Its blackened belt and sword of gold,
Its banner and belfry bell
The knightly hall and slumbering hall
There's nothing of his splendor left.
And press'd it, till his kindly strain
The gentle youth return'd again,
Seem'd as between them this was said,
"A while let jealousy be dead;
And let our contest be, whose care
Shall best assist this helpless fair."

VI.
There was no speech the truce to bind,
It was a compact of the mind,—
A generous thought, at once impress'd
On either rival's generous breast.
Matilda well the secret took,
From sudden change of mien and look;
And—for not small had been her fear
Of jealous ire and danger near—
Felt, even in her dejected state,
A joy beyond the reach of fate.
They closed beside the chimney's blaze,
And talk'd, and hoped for happier days,
And lent their spirits' rising glow
A while to gild impending woe;—
High privilege of youthful time,
Worth all the pleasures of our prime!
The bicker ing fagot sparkled bright,
And gave the scene of love to sight,
Bade Wilfrid's cheek more lively glow,
Play'd on Matilda's neck of snow,
Her nut-brown curls and forehead high,
And laugh'd in Redmond's azure eye.
Two lovers by the maiden sate,
Without a glance of jealous hate;
The maid her lovers sat between,
With open brow and equal mien;—
It is a sight but rarely spied,
Thanks to man's wrath and woman's pride.

VII.
While thus in peaceful guise they sate,
A knock alarm'd the outer gate,
And ere the tardy porter stirr'd,
The tinkling of a harp was heard,
A mainly voice, of mellow swell,
Bore burden to the music well.

Song.
Summer eve is gone and past,
Summer dew is falling fast;
I have wander'd all the day,
Do not bid me farther stray!
Gentle hearts, of gentle kin,
Take the wandering harper in!

But the stern porter answer gave,
With "Get thee hence, thou strolling knave!"

The king wants soldiers; war, I crow,
Were meeter trade for such as thou."
At this unkind reproof, again
Answer'd the ready minstrel's strain.

Song resumed.
Bid not me, in battle-field,
Buckler lift, or broadsword wield!
All my strength and all my art
Is to touch the gentle heart!
With the wizard notes that ring
From the peaceful minstrel-string.

The porter, all unmoved, replied,—
"Depart in peace, with Heaven to guide;
If longer by the gate thou dwell,
Trust me, thou shalt not part so well."

VIII.
With somewhat of appealing look,
The harper's part young Wilfrid took:
"These notes so wild and ready thrill,
They show no vulgar minstrel's skill;
Hard were his task to seek a home
More distant, since the night is come;
And for his faith I dare engage—
Your Harpool's blood is sour'd by age;
His gate, once readily display'd,
To greet the friend, the poor to aid,
Now even to me, though known of old,
Did but reluctantly unfold."—
"Oh blame not, as poor Harpool's crime,
An evil of this evil time.
He deems dependent on his care
The safety of his patron's heir,
Nor judges meet to ope the tower
To guest unknown at parting hour,²
Urging his duty to excess
Of rough and stubborn faithfulness,
For this poor harper, I would fain
He may relax:—Hark to his strain!"—

IX.

Song resumed.
I have song of war for knight,
Lay of love for lady bright,
Fairy tale to hush the heir,
Goblin grim the maids to scare.
Dark the night, and long till day;
Do not bid me farther stray!

Rokeby's lords of martial fame,
I can count them name by name;³
Legends of their line there be,
Known to few, but known to me;

¹ MS.: "Oh bid not me bear sword and shield,
Or struggle to the bloody field;
For gentler art this hand was made."

² MS.: "To vagrants at our parting hour."

³ See Appendix, Note 3 A.
If you honor Rokeby's kin,
Take the wandering harper in!

Rokeby's lords had fair regard
For the harp and for the bard;
Baron's race threw never well,
Where the curse of minstrel fell.
If you love that noble kin,
Take the weary harper in!

"Hark! Harpool parleys—there is hope,"
Said Redmond, "that the gate will ope."—
"For all thy brag and boast, I trow, Nought know'st thou of the Felon Sow,"
Quoth Harpool, "nor how Greta side
She roam'd, and Rokeby forest wide;
Nor how Ralph Rokeby gave the beast
To Richmond's friars to make a feast.
Of Gilbert Griffinson the tale
Goes, and of gallant Peter Dale,
That well could strike with sword amain,
And of the valiant son of Spain,
Friar Middleton, and blithe Sir Ralph;
There were a jest to make us laugh!
If thou canst tell it, in you shed
Thou'st won thy supper and thy bed."

Matilda smiled; "Cold hope," said she,
"From Harpool's love of minstrelsy!
But, for this harper, may we dare,
Redmond, to mend his couch and fare?"—
"Oh, ask me not!—At minstrel-string
My heart from infancy would spring;
Nor can I hear its simplest strain,
But it brings Erin's dream again,
When placed by Owen Lysaghi's knee
(The Filea of O'Neale was he,)
A blind and bearded man, whose old
Was sacred as a prophet's held,
I've seen a ring of rugged kerne,
With aspects shaggy, wild, and stern,
Enchanted by the master's lay,
Linger around the livelong day,
Shift from wild rage to wilder glee,
To love, to grief, to ecstasy; and feel each varied change of soul
Obedient to the bard's control.—
Ah, Clandeboy! thy friendly floor
Slieve-Donard's oak shall light no more; nor Owen's harp, beside the blaze,
Tell maiden's love, or hero's praise!
The mantling brambles hide thy hearth,
Centre of hospitable mirth;

All undistinguish'd in the glade,
My sire's glad home is prostrate laid,
Their vassals wander wide and far,
Serve foreign lords in distant war,
And now the stranger's sons enjoy
The lovely woods of Clandeboy?
He spoke, and proudly turn'd aside,
The starting tear to dry and hide.

XI.
Matilda's dark and soften'd eye
Was glistening ere O'Neale's was dry.
Her hand upon his arm she laid,—
"It is the will of Heaven," she said.
"And think'st thou, Redmond, I can part
From this loved home with lightsome heart,
Leaving to wild neglect whate'er
Even from my infancy was dear?
For in this calm domestic bound
Were all Matilda's pleasures found.
That hearth, my sire was wont to grace,
Full soon may be a stranger's place; this hall, in which a child I play'd,
Like chine, dear Redmond, lowly laid,
The bramble and the thorn may braid;
Or, pass'd for aye from me and mine,
It ne'er may shelter Rokeby's line.
Yet is this consolation given,
My Redmond,—tis the will of Heaven.
Her word, her action, and her phrase,
Were kindly as in early days;
For cold reserve had lost its power,
In sorrow's sympathetic hour.
Young Redmond dared not trust his voice;
But rather had it been his choice
To share that melancholy hour,
Than, arm'd with all a chieftain's power,
In full possession to enjoy
Slieve-Donard wide, and Clandeboy.

XII.
The blood left Wilfrid's ashen cheek;
Matilda sees, and hastens to speak:—
"Happy in friendship's ready aid,
Let all my murmurs here be staid! And Rokeby's maiden will not part
From Rokeby's Hall with moody heart.
This night at least, for Rokeby's fame,
The hospitable hearth shall flame,
And, ere its native heir retire,
Find for the wanderer rest and fire,
While this poor harper, by the blaze, recounts the tale of other days,

1 See Appendix, Note 3 B.
2 See Appendix, Note 3 C.
3 MS.: "to sympathy."
4 See Appendix, Note 3 D.
5 MS.: "That hearth, my father's honor'd place,
Full soon may see a stranger's face."
6 MS.: "Tanist's power."
7 MS.: "Find for the needy room and fire,
And this poor wanderer, by the blaze."
Bid Harpool ope the door with speed,
Admit him, and relieve each need.—
Meantime, kind Wycliffe, wilt thou try
Thy minstrel skill?—Nay, no reply—
And look not sad!—I guess thy thought,
Thy verse with laurels would be bought;
And poor Matilda, landless now,
Has not a garland for thy brow.
True, I must leave sweet Rokeyby's glades,
Nor wander more in Greta shades;
But sure, no rigid jailer, thou
Wilt a short prison-walk allow,
Where summer flowers grow wild at will,
On Marwood Chase and Toller Hill; 2
Then holly green and lily gay
Shall twine in guerdon of thy lay. 3
The mournful youth, a space aside,
To tune Matilda's harp applied;
And then a low sad descent rung,
As prelude to the lay he sung.

XIII.
The Cypress Wreath. 4
Oh, Lady, twine no wreath for me,
Or twine it of the cypress-tree!
Too lively glow the lilies light,
The varnish'd holly's all too bright,
The May-flower and the eglantine
May shade a brow less sad than mine;
But, Lady, weave no wreath for me,
Or weave it of the cypress-tree!

Let dimpled Mirth his temples twine
With tendrils of the laughing vine;
The manly oak, the pensive yew,
To patriot and to sage be due;
The myrtle bough bids lovers live,
But that Matilda will not give;
Then, Lady, twine no wreath for me,
Or twine it of the cypress-tree!

Let merry England proudly rear
Her blended roses, bought so dear;
Let Albin bind her bonnet blue
With heath and harebell dipp'd in dew;

On favor'd Erin's crest be seen
The flower she loves of emerald green—
But, Lady, twine no wreath for me,
Or twine it of the cypress-tree.

Strike the wild harp, while maids prepare
The ivy meet for minstrel's hair;
And, while his crown of laurel-leaves
With bloody hand the victor weaves,
Let the loud trump his triumph tell;
But when you hear the passing-bell,
Then, Lady, twine a wreath for me,
And twine it of the cypress-tree.

Yes! twine for me the cypress bough;
But oh, Matilda, twine not now!
Stay till a few brief months are past,
And I have look'd and loved my last!
When villagers my shroud bestrew
With pansies, rosemary, and rue,—
Then, Lady, weave a wreath for me,
And weave it of the cypress-tree.

XIV.
O'Neale observed the starting tear,
And spoke with kind and blithesome cheer—
"No, noble Wilfrid! ere the day
When mourns the land thy silent lay,
Shall many a wreath be freely gave
By hand of friendship and of love.
I would not wish that rigid Fate
Had doom'd thee to a captive's state,
Whose hands are bound by honor's law,
Who wears a sword he must not draw;
But were it so, in minstrel pride
The land together would we ride,
On prancing steeds, like harpers old,
Bom'd for the halls of barons bold; 5
Each lover of the lyre we'd seek,
From Michael's Mount to Skiddaw's Peak,
Survey wild Albin's mountain strand,
And roam green Erin's lovely land,
While thou the gentler souls should move
With lay of pity and of love.

1 MS: "what think'st thou
Of yonder harp?—Nay, clear thy brow."

2 Marwood Chase is the old park extending along the Durham side of the Tees, attached to Barnard Castle. Toller Hill is an eminence on the Yorkshire side of the river, commanding a superb view of the ruins.

3 MS: "Where rose and lily I will twine
In guerdon of a song of thine."

4 "Mr. Scott has imparted a delicacy (we mean in the coloring, for of the design we cannot approve), a sweetness, and a melancholy smile to this parting picture that really enchant us. Poor Wilfrid is sadly discomfited by the last instance of encouragement to Redmond; and Matilda endeavors to cheer him by requesting, in the prettiest and yet in the most touching manner, 'kind Wycliffe' to try his minstrelsy. We will here just ask Mr. Scott whether this would not be actual infernal and intolerable torture to a man who had any soul? Why, then, make his heroine even the unwilling case of such misery? Matilda had talked of twining a wreath for her poet of holly green and lily gay, and he sings, broken-hearted, 'The Cypress Wreath.' We have, however, inserted this as one of the best of Mr. Scott's songs."—Monthly Review.

5 MS: "I would not wish thee (in a) degree
So lost to hope as falls to me;
But (wert thou such,) in minstrel pride
The land we'd traverse side by side,
On prancing steeds, like minstrels old,
Bound for
That sought (the halls of barons bold.)"
And I, thy mate, in rougher strain,
Would sing of war and warriors slain,
Old England's bards were vanquished then,
And Scotland's vaunted Hawthorden,
And, silenced on Iernian shore,
McCurtin's harp should charm no more!"2
In lively mood he spoke, to while
From Wilfrid's woe-worn cheek a smile.

XV.
"But," said Matilda, "ere thy name,
Good Redmond, gain its destined fame
Say, wilt thou kindly deign to call
Thy brother-minstrel to the hall?
Bid all the household, too, attend,
Each in his rank a humble friend;
I know their faithful hearts will grieve
When their poor Mistress takes her leave;
So let the horn and beaker flow
To mitigate their parting woe."
The harper came,—in youth's first prime
Himself; in mode of olden time
His garb was fashion'd, to express
The ancient English minstrel's dress,
A seemly gown of Kendal green,
With gorget closed of silver sheen;
His harp in silken scarf was slung,
And by his side an anlace hung.
It seem'd some masquer's quaint array,
For revel or for holiday.

XVI.
He made obeisance with a free
Yet studied air of courtesy,
Each look and accent, framed to please,
Seem'd to affect a playful ease;
His face was of that doubtful kind
That wins the eye, but not the mind;
Yet harsh it seem'd to deem amiss
Of brow so young and smooth as this,
His was the subtle look and sly,
That, spying all, seems nought to spy;
Round all the group his glances stole,
Unmark'd themselves, to mark the whole,
Yet sunk beneath Matilda's look,
Nor could the eye of Redmond brook.
To the suspicious, or the old,
Subtle and dangerous and bold
Had seem'd this self-invited guest;
But young our lovers,—and the rest,

Wrat in their sorrow and their fear
At parting of their Mistress dear,
Tear-blind to the Castle hall
Came as to bear her funeral pall.

XVII.
All that expression base was gone
When waked the guest his minstrel tone;
It fled at inspiration's call,
As erst the demon fled from Saul;6
More noble glance he cast around,
More free-drawn breath inspired the sound,
His pulse beat bolder and more high,
In all the pride of minstrelsy!
Alas! too soon that pride was o'er,
Sunk with the lay that bade it soar!
His soul resumed, with habit's chain,
Its vices wild and follies vain,
And gave the talent, with him born,
To be a common curse and scorn.
Such was the youth whom Rokeby's Maid,
With condescending kindness, pray'd
Here to renew the strains she loved,
At distance heard and well approved.

XVIII.
Song.
THE HARPs.
I was a wild and wayward boy,
My childhood scorn'd each childish toy,
Retired from all, reserved and coy,
To musing prone,
I woo'd my solitary joy,
My Harp alone.

My youth, with bold Ambition's mood,
Despised the humble stream and wood,
Where my poor father's cottage stood,
To fame unknown;—
What should my soaring views make good?
My Harp alone!

Love came with all his frantic fire,
And wild romance of vain desire;7
The baron's daughter heard my lyre,
And praised the tone;—
What could presumptuous hope inspire?
My Harp alone!

At manhood's touch the bubble burst,
And manhood's pride the vision curst,

"And Saul said unto his servants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me. And I came to pass, when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: So Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him."—1 Samuel, chap. xvi. 14, 17, 23.

1 Drummond of Hawthorden was in the zenith of his reputation as a poet during the Civil Wars. He died in 1649.
2 See Appendix, Note 3 E.
3 Ibid. Note 3 F.
4 MS.: "Nor could keen Redmond's aspect brook."
5 MS.: "Came blindfold to the Castle hall,
As if to bear her funeral pall."
6 "But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him.

"And Saul said unto his servants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me. And I came to pass, when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: So Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him."—1 Samuel, chap. xvi. 14, 17, 23.

7 MS.: "Love came, with all his ardent fire,
His frantic dream, his wild desire."
And all that had my folly nursed
   Love's sway to own;
Yet spared the spell that lull'd me first,
   My Harp alone!

Woe came with war, and want with woe;
   And it was mine to undergo
Each outrage of the rebel foe:—
   Can aught alone
My fields laid waste, my cot laid low?
   My Harp alone!

Ambition's dreams I've seen depart,
   Have rued of penury the smart,
Have felt of love the venom'd dart,
   When hope was flown;
Yet rests one solace to my heart,—
   My Harp alone!

Then over mountain, moor, and hill,
   My faithful Harp, I'll bear thee still;
And when this life of want and ill
   Is wellnigh gone,
Thy strings mine elegy shall thrill,
   My Harp alone!

XIX.
   "A pleasing lay!" Matilda said;
But Harpool shook his old gray head,
   And took his baton and his torch,
To seek his guard-room in the porch.
   Edmund observed; with sudden change,
Among the strings his fingers range,
   Until they waked a bolder glee
Of military melody;
   Then paused amid the martial sound,
And look'd with well-feign'd fear around;—
   "None to this noble house belong,"
He said, "that would a minstrel wrong,
   Whose fate has been, through good and ill,
To love his Royal Master still;
   And with your honor'd leave, would fain
Rejoice you with a loyal strain."
Then, as assured by sign and look,
   The warlike tone again he took;
And Harpool stopp'd, and turn'd to hear
   A ditty of the Cavalier.

XX.
   Song.
   THE CAVALIER.
While the dawn on the mountain was misty and gray,
   My true love has mounted his steed and away

Over hill, over valley, o'er dale, and o'er down;
   Heaven shield the brave Gallant that fights for the Crown!

He has duff'd the silk doublet the breastplate to bear,
   He has placed the steel cap o'er his long flowing hair,
From his belt to his stirrup his broadsword hangs down,—
   Heaven shield the brave Gallant that fights for the Crown!

For the rights of fair England that broadsword he draws,
   Her King is his leader, her Church is his cause;
His watchword is honor, his pay is renown,—
   God strike with the Gallant that strikes for the Crown!

They may boast of their Fairfax, their Waller, and all
   The roundheaded rebels of Westminster Hall;
But tell these bold traitors of London's proud town
   That the spears of the North have encircled the Crown.3

There's Derby and Cavendish, dread of their foes;
   There's Erin's high Ormond, and Scotland's Montrose!
Would you match the base Skippon, and Massey, and Brown,
   With the Barons of England, that fight for the Crown?

Now joy to the crest of the brave Cavalier!
   Be his banner unconquer'd, resistless his spear,
Till in peace and in triumph his toils he may draw,
   In a pledge to fair England, her Church, and her Crown.4

XXI.
   "Alas!" Matilda said, "that strain,
Good harper, now is heard in vain!
The time has been, at such a sound,
   When Rokeby's vassals gather'd round,
An hundred manly hearts would bound;
   But now the stirring verse we hear,
Like trump in dying soldier's ear!5
Listless and sad the notes we own,
The power to answer them is flown.
   Yet not without his meet applause
Be he that sings the rightful cause,
Even when the crisis of its fate
   To human eye seems desperate.
While Rokeby's Heir such power retains,
   Let this slight guerdon pay thy pains:—
And lend thy harp; I fain would try
If my poor skill can aught supply,

1 MS.: "And duff'd at once to undergo Each varied outrage of the foe."
2 MS.: "And looking timishly around."
3 MS.: "of proud London town,
   That the North has brave nobles to fight for the Crown."
4 In the MS., the last quatrain of this song is,
5 "If they boast that fair Reading by treachery fell,
   Of Stratton and Lansdowne the Cornish can tell,
   And the North tell of Bramham and Adderton Down,
Where God bless the brave gallants who fought for the Crown."
6 MS.: "But now it sinks upon the ear
   Like dirgo beside a hero's bier."
Ere yet I leave my fathers' hall,
To mourn the cause in which we fall."

XXII.
The harper, with a downcast look,
And trembling hand, her bounty took.—
As yet, the conscious pride of art
Had steel'd him in his treacherous part;
A powerful spring, of force ungues'd,
That hath each gentler mood suppress'd,
And reign'd in many a human breast;
From his that plans the red campaign,
To his that wastes the woodland reign.
The falling wing, the bloodshot eye;
The sportsman marks with apathy,
Each feeling of his victim's ill
Drown'd in his own successful skill.
The veteran, too, who now no more
Aspires to head the battle's roar,
Loves still the triumph of his art,
And traces on the pencill'd chart
Some stern invader's destined way,
Through blood and ruin, to his prey; Patriots to death, and towns to flame,
He dooms, to raise another's name,
And shares the guilt, though not the fame.
What pays him for his span of time
Spent in premeditating crime?
What against pity arms his heart?—
It is the conscious pride of art.3

XXIII.
But principles in Edmund's mind
Were baseless, vague, and undefined.
His soul, like bark with rudder lost,
On Passion's changeful tide was lost;
Nor Vice nor Virtue had the power
Beyond the impression of the hour;
And oh, when Passion rules, how rare
The hours that fall to Virtue's share!
Yet now she roused her—for the pride,
That lack of sternest guilt supplied;
Could scarce support him when arose
The lay that mourned Matilda's woes.

Song.
THE FAREWELL.
The sound of Rokeby's woods I hear,
They mingle with the song:
Dark Greta's voice is in mine ear,
I must not hear them long.
From every loved and native haunt
The native Heir must stray,
And, like a ghost whom sunbeams daunt,
Must part before the day.

Soon from the halls my fathers rear'd
Their scutcheons may descend,
A line so long beloved and fear'd
May soon obscurely end.
No longer here Matilda's tone
Shall bid those echoes swell;
Yet shall they hear her proudly own
The cause in which we fell.

The Lady paused, and then again
Resumed the lay in loftier strain.4

XXIV.
Let our halls and towers decay,
Be our name and line forgot,
Lands and manors pass away,—
We but share our Monarch's lot.
If no more our annals show
Battles won and banners taken,
Still in death, defeat, and woe,
Ours be loyalty unshaken!

Constant still in danger's hour,
Princes own'd our fathers' aid;
Lands and honors, wealth and power,5
Well their loyalty repaid.
Perish wealth, and power, and pride!
Mortal boons by mortals given;
But let Constancy abide,— Constancy's the gift of Heaven.

XXV.
While thus Matilda's lay was heard,
A thousand thoughts in Edmund stirr'd,
In peasant life he might have known
As fair a face, as sweet a tone;
But village notes could ne'er supply
That rich and varied melody;
And ne'er in cottage maid was seen
The easy dignity of mien,
Claiming respect, yet waiving state,
That marks the daughters of the great.
Yet not, perchance, had these alone
His schemes of purposed guilt o'erthrown;
But while her energy of mind
Superior rose to griefs combined,
Lending its kindling to her eye,
Giving her form new majesty,—
To Edmund's thoughts Matilda seem'd
The very object he had dream'd,

1 MS.: "Marking, with sportive cruelty,
The falling wing, the bloodshot eye."
2 MS.: "The veteran chief, whose broken age
No more can lead the battle's rage."
3 "Surely, no poet has ever paid a finer tribute to the power of his art than in the foregoing description of its effects on the mind of this unhappy boy! and none has ever more justly appreciated the worthlessness of the sublimest genius, unrestrained by reason, and abandoned by virtue."—Critical Review.
4 This couplet is not in the MS.
5 MS.: "Knightly titles, wealth and power."
When, long ere guilt his soul had known,
In Winston bowers he mused alone,
Taxing his fancy to combine
The face, the air, the voice divine,
Of princess fair, by cruel fate
Rift of her honors, power, and state!
Till to her rightful realm restored
By destined hero's conquering sword.

XXVI.
"Such was my vision!" Edmund thought;
"And have I, then, the ruin wrought
Of such a maid, that fancy ne'er
In fairest vision form'd her peer?
Was it my hand that could unclose
The postern to her ruthless foes?
Foes, lost to honor, law, and faith,
Their kindest mercy sudden death!
Have I done this? I, who have swore
That if the globe such angel bore,
I would have traced its circle broad,
To kiss the ground on which she trod!—
And now—oh, would that earth would rive,
And close upon me while alive!—
Is there no hope? Is all then lost?—
Bertram's already on his post!
Even now, beside the Hall's arch'd door,
I saw his shadow cross the floor!
He was to wait my signal strain—
A little respite thus we gain:
By what I heard the menials say,
Young Wyelife's troop are on their way—
Alarm precipitates the crime!
My harp must wear away the time."—
And then, in accents faint and low,
He falter'd forth a tale of woe.2

XXVII.
Ballad.
"And whither would you lead me, then?"
Quoth the Friar of orders gray;
And the Russians twain replied again,
"By a dying woman to pray."—

"I see," he said, "a lovely sight,
A sight bodes little harm,—
A lady as a lily bright,
With an infant on her arm."—

"Then do thine office, Friar gray,
And see thou shrive her free!3
Else shall the sprite, that parts to-night,
Fling all its guilt on thee.

Let mass be said, and trentals read,
When thou'rt to convert gone,
And bid the bell of St. Benedict
Toll out its deepest tone."

The shrift is done, the Friar is gone,
Blindfolded as he came—
Next morning, all in Littlecot Hall
Were weeping for their dame.

Wild Darrell is an alter'd man,
The village crones can tell;
He looks pale as clay, and strives to pray,
If he hears the convent bell.

If prince or peer cross Darrell's way,
He'll hear him in his pride—
If he meet a Friar of orders gray,
He droops and turns aside.4

XXVIII.
"Harper! methinks thy magic lays;"
Matilda said, "can goblins raise!
Wellnigh my fancy can discern,
Near the dark porch, a visage stern;
E'en now, in yonder shadowy nook,
I see it!—Redmond, Wilfrid, look!—
A human form distinct and clear—
God, for thy mercy!—It draws near!"
She saw too true. Stride after stride,
The centre of that chamber wide
Fierce Bertram gain'd; then made a stand,
And, proudly waving with his hand,
Thunder'd—"Be still, upon your lives!—
He bleeds who speaks, he dies who strives,"
Behind their chief, the robber crew
Forth from the dark'en portal drew
In silence—save that echo dread
Return'd their heavy measured tread.5
The lamp's uncertain lustre gave
Their arms to gleam, their plumes to wave;
File after file in order pass,
Like forms on Banquo's mystic glass,
Then, halting at their leader's sign,
At once they form'd and curved their line,
Hemming within its crescent drear
Their victims, like a herd of deer.
Another sign, and to the aim
Level'd at once their muskets came,
As waiting but their chieftain's word
To make their fatal volley heard.

1 MS.: "Of some fair princess of romance,
The guardian of a hero's lance."
2 The MS. has not this couplet.
3 MS.: "And see thy shrift be true,
Else shall the soul, that parts to-day,
Fling all its guilt on thee."
4 See Appendix, Note 3 G [to which the author, in his interleaved copy, has made considerable additions.—Ed.].
5 MS.: "Beheld him came his savage crew;
File after file, in order due,
Silent from that dark portal pass,
Like forms on Banquo's magic glass."
XXIX.

Back in a heap the menials drew;
Yet, even in mortal terror true,
Their pale and startled group oppose
Between Matilda and the foes.

"Oh haste thee, Wilfrid!" Redmond cried;
"Undo that wicket by thy side!"
Bear hence Matilda—gain the wood:
The pass may be a while made good;
Thy bard, ere this, must sure be nigh,
Oh speak not—daily not—but fly!"

While yet the crowd their motions hide,
Through the low wicket door they glide,
Through vaulted passages they wind,
In Gothic intricacy twined—
Wilfrid half led, and half he bore,
Matilda to the postern-door,
And safe beneath the forest tree
The Lady stands at liberty.
The moonbeams, the fresh gale's caress,
Renew'd suspended consciousness;—
"Where's Redmond?" eagerly she cries:
"Thou answer'st not—he dies! he dies!
And thou hast left him all bereft
Of mortal aid—with murderers left!
I know it well—he would not yield
His sword to man—his doom is seal'd!
For my scorn'd life, which thou hast bought
At price of his, I thank thee not."

XXX.

The unjust reproach, the angry look,
The heart of Wilfrid could not brook,
"Lady," he said, "my band so near,
In safety thou may'st rest thee here.
For Redmond's death thou shalt not mourn,
If mine can buy his safe return."

He turn'd away—his heart throb'd high,
The tear was bursting from his eye;
The sense of her injustice press'd
Upon the Maid's distracted breast,—
"Stay, Wilfrid, stay! all aid is vain?"
He heard, but turn'd him not again;
He reaches now the postern-door,
Now enters—and is seen no more.

XXXI.

With all the agony that e'er
Was gender'd 'twixt suspense and fear,
She watch'd the line of windows tall,
Whose Gothic lattice lights the Hall,

Distinguish'd by the paly red
The lamps in dim reflection shed, ¹
While all beside in wan moonlight
Each grated casement glimmer'd white.
No sight of harm, no sound of ill,
It is a deep and midnight still.
Who look'd upon the scene had guess'd
All in the Castle were at rest:
When sudden on the windows shone
A lightning flash, just seen and gone! ⁴
A shot is heard—Again the flame
Flash'd thick and fast—a volley came!
Then echo'd wildly, from within,
Of shout and scream the mingled din,
And weapon-clash and maddening cry,
Of those who kill, and those who die!
As fill'd the Hall with sulphurous smoke,
More red, more dark, the death-flash broke;
And forms were on the lattice east,
That struck, or struggled, as they past.

XXXII.

What sounds upon the midnight wind
Approach so rapidly behind?
It is, it is, the tramp of steeds,
Matilda hears the sound, she speeds,
Seizes upon the leader's rein—
"Oh, haste to aid, ere aid be vain!
Fly to the postern—gain the Hall!"
From saddle spring the troopers all; ⁵
Their gallant steeds, at liberty,
Run wild along the moonlight lea.
But, ere they burst upon the scene,
Full stubborn had the conflict been.
When Bertram mark'd Matilda's flight,
It gave the signal for the fight;
And Rokey's veterans, seem'd with scars
Of Scotland's and of Erin's wars,
Their momentary panic o'er,
Stood to the arms which then they bore
(For they were weapon'd, and prepared) ⁶
Their Mistress on her way to guard,
Then cheer'd them to the fight O'Neale,
Then peal'd the shot, and clash'd the steel;
The war-smoke soon with sable breath
Darken'd the scene of blood and death,
While on the few defenders close
The bandits, with redoubled blows,
And, twice driven back, yet fierce and fell
Renew the charge with frantic yell. ⁷

¹ MS.: "Conduct Matilda," &c.
² MS.: "Matilda, shrouded by the trees,
The line of lofty windows sees."
³ MS.: "The dying lamps reflection shed,
While all around the moon's wan light
On tower and casement glimmer'd white;
No sights bode harm, no sounds bode ill,
It is as calm as midnight still."
⁵ MS.: "'Haste to the postern—gain the Hall!"
Sprung from their steeds the troopers all."
⁶ MS.: "For as it happ'd they were prepared."
⁷ In place of this compleat the MS. reads,—
"And as the hall the troopers gain,
Their aid had wellnigh been in vain."
XXXIII.

Wilfrid has fall'n—but o'er him stood
Young Redmond, soil'd with smoke and blood,
Cheering his mates with heart and hand
Still to make good their desperate stand.
"Up, comrades, up! In Rokeby halls
Ne'er be it said our courage falls.
What! faint ye for their savage cry,
Or do the smoke-wreaths daunt your eye?
These rafters have return'd a shout
As loud at Rokeby's wassail rout,
As thick a smoke these hearths have given.
At Hallow-tide or Christmas even.¹
Stood to it yet! renew the fight,
For Rokeby's and Matilda's right!
These slaves! they dare not, hand to hand,
Bide buffet from a true man's brand.²
Impetuous, active, fierce, and young,
Upon the advancing foes he sprung.
Woe to the wretch at whom is bent
His brandish'd falchion's sheer descent!
Backward they scatter'd as he came,
Like wolves before the levin flame.³
When, 'mid their howling conclave driven,
Hath glanced the thunderbolt of heaven,
Bertram rush'd on—but Harpool clasp'd!⁴
His knees, although in death he gasp'd,
His falling corpse before him flung,
And round the trammel'd ruffian clung.
Just then, the soldiers fill'd the dome,
And, shouting, charged the felons home
So fiercely that, in panic dread,
They broke, they yield'd, fell, or fled.⁴
Bertram's stern voice they heed no more,
Though heard above the battle's roar;
While, trampling down the dying man,
He strove, with volley'd threat and ban,
In scorn of odds, in fate's despite,
To rally up the desperate fight.⁵

XXXIV.

Soon murkier clouds the Hall enfold
Than o'er from battle-thunders roll'd,
So dense, the combatants scarce know
To aim or to avoid the blow.
Smothering and blindfold grows the fight—
But soon shall dawn a dismal light!
'Arrid cries, and clashing arms, there came
The hollow sound of rushing flame;

New horrors on the tumult dire
Arise—the Castle is on fire.⁶
Doubtful if chance had cast the brand,
Or frantic Bertram's desperate hand.
Matilda saw—for frequent broke
From the dim casements gusts of smoke.
You tower, which late so clear defined
On the fair hemisphere reclined,
That, pencill'd on its azure pure,
The eye could count each embrasure,
Now, swath'd within the sweeping cloud,
Seems giant spectre in his shroud;
Till, from each loophole flashing light,
A spout of fire shines ruddy bright,
And, gathering to united glare,
Streams high into the midnight air;
A dismal beacon, far and wide
That waken'd Greta's slumbering side.⁷
Soon all beneath, through gallery long,
And pendent arch, the fire flash'd strong,
Snatching whatever could maintain,
Raise, or extend, its furious reign;
Startling, with closer cause of dread,
The females who the conflict fled,
And now rush'd forth upon the plain,
Filling the air with clamors vain.

XXXV.

But ceased not yet, the Hall within,
The shriek, the shout, the carnage din,
Till bursting lattices give proof.⁸
The flames have caught the rafter'd roof.
What! wait they till its beams amain
Crash on the slayers and the slain?
The alarm is caught—the drawbridge falls,
The warriors hurry from the walls,
But, by the conflagration's light,
Upon the lawn renew the fight.
Each strangling felon down was hew'd,
Not one could gain the sheltering wood;
But forth the affrighted harper sprung,
And to Matilda's robe he clung.
Her shriek, entreaty, and command,
Stopp'd the pursuer's lifted hand.⁹
Denzil and he alive were ta'en;
The rest, save Bertram, all are slain.

XXXVI.

And where is Bertram?—Soaring high,¹⁰
The general flame ascends the sky;

¹ See Appendix, Note 3 H.
² MS.: "Like wolves at lightning's midnight flame."
³ MS.: "Bertram had faced him; while he gasp'd
In death, his knees o'er Harpool clasp'd,
His dying corpse before him flung."
⁴ MS.: "So fiercely charged then that they bled, Disbanded, yielded, fell, or fled."
⁵ MS.: "To rally them against their fate,
And fought himself as desperate."
⁶ MS.: "Chance-kindled 'mid the tumult dire,
The western tower is all on fire.
Matilda saw," &c.
⁷ The MS. has not this couplet.
⁸ MS.: "The glowing lattices give proof."
⁹ MS.: "Her shrieks, entreaties, and commands,
Avail'd to stop pursuing bands."
¹⁰ MS.: "Where's Bertram now? In fury driven,
The general flame ascends to heaven;
The gather'd group of soldiers gaze
Upon the red and roaring blaze."
In gather'd group the soldiers gaze
Upon the broad and roaring blaze,
When, like infernal demon, sent,
Red from his penal element,
To plague and to pollute the air,—
His face all gore, on fire his hair,—
Forth from the central mass of smoke
The giant form of Bertram broke!
His brandish'd sword on high he rears,
Then plunged among opposing spears;
Round his left arm his mantle truss'd,
Received and foil'd three lances' thrust;
Nor these his headlong course withstood,
Like reeds he snapp'd the tough ash-wood,
In vain his foes around him clung;
With matchless force aside he flung
Their boldest,—as the bull, at bay,
Tosses the ban-dogs from his way,
Through forty foes his path he made,
And safely gain'd the forest glade.

XXXVII.
Searce was this final conflict o'er,
When from the postern Redmond bore
Wilfrid, who, as of life bereft,
Had in the fatal Hall been left,
Deserted there by all his train;
But Redmond saw, and turn'd again.—
Beneath an oak he laid him down,
That in the blaze gleam'd ruddy brown,
And then his mantle's clasp unlid;
Matilda held his drooping head,
Till, given to breathe the freer air,
Returning life repaid their care.
He gazed on them with heavy sigh,—
"I could have wish'd even thus to die!"
No more he said—for now with speed
Each trooper had regain'd his steed;
The ready palfreys stood array'd,
For Redmond and for Rokeyby's Maid;
Two Wilfrid on his horse sustain,
One leads his charger by the rein,
But oft Matilda look'd behind,
As up the vale of Tees they wind,
Where far the mansion of her sires
Beacon'd the dale with midnight fires.
In gloomy arch above them spread,
The clouded heavens lower'd bloody red;
Beneath, in sombre light, the flood
Appear'd to roll in waves of blood.
Then, one by one, was heard to fall
The tower, the donjon-keep, the hall.

Each rushing down with thunder sound,
A space the conflagration drown'd;
Till, gathering strength, again it rose,
Announced its triumph in its close,
Shook wide its light the landscape o'er,
Then sunk—and Rokeyby was no more!

---

Rokeby.

CANTO SIXTH.

I.
The summer sun, whose early power
Was wont to gild Matilda's bower,
And rouse her with his matin ray
Her duteous orisons to pay,—
That morning sun has three times seen
The flowers unfold on Rokeyby green,
But sees no more the slumber's fly
From fair Matilda's hazel eye;
That morning sun has three times broke
On Rokeyby's glades of elm and oak,
But, rising from their sylvan screen,
Marks no gray turrets glance between.
A shapeless mass lie keep and tower,
That, hissing to the morning shower,
Can but with smouldering vapor pay
The early smile of summer day.
The peasant, to his labor bound,
Pauses to view the blacken'd mound,
Striving, amid the ruin'd space,
Each well-remember'd spot to trace,
That length of trail and fire-scorch'd wall
Once screen'd the hospitable hall;
When yonder broken arch was whole,
'Twas there was dealt the weekly dole;
And where yon tottering columns nod,
The chapel sent the hymn to God,—
So flits the world's uncertain span!
Nor zeal for God, nor love for man,
Gives mortal monuments a date
Beyond the power of Time and Fate.
The towers must share the builder's doom;
Ruin is theirs, and his a tomb:
But better boon benignant Heaven
To Faith and Charity has given,

---

1 The MS. wants this couplet.
2 MS.: "In vain the opposing spears withstood."
3 MS.: "Had in the smouldering hall been left."
4 "The castle on fire has an awful sublimity, which would throw at a humble distance the boldest reaches of the pictorial art. . . . We refer our readers to Virgil's ships, or to his Troy in flames; and though the Virgilian pictures be drawn on a very extensive canvas, with confidence we assert that the castle on fire is much more magnificent. It is, in truth, incomparably grand."—British Critic.
5 MS.: ——— "glancing ray."
And bids the Christian hope sublime
Transcend the bounds of Fate and Time. ¹

II.
Now the third night of summer came,
Since that which witness'd Rokeby's flame.
On Brigntall cliffs and Scargill brake
The owl's melancholy awakes,
The bitter screen'd from rush and flag,
The raven slumber'd on his crag,
Forth from his den the otter drew,—
Grayling and trout their tyrant knew,
As between reed and sedge he peers,
With fierce round snout and sharpen'd ears,²
Or, prowling by the moonbeam cool,
 Watches the stream or swims the pool;—
 Perch'd on his wonted ericle high,
Sleep seal'd the tercel's wearied eye,
That all the day had watch'd so well
The cushion dart across the dell.
In dubious beam reflected stone
That lofty cliff of pale gray stone,
Beside whose base the secret cave
To rapine late a refuge gave.
The crag's wild crest of cope and yew
On Greta's breast dark shadows throw;
Shadows that met or shunn'd the sight,
With every change of sullent light;
As hope and fear alternate chase
Our course through life's uncertain race.

III.
Gliding by crag and cypress green,
A solitary form was seen
To trace with stealthy pace the wold,
Like fox that seeks the midnight fold,
And pauses oft, and cowers dismay'd,
At every breath that stirrs the shade.
He passes now the ivy bush,—
The owl has seen him, and is hush;
He passes now the dodder's oak,—
Ye heard the startled raven croak;
Lower and lower he descends,
Rustle the leaves, the brushwood bends;
The otter hears him tread the shore,
And dives, and is beheld no more;
And by the cliff of pale gray stone
The midnight wanderer stands alone.
Methinks that by the moon we trace
A well-remember'd form and face!
That stripling shape, that cheek so pale,
Combine to tell a ruelful tale,

Of powers misused, of passion's force,
Of guilt, of grief, and of remorse!
'Tis Edmund's eye, at every sound
That flings that guilty glance around;
'Tis Edmund's trembling haste divides
The brushwood that the cavern hides;
And, when its narrow porch lies bare,³
'Tis Edmund's form that enters there.

IV.
His flint and steel have sparkled bright,
A lamp hath lent the cavern light.
Fearful and quick his eye surveys
Each angle of the gloomy maze.
Since last he left that stern abode,
It seemed as none its floor had trode;
Untouch'd appear'd the various spoil,
The purchase of his comrades' toil;
Masks and disguises grim'd with mud,
Arms broken and defiled with blood,
And all the nameless tools that aid
Night-felons in their lawless trade,
Upon the gloomy walls were hung,
Or lay in nooks obscurely flung.⁴
Still on the sordid board appear
The relics of the noon tide cheer:
Flagons and emptied flasks were there,⁵
And bench o'erthrown, and shatter'd chair;
And all around the semblance show'd,
As when the final revel glow'd,
When the red sun was setting fast,
And parting pledge Guy Denzil past.
"To Rokeby treasure-vaults!" they quaff'd,
And shouted loud, and wildly laugh'd,
Pour'd maddening from the rocky door,
And parted—to return no more!
They found in Rokeby vaults their doom,—
A bloody death, a burning tomb!

V.
There his own peasant dress he spies,
Doff'd to assume that quaint disguise;
And, shuddering, thought upon his glee,
When prank'd in garb of minstrelsy.
"Oh, be the fatal art accurst,"
He cried, "that moved my folly first;
Till, bribed by bandits' base applause,
I burst through God's and Nature's laws!
Three summer days are scantily past
Since I have trod this cavern last,
A thoughtless wretch, and prompt to err—
But, oh, as yet no murderer!

¹ MS.: "And bids our hopes ascend sublime
Beyond the bounds of Fate and Time."

"Faith, prevailing o'er his sullen doom,
As bursts the morn on night's unfathom'd gloom,
Lured his dim eye to deathless hope sublime,
Beyond the realms of nature and of time."

² The MS. has not this couplet.

³ MS.: "sally-port lies bare."

⁴ MS.: "Or on the floors disordered flung."

⁵ MS.: "Scats o'erthrown and flagons drain'd,
Still on the cavern floor remain'd,
And all the cave that semblance bore,
It show'd when late the revel wore."
Even now I list my comrades’ cheer,
That general laugh is in mine ear,
Which raised my pulse and steel’d my heart,
As I rehearsed my treacherous part—
And would that all since then could seem
The phantom of a fever’s dream!
But fatal Memory notes too well
The horrors of the dying yell
From my despairing mates that broke,
When flash’d the fire and roll’d the smoke;
When the avengers shouting came,
And hemm’d us ‘twixt the sword and flame!
My frantic flight,—the lifted brand,—
That angel’s interposing hand!——
If for my life, from slaughter freed,
I yet could pay some grateful need!
Perchance this object of my quest
May aid”—he turn’d, nor spoke the rest.

VI.
Due northward from the rugged hearth,
With paces five he metes the earth,
Then toil’d with mattock to explore
The entrails of the cavern floor,
Nor paused till, deep beneath the ground,
His search a small steel casket found.
Just as he stoop’d to loose its hasp,
His shoulder felt a giant grasp;
He started and look’d up aghast,
Then shriek’d!—’Twas Bertram held him fast.
“Fear not!” he said; but who could hear
That deep stern voice and cease to fear?
“Fear not!—By heaven, he shakes as much
As partridge in the falcon’s clutch.”——
He raised him, and unloosed his hold,
While from the opening casket roll’d
A chain and reliquaire of gold.¹
Bertram beheld it with surprise,
Gazed on its fashion and device,
Then, cheering Edmund as he could,
Somewhat he smooth’d his rugged mood:
For still the youth’s half-lifted eye
Quiver’d with terror’s agony,
And sidelong glanced, as to explore,
In meditated flight, the door.
“Sit,” Bertram said, “from danger free:
Thou canst not, and thou shalt not, flee.
Chance brings me hither; hill and plain
I’ve sought for refuge-place in vain.²
And tell me now, thou anguish boy,
What makest thou here? what means this toy?
Denzil and thou, I mark’d, were ta’en;
What lucky chance unbound thy chain?

I deem’d, long since on Baliol’s tower
Your heads were warp’d with sun and shower.³
Tell me the whole—and, mark! nought e’er
Chafes me like falsehood, or like fear.”
Gathering his courage to his aid,
But trembling still, the youth obey’d.

VII.
“Denzil and I two nights pass’d o’er
In fetters on the dungeon floor.
A guest the third saw morrow brought;
Our hold dark Oswald Wycliffe sought,⁴
And eyed my comrade long askance,
With fix’d and penetrating glance.
‘Guy Denzil art thou call’d?’—‘The same.’—
‘At Court who served wild Buckingham;
Thence banish’d, won a keeper’s place,
So Villiers will’d, in Marwood Chase;
That lost—I need not tell thee why—
Thou madest thy wit thy wants supply,
Then fought for Rokey:—Have I guess’d
My prisoner right?—‘At thy behest.’——²
He paused a while, and then went on
With low and confidential tone;—
Me, as I judge, not then he saw,
Close nestled in my couch of straw.—
‘List to me, Guy. Thou know’st the great
Have frequent need of what they hate;
Hence, in their favor oft we see
Unscrupled, useful men like thee.
Were I disposed to bid thee live,
What pledge of faith hast thou to give?’

VIII.
“The ready Fiend, who never yet
Hath fail’d to sharpen Denzil’s wit,
Prompted his lie—‘His only child
Should rest his pledge.’—The Baron smiled,
And turn’d to me—‘Thou art his son?’
I bow’d—our fetters were undone,
And we were led to hear apart
A dreadful lesson of his art.
Wilfrid, he said, his heir and son,
Had fair Matilda’s favor won;
And long since had their union been,
But for her father’s bigot spleen,
Whose brute and blindfold party rage
Would, force per force, her hand engage
To a base kern of Irish earth,
Unknown his lineage and his birth,
Save that a dying ruffian bore
The infant brat to Rokey door.
Gentle restraint, he said, would lead
Old Rokey to enlarge his creed;

¹ MS.: ———— "carcanet of gold."
² The MS. adds:—
“No surer shelter from the foe
Than what this cavern can bestow."
³ MS.: ———— "perch’d in sun and shower."
⁴ MS.: "With the third mom that baron old,
Dark Oswald Wycliffe, sought the hold."
⁵ MS.: "‘And last oldst ride in Rokey’s band,
Art thou the man?’—‘At thy command.’"
But fair occasion he must find
For such restraint well meant and kind,
The Knight being render'd to his charge
But as a prisoner at large.

IX.
"He school'd us in a well-forged tale,
Of scheme the Castle walls to scale,¹
To which was leagued each Cavalier
That dwells upon the Tyne and Wear;
That Rokeby, his parole forgot,
Had dealt with us to aid the plot.
Such was the charge, which Denzil's zeal
Of hate to Rokeby and O'Neale
Proffer'd, as witness, to make good,
Even though the forfeit were their blood.
I scrupled, until o'er and o'er
His prisoners' safety Wycliffe swore;
And then—alas! what needs there more?
I knew I should not live to say
The proffer I refused that day;
Ashamed to live, yet loth to die,
I soil'd me with their infamy!"—
"Poor youth," said Bertram, "wavering still,²
Unfit alike for good or ill!
But what fell next?"—"Soon as at large³
Was scroll'd and sign'd our fatal charge,
There never yet, on tragic stage,
Was seen so well a painted rage
As Oswald show'd! With loud alarm
He call'd his garrison to arm;
From tower to tower, from post to post,
He hurried as if all were lost;
Consign'd to dungeon and to chain
The good old Knight and all his train;
Warn'd each suspected Cavalier,
Within his limits, to appear
To-morrow, at the hour of noon,
In the high church of Eglistone."—

X.
"Of Eglistone!—Even now I pass'd,"
Said Bertram, "as the night closed fast;
Torches and cressets gleam'd around,
I heard the saw and hammer sound,
And I could mark they toil'd to raise
A scaffold, hung with sable baize,
Which the grim headsman's scene display'd,
Block, axe, and sawdust ready laid.
Some evil deed will there be done,
Unless Matilda wed his son;—
She loves him not—'tis shrewdly guess'd
That Redmond rules the damsel's breast.
This is a turn of Oswald's skill;
But I may meet and foil him still!—⁴
How camest thou to thy freedom?"—"There
Lies mystery more dark and rare,
In midst of Wycliffe's well-feign'd rage,
A scroll was offer'd by a page,
Who told, a muffled horseman late
Had left it at the Castle gate.
He broke the seal—his cheek show'd change,
Sudden, portentous, wild, and strange;
The mimic passion of his eye
Was turn'd to actual agony:
His hand like summer sapling shook,
Terror and guilt were in his look.
Denzil he judged, in time of need,
Fit counsellor for evil deed;
And thus apart his counsel broke,
While with a ghastly smile he spoke:—

XI.
"'As in the pageants of the stage,
The dead awake in this wild age.⁵
Mortham—whom all men deem'd deceiv'd
In his own deadly snare to bleed,
Slain by a brave, whom, o'er sea,
He train'd to aid in murdering me,—
Mortham has 'scaped! The coward shot
The steed, but harm'd the rider not."⁶
Here, with an execration fell,
Bertram leap'd up, and paced the cell:—
"Thine own gray head, or bosom dark,"
He mutter'd, "may be surer mark!"
Then sat, and sign'd to Edmund, pale
With terror, to resume his tale.
"Wycliffe went on:—'Mark with what flights
Of wilder'd reverie he writes:—

The Letter.
"'Ruler of Mortham's destiny!
Though dead, thy victim lives to theec.⁷

Edmund, how can'st thou free?"—"Oh, there
Lies mystery," &c.

¹ MS.: "He school'd us then to tell a tale,
Of plot the Castle walls to scale,
To which had sworn each Cavalier."

² MS.: "sore bestå'd!
Wavering alike in good and bad."

³ MS.: "Oh, when at large
Was scroll'd and sign'd our fatal charge,
You never yet, on tragic stage,
Beheld so well a painted rage."

⁴ After this line the MS. reads:—
"Although his soldiers snatch'd away,
When in my very grasp, my prey.—

⁵ MS.: "The dead arise in this wild age,
Mortham—whom righteous Heaven decreed
Caught in his own fell snare to bleed."

⁶ "Mortham escaped—the coward shot
The horse, but harm'd the rider not."
Is truly laughable. How like the denouement of the Covent Garden tragedy! in which the hero is supposed to have been killed, but thus accounts for his escape:
'I through the coat was, not the body, run!'"

⁷ MS.: "Though dead to all, he lives to thee."
Once had he all that binds to life,
A lovely child, a lovelier wife;
Wealth, fame, and friendship, were his own—
Thou gavest the word, and they are flown.¹
Mark how he pays thee:—To thy hand
He yields his honors and his land,²
One boon premised:—Restore his child!
And, from his native land exiled,
Mortham no more returns to claim
His lands, his honors, or his name;
Refuse him this, and from the slain
Thou shalt see Mortham rise again.'—

XII.
"This billet while the Baron read,
His flattering accents show'd his dread;
He press'd his forehead with his palm,
Then took a scornful tone and calm:—
'Wild as the winds, as billows wild!
What wot I of his spouse or child?
Hither he brought a joyous dame,
Unknown her lineage or her name:
Her, in some frantic fit, he slew;
The nurse and child in fear withdrew.
Heaven be my witness! wist I where
To find this youth, my kinsman's heir,—
Unguerdon'd, I would give with joy
The father's arms to fold his boy,
And Mortham's lands and towers resign
To the just heirs of Mortham's line.'—
Thou know'st that scarcely e'en his fear
Suppresses Denzil's cynic sneer;—
'Then happy is thy vassal's part,'
He said, 'to ease his patron's heart!
In thine own jailer's watchful care
Lies Mortham's just and rightful heir;
Thy generous wish is fully won,— Redmond O'Neale is Mortham's son.'—

XIII.
"Up starting'with a frenzied look,
His clenched hand the Baron shook:
'Is hell at work? or dost thou rave,
Or darst thou palter with me, slave!
Perchance thou wot'st not, Barnard's towers
Have racks, of strange and ghastly powers?
Denzil, who well his safety knew,
Firmly rejoin'd, 'I tell thee true,
Thy racks could give thee but to know
The proofs which I, untormented, show.—
It chanced upon a winter night,
When early snow made Stanmore white—
That very night when first of all
Redmond O'Neale saw Rokey Hall—

—It was my goodly lot to gain
A reliquary and a chain,
Twisted and chased of massive gold.
—Demand not how the prize I hold!
It was not given, nor lent, nor sold.—
Gilt tablets to the chain were hung,
With letters in the Irish tongue.
I hid my spoil, for there was need
That I should leave the land with speed;
Nor then I deem'd it safe to bear
On mine own person gems so rare.
Small heed I of the tablets took,
But since have spill'd them by the book,
When some sojourn in Erin's land
Of their wild speech had given command,
But darkling was the sense; the phrase
And language those of other days,
Involved of purpose, as to foil
An interloper's prying toil.
The words, but not the sense, I knew,
Till fortune gave the guiding clew.

XIV.
"'Three days since was that clew reveal'd,
In Thorsgill as I lay conceal'd,³
And heard at full when Rokeyb's Maid
Her uncle's history display'd;
And now I can interpret well
Each syllable the tablets tell.
Mark, then: Fair Edith was the joy
Of old O'Neale of Clandeboy;
But from her sire and country fled,
In secret Mortham's Lord to wed.
O'Neale, his first resentment o'er,
Despatch'd his son to Greta's shore,
Enjoining he should make him known
(Until his further will were shown)
To Edith, but to her alone.
What of their ill-star'd meeting fell,
Lord Wycliffe knows, and none so well.

XV.
"'O'Neale it was who, in despair,
Robb'd Mortham of his infant heir;
He bred him in their nurture wild,
And call'd him murder'd Connel's child.
Soon died the nurse; the Clan believed
What from their Chieftain they received.
His purpose was, that ne'er again⁴
The boy should cross the Irish main;
But, like his mountain sires, enjoy
The woods and wastes of Clandeboy.
Then on the land wild troubles came,
And stronger Chieftains urged a claim,

¹ MS.: "Wealth, fame, and happiness, his own—
Thou gavest the word, and all is flown."
² The MS. adds:
"Nay more, ere one day's course had run,
He rescued twice from death thy son.
Mark his demand.—Restore his child!"
³ MS.: "It chanced, three days since, I was laid Conceal'd in Thorsgill's bosky shade."
⁴ MS.: "never more
The boy should visit Albion's shore."
And wrested from the old man's hands
His native towers, his father's lands.
Unable then, amid the strife,
To guard young Redmond's rights or life,
Late and reluctant he restores
The infant to his native shores,
With goodly gifts and letters stored,
With many a deep conjuring word,
To Mortham and to Rokey's Lord.
Nought knew the clod of Irish earth,
Who was the guide, of Redmond's birth;
But deem'd his Chief's commands were laid
On both, by both to be obey'd.¹
How he was wounded by the way,
I need not, and I list not, say.²

XVI.

"A wondrous tale! and, grant it true,
What, Wycliff answer'd, 'might I do?
Heaven knows, as willingly as now
I raise the bonnet from my brow,
Would I my kinsman's manors fair²
Restore to Mortham, or his heir;
But Mortham is distraught—O'Neale
Has drawn for tyranny his steel,
Malignant to our rightful cause,
And train'd in Rome's delusive laws.
Hark thee apart!—They whisper'd long,
Till Denzil's voice grew bold and strong:—
'My proofs! I never will,' he said,
'Show mortal man where they are laid.
Nor hope discovery to foreclose,
By giving me to feed the crows;
For I have mates at large, who know
Where I am wont such toys to stow.
Free me from peril and from band,
These tablets are at thy command;
Nor were it hard to form some train
To wile old Mortham o'er the main.
Then, lunatie's nor papist's hand
Should wrest from thine the goodly land,'—
'I like thy wit,' said Wycliff, 'well;
But here in hostage shalt thou dwell.
Thy son, unless my purpose err,
May prove the trustier messenger.
A scroll to Mortham shall he bear
From me, and fetch these tokens rare.
Gold shalt thou have, and that good store,
And freedom, his commission o'er;
But if his faith should chance to fail,
The gibbet frees thee from the jail.'—

XVII.

"Mesh'd in the net himself had twined,
What subterfuge could Denzil find?

¹ The MS. has not this couplet.
² MS.: "Would my kinsman's lands resign To Mortham's self and Mortham's line:

He told me, with reluctant sigh,
That hidden here the tokens lie;³
Conjured my swift return and aid,
By all he scoff'd and disobey'd,⁴
And look'd as if the noose were tied,
And I the priest who left his side.
This scroll for Mortham Wycliff gave,
Whom I must seek by Greta's wave;
Or in the hut where chief he hides,
Where Thorsgil's forester resides.
(Thence chance it, wandering in the glade,
That he descried our ambuscade.)
I was dismiss'd as evening fell,
And reach'd but now this rocky cell."—
"Give Oswald's letter."—Bertram read,
And tore it fiercely, shred by shred:—
"All lies and villainy! to blind
His noble kinsman's generous mind,
And train him on from day to day,
Till he can take his life away.—
And now, declare thy purpose, youth,
Nor dare to answer save the truth;
If aught I mark of Denzil's art,
I'll tear the secret from thy heart!"—

XVIII.

"It needs not. I renounce," he said,
"My tutor and his deadly trade.
Fix'd was my purpose to declare
To Mortham, Redmond is his heir;
To tell him in what risk he stands,
And yield these tokens to his hands.
Fix'd was my purpose to atone,
Far as I may, the evil done;
And fix'd it rests—if I survive
This night, and leave this cave alive."—
"And Denzil?"—"Let them ply the rack,
Even till his joints and sinews crack!
If Oswald tear him limb from limb,
What ruth can Denzil claim from him
Whose thoughtless youth he led astray,
And damn'd to this unhallow'd way?
He school'd me faith and vows were vain;
Now let my master reap his gain."—
"True," answer'd Bertram, "'tis his meed;
There's retribution in the deed.
But thou—thou art not for our course,
Hast fear, hast pity, hast remorse;
And he, with us the gale who braves,
Must heave such cargo to the waves,
Or lag with overloaded prore,
While barks unburden'd reach the shore."
Communing with his secret mind,
As half he sat, and half reclined,
One ample hand his forehead press'd,
And one was dropp'd across his breast.
The shaggy eyebrows deeper came
Above his eyes of swarthy flame;
His lip of pride a while forborne
The haughty curve till then it wore;
The unalter'd fierceness of his look
A shade of darken'd sadness took,—
For dark and sad a pressage press'd
Resistlessly on Bertram's breast,—
And when he spoke, his wonted tone,
So fierce, abrupt, and brief, was gone.
His voice was steady, low, and deep,
Like distant waves when breezes sleep;
And sorrow mix'd with Edmund's fear,
Its low unbroken depth to hear.

XX.
"Edmund, in thy sad tale I find
The woe that warp'd my patron's mind:
'Twould wake the fountains of the eye
In other men, but mine are dry.
Mortham must never see the fool
That sold himself base Wycliff's tool;
Yet less from thirst of sordid gain,
Than to avenge supposed disdain.
Say, Bertram rues his fault,—a word,
Till now, from Bertram never heard;
Say, too, that Mortham's Lord he prays
To think but on their former days;
On Quariana's beach and rock,
On Cayo's bursting battle-shock,
On Darien's sands and deadly dew,
And on the dart Tlatzeca threw;—
Perchance my patron yet may hear
More that may grace his comrade's bier.
My soul hath felt a secret weight,
A warning of approaching fate:
A priest had said, 'Return, repent!'
As well to bid that rock be rent.
Firm as that flint I face mine end;
My heart may burst, but cannot bend.

XXI.
"The dawning of my youth, with awe
And prophecy, the Dalesmen saw;
For over Redesdale it came,
As bodeful as their beacon-flame.
Edmund, thy years were scarcely mine,
When, challenging the Clans of Tyne
To bring their best my brand to prove,
O'er Hexham's altar hung my glove;"

ROKEBY.

But Tynedale, nor in tower nor town,
Held champion meet to take it down.
My noontide, India may declare;
Like her fierce sun I fired the air!
Like him, to wood and cave bade fly
Her natives, from mine angry eye.
Panama's maids shall long look pale
When Risingham inspires the tale;
Chili's dark matrons long shall tame
The froward child with Bertram's name.
And now, my race of terror run,
Mine be the eye of tropic sun!
No pale gradations quench his ray,
No twilight dews his wrath allay;
With disk like battle-target red,
He rushes to his burning bed,
Dyes the wide wave with bloody light,
Then sinks at once—and all is night.—

XXII.
"Now to thy mission, Edmund. Fly,
Seek Mortham out, and bid him hie
To Richmond, where his troops are laid,
And lead his force to Redmond's aid.
Say, till he reaches Eglistone,
A friend will watch to guard his son;"
Now, fare thee well; for night draws on,
And I would rest me here alone."
Despite his ill-dissembled fear,
There swam in Edmund's eye a tear;
A tribute to the courage high
Which stoop'd not in extremity,
But strove, irregularly great,
To triumph o'er approaching fate!
Bertram beheld the dewdrop start,
It almost touch'd his iron heart;—
"I did not think there lived," he said,
"One who would tear for Bertram shed."
He loosen'd then his baldric's hold,
A buckle broad of massive gold;—
"Of all the spoil that paid his pains,
But this with Risingham remains;
And this, dear Edmund, thou shalt take,
And wear it long for Bertram's sake.
Once more—to Mortham speed amain;
Farewell! and turn thee not again."

XXIII.
The night has yielded to the morn,
And far the hours of prime are worn.
Oswald, who, since the dawn of day,
Had cursed his messenger's delay,
Impatient question'd now his train,
"Was Denzil's son return'd again?"

1 MS.: "A darken'd sad expression took
The unalter'd fierceness of his look.

2 MS.: "Perchance that Mortham yet may hear Something to grace his comrade's bier."

3 MS.: "We'er shall bend."

4 See Appendix, Note 31.

5 MS.: "With him and Fairfax for his friend,
No risk that Wycliff dares contend.
Tell him the while, at Egliston
There will be one to guard his son."
It chanced there answer'd of the crew
A musing who young Edmund knew:
"No son of Denzil this," he said;
"A peasant boy from Winston glade,
For song and minstrelsy renown'd,
And knavish pranks, the hamlets round."—
"Not Denzil's son!—From Winston vale!—
Then it was false, that specious tale;
Or, worse—he hath despatch'd the youth
To show to Mortham's Lord its truth.
Fool that I was!—but 'tis too late;—
This is the very turn of fate!—
The tale, or true or false, relies
On Denzil's evidence!—He dies!—
Ho! Provost Marshal! instantly
Lead Denzil to the gallows-tree!
Allow him not a parting word;
Short be the shrift, and sure the cord!
Then let his gory head appall
Marauders from the Castle wall.
Lead forth thy guard, that duty done,
With best despatch to Eglistone.—
—Basil, tell Wilfrid he must straight Attend me at the Castle gate."—

XXIV.

"Alas!" the old domestic said,
And shook his venerable head,
"Alas, my Lord! full ill to-day
May my young master brook the way!
The leech has spoke with grave alarm
Of unseen hurt, of secret harm,
Of sorrow lurking at the heart,
That mars and lets his healing art."—
"Tush, tell not me!—Romantic boys
Pine themselves sick for airy toys.
I will find cure for Wilfrid soon;
Bid him for Eglistone be bounce,
And quick!—I hear the dull death-drum tell Denzil's hour of fate is come."
He paused with scornful smile, and then Resumed his train of thought again.
"Now comes my fortune's crisis near!
Entwined boots—not instant fear,
Nought else, can bend Matilda's pride,
Or win her to be Wilfrid's bride.
But when she sees the scaffold placed,
With axe and block and headman graced,
And when she deems that to deny
Dooms Redmond and her sire to die,
She must give way.—Then, were the line
Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
I gain the weather-gage of fate!
If Mortham come, he comes too late,
While I, allied thus and prepared,
Bid him defiance to his beard,—
—If she prove stubborn, shall I dare
To drop the axe?—Soft! pause we there.
Mortham still lives—yon youth may tell
His tale—and Fairfax loves him well;—
Else, wherefore should I now delay
To sweep this Redmond from my way?—
But she to piety perforce
Must yield.—Without there! sound to horse."

XXV.

'Twas bustle in the court below,—
"Mount, and march forward!"—Forth they go;
Steeds neigh and trample all around,
Steel rings, spears glimmer, trumpets sound.—
Just then was sung his parting hymn;
And Denzil turn'd his eyeballs dim,
And, scarcely conscious what he sees,
Follows the horsemen down the Tees; 2
And scarcely conscious what he hears,
The trumpets tingle in his ears.
O'er the long bridge they're sweeping now,
The van is hid by greenwood bough;
But ere the rearward had pass'd o'er,
Guy Denzil heard and saw no more? 1
One stroke upon the Castle bell
To Oswald rung his dying knell.

XXVI.

Oh for that pencil, erst profuse
Of chivalry's emblazon'd hues,
That traced of old, in Woodstock bower;
The pageant of the Leaf and Flower,
And bodied forth the tourney high,
Held for the hand of Emily!
Then might I paint the tamult broad
That to the crowded abbey flow'd,
And pour'd, as with an ocean's sound,
Into the church's ample bound!
Then might I show each varying mien,
Exulting, woeful, or serene,—
Indifference, with his idiot stare,
And Sympathy, with anxious air;
Paint the deceased Cavalier,
Doubtful, disarm'd, and sad of cheer;
And his proud foe, whose formal eye
Claim'd conquest now and mastery;
And the brute crowd, whose envious zeal
Huzzas each turn of Fortune's wheel,

1 MS.: "This is the crisis of my fate."
2 MS.: "Marks the dark cloud sweep down the Tees."
3 "This subordinate villain thus meets the reward which he deserves. He is altogether one of the minor sketches of the poem, but still adds a variety and a life to the group. He is besides absolutely necessary for the development of the plot; and indeed a peculiar propriety in this respect is observable throughout the story. No character, and, comparatively speaking, but little description, is introduced that is unessential to the narrative; it proceeds clearly, if not rapidly, throughout; and although the plot becomes additionally involved to appearance as it advances, all is satisfactorily explained at the last, or rather explains itself by gradual unravelment."—Monthly Review.
And loudest shouts when lowest lie
Exalted worth and station high.
Yet what may such a wish avail?
'Tis mine to tell an onward tale,¹
Hurrying, as best I can, along,
The hearers and the hasty song;—
Like traveller when approaching home,
Who sees the shades of evening come,
And must not now his course delay,
Or choose the fair but winning way;
Nay, severely may his pace suspend,
Where o'er his head the wildings bend,
To bless the breeze that cools his brow,
Or snatch a blossom from the bough.

XXVII.
The reverend pile lay wild and waste,
Profaned, dishonor'd, and defaced.
Through storied lattices no more
In soften'd light the sunbeams pour,
Gilding the Gothic sculpture rich
Of shrine, and monument, and niche.
The Civil fury of the time
Made sport of sacrilegious crime;²
For dark Fanaticism rent
Altar, and screen, and ornament,
And peasant hands the tombs o'erthrew
Of Bowes, of Rokeby, and Fitz-Hugh,³
And now was seen, unwonted sight,
In holy walls a scaffold night!
Where once the priest, of grace divine
Dealt to his flock the mystic sign,
There stood the block display'd, and there
The headsmen grim his hatchet bare;
And for the word of Hope and Faith,
Resounded loud a doom of death.
Thrice the fierce trumpet's breath was heard,
And echo'd thrice the herald's word,
Dooming, for breach of martial laws,
And treason to the Commons' cause,
The Knight of Rokeby and O'Neale
To stoop their heads to block and steel.
The trumpets flourish'd high and shrill,
Then was a silence dead and still;
And silent prayers to Heaven were cast,
And stifled sobs were bursting fast,

Till from the crowd began to rise
Murmurs of sorrow or surprise,
And from the distant aisles there came Deep-mutter'd threats, with Wycliffe's name.⁴

XXVIII.
But Oswald, guarded by his band,
Powerful in evil, waved his hand,
And bade Scolliton's voice be dead,
On peril of the murmurer's head.
Then first his glance sought Rokeby's Knight;⁵
Who gaz'd on the tremendous sight
As calm as if he came a guest
To kindred baron's feudal feast;⁶
As calm as if that trumpet-call
Were summons to the banner'd hall;
Firm in his loyalty he stood,
And prompt to seal it with his blood.
With downcast look drew Oswald nigh,—
He durst not cope with Rokeby's eye!—⁷
And said, with low and faltering breath,
"Thou know'st the terms of life and death."
The Knight then turn'd, and sternly smiled:
"The maiden is mine only child,
Yet shall my blessing leave her head
If with a traitor's son she wed,"
Then Redmond spoke: "The life of one
Might thy malignity atone;⁸
On me be flung a double guilt!
Spare Rokeby's blood, let mine be spilt!"¹⁹
Wycliffe had listen'd to his suit,
But dread prevail'd, and he was mute.

XXIX.
And now he pours his choice of fear
In secret on Matilda's ear:
"An union form'd with me and mine
Ensures the faith of Rokeby's line.
Consent, and all this dread array,
Like morning dream, shall pass away;
Refuse, and, by my duty press'd,
I give the word—thou know'st the rest."
Matilda, still and motionless,
With terror heard the dread address,
Pale as the sheeted maid who dies
To hopeless love a sacrifice;

has generally redeemed his faults by the richness and variety of his fancy, or by the interest of his narrative."²
The MS. has not this nor the preceding compleat.
³ MS.: "And peasants' base-born hands o'erthrew
The tombs of Lacy and Fitz-Hugh."
⁴ MS.: "Muttering of threats, and Wycliffe's name."
⁵ MS.: "Then from his victim sought to know
The working of his tragic show;
And first his glance," &c.
⁶ MS.: "To some high baron's feudal feast.
And that loud-pealing trumpet-call
Was summons," &c.
⁷ MS.: "He durst not meet his scornful eye."
⁸ MS. ———— "The blood of one Might this malignant plot alone."
Then wrung her hands in agony,
And round her cast bewild'rd eye;
Now on the scaffold glanced, and now
On Wycliffe's unrelenting brow.
She veil'd her face, and, with a voice
Scarce audible,—"I make my choice!
Spare but their lives!—for aught beside,
Let Wilfrid's doom my fate decide.
He once was generous?"—As she spoke,
Dark Wycliffe's joy in triumph broke:
"Wilfrid, where loiter'd ye so late?
Why upon Basil rest thy weight?—
Art spell-bound by enchantor's wand?—
Kneel, kneel, and take thy yielded hand;¹
Thank her with raptures, simple boy!
Should tears and trembling speak thy joy?"¹
"Oh hush, my sire! To prayer and tear
Of mine thou hast refused thine ear;
But now the awful hour draws on
When truth must speak in loftier tone."

XXX.
He took Matilda's hand:² "Dear maid,
Couldst thou so injure me," he said,
"Of thy poor friend so basely deem,
As blend with him this barbarous scheme?
Alas! my efforts made in vain
Might well have saved this added pain,³
But now, bear witness earth and heaven,
That ne'er was hope to mortal given,
So twisted with the strings of life
As this—to call Matilda wife!
I bid it now for ever part,
And with the effort bursts my heart!'
His feeble frame was worn so low,
With wounds, with watching, and with woe,
That nature could no more sustain
The agony of mental pain.
He kneel'd—his lip her hand had press'd,—⁵
Just then he felt the stern arrest.

1 In place of this and the preceding couplet, the MS. has:
"Successful was the scheme he plann'd:
'Kneel, Wilfrid! take her yielded hand!'"³
2 MS.: "He kneel'd, and took her hand."
3 MS.: "To save the complicated pain."
4 MS.: "bleated."
5 MS.: "His lips upon her hands were press'd,
Just as he felt the stern arrest."
6 "The character of Wilfrid is as extensively drawn and even more so, perhaps, than that of Bertram. And amidst the fine and beautiful moral reflections accompanying it, a deep insight into the human heart is discernible: we had almost said an intuition more penetrating than even his to whom were given those 'golden keys' that 'unlock the gates of joy.'
'Of horror that and thrilling tears,
Or ope the secret source of sympathetic tears.'"⁶
British Critic.

"In delineating the actors of this dramatic tale, we have little hesitation in saying that Mr. Scott has been more successful than on any former occasion. Wilfrid, a person of the first importance in the whole management of the plot, exhibits an assemblage of qualities not unfrequently combined in real life, but, so far as we can recollect, never before represented in poetry. It is, indeed, a character which required to be touched with great art and delicacy. The reader generally expects to find beauty of form, strength, grace, and agility, united with powerful passions, in the prominent figures of romance; because these visible qualities are the most frequent themes of panegyric, and usually the best passports to admiration. The absence of them is supposed to throw an air of ridicule on the pretensions of a candidate for love or glory. An ordinary poet, therefore, would have despised of awakening our sympathy in favor of that lofty and gencrous spirit and keen sensibility which at once animate and consume the frail and sickly frame of Wilfrid; yet Wilfrid is, in fact, extremely interesting; and his death, though obviously necessary to the condign punishment of Oswald, to the future repose of Matilda, and consequently to the consummation of the poem, leaves strong emotions of pity and regret in the mind of the reader."—Quarterly Review.

XXXI.
The wretched sire beheld, aghast,
With Wilfrid all his projects past;
All turn'd and centred on his son,
On Wilfrid all—and he was gone.
"And I am childless now," he said;
"Childless, through that relentless maid!
A lifetime's arts, in vain essay'd,
Are bursting on their artist's head!—
Here lies my Wilfrid dead—and there
Comes hated Mortham for his heir,
Eager to knit in happy hand
With Rokeby's heiress Redmond's hand.
And shall their triumph soar o'er all
The schemes deep-laid to work their fall?
No!—deeds which prudence might not dare
Appall not vengeance and despair.
The murd'ress weeps upon her bier—
I'll change to real that feign'd tear!
They all shall share destruction's shock;—
Ho! lead the captives to the block!"—
But ill his Provost could divine
His feelings, and forbore the sign.
"Slave! to the block!—or I, or they,
Shall face the judgment-seat this day!"

XXXII.
The outmost crowd have heard a sound
Like horse's hoof on harden'd ground;
Nearer it came, and yet more near,—
The very death's-men paused to hear,
’Tis in the churchyard now—the tread
Hath waked the dwelling of the dead!
Fresh sod, and old sepulchral stone,
Return the trump in varied tone.
All eyes upon the gateway hung,
When through the Gothic arch there sprung
A horseman arm’d, at headlong speed—
Sable his cloak, his plume, his steed.
Fire from the flinty floor was spurn’d,
The vaults unwonted clang return’d!—
One instant’s glance around he threw,
From saddlebow his pistol drew.
Grimly determined was his look!
His charger with the spurs he strook—
All scatter’d backward as he came,
For all knew Bertram Risingham!
Three bounds that noble courser gave;—
The first has reach’d the central nave,
The second clear’d the chancel wide,
The third—he was at Wyelife’s side.
Full level’d at the Baron’s head,
Rung the report—the bullet sped—
And to his long account, and last,
Without a groan dark Oswald past!
All was so quick, that it might seem
A flash of lightning, or a dream.

XXXIII.
While yet the smoke the deed conceals;
Bertram his ready charger wheels;
But flound’r on the pavement floor
The steed, and down the rider bore,
And, bursting in the headlong sway,
The faithless saddle-girls gave way,
’Twas while he toil’d he to be freed,
And with the rein to raise the steed,
That from amazement iron trance
All Wyelife’s soldiers waked at once.
Sword, halberd, musket-but, their blows
Hail’d upon Bertram as he rose;
A score of pikes, with each a wound,
Bore down and pin’d him to the ground;—

1 See Appendix, Note 3 K.
2 MS.: “Three bounds he made, that noble steed;
   The first the Lacies’ tomb has freed.”
3 MS.: “Oppress’d and pin’d him to the ground.”
4 MS.: “And when, by odds borne down at length.”
5 MS.: “He bore.”
6 MS.: “Had more of laugh in it than moan.”
7 MS.: “But held their weapons ready set,
   Lost the grim king should rouse him yet.”
8 MS.: “But Basil check’d them with disdain,
   And flung a mantle o’er the slain.”
9 “Whether we see him scaling the cliffs in desperate course, and scaring the hawks and the ravens from their nests;
or, while the castle is on fire, breaking from the central mass of smoke; or amidst the terrific circumstances of his death, when his ‘parting groan
   Had more of laughter than of moan,’

But still his struggling force he rears
’Gainst hacking brands and stabbing spears,
Thrice from assailants shook him free,
Once gain’d his feet, and twice his knee.
By tenfold odds oppress’d at length,!
Despite his struggles and his strength,
He took a hundred mortal wounds,
As mute as fox ‘mongst mangling hounds;
And when he died, his parting groan
Had more of laughter than of moan;—
—They gazed, as when a lion dies,
And hunters scarcely trust their eyes,
But bend their weapons on the slain,
Lest the grim king should rouse again!?
Then blow and insult some renew’d,
And from the trunk the head had hew’d,
But Basil’s voice the deed forbade;—
A mantle o’er the corse he laid—
“Fell as he was in act and mind,
He left no bolder heart behind;
Then give him, for a soldier meet,
A soldier’s cloak for winding-sheet.”9

XXXIV.
No more of death and dying pang,
No more of trump and bugle clang.
Though through the sounding woods there come
Banner and bugle, trump and drum.
Arm’d with such powers as well had freed
Young Redmond at his utmost need,
And back’d with such a band of horse
As might less ample powers enforce;
Possess’d of every proof and sign
That gave an heir to Mortham’s line,
And yielded to a father’s arms
An image of his Edith’s charms,—
Mortham is come, to hear and see
Of this strange morn the history.
What saw he?—not the church’s floor,
Cumber’d with dead and stain’d with gore;
What heard he?—not the clamorous crowd,
That shout their gratulations loud:
—we mark his race of terror, with the poet, like ‘the eve of tropic sun:’

   ‘No pale gradations quench his ray,
   No twilight dews his wrath alay;
   With disk like battle-target red,
   He rushes to his burning bed,
   Dyes the wide wave with bloody light,
   Then sinks at once—and all is night!’ ”

   British Critic.

“I hope you will like Bertram to the end; he is a Caravaggio sketch, which I may acknowledge to you—but tell it not in Gath—I rather picture myself upon; and he is within the keeping of Nature, though critics will say to the contrary. It may be difficult to fancy that any one should take a sort of pleasure in bringing out such a character, but I suppose it is partly owing to bad reading, and ill-directed reading, when I was young.”—Scott to Miss Baillie. Life, vol. iv. p. 49.
Redmond he saw and heard alone,
Clasp'd him, and sobb'd, "My son! my son!"—1

XXXV.

This chanced upon a summer morn,
When yellow waved the heavy corn;
But when brown August o'er the land
Call'd forth the reaper's busy band,
A gladsome sight the sylvan road
From Eglistone to Northam show'd,
A while the hardy rustic leaves
The task to bind and pile the sheaves,
And maids their sickles fling aside,
To gaze on bridegroom and on bride,
And childhood's wondering group draws near,
And from the gleaner's hands the ear

1 MS.: Here the author of "Rokeby" wrote,
"End of Canto VI."
Stanza xxxv., added at the request of the printer and another friend, was accompanied by the following note to Mr. Ballantyne:—

"Dear James:
"I send you this out of deference to opinions so strongly expressed; but still retaining my own, that it spoils one effect without producing another.

"W. S."

2 "Mr. Scott has now confined himself within much narrower limits, and, by descending to the sober annals of the seventeenth century, has renounced nearly all those ornaments of Gothic pageantry which, in consequence of the taste with which he displayed them, had been tolerated, and even admired, by modern readers. He has subjected his style to a severer code of criticism. The language of the poet is often unconsciously referred to the date of the incidents which he relates; so that what is careless or idiosyncratic escapes censure, as a supposed anomaly of antique diction; and it is, perhaps, partly owing to this impression that the phraseology of 'Mar-"mon' and of the 'Lady of the Lake' has appeared to us to be no less faulty than that of the present poem.

"But be this as it may, we confidently persist in thinking that in this last experiment Mr. Scott's popularity will be still further confirmed, because we have found by experience that, although during the first hasty inspection of the poem, undertaken for the gratification of our curiosity, some blunders intruded themselves upon our notice, the merits of the story, and the minute shades of character displayed in the conduct of it, have been sufficient, during many succeeding perusals, to awaken our feelings and to reanimate and sustain our attention.

"The original fiction from which the poem is derived appears to us to be constructed with considerable ability; but it is on the felicity with which the poet has expanded and dramatized it, on the diversity of the characters, on the skill with which they are unfolded, and on the ingenuity with which every incident is rendered subservient to his final purpose, that we chiefly found our preference of this over his former productions. From the first canto to the last, nothing is superfluous. The arrival of a nocturnal visitor at Barnard Castle is announced with such solemnity, the previous terrors of Oswald, the arrogance and ferocity of Bertram, his abruptness and discourtesy of demeanor, are so minutely delineated, that the picture seems as if it had been introduced for the sole purpose of displaying the author's powers of description; yet it is from this visit that all the subsequent incidents naturally and almost necessarily flow. Our curiosity is, at the very commencement of the poem, most powerfully excited; the principal actors in the scene exhibit themselves distinctly to our view, the development of the plot is perfectly continuous, and our attention is never interrupted or suffered to relax."—Quarterly Review.

Time and Tide had thus their sway,
Yielding, like an April day,
Smiling noon for sullen morn,
Years of joy for hours of sorrow?

"This production of Mr. Scott altogether abounds in imagery and description less than either of its precursors, in pretty nearly the same proportion as it contains more of dramatic incident and character. Yet some of the pictures which it presents are highly wrought and vividly colored; for example, the terribly animated narrative, in the fifth canto, of the battle within the hall, and the configuration of the mansion of Rokeby.

"Several defects, of more or less importance, we noticed, or imagined that we noticed, as we read. It appears like presumption to accuse Mr. Scott of any failure in respect of costume—of the manners and character of the times which he describes—yet the impression produced on our minds by the perusal has certainly been that we are thrown back in imagination to a period considerably antecedent to that which he intends to celebrate. The other faults we remarked consist principally in the too frequent recurrence of those which we have so often noticed on former occasions, and which are so incorporated with the poet's style that it is now become as useless as it is painful to repeat the censures which they have occasioned.

"We have been informed that 'Rokeby' has hitherto circulated less rapidly than has usually been the case with Mr. Scott's works. If the fact be so, we are inclined to attribute it solely to accidental circumstances, being persuaded that the defects of the poem are only common to it with all the productions of its author; that they are even less numerous than in most; and that its beauties, though of a different stamp, are more profusely scattered, and, upon the whole, of a higher order."—Critical Review.

"Such is 'Rokeby;' and our readers must confess that it is a very interesting tale. Alone, it would stamp the author one of the most picturesque of English poets. Of the story we need hardly say anything further. It is complicated without being confused, and so artfully suspended in its unravelment as to produce a constantly-increasing sensation of curiosity. Parts, indeed, of the catastrophe may at intervals be foreseen, but they are like the partial glimpses that we catch of a noble and well-shaded building, which does not break on us in all its proportion and in all its beauty until we suddenly arrive in front. Of the characters we have something to observe in addition to our private remarks. Our readers may perhaps have seen that we have frequently applied the term sketch to the several personages of the drama. Now, although this poem possesses more variety of well-sustained character than any other of Mr. Scott's performances—although Wilfrid will be a favorite with every lover of the soft, the gentle, and the pathetic, while Edmund offers a fearful warning to unwise abilities—and although Redmond is indeed a man, compared to the Cranstone of the 'Lay,' to the Wilton of 'Marmion,' or to the Malcolm of the 'Lady of the Lake,'—yet is Redmond himself but a sketch compared to Bertram. Here is Mr. Scott's true and favorite hero. He has no 'sneaking kindness' for these barbarians;—he boldly adopts and patronizes them. Deloraine (it has humorously been observed) would have been exactly what Marmion was, could he have read and written; Bertram is a happy mixture of both;—as great a villain, if possible, as Marmion; and, if possible, as great a scamp as Deloraine. His character is completed by a dash of the fierceness of Roderick Dhu. We do not here enter into the question as to the good taste of an author who employs the utmost strength of description on a compound of bad qualities; but we must observe, in the way of protest for the present, that something must be wrong where poetical effect and moral approbation are so much at variance. We leave untouched the general argument, whether it makes any difference, for poetical purposes, that a hero's vices or his virtues should preponderate. Powerful indeed must be the genius of the poet who, out of such materials as those above mentioned, can form an interesting whole. This, however, is the fact; and Bertram at times so overcomes hatred with admiration that he (or rather his painter) is almost pardonable for his energy alone. There is a charm about this spring of mind which bears down all opposition, 'and throws a brilliant veil of light over the most hideous deformity.' This is the fascination—this is the variety and vigor by which Mr. Scott recommends barbarous heroes, undignified occurrences, and, occasionally, the most incorrect language and the most imperfect versification—

'Catch but his fire!'—And you forgive him all.'

Monthly Review.

"That 'Rokey,' as a whole, is equally interesting with Mr. Scott's former works, we are by no means prepared to assert. But if there be, comparatively, a diminution of interest, it is evidently owing to no other cause than the time or place of its action, the sobriety of the period, and the abated wildness of the scenery. With us, the wonder is that a period so late as that of Charles the First could have been managed so dexterously, and have been made so happily subservient to poetic invention.

"In the meantime, we have no hesitation in declaring our opinion that the tale of 'Rokey' is much better told than those of the 'Lay' or of 'Marmion.' Its characters are introduced with more ease; its incidents are more natural; one event is more necessarily generated by another; the reader's mind is kept more in suspense with respect to the termination of the story; and the moral reflections interspersed are of a deeper cast. Of the versification, also, we can justly pronounce that it is more polished than in 'Marmion' or the 'Lay'; and though we have marked some careless lines, yet even in the instance of 'bold disorder,' 'Rokey' can furnish little room for animadversion. In fine, if we must compare him with himself, we judge Mr. Scott has given us a poem in 'Rokey' superior to 'Marmion' or the 'Lay,' but not equal, perhaps, to the 'Lady of the Lake.'"—British Critic.

"It will surprise no one to hear that Mr. Morriss assured his friend he considered 'Rokey' as the best of all his poems. The admirable, perhaps the unique, fidelity of the local descriptions might almost have swayed, for I will not say it perverted, the judgment of the lord of that beautiful and thenceforth classical domain; and, indeed, I must admit that I never understood or appreciated half the charm of this poem until I had become familiar with its scenery. But Scott himself had not designed to rest his strength on these descriptions. He said to James Ballantyne, while the work was in progress (September 2), 'I hope the thing will do, chiefly because the world will not expect from me a poem of which the interest turns upon character;' and in another letter (October 28, 1812), 'I think you will see the same sort of difference taken in all my former poems, of which I would say, if it is fair for me to say any thing, that the force in the 'Lay' is thrown on style, in "Marmion" on description, and in the 'Lady of the Lake' on incident.' I suspect some of these distinctions may have been matters of after-thought; but as 'Rokey' there can be no mistake. His own original conceptions of some of its principal characters have been explained in letters already cited; and I believe no one who compares the poem with his novels will doubt that, had he undertaken their portraiture in prose, they would have come forth with effect hardly inferior to any of the groups he ever created. As it is, I question whether, even in his prose, there is any thing more exquisitely wrought out, as well as fancied, than the whole contrast of the two rivals for the love of the heroine in 'Rokey;' and that heroine herself, too, has a very particular interest attached to her. Writing to Miss Edgeworth five years after this time (16th March, 1818), he says, 'I have not read one of my poems since they were printed, excepting last year the 'Lady of the Lake,' which I liked better than I expected, but not well enough to induce me to go through the rest; so I may truly say with Macbeth—

"I am afraid to think of what I've done—
Look on't again I dare not.'

"This much of Maitida I recollect (for that is not so easily forgotten), that she was attempted for the existing person of a lady who is now no more, so that I am particularly flattered with your distinguishing it from the others, which are in general mere shadows.' I can have no doubt that the lady he here alludes to was the object of his own unfortunate first love; and as little, that in the romantic generosity, both of the youthful poet who fails to win her higher favor and of his chivalrous competitor, we have before us something more than a mere shadow.

"In spite of these graceful characters, the inimitable scenery on which they are presented, and the splendid vivacity and thrilling interest of several chapters in the story—such as the opening interview of Bertram and Wycliffe—the flight up the cliff on the Greta—the first entrance of the cave at Frigillan—the firing of Rokey Castle—and the catastrophe in Egliston Abbey; in spite certainly of exquisitely happy lines profusely scattered throughout the whole composition, and of some detached images—that of the setting of the tropical sun, for example—which were never surpassed by any poet in spite of all these merits, the immediate success of 'Rokey' was greatly inferior to that of the 'Lady of the Lake;' nor has it ever since been so much a favorite with the public at large as any other of his poetical romances. He ascribes this failure, in his introduction of 1839, partly to the radically unpoetical character of the Roundheads; but surely their character has its poetical side also, had his prejudices allowed him to enter upon its study with impartial sympathy; and I doubt not Mr. Morritt suggested the difficulty on this score, when the outline of the story was as yet undetermined, from consideration rather of the poet’s peculiar feelings, and powers as hitherto exhibited, than of the subject absolutely. Partly he blames the satiety of the public ear, which had had so much of his rhythm, not only from himself, but from dozens of mocking birds, male and female, all more or less applauded in their day, and now all equally forgotten. This circumstance, too, had probably no slender effect; the more that, in defiance of all the hints of his friends, he now, in his narrative, repeated (with more negligence) the uniform octosyllabic couplets of the ‘Lady of the Lake’ instead of recurring to the more varied cadence of the ‘Lay’ or ‘Marmion.’ It is fair to add that, among the London circles at least, some sarcastic flings in Mr. Moore’s ‘Twopenny Post Bag’ must have had an unfavorable influence on this occasion. But the cause of failure which the poet himself places last was unquestionably the main one. The deeper and darker passion of ‘Childe Harold,’ the audacity of its morbid voluptuousness, and the melancholy majesty of the numbers in which it defied the world, had taken the general imagination by storm; and ‘Rokeby,’ with many beauties and some sublimities, was pitched, as a whole, on a key which seemed tame in the comparison.”—Lockhart. Life of Scott, vol. iv. pp. 53-58.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

On Barnard's towers, and Tee's stream, &c.—P. 299.

"Barnard Castle," saith old Leland, "standeth stately upon Tees." It is founded upon a very high bank, and its ruins impend over the river, inclining within the area a circuit of six acres and upwards. This once magnificent fortress derives its name from its founder, Barnard Baliol, the ancestor of the short and unfortunate dynasty of that name, which succeeded to the Scottish throne under the patronage of Edward I. and Edward III. Baliol's Tower, afterwards mentioned in the poem, is a round tower of great size, situated at the western extremity of the building. It bears marks of great antiquity, and was remarkable for the curious construction of its vaulted roof, which has been lately greatly injured by the operations of some persons, to whom the tower has been leased for the purpose of making patent shot! The prospect from the top of Baliol's Tower commands a rich and magnificent view of the wooded valley of the Tees.

Barnard Castle often changed masters during the middle ages. Upon the forfeiture of the unfortunate John Baliol, the first king of Scotland of that family, Edward I. seized this fortress among the other English estates of his refractory vassal. It was afterwards vested in the Beauchamps of Warwick, and in the Staffords of Buckingham, and was also sometimes in the possession of the Bishops of Durham, and sometimes in that of the crown. Richard III. is said to have enlarged and strengthened its fortifications, and to have made it for some time his principal residence, for the purpose of bridling and suppressing the Lancastrian faction in the northern counties. From the Staffords, Barnard Castle passed, probably by marriage, into the possession of the powerful Nevilles, Earl of Westmoreland, and belonged to the last representative of that family, when he engaged with the Earl of Northumberland in the ill-concerted insurrection of the twelfth of Queen Elizabeth. Upon this occasion, however, Sir George Bowes of Sleatham, who held great possessions in the neighborhood, anticipated the two insurgent earls, by seizing upon and garrisoning Barnard Castle, which he held out for ten days against all their forces, and then surrendered it upon honorable terms. See Sadler's State Papers, vol. ii. p. 830. In a ballad contained in Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, vol. i., the siege is thus commemorated:—

"Then Sir George Bowes he straight way rose,
   After them some spoyle to make;
   These noble erles turned back againe,
   And aye they vowed that knight to take."

"That baron he to his castle fled;
   To Barnard Castle then fled he;
   The uttermost wailes were eate to won,
   The erles have won them presentle."

"The uttermost wailes were lime and brick;
   But though they won them soon anone,
   Long ere they wan the innermost wailes,
   For they were cut in rock and stone."

By the suppression of this rebellion, and the consequent forfeiture of the Earl of Westmoreland, Barnard Castle reverted to the crown, and was sold or leased out to Car, Earl of Somerset, the guilty and unhappy favorite of James I. It was afterwards granted to Sir Henry Vane the elder, and was therefore, in all probability, occupied for the Parliament, whose interest during the Civil War was so keenly espoused by the Vanes. It is now, with the other estates of that family, the property of the Right Honorable Earl of Darlington.

NOTE B.

— no human ear,
Unsharpen'd by revenge and fear,
Could e'er distinguish horse's plank.—P. 299.

I have had occasion to remark, in real life, the effect of keen and fervent anxiety in giving acuteness to the organs of sense. My gifted friend, Miss Joanna Baillie, whose dramatic works display such intimate acquaintance with the operations of human passion, has not omitted this remarkable circumstance:—

"De Montfort (off his guard). 'Tis Rezenvelt: I heard his well-known foot,
From the first staircase mounting step by step.
Prob. How quick an ear thou hast for distant sound!
I heard him not.
(De Montfort looks embarrassed, and is silent")

NOTE C.

The morion's plumes his visage hide,
And the buff-coat, in ample fold,
Mantles his form's gigantic mould.—P. 291.

The use of complete suits of armor was fallen into disuse during the Civil War, though they were still worn by leaders of rank and importance. "In the reign of King James I.," says our military antiquary, "no great alterations were made in the article of defensive armor, except that the buff-coat, or jerkin, which was originally worn under the cuirass, now became frequently a substitute for it, it having been found that a good buff leather would of itself resist the stroke of a sword; this, however, only occasionally took place among the light-armed cavalry and infantry, complete suits of armor being still used among the heavy horse. Buff-coats continued to be worn by the city trained-bands till within the memory of perhaps now living, so that defensive armor may, in some measure, be said to have terminated in the same material with which it began, that is, the skins of animals, or leather."—Grose's Military Antiquities. Lond. 1801, 4to, vol. ii. p. 323.

Of the buffcoats, which were worn over the corselets, several are yet preserved; and Captain Grose has given an engraving of one which was used in the time of Charles I. by Sir Francis Rhodes, Bart., of Balbrugh Hall, Derbyshire.

They were usually lined with silk or linen, secured before by buttons, or by a lace, and often richly decorated with gold or silver embroidery. From the following curious account of a dispute respecting a buff-coat between an old Roundhead captain and a justice of the peace, by whom his arms were seized after the Restoration, we learn that the value and importance of this defensive garment were considerable.—"A party of horse came to my house, commanded by Mr. Peebles; and he told me he was come for my arms, and that I must deliver them. I asked him for his order. He told me he had a better order than Oliver used to give; and, clapping his hand upon his sword-hilt, he said that was his order. I told him, if he had none but that, it was not sufficient to take my arms; and then he pulled out his warrant, and I read it. It was signed by Wentworth Armitage, a general warrant to search all persons they suspected, and so left the power to the soldiers at their pleasure. They came to us at Cooley Hall, about sun-setting; and I caused a candle to be lighted, and conveyed Peebles into the room where my arms were. My arms were near the kitchen fire; and there they took away fowling-pieces, pistols, muskets, carbines, and such like, better than £30. Then Mr. Peebles asked me for my buff-coat; and I told him they had no order to take away my apparel. He told me I was not to dispute their orders; but if I would not deliver it, he would carry me away prisoner, and had me out of doors. Yet he let me alone unto the next morning, that I must wait upon Sir John, at Halifax; and, coming before him, he threatened me, and said, if I did not send the coat, for it was too good for me to keep. I told him it was not in his power to demand my apparel; and he, growing into a fit, called me rebel and traitor, and said, if I did not send the coat with all speed, he would send me where I did not like well. I told him I was no rebel, and he did not well to call me so before these soldiers and gentlemen, to make me the mark for every one to shoot at. I departed the room; yet, notwithstanding all the threatenings, did not send the coat. But the next day he sent John Lyster, the son of Mr. Thomas Lyster, of Shipden Hall, for this coat, with a letter, verbatim thus:—

'Mr. Hodson, I admire you will play the child so with me as you have done, in writing such an Inconsiderable letter. Let me have the buff-coat sent forthwith, otherwise you shall so hear from me as will not very well please you.' I was not at home when this messenger came; but I had ordered my wife not to deliver it, but, if they would take it, let them look to it; and he took it away; and one of Sir John's brethren wore it many years after. They sent Captain Butt to compound with my wife about it; but I sent word I would have my own again; but he advised me to take a price for it, and make no more ado. I said, it was hard to take my arms and apparel too; I had laid out a great deal of money for them; I hoped they did not mean to destroy me, by taking my goods illegally from me. He said he would make up the matter, if I pleased, betwixt us; and, it seems, had brought Sir John to a price for my coat. I would not have taken £10 for it; he would have given about £4; but, wanting my receipt for the money, he kept both sides, and I had never satisfaction."—Memoirs of Captain Hodson. Edin. 1806, p. 178.

Note D.

*On his dark face a scorching clime, And soil, had done the work of time.

Death had he seen by sudden blow, By wasting plague, by tortures slow.—P. 291.*

In this character I have attempted to sketch one of those West Indian adventurers who, during the course of the seventeenth century, were popularly known by the name of Buccaneers. The successes of the English in the predatory incursions upon Spanish America, during the reign of Elizabeth, had never been forgotten; and, from that period downward, the exploits of Drake and Raleigh were imitated, upon a smaller scale indeed, but with equally desperate valor, by small bands of pirates, gathered from all nations, but chiefly French and English. The engaging policy of the Spaniards tended greatly to increase the number of these freebooters, from whom their commerce and colonies suffered, in the issue, dreadful calamity. The Windward Islands, which the Spaniards did not deem worthy their own occupation, had been gradually settled by adventurers of the French and English nations. But Frederic of Toledo, who was despatched in 1639 with a powerful fleet against the Dutch, had orders from the Court of Madrid to destroy these colonies, whose vicinity at once offended the pride and excited the jealous suspicions of their Spanish neighbors. This order the Spanish admiral executed with sufficient rigor; but the only consequence was that the planters, being rendered desperate by persecution, began, under the well-known name of Buccaneers, to commence a retaliation so horribly savage that the perusal makes the reader shudder. When they carried on their depredations at sea, they boarded, without respect to disparity of number, every Spanish vessel that came in their way; and, demeaning themselves, both in the battle and after the contest, more like demons than human beings, they succeeded in impressing their enemies with a sort of superstitious terror, which rendered them incapable of offering effectual resistance. From piracy at sea, they advanced to making predatory descents on the Spanish territories; in which they displayed the same furious and irresistible valor, the same thirst of spoil, and the same brutal inhumanity to their captives. The large treasures which they acquired in their adventures, they disposed by the most unbounded licentiousness in gaming, women, wine, and debauchery of every species. When their spoils were thus wasted, they entered into some new association, and undertook new adventures. For further particulars concerning these extraordinary banditti, the reader may consult Raynal, or the common and popular book called the History of the Buccaneers.

Note E.

*On Marston heath

Meth, from to front, the ranks of death.—P. 292.*

The well-known and desperate battle of Long-Marston Moor, which terminated so unfortunately for the cause of Charles, commenced under very different auspices. Prince Rupert had marched with an army of 20,000 men for the relief of York, then besieged by Sir Thomas Fairfax, at the head of the Parliamentary army, and the Earl of Leven, with the Scottish auxiliary forces. In this he so completely succeeded that he compelled the besiegers to retreat to Marston Moor, a large open plain, about eight miles distant from the city. Thither they were followed by the prince, who had now united to his army the garrison of York, probably not less than ten thousand men strong, under the gallant Marquis (then Earl) of Newcastle. Whitlelocke has recorded, with much impartiality, the following particulars of this eventful day:
APPENDIX TO ROKEBY.

351

"The right wing of the Parliament's army was commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, and consisted of all his horse and three regiments of the Scots horse; the left wing was commanded by the Earl of Manchester and Colonel Cromwell. One body of their foot was commanded by Lord Fairfax, and consisted of his foot, and two brigades of the Scots foot for reserve; and the main body of the rest of the foot was commanded by General Lennox.

"The right wing of the prince's army was commanded by the Earl of Newcastle; the left wing by the prince himself; and the main body by General Goring, Sir Charles Lucas, and Major-General Porter. Thus were both sides drawn up into battle.

"July 3d, 1644. In this posture both armies faced each other, and about seven o'clock in the morning the fight began between them. The prince, with his left wing, fell on the Parliament's right wing, routed them, and pursued them a great way; the like did General Goring, Lucas, and Porter, upon the Parliament's main body. The three generals, giving all for lost, hastened out of the field, and many of their soldiers fled, and threw down their arms; the king's forces too eagerly following them, the victory, now almost achieved by them, was again snatched out of their hands. For Colonel Cromwell, with the brave regiment of his countrymen, and Sir Thomas Fairfax, having rallied some of his horse, fell upon the prince's right wing, where the Earl of Newcastle was, and routed them; and the rest of their companions rallying, they fell all together upon the divided bodies of Rupert and Goring and totally dispersed them, and obtained a complete victory, after three hours' fight.

"From this battle and the pursuit, some reckon were buried 7000 Englishmen; all agreed that above 3000 of the prince's men were slain in the battle, besides those in the chase, and 3600 prisoners taken, many of their chief officers, twenty-five pieces of ordnance, forty-seven colors, 10,000 arms, two wagons of carabines and pistols, 130 barrels of powder, and all their bag and baggage."—Whitlelocke's Memoirs, fol. p. 89. Lond. 1682.

Lord Clarendon informs us that the king, previous to receiving the true account of the battle, had been informed by an express from Oxford "that Prince Rupert had not only relieved York, but totally defeated the Scots, with many particulars to confirm it; all which was so much believed there that they had made public fires of joy for the victory."

"The order of this great battle, wherein both armies was near of an equal number, consisting, to the best calculation, near to three score thousand men upon both sides, I shall not take upon me to describe; albeit, from the draughts then taken upon the place, and information I received from this gentleman, who being then a volunteer, as having no command, had opportunity and liberty to ride from the one wing of the army to the other, to view all their several squadrons of horse and battalions of foot, how formed, and in what manner drawn up, with every other circumstance relating to the fight, and that both as to the king's armies and that of the Parliament's, amongst whom, until the engagement, he went from statione to statione to observe their order and forms; but that the descriptions of this battle, with the various success on both sides at the beginning, with the loss of the royal army, and the sad effects that followed that misfortune as to his majesty's interest, has been so often done already by English authors, little to our commendation, how justly I shall not dispute, seeing the truth is, as our principal general did that night near fourteen myles from the place of the fight, that part of the army where he commanded being totally routed; but it is as true that much of the victorie is attributed to the good conduct of David Lesseele, lieutenant-general of our horse. Cromwell himself, that miniose of fortune, but the rod of God's wrath, to punish afterward three rebellions nations, disdained not to take orders from him, albeit then in the same quality of command for the Parliament, as being lieutenant-general to the Earl of Manchester's horse, whom, with the assistance of the Scots horse, having routed the prince's right wing, as he had done that of the Parliament's. These two commanders of the horse upon that wing wisely restored the great body of the horse from pursuing these broken troops, but, wheeling to the left-hand, falls in upon the naked flanks of the prince's main battalion of foot, carrying them dowe with great violence; neither mett they with any great resistance until they came to the Marques of Newcastle his battallione of White Coats, who, first peppering them soundly with their shott, when they came to charge, stoutly bore them up with their picks that they could not enter to break them. Here the Parliament's horse of that wing received their greatest loss, and a stop for someyme put to their hoped-for victorie; and that only by the stout resistance of this gallant battallione, which consisted near of four thousand foot, until at length a Scots regiment of dragoons, commanded by Collonell Frizcall, with other two, which brought to open them upon some breaks, which at length they did, when all the ammunition was spent. Having refused quarters, every man fell in the same order and ranke wherein he had fought.

"Be this execution done, the prince returned from the persue of the right wing of the Parliament's horse, which he had beaten, and followed too farre, to the losse of the battell, which certainely, in all men's opinions, he might have carried if he had not been too violent upon the persue; which gave his enemies upon the left-hand opportunity to disperse and cut dowe his infantry, who, having cleared the field of all the standing bodes of foot, wer now, with many of ther owne, standing ready to receive the charge of his almost spent horses, if he should attempt it; which the prince observing, and seeing all lost, he retired to Yorke with two thousand horse. Notwithstanding of this, ther was that night such a consternation in the Parliament armies, that it's believed by most of those that wer there present, that if the prince, having so great a body of horse intire, had made ane onfull that night, or the ensuing morning be-tyme, he had carried the victorie out of ther hands; for it's certe, by the morning's light, he had rallyed a body of ten thousand men, wherof ther was near three thousand gallant horse. These, with the assistance of the tomne and garrisons of Yorke, might have done much to have recovered the victorie, for the loss of this battell in effect lost the king and his interest in the three kingdomes; his maje-

NOTE F.

Monckton and Mitton told the news,
How troops of 'Roundheads choked the Ouse,
And many a bonny Scot, ahaist,
Sprink'ring his palfrey wave-broad, past,
Cursing the day when coal or mead
First bared their Leesye o'er the Tweed.—P. 295.

Monckton and Mitton are villages near the river Ouse, and not very distant from the field of battle. The particulars of the action were violently disputed at the time; but the following extract from the Manuscript History of the Baronial House of Somerville is decisive as to the flight of the Scottish general, the Earl of Lennox. The particulars are given by the author of the history on the authority of his father, then the representative of the family. This curious manuscript has been published by consent of my noble friend, the present Lord Somerville.
tue never being able eftir this to make head in the north, but lost his garrisons every day.

"As for Generall Lessele, in the beginning of this flight having that part of the armie quite broken, whence he had placed himself, by the valour of the prince, he imagined, and was conformed by the opinione of others then upon the place with him, that the battell was irrecoverably lost, seeing they were fleeing upon all hands; therefor they humbled intreated his excellence to reteire and wait his better fortune, which, without farder adjuying, he did; and never drew bridle untill he came the lenth of Leuds, having ridden all that night with a cloak of drop de berrie about him, belonging to this gentleman of whom I write, then in his retinue, with many other officers of good qualitie. It was not twelve the next day before they had the certaney wiw was master of the field, when at length their arryves are expresse, sent by David Lessele, to acquaint the generall they had obtained a most glorious victorie, and that the prince, with his broken troupes, was fled from Yorke. This intelligence was somewhat amazinge to these gentlemen that had been eye-witnesse to the disorder of the armie before their retreating, and had then accompanied the generall in his flight; who, being much wearied that evening of the battell with ordering of his armie, and now quite spent with his long journey in the night, had casten himselfe donne upon a bed to rest, when this gentleman coming quietly into his chamber, he awok, and hastily cryes out, 'Lievetement-collonell, what news?' 'All is safe, may it please your excellency; the Parliament's armie has obtained a great victorie;' and then delivers the letter. The generall, upon the hearing of this, knocked upon his breast, and says, 'I would to God I had died upon the place!' and then opens the letter, which, in a few lines, gave an account of the victorie, and in the close pressed his speedy returne to the armie, which he did the next day, being accompanied some myles back by this gentleman, who then takes his leave of him, and receave at parting many expressions of kyndnesse, with promises that he would never be unmyndful of his care and respect towards him; and in the end he intreats him to present his service to all his friends and acquaintances in Scotland. Thereafter the generall sets forward in his journey for the armie, as this gentleman did for,

in order to his transportations for Scotland, where he arrivede six dayes eftir the fight of Mestonne Muir, and gave the first true account and descriptione of that great battell, wherein the Covenanters then glorified so much, that they impiously boasted the Lord had now signally appeared for his cause and people; it being ordinarie for them, during the whole time of this warre, to attribute the greatness of their success to the goodness and justice of their cause, untill Divine Justice trysted them with some crosse dispensations, and then you might have heard this language from them, 'That it pleases the Lord to give his owne the heaviest end of the tree to bear, that the saints and the people of God must still be sufferers while they are here about, that the malignant party was God's rod to punish them for their unthankfullnesse, which in the end he will cast into the fire;' with a thousand other expressions and scripture citations, paphanely and blasphemously uttered by them, to palliate their villanoue and rebellion."—Memoirs of the Somervilles. Edin. 1815.

NOTE G.

With his bord'd horse, fresh tidings say,
Stout Cromwell has redeem'd the day.—P. 295.

Cromwell, with his regiment of cuirassiers, had a principal share in turning the fate of the day at Marston Moor; which was equally matter of triumph to the Independents and of grief and heartburning to the Presbyterians and to the Scottish. Principal Baillie expresses his dissatisfaction as follows:—

"The Independents sent up one quickly to assure that all the glory of that night was theirs; and they and their Major-General Cromwell had done it all there alone; but Captain Stuart afterward showed the vanity and falsehood of their disgraceful relation. God gave us that victory wonderfully. There were three generals on each side, Lesley, Fairfax, and Manchester; Rupert, Newcastle, and King. Within half an hour and less, all six took them to their heels,—this to you alone. The disadvantage of the ground, and violence of the flower of Prince Rupert's horse, carried all our right wing down; only Eginton kept ground, to his great loss; his lieutenant-crown, a brave man, I fear shall die, and his son Robert be mutilated of an arm. Lindsay had the greatest hazard of any; but the beginning of the victory was from David Leslie, who before was much suspected of evil designs: he, with the Soots and Cromwell's horse, having the advantage of the ground, did dissipate all before them."—Baillie's Letters and Journals. Edin. 1795, 8vo, ii. 36.

NOTE II.

Do not my native dales prolong
Of Percy Rede the tragic song,
Truth'd forward to his bloody fall
By Gisborne's, that treacherous Hall?—P. 295.

In a poem entitled "The Lay of the Reeder Minstrel," Newcastle, 1809, this tale, with many others peculiar to the valley of the Reeder, is commemorated,—"The particulars of the traditional story of Parcy Reed of Tronghed, and the Halls of Gisbornefield, the author had from a descendant of the family of Reed. From his account it appears that Percival Reed, Esquire, a keeper of Reedsdale, was betrayed by the Halls (hence denominated the false-hearted Hals') to a band of mosstroopers of the name of Crosier, who slew him at Batinghope, near the source of the Reed. "The Halls were, after the murder of Parcy Reed, held in such universal abhorrence and contempt by the inhabitants of Reedsdale, for their cowardly and treacherous behavior, that they were obliged to leave the country." In another passage we are informed that the ghost of the injured Borderer is supposed to haunt the banks of a brook called the Pringle. These Relics of Tronghed were a very ancient family, as may be conjectured from their deriving their surname from the river on which they had their mansion. An epitaph on one of their tombs affirms that the family held their lands of Tronghed, which are situated on the Reed, nearly opposite to Otterburn, for the incredible space of nine hundred years.

NOTE I.

And near the spot that gav me name,
The wooted mound of Rissingham,
Where Reed upon her margin sees
Sweet Woodburne's cottages and trees,
Some ancient sculptor's art has shewn
An outlaw's image on the stone.—P. 295.

Rissingham, upon the river Reeder, near the beautiful hamlet of Woodburne, is an ancient Roman station, formerly called Habitancam. Cudmore says that in his time the popular account bore that it had been the abode of a deity, or giant, called Magon; and appeals in support of this tradition, as well as to the etymology of Rishingham or Reidsham, which signifies, in German, the habitation of the giants, to two Roman altars taken out of the river, inscribed Deo Mogonti Casenorum. About half a mile distant from Rishingham, upon an eminence covered with scattered birch-trees and fragments of rock, there is cut upon a large rock, in alto relievo, a remarkable figure, called Robin of Rishingham, or Robin of Redesdale. It presents a hunter, with his bow raised in one hand, and in the other what seems to be a hare. There is a quiver at the back of the figure, and he is dressed in a long coat, or kirtle, coming down to the knees, and meeting close, with a girdle bound round him. Dr. Horley, who saw all monuments of antiquity with Roman eyes, inclines to think this figure a Roman archer; and certainly the bow is rather of the ancient size than of that which was so formidable in the hand of the English archers of the middle ages. But the rudeness of the whole figure prevents our founding strongly upon mere inaccuracy of proportion. The popular tradition is that it represents a giant, whose brother resided at Woodburne, and he himself at Rishingham. It adds that they subsisted by hunting, and that one of them, finding the game become too scarce to support them, poisoned his companion, in whose memory the monument was engraved. What strange and tragic circumstance may be concealed under this legend, or whether it is utterly apocryphal, it is now impossible to discover.

The name of Robin of Redesdale was given to one of the Umfravilles, Lords of Puddhoe, and afterwards to one Hilliard, a friend and follower of the king-making Earl of Warwick. This person commanded an army of Northumberland and northern men, who seized on and beheaded the Earl Rivers, father to Edward the Fourth's queen, and his son, Sir John Woodville.—See Holinshad, ad annum, 1462.

Note K.

do thou reverence.

The statutes of the Buccaneers.—P. 295.

The "statutes of the Buccaneers" were, in reality, more equitable than could have been expected from the state of society under which they had been formed. They chiefly related, as may readily be conjectured, to the distribution and the inheritance of their plunder.

When the expedition was completed, the fund of prize-money acquired was thrown together, each party taking his oath that he had retained or concealed no part of the common stock. If any one transgressed in this important particular, the punishment was, his being set ashore on some desert key or island, to shift for himself as he could. The owners of the vessel had then their share assigned for the expenses of the outfit. These were generally old pirates, settled at Tobago, Jamaica, St. Domingo, or some other French or English settlement. The surgeon's and carpenter's salaries, with the price of provisions and ammunition, were also defrayed. Then followed the compensation due to the maimed and wounded, rated according to the damage they had sustained; as six hundred pieces of eight, or six slaves, for the loss of an arm or leg, and so in proportion.

"After this act of justice and humanity, the remainder of the booty was divided into as many shares as there were Buccaneers. The commander could only lay claim to a single share, as the rest; but they complimented him with two or three, in proportion as he had acquitted himself to their satisfaction. When the vessel was not the property of the whole company, the person who had fitted it out, and furnished it with necessary arms and ammunition, was entitled to a third of all the prizes. Favor had never any influence in the division of the booty, for every share was determined by lot. Instances of such rigid justice as this are not easily met with, and they extended even to the dead. Their share was given to the man who was known to be their companion when alive, and therefore their heir. If the person who had been killed had no intimate, his part was sent to his relations, when they were known. If there were no friends nor relations, it was distributed in charity to the poor and to churches, which were to pray for the person in whose name these benefactions were given, the fruits of inhuman but necessary piratical plunder.

"—Baynal's History of European Settlements in the East and West Indies, by Judaham. Lond. 1776, Svo. iii. p. 41.

Note L.

the course of Tees.—P. 299.

The view from Barnard Castle commands the rich and magnificent valley of Tees. Immediately adjacent to the river, the banks are very thickly wooded; at a little distance they are more open and cultivated; but, being interspersed with hedge-rows, and with isolated trees of great size and age, they still retain the richness of woodland scenery. The river itself flows in a deep trench of solid rock, chiefly limestone and marble. The finest view of its romantic course is from a handsome modern-built bridge over the Tees, by the late Mr. Morriss of Rokey. In Leland's time, the marble quarries seem to have been of some value. "Hard under the cliff' by Egliaston is found on each side of Tees very fair marble, wont to be taken up both by mariners of Barnardes Castelle and of Egliaston, and partly to have been wrought by them, and partly sold unwrought to others."—Itinerary. Oxford, 1768, Svo, p. 88.

Note M.

Egliaston's gray ruins.—P. 300.

The ruins of this abbey, or priory (for Tanner calls it the former, and Leland the latter), are beautifully situated upon the angle formed by a little dell called Thongsall, at its junction with the Tees. A good part of the religious house is still in some degree habitable, but the church is in ruins. Eliaston was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Baptist, and is supposed to have been founded by Ralph de Multon about the end of Henry the Second's reign. There were formerly the toubles of the families of Rokey, Bowes, and Fitz-Hugh.

Note N.

the mound,

Raised by that Legion long renowned,

Whose votive shrine asserts their claim,

Of pius, faithful, conquering fame.—P. 300.

Close behind the George Inn at Greta Bridge, there is a well-preserved Roman encampment, surrounded with a triple ditch, lying between the river Greta and a brook called the Titta. The four entrances are easily to be discerned. Very many Roman altars and monuments have been found in the vicinity, most of which are preserved at Rokey by my friend Mr. Morriss. Among others is a small votive altar, with the inscription, Legio Vi, Vic, P. F., which has been rendered, Legio Sexta, Victn, Pia, Fortis, Fidelis.
NOTE O.
—Rokeby's turret high.—P. 300.

This ancient manor long gave name to a family by whom it is said to have been possessed from the Conquest downward, and who are at different times distinguished in history. It was the Baron of Rokeby who finally defeated the insurrection of the Earl of Northumberland, tempore Hen. IV., of which Holinshed gives the following account:—"The king, advertised hereof, caused a great armie to be assembled, and came forward with the same towards his enemies; but yer the king came to Nottingham, Sir Thomas, or (as other copies have) Sir Rafe Rokesbie, Shrieffe of Yorkshire, assembled the forces of the country to resist the earle and his power; coming to Grimbauthrigs, beside Knarsborough, there to stop them the passage; but they returning aside, got to wealthiest, and so to Tadcaster, and finally came forward unto Bramham-moor, near to Haisledew, where they chose their ground meet to fight upon. The shriiffe was as ready to give battell as the earle to receive it; and so with a standard of S. George spread, set fercelle upon the earls, who, under a standard of his owne armes, encountered his adversaries with great manhood. There was a sore encounter, and cruel conflict betwixt the parties, but in the end the victorie fell to the shriiffe. The Lord Bardolfe was taken, but sore wounded, so that he shortly after died of the hurts. As for the Earle of Northumberland, he was slain outright; so that now the prophecy was fulfilled, which gave an inking of his heavy hap long before, name it, 'Stipa Persittina periet confusa ruina.'

For this earle was the stocke and maine root of all that were left alive, called by the name of Persie; and of manie more by divers slaughters dispatched. For whose misfortune the people were not a little sorrie, making report of the gentleman's valentnesse, renowne, and honour, and applying vnto him certaine lamentable verses out of Lucilene, saling, 'Sed nos nec sanguis, nec tantum vulnera nostri Alfeere senis: quantum gestata per urbem Ora duces, que transfixo deformata pilo Vidimus.'

For his head, full of silver horie hairs, being put upon a stake, was openlie carried through London, and set upon the bridge of the same citie: in like manner was the Lord Bardolles."—Holinshed's Chronicles. Lond. 1588, 4to, iii. 45. The Rokeby or Rokkesby family continued to be distinguished until the great Civil War, when, having embraced the cause of Charles I., they suffered severely by fines and confiscations. The estate then passed from its ancient possessors to the family of the Robinsons, from whom it was purchased by the father of my valued friend, the present proprietor.

NOTE P.
A stern and lone yet lovely road
As e'er the foot of ministral trode.—P. 301.

What follows is an attempt to describe the romantic glen, or rather ravine, through which the Greta finds a passage between Rokeby and Mortham; the former situated upon the left bank of Greta, the latter on the right bank, about half a mile nearer to its junction with the Tee. The river runs with very great rapidity over a bed of solid rock, broken by many shelving descents, down which the stream dashes with great noise and impetuosity, vindicating its etymology, which has been derived from the Gothic, Grisan, to clamber. The banks partake of the same wild and romantic character, being chiefly lofty cliffs of limestone rock, whose gray color contrasts admirably with the various trees and shrubs which find root among their crevices, as well as with the hue of the ivy, which clings around them in profusion, and hangs down from their projections in long sweeping tendrils. At other points the rocks give place to precipitous banks of earth, bearing large trees intermixed with copsewood. In one spot the dell, which is elsewhere very narrow, widens for a space to leave room for a dark grove of yew trees, intermixed here and there with aged plumes of uncommon size. Directly opposite to this sombre thicket, the cliffs on the other side of the Greta are tall, white, and fringed with all kinds of deciduous shrubs. The whole scenery of this spot is so much adapted to the ideas of superstition that it has acquired the name of Blockula, from the place where the Swedish witches were supposed to hold their Sabbath. The dell, however, has superstitions of its own growth, for it is supposed to be haunted by a female spectre, called the Dobie of Mortham. The cause assigned for her appearance is a lady's having been whilom murdered in the wood, in evidence of which, her blood is shown upon the stairs of the old tower at Mortham. But whether she was slain by a jealous husband, or by savage handiati, or by an uncle who coveted her estate, or by a rejected lover, are points upon which the traditions of Rokeby do not enable us to decide.

NOTE Q.
How whistlle rash bids tempests roer.—P. 302.

That this is a general superstition is well known to all who have been on ship-board, or who have conversed with seamen. The most formidable whistler that I remember to have met with was the apparatus of a certain Mrs. Leakey, who, about 1636, resided, we are told, at Mynehead, in Somerset, where her only son drove a considerable trade between that port and Waterford, and was owner of several vessels. This old gentlewoman was of a social disposition, and so acceptable to her friends that they used to say to her and to each other, they were a pity such an excellent good-natured old lady should die; to which she was wont to reply that whatever pleasure they might find in her company just now, they would not greatly like to see or converse with her after death, which nevertheless she was apt to think might happen. Accordingly, after her death and funeral, she began to appear to various persons by night and by noonday, in her own house, in the town and fields, at sea and upon shore. So far had she departed from her former urbanity that she is recorded to have kicked a doctor of medicine for his impolite negligence in omitting to hand her over a stile. It was also her humor to appear upon the quay and call for a boat. But especially so soon as any of her son's ships approached the harbor, "this ghost would appear in the same garb and likeness as when she was alive, and, standing at the mainmast, would blow with a whistle, and though it were never so great a calm, yet immediately there would arise a most dreadful storm, that would break, wreck, and drown ship and goods." When she had thus proceeded until her son had neither credit to freight a vessel, nor could have procured men to sail in it, she began to attack the persons of his family, and actually strangled their only child in the cradle. The rest of her story, showing how the spectre looked over the shoulder of her daughter-in-law while dressing her hair at a looking-glass, and how Mrs. Leakey the younger took courage to address her, and how the beldam de-
APPENDIX TO ROKEBY.

355

spatchéd her to an Irish prelate, famous for his crimes and misfortunes, to exhort him to repentance, and to apprise him that otherwise he would be hanged, and how the bishop was satisfied with replying that if he was born to be hanged, he should not be drowned;—all these, with many more particulars, may be found at the end of one of John Dunton's publications, called Athenienism, London, 1710, where the tale is engrossed under the title of "The Apparition Evidence."

Note R.

Of Erik's cap and Elno's light.—P. 302.

"This Ericus, King of Sweden, in his time was held second to none in the magical art; and he was so familiar with the evil spirits, which he exceedingly adored, that which way ever he turned his cap, the wind would presently blow that way. From this occasion he was called Windy Cap; and many men believed that Regnerus, King of Denmark, by the conduct of this Ericus, who was his nephew, did happily extend his piracy into the most remote parts of the earth, and conquered many countries and fenced cities by his cunning, and at last was his coadjutor; that by the consent of the nobles, he should be chosen King of Sweden, which continued a long time with him very happily, until he died of old age."
—Olaus, ut supra, p. 45.

Note S.

The Demon Frigate.—P. 302.

This is an allusion to a well-known nautical superstition concerning a fantastic vessel, called by sailors the Flying Dutchman, and supposed to be seen about the latitude of the Cape of Good Hope. She is distinguished from earthly vessels by bearing a press of sail when all others are unable; from stress of weather, to show an inch of canvas. The cause of her wandering is not altogether certain; but the general account is that she was originally a vessel loaded with great wealth, on board of which some horrid act of murder and piracy had been committed; that the plague broke out among the wicked crew who had perpetrated the crime, and that they sailed in vain from port to port, offering, as the price of shelter, the whole of their ill-gotten wealth; that they were excluded from every harbor, for fear of the contam-gation which was devouring them; and that, as a punishment of their crimes, the apparition of the ship still continues to haunt those seas in which the catastrophe took place, and is considered by the mariniers as the worst of all possible omens.

My late lamented friend, Dr. John Leyden, has introduced this phenomenon into his Scenes of Infancy, imputing, with poetical ingenuity, the dreadful judgment to the first ship which commenced the slave trade:

"Stout was the ship, from Benlin's palmy shore
That first the weight of barter'd captives bore;
Bediz'nd with blood, the sun with shrinking beams
Beheld her bounding o'er the ocean streams;
But, ere the moon her silver horns had rear'd,
Amid the crew the speckled plague appear'd;
Paint and despairing, on their watery bier,
To every friendly shore the sailors steer;
Reppell'd from port to port, they sue in vain,
And truck with slow unsteady sail the main.

Where ne'er the bright and buoyant wave is seen
To streak with wandering foam the sea-weeds green,
Towers the tall mast, a lone and leafless tree,
Till self-impel'd amid the waveless sea;
Where summer breezes ne'er were heard to sing,
Nor hovering snow-birds spread the downy wing,
Fik'd as a rock amid the boundless plain,
The yellow stream pollutes the stagnant main,
Till far through night the funeral flames aspire,
As the red lightning smites the ghastly pyre.
"Still doom'd by fate on wefting billows roll'd,
Along the deep their restless course to hold,
Scenting the storm, the shadowy sailors guide
The prow, with sails opposed to wind and tide;
The Spectre Ship, in livid glimpsing light,
Glares baleful on the shuddering watch at night,
Unblest of God and man!—Till time shall end,
Its view strange horror to the storm shall lend."

Note T.

by some desert isle or key.—P. 302.

What contributed much to the security of the Buccaneers about the Windward Islands was the great number of little islets, called in that country keys. These are small sandy patches, appearing just above the surface of the ocean, covered only with a few bushes and weeds, but sometimes affording springs of water, and, in general, much frequented by turtle. Such little uninhabited spots afforded the pirates good harbors, either for refitting or for the purpose of am-busch; they were occasionally the hiding-place of their trea-ure, and often afforded a shelter to themselves. As many of the atrocities which they practised on their prisoners were committed in such spots, there are some of these keys which even now have an indifferent reputation among seamen, and where they are with difficulty prevailed on to remain ashore at night, on account of the visionary terrors incident to places which have been thus contaminated.

Note U.

Before the gate of Mortham stood.—P. 303.

The castle of Mortham, which Leland terms "Mr. Roke-by's Place, in ripa ceter, scant a quarter of a mile from Greta Bridge, and not a quarter of a mile beneath Toes," is a picturesque tower, surrounded by buildings of different ages, now converted into a farm-house and offices. The battlements of the tower itself are singularly elegant, the architect having broken them at regular intervals into different heights; while those at the corners of the tower project into octangu-lar turrets. They are also from space to space covered with stones laid across them, as in modern embasures, the whole forming an uncommon and beautiful effect. The surrounding buildings are of a less happy form, being pointed into high and steep roofs. A wall, with embrasures, encloses the southern front, where a low portal arch affords an entry to what was the castle court. At some distance is most happily placed, between the stumps of two magnificent oaks, the monument alluded to in the text. It is said to have been brought from the ruins of Egliston Priory, and, from the armory with which it is richly carved, appears to have been a tomb of the Fitz-Hughis.
The situation of Mortham is eminently beautiful, occupying a high bank, at the bottom of which the Greta winds out of the dark, narrow, and romantic dell which the text has attempted to describe, and flows onward through a more open valley to meet the Tees about a quarter of a mile from the castle. Mortham is surrounded by old trees, haupdy and widely grouped with Mr. Morritt’s new plantations.

NOTE V.

There dig, and tomb your precious heap,
And bid the dead your treasure keep.—P. 304.

If time did not permit the Bucaniers to lavish away their plunder in their usual debaucheries, they were wont to hide it, with many superstitious solemnities, in the desert islands and keys which they frequented, and where much treasure, whose lawless owners perished without reclaiming it, is still supposed to be concealed. The most cruel of mankind are often the most superstitious; and these pirates are said to have had recourse to a horrid ritual, in order to secure an unearthly guardian to their treasures. They killed a negro or Spaniard, and buried him with the treasure, believing that his spirit would haunt the spot, and terrify away all intruders. I cannot produce any other authority on which this custom is ascribed to them than that of maritime tradition, which is, however, amply sufficient for the purposes of poetry.

NOTE W.

The power . . . . . .

That unsubduced and lurking lies
To take the felon by surprise,
And force him, as by magic spell,
In his despite his guilt to tell.—P. 304.

All who are conversant with the administration of criminal justice must remember many occasions in which malefactors appear to have conducted themselves with a species of infatuation, either by making unnecessary confidences respecting their guilt, or by sudden or involuntary allusions to circumstances by which it could not fail to be exposed. A remarkable instance occurred in the celebrated case of Eugene Aram. A skeleton being found near Knaresborough, was supposed, by the persons who gathered around the spot, to be the remains of one Clarke, who had disappeared some years before, under circumstances leading to a suspicion of his having been murdered. One Houseman, who had mingled in the crowd, suddenly said, while looking at the skeleton, and hearing the opinion which was buzzed around, “That is no more Dan Clarke’s bone than it is mine”—a sentiment expressed so positively, and with such peculiarity of manner, as to lead all who heard him to infer that he must necessarily know where the real body had been interred. Accordingly, being apprehended, he confessed having assisted Eugene Aram to murder Clarke, and to hide his body in Saint Robert’s Cave. It happened to the author himself, while conversing with a person accused of an atrocious crime, for the purpose of rendering him professional assistance upon his trial, to hear the prisoner, after the most solemn and reiterated protestations that he was guileless, suddenly, and, as it were, involuntarily, in the course of his communications, make such an admission as was altogether incompatible with innocence.

NOTE X.

— Brackenbury’s dismal tower.—P. 306.

This tower has been already mentioned. It is situated near the northeastern extremity of the wall which encloses Barnard Castle, and is traditionally said to have been the prison. By an odd coincidence, it bears a name which we naturally connect with imprisonment, from its being that of Sir Robert Brackenbury, Lieutenant of the Tower of London under Edward IV. and Richard III. There is, indeed, some reason to conclude that the tower may actually have derived its name from that family, for Sir Robert Brackenbury himself possessed considerable property not far from Barnard Castle.

NOTE Y.

Nobles and knights, so proud of late,
Must die for freedom and estate.

Right heavy shall his ransom be,
Unless that mad compound with thee!—P. 307.

After the battle of Marston Moor, the Earl of Newcastle retired beyond sea in disgust, and many of his followers laid down their arms, and made the best composition they could with the Committees of Parliament. Fines were imposed upon them in proportion to their estates and degrees of delinquency, and these fines were often bestowed upon such persons as had deserved well of the Commons. In some circumstances it happened that the oppressed cavaliers were fain to form family alliances with some powerful person among the triumphant party. The whole of Sir Robert Howard’s excellent comedy of The Committee turns upon the plot of Mr. and Mrs. Day to enrich their family, by compelling Arabella, whose estate was under sequestration, to marry their son Abel, as the price by which she was to compound with Parliament for delinquency; that is, for attachment to the royal cause.

NOTE Z.

The Indian, prowling for his prey,
Who hears the settlers track his way.—P. 307.

The patience, abstinence, and ingenuity, exerted by the North American Indians, when in pursuit of plunder or vengeance, is the most distinguished feature in their character; and the activity and address which they display in their retreat is equally surprising. Adair, whose absurd hypothesis and turgid style do not affect the general authenticity of his anecdotes, has recorded an instance which seems incredible.

“When the Chickasah nation was engaged in a former war with the Muskohge, one of their young warriors set off against them to revenge the blood of a near relation. . . . He went through the most unfrequented and thick parts of the woods, as such a dangerous enterprise required, till he arrived opposite to the great and old beloved town of refuge, Koosh, which stands high on the eastern side of a bold river, about 250 yards broad, that runs by the late dangerous Albigenez Fort, down to the black poisoning Mobile, and so into the Gulf of Mexico. There he concealed himself under cover of the top of a fallen pine-tree, in view of the ford of the old trading-path, where the enemy now and then pass the river in their light poplar canoes. All his war-store of provisions consisted of three stands of barbecued venison, till he had an opportunity to revenge blood and return home. He waited with watchfulness and patience almost three days, when a young man, a woman, and a girl, passed a little wide of him an hour before sunset. The former he shot down, tomahawked the other two, and scalped each of them in a trice, in full view of the town. By way of bravado, he shook the scalps before them, sounding the awful death-whoop, and set off along the trading-path, trusting to his heels, while a great many of the enemy ran to their arms and gave chase. Seven miles from thence he entered the great blue ridge of the Apalachic Mountains. About an hour before day he had run over seventy miles of that mountainous tract; then, after sleeping two hours in a sitting posture, leaning to his heels, as a great many of the enemy ran to their arms and gave chase. Though I often have rode that war-path alone, when delay might have proved dangerous, and with as fine and strong horses as any in America, it took me five days to ride from the aforesaid Koosah to this sprightly warrior's place in the Chickasah country, the distance of three hundred computed miles; yet he ran it, and got home safe and well at about eleven o'clock of the third day, which was only one day and a half and two nights."—Adair's History of the American Indians. Lond. 1775, 4to. p. 355.

Note 2 A.

In Redesdale his youth had heard
Each art her wily daughters dared,
When Redeswater—edge, and Redeswater high,
To bugle rung and blood-hound's cry.—P. 358.

"What manner of cattle-stealers they are that inhabit these valleys in the marches of both kingdoms, John Lesley, a Scotch man himself, and Bishop of Roos, will inform you. They sally out of their own borders in the night, in troops, through unfrequented byways and many intricate windings. All the daytime they refresh themselves and their horses in lurking-holes they had pitched upon before, till they arrive in the dark in those places they have a design upon. As soon as they have waked upon the booty, they, in like manner, return home in the night, through blind ways, and fetching many a compass. The more skilful any captain is to pass through those wild deserts, crooked turnings, and deep precipices, in the thickest mists, his reputation is the greater, and he is looked upon as a man of an excellent head. And they are so very cunning that they seldom have their booty taken from them, unless sometimes when, by the help of blood-hounds following them exactly upon the track, they may chance to fall into the hands of their adversaries. When being taken, they have so much persuasive eloquence, and so many smooth insinuating words at command, that if they do not move their judges, nay, and even their adversaries (notwithstanding the severity of their natures), to have mercy, yet they incite them to admiration and compassion."—Cambden's Britannia.

The inhabitants of the valleys of Tyne and Reed were, in ancient times, so inordinately addicted to these depredations that in 1564 the incorporated Merchant Adventurers of Newcastle made a law that none born in these districts should be admitted apprentices. The inhabitants are stated to be so generally addicted to rape that no faith should be reposed in those proceeding from "such lewde and wicked progenitors." This regulation continued to stand unrepealed until 1771. A beggar, in an old play, describes himself as "born in Redesdale, in Northumberland, and come of a weight-riding surname, called the Robsons, good honest men and true, saving a little shifting for their living, God help them!"—a description which would have applied to most Borderers on both sides.

Redswair, famed for a skirmish to which it gives name [see Border Minstrelsy, vol. ii. p. 15], is on the very edge of the Carter-fell, which divides England from Scotland. The Rookes is a place upon Redswater. Bertram, being described as a native of these dales, where the habits of hostile depredation long survived the union of the crowns, may have been, in some degree, prepared by education for the exercise of a similar trade in the wars of the Bucaniers.

Note 2 B.

Hiding his face, lest sermon spy
The sparkle of his swarthy eye.—P. 368.

After one of the recent battles, in which the Irish rebels were defeated, one of their most active leaders was found in a bog, in which he was immersed up to the shoulders, while his head was concealed by an impending ledge of turf. Being detected and seized notwithstanding his precaution, he became solicitous to know how his retreat had been discovered. "I caught," answered the Sutherland Highlander by whom he was taken, "the sparkle of your eye." Those who are accustomed to mark hares upon their form usually discover them by the same circumstance.

Note 2 C.

Here stood a wretch, prepared to change
His soul's redemption for revenge!—P. 310.

It is agreed by all the writers upon magic and witchcraft that revenge was the most common motive for the pretended compact between Satan and his vassals. The ingenuity of Reginald Scot has very happily stated how such an opinion came to root itself, not only in the minds of the public and of the judges, but even in that of the poor wretches themselves who were accused of sorcery, and were often firm believers in their own power and their own guilt:—

"One sort of such as are said to be witches are women which be commonly old, lame, blur-eyed, pale, foul, and full of wrinkles; poor, sullen, superstitious, or papists, or such as know no religion; in whose drowsy minds the devil hath gotten a fine seat; so as what mischief, mischief, calamity, or slaughter is brought to pass, they are easily persuaded the considered an excellent finder, than in all his reputation as a trovère.—Ed.
Note 2 E.

When Spain waged warfare with our land.—P. 313.

There was a short war with Spain in 1625-6, which will be found to agree pretty well with the chronology of the poem. But probably Bertram held an opinion very common among the maritime heroes of the age, that "there was no peace beyond the Line." The Spanish guarda-costas were constantly employed in aggressions upon the trade and settlements of the English and French, and by their own severities gave room for the system of buccanering, at first adopted in self-defence and retaliation, and afterwards persevered in from habit and thirst of plunder.

Note 2 F.

The banks of the Greta, below Rutherford Bridge, abound in seams of grayish slate, which are wrought in some places to a very great depth under ground, thus forming artificial caverns, which, when the seam has been exhausted, are gradually hidden by the underwood which grows in profusion upon the romantic banks of the river. In times of public confusion they might be well adapted to the purposes of banditti.

Note 2 G.

our comrades' strife.—P. 3.

The laws of the Bucaniers, and their successors the Pirates, however severe and equitable, were, like other laws, often set aside by the stronger party. Their quarrels about the division of the spoil fill their history, and they as frequently arose out of mere frolie, or the tyrannical humor of their chiefs. An anecdote of Teach (called Blackbeard) shows that their habitual indifference for human life extended to their companions, as well as to their enemies and captives:—

"One night, drinking in his cabin with Hands, the pilot, and another man, Blackbeard, without any provocation, privately draws out a small pair of pistols and cocks them under the table, which being perceived by the man, he withdrew upon deck, leaving Hands, the pilot, and the captain together. When the pistols were ready, he blew out the candles, and, crossing his hands, discharged them at his company. Hands, the master, was shot through the knee, and hanged for life; the other pistol did no execution."—Johnson's History of Pirates. Lond. 1724, 8vo, vol. i. p. 38.

Another anecdote of this worthy may be also mentioned:—

"The hero of whom we are writing was thoroughly accomplished this way, and some of his frolics of wickedness were so extravagant, as if he aimed at making his men believe he was a devil incarnate; for being one day at sea, and a little flushed with drink, 'Come,' says he, 'let us make a hell of our own, and try how long we can bear it.' Accordingly, he, with two or three others, went down into the hold, and, closing up all the hatches, filled several pots full of brimstone and other combustible matter and set it on fire, and so continued till they were almost suffocated, when some of the men cried out for air. At length he opened the hatches, not a little pleased that he held out the longest."—Ibid. p. 90.
NOTE 2 H.

my rangers go
Even now to track a milk-white doe.—P. 314.

"Immediately after supper, the huntsman should go to his master's chamber, and if he serve a king, then let him go to the master of the game's chamber, to know in what quarter he determineth to hunt the day following, that he may know his own quarter; that done, he may go to bed, to the end that he may rise the earlier in the morning, according to the time and season, and according to the place where he must hunt: then when he is up and ready, let him drink a good draught, and fetch his hound, to make him break his fast a little: and let him not forget to fill his bottle with good wine: that done, let him take a little vinegar into the palm of his hand, and put it in the nostrils of his hound, for to make him snuffle, to the end his scent may be the perrecter, then let him go to the wood . . . . When the huntsman perceiveth that it is time to begin to beat, let him put his hound before him, and beat the outsides of springs or thickets; and if he find an hart or deer that likes him, let him mark well whether it be fresh or not, which he may know as well by the manner of his hounds drawing, as also by the eye . . . . When he hath well considered what manner of hart it may be, and hath marked every thing to judge by, then let him draw till he comes to the covert where he is gone to: and let him harbour him if he can, still marking all his tokens, as well by the slot as by the entries, foyle, or such-like. That done, let him plash or bruise down small twigges, some aloft and some below, as the art requireth, and therewithall, whilst his hound is hot, let him beat the outsides, and make his ring-walkes, twice or thrice about the wood."—The Noble Art of Venerie, or Hunting. Lond. 1611, 4to, pp. 76, 77.

NOTE 2 I.

Song —— adieu for evermore.—P. 315.

The last verse of this song is taken from the fragment of an old Scottish ballad, of which I only recollected two verses when the first edition of "Rokeby" was published. Mr. Thomas Sheridan kindly pointed out to me an entire copy of this beautiful song, which seems to express the fortunes of some follower of the Stuart family:

"It was a' for our rightful king
That we left fair Scotland's strand,
It was a' for our rightful king
That we e'er saw Irish land,
My dear,
That we e'er saw Irish land,

"Now all is done that man can do,
And all is done in vain!
My love! my native land, adieu!
For I must cross the main,
My dear,
For I must cross the main.

"He turn'd him round and right about,
All on the Irish shore,
He gave his bridle-reins a shake,
With, Adieu for evermore,
My dear,
Adieu for evermore!"

"The soldier frae the war returns,
And the merchant frae the main,
But I ha' e parted wi' my love,
And ne'er to meet again,
My dear,
And ne'er to meet again.

"When day has gone and night is come,
And a' are bound to sleep,
I think on them that's far awa
The lce-lang night, and weep,
My dear,
The lce-lang night, and weep."

NOTE 2 K.

—Rere-cross on Stanmore.—P. 315.

This is a fragment of an old cross, with its pediment, surrounded with an intrenchment, upon the very summit of the waste ridge of Stanmore, near a small house of entertainment called the Spittal. It is called Rere-cross, or Re-cross, of which Holinshed gives us the following explanation:

"At length a peace was concluded betwixt the two kings under these conditions, that Malcolm should enjoy that part of Northumberland which lieth betwixt Tweed, Cumberland, and Stanmore, and doo homage to the King of England for the same. In the midst of Stanmore there shall be a cross set up, with the King of England's image on the one side, and the King of Scotland's on the other, to signify that one is march to England, and the other to Scotland. This cross was called the Rob-crosse, that is, the crosse of the King."—Holinshed. Lond. 1588, 4to, v. 236.

Holinshed's sole authority seems to have been Boethius; but it is not improbable that his account may be the true one, although the circumstance does not occur in Wintoun's Chronicle. The situation of the cross, and the pains taken to defend it, seem to indicate that it was intended for a landmark of importance.

NOTE 2 L.

—hast thou lodged our deer?—P. 316.

The duty of the ranger, or pricker, was first to lodge or harbor the deer, &c., to discover his retreat, as described at length in Note 2 H, and then to make his report to his prince, or master:

"Before the king I come report to make,
Then haught and peace for noble Tristram's sake . . .
My liege, I went this morning on my quest,
My hound did stick, and seem'd to vent some beast.
I held him short, and drawing after him,
I might behold the hart was feeding thym:
His head was high, and large in each degree,
Well pained eke, and seem'd full sound to be.
Of colour browne, he hearth eight and tenne,
Of stately height, and long he seemed then.
His beam seem'd great, in good proportion led,
Well barred and round, well pearled near his head.
He seemed fyre twene blacke and berrie bounde,
He seems well fed by all the signs I found.
For when I had well marked him with eye, I step aside, to watch where he would lye, And when I had so wayted all an hour, That he might be at layre and in his bower, I cast about to harbour him full sure; My hound by sent did me thereof assure...

"Then if he ask what slot or view I found, I say the slot or view was long on ground; The toes were great, the joynt bones round and short, The shime bones lorge, the dew-claws close in port: Short joynted was he, hollow-footed cke, An hart to hunt as any man can seeke."

The Art of Venerei, ut supra, p. 97.

Note 2 M.

When Denmark's raven war'd on high, Triumphant through Northumbrian sky, Till, lowering near his fatal creek, Bade Reged's Britons dread the yoke.—P. 316.

About the year of God 866, the Danes, under their celebrated leaders Inguar (more properly Agnar) and Hubba, sons, it is said, of the still more celebrated Regnar Lodbrok, invaded Northumberland, bringing with them the magical standard so often mentioned in poetry, called Reafen, or Rumian, from its bearing the figure of a raven:—

'Wrought by the sisters of the Danish king, Of furious Ivar in a midnight hour: While the sick moon, at their enchanted song, Wrap't in pale tempest, labour'd through the clouds, The demons of destruction then, they say, Were all abroad, and mixing with the woof Their baleful power: The sisters ever sung, 'Shake, standard, shake this ruin on our foes.'"

Thomson and Malley's Alfred.

The Danes renewed and extended their incursions, and began to colonize, establishing a kind of capital at York, from which they spread their conquests and incursions in every direction. Stanmore, which divides the mountains of Westmoreland and Cumberland, was probably the boundary of the Danish kingdom in that direction. The district to the west, known in ancient British history by the name of Reged, had never been conquered by the Saxons, and continued to maintain a precarious independence until it was ceded to Malcolm, King of Scots, by William the Conqueror, probably on account of its similarity in language and manners to the neighboring British kingdom of Strath-Clyde.

Upon the extent and duration of the Danish sovereignty in Northumberland, the curious may consult the various authorities quoted in the Gesta et Vestigia Donorum extra Daniam, tom. ii. p. 40. The most powerful of their Northumbrian leaders seems to have been Ivar, called, from the extent of his conquests, Wolfeam, that is, The Strider.

Note 2 N.

Beneath the shade the Northmen came, Fie'd on each vale a Runic name.—P. 316.

The heathen Danes have left several traces of their religion in the upper part of Teesdale. Balder-garth, which derives its name from the unfortunate son of Odin, is a tract of waste land on the very ridge of Stanmore; and a brook, which falls into the Tees near Barnard Castle, is named after the same deity. A field upon the banks of the Tees is also termed Woden-Croft, from the supreme deity of the Edda. Thorshill, of which a description is attempted in stanza ii., is a beautiful little brook and dell, running up behind the ruins of Egliston Abbey. Thor was the Hercules of the Scandinavian mythology, a dreadful giant-queller, and in that capacity the champion of the gods, and the defender of Asgard, the northern Olympus, against the frequent attacks of the inhabitants of Jotunheim. There is an old poem in the Edda of Saxmund, called the "Song of Thrym," which turns upon the loss and recovery of the Mace, or Hammer, which was Thor's principal weapon, and on which much of his power seems to have depended. It may be read to great advantage in a version equally spirited and literal, among the Miscellaneous Translations and Poems of the Honorable William Herbert.

Note 2 O.

Who has not heard how brave O'Neale In English blood imbroided his steel?—P. 317.

The O'Neale here meant—for more than one succeeded to the chiefainship during the reign of Elizabeth—was Hugh, the grandson of Con O'Neale, called Con Bacco, or the Lame. His father, Matthew O'Kelly, was illegitimate, and, being the son of a blacksmith's wife, was usually called Matthew the Blacksmith. His father, nevertheless, destined his succession to him; and he was created, by Elizabeth, Baron of Dungannon. Upon the death of Con Bacco, this Matthew was slain by his brother. Hugh narrowly escaped the same fate, and was protected by the English. Shane O'Neale, his uncle, called Shane Dymas, was succeeded by Turlough Lough O'Neale; after whose death Hugh, having assumed the chiefainship, became nearly as formidable to the English as any by whom it had been possessed. He rebelled repeatedly, and as often made submissions, of which it was usually a condition that he should no longer assume the title of O'Neale; in lieu of which he was created Earl of Tyrone. But this condition he never observed longer than until the pressure of superior force was withdrawn. His battling the gallant Earl of Essex in the field, and overreaching him in a treaty, was the induction to that nobleman's tragedy. Lord Mountjoy succeeded in finally subjugating O'Neale; but it was not till the succession of James, to whom he made personal submission, and was received with civility at court. Yet according to Moryson, "no respect to him could contain many women in those parts, who had lost husbands and children in the Irish warres, from flinging durt and stones at the earie as he passed, and from reuiling him with bitter words; yea, when the earl had been at court, and there obtaining his majestie's direction for his pardon and performance of all conditions promised him by the Lord Mountjoy, was about September to returne, he durst not pass by those parts without direction to the shiriffes, to convoy him with troops of horse from place to place, till he was safely imbarked and put to sea for Ireland."—Itinerary, p. 296.

Note 2 P.

But chief arose his victor pride When that brave marshal fought and died.—P. 317.

The chief victory which Tyrone obtained over the English was in a battle fought near Blackwater, while he besieged a fort garrisoned by the English, which commanded the passes into his country.

"This captain and his few warders did with no less courage suffer hunger, and, having eaten the few horses they had, lived upon hearebs growing in the ditches and wals, suffering all extremities, till the lord-lieutenant, in the moneth of August, sent Sir Henry Bagnal, marshal of Ireland, with the most choice companies of foot and horse-troopes of the English army, to victual this fort, and to raise the rebels' siege. When the English entered the place and thickke woods beyond Armagh, on the east side, Tyrone (with all the rebels assembled to him) pricked forward with rage, enuy, and settled rancour against the marshall, assaying the English, and turning his full force against the marshall's person, had the success to kill him, valiantly fighting among the thickest of the rebels. Whereupon the English being dismayed with his death, the rebels obtained a great victory against them. I term it great, since the English, from their first arrival in that kingdom, never had received so great an overthrow as this, commonly called the Defeat of Blackwater; thirteenth valiant captains and 1500 common soldiery (whereof many were of the old companies which had served in Britaine under General Norreys) were slain in the field. The yielding of the fort of Blackwater followed this disaster, when the assaulted guard saw no hope of relief; but especially upon messages sent to Captaine Williams from our broken forces, retired to Armagh, professing that all their safety depended upon his yielding the fort into the hands of Tyrone, without which danger Captaine Williams professed that no want or miserie should have induced him thereunto."—Fynes Moryson's Itinerary. Lond. 1617, fol. part ii, p. 24.

Tyrone is said to have entertained a personal animosity against the knight-marshalc, Sir Henry Bagnal, whom he accused of detaining the letters which he sent to Queen Elizabeth, explanatory of his conduct, and offering terms of submission. The river, called by the English Blackwater, is termed in Irish Aven-Duff, which has the same signification. Both names are mentioned by Spenser in his "Marriage of the Thames and the Midway;" but I understand that his verses relate not to the Blackwater of Ulter, but to a river of the same name in the south of Ireland:—

"Swift Aven-Duff, which of the Englishmen Is called Blackwater"—

NOTE 2 Q.

The Tanist he to great O'Neale.—P. 317.

"Eudox. What is that which you call Tanist and Tanistry? These be names and terms never heard of nor known to us.

"Iren. It is a custom amongst all the Irish, that presently after the death of one of their chiefes lords or captains, they do presently assemble themselves to a place generally appointed and knowne unto them, to choose another in his stead, where they doe nominate and elect, for the most part not the eldest sonne, nor any of the children of the lord deceased, but the next to him in blood, that is, the eldest and worthiest, as commonly the next brother unto him, if he have any, or the next cousin, or so forth, as any is elder in that kindred or sept; and then next to them, doe they choose the next of the blood to be Tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry, if it were already ununto.

"Eudox. Do they not use any ceremony in this election? for all barbarous nations are commonly great observers of ceremonies and superstitious rites.

"Iren. They use to place him that shall be their captain upon a stone, always reserved to that purpose, and placed commonly upon a hill. In some of which I have seen formed and engraved a foot, which they say was the measure of their first captain's foot; whereon hee standing, receives an oath to preserve all the ancient former customes of the country inviolable, and to deliver up the succession peaceably to his Tanist, and then hath a wand delivered unto him by some whose proper office that is; after which, descending from the stone, he turneth himself round, thrice forwards and thrice backwards.

"Eudox. But how is the Tanist chosen?

"Iren. They say he setteth but one foot upon the stone, and receiveth the like oath that the captain did."—Spenser's View of the State of Ireland, apud Works. Lond. 1805, 8vo, vol. viii, p. 290.

The Tanist, therefore, of O'Neale was the heir-apparent of his power. This kind of succession appears also to have regulated, in very remote times, the succession to the crown of Scotland. It would have been imprudent, if not impossible, to have asserted a minor's right of succession in those stormy days, when the principles of policy were summed up in my friend Mr. Wordsworth's lines:—

"the good old rule
Sufficeth them; the simple plan,
That they should take who have the power,
And they should keep who can."

NOTE 2 R.

His platted hair in off-locks spread, &c.—P. 318.

There is here an attempt to describe the ancient Irish dress, of which a poet of Queen Elizabeth's day has given us the following particulars:—

"I marvaille in my mynde,
And thereupon did muse,
To see a bride of heavenlie hue
An englise fere to chuse.
This bride it is the solle,
The bridegroome is the karne.
With writhed glibbes, like wicked sprits,
With visage rough and stearne;
With sculles upon their poalles,
Instead of civell cappes;
With spares in hand, and swordes bydesy,
To bare off after clappes;
With jackettes long and large,
Which shroude simplicitie,
Though spitfull darts which they do bare Imporde injurie.
Their shirtes be very strange,
Not reaching past the thie;
With pleates on pleates thei pleated are
As thick as pleates may lye.
Whose sleeves hang trailing doone
Almost unto the shoe;
And with a mantell commoonie
The Irish karne do goe.
Now some amongst the reste
do use another weede;
A coate I meane, of strange devise,
Which fancie first did breede.
His skirts be very shor.
With pleates set thick about,
And Irish trouzes mee to put their strange protactours out."

Derrick's Image of Ireland, apud Somers' Tracts.

Edin. 1809, 4to, vol. i. p. 585.
Some curious wooden engravings accompany this poem, from which it would seem that the ancient Irish dress was (the bonnet excepted) very similar to that of the Scottish Highlanders. The want of a covering on the head was supplied by the mode of plaitsing and arranging the hair, which was called the gabbie. These gabbies, according to Spenser, were fit marks for a thief, since, when he wished to disguise himself, he could either cut it off entirely, or so pull it over his eyes as to render it very hard to recognize him. This, however, is nothing to the reprobation with which the same poet regards that favorite part of the Irish dress, the mantle:—

"It is a fit house for an outlaw, a meet bed for a rebel, and an apt cloak for a thief. First, the outlaw being for his many crimes and villanies banished from the towns and houses of honest men, and wandering in waste places far from danger of law, maketh his mantle his house, and under it covereth himself from the wrath of heaven, from the offence of the earth, and from the sight of men. When it raineth, it is his pent-house; when it bloweth, it is his tent; when it freetheth, it is his tabernacle. In summer he can wear it loose, in winter he can wrap it close; at all times he can use it; never heavy, never cumbersome. Likewise for a rebel it is as serviceable; for in his warre that he maketh (if at least it deserve the name of warre), when he still flyeth from his foe, and lurketh in the thickie woods and strait passages, waiting for advantages, it is his bed, yea, and almost his household stuff. For the wood is his house against all weather, and his mantle is his couch to sleep in. Therin he wrapeth himself round, and coucheth himself strongly against the gnats, which in that country doe more annoy the naked rebels while they keep the woods, and doe more sharply wound them, than all their enemies swords or speares, which can seldom come nigh them: yea, and oftentimes their mantle serveth them when they are neere driven, being wrapped about their lefte armes, instead of a target, for it is hard to cut thorough with a sword; besides, it is light to beare, light to throw away, and being (as they commonly are) naked, it is to them all in all. Lastly, for a thief it is so handsome as it may seem it was first invented for him; for under it he may cleanly convey any fit pilage that cometh handsomely in his way, and when he goeth abroad in the night in freebooting, it is his best and surest friend; for lying, as they often do, two or three nights together abroad, to watch for their booty, with that they can prettily shrowd themselves under a bush or bankside till they can conveniently do their errand; and when all is over, he can in his mantle passe through any town or company, being close hooded over his head, as he useth, from knowledge of any to whom he is indangered. Besides this, he or any man els that is disposed to mischief or villany may, under his mantle, goe privily armed without suspicion of any, carry his head-piece, his skene, or pistol, if he please, to be always in readiness."—SPENSEER'S View of the State of Ireland, apud Works, n't supra, vili. 367.

The javelins or darts of the Irish, which they threw with great dexterity, appear, from one of the prints already mentioned, to have been about four feet long, with a strong steel head and thick knotted shaft.

Note 2 S.

With wild majestic port and tone,
Like envy of some barbarous throne.—P. 318.

The Irish chiefs, in their intercourse with the English and with each other, were wont to assume the language and style of independent royalty. Morrison has preserved a summons from Tyrone to a neighboring chief, which runs in the following terms:—

"O'Neale commendeth him unto you, Morish Fitz-Thomas; O'Neale requesteth you, in God's name, to take part with him, and fight for your conscience and right; and in so doing, O'Neale will spend to see you righted in all your affairs, and will help you. And if you come not at O'Neale betwixt this and to-morrow at twelve of the clock, and take his part, O'Neale is not beholding to you, and will do to the uttermost of his power to overthrow you, if you come not to him at furthest by Saturday at noone. From Knocke Dumayne in Calrhe, the fourth of February, 1599.

"O'Neale requesteth you to come speake with him, and doth give you his word that you shall receive no harme neither in coming nor going from him, whether you be friend or not, and bring with you to O'Neale Great Fitzgeral."—Subscribed

O'NEALE.

Nor did the royalty of O'Neale consist in words alone. Sir John Harrington paid him a visit at the time of his truce with Essex, and after mentioning his "fern table and fern forms, spread under the stately canopy of heaven," he notices what constitutes the real power of every monarch, the love, namely, and allegiance of his subjects. "His guards, for the most part, were heartless boys without shirts; who in the frost wade as familiarly through rivers as water-spaniels. With what charm such a master makes them love him, I know not; but if he bid come, they come; if go, they go; if he say do this, they do it."—NUGAE ANTIQUAE. Lond. 1784, 8vo, vol. I. p. 251.

Note 2 T.

His foster-father was his guide.—P. 318.

There was no tie more sacred among the Irish than that which connected the foster-father, as well as the nurse herself, with the child they brought up.

"Foster-fathers spend much more time, money, and affection on their foster-children than their own; and in return take from them clothes, money for their several professions, and arms, and, even for any vicious purposes, fortunes and cattle, not so much by a claim of right as by extort; and they will even carry those things off as plunder. All who have been nursed by the same person preserve a greater mutual affection and confidence in each other than if they were natural brothers, whom they will even hate for the sake of these. When chid by their parents, they fly to their foster-fathers, who frequently encourage them to make open war on their parents, train them up to every excess of wickedness, and make them most abandoned miscreants; as, on the other hand, the nurses make the young women, whom they bring up for every excess. If a foster-child is sick, it is incredible how soon the nurses hear of it, however distant, and with what solicitude they attend it by day and night."—GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, quoted by Camden, iv. 366.

This custom, like many other Irish usages, prevailed till of late in the Scottish Highlands, and was cherished by the chiefs as an easy mode of extending their influence and connection; and even in the Lowlands, during the last century, the connection between the nurse and foster-child was seldom dissolved but by the death of one party.

Note 2 U.

[Great Nail of the Pledge Nine.—P. 320.

Neal Naighvrallach, or Of the Nine Pledges, is said to have been monarch of all Ireland during the end of the fourth or beginning of the fifth century. He exercised a predatory warfare on the coast of England and of Bretagne or Armorica; and from the latter country brought off the celebrated Saint Patrick, a youth of sixteen, among other captives, whom he transported to Ireland. Neal derived his epithet from nine nations, or tribes, whom he held under his subjection, and from whom he took hostages. From one of Neal’s sons were derived the Kinel-Coguin, or Race of Tyrone, which afforded monarchs both to Ireland and to Ulster. Neal (according to O’Flaherty’s Oggygion) was killed by a poisoned arrow in one of his descents on the coast of Bretagne.

NOTE 2 V.

Shane-Dymas wild.—P. 320.

This Shane-Dymas, or John the Wanton, held the title and power of O’Neale in the earlier part of Elizabeth’s reign, against whom he rebelled repeatedly.

“This chiefman is regarded down to us as the most proud and prodigate man on earth. He was inamorately addicted to women and wine. He is said to have had 200 tons of wine at once in his cellar at Dandram, but usquebaugh was his favourite liquor. He spared neither age nor condition of the fair sex. Altho’ so illiterate that he could not write, he was not destitute of address, his understanding was strong, and his courage daring. He had 600 men for his guard; 1000 foot, 1000 horse for the field. He claimed superiority over all the lords of Ulster, and called himself king thereof. When commissioners were sent to treat with him, he said ‘That, tho’ the queen were his sovereign lady, he never made peace with her but at her bidding; that she had made a wise Earl of Macartymore, but that he kept as good a man as he; that he cared not for so mean a title as earl; that his blood and power were better than the best; that his ancestors were Kings of Ulster; and that he would give place to none.’ His kinsman, the Earl of Kildare, having persuaded him of the folly of contending with the crown of England, he resolved to attend the queen, but in a style suited to his princely dignity. He appeared in London with a magnificent train of Irish Gallogglasses, arrayed in the richest habiliments of their country, their heads bare, their hair flowing on their shoulders, with their long and open sleeves dyed with saffron. Thus drest, and surcharged with military harness, and armed with battle-axes, they afforded an astonishing spectacle to the citizens, who regarded them as the intruders of some very distant part of the globe. But at court his versatility now prevailed; his title to the sovereignty of Tyrone was pleaded from English laws and Irish institutions, and his allegations were so specious that the queen dismissed him with presents and assurances of favour. In England this transaction was looked on as the humiliation of a repentant rebel; in Tyrone it was considered as a treaty of peace between two potentates.”—Cameron’s Britannia, by Gough. Lond. 1806, fol. vol. iv. p. 412.

When reduced to extremity by the English, and forsaken by his allies, this Shane-Dymas fled to Clandeboy, then occupied by a colony of Scottish Highlanders of the family of MacDonell. He was at first courteously received; but by degrees they began to quarrel about the slaughter of some of their friends whom Shane-Dymas had put to death, and advancing from words to deeds, fell upon him with their broadswords, and cut him to pieces. After his death a law was made that none should presume to take the name and title of O’Neale.

NOTE 2 W.

Geraldine.—P. 320.

The O’Neales were closely allied with this powerful and warlike family; for Henry Owen O’Neale married the daughter of Thomas, Earl of Kildare, and their son Con-More married his cousin-german, a daughter of Gerald, Earl of Kildare. This Con-More cursed any of his posterity who should learn the English language, sow corn, or build houses, as to invite the English to settle in their country. Others ascribe this anathema to his son Con-Bacco. Fearlahtha O’Nuille, hard to the O’Neales of Cunnaboy, complains in the same spirit of the towers and ramparts with which the strangers had disfigured the fair sporting fields of Erin.—See Walker’s Irish Bards, p. 140.

Lacy informs us, in the old play already quoted, how the cavalry raised by the country gentlemen for Charles’ service were usually offered. “You, cornet, have a name that’s proper for all cornets to be called by, for they are all beardless boys in our army. The most part of our horse were raised thus:—The honest country gentleman raises the troop at his own charge; then he gets a Low-country lieutenant to fight his troop safely; then he sends for his son from school to be his cornet; and then he puts off his child’s coat to put on a buff-coat: and this is the constitution of our army.”

NOTE 2 Y.

his page, the next degree, In that old time, to chivalry.—P. 320.

Originally, the order of chivalry embraced three ranks: 1. The Page; 2. The Squire; 3. The Knight:—a gradation which seems to have been imitated in the mystery of freemasonry. But, before the reign of Charles I., the custom of serving as a squire had fallen into disuse, though the order of the page was still, to a certain degree, in observance. This state of servitude was so far from inferring any thing degrading, that it was considered as the regular school for acquiring every quality necessary for future distinction. The proper nature and the decay of the institution are pointed out by old Ben Jonson, with his own forcible moral coloring. The dialogue occurs between Lovell, “a complot gentleman, a soldier, and a scholar, known to have been page to the old Lord Beaufort, and so to have followed him in the French wars, after companion of his studies, and left guardian to his son,” and the facetious Goodstock, host of the Light Heart. Lovell had offered to take Goodstock’s son for his page, which the latter, in reference to the recent abuse of the establishment, declares as “a desperate course of life.”—

“Lovell. Call you that desperate, which by a line Of institution, from our ancestors Hath been derived down to us, and received In a succession, for the noblest way Of breeding up our youth, in letters, arms, Fair men, discourses, civil exercises, And all the blazon of a gentleman? Where can he learn to vault, to ride, to fence; To move his body gracefully; to speak His language purer; or to tune his mind,
Or manners, more to the harmony of nature,
Than in the nurseries of nobility?  "Host. Ay, that was when the nursery's self was noble,
And only virtue made it, not the market,
That titles were not vented at the drum,
Or common outcry. Goodness gave the greatness,
And greatness worship: every house became
An academy of honour; and those parts
We see departed, in the practice, now,
Quite from the institution.

"Lovell. Why do you say so?
Or think so enviously? Do they not still
Learn there the Centaur's skill, the art of Thrace,
To ride? or, Pollux' mystery, to fence?
The Pyrrhic gestures, both to dance and spring
In armour, to be active in the wars?
To study figures, numbers, and proportions,
May yield them great in counsels, and the arts
Grave Nestor and the wise Ulysses practiced?
To make their English sweet upon their tongue,
As reverend Chaucer says?

"Host. Sir, you mistake;
To play Sir Pandarus, my copy hath it,
And carry messages to Madame Cressida;
Instead of backing the brave steer o' mornings,
To court the chambermaid; and for a leap
Of the vaulting horse, to ply the vaulting house:
For exercise of arms, a bale of dice,
Or two or three packs of cards to show the cheat,
And nimbleness of hand; mistake a cowl
Upon my lord's back, and pawn it; ease his pocket
Of a superfluous watch; or geld a jewel
Of an odd stone or so; twinge two or three buttons
From off my lady's gown: These are the arts
Or seven liberal deadly sciences
Of pagery, or rather paganism,
As the tides run; to which if he apply him,
He may perhaps take a degree at Tyburn
A year the earlier; come to take a lecture
Upon Aquinas at St. Thomas a Watering's,
And so go forth a laureat in hemp circle!"

Ben Jonson's New Inn, act i. scene 3.

---

NOTE 2 Z.

Seem'd half abandon'd to decay.—P. 325.

The ancient castle of Rokeby stood exactly upon the site of the present mansion, by which a part of its walls is enclosed.
It is surrounded by a profusion of fine wood, and the park in which it stands is adorned by the junction of the Greta and of the Tees. The title of Baron Rokeby of Armagh was, in 1777, conferred on the Right Reverend Richard Robinson, Primate of Ireland, descended of the Robinsons, formerly of Rokeby, in Yorkshire.

---

NOTE 3 A.

Rokeby's lords of martial fame,
I can count them name by name.—P. 326.

The following brief pedigree of this very ancient and once powerful family was kindly supplied to the author by Mr. Rokeby of Northamptonshire, descended of the ancient Barons of Rokeby:

1 Lisle.  2 Temp. Edw. 2dii.  3 Temp. Edw. 3dii.
Temp. Henr. 7mi, and from him is the house of Skyes, of a fourth brother.

"Pedigree of the House of Rokeby.
1. Sir Alex. Rokeby, Knt., married to Sir Humph. Little's dughter.
2. Ralph Rokeby, Esq., to Tho. Lumley's daughter.
4. Sir Ralph Rokeby, Knt., to Sir Ralph Bigget's daughter.
5. Sir Thos. Rokeby, Knt., to Sir John de Melass' daughter of Bennet Hall, in Holderness.
6. Ralph Rokeby, Esq., to Sir Brian Stapleton's daughter of Weighill.
7. Sir Thos. Rokeby, Knt., to Sir Ralph Ury's daughter. 8
8. Ralph Rokeby, Esq., to daughter of Mansfield, heir of Morton. 9
10. Sir Ralph Rokeby, Knt., to Sir James Strangways' daughter.
12. Ralph Rokeby, Esq., to Danby of Yafforth's daughter and heir. 4
13. Tho. Rokeby, Esq., to Robt. Constable's daughter of Cliff, serj. at law.
14. Christopher Rokeby, Esq., to Lassells of Brackenburgh's daughter. 5
15. Thos. Rokeby, Esq., to the daughter of Thweng.
16. Sir Thomas Rokeby, Knt., to Sir Ralph Lawson's daughter of Brough.
17. Frans. Rokeby, Esq., to Faucett's daughter, citizen of London.
18. Thos. Rokeby, Esq., to the daughter of Wickliffe of Gales.

High Sheriff of Yorkshire.
1337. 11 Edw. 3. Ralph Hastings and Thos. de Rokeby.
1453. 17 Edw. 3. Thos. de Rokeby, pro sept. annis.
1538. 25 Edw. 3. Sir Thomas Rokeby, Justiciary of Ireland for six years; died at the castle of Kilka.
1407. 8 Hen. 4. Thos. Rokeby Milles, defeated and slew the Duke of Northumberland at the battle of Bramham Moor.
1411. 12 Hen. 4. Thos. Rokeby Milles.
1458. ......... Thos. Rokeby, Esq.
1539. ......... Robert Holgate, Bish. of Landaff, afterwards
P. of York, Ld. President of the Council for the Preservation of Peace in the North.
1564. 6 Eliz. Thomas Yonge, Archbishop of Yorke, Ld.
President.
30 Hen. 8. Tho. Rokeby, LL.D., one of the Council.
Jn. Rokeby, LL.D., one of the Council.
1572. 15 Eliz. Henry Hastings, Earl of Huntingdon, Ld.
President.
Ralph Rokeby, Esq., one of the Council.
Jo. Rokeby, Ll.D., ditto.
Ralph Rokeby, Esq., one of the Secretaries.
7 Will. 3. Sir J. Rokeby, Knt., one of the Justices of the King's Bench.

The family of De Rokeby came over with the Conqueror.
The old motto belonging to the family is In Bivio Dixit.
The arms, argent, chevron sable, between three rooks proper.

"There is somewhat more to be found in our family In the Scottish history about the affairs of Dun-Brettown town, but what it is, and in what time, I know not, nor can have convenient leisure to search. But Parson Blackwood, the Scottish enquire to the Lord of Shrewsbury, recited to me once a piece of a Scottish song, wherein was mentioned that William Wallis, the great deliverer of the Scots from the English

5 From him is the house of Hotham, and of the second brother that had issue.
APPENDIX TO ROKEBY.

The above is a quotation from a manuscript written by Ralph Rokeby; when he lived is uncertain.

To what metrical Scottish tradition Parson Blackwood alluded it would be now in vain to inquire; but in Blind Harry's History of Sir William Wallace we find a legend of one Rukbie, whom he makes keeper of Stirling Castle under the English usurpation, and whom Wallace slays with his own hand:

"In the great press Wallace and Rukbie met,
With his good sword a stroke upon him set;
Derrily to death the old Rukbie he drave,
But his two sons escaped among the lave."

These sons, according to the romantic Minstrel, surrendered the castle on conditions, and went back to England, but returned to Scotland in the days of Bruce, when one of them became again keeper of Stirling Castle. Immediately after this achievement follows another engagement, between Wallace and those western Highlanders who embraced the English interest, at a pass in Glencononchart, where many were precipitated into the lake over a precipice. These circumstances may have been confused in the narrative of Parson Blackwood, or in the recollection of Mr. Rokeby.

In the old ballad of "Chevy Chase" there is mentioned, among the English warriors, "Sir Raff the riche Rubge," which may apply to Sir Ralph Rokeby, the tenth baron in the pedigree. The more modern copy of the ballad runs thus:

"Good Sir Ralph Raby ther was alane, Whose prowess did surmount."

This would rather seem to relate to one of the Nevilles of Raby; but, as the whole ballad is romantic, accuracy is not to be looked for.

NOTE 3 B.

the Felon Sow.—P. 327.

The ancient minstrels had a comic as well as a serious strain of romance; and although the examples of the latter are by far the most numerous, they are, perhaps, the less valuable. The comic romance was a sort of parody upon the usual subjects of minstrel poetry. If the latter described deeds of heroic achievement, and the events of the battle, the tourney, and the chase, the former, as in the "Tournament of Tottenham," introduced a set of clowns debating in the field, with all the assumed circumstances of chivalry; or, as in the "Hunting of the Hare" (see Weber's Metrical Romances, vol. iii.), persons of the same description following the chase, with all the grievous mistakes and blunders incident to such unpracticed sportsmen. The idea, therefore, of Don Quixote's frenzy, although inimitably embodied and brought out, was not, perhaps, in the abstract altogether original. One of the very best of these mock romances, and which has no small portion of comic humor, is the hunting of the felon sow of Rokeby by the friars of Richmond. Ralph Rokeby, who (for the jest's sake apparently) bestowed this intractable animal on the convent of Richmond, seems to have floured in the time of Henry VII., which, since we know not the date of Friar Theobald's wardship, to which the poem refers us, may indicate that of the composition itself. Morton, the Mortham of the text, is mentioned as being this factious baron's place of residence; accordingly, Leland notices that "Mr. Rokeby hath a place called Mortham, a little beneath Grenney bridge, almost on the mouth of Grenney." That no information may be lacking which is in my power to supply, I have to notice that the Mistress Rokeby of the romance, who so charitably refreshed the sow after she had discomfited Friar Middleton and his auxiliaries, was, as appears from the pedigree of the Rokeby family, daughter and heir of Denby of Yafforth.

This curious poem was first published in Mr. Whitaker's History of Crests, but, from an inaccurate manuscript, not corrected very happily. It was transferred by Mr. Evans to the new edition of his Ballads, with some well-judged conjectural improvements. I have been induced to give a more authentic and full, though still an imperfect, edition of this humorous composition, from being furnished with a copy from a manuscript in the possession of Mr. Rokeby, to whom I have acknowledged my obligations in the last note. It has three or four stanzas more than that of Mr. Whitaker, and the language seems, where they differ, to have the more ancient and genuine readings.

The Felon Sow of Rokeby and the Friars of Richmond.

Ye men that will of auncetrs winne,
That late within this land hath beene,
Of one I will you tell;
And of a sow that was seare strang,
Alas! that ever she lived sae lang,
For fell! folk did she whell.5

She was mare6 than other three,
The grisliest beast that e'er might be,
Her head was great and gray;
She was bred in Rokeby wood,
There were few that thither good,
That came on live8 away.

Her walk was endlong! Grete side;
There was no bren9 that durst her bide,
That was freo10 heaven to hell;
Nor never man that had that might,
That ever durst come in her sight,
Her force it was so fell.

Ralph of Rokeby, with good will,
The Fryers of Richmond gave her till,12
Full well to garre13 them fare;
Fryar Middleton by his name,
He was sent to fetch her hame,
That rued him since15 full sore.

1 Both the MS. and Mr. Whitaker's copy read ancestors, evidently a corruption of auncetrs, adventures, as corrected by Mr. Evans. — 2 Sow, according to provincial pronunciation. — 3 So: Yorkshire dialect. — 4 Fele, many: Sax. — 5 A corruption of quell, to kill. — 6 More, greater. — 7 Went. — 8 Alive. — 9 Along the side of Grete. — 10 Barn, child, man in general. — 11 From. — 12 To. — 13 Make. — 14 Since.
With him tooke he wight men two,
Peter Dale was one of thoe,
That ever was brim as bear;
And well durst strike with sword and knife,
And fight full manly for his life,
What time as miser ware.

These three men went at God's will,
This wicked wear while they came till,
Liggen under a tree;
Rugg and rusty was her haire;
She raise up with a felon fare,
To fight against the three.

She was so grisly for to meete,
She rath the earth up with her feete,
And bark came fro the tree;
When Fryar Middleton her saugh,
Weet ye wel he might not laugh,
Full carnely lookt hee.

These men of aunters that was so wight,
They bound them baudly for to fight,
And strike at her full sare;
Until a kiln they garred her fleece,
Wole God send them the victory,
The wole ask him no more.

The sew was in the kiln hole down,
As they were on the balke aboon,
For hurling of their feet;
They were so saulted with this sew,
That among them was a stawlworth sew,
The kiln began to recke.

Durst noe man neig her with his hand,
But put a rape down with his wand,
And haterd her full meete;
They hurled her forth against her will,
Whiles they came into a hill
A little fro the street.

And there she made them such a fray,
If they should live to Doomes-day,
They thorrow it ne'er forgett;
She braded upon every side,
And ran on them gaping full wide,
For nothing would she lett.

She gave such brades at the hand
That Peter Dale had in his hand,
He might not hold his feate,
She chafed them to and fro,
The wight men was never soe woe,
Their measure was not so meete.

She bound her boldly to abide;
To Peter Dale she came aside,
With many a hideous yell;
She gaped soe wide and cried soe hee,
The Fryar said, "I conjure thee,"
Thou art a fiend of hell.

"Thou art come hither for some traine,"
I conjure thee to go againe.
Where thou wast wont to dwell.
He sayned him with crosse and creede,
Took forth a book, began to reade.
In St. John his gospels.

The sew she would not Latin heare,
But rudey rushed at the Frear,
That blinked all his blewe.
And when she would have taken her hold,
The Fryar leaped as Jesus wold,
And healed him with a tree.

She was as brime as any beare,
For all their mette to labour there,
To them it was no boote.
Upon trees and bushes that by her stood,
She ranged as she was wood,
And raved them up by root.

He sayd, "Alas, that I was Frear!
And I shall be rugged in sundere here,
Hard is my destine!
Wist my brethren in this house,
That I was sett in such a stowre,
They would pray for me."

This wicked beast that wrought this woe
Tooke that rape from the other two,
And then they fled all three;
They fled away by Watling Street,
They had no succur but their feet,
It was the more pity.

The field it was both lost and wonne,
The sew went hame, and that full soone,
To Morton on the Greene;
When Ralph of Rokey saw the rape,
He wisethat there had been debate,
Whereas the sew had beene.

He had them stand out of her way,
For she had had a sudden fray—
I saw never so keene;
Some new things shall we heare
Of her and Middleton the Frear,
Some battell hath there beene."

1 Fierce as a bear. Mr. Whitaker's copy reads, perhaps in consequence of mistaking the MS., "T'other was Bryan of Bear." Need were. Mr. Whitaker reads master. 2 Lying. 3 A fierce countenance or manner. 4 Saw. 5 Wight, brave. The Rokeyby MS. reads encounters, and Mr. Whitaker, ancestors. 6 Boldly. 7 On the beam above. 8 To prevent. 9 Assaulted. 10 Rope. 11 Watling Street. See the sequel. 12 Dare. 13 Rushed. 14 Leave it. 15 Pulls. 16 This line is wanting in Mr. Whittaker's copy, whence it has been conjectured that something is wanting after this stanza, which now there is no occasion to suppose. 17 Evil device. 18 Blessed: Fr. 19 Lost his color: 19 Sheltered himself. 19 Fierce. 20 The MS. reads, to labour were. The text seems to mean that all their labor to obtain their intended meat was of no use to them. Mr. Whitaker reads, "She was brim as any bear, And gave a grisly hideous roar, To them it was no boot." Besides the want of connection between the last line and the two former, the second has a very modern sound, and the reading of the Rokeyby MS., with the slight alteration in the text, is much better.
Appendix to Rokeby.

But all that served him for nought
Had they not better succour sought,
They were served therefore too.
Then Mistress Rokeby came anon,
And for her brought she meat full soone,
The sew came her unto.

She gave her meate upon the flower,

[Hiatus valde deficiens.]

When Fryar Middleton came home,
His brethren was full fain I know,
And thanked God of his life;
He told them all unto the end,
How he had foughten with a fiend,
And liered through mickle strife.

"We gave her battell half a day,
And sithin was fain to fly away,
For saving of our life;
And Pater Dale would never blinn,
But as fast as he could run,
Till he came to his wife."

The warden said, "I am full of woe,
That ever ye should be torment so,
But wee with you had beene!
Had wee been there your brethren all,
Wee should have garred the warfe full,
That wrought you all this toye."

Fryar Middleton said soon, "Nay,
In faith you would have fled away,
When most mister had beene;
You will all speake words at hame,
A man would ding you every ilk ane,
And if it be as I wene."

He lookt so grisely all that night,
The warden said, "You man will fight
If you say ought but good;
You guest hath grieved him so sore,
Hold your tongues and speake noe mare,
He looks as he be were woode."

The warden waged on the morne,
Two boldest men that ever were borne,
I weene, or ever shall be;
The one was Gilbert Grifin's son,
Full mickle worship has he wonne
Both by land and sea.

The other was a bastard son of Spain,
Many a Sarazin hath he shain,
Hie diilt hath gart them die.
These two men the battle undertook,
Against the sew, as says the booke,
And sealed security,
That they should boldly bite and fight,
And smoket her in maune and might,

Or therefore should they die.
The warden sealed to them againe,
And said, "In feld if ye be slain,
This condition make I:

"We shall for you pray, sing, and read,
To Doomes-day with hearty speede,
With all our progeny."
Then the letters well was made,
Bands bound with scales brade, 14
As deedes of armes should be.

These men of armes that were so wight,
With armoure and with brandes bright,
They went this sew to see;
She made on them sike a rand, 15
That for they were sare afer'd,
And almost bound to flee.

She came roveling them egaine;
That saw the bastard son of Spaine,
He braded out his brand;
Full spightously at her he strake,
For all the fence that he could make,
She got sword out of hand;
And rave in sunder half his shielde,
And bare him backward in the field,
He might not her gainstand.

She would have riven his privich garce,
But Gilbert with his sword of weere,
He strake at her full strong,
On her shoulder till she held the sword;
Then was good Gilbert sore afer'd,
When the blade brake in throng. 17

Since in his hands he hath her tane,
She tooke him by the shoulder bane,
And held her hold full fast;
She strave so stiffly in that stower,
That through all his rich armour
The blood came at the last.
Then Gilbert grieved was sea sere,
That he rave off both hide and haire,
The flesh came fro the bone;
And with all force he felled her there,
And wann her worldly in weere,
And band her him alone.
And lift her on a horse sea bee,
Into two paniers well-made of a tre,
And to Richmond they did hay: 20
When they saw her come,
They sang merrily To Deum,
The Fryers on that day: 21
They thanked God and St. Francis,
As they had won the best of pris: 22
And never a man was slaide:
There did never a man more manly,
Knight Marcus, nor yet Sir Gui,
Nor Loth of Louthyane. 23

---

1 This line is almost illegible.— 2 Each one.— 3 Since then, after that.— 4 The above lines are wanting in Mr. Whitaker’s copy.— 5 Curse, stop.— 6 Run.— 7 Warlock, or wizard.— 8 Harm.— 9 Need.— 10 Beat. The copy in Mr. Whitaker’s History of Cheers reads, perhaps better,—

"The fiend would ding you down ilk on." 11 "You guest" may be you gest, i. e., that adventure; or it may mean you phaist, or apparition, which in old poes is

---

14 "More loth of Louth Ryme."
If ye will any more of this,
In the Fryers of Richmond 1 its
In parchment good and fine;
And how Fryar Middleton that was so kender, 2
At Greta Bridge conjured a feind
In likeness of a swine.

It is well known to many a man,
That Fryar Theobald was warden than,
And this fell in his time;
And Christ them bless both farre and nearer,
All that for solace list this to hear,
And him that made the rhyme.

Ralph Rokeye with full good will,
The Fryers of Richmond he gave her till,
"This sew to mend their face:
Fryar Middleton by his name,
Would needs bring the fat sew hame,
That rued him since full sere.

NOTE 3 C.

The Filea of O'Nato was he.—P. 327.

The Filea, or Ollamh Re Dan, was the proper bard, or, as the name literally implies, poet. Each chiefain of distinction had one or more in his service, whose office was usually hereditary. The late ingenious Mr. Cooper Walker has assembled a curious collection of particulars concerning this order of men, in his Historical Memoirs of the Irish Bardes. There were itinerants and bards of elevated rank, but all were held in the highest veneration. The English, who considered them as chief supporters of the spirit of national independence, were much disposed to proscribe this race of poets, as Edward I. is said to have done in Wales. Spenser, while he admits the merit of their wild poetry, as "savouring of sweet wit and good invention, and sprinkled with some pretty flowers of their natural device," yet rigorously condemns the whole application of their poetry, as abused to "the gracing of wickedness and vice." The household minstrel was admitted even to the feast of the prince whom he served, and sat at the same table. It was one of the customs of which Sir Richard Sewry, to whose charge Richard II. committed the instruction of four Irish monarchs in the civilization of the period, found it most difficult to break his royal disciples, though he had also much ado to subject them to other English rules, and particularly to reconcile them to wear breeches. "The kynge my soveraigne lord's entent was that in manner, countenance, and apparel of clothynge, they shold use according to the maner of Engle ende, for the kynge thought to make them all fyynghyte: they had a fayre house to lodge in, in Duvelyn, and I was charged to abyde styll with them, and not to departe; and so two or three dayes I suffered them to do as they lyst, and sayde nothing to them, but folowed their owne appetyes: they wold sette at the table, and make countenance nether good nor fayre. Than I thought I shold cause them to change that manner; they wold cause their mynostrels, their servantes, and varlettes, to sytte with them, and to eate in their owne dynesche, and to drinke of their cuppes; and they shewed me that the usage of their cuntre was good, for they sayd in all thynges (except their beddes) they were and livened as co-men. So the fourth day I forayed other tables to be covered in the hall, after the usage of Eng-

1 Well known, or perhaps kind, well disposed.

extended hospitality; and doubtless the bard mourned the decay of the mansion of their chiefs in strains similar to the verses of the British Llywarch Hen on a similar occasion, which are affecting, even through the discouraging medium of a literal translation:—

"Silent-breathing gale, long wilt thou be heard! There is scarcely another deserving praise, Since Urian is no more.

Many a dog that scented well the prey, and aerial hawk, Have been trained on this floor
Before Erleion became polluted.

This hearth, ah, will it not be covered with nettles! Whilst its defencer lived, More congenial to it was the foot of the needy petitioner.

This hearth, will it not be covered with green sod! In the lifetime of Owain and Elphín, Its ample caldron boiled the prey taken from the foe.

This hearth, will it not be covered with toad-stools! Around the viand it prepared, more cheering was The clattering sword of the fierce dauntless warrior.

This hearth, will it not be overgrown with spreading brambles! Till now, logs of burning wood lay on it, Accustomed to prepare the gifts of Reged!

This hearth, will it not be covered with thorns! More congenial on it would have been the mix'd group Of Owain's social friends united in harmony.

This hearth, will it not be covered with ants! More adapted to it would have been the bright torches And harmless festivities.

This hearth, will it not be covered with dock-leaves! More congenial on its door would have been The mead, and the talking of wine-cheer'd warriors.

This hearth, will it not be turned up by the swine! More congenial to it would have been the clangor of men, And the circling horns of the banquet."—

_Heroic Elegies of Llywarch Hen, by OWEN._
Lond. 1792, 8vo, p. 41.

"The hall of Cynddylan is gloomy this night, Without fire, without bed—
I must weep a while, and then be silent!"

The hall of Cynddylan is gloomy this night,
Without fire, without candle—
Except God doth, who will endue me with patience?

The hall of Cynddylan is gloomy this night,
Without fire, without being lighted—
Be thou enwrapped with spreading silence!

The hall of Cynddylan, gloomy seems its roof
Since the sweet smile of humanity is no more—
Woe to him that saw it, if he neglects to do good!

The hall of Cynddylan, art thou not bereft of thy appearance? Thy shield is in the grave; Whilst he lived there was no broken roof!

The hall of Cynddylan is without love this night,
Since he that own'd it is no more—
Ah, death: it will be but a short time he will leave me!

The hall of Cynddylan is not easy this night,
On the top of the rock of Hydwyth,
Without its lord, without company, without the circling feasts!

The hall of Cynddylan is gloomy this night,
Without fire, without songs—
Tears afflict the cheeks!

The hall of Cynddylan is gloomy this night,
Without fire, without family—
My overflowing tears gush out!

The hall of Cynddylan pierces me to see it,
Without a covering, without fire—
My general dead, and I alive myself!

The hall of Cynddylan is the seat of chill grief this night, After the respect I experienced;
Without the men, without the women, who reside there!

The hall of Cynddylan is silent this night, After losing its master—
The great merciful God, what shall I do!"—_Ibid._ p. 77.

---

NOTE 3 E.

M'Curtin's harp.—P. 329.

"Maccurtin, hereditary Ollamh of North Munster, and Fíleann Donough, Earl of Thomond and President of Munster. This nobleman was amongst those who were prevailed upon to join Elizabeth's forces. Soon as it was known that he had basely abandoned the interests of his country, Mac-Curtin presented an adulatory poem to MacCarthy, chief of South Munster, and of the Eugenian line, who, with O'Neil, O'Donnel, Lacy, and others, were deeply engaged in protecting their violated country. In this poem he dwells with rapture on the courage and patriotism of MacCarthy; but the verse that should (according to an established law of the order of the bards) be introduced in the praise of O'Brien, he turns into severe satire:—"How am I afflicted (says he) that the descendant of the great Brion Bolrorna cannot furnish me with a theme worthy the honor and glory of his exalted race!" Lord Thomond, hearing this, vowed vengeance on the spirited bard, who fled for refuge to the county of Cork. One day, observing the exasperated nobleman and his equipage at a small distance, he thought it was in vain to fly, and pretended to be suddenly seized with the pangs of death; directing his wife to lament over him, and tell his lordship that the sight of him, by awakening the sense of his ingratitude, had so much affected him that he could not support it; and, desired her at the same time to tell his lordship that he entertained, as a dying request, his forgiveness. Soon as Lord Thomond arrived, the feigned tale was related to him. That nobleman was moved to compassion, and not only declared that he most heartily forgave him, but, opening his purse, presented the fair mourner with some pieces to inter him. This instance of his lordship's pity and generosity gave courage to the trembling bard; who, suddenly springing up, recited an extemporaneous ode in praise of Donough, and, re-entering into his service, became once more his favorite."—WALKER'S Memoirs of the Irish Bards. Lond. 1786, 4to, p. 141.

---

NOTE 3 F.

_The ancient English minstrel's dress._—P. 329.

Among the entertainments presented to Elizabeth at Kenilworth Castle was the introduction of a person designed to represent a travelling minstrel, who entertained her with a solemn story out of the "Acts of King Arthur." Of this person's dress and appearance Mr. Laneham has given us a very accurate account, transferred by Bishop Percy to the preliminary Dissertation on Minstrels, prefixed to his Reliques of Ancient Poetry, vol. 1.

Note 3 G.

Littlecote Hall.—p. 332.

The tradition from which the ballad is founded was supplied by a friend (the late Lord Webb Seymour), whose account I will not do the injustice to abridge, as it contains an admirable picture of an old English hall:—

"Littlecote House stands in a low and lonely situation. On three sides it is surrounded by a park that spreads over the adjoining hill; on the fourth, by meadows which are watered by the river Kennet. Close on one side of the house is a thick grove of lofty trees, along the verge of which runs one of the principal avenues to it through the park. It is an irregular building of great antiquity, and was probably erected about the time of the termination of feudal warfare, when defence came no longer to be an object in a country mansion. Many circumstances, however, in the interior of the house seem appropriate to feudal times. The hall is very spacious, floored with stones, and lighted by large transom windows, that are clothed with damasks. Its walls are hung with old military accoutrements, that have long been left a prey to rust. At one end of the hall is a range of coats of mail and helmets, and there is on every side abundance of old-fashioned pistols and guns, many of them with matchlocks. Immediately below the corridor hangs a row of leathern jerkins, made in the form of a shirt, supposed to have been worn as armor by the vassals. A large oak table, reaching nearly from one end of the room to the other, might have feasted the whole neighborhood, and an appendage to one end of it made it answer at other times for the old game of shuffleboard. The rest of the furniture is in a suitable style, particularly an arm-chair of cumbersome workmanship, constructed of wood, curiously turned, with a high back and triangular seat, said to have been used by Judge Popham in the reign of Elizabeth. The entrance into the hall is at one end, by a low door, communicating with a passage that leads from the outer door on the front of the house to a quadrangle within; at the other it opens upon a gloomy staircase, by which you ascend to the first floor; and, passing the doors of some bedchambers, enter a narrow gallery, which extends along the back front of the house from one end to the other of it, and looks upon an old garden. This gallery is hung with portraits, chiefly in the Spanish dresses of the sixteenth century. In one of the bedchambers, which you pass in going towards the gallery, is a bedstead with blue furniture, which time has now made dingy and threadbare, and in the bottom of one of the bed curtains you are shown a place where a small piece has been cut out and sewn in again,—a circumstance which serves to identify the scene of the following story:—

"It was on a dark, rainy night in the month of November that an old midwife sat nursing by her cottage fireside, when on a sudden she was startled by a loud knocking at the door. On opening it she found a horseman, who told her that her assistance was required immediately by a person of rank, and that she should be handsomely rewarded; but that there were reasons for keeping the affair a strict secret, and therefore she must submit to be blindfolded, and to be conducted in that condition to the bedchamber of the lady. With some hesitation the midwife consented; the horseman bound her eyes, and placed her on a pillow behind him. After proceeding in silence for many miles through rough and dirty lanes, they stopped, and the midwife was led into a house, which, from the length of her walk through the apartments, as well as the sounds about her, she discovered to be the seat of wealth and power. When the bandage was removed from her eyes, she found herself in a bedchamber, in which were the lady on whose account she had been so forcibly conducted, of a haughty and ferocious aspect. The lady was delivered of a fine boy. Immediately the man commanded the midwife to give him the child, and catching it from her, he hurried across the room, and threw it on the back of the fire, that was blazing in the chimney. The child, however, was strong, and, by its struggles, rolled itself upon the hearth, when the ruffian again seized it with fury, and, in spite of the interference of the midwife, and the more piteous entreaties of the mother, thrust it under the grate, and, taking the live coals upon it, soon put an end to its life. The midwife, after spending some time in affording all the relief in her power to the wretched mother, was told that she must be gone. Her former conductor appeared, who again bound her eyes, and conveyed her behind him to her own home; she then paid her handsomely, and departed. The midwife was strongly agitated by the horrors of the preceding night; and she immediately made a deposition of the facts before a magistrate. Two circumstances afforded hopes of detecting the house in which the crime had been committed; one was, that the midwife, as she sat by the bedside, had, with a view to discover the place, cut out a piece of the bed-curtain, and sewn it in again; the other was, that as she had descended the staircase she had counted the steps. Some suspicions fell upon one Darrell, at that time the proprietor of Littlecote House, and the domain around it. The house was examined, and identified by the midwife, and Darrell was tried at Salisbury for the murder. By corrupting his judge, he escaped the sentence of the law; but broke his neck by a fall from his horse in hunting, in a few months after. The place where this happened is still known by the name of Darrell's Style,—a spot to be dreaded by the peasant whom the shades of evening have overtaken on his way.

"Littlecote House is two miles from Hungerford, in Berkshire, through which the Bath road passes. The fact occurred in the reign of Elizabeth. All the important circumstances I have given exactly as they are told in the country; some trifles only are added, either to render the whole connected or to increase the impression."}

To Lord Webb's edition of this singular story the author can now add the following account, extracted from Aubrey's Correspondence. It occurs among other particulars respecting Sir John Popham:—

"Sir  * Dayrell, of Littlecote, in Corn. Wilts, having got his lady's waiting-woman with child, when her travell came, sent a servant with a horse for a midwife, whom he was to bring hostickly. She was brought, and layd the woman, but as soon as the child was born, she saw the knight take the child and murther it, and burn it in the fire in the chamber. She having done her businesse, was extraordinarily rewarded for her pains, and sent blindfolded away. This horrid action did much run in her mind, and she had a desire to discover it, but knew not where 'twas. She considered with herself the time that she was riding, and how many miles she might have rode at that rate in that time, and that it must be some great person's house, for the rooms was 12 feet high, and she should know the chamber if she saw it. She went to a justices of peace, and search was made. The very chamber found. The knight was brought to his tryall; and, to be short, this judge had this noble house, park, and manner, and (I thinkne) more, for a bribe to save his life.

"Sir John Popham gave sentence according to lawe, but being a great person and a favourite, he procured a non prosequi."

With this tale of terror the author has combined some circunstances of a similar legend which was current at Edinburgh during his childhood.

About the beginning of the eighteenth century, when the large castles of the Scottish nobles, and even the secluded hotels, like those of the French noblesse, which they possessed in Edinburgh, were sometimes the scenes of strange and mysterious transactions, a divine of singular sanctity was called up at midnight to pray with a person at the point of death. This was no unusual summons; but what followed was alarming. He was put into a sedan-chair, and after he had been transported to a remote part of the town, the bearers insisted upon his being blindfolded. The request was enforced by a cocked pistol, and submitted to; but in the course of the discussion, he conjectured, from the phrases employed by the chairmen, and from some part of their dress, not completely concealed by their cloaks, that they were greatly above the menial station they had assumed. After many turns and w windings, the chair was carried up stairs to a lodging, where his eyes were uncovered, and he was introduced into a bedroom, where he found a lady, newly delivered of an infant.
He was commanded by his attendants to say such prayers that were expected to save a mortal disorder. He ventured to remonstrate, and observe that her safe delivery warranted better hopes.
But he was sternly commanded to obey the orders first given,
and with difficulty recollected himself sufficiently to acquit himself of the task imposed on him. He was then again hurried into the chair; but as they conducted him down stairs, he heard the report of a pistol. He was safely conducted home; a purse of gold was forced upon him; but he was warned, at the same time, that the least allusion to this dark transaction would cost him his life. He betook himself to rest, and, after long and broken musing, fell into a deep sleep. From this he was awakened by his servant, with the dismal news that the fire of his common fay had broken out in the house of * * * near the head of the Canongate, and that it was totally consumed; with the shocking addition, that the daughter of the proprietor, a young lady eminent for beauty and accomplishments, had perished in the flames.
The clergyman had his suspicions, but to have made them public would have availed nothing. He was timid; the family was of the first distinction; above all, the deed was done, and could not be amended. Time wore away, however, and with it his terrors. He became unhappy at being the solitary depository of this fearful mystery, and mentioned it to some of his brethren, through whom the anecdote acquired a sort of publicity. The divine, however, had been long dead, and the story in some degree forgotten, when a fire broke out again on the very same spot where the house of * * * had formerly stood, and which was now occupied by buildings of an inferior description. When the flames were at their height, the tumult which usually attends such a scene was suddenly suspended by an unexpected apparition. A beautiful female, in a night-dress, extremely rich, but at least half a century old, appeared in the very midst of the fire, and uttered these tremendous words in her vernacular idiom: *Anes burned, twice burned;
the third time I'll scare you all!* The belief in this story was formerly so strong that on a fire breaking out, and seeming to approach the fatal spot, there was a good deal of anxiety testified lest the apparition should make good her demnunciation.

Note 3 H.

As thick a smoke these hoorths have given At Hallow-tide or Christmas even.— P. 334.

Such an exhortation was, in similar circumstances, actually given to his followers by a Welsh chieftain:—

"Ennity did continue betweene Howell ap Rys ap Howell Vaughan and the sonnes of John ap Meredith. After the ede of Ewan ap Rebert, Griffith ap Gronw (cosen-german to John ap Meredith's sonnes of Gwynryn, who had long served in France, and had charge there) comming home to live in the country, it happened that a servant of his, coming to fish in Stynully, his fish was taken away, and the fellow beaten by Howell ap Rys his servants, and by his commandment.
Griffith ap John ap Gronw took the matter in such duodegion that he challenged Howell ap Rys to the field, which he refusing, assembling his cosins John ap Meredith's sonnes and his friends together, assaulted Howell in his own house, after the manner he had scene in the French warres, and consumed with fire his barnes and his out-houses. Whilst he was thus assaulting the hall, which Howell ap Rys and many other people kept, being a very strong house, he was shot, out of a crevise of the house, through the sight of his beaver into the head, and slayne outright, being otherwise armed at all points. Notwithstanding his death, the assault of the house was continued with great vehement, the doores fired with great barthens of straw; besides this, the smoke of the outhouses and barnes not farre distant annoyed greatly the defendants, for that most of them lay under boordes and benches upon the floore, in the hall, the better to avoid the smoke.
During this scene of confusion onely the old man, Howell ap Rys, never stoped, but stood valiantly in the midst of the floore, armed with a glove in his hand, and called unto them, and bid 'em arise like men, for shame, for he had knowne there as great a smoke in that hall upon Christmas-even.' In the end, seeing the house could noe longer defend them, being overlayed with a multitude, upon parly betweene them,
Howell ap Rys was content to yeald himself prisoner to Morris ap John ap Meredith, John ap Meredith's eldest sonne, so that he would swear unto him to bring him safe to Carnarvon
Castle, to abide the trial of the law for the death of Graff? ap
John ap Gronw, who wasosen-german removed to the said
Howell ap Rys, and of the very same house he was of. Which Morris ap John ap Meredith undertaking, did put a guard about the said Howell of his trustiest friends and servants, who kept and defended him from the rage of his kindred, and especially of Owen ap John ap Meredith, his brother, who was very eager against him. They passed by leisure thence like a canope to Carnarvon: the whole country being assembled, Howell his friends posted a horseback from one place or other by the way, that who brought word that he was some thither secure, for they were in great fear lest he should be martered, and that Morris ap John ap Meredith could not be able to defend him, neither durst any of Howell's friends be there, for fear of the kindred. In the end, being delivered by Morris ap John ap Meredith to the Constable of Carnarvon Castle, and there kept safely in ward until the assises, it fell out by law, that the burning of Howell's houses, and assaulting him in his owne house, was a more haynous offence in Morris ap John ap Mer-dith and the rest, than the death of Graff? ap John ap Gronw in Howell, who did it in his own defend; whereupon Morris ap John ap Meredith, with thirty-five more, were indicted of folony, as appeareth by the copie of the indentit, which I had from the records."—Sir John Wynne's History of the Gwydir Family. Lond. 1770, 8vo, p. 116.

Note 3 I.

O'er Hexham's altar hung my glove.— P. 341.

This custom among the Redesdale and Tynedale Borderers is mentioned in the interesting Life of Barnard Gilpin, where some account is given of these wild districts, which it was the custom of that excellent man regularly to visit:—

"This custom (of duels) still prevail on the Borders, where Saxon barbarism held its latest possession. These will Northumbrians, indeed, went beyond the ferocity of their ancestors. They were not content with a duel: each contending party used to muster what adherents he could, and commence a kind of petty war. So that a private grudge would often occasion much bloodshed.

"It happened that a quarrel of this kind was on foot when Mr. Gilpin was at Rothbury, in those parts. During the two or three first days of his preaching, the contending parties observed some decorum, and never appeared at church together. At length, however, they met. One party had been early at church, and just as Mr. Gilpin began his sermon, the other entered. They stood not long silent. Inflamed at the sight of each other, they began to clash their weapons, for they were all armed with javelins and swords, and mutually approached. Awe! however, by the sacredness of the place, the tumult in some degree ceased. Mr. Gilpin proceeded: when again the combatants began to brandish their weapons, and draw towards each other. As a fray seemed near, Mr. Gilpin stepped from the pulpit, went between them, and addressed the leaders, put an end to the quarrel, for the present, but could not effect an entire reconciliation. They promised him, however, that till the sermon was over they would make no more disturbance. He then went again into the pulpit, and spent the rest of the time in endeavoring to make them ashamed of what they had done. His behavior and discourse affected them so much that, at his farther entreaty, they promised to forbear all acts of hostility while he continued in the country. And so much respected was he among them, that whoever was in fear of his enemy used to resort where Mr. Gilpin was, esteeming his presence the best protection.

"One Sunday morning, coming to a church in those parts, before the people were assembled, he observed a glove hanging up, and was informed by the sexton that it was meant as a challenge to any one who should take it down. Mr. Gilpin ordered the sexton to reach it to him; but upon his utterly refusing to touch it, he took it down himself, and put it into his breast. When the people were assembled, he went into the pulpit, and before he concluded his sermon took occasion to rebuke them severely for these inhuman challenges. 'I hear,' saith he, 'that one among you hath hanged up a glove, even in this sacred place, threatening to fight any one who taketh it down; see, I have taken it down,' and, pulling out the glove, he held it up to the congregation, and then showed them how unsuitable such savage practices were to the profession of Christianity, using such persuasives to mutual love as he thought would most affect them."—Life of Barnard Gilpin. Lond. 1783, 8vo, p. 177.

Note 3 K.

A horseman armed, at headlong speed.—P. 345.

This, and what follows, is taken from a real achievement of Major Robert Philipson, called, from his desperate and adventurous courage, Robin the Devil; which, as being very inaccurately noticed in this note upon the first edition, shall be now given in a more authentic form. The chief place of his retreat was not Lord's Island, in Derwentwater, but Curwen's Island, in the Lake of Windermere:

"This island formerly belonged to the Philipsons, a family of note in Westmoreland. During the Civil Wars, two of them, an elder and a younger brother, served the king. The former, who was the proprietor of it, commanded a regiment; the latter was a major.

"The major, whose name was Robert, was a man of great spirit and enterprise; and for his many feats of personal bravery had obtained, among the Oliverians of those parts, the appellation of Robin the Devil.

"After the war had subsided, and the direful effects of public opposition had ceased, revenge and malice long kept alive the animosity of individuals. Colonel Briggs, a steady friend to usurpation, resided at this time at Kendal, and, under the double character of a leading magistrate (for he was a justice of peace) and an active commander, held the country in awe. This person having heard that Major Philipson was at his brother's house on the island in Windermere, resolved, if possible, to seize and punish a man who had made himself so particularly obnoxious. How it was conducted, my authority does not inform us—whether he got together the navigation of the lake, and blockaded the place by sea, or whether he landed and carried on his approaches in form. Neither do we learn the strength of the garrison within, nor of the works without. All we learn is that Major Philipson endured a siege of eight months with great gallantry, till his brother, the colonel, raised a party and relieved him.

"It was now the major's turn to make reprisals. He put himself, therefore, at the head of a little troop of horse, and rode to Kendal. Here, being informed that Colonel Briggs was at prayers (for it was on a Sunday morning), he stationed his men properly in the avenues, and himself, armed, rode directly into the church. It probably was not a regular church, but some large place of meeting. It is said he intended to seize the colonel and carry him off; but as this seems to have been totally impracticable, it is rather probable that his intention was to kill him on the spot, and in the midst of the confusion to escape. Whatever his intention was, it was frustrated, for Briggs happened to be elsewhere.

"The congregation, as might be expected, was thrown into great confusion on seeing an armed man on horseback make his appearance among them; and the major, taking advantage of their astonishment, turned his horse round, and rode quietly out. But having given an alarm, he was presently assaulted as he left the assembly, and being seized, his girths were cut, and he was unhorsed.

"At this instant his party made a furious attack on the assailants, and the major killed with his own hand the man who had seized him, clapped the saddle, ungirthed as it was, upon his horse, and, vaulting into it, rode full speed through the streets of Kendal, calling his men to follow him; and, with his whole party, made a safe retreat to his asylum in the lake. The action amazed the man. Many knew him; and they who did not, knew as well from the exploit that it could be nobody but Robin the Devil."

3 Dr. Burn's History of Westmoreland.
The Bridal of Triermain:

OR,

The Vale of St. John.

A LOVER'S TALE.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.¹

In the Edinburgh Annual Register for the year 1809, three "Fragments" were inserted, written in imitation of living poets. It must have been apparent that by these fulminations nothing burlesque or disrespectful to the authors was intended, but that they were offered to the public as serious, though certainly very imperfect, imitations of that style of composition by which each of the writers is supposed to be distinguished. As these exercises attracted a greater degree of attention than the author anticipated, he has been induced to complete one of them, and present it as a separate publication.²

It is not in this place that an examination of the works of the master whom he has here adopted as his model can, with propriety, be introduced; since his general acquiescence in the favorable suffrage of the public must necessarily be inferred from the attempt he has now made. He is induced, by the nature of his subject, to offer a few remarks on what has been called ROMANTIC POETRY; the popularity of which has been revived in the present day, under the auspices, and by the unparalleled success, of one individual.

The original purpose of poetry is either religious or historical, or, as must frequently happen, a mixture of both. To modern readers, the poems of Homer have many of the features of pure romance; but in the estimation of his contemporaries, they probably derived their chief value from their supposed historical authenticity. The same may be generally said of the poetry of all early ages. The marvels and miracles which the poet blends with his song do not exceed in number or extravagance the figments of the historians of the same period of society; and, indeed, the difference betwixt poetry and prose, as the vehicles of historical truth, is always of late introduction. Poets, under various denominations of Bards, Scalds, Chroniclers, and so forth, are the first historians of all nations. Their intention is to relate the events they have witnessed, or the traditions that have reached them; and they clothe the relation in rhyme, merely as the means of rendering it more solemn in the narrative or more easily committed to memory. But as the poetical historian improves in the art of conveying information, the authenticity of his narrative unavoidably declines. He is tempted to dilate and dwell upon the events that are interesting to his imagination, and, conscious how indifferent his audience is to the naked truth of his poem, his history gradually becomes a romance.

It is in this situation that those epics are found which have been generally regarded the standards of poetry; and it has happened, somewhat strangely, that the moderns have pointed out as the characteristics and peculiar excellencies of narrative poetry the very circumstances which the authors themselves adopted only because their art involved the duties

¹ Published in March, 1813, by John Ballantyne & Co. 12mo.
² Sir Walter Scott, in his Introduction to the "Lord of the Isles," says:—"Being much urged by my intimate friend, now unhappily no more—William Erskine—I agreed to write the little romantic tale called the 'Bridal of Triermain'; but it was on the condition that he should make no serious effort to disown the composition if report should lay it at his door.

As he was more than suspected of a taste for poetry, and as I took care, in several places, to mix something which might resemble (as far as was in my power) my friend's feeling and manner, the train easily caught, and two large editions were sold. A third being called for, Lord Kinniedier became unwilling to add any longer a deception which was going farther than he expected or desired, and the real author's name was given."
of the historian as well as the poet. It cannot be believed, for example, that Homer selected the siege of Troy as the most appropriate subject for poetry; his purpose was to write the early history of his country; the event he has chosen, though not very fruitful in varied incident, nor perfectly well adapted for poetry, was nevertheless combined with traditionary and genealogical anecdotes extremely interesting to those who were to listen to him; and this he has adorned by the exertions of a genius which, if it has been equalled, has certainly been never surpassed. It was not till comparatively a late period that the general accuracy of his narrative, or his purpose in composing it, was brought into question.

1 Diogenes Laerlius, lib. ii. Anaxag. Segm. 11.
3 A RECEIPT TO MAKE AN EPIC POEM.

FOR THE FABLE.

"Take out of any old poem, history book, romance, or legend (for instance, Geoffrey of Monmouth or Don Beliants of Greece), those parts of the story which afford most scope for long descriptions. Put these pieces together, and throw all the adventures you fancy into one tale. Then take a hero whom you may choose for the sound of his name, and put him into the midst of these adventures. There let him work for twelve books; at the end of which you may take him out ready prepared to conquer or marry, it being necessary that the conclusion of an epic poem be fortunate."

To make an Episode.—"Take any remaining adventure of your former collection, in which you could not way involve your hero, or any unfortunate accident that was too good to be thrown away, and it will be of use applied to any other person, who may be lost and evaporate in the course of the work, without the least damage to the composition."

For the Moral and Allegory.—"These you may extract out of the fable afterwards at your leisure. Be sure you strain them sufficiently." FOR THE MANNERS.

"For those of the hero, take all the best qualities you can find in all the celebrated heroes of antiquity; if they will not be reduced to a consistency, lay them all on a heap upon him. Be sure they are qualities which your patron would be thought to have; and, to prevent any mistake which the world may be subject to, select from the alphabet those capital letters that compose his name, and set them at the head of a dedication before your poem. However, do not absolutely observe the exact quantity of these virtues, it not being determined whether or not it be necessary for the hero of a poem to be an honest man. For the under characters, gather them from Homer and Virgil, and change the names as occasion serves."

FOR THE MACHINES.

"Take of deities, male and female, as many as you can use. Separate them into equal parts, and keep Jupiter in the middle. Let Juno put him in a ferment, and Venus mollify him. Remember on all occasions to make use of volatile Mercury. If you have need of devils, draw them out of Milton's Paradise, and extract your spirits from Tasso. The use of these machines is evident, for, since no epic poem can possibly subsist without them, the wisest way is to reserve them for your greatest necessities. When you cannot extirpate your hero by any human means, or yourself by your own wits, seek relief from Heaven, and the gods will do your business very readily. This is according to the direct prescription of Horace in his Art of Poetry:

'Nec Deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus Incidenti.—Verse 191.

'That is to say, a poet should never call upon the gods for their assistance but when he is in great perplexity.' FOR THE DESCRIPTIONS.

For a Tempest.—"Take Eurus, Zephyr, Auster, and Boreas, and cast them together into one verse. Add to these of rain, lightning, and of thunder (the loudest you can), quantum sufficit. Mix your clouds and billows well together until they foam, and thicken your description here and there with a quicksand. Brew your tempest well in your head before you set it a-blowing."

For a Battle.—"Pick a large quantity of images and descriptions from Homer's Iliad, with a splice or two of Virgil; and if there remain any overplus, you may lay them by for a skirmish. Season it well with similes, and it will make an excellent battle."

For a Burning Town.—"If such a description be necessary, because it is certain there is one in Virgil, Old Troy is ready burnt to your hands. But if you fear that would be thought borrowed, a chapter or two of the Theory of Conflagration, well circumstanced, and done into verse, will be good succedaneum."

As for similes and metaphors, "they may be found all over the creation. The most ignorant may gather them, but the danger is in applying them. For this, advise with your bookseller."

FOR THE LANGUAGE.

(I mean the diction.) "Here it will do well to be an imitator of Milton; for you will find it easier to imitate him in mon sense was applied to this department of poetry; and, indeed, if the question be considered on its own merits, we must be satisfied that narrative poetry, if strictly confined to the great occurrences of history, would be deprived of the individual interest which it is so well calculated to excite.

Modern poets may therefore be pardoned in seeking simpler subjects of verse, more interesting in proportion to their simplicity. Two or three figures, well grouped, suit the artist better than a crowd, for whatever purpose assembled. For the same reason, a scene immediately presented to the imagination, and directly brought home to the feelings, though involving the fate of but one or two persons, is more favorable for poetry than the political struggles and convulsions which influence the fate of kingdoms. The former are within the reach and comprehension of all, and, if depicted with vigor, seldom fail to fix attention; the other, if more sublime, are more vague and distant, less capable of being distinctly understood, and infinitely less capable of exciting those sentiments which it is the very purpose of poetry to inspire. To generalize is always to destroy effect. We would, for example, be more interested in the fate of an individual soldier in combat than in the grand event of a general action; with the happiness of two lovers raised from misery and anxiety to peace and union than with the successful exertions of a whole nation. From what causes this may originate is a separate and obviously an immaterial consideration. Before ascribing this peculiarity to causes decidedly and odiously selfish, it is proper to recollect that while men see only a limited space, and while their affections and conduct are regulated, not by aspiring to an universal good, but by exerting their power of making themselves and others happy within the limited scale allotted to each individual, so long will individual history and individual virtue be the readier and more accessible road to general interest and attention; and perhaps we may add that it is the more useful, as well as the more accessible, inasmuch as it affords an example capable of being easily imitated.

According to the author's idea of Romantic Poetry, as distinguished from Epic, the former comprehends a fictitious narrative, framed and combined at the pleasure of the writer; beginning and ending as he may judge best: which neither exacts nor refuses the use of supernatural machinery; which is free from the technical rules of the Epic, and is subject only to those which good sense, good taste, and good morals, apply to every species of poetry without exception. The date may be in a remote age, or in the present; the story may detail the adventures of a prince or of a peasant. In a word, the author is absolute master of his country and its inhabitants, and every thing is permitted to him, excepting to be heavy or prosaic, for which, free and unembarrassed as he is, he has no manner of apology. These, it is probable, will be found the peculiarities of this species of composition; and before joining the outcry against the vitiated taste that fosters and encourages it, the justice and grounds of it ought to be made perfectly apparent. If the want of sieges, and battles, and great military evolutions, in our poetry, is complained of, let us reflect that the campaigns and heroes of our days are perpetuated in a record that neither requires nor admits of the aid of fiction; and if the complaint refers to the inferiority of our bards, let us pay a just tribute to their modesty, limiting them, as it does, to subjects which, however indifferently treated, have still the interest and charm of novelty, and which thus prevents them from adding insipidity to their other more insuperable defects.

This than any thing else. Hebraisms and Grecisms are to be found in him without the trouble of learning the languages. I knew a painter, who (like our poet) had no genius, made his dabblings to be thought originals, by setting them in the smoke. You may, in the same manner, give the venerable air of antiquity to your piece, by darkening up and down like Old English. With this you may be easily furnished upon any occasion, by the Dictionary commonly printed at the end of Chaucer."

"I must not conclude without cautioning all writers without genius in one material point, which is, never to be afraid of having too much fire in their works. I should advise rather to take their warmest thoughts, and spread them abroad upon paper; for they are observed to cool before they are read."—Port. The Guardian, No. 78.

1 In all this we cheerfully acquiesce, without abating any thing of our former hostility to the modern Romantic style, which is founded on very different principles. Nothing is, in our opinion, so dangerous to the very existence of poetry as the extreme laxity of rule, and consequent facility of composition, which are its principal characteristics. Our very admission in favor of that license of plot and conduct which is claimed by the Romance writers ought to render us so much the more guarded in extending the privilege to the minor poets of composition and versification. The removal of all technical bars and impediments sets wide open the gates of Parnassus; and so much the better. We dislike mystery quite as much in matters of taste as of politics and religion; but let us not, in opening the door, pull down the wall, and level the very foundation of the edifice."—Critical Review, 1813.

"In the same letter in which William Erskine acknowledges the receipt of the first four pages of 'Rokeby,' he adverted also to the 'Bridal of Triermain' as being already in rapid progress. The fragments of this second poem, inserted in the Register of the preceding year, had attracted considerable notice; the secret of their authorship had been well kept; and by some means, even in the shrewdest circles of Edinburgh, the belief had become prevalent that they proceeded not from Scott but from Erskine. Scott had no sooner completed his bargain as to the copyright of the unwritten 'Rokeby,' than he resolved to pause from time to time in its composition, and weave those fragments into a shorter and lighter romance, executed in a different metre, and to be published anonymously in a small pocket volume, as nearly as possible on the same day with the avowed quarto. He expected great amusement from the comparisons which the critics would no doubt indulge themselves in drawing between himself and this humble candidate; and Erskine good-humorously entered into the scheme, undertaking to do nothing which should effectually suppress the notion of his having set himself up as a modest rival to his friend."—Life of Scott, vol. iv. p. 12.
INTRODUCTION.

I.
COME, Lucy! while 'tis morning hour,
The woodland brook we needs must pass;
So, ere the sun assume his power,
We shelter in our poplar bower,
Where dew lies long upon the flower,
Though vanish'd from the velvet grass.
Curbing the stream, this stony ridge
May serve us for a sylvan bridge;
For here compell'd to disunite,
Round petty isles the runnels glide,
And, chafing off their puny spite,
The shallow murmurers waste their might,
Yielding to footstep free and light
A dry-shod pass from side to side.

II.
Nay, why this hesitating pause?
And, Lucy, as thy step withdraws,
Why sidelong eye the streamlet's brim?
Titania's foot without a slip,
Like thine, though timid, light, and slim,
From stone to stone might safely trip,
Nor risk the glow-worm clasp to dip
That binds her slipper's silken rim.
Or trust thy lover's strength: nor fear
That this same stalwart arm of mine,
Which could yon oak's prone trunk
uprear,
Shall shrink beneath the burden dear
Of form so slender, light, and fine.—
So,—now, the danger dared at last,
Look back, and smile at perils past!

III.
And now we reach the favorite glade,
Paled in by copsewood, cliff, and stone,
Where never harsher sounds invade,
To break affection's whispering tone,
Than the deep breeze that waves the shade,
Than the small brooklet's feeble moan.

Come! rest thee on thy wonted seat;
Moss'd is the stone, the turf is green,
A place where lovers best may meet,
Who would not that their love be seen.
The boughs, that dim the summer sky,
Shall hide us from each lurking spy,
That fain would spread the invidious tale,
How Lucy of the lofty eye,¹
Noble in birth, in fortunes high,
She for whom lords and barons sigh,
Meets her poor Arthur in the dale.

IV.
How deep that blush!—how deep that sigh!
And why does Lucy shun mine eye?
Is it because that crimson draws
Its color from some secret cause,
Some hidden movement of the breast,
She would not that her Arthur guess'd?
Oh! quicker far is lovers' ken
Than the dull glance of common men,²
And, by strange sympathy, can spell
The thoughts the loved one will not tell!
And mine, in Lucy's blush, saw met
The hues of pleasure and regret;
Pride mingled in the sigh her voice,
And shared with Love the crimson glow;
Well pleased that thou art Arthur's choice,
Yet shamed thine own is placed so low:
Thou turn'st thy self-confessing cheek,
As if to meet the breeze's cooling;
Then, Lucy, hear thy tutor speak,
For Love, too, has his hours of schooling.

V.
Too oft my anxious eye has spied
That secret grief thou fain wouldst hide,
The passing pang of humbled pride;
Too oft, when through the splendid hall,
The load-star of each heart and eye,
My fair one leads the glittering ball,
Will her stol'n glance on Arthur fall,
With such a blush and such a sigh!

¹ MS.: ——— "haughty eye."

² ——— "with wings as swift
As meditation, or the thoughts of love."—Hamlet.
Thou wouldst not yield, for wealth or rank,
The heart thy worth and beauty won,
Nor leave me on this mossy bank,
To meet a rival on a throne:
Why, then, should vain repinings rise,
That to thy lover fate denies
A nobler name, a wide domain,
A baron's birth, a mensal train,
Since Heaven assign'd him, for his part,
A lyre, a falchion, and a heart?

VI.

My sword—its master must be dumb;
But, when a soldier names my name,
Approach, my Lucy! fearless come,
Nor dread to hear of Arthur's shame,
My heart—mid all you courtly crew,
Of lordly rank and lofty line,
Is there to love and honor true,
That boasts a pulse so warm as mine?1
They praised thy diamonds' lustre rare—
Match'd with thine eyes, I thought it faded;
They praised the pearls that bound thy hair—
I only saw the locks they braided;
They talk'd of wealthy dower and land,
And titles of high birth the token—
I thought of Lucy's heart and hand,
Nor knew the sense of what was spoken.
And yet, if rank'd in Fortune's roll,
I might have learn'd their choice unwise,
Who rate the dower above the soul,
And Lucy's diamonds o'er her eyes.2

VII.

My lyre—it is an idle toy,
That borrows accents not its own,
Like warbler of Colombian sky,
That sings but in a mimic tone.3
Ne'er did it sound o'er sainted well,
Nor boasts it aught of Border spell;

Its strings no feudal slogan pour,
Its heroes draw no broad claymore;
No shouting clans applause raise,
Because it sung their fathers' praise;4
On Scottish moor, or English down,
It ne'er was graced with fair renown;
Nor won,—best need to minstrel true,—
One favoring smile from fair Buccleugh!
By one poor streamlet sounds its tone,
And heard by one dear maid alone.

VIII.

But, if thou bidst, these tones shall tell
Of errant knight, and damosel;
Of the dread knot a Wizard tied,
In punishment of maiden's pride,
In notes of marvell and of fear,
That best may charm romantic ear.
For Lucy loves,—like Collins, ill-starred name!5
Whose lay's requital was that tardy Fame,
Who bound no laurel round his living head,
Should hang it o'er his monument when dead,—
For Lucy loves to tread enchanted strand,
And thread, like him, the maze of Fairy-land;
Of golden battlements to view the gleam,
And slumber soft by some Elysian stream;
Such lays she loves,—and, such my Lucy's choice,
What other song can claim her Poet's voice?6

The Bridal of Triermain.

CANTO FIRST.

1. WHERE is the Maiden of mortal strain
That may match with the Baron of Triermain?7

from those of this vulgar world."—Quarterly Review, July, 1813.

"The poem now before us consists properly of two distinct subjects, interwoven together something in the manner of the Last Minstrel and his Lay, in the first and most enchanting of Walter Scott's romances. The first is the history (real or imaginary, we presume not to guess which) of the author's passion, courtship, and marriage, with a young lady, his superior in rank and circumstances, to whom he relates at intervals the story which may be considered as the principal design of the work, to which it gives its title. This is a mode of introducing romantic and fabulous narratives which we very much approve, though there may be reason to fear that too frequent repetition may wear out its effect. It attaches a degree of dramatic interest to the work, and at the same time softens the absurdity of a Gothic legend, by throwing it to a greater distance from the relation and auditor, by representing it, not as a train of facts which actually took place, but as a mere fable, either adopted by the credulity of former times, or invented for the purposes of amusement and the exercise of the imagination."—Critical Review; 1815.

1 See Appendix, Note A.
2 See Appendix, Note B.
She must be lovely, and constant, and kind,
Holy and pure, and humble of mind,
Blithe of cheer, and gentle of mood,
Courteous, and generous, and noble of blood—
Lovely as the sun’s first ray,
When it breaks the clouds of an April day;
Constant and true as the widow’d dove,
Kind as a minstrel that sings of love;
Pure as the fountain in rocky cave,
Where never sunbeam kiss’d the wave;
Humble as maiden that loves in vain,
Holy as hermit’s vesper strain;
Gentle as breeze that but whispers and dies,
Yet blithe as the light leaves that dance in its sighs;
Courteous as monarch the morn he is crown’d,
Generous as spring-dews that bless the glad ground;
Noble her blood as the currents that meet
In the veins of the noblest Plantagenet—
Such must her form be, her mood, and her strain,
That shall match with Sir Roland of Triermain.

II.
Sir Roland de Vaux he hath laid him to sleep,
His blood it was fever’d, his breathing was deep.
He had been pricking against the Scot,
The foray was long, and the skirmish hot;
His dinted helm and his buckler’s plight
Bore token of a stubborn fight.
All in the castle must hold them still,
Harpers must lull him to his rest
With the slow soft tunes he loves the best,
Till sleep sink down upon his breast,
Like the dew on a summer hill.

III.
It was the dawn of an autumn day;
The sun was struggling with frost-fog gray,
That like a silvery eape was spread
Round Skiddaw’s dim and distant head,
And faintly gleam’d each painted pane
Of the lordly halls of Triermain,
When that Baron bold awoke.
Starting he woke, and loudly did call,
Rousing his menials in bower and hall,
While hastily he spoke.

IV.
“Hearken, my minstrels! Which of ye all
Touch’d his harp with that dying fall,
So sweet, so soft, so faint,
It seem’d an angel’s whisper’d call
To an expiring saint?

And hearken, my merry men! What time or where Did she pass, that maid with her heavenly brow,
With her look so sweet and her eyes so fair,
And her graceful step and her angel air,
And the eagle plume in her dark-brown hair,
That pass’d from my bower e’en now?”

V.
Answer’d him Richard de Bretville; he
Was chief of the Baron’s minstrels,— “Silent, noble chieftain, we
Have sat since midnight close,
When such lulling sounds as the brooklet sings
Murmur’d from our melting strings,
And hush’d you to repose.
Had a harp-note sounded here,
It had caught my watchful ear,
Although it fell as faint and shy
As bashful maiden’s half-form’d sigh,
When she thinks her lover near.”
Answer’d Philip of Fastwaite tall,
He kept guard in the outer hall,—
“Since at eve our watch took post,
Not a foot has thy portal cross’d;
Else had I heard the steps, though low
And light they fell, as when earth receives,
In morn of frost, the wither’d leaves,
That drop when no winds blow.”

VI.
“Then come thou hither, Henry, my page,
Whom I saved from the sack of Hermitage,
When that dark castle, tower, and spire,
Rose to the skies a pile of fire,
And redd’en all the Nine-stane Hill,
And the shrieks of death, that wildly broke
Through devouring flame and smothering smoke,
Made the warrior’s heart-blood chill.
The trustiest thou of all my train,
My fleetest coursers thou must rein,
And rise to Lyulph’s tower,
And from the Baron of Triermain
Greet well that sage of power.
He is sprung from Druid sires,
And British bards that tuned their lyres
To Arthur’s and Pendragon’s praise,
And his who sleeps at Dunmailraise.¹
Gifted like his gifted race,
He the characters can trace,
Graven deep in elder time
Upon Helvellyn’s cliffs sublime;
Sign and sigil well doth he know,
And can bode of weal and woe,

¹ Dunmailraise is one of the grand passes from Cumberland into Westmoreland. It takes its name from a cairn, or pile of stones, erected, it is said, to the memory of Dunmail, the last King of Cumberland.
Of kingdoms' fall, and fate of wars,
From mystic dreams and course of stars.
He shall tell if middle earth
To that enchanting shape gave birth,
Or if 'twas but an airy thing,
Such as fantastic slumbers bring,
Framed from the rainbow's varying dyes,
Or fading tints of western skies.

For by the blessed Rod I swear,
If that fair form breathe vital air,
No other maiden by my side
Shall ever rest De Vaux's bride!"

VII.
The faithful Page he mounts his steed,
And soon he cross'd green Irthing's mead,
Dash'd o'er Kirkoswald's verdant plain,
And Eden barr'd his course in vain.
He pass'd red Pennrith's Table Round,
For feats of chivalry renown'd,
Left Mayburgh's mound  and stones of power,
By Druids raised in magic hour,
And traced the Eamont's winding way,
Till Ulfo's lake beneath him lay.

VIII.
Onward he rode, the pathway still
Winding betwixt the lake and hill;
Till, on the fragment of a rock,
Struck from its base by lightning shock,
He saw the hoary Sage:
The silver moss and lichen twined,
With fern and deer-hair check'd and lined,
A cushion fit for age;
And o'er him shook the aspen-tree,
A restless rustling canopy.
Then sprung young Henry from his selle,
And greeted Lyulph grave,
And then his master's tale did tell,
And then for counsel crave.
The Man of Years mused long and deep,
Of time's lost treasures taking keep,
And then, as rousing from a sleep,
His solemn answer gave.

IX.
"That maid is born of middle earth,
And may of man be won,
Though there have glided since her birth
Five hundred years and one.
But where's the Knight in all the north
That dare the adventure follow forth,
So perilous to knightly worth,
In the valley of St. John?
Listen, youth, to what I tell,
And bind it on thy memory well;
Nor muse that I commence the rhyme
Far distant 'mid the wrecks of time.
The mystic tale, by bard and sage,
Is handed down from Merlin's age.

X.
Lyulph's Tale.
"King Arthur has ridden from merry Carlisle,
When Pentecost was o'er:
He journey'd like errant-knight the while,
And sweetly the summer sun did smile
On mountain, moss, and moor.
Above his solitary track
Rose Glaramara's ridgy back,
Amid those yawning gullfs the sun
Cast umber'd radiance red and dun,
Though never sunbeam could discern
The surface of that sable torn,
In whose black mirror you may spy
The stars, while noontide lights the sky.
The gallant King he skirted still
The margin of that mighty hill;
Rock upon rocks incumbent hung,
And torrents, down the gullfs flung,
Join'd the rude river that braw'd on,
Recoiling now from crag and stone,
Now diving deep from human ken,
And raving down its darksome glen.
The Monarch judged this desert wild,
With such romantic ruin piled,
Was theatre by Nature's hand
For feat of high achievement plann'd.

XI.
"Oh rather he chose, that Monarch bold,
On vent'rous quest to ride,
In plate and mail, by wood and wold,
Than, with ermine trapp'd and cloth of gold,
In princely bower to bide;
The bursting crash of a foeman's spear,
As it shiver'd against his mail,
Was merrier music to his ear
Than courtier's whisper'd tale;
And the clash of Caliburn more dear,
When on the hostile casque it rung,
Than all the lays
To their Monarch's praise
That the harpers of Reged sung.

1 "Just like Aurora, when she ties
   A rainbow round the morning skies."—Moore.
2 "This powerful baron required in the fair one whom he should honor with his hand an assemblage of qualities that appears to us rather unreasonable even in those high days, profuse as they are known to have been of perfections now unattainable. His resolution, however, was not more inflexi-ble than that of any more modern youth; for he decrees that his nightly visitant, of whom at this time he could know nothing but that she looked and sung like an angel, if of mortal mould, shall be his bride."—Quarterly Review.
3 See Appendix, Note C.
4 Ibid. Note D.
5 Elswater.
6 The small lake called Scales-tarn lies so deeply embosomed in the recesses of the huge mountain called Saddleback, more poetically Glaramara, is of such great depth, and so cons-
He loved better to rest by wood or river
Than in bower of his bride; Dame Guenever,
For he left that lady, so lovely of cheer,
To follow adventures of danger and fear;
And the frank-hearted Monarch full little did wot
That she smiled, in his absence, on brave
Lancelot.

XII.
"He rode, till down over and dell
The shade more broad and deeper fell;
And though around the mountain's head
Flow'd streams of purple, and gold, and red,
Dark at the base, unblest by beam,
Frown'd the black rocks, and roar'd the stream.
With toil the King his way pursued
By lonely Threlkeld's waste and wood,
Till on his course obliquely shone
The narrow valley of Saint John,
Down sloping to the western sky,
Where lingering sunbeams love to lie.
Right glad to feel those beams again,
The King drew up his charger's rein;
With gauntlet raised he screen'd his sight,
As dazzled with the level light,
And, from beneath his glove of mail,
Scann'd at his ease the lovely vale,
While 'gainst the sun his armor bright
Gleam'd ruddy like the beacon's light.

XIII.
"Paled in by many a lofty hill,
The narrow dale lay smooth and still,
And, down its verdant bosom led,
A winding brooklet found its bed.
But, midst of the vale, a mound
Arose with airy turrets crown'd,
Buttress, and rampire's circling bound,
And mightily keep and tower;
Seem'd some primeval giant's hand
The castle's massive walls had plann'd,
A ponderous bulwark to withstand
Ambitious Nimrod's power.
Above the moated entrance slung,
The balanced drawbridge trembling hung,
As jealous of a foe;
Wicket of oak, as iron hard,
With iron studded, clenched, and barr'd,
And prong'd portcullis, join'd to guard
The gloomy pass below.
But the gray walls no banners crown'd,
Upon the watch-tower's airy round
No warder stood his horn to sound,
No guard beside the bridge was found,
And, where the Gothic gateway frown'd,
Glanced neither bill nor bow.

pictely hidden from the sun, that it is said its beams never reach it, and that the reflection of the stars may be seen at mid-day.

XIV.
"Beneath the castle's gloomy pride
In ample round did Arthur ride
Three times; nor living thing he spied,
Nor heard a living sound,
Save that, awakening from her dream,
The owlet now began to scream,
In concert with the rushing stream,
That wash'd the battled mound.
He lighted from his godly steed,
And he left him to graze on bank and mead;
And slowly he climb'd the narrow way
That reach'd the entrance grum and gray,
And he stood the outward arch below,
And his bugle-born prepared to blow,
In summons blithe and bold,
Deeming to rouse from iron sleep
The guardian of this dismal Keep,
Which well he guess'd the hold
Of wizard stern, or goblin grim,
Or pagan of gigantic limb,
The tyrant of the wold.

XV.
"The ivory bugle's golden tip
Twice touch'd the Monarch's manly lip,
And twice his hand withdrew.
—Think not but Arthur's heart was good!
His shield was cross'd by the blessed Rood;
Had a pagan host before him stood,
He had charg'd them through and through;
Yet the silence of that ancient place
Sunk on his heart, and he paused a space
Ere yet his horn he blew.
But, instant as its larum rung,
The castle gate was open flung,
Portcullis rose with erasing groan
Full harshly up its groove of stone;
The balance-beams obey'd the blast,
And down the trembling drawbridge east;
The vaulted arch before him lay,
With nought to bar the gloomy way,
And onward Arthur paced, with hand
On Caliburn's resistless brand.

XVI.
"A hundred torches, flashing bright,
Dispell'd at once the gloomy night
That lower'd along the walls,
And show'd the King's astonish'd sight
The inmates of the halls.
Nor wizard stern, nor goblin grim,
Nor giant huge of form and limb,
Nor heathen knight was there;
But the cressets, which odors flung aloft,
Show'd by their yellow light and soft
A band of damsel's fair.

1 This was the name of King Arthur's well-known sword sometimes also called Excalibar.
Onward they came, like summer wave
That dances to the shore;
An hundred voices welcome gave,
And welcome o'er and o'er!
An hundred lovely hands assail
The bucklers of the Monarch's mail,
And busy labor'd unheasp
Rivet of steel and iron clasp.
One wrapp'd him in a mantle fair,
And one flung odors on his hair;
His short curl'd ringlets one smoothed down,
One wreathed them with a myrtle crown.
A bride upon her wedding-day
Was tended ne'er by troop so gay.

XVII.
"Loud laugh'd they all,—the King, in vain,
With questions task'd the giddy train;
Let him entreat, or crave, or call,
'Twas one reply,—loud laugh'd they all,
Then o'er him mimic chains they fling,
Framed of the fairest flowers of spring.
While some their gentle force unite
Onward to drag the wondering knight,
Some, bolder, urge his pace with blows,
Dealt with the lily or the rose.
Behind him were in triumph borne
The warlike arms he late had worn.
Four of the train combined to rear
The terrors of Tintadgel's spear;
Two, laughing at their lack of strength,
Drag'd Caliburn in cumbrous length;
One, while she aped a martial stride,
Placed on her brows the helmet's pride;
Then scream'd, 'twixt laughter and surprise,
To feel its depth o'erwhelm her eyes.
With revel-shout, and triumph-song,
Thus gayly March'd the giddy throng.

XVIII.
"Through many a gallery and hall
They led, I ween, their royal thrall;
At length, beneath a fair arcade
Their march and song at once they staid.
The eldest maiden of the band
(The lovely maid was scarce eighteen)
Raised, with imposing air, her hand,
And reverent silence did command,
On entrance of their Queen,
And they were mute.—But as a glance
They steal on Arthur's countenance

---

1 Tintadgel Castle, in Cornwall, is reported to have been the birthplace of King Arthur.
2 "In the description of the queen's entrance, as well as in the contrasted enumeration of the levities of her attendants, the author, we think, has had in his recollection Gray's celebrated description of the power of harmony to produce all the graces of motion in the body."—Quarterly Review.
3 "Arouse the tiger of Hyrcanian deserts,
Strive with the half-starved lion for his prey;
Lesser the risk, than rouse the slumbering fire
Of wild Fanaticism."—Waterley Novels, "Ivanhoe."
4 "Still sways their souls with that commanding art
That dazzles, leads, yet chills the vulgar heart."
---

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN.

381

Bewilder'd with surprise,
Their smother'd mirth again 'gan speak,
In archly dimpled chin and cheek,
And laughter-lighted eyes.

XIX.
"The attributes of those high days
Now only live in minstrel-lays;
For Nature, now exhausted, still
Was then profuse of good and ill,
Strength was gigantic, valor high,
And wisdom soar'd beyond the sky,
And beauty had such matchless beam
As lights not now a lover's dream.
Yet e'en in that romantic age,
Ne'er were such charms by mortal seen
As Arthur's dazzled eyes engage,
When forth on that enchanted stage,
With glittering train of maid and page,
Advanced the castle's Queen!
While up the hall she slowly pass'd,
Her dark eye on the King she cast,
That flash'd expression strong; 2
The longer dwell that lingering look,
Her cheek the livelier color took,
And scarce the shamefaced King could brook
The gaze that lasted long.
A sage who had that look espied,
Where kindling passion strove with pride,
Had whisper'd, 'Prince, beware!
From the chafed tiger rend the prey,
Rush on the lion when at bay,
Bar the fell dragon's blighted way,
But shun that lovely snare!"—3

XX.
"At once that inward strife suppress'd,
The dame approach'd her warlike guest,
With greeting in that fair degree,
Where female pride and courtesy
Are blended with such passing art
As awes at once and charms the heart.4
A courtly welcome first she gave,
Then of his goodness 'gan to crave
Construction fair and true
Of her light maidens' idle mirth,
Who drew from lonely glens their birth,
Nor knew to pay to stranger worth
And dignity their due;
And then she pray'd that he would rest
That night her castle's honor'd guest.

---

1 Tintadgel Castle, in Cornwall, is reported to have been the birthplace of King Arthur.
2 "In the description of the queen's entrance, as well as in the contrasted enumeration of the levities of her attendants, the author, we think, has had in his recollection Gray's celebrated description of the power of harmony to produce all the graces of motion in the body."—Quarterly Review.
3 "Arouse the tiger of Hyrcanian deserts,
Strive with the half-starved lion for his prey;
Lesser the risk, than rouse the slumbering fire
Of wild Fanaticism."—Waterley Novels, "Ivanhoe."
4 "Still sways their souls with that commanding art
That dazzles, leads, yet chills the vulgar heart."
---

Byron's Corsair, 1814.
The Monarch meetly thanks express'd;
The banquet rose at her behest,
With lay and tale, and laugh and jest,
Apace the evening flew. 1

XXI.
"The Lady sat the Monarch by,
Now in her turn abash'd and shy,
And with indifference seem'd to hear
The toys he whisper'd in her ear.
Her bearing modest was and fair,
Yet shadows of constraint were there,
That show'd an over-cautious care
Some inward thought to hide;
Oft did she pause in full reply,
And oft cast down her large dark eye,
Oft check'd the soft voluptuous sigh
That heaved her bosom's pride.
Slight symptoms these, but shepherds know
How hot the mid-day sun shall glow,
From the mist of morning sky;
And so the wily Monarch guess'd
That this assumed restraint express'd
More ardent passions in the breast
Than ventured to the eye.
Clos'er he press'd, while beakers rang,
While maidens laugh'd and minstrels sang,
Still closer to her ear—
But why pursue the common tale?
Or wherefore show how knights prevail
When ladies dare to hear?
Or wherefore trace, from what slight cause
Its source one tyrant passion draws,
Till, mastering all within, 2
Where lives the man that has not tried
How mirth can into folly glide,
And folly into sin!"

The Bridal of Triermain.

CANTO SECOND.

I.

Lulp's Tale, continued.

"Another day, another day,
And yet another, glides away!

The Saxon stern, the pagan Dane,
Maraud on Britain's shores again.
Arthur, of Christendom the flower,
Lies loitering in a lady's bower;
The horn, that foesmen wont to fear,
Sounds but to wake the Cumbrian deer,
And Caliburn, the British pride,
Hangs useless by a lover's side.

II.
"Another day, another day,
And yet another, glides away!
Heroic plans in pleasure drown'd,
He thinks not of the Table Round;
In lawless love dissolv'd his life,
He thinks not of his beauteous 3 wife;
Better he loves to snatch a flower
From bosom of his paramour,
Than from a Saxon knight 4 to wrest
The honors of his heathen crest!
Better to wreathe, 'mid tresses brown,
The heron's plume her hawk struck down,
Than o'er the altar give to flow
The banners of a Paynim foe. 5
Thus, week by week, and day by day,
His life inglorious glides away:
But she, that soothes his dream, with fear
Beholds his hour of waking near. 6

III.
"Much force have mortal charms to stay
Our peace in Virtue's toilsome way;
But Guendolen's might far outshine
Each maid of merely mortal line.
Her mother was of human birth,
Her sire a Genie of the earth,
In days of old deem'd to preside
O'er lovers' wiles and beauty's pride,
By youths and virgins worship'd long,
With festive dance and choral song,
Till, when the cross to Britain came,
On heathen altars died the flame.
Now, deep in Wastdale solitude,
The downfall of his rights he rued,
And, born of his resentment heir,
He train'd to guile that lady fair,
To sink in slothful sin and shame
The champions of the Christian name.
Well skill'd to keep vain thoughts alive,
And all to promise, nought to give,—
The timid youth had hope in store,
The bold and pressing gain'd no more.

1 On the opinion that may be formed even of these two stanzas (xix. to xx.) we are willing to hazard the justness of the eulogium we have bestowed on the general poetical merit of this little work.—Quarterly Review.

2 "One Master Passion in the breast,
Like Aaron's serpent, swallow's up the rest."—Pope.

3 MS.: —— "lovely."

4 MS.: —— "Paynim knight."

5 MS.: —— "vanquish'd foe."

6 The MS. has this and the sixth couplet of stanza iii. interpolated.
As wilder'd children leave their home,
After the rainbow's arch to roam,
Her loves barter'd fair esteem,
Faith, fame, and honor, for a dream.¹

IV.
"Her sire's soft arts the soul to tame;²
She practiced thus—till Arthur came;
Then frail humanity had part,
And all the mother claim'd her heart.
Forgot each rule her father gave,
Sunk from a princess to a slave,
Too late must Guendolen deplore,
He that has all can hope no more!
Now must she see her lover strain,
At every turn, her feeble chain;⁵
Watch to new-bind each knot, and shrink
To view each fast-decaying link.
Art she invokes to Nature's aid,
Her vest to zone, her locks to braid;
Each varied pleasure heard her call,
The feast, the tourney, and the ball:
He that stood sore she next applies,
Taxing her mind to aid her eyes;
Now more than mortal wise, and then
In female softness sunk again;
Now, raptured, with each wish complying,
With feign'd reluctance now denying;
Each charm she varied, to retain
A varying heart—and all in vain!

V.
"Thus in the garden's narrow bound,
Flank'd by some castle's Gothic round,
Fain would the artist's skill provide
The limits of his realms to hide.
The walks in labyrinths he twines,
Shade after shade with skill combines,
With many a varied flowery knot,
And cope, and arbor, decks the spot,
Tempering the hasty foot to stay,
And linger on the lovely way.—
Vain art! vain hope! 'tis fruitless all!
At length we reach the bounding wall,
And, sick of flower and trim-dress'd tree,
Long for rough glades and forest free.

VI.
"Three summer months had scantly flown,
When Arthur, in embarrass'd tone,
Spoke of his liegemen and his throne;
Said, all too long had been his stay,
And duties, which a Monarch sway,
Duties unknown to humbler men,
Must tear her knight from Guendolen.—
She listen'd silently the while,
Her mood express'd in bitter smile;⁷
Beneath her eye must Arthur quail,
And oft resume the unfinished tale,⁸
Confessing, by his downcast eye,
The wrong he sought to justify.
He ceased. A moment mute she gazed,
And then her looks to heaven she raised;
One palm her temples veild, to hide⁹
The tear that sprung in spite of pride!
The other for an instant press'd
The foldings of her silken vest!

VII.
"At her reproachful sign and look,
The hint the Monarch's conscience took.¹⁰
Eager he spoke—'No, lady, no!
Deem not of British Arthur so,
Nor think he can deserter prove
To the dear pledge of mutual love;
I swear by sceptre and by sword,
As belted knight and Britain's lord,
That if a boy shall claim my care,
That boy is born a kingdom's heir;
But, if a maiden Fate allows,
To choose that maid a fitting spouse,
A summer-day in lists shall strive
My knights,—the bravest knights alive,—
And he, the best and bravest tried,
Shall Arthur's daughter claim for bride.¹¹
He spoke with voice resolved and high—
The lady deign'd him not reply.

VIII.
"At dawn of morn, ere on the brake
His matins did a warbler make;¹¹
Or stirr'd his wing to brush away
A single dewdrop from the spray,

She then shines forth, solicitous to bless,
In all the glaring impotence of dress."¹²

GoldsmitH.

¹ MS.: "So the poor dupes exchanged esteem,
    Fame, faith, and honor, for a dream."
² MS.: "Such arts as best her sire became."
³ MS.: "That who gives all," &c.
⁴ MS.: "Now must she watch," &c.
⁵ MS.: "her wasting chain."
⁶ "As some fair female, unadorn'd and plain,
    Secure to please while youth confirms her reign,
    Slight every borrow'd charm that dress supplies,
    Nor shares with art the triumph of her eyes;
    But when those charms are past, for charms are frail,
    When time advances, and when lovers fail,

⁷ MS.: "Wreathed were her lips in bitter smile."
⁸ MS.: "his broken tale,
    With downcast eye and flushing cheeks,
    As one who 'gainst his conscience speaks."¹³
⁹ MS.: "One hand her temples press'd, to hide."
¹⁰ "The scene in which Arthur, sated with his lawless love,
    And awake at last to a sense of his duties, announces his immediate departure, is managed, we think, with uncommon skill and delicacy."—Quarterly Review.
¹¹ MS.: "A single warbler was awake."
Ere yet a sunbeam, through the mist,
The castle-battlements had kiss'd,
The gates revolve, the drawbridge falls,
And Arthur sallies from the walls.
Doff'd his soft garb of Persia's loom,
And steel from spur to helmet-plume,
His Libyan steed full proudly trode,
And joyful neigh'd beneath his load.
The Monarch gave a passing sigh
To penitence and pleasures by,
When, lo! to his astonish'd ken
Appear'd the form of Guendolen.

IX.
"Beyond the outmost wall she stood,
Attired like huntress of the wood:
Sandal'd her feet, her ankles bare,2
And eagle-plumage deck'd her hair;
Firm was her look, her bearing bold,
And in her hand a cup of gold.
'Thou goest!' she said, 'and ne'er again
Must we two meet, in joy or pain.
Full fain would I this hour delay,
Though weak the wish—yet, wilt thou stay?—
No! thou look'st forward. Still attend,—
Part we like lover and like friend,'
She raised the cup—'Not this the juice
The sluggish vines of earth produce;
Pledge we, at parting, in the draught
Which Genii love!'—she said, and quaff'd;
And strange unwonted lustres fly
From her flush'd cheek and sparkling eye.

X.
"The courteous Monarch bent him low,
And, stooping down from saddlebow,
Lifted the cup, in act to drink.
A drop escaped the goblet's brink—
Intense as liquid fire from hell,
Upon the charger's neck it fell.
Screaming with agony and fright,
He bolted twenty feet upright—
—The peasant still can show the dint
Where his hoofs lighted on the flint.—
From Arthur's hand the goblet flew,
Scattering a shower of fiery dew,3
That burn'd and blighted where it fell.4
The frantic steed rush'd up the dell,5

1 MS.: "To deep remorse."
2 MS.: "Her arms and buskin'd feet were bare."
3 MS.: "of blazing dew."
4 The author has an indistinct recollection of an adventure, somewhat similar to that which is here ascribed to King Arthur, having befallen one of the ancient kings of Denmark. The horn in which the burning liquor was presented to that monarch is said still to be preserved in the Royal Museum at Copenhagen.
5 MS.: "Curb, bit, and bridle he disdain'd, until a mountain crest he gain'd,
As whistles from the bow the reed;
Nor bit nor rein could check his speed,
Until he gain'd the hill;
Then breath and sinew fail'd apace,
And, reeling from the desperate race,
He stood, exhausted, still.
The Monarch, breathless and amazed,
Back on the fatal castle gazed—
Nor tower nor donjon could he spy,
Darkening against the morning sky.6
But, on the spot where once they frown'd,
The lonely streamlet brawl'd around
A tufted knoll, where dimly shone
Fragments of rock and rifted stone.7
Musing on this strange hap the while,
The King wends back to fair Carlisle;
And cares, that eumner royal sway,
Wore memory of the past away.

XI.
"Full fifteen years and more were sped,
Each brought new wreaths to Arthur's head,
Twelve bloody fields, with glory fought,
The Saxons to subjection brought.8
Pythian, the mighty giant, slain
By his good brand, relieved Bretagne;
The Fictish Gillamore in flight,
And Roman Lucius, own'd his might;
And wide were through the world renown'd9
The glories of his Table Round.
Each knight who sought adventurous fame
To the bold court of Britain came,
And all who suffer'd causeless wrong,
From tyrant proud, or faitour strong,
Sought Arthur's presence to complain,
Nor there for aid implored in vain.10

XII.
"For this the King, with pomp and pride,
Held solemn court at Whitsuntide,
And summon'd Prince and Peer,
All who owed homage for their land,
Or who craved knighthood from his hand,
Or who had succor to demand,
To come from far and near.
At such high tide were glee and game
Mingled with feats of martial fame,
For many a stranger champion came,

Then stopp'd exhausted;—all amazed,
The rider down the valley gazed,
But tower nor donjon," &c.
6 See Appendix, Note E.
7 MS.: "But on the spot where once they frown'd,
The stream besieg'd a sylvan mound,
With rocks in shattered fragments crown'd."
8 Arthur is said to have defeated the Saxons in twelve pitched battles, and to have achieved the other feats alluded to in the text.
9 MS.: "And wide was blazed the world around."
10 MS.: "Sought before Arthur to complain,
Nor there for succor sued in vain."
In lists to break a spear;
And not a knight of Arthur's host,
Save that he trod some foreign coast,
But at this feast of Pentecost
Before him must appear.
Ah, Minstrels! when the Table Round
Arose, with all its warriors crown'd,
There was a theme for bards to sound
In triumph to their string!
Five hundred years are past and gone,
But Time shall draw his dying groan,
Ere he behold the British throne
Begirt with such a ring!

XIII.
"The heralds named the appointed spot,
As Caerleon or Camelot,
Or Carlisle fair and free.
At Penrith, now, the feast was set,
And in fair Eamont's vale were met
The flower of chivalry.¹
There Galaad sat with manly grace,
Yet maiden meekness in his face;
There Morolt of the iron mace,²
And love-lorn Tristrem there:
And Dinadam with lively glance,
And Lanval with the fairy lance,
And Mordred with his look askance,
Brunor and Bevideor.
Why should I tell of numbers more?
Sir Cay, Sir Banier, and Sir Bore,
Sir Caroade the keen,
The gentle Gawain's courteous lore,
Hector de Mares and Pellinore,
And Lancelet,³ that ever more
Look'd stol'n-wise on the Queen.⁴

XIV.
"When wine and mirth did most abound,
And harpers play'd their blithest round,
A shrilly trumpet shook the ground,
And marshals clear'd the ring;
A maiden, on a palfrey white,
Heading a band of damsels bright,
Paced through the circle, to alight
And kneel before the King.

1 "The whole description of Arthur's Court is picturesque and appropriate."—Quarterly Review.
2 See Appendix, Note F.
3 MS.: "And Lancelet, for evermore
That scow'd upon the scene."
4 See Appendix, Note G.

Arthur, with strong emotion, saw
Her graceful boldness check'd by awe,
Her dress, like huntress of the wold,
Her bow and baldric trapp'd with gold,
Her sandall'd feet, her ankles bare,⁵
And the eagle plume that deck'd her hair,
Graceful her veil she backward flung—
The King, as from his seat he sprung,
Almost cried, 'Guendolen!'
But 'twas a face more frank and wild,
Betwixt the woman and the child,
Where less of magic beauty smiled
Than of the race of men;
And in the forehead's haughty grace,
The lines of Britain's royal race,⁶
Pendragon's, you might ken.

XV.
"Faltering, yet gracefully, she said—
'Great Prince! behold an orphan maid,
In her departed mother's name,
A father's vow'd protection claim!
The vow was sworn in desert lone,
In the deep valley of St. John.'
At once the King the suppliant raised,
And kiss'd her brow, her beauty praised;
His vow, he said, should well be kept,
Ere in the sea the sun was dipp'd,—
Then, conscious, glanced upon his Queen;
But she, unruffled at the scene
Of human frailty, constrained mild,
Look'd upon Lancelot and smiled.

XVI.
"'Up! up! each knight of gallant crest
Take buckler, spear, and brand!
He that to-day shall bear him best
Shall win my Gyneth's hand.
And Arthur's daughter, when a bride,
Shall bring a noble dower;
Both fair Strath-Clyde and Reged wide,
And Carlisle town and tower.'
Then might you hear each valiant knight,
To page and squire that cried,
'Bring my armor bright, and my courser wight!
'Tis not each day that a warrior's might

Her [sandall'd feet, her ] ankles bare,
(arms and buskin'd)
And eagle plumes," &c.
6 MS.: "The lineaments of royal race."
7 Mr. Adolphus, in commenting on the similarity of manners in the ladies of Sir Walter Scott's poetry and those of his then anonymous Novels, says, "In 'Rokeby' the filial attachment and duteous anxieties of Matilda form the leading feature of her character, and the chief source of her distresses.
The intercourse between King Arthur and his daughter Gyneth, in the 'Bridal of Triermain,' is neither long nor altogether amicable; but the monarch's feelings on first beholding that beautiful 'slip of wilderness,' and his manner of receiving her before the queen and court, are too forcibly and naturally described to be omitted in this enumeration."—Letters on the Author of 'Waverley,' 1822, p. 212.
May win a royal bride,
Then cloaks and caps of maintenance
In haste aside they fling;
The helmets glance, and gleams the lance,
And the steel-weaved hauberks ring.
Small care had they of their peaceful array,
They might gather it that wolde;
For brake and bramble glitter'd gay
With pearls and cloth of gold.

XVII.
"Within trumpet sound of the Table Round
Were fifty champions free,
And they all arise to fight that prize,—
They all arise but three.
Nor love's fond troth, nor wedlock's oath,
One gallant could withhold,
For priests will allow of a broken vow,
For penance or for gold,
But sigh and glance from ladies bright
Among the troop were thrown,
To plead their right, and true-love plight,
And 'plain of honor flown.
The knights they busied them so fast,
With buckling spur and belt,
That sigh and look, by ladies cast,
Were neither seen nor felt.
From pleading or upbraiding glance
Each gallant turns aside,
And only thought, 'If speeds my lance,
A queen becomes my bride!'
She has fair Strath-Clyde, and Reged wide,
And Carlisle tower and town;
She is the loveliest maid, beside,
That ever heir'd a crown.'
So in haste their courser they bestride,
And strike their visors down.

XVIII.
"The champions, arm'd in martial sort,
Have throng'd into the list,
And but three knights of Arthur's court
Are from the tourney miss'd,
And still these lovers' fame survives
For faith so constant shown,—
There were two who loved their neighbor's wives,
And one who loved his own. 1
The first was Lancelot de Lac,
The second Tristrem bold,
The third was valiant Carodac,
Who won the cup of gold, 2
What time, of all King Arthur's crew
(Thereof came jeer and laugh),

He, as the mate of lady true,
Alone the cup could quaff.
Though envy's tongue would fain surmise
That but for very shame,
Sir Carodac, to fight that prize,
Had given both cup and dame;
Yet, since but one of that fair court
Was true to wedlock's shrine,
Brand him who will with base report,—
He shall be free from mine.

XIX.
"Now caracoled the steeds in air,
Now plumes and pennons wanton'd fair,
As all around the lists so wide
In panoply the champions ride.
King Arthur saw with startled eye
The flower of chivalry march by,
The bulwark of the Christian creed,
The kingdom's shield in hour of need.
Too late he thought him of the woe
Might from their civil conflict flow: 3
For well he knew they would not part
Till cold was many a gallant heart.
Hjs hasty vow he 'gan to rue,
And Gyneth then apart he drew;
To her his leading-staff resign'd,
But added caution grave and kind.

XX.
"'Thou seest, my child, as promise-bound,
I bid the trump for toourney sound.
Take thou my warder, as the queen
And umpire of the martial scene;
But mark thou this:—as Beauty bright
Is polar star to valiant knight,
As at her word his sword he draws,
His fairest guerdon her applause,
So gentle maid should never ask
Of knighthood vain and dangerous task;
And Beauty's eyes should ever be
Like the twin stars that soothe the sea,
And Beauty's breath shall whisper peace,
And bid the storm of battle cease.
I tell thee this, lest all too far
These knights urge toourney into war.
Blithe at the trumpet let them go,
And fairly counter blow for blow:—
No striplings these, who succor need
For a razed helm or falling steed.
But, Gyneth, when the strife grows warm,
And threatens death or deadly harm,
Thy sire entreats, thy King commands,
Thou drop the warded from thy hands.
Trust thou thy father with thy fate,
Doubt not he choose thee fitting mate;
Nor be it said, through Gyneth's pride
A rose of Arthur's chaplet died.'

XXI.
"A proud and discontented glow
O'er shadow'd Gyneth's brow of snow;
She put the warded by:—
'Reserve thy boon, my liege,' she said,
'Thus chaffer'd down and limited,
Debased and narrow'd, for a maid
Of less degree than I."
No petty chief but holds his heir
At a more honor'd price and rare
Than Britain's King holds me,
Although the sunburn'd maid, for dower,
Has but her father's rugged tower,
His barren hill and lee.
King Arthur swore, "By crown and sword,
As belted knight and Britain's lord,
That a whole summer's day should strive
His knights, the bravest knights alive!"
Recall thine oath! and to her glen
Poor Gyneth can return athen;
Not on thy daughter will the stain
That sols thy sword and crown remain
But think not she will e'er be bride
Save to the bravest, proved and tried;
Pendragon's daughter will not fear
For clashing sword or splinter'd spear,
Nor shrink though blood should flow;
And all too well sad Guendolen
Hath taught the faithlessness of men,
That child of hers should pity when
Their need they undergo.'—

XXII.
"He frown'd and sigh'd, the Monarch bold:
'I give—what I may not withhold;
For not for danger, dread, or death,
Must British Arthur break his faith,
Too late I mark, thy mother's art
Hath taught thee this relentless part.
I blame her not, for she had wrong,
But not to these my faults belong.
Use, then, the warded as thou wilt;
But trust me that, if life be split,¹
In Arthur's love, in Arthur's grace,
Gyneth shall lose a daughter's place.'
With that he turn'd his head aside,
Nor brook'd to gaze upon her pride,
As, with the truncheon raised, she sate
The arbitress of mortal fate;

XXIII.
"But Gyneth heard the clangor high,
As bears the hawk the partridge cry.
Oh, blame her not! the blood was hers
That at the trumpet's summons stirs!—
And e'en the gentlest female eye
Might the brave strife of chivalry
A while untroubled view;
So well accomplish'd was each knight
To strike and to defend in fight,
Their meeting was a goodly sight,
While plate and mail held true.
The lists with painted plumes were strown,
Upon the wind at random thrown,
But helm and breastplate bloodless stone;
It seem'd their feather'd crests alone
Should this encounter rue.
And ever, as the combat grows,
The trumpet's cheery voice arose,
Like lark's shrill song the flourish flows,
Heard while the gale of April blows
The merry Greenwood through.

XXIV.
"But soon to earnest grew their game,
The spears drew blood, the swords struck flame,
And, horse and man, to ground there came
Knights who shall rise no more!
Gone was the pride the war that graced;
Gay shields were cleft, and crests defaced,
And steel coats riven, and helms unbraced,
And pennons stream'd with gore.
Gone, too, were fence and fair array,
And desperate strength made deadly way
At random through the bloody fray,
And blows were dealt with headlong sway,
Unheeding where they fell;
And now the trumpet's clamors seem
Like the shrill sea-bird's wailing scream,
Heard o'er the whirlpool's gulping stream,
The sinking seaman's knell!

XXV.
"Seem'd in this dismal hour that Fate
Would Camlan's ruin antedate,
And spare dark Mordred's crime;
Already gasping on the ground
Lie twenty of the Table Round,
Of chivalry the prime.²

¹ MS.: —— "if blood be split."
² MS.: —— "dying knell."
³ "The difficult subject of a tournament, in which several knights engage at once, is admirably treated by the novelist in 'Twanhoe,' and by his rival in the 'Bridal of Triermain,' and the leading thought in both descriptions is the sudden and Arthur, in anguish, tore away

From head and beard his tresses gray,
And she, proud Gyneth, felt dismay,
And quaked with ruth and fear;
But still she deemed her mother's shade
Hung o'er the tumult, and forbade
The sign that had the slaughter staid,
And chid the rising tear.
Then Brunor, Taulas, Mador, fell,
Helias the White, and Lionel,
And many a champion more;
Rochemont and Dinamul are down,
And Ferrand of the Forest Brown
Lies gasping in his gore.
Vanoc, by mighty Morolt press'd
Even to the confines of the list,
Young Vanoc of the beardless face
(Fame spoke the youth of Merlin's race),
O'erpower'd at Gyneth's footstool bled,
His heart's-blood dyed her sandals red.
But then the sky was overcast,
Then howl'd at once a whirlwind's blast,
And, rent by sudden threes,
Yawn'd in mid lists the quaking earth,
And from the gulf,—tremendous birth!—
The form of Merlin rose.

XXVI.
"Sternly the Wizard Prophet eyed
The dreary lists with slaughter dyed,
And sternly raised his hand:—
'Madmen,' he said, 'your strife forbear;
And thou, fair cause of mischief, hear
The doom thy fates demand!
Long shall close in stony sleep
Eyes for ruth that would not weep;
Iron lethargy shall seal
Heart that pity scorn'd to feel.
Yet, because thy mother's art
Warp'd thine unsuspicous heart,
And for love of Arthur's race,
Punishment is bent with grace,
Thou shalt bear thy penance lone
In the valley of Saint John,
And this weird shall overtake thee:
Sleep, until a knight shall wake thee,
For feats of arms so far renown'd
As warrior of the Table Round.
Long endurance of thy slumber
Well may teach the world to number
All their woes from Gyneth's pride,
When the Red Cross champions died.'

XXVII.
"As Merlin speaks, on Gyneth's eye
Slumber's load begins to lie;
Fear and anger vainly strive
Still to keep its light alive.
Twice, with effort and with pause,
O'er her brow her hand she draws;
Twice her strength in vain she tries,
From the fatal chair to rise:
Merlin's magic doom is spoken,
Vanoc's death must now be broken.
Slow the dark-fringed eyelids fall,
Curtaining each azure ball,
Slowly as on summer eyes
Violets fold their dusky leaves.
The weighty baton of command
Now bears down her sinking hand,
On her shoulder droops her head;
Net of pearl and golden thread,
Bursting, gave her locks to flow
O'er her arm and breast of snow,
And so lovely seem'd she there,
Spell-bound in her ivory chair,
That her angry sire, repenting,
Craved stern Merlin for relenting,
And the champions, for her sake,
Would again the contest wake;
Till, in necromantic night,
Gyneth vanish'd from their sight.

XXVIII.
"Still she bears her weird alone,
In the valley of Saint John;
And her semblance oft will seem,
Mingling in a champion's dream,
Of her weary lot to 'plain,
And crave his aid to burst her chain.
While her wondrous tale was new,
Warriors to her rescue drew,
East and west, and south and north,
From the Liffy, Thames, and Forth.
Most have sought in vain the glen,
Tower nor castle could they ken;
Not at every time or tide,
Nor by every eye, descried.
Fast and vigil must be borne,
Many a night in watching worn,
Ere an eye of mortal powers
Can discern those magic towers.
Of the persevering few,
Some from hopeless task withdrew, tragic change from a scene of pomp, gayety, and youthful pride, to one of misery, confusion, and death."—ADOLPHUS, p. 245.

"The tide of battle seemed to flow now toward the southern, now toward the northern extremity of the lists, as the one or the other party prevailed. Meantime, the clang of the blows, and the shouts of the combatants, mixed fearfully with the sound of the trumpets, and drowned the groans of those who fell; and lay rolling defenceless beneath the feet of the horses. The splendid armor of the combatants was now defaced with dust and blood, and gave way at every stroke of the sword and battle-axe. The gay plumage, shorn from the crests, drifted upon the breeze like snow-flakes. All that was beautiful and graceful in the martial array had disappeared, and what was now visible was only calculated to awake terror or compassion."—Achallach—Waverley Novels, vol. xvi. p. 157.

1 Doom.
When they read the dismal threat
Graved upon the gloomy gate.
Few have braved the yawning door,
And those few return’d no more.
In the lapse of time forgot,
Wellnigh is Gyneth’s lot;
Sound her sleep as in the tomb,
Till waken’d by the trump of doom.”

END OF LYULPH’S TALE.

---

HERE pause my tale; for all too soon,
My Lucy, comes the hour of noon,
Already from thy lofty dome
Its courtly inmates ’gin to roam,
And each, to kill the goodly day
That God has granted them, his way
Of lazy sauntering has sought;
Lordlings and witlings not a few,
Incapable of doing aught,
Yet ill at ease with nought to do,
Here is no longer place for me;
For, Lucy, thou wouldst blush to see
Some phantom, fashionably thin,
With limb of lath and kerchief’d chin,
And lounging gape, or sneering grin,
Steal sudden on our privacy.
And how should I, so humbly born,
Endure the graceful spectre’s scorn?
Faith! ill, I fear, while conjuring wand
Of English oak is hard at hand.

II.
Or grant the hour be all too soon
For Hessian boot and pantaloons,
And grant the lounger seldom strays
Beyond the smooth and gravel’d maze,
Land we the gods, that Fashion’s train
Holds hearts of more adventurous strain.
Artists are hers, who scorn to trace
Their rules from Nature’s boundless grace,
But their right paramount assert
To limit her by pedant art,
Damning whate’er of vast and fair
Exceeds a canvas three feet square.
This thicket, for their gumption fit,
May furnish such a happy bit.
Bards, too, are hers, wont to recite
Their own sweet lays by waxen light,
Half in the salver’s tingle drown’d,
While the chasse-café glides around;
And such may bither secret stray,
To labor an extemporè:

Or sportsman, with his boisterous hollo,
May here his wisr spaniel follow,
Or stage-struck Juliet may presume
To choose this bower for tiring-room;
And we alike must shun regard
From painter, player, sportsman, bard.
Insects that skim in Fashion’s sky,
Wasp, blue-bottle, or butterfly,
Lucy, have all alarms for us,
For all can hum and all can buzz.

III.
But oh, my Lucy, say how long
We still must dread this trilling throng,
And stoop to hide, with coward art,
The genuine feelings of the heart!
No parents thine whose just command
Should rule their child’s obedient hand;
Thy guardians, with contending voice,
Press each his individual choice.
And which is Lucy’s?—Can it be
That puny fop, trimm’d cap-a-pee,
Who loves in the saloon to show
The arms that never knew a foe;
Whose sabre trails along the ground,
Whose legs in shapeless boots are drown’d;
A new Achilles, sure,—the steel
Fled from his breast to fence his heel;
One, for the simple manly grace
That wont to deck our martial race,
Who comes in foreign trashery
Of tinkling chain and spur,
A walking haberdashery
Of feathers, lace, and fur:
In Rowley’s antiquated phrase,
Horse-milliner1 of modern days?

IV.
Or is it he, the wordy youth,
So early train’d for statesman’s part,
Who talks of honor, faith, and truth,
As themes that he has got by heart;
Whose ethics Chesterfield can teach,
Whose logic is from Single-speech;2
Who scorns the meanest thought to vent,
Save in the phrase of Parliament;
Who, in a tale of cat and mouse,
Calls “order,” and “divides the house,”
Who “eraves permission to reply,”
Whose “noble friend is in his eye;”
Whose loving tender some have reckon’d
A motion you should gladly second?

V.
What, neither? Can there be a third,
To such resistless swains preferr’d?—

1 "The trammels of the palfraye pleased his sight, And the horse-milliner his head with roses dight." Rowley’s Ballads of Charlie.

2 See "Parliamentary Logic, &c., by the Right Honorable William Gerard Hamilton" (1808), commonly called "Single-speech Hamilton."
Oh why, my Lucy, turn aside,
With that quick glance of injured pride?
Forgive me, love, I cannot bear
That alter'd and resentful air.
Were all the wealth of Russel mine,
And all the rank of Howard's line,
All would I give for leave to dry
That dewdrop trembling in thine eye.
Think not I fear such fops can wield
From Lucy more than careless smile;
But yet if wealth and high degree
Give gilded counters currency,
Must I not fear, when rank and birth
Stamp the pure ore of genuine worth?
Nobles there are, whose martial fires
Rival the fame that raised their sires,
And patriots, skill'd through storms of fate
To guide and guard the reeling state.
Such, such there are—if such should come,
Arthur must tremble and be dumb,
Self-exiled seek some distant shore,
And mourn till life and grief are o'er.

VI.
What sight, what signal of alarm,
That Lucy clings to Arthur's arm?
Or is it that the rugged way
Makes Beauty lean on lover's stay?
Oh, no! for on the vale and brake,
Nor sight nor sounds of danger wake,
And this trim sward of velvet green
Were carpet for the Fairy Queen.
That pressure slight was but to tell
That Lucy loves her Arthur well,
And fain would banish from his mind
Suspicious fear and doubt unkind.

VII.
But wouldst thou bid the demons fly
Like mist before the dawning sky,
There is but one resistless spell—
Say, wilt thou guess, or must I tell?
'Twere hard to name, in minstrel phrase,
A landaulet and four blood-bays,
But bards agree this wizard band
Can but be bound in Northern land.
'Tis there—nay, draw not back thy hand!—
'Tis there this slender finger round
Must golden amulet be bound,
Which, bless'd with many a holy prayer,
Can change to rapture lover's care,
And doubt and jealousy shall die,
And fears give place to cestasy.

VIII.
Now, trust me, Lucy, all too long
Has been thy lover's tale and song.
Oh why so silent, love, I pray?
Have I not spoke the livelong day?
And will not Lucy deign to say

One word her friend to bless?
I ask but one—a simple sound,
Within three little letters bound:
Oh, let the word be YES!

The Bridal of Triermain.

CANTO THIRD.

INTRODUCTION.

I.
Long loved, long woo'd, and lately won,
My life's best hope, and now mine own!
Doth not this rude and Alpine glen
Recall our favorite haunts again?
A wild resemblance we can trace,
Though reft of every softer grace,
As the rough warrior's brow may bear
A likeness to a sister fair.
Full well advised our Highland host
That this wild pass on foot be cross'd,
While round Ben-Cruach's mighty base
Wheel the slow steeds and lingering chaise.
The keen old carle, with Scottish pride,
He prais'd his glen and mountains wide;
An eye he bears for nature's face,
Ay, and for woman's lovely grace.
Even in such mean degree we find
The subtle Scot's observing mind;
For, nor the chariot nor the train
Could gape of vulgar wonder gain,
But when old Allan would expound
Of Beal-na-paish ¹ the Celtic sound,
His bonnet duff'd, and bow, applied
His legend to my bonny bride;
While Lucy blush'd beneath his eye,
Courteous and cautious, shrewd and sly.

II.
Enough of him.—Now, ere we lose,
Plunged in the vale, the distant views,
Turn thee, my love! look back once more
To the blue lake's retiring shore.
On its smooth breast the shadows seem Like objects in a morning dream,
What time the slumberer is aware
He sleeps, and all the vision's air;
Even so, on yonder liquid lawn,
In hues of bright reflection drawn,
Distinct the shaggy mountains lie,
Distinct the rocks, distinct the sky;

¹ Beal-na-paish, the Vale of the Bridal.
The summer clouds so plain we note
That we might count each dappled spot:
We gaze and we admire, yet know
The scene is all delusive show.
Such dreams of bliss would Arthur draw,
When first his lady's form he saw;
Yet sigh'd and sicken'd as he drew,
Despairing they could e'er prove true!

III.
But, Lucy, turn thee now, to view
Up the fair glen our destined way:
The fairy path that we pursue,
Distinguish'd but by greener hue,
Winds round the purple bracken,
While Alpine flowers of varied dye
For carpet serve, or tapestry.
See how the little runnels leap,
In threads of silver, down the steep,
To swell the brooklet's moan!
Seems that the Highland Naiad grieves,
Fantastic while her crown she weaves,
Of rowan, birch, and alder leaves,
So lovely, and so lone.
There's no illusion there; these flowers,
That wailing brook, these lovely bowers,
Are, Lucy, all our own;
And, since thine Arthur call'd thee wife,
Such seems the prospect of his life,
A lovely path, on-winding still,
By gurgling brook and sloping hill.
'Tis true that mortals cannot tell
What waits them in the distant dell;
But be it hap, or be it harm,
We tread the pathway arm in arm.

IV.
And now, my Lucy, wotst thou why
I could thy bidding twice deny,
When twice you pray'd I would again
Resume the legendary strain
Of the bold Knight of Triermain?
At length you peevish vow you swore,
That you would sue to me no more;
Until the minstrel fit drew near,
And made me prize a listening ear.
But, loveliest, when thou first didst pray
Continuance of the knightly lay,
Was it not on the happy day
That made thy hand mine own?
When, dizzied with mine ecstasy,
Nought past, or present, or to be,
Could I or think on, hear, or see,
Save, Lucy, thee alone!
A giddy draught my rapture was,
As ever chemist's magic gas.

V.
Again the summons I denied
In yon fair capital of Clyde:
My Harp—or let me rather choose
The good old classic form—my Muse
(For Harp's an over-scutched phrase,
Worn out by bards of modern days)—
My Muse, then—seldom will she wake,
Save by dim wood and silent lake;
She is the wild and rustic Maid
Whose foot unsandall'd loves to tread
Where the soft greensward is inlaid
With varied moss and thyme;
And, lest the simple lily-bray
That coronets her temples fade,
She hides her still in Greenwood shade,
To meditate her rhyme.

VI.
And now she comes! The murmur dear
Of the wild brook hath caught her ear,
The glade hath won her eye;
She longs to join with each blithe rill
That dances down the Highland hill
Her blither melody.
And now, my Lucy's way to cheer,
She bids Ben-Cruch's echoes hear
How closed the tale, my love whilere
Loved for its chivalry.
List how she tells, in notes of flame,
"Child Roland to the dark tower came!"

The Bridal of Triermain.

CANTO THIRD.

I.
Bewcastle now must keep the Hold,
Speir-Adam's steeds must bide in stall,
Of Hartley-burn the bowmen bold
Must only shoot from battled wall;
And Liddesdale may buckle spur,
And Teviot now may belt the brand,
Taras and Ewes keep nightly stir,
And Eskdale foray Cumberland.
Of wasted fields and plunder'd flocks
The Borderers bootless may complain;
They lack the sword of brave De Vaux,
There comes no aid from Triermain.
That lord, on high adventure bound,
Hath wander'd forth alone,
And day and night keeps watchful round
In the valley of Saint John.

1 MS.: "scenes of bliss."
2 MS.: "Until you peevish oath you swore,
That you would sue for it no more."
3 MS.: "Her wildwood melody."
4 The MS. has not this couplet.
II.
When first began his vigil bold,
The moon twelve summer nights was old,
And shone both fair and full;
High in the vault of cloudless blue,
O'er streamlet, dale, and rock, she threw
Her light composed and cool.
Stretch'd on the brown hill's heathy breast,
Sir Roland eyed the vale;
Chief where, distinguish'd from the rest,
Those clustering rocks uprear'd their crest,
The dwelling of the fair distress'd,
As told gray Lyulph's tale.
Thus as he lay, the lamp of night
Was quivering on his armor bright,
In beams that rose and fall,
And danced upon his buckler's boss,
That lay beside him on the moss,
As on a crystal well.

III.
Ever he watch'd, and oft he deem'd,
While on the mound the moonlight stream'd,
It alter'd to his eyes;
Fain would he hope the rocks 'gan change
To buttress'd walls their shapeless range,
Fain think, by transmutation strange,
He saw gray turrets rise.
But scarce his heart with hope throb'd high,
Before the wild illusions fly,
Which fancy had conceived,
Abetted by an anxious eye
That long'd to be deceived.
It was a fond deception all,
Such as, in solitary hall,
Regnifies the musing eye,
When, gazing on the sinking fire,
Bulwark, and battlement, and spire,
In the red gulf we spy.
For, seen by moon of middle night,
Or by the blaze of noontide bright,
Or by the dawn of morning light,
Or evening's western flame,
In every tide, at every hour,
In mist, in sunshine, and in shower,
The rocks remain'd the same.

IV.
Oft has he traced the charmed mound,
Oft climb'd its crest, or paced it round,
Yet nothing might explore,
Save that the crags so rudely piled,
At distance seen, resemblance wild
To a rough fortress bore.
Yet still his watch the Warrior keeps,
Feeds hard and spare, and seldom sleeps,
And drinks but of the well;
Ever by day he walks the hill,
And when the evening gale is chill,
He seeks a rocky cell,
Like hermit poor to bid his head,
And tell his Ave and his Creed,
Invoking every saint at need
For aid to burst his spell.

V.
And now the moon the moon her orb has hid,
And dwindled to a silver thread,
Dim seen in middle heaven,
While o'er its curve careering fast,
Before the fury of the blast
The midnight clouds are driven.
The brooklet raved, for on the hills
The upland showers had swoln the rills,
And down the torrents came;
Mutter'd the distant thunder dread,
And frequent o'er the vale was spread
A sheet of lightning flame.
De Vaux, within his mountain cave
(No human step the storm durst brave),
To moody meditation gave
Each faculty of soul,
Till, lul'd by distant torrent sound,
And the sad winds that whistled round,
Upon his thoughts, in musing droun'd,
A broken slumber stole.

VI.
'Twas then was heard a heavy sound (Sound strange and fearful there to hear,
'Mongst desert hills, where, leagues around,
Dwelt but the gorcock and the deer),
As, starting from his couch of fern,
Again he heard in clangor stern
That deep and solemn swell,—
Twelve times, in measured tone, it spoke,
Like some proud minster's pealing clock,
Or city's larum-bell.
What thought was Roland's first when fell,
In that deep wilderness, the knell
Upon his startled ear?
To slander warrior were I loth,
Yet must I hold my minstrel troth,—
It was a thought of fear.

VII.
But lively was the mingled thrill
That chased that momentary chill,
For Love's keen wish was there,
And eager Hope, and Valor high,
And the proud glow of Chivalry,
That burn'd to do and dare.

1 MS.: "His faculties of soul."

2 MS.: "his couch of rock,
Again upon his ear it broke."
Forth from the cave the Warrior rush'd,
Long ere the mountain voice\(^1\) was hush'd
That answer'd to the knell;
For long and far the unwonted sound,
Eddyng in echoes round and round,
Was toss'd from fell to fell;
And Glaramara answer flung,
And Grisdale-pike responsive rung,
And Legbert heights their echoes swung,
As far as Derwent's dell.\(^2\)

VIII.
Forth upon trackless darkness gazed
The Knight, bedeafen'd and amazed,
Till all was hush'd and still,
Save the swoln torrent's sullen roar,
And the night-blast that wildly bore
Its course along the hill.
Then on the northern sky there came
A light, as of reflected flame,
And over Legbert-head,
As if by magic art controll'd,
A mighty meteor slowly roll'd
Its orb of fiery red;
Thou wouldst have thought some demon dire
Came mounted on that car of fire,
To do his errand dread.
Far on the sloping valley's course,
On thicket, rock, and torrent hose,
Shingle and scree,\(^3\) and fell and force,\(^4\)
A dusky light arose;
Display'd, yet alter'd, was the scene:
Dark rock, and brook of silver sheen,
Even the gay thicket's summer green,
In bloody tineture glows.

IX.
De Vaux had mark'd the sunbeams set,
At eve, upon the coronet
Of that enchanted mound,
And seen but crags at random flung,
That, o'er the brawling torrent hung,\(^5\)
In desolation frown'd.
What sees he by that meteor's lower?—
A banner'd Castle, keep, and tower,
Return the lurid gleam,

With battled walls and buttress fast,
And barbican\(^6\) and ballium\(^7\) vast,
And airy flanking towers that cast
Their shadows on the stream.
'Tis no deceit!—distinctly clear
Crenell\(^8\) and parapet appear,
While o'er the pile that meteor drear
Makes momentary pause;
Then forth its solemn path it drew,
And fainter yet and fainter grew
Those gloomy towers upon the view,
As its wild light withdraws.

X.
Forth from the cave did Roland rush,
O'er crag and stream, through brier and bush;
Yet far he had not sped,\(^9\)
Ere sunk was that portentous light
Behind the hills, and utter night
Was on the valley spread.\(^10\)
He paused perforce, and blew his horn,
And, on the mountain echoes borne,\(^11\)
Was heard an answering sound,
A wild and lonely trumpet-note,—
In middle air it seem'd to float
High o'er the battle'd mound;
And sounds were heard, as when a guard
Of some proud castle, holding ward,
Pace forth their nightly round.
The valiant Knight of Triermain
Rung forth his challenge-blast again,
But answer came there none;
And 'mid the mingled wind and rain,
Darkling he sought the vale in vain,\(^12\)
Until the dawning shone;
And when it daw'n'd, that wondrous sight,
Distinctly seen by meteor light,
It all had pass'd away!
And that enchanted mount once more
A pile of granite fragments bore,
As at the close of day.

XI.
Steel'd for the deed, De Vaux's heart
Scorn'd from his vent'rous quest to part,
He walks the vale once more;

---

\(^1\) MS.: "mingled sounds were hush'd."
\(^2\) "The rock, like something starting from a sleep,
Took up the lady's voice, and laugh'd again;
That ancient Woman seated on Helm-Crag
Was ready with her cavern; Hammar-Sear,
And the tall steep of Silver-How, sent forth
A noise of laughter; southern Loughrigg heard,
And Fairfield answer'd with a mountain tone;
Hellvellyn far into the clear blue sky
Carried the lady's voice,—old Skiddaw blew
His speaking-trumpet,—back out of the clouds
Of Glaramara southward came the voice;
And Kirkstone toss'd it from his misty head."

---

\(^3\) Bank of loose stones.
\(^4\) Waterfall.
\(^5\) MS.: "rocks at random piled,
That on the torrent brawling wild."
\(^6\) The outer defence of the castle gate.
\(^7\) Fortified court.
\(^8\) Apertures for shooting arrows.
\(^9\) MS.: "had not gone."
\(^10\) MS.: "the valley lone."
\(^11\) MS.: "And far upon the echoes borne."
\(^12\) MS.: "he sought the towers in vain."

Wordsworth.
But only sees, by night or day,
That shatter'd pile of rocks so gray,
Hears but the torrent's roar.
Till when, through hills of azure borne,¹
The moon renew'd her silver horn,
Just at the time her waning ray
Had faded in the dawning day,
A summer mist arose;
Adown the vale the vapors float,
And cloudy undulations mort²
That tufted mound of mystic note,
As round its base they close.
And higher now the fleecy tide
Ascends its stern and shaggy side,
Until the airy billows hide³
The rock's majestic isle;
It seem'd a veil of filmy lawn,
By some fantastic fairy drawn⁴
Around enchantled pile.

XII.
The breeze came softly down the brook,⁵
And, sighing as it blew,
The veil of silver mist it shook,
And to De Vaux's eager look
Renew'd that wondrous view.
For, though the loitering vapor braved
The gentle breeze, yet oft it waved
Its mantle's dewy fold;
And still, when shook that filmy screen,
Were towers and bastions dimly seen,
And Gothic battlemens between
Their gloomy length unroll'd.⁶
Speed, speed, De Vaux, ere on thine eye
Ounce more the fleeting vision die!
—The gallant knight 'gan speed
As prompt and light as, when the hound
Is opening, and the horn is wound,
Careers the hunter's steed.
Down the steep dell his course amain
Hath rivall'd archer's shaft;

But ere the mound he could attain,
The rocks their shapeless form regain,
And, mocking loud his labor vain,
The mountain spirits laugh'd.
Far up the echoing dell was borne
Their wild unearthly shout of scorn.

XIII.
Wroth wax'd the Warrior.—"Am I then
Fool'd by the enemies of men,
Like a poor hind whose homeward way
Is haunter'd by malicious fay?
Is Triermain become your taunt,
De Vaux your scorn? False fiends, avaunt!"
A weighty curtail-axe he bare;
The baleful blade so bright and square,
And the tongh shaft of heben wood,
Were oft in Scottish gore imbrued.
Backward his stately form he drew,
And at the rocks the weapon threw,
Just where one crag's projected crest
Hung proudly balanced o'er the rest.
Hurl'd with main force, the weapon's shock
Rent a huge fragment of the rock.
If by mere strength, 'twere hard to tell,
Or if the blow dissolved some spell,
But down the headlong ruin came,
With cloud of dust and flash of flame.
Down bank, o'er bush, its course was borne,
Crush'd lay the copse, the earth was torn,
Till staid at length, the ruin dread
Cumber'd the torrent's rocky bed,
And bade the waters' high-swoln tide
Seek other passage for its pride.⁷

XIV.
When ceased that thunder, Triermain
Survey'd the mound's rude front again;
And, lo! the ruin had laid bare,
Hewn in the stone, a winding stair, as it were, absorbed by the fleecy whiteness of the mist, where it lay thick and condensed, and gave to the more light and vapory specks, which were elsewhere visible, a sort of filmy transparency resembling the lightest veil of silver gauze."—

"The praise of truth, precision, and distinctness, is not very frequently combined with that of extensive magnificence and splendid complication of imagery; yet how masterly, and often sublime, is the panoramic display, in all these works, of vast and diversified scenery, and of crowded and tumultuous action," &c.—Adolpheus, p. 153.

¹ MS.: "But when, through fields of azure borne,"
² MS.: "And with their eddying billows moist,"
³ MS.: "Until the mist's gray bosom hide,"
⁴ MS.: ——— "a veil of airy lawn."
⁵ "A sharp frost wind, which made itself heard and felt from time to time, removed the clouds of mist which might otherwise have slumbered till morning on the valley; and, though it could not totally disperse the clouds of vapor, yet threw them in confused and changeful masses, now hovering round the heads of the mountains, now filling, as with a dense and voluminous stream of smoke, the various deep gullies where masses of the composite rock, or breccia, tumbling in fragments from the cliffs, have rushed to the valley, leaving each behind its course a rent and torn ravine, resembling a deserted water-course. The moon, which was now high, and twinkled with all the vivacity of a frosty atmosphere, silvered the windings of the river, and the peaks and precipices which the mist left visible, while her beams seemed,

⁶ "The scenery of the valley, seen by the light of the summer and autumnal moon, is described with an aerial touch to which we cannot do justice."—Quarterly Review.
⁷ MS.: "Is wilder'd."
⁸ MS.: "And bade its waters, in their pride,
Seek other current for their tide."
THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN.

Whose moss'd and fractured steps might lend
The means the summit to ascend;
And by whose aid the brave De Vaux
Began to scale these magic rocks,
And soon a platform won,
Where, the wild witchery to close,
Within three lances' length arose
The Castle of Saint John!
No misty phantom of the air,
No meteor-blazon'd show was there;
In morning splendor, full and fair,
The massive fortress shone.

XV.
Embattled high and proudly tower'd,
Shaded by pond'rous flanks, lower'd
The portal's gloomy way.
Though for six hundred years and more
Its strength had brook'd the tempest's roar,
The scutcheon'd emblems which it bore
Had suffer'd no decay:
But from the eastern battlement
A turret had made sheer descent,
And, down in recent ruin rent,
In the mid torrent lay.
Else, o'er the Castle's brow sublime,
Insults of violence or of time
Unfelt had pass'd away.
In shapeless characters of yore,
The gate this stern inscription bore:—

XVI.
Inscription.

"Patience waits the destined day,
Strength can clear the cumber'd way.
Warrior, who hast waited long,
Firm of soul, of sinew strong,
It is given thee to gaze
On the pile of ancient days.
Never mortal builder's hand
This enduring fabric plann'd;
Sign and sigil, word of power,
From the earth raised keep and tower.
View it o'er, and pace it round,
Rampart, turret, battled mound.
Dare no more! To cross the gate
Were to tamper with thy fate;
Strength and fortitude were vain:
View it o'er—and turn again."—

XVII.

"That would I," said the Warrior bold,
"If that my frame were bent and old,
And my thin blood dropp'd slow and cold
As icicle in thaw;
But while my heart can feel it dance,
Blithe as the sparkling wine of France,
And this good arm wields sword or lance,
I mock these words of awe!"

He said; the wicket felt the sway
Of his strong hand, and straight gave way,
And, with rude crash and jarring Bray,
The rusty bolts withdraw;
But o'er the threshold as he strode,
And forward took the vaulted road,
An unseen arm, with force amain,
The ponderous gate flung close again,
And rusted bolt and bar
Spontaneous took their place once more,
While the deep arch with sullen roar
Return'd their surly jar.
"Now closed is the gin and the prey within,
By the Roof of兰ercost!
But he that would win the war-wolf's skin
May rue him of his boast."
Thus muttering, on the Warrior went,
By dubious light down steep descent.

XVIII.
Unbarr'd, unlock'd, unwatch'd, a port
Led to the Castle's outer court:
There the main fortress, broad and tall,
Spread its long range of bower and hall,
And towers of varied size,
Wrought with each ornament extreme
That Gothic art, in wildest dream
Of fancy, could devise;
But full between the Warrior's way
And the main portal arch, there lay
An inner moat;
Nor bridge nor boat
Affords De Vaux the means to cross
The clear, profound, and silent fosse.
His arms aside in haste he flings,
Cuirass of steel and hauberks rings,
And down falls helm, and down the shield,
Rough with the dints of many a field.
Fair was his manly form, and fair
His keen dark eye, and close-curl'd hair,
When, all unarm'd, save that the brand
Of well-proved metal graced his hand,
With nought to fence his dauntless breast
But the close gipon's under-vest,
Whose sullied buff the sable stains
Of hauberks and of mail retains,—
Roland de Vaux upon the brim
Of the broad moat stood prompt to swim.

XIX.
Accoutred thus he dared the tide,
And soon he reach'd the farther side,
And enter'd soon the Hold,
And paced a hall, whose walls so wide
Were blazon'd all with feats of pride,
By warriors done of old.
In middle lists they counter'd here,

1 A sort of doublet, worn beneath the armor.
While trumpets seem'd to blow;
And there, in den or desert drear,
They quell'd gigantic foe,¹
Braved the fierce griffin in his ire,
Or faced the dragon's breath of fire.
Strange in their arms, and strange in face,
Heroes they seem'd of ancient race,
Whose deeds of arms, and race, and name,
Forgotten long by later fame,
Were here depicted to appal²
Those of an age degenerate
Whose bold intrusion braved their fate
In this enchanted hall.
For some short space the venturous knight
With these high marvels fed his sight,
Then sought the chamber's upper end,
Where three broad easy steps ascend
To an arch'd portal door,
In whose broad folding leaves of state
Was framed a wicket window-grate;
And, ere he ventured more,
The gallant Knight took earnest view
The grated wicket-window through.

XX.
Oh for his arms! Of martial weed
Had never mortal Knight such need!—
He spied a stately gallery; all
Of snow-white marble was the wall,
The vaulting, and the floor;
And, contrast strange! on either hand
There stood array'd in sable band
Four Maids whom Afric bore;³
And each a Lybian tiger led,
Held by as bright and frail a thread
As Lucy's golden hair,—
For the leash that bound these monsters dread
Was but of gossamer.
Each Maiden's short barbaric vest⁴
Left all unclosed the knee and breast,
And limbs of shapely jet;
White was their vest and turban's fold,
On arms and ankles rings of gold
In savage pomp were set;
A quiver on their shoulders lay,
And in their hand an assagay.⁵
Such and so silent stood they there,
That Roland wellnigh hoped
He saw a band of statues rare,
Station'd the gazer's soul to scare;
But when the wicket oped,
Each grisly beast 'gan upward draw,
Roll'd his grim eye, and spread his claw,
Scented the air, and lick'd his jaw;
While these weird Maids, in Moorish tongue,
A wild and dismal warning sung.

XXI.
"Rash Adventurer, bear thee back!
Dread the spell of Dahomay!
Fear the race of Zaharak,⁶
Daughters of the burning day!"

"When the whirlwind's gusts are wheeling,
Ours it is the dance to braid;
Zarah's sands, in pillars reeling,
Join the measure that we tread,
When the Moon has don'd her cloak,
And the stars are red to see,
Shrill when pipes the sad Siroc,
Music meet for such as we.

"Where the shatter'd columns lie,
Showing Carthage once had been,
If the wandering Santon's eye³
Our mysterious rites hath seen,—
Oft he cons the prayer of death,
To the nations preaches doom,
'Azrael's brand hath left the sheath!
Moslems, think upon the tomb!"

"Ours the scorpion, ours the snake,
Ours the hydra of the fen,
Ours the tiger of the brake,
All that plagues the sons of men.
Ours the tempest's midnight wrack,
Pestilence that wastes by day—
Dread the race of Zaharak!
Fear the spell of Dahomay!"

XXII.
Uncouth and strange the accents shrill
Rung those vaulted roofs among;
Long it was ere, faint and still,
Died the far-resounding song.
While yet the distant echoes roll,
The Warrior communed with his soul.
"When first I took this venturous quest,
I swore upon the Rood
Neither to stop, nor turn, nor rest,
For evil or for good.
My forward path, too well I ween,
Lies yonder fearful ranks between!
For man unarm'd, 'tis bootless hope
With tigers and with fiends to cope;—
Yet, if I turn, what waits me there,
Save famine dire and fell despair?—
Other conclusion let me try,
Since, choose how'er I list, I die.
Forward, lies faith and knightly fame;
Behind, are perjury and shame.
In life or death I hold my word!"—
With that he drew his trusty sword,

¹ MS.: "They counter'd giant foe."
² MS.: "Portray'd by limner to appall."
³ MS.: "Four Maidens stood in sable band,
The blackest Afrique bore."
⁴ The MS. has not this couplet.
⁵ Zaharak or Zarahah is the Arab name of the Great Desert.
Caught down a banner from the wall,
And enter'd thus the fearful hall.

XXIII.
On high each wayward Maiden threw
Her swarthy arm, with wild hallo!
On either side a tiger sprung;—
Against the leftward foe he flung
The ready banner, to engage
With tangling folds the brutal rage;
The right-hand monster in mid air
He struck so fiercely and so fair,
Through gullet and through spinal bone
The trenchant blade hath sheerly gone.
His grisly brethren ramp'd and yelled,
But the slight leach their rage withheld,
Whilst, 'twixt their ranks, the dangerous road
Firmly, though swift, the champion strode,
Safe to the gallery's bound he drew,
Safe pass'd an open portal through;
And when against pursuit he flung
The gate, judge if the echoes rung!
Onward his daring course he bore,
While, mix'd with dying growl and roar,
Wild jubilee and loud hurra
Pursued him on his venturesome way.

"Hurra, hurra! Our watch is done!
We hail once more the tropic sun,
Pallid beams of northern day,
Farewell, farewell! Hurra, hurra!

"Five hundred years o'er this cold glen
Hath the pale sun come round agen;
Foot of man, till now, hath ne'er
Dared to cross the Hall of Fear.

"Warrior! thou whose dauntless heart
Gives us from our ward to part,
Be as strong in future trial,
Where resistance is denial.

"Now for Afric's glowing sky,
Zwengs wide and Atlas high,
Zaharak and Dahomay!—
Mount the winds! Hurra, hurra!"

XXV.
The wizard song at distance died,
As if in ether borne astray,
While through waste halls and chambers wide
The Knight pursued his steady way,
Till to a loftly dome he came,
That flash'd with such a brilliant flame,
As if the wealth of all the world
Were there in rich confusion hurl'd.

For here the gold, in sandy heaps,
With duller earth incorporate, sleeps;
Was there in ingots piled, and there
Coin'd badge of empery it bare;
Yonder, huge bars of silver lay,
Dimm'd by the diamond's neighboring ray,
Like the pale moon in morning day;
And in the midst four Maidens stand,
The daughters of some distant land,
Their hue was of the dark-red dye
That fringes oft a thunder sky;
Their hands palmetto baskets bare,
And cotton fillets bound their hair;
Slim was their form, their mien was shy,
To earth they bent the humbled eye,
Folded their arms, and suppliant kneel'd,
And thus their proffer'd gifts reveal'd.\(^1\)

XXVI.
CHORUS.
"See the treasures Merlin piled,
Portion meet for Arthur's child.
Bathe in Wealth's unbounded stream,
Wealth that Avarice ne'er could dream!"

FIRST MAIDEN.
"See these clots of virgin gold!
Sever'd from the sparry mould,
Nature's mystic alchemy
In the mine thus bade them lie;
And their orient smile can win
Kings to stoop, and saints to sin."—

SECOND MAIDEN.
"See these pearls, that long have slept;
These were tears by Naiads wept
For the loss of Marinel.
Tritons in the silver shell
Treasured them, till hard and white
As the teeth of Amphitrite."—

THIRD MAIDEN.
"Does a livelier hue delight?
Here are rubies blazing bright,
Here the emerald's fairy green,
And the topaz glows between;
Here their varied hues unite
In the changeful chrysolite."—

FOURTH MAIDEN.
"Leave these gems of poorer shine,
Leave them all, and look on mine!
While their glories I expand,
Shade thine eyebrows with thy hand,
Mid-day sun and diamond's blaze
Blind the rash beholder's gaze."—

\(^1\) MS.: "golden flame."

\(^2\) MS.: "And, suppliant as on earth they kneel'd, The gifts they proffer'd thus reveal'd."
CHORUS.

"Warrior, seize the splendid store;
Would 'twere all our mountains bore!
We should uc'er in future story
Read, Peru, thy perish'd glory!"

XXVII.

Calmly and unconcern'd, the Knight
Waved aside the treasures bright:
"Gentle Maidens, rise, I pray!
Bar not thus my destined way.
Let these boasted brilliant toys
Braid the hair of girls and boys!
Bid your streams of gold expand
O'er proud London's thirsty land.
De Vaux of wealth saw never need,
Save to purvey him arms and steed,
And all the ore he deign'd to hoard
Inlays his helm, and hilt's his sword."
Thus gently parting from their hold,
He left, unmoved, the dome of gold.

XXVIII.

And now the morning sun was high,
De Vaux was weary, faint, and dry;
When, lo! a plashing sound he hears,
A gladsome signal that he hears
Some frolic water-run;
And soon he reach'd a court-yard square,
Where, dancing in the sultry air,
Toss'd high aloft, a fountain fair
Was sparkling in the sun.
On right and left, a fair arcade
In long perspective view display'd
Alleys and bowers, for sun or shade:
But, full in front, a door,
Low-brow'd and dark, seem'd as it led
To the lone dwelling of the dead,
Whose memory was no more.

XXIX.

Here stopp'd De Vaux an instant's space,
To bathe his parch'd lips and face,
And mark'd with well-pleased eye,
Refracted on the fountain stream,
In rainbow hues, the dazzling beam
Of that gay summer sky,
His senses felt a mild control,
Like that which lulls the weary soul,
From contemplation high
Relaxing, when the ear receives
The music that the Greenwood leaves
Make to the breezes' sigh.

XXX.

And oft in such a dreamy mood,
The half-shut eye can frame

Fair apparitions in the wood,
As if the nymphs of field and flood
. In gay procession came.
Are these of such fantastic mould,
Seen distant down the fair arcade,
These Maidens enlink'd in sister-fold,
Who, late at bashful distance staid,
Now tripping from the Greenwood shade,
Nearer the musing champion draw,
And, in a pause of seeming awe,
Again stand doubtful now?—
Ah, that sly pause of witching powers!
That seems to say, "To please be ours,
Be yours to tell us how."
Their hue was of the golden glow
That suns of Candahar bestow,
O'er which in slight suffusion flows
A frequent tinge of paly rose;
Their limbs were fashion'd fair and free,
In nature's justest symmetry;
And, wreathed with flowers, with odors graced,
Their raven ringlets reach'd the waist:
In eastern pomp, its gilding pale
The hennah lent each shapely nail,
And the dark sumah gave the eye
More liquid and more lustrous dye.
The spotless veil of misty lawn,
In studied disarrangement drawn
The form and bosom o'er,
To win the eye, or tempt the touch,
For modesty show'd all too much—
Too much—yet promised more.

XXXI.

"Gentle Knight, a while delay."
Thus they sung, "thy toilsome way,
While we pay the duty due
To our Master and to you.
Over Avarice, over Fear,
Love triumphant led thee here;
Warrior, list to us, for we
Are slaves to Love, are friends to thee.
Though no treasured gems have we,
To proffer on the bended knee,
Though we boast nor arm nor heart
For the assagay or dart,
Swains allow each simple girl
Ruby lip and teeth of pearl;
Or, if dangers more you prize,
Flatterers find them in our eyes.

"Stay then, gentle Warrior, stay,
Rest till evening steal on day;
Stay, oh stay!—in yonder bowers
We will braid thy locks with flowers,
Spread the feast and fill the wine,
Charm thy ear with sounds divine,
Weave our dances till delight
Yield to languor, day to night.

1 MS.: "Let those boasted gems and pearls
Braid the hair of toy-caught girls."
Then shall she you most approve
Sing the lays that best you love,
Soft thy mossy couch shall spread,
Watch thy pillow, prop thy head,
Till the weary night be o'er—
Gentle Warrior, wouldst thou more?
Wouldst thou more, fair Warrior?—she
Is slave to Love, and slave to thee."

XXXII.
Oh, do not hold it for a crime
In the bold hero of my rhyme,
For Stoic look,
And meet rebuke,
He lack'd the heart or time;
As round the band of sirens trip,
He kiss'd one damsels laughing lip,¹
And press'd another's proffer'd hand,
Spoke to them all in accents bland,
But broke their magic circle through;
"Kind Maids," he said, "adieu, adieu!
My fate, my fortune, forward lies."
He said, and vanish'd from their eyes;
But, as he dared that darksome way,
Still heard behind their lovely lay:—
"Fair Flower of Courtesy, depart!
Go, where the feelings of the heart
With the warm pulse in concord move;
Go, where Virtue sanctions Love!"

XXXIII.
Downward De Vaux through darksome ways
And ruin'd vaults has gone,
Till issue from their wilder'd maze,
Or safe retreat, seem'd none,—
And e'en the dismal path he strays
Grew worse as he went on.
For cheerful sun, for living air,
Foul vapors rise and mine-fires glare,
Whose fearful light the dangers show'd
That dogg'd him on that dreadful road.
Deep pits, and lakes of waters dun,
They show'd, but show'd not how to shun.
These scenes² of desolate despair,
These smothering clouds of poison'd air,
How gladly had De Vaux exchanged,
Though 'twere to face you tigers ranged!
Nay, soothful bards have said
So perilous his state seem'd now,
He wish'd him under arbor bough
With Asia's willing maid.
When, joyful sound! at distance near
A trumpet flourish'd loud and clear,
And as it ceased, a lofty lay
Seem'd thus to chide his lagging way.

XXXIV.
"Son of Honor, theme of story,
Think on the reward before ye!
Danger, darkness, toil, despise;
'Tis Ambition bids thee rise.
"He that would her heights ascend
Many a weary step must wend;
Hand and foot and knee he tries;
Thus Ambition's minions rise.
"Lag not now, though rough the way:
Fortune's mood brooks no delay;
Grasp the boon that's spread before ye,
Monarch's power, and Conqueror's glory!"

It ceased. Advancing on the sound,
A steep ascent the Wanderer found,
And then a turret stair:
Nor climb'd he far its steepy round
Till fresher blew the air;
And next a welcome glimpse was given,
That cheer'd him with the light of heaven.
At length his toil had won
A lofty hall with trophies dress'd,
Where, as to greet imperial guest,
Four Maidens stood, whose crimson vest
Was bound with golden zone.

XXXV.
Of Europe seem'd the damsels all;
The first a nymph of lively Gaul,
Whose easy step and laughing eye
Her borrow'd air of awe belie;
The next a maid of Spain,
Dark-eyed, dark-hair'd, sedate, yet bold;
White ivory skin and tress of gold
Her shy and bashful comrade told
For daughter of Almaine.—
These Maidens bore a royal robe,
With crown, with sceptre, and with globe,
Emblems of empery;
The fourth a space behind them stood,
And leant upon a harp, in mood
Of minstrel ecstasy.
Of merry England she, in dress
Like ancient British Druidess.
Her hair an azure fillet bound,
Her graceful vesture sweeped the ground,
And, in her hand display'd,
A crown did that fourth Maiden hold,
But unadorn'd with gems and gold,
Of glossy laurel made.³

XXXVI.
At once to brave De Vaux knelt down
These foremost Maidens three,

¹ MS.: "As round the band of sirens press'd,
One damsels laughing lip he kiss'd."

² MS.: "This state," &c.

³ MS.: "Of laurel leaves was made."
And proffer'd sceptre, robe, and crown,
Liegedom and seignorie,
O'er many a region wide and fair,
Destined, they said, for Arthur's heir;
But homage would he none:—
Rather," he said, "De Vaux would ride,
A warden of the Border-side,
In plate and mail, than, robed in pride,
A monarch's empire own;
Rather, far rather, would he be
A free-born knight of England free,
Than sit on despot's throne."
So pass'd he on, when that fourth Maid,
As starting from a trance,
Upon the harp her finger laid;
Her magic torch the chords obey'd,
Their soul awaked at once!

SONG OF THE FOURTH MAIDEN.
"Quake to your foundations deep,
Stately Towers, and Banner'd Keep;
Bid your vaulted echoes moan,
As the dreaded step they own.

"Fiends, that wait on Merlin's spell,
Hear the foot-fall! mark it well!
Spread your dusky wings abroad,
Bounè ye for your homeward road!

"It is His, the first who e'er
Dared the dismal Hall of Fear;
His, who hath the snares defied
Spread by Pleasure, Wealth, and Pride.

"Quake to your foundations deep,
Bastion huge, and Turret steep
Tremble, Keep! and totter, Tower!
This is Gyneth's waking hour."

XXXVII.
Thus while she sung, the venturous Knight
Has reach'd a bower, where milder light
Through curtain curtains fell;
Such soven'd shade the hill receives
Her purple veil when twilight leaves
Upon its western swell.
That bower, the gazer to bewitch,
Hath wondrous store of rare and rich
As o'er was seen with eye;
For there by magic skill, I wis,
Form of each thing that living is
Was limm'd in proper dye.
All seem'd to sleep—the timid hare
On form, the stag upon his hair,
The eagle in her eyrie fair
Between the earth and sky.

But what of pictured rich and rare
Could win De Vaux's eye-glance, where,
Deep slumbering in the fatal chair,
He saw King Arthur's child!
Doubt, and anger, and dismay,
From her brow had pass'd away,
Forgot was that fell tourney-day,
For, as she slept, she smiled:
It seem'd that the repentant Seer
Her sleep of many a hundred year
With gentle dreams beguiled.

XXXVIII.
That form of maiden loveliness,
'Twixt childhood and 'twixt youth, That dreaded chair, that sylvan dress,
The arms and ankles bare, express
Of Lyulph's tale the truth.
Still upon her garment's hem
Vance's blood made purple gem,
And the warder of command
Cumber'd still her sleeping hand;
Still her dark locks dishevell'd flow
From net of pearl o'er breast of snow;
And so fair the slumberer seems,
That De Vaux impeach'd his dreams,
Vapid all and void of might,
Hiding half her charms from sight.
Motionless a while he stands,
Folds his arms and clasps his hands,
Trembling in his fitful joy,
Doubtful how he should destroy
Long-enduring spell;
Doubtful, too, when slowly rise
Dark-fringed lids of Gyneth's eyes,
What these eyes shall tell.—
"St. George! St. Mary! can it be
That they will kindly look on me?"

XXXIX.
Gently, lo! the Warrior kneels,
Soft that lovely hand he steals,
Soft to kiss, and soft to clasp—
But the warder leaves her grasp;
Lightning flashes, rolls the thunder!
Gyneth startles from her sleep,
Totters Tower, and trembles Keep,
Burst the Castle walls asunder!
Fierce and frequent were the shocks,—
Melt the magic hails away;—
But beneath their mystic rocks,
In the arms of bold De Vaux,
Safe the princess lay;
Safe and free from magic power,
Blushing like the rose's flower
Opening to the day;

1 MS.: "But the firm knight pass'd on."
2 MS.: "Spread your pennons all abroad."
3 MS.: "and battled keep."
4 MS.: "soften'd light."
5 MS.: "But what of rich or what of rare."
And round the Champion's brows were bound
The crown that Druidess had wound,
Of the green laurel-bay.
And this was what remain'd of all
The wealth of each enchanted hall,
The Garland and the Dame:
But where should Warrior seek the meed
Due to high worth for daring deed,
Except from Love and Fame!

CONCLUSION.

I.
My Lucy, when the Maid is won,
The Minstrel's task, thou know'st, is done;
And to require of hard
That to his dregs the tale should run,
Were ordinance too hard,
Our lovers, briefly be it said,
Wedded as lovers wont to wed,
When tale or play is o'er;
Lived long and blest, loved fond and true,
And saw a numerous race renew
The honors that they bore.
Know, too, that when a pilgrim strays,
In morning mist or evening maze,
Along the mountain lone,
That fairy fortress often mocks
His gaze upon the castled rocks
Of the valley of St. John;
But never man since brave De Vaux
The charmed portal won.

'Tis now a vain illusive show,
That melts where'er the sunbeams glow,
Or the fresh breeze hath blown.

II.
But see, my love, where far below
Our lingering wheels are moving slow,
The whiles, up-gazing still,
Our menials eye our steepy way,
Marvelling, perchance, what whim can stay
Our steps, when eye is sinking gray
On this gigantic hill.
So think the vulgar—Life and time
Ring all their joys in one dull chime
Of luxury and ease;
And, oh! beside these simple knaves,
How many better born are slaves
To such coarse joys as these,— Dead to the nobler sense that glows
When nature's grander scenes unclose!
But, Lucy, we will love them yet,
The mountain's misty coronet,
The Greenwood, and the wold;
And love the more, that of their maze
Adventure high of other days
By ancient bards is told,
Bringing, perchance, like my poor tale,
Some moral truth in fiction's veil;
Nor love them less, that o'er the hill
The evening breeze, as now, comes chill;—
My love shall wrap her warm,
And, fearless of the slippery way,
While safe she trips the heathy brae,
Shall hang on Arthur's arm.

THE END OF TRIERMAIN.
tender, and far less infected with the unnatural prodigies and coarsenesses of the earlier romancers. In estimating its merits, however, we should forget that it is offered as an imitation. The fiction undoubtedly reminds us of a rhythm and cadence we have heard before; but the sentiments, descriptions, and characters, have qualities that are native and unborrowed.

In his sentiments the author has avoided the slight deficiency we ventured to ascribe to his prototype. The pictures of pure description are perpetually illuminated with reflections that bring out their coloring and increase their moral effect: these reflections are suggested by the scene, produced without effort, and expressed with unaffected simplicity. The descriptions are spirited and striking, possessing an airiness suited to the mythology and manners of the times, though restrained by correct taste. Among the characters, many of which are such as we expect to find in this department of poetry, it is impossible not to distinguish that of Arthur, in which, identifying himself with his original, the author has contrived to unite the valor of the hero, the courtesy and dignify of the monarch, and the amiable weaknesses of any ordinary mortal, and thus to present to us the express inclements of the flower of chivalry."—Quarterly Review, 1813.

"With regard to this poem, we have often heard, from what may be deemed good authority, a very curious anecdote, which we shall give merely as such, without vouching for the truth of it. When the article entitled 'The Inferno of Altisidora' appeared in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1809, it will be remembered that the last fragment contained in that singular production is the beginning of the romance of 'Triermain.' Report says that the fragment was not meant to be an imitation of Scott, but of Coleridge, and that for this purpose the author borrowed both the name of the hero and the scene from the then unpublished poem of 'Christabel;' and further, that so few had ever seen the manuscript of that poem that amongst those few the author of 'Triermain' could not be mistaken. Be that as it may, it is well known that on the appearance of this fragment in the Annual Register, it was universally taken for an imitation of Walter Scott, and never once of Coleridge. The author perceiving this, and that the poem was well received, instantly set about drawing it out into a regular and finished work; for shortly after it was announced in the papers, and continued to be so for three long years; the author, as may be supposed, having, during that period, his hands occasionally occupied with heavier metal. In 1813 the poem was at last produced, avowedly and manifestly as an imitation of Mr. Scott; and it may easily be observed that, from the 27th page onward, it becomes much more decidedly like the manner of that poet than it is in the preceding part which was published in the Register, and which undoubtedly does bear some similarity to Coleridge in the poetry, and more especially in the rhythm, as, e. g.—

'Harpers must lull him to his rest
With the slow soft tunes he loves the best,
Till sleep sink down upon his breast,
Like the dew on a summer hill;'

'It was the dawn of an autumn day;
The sun was struggling with frost-fog gray,
That, like a silvery crape, was spread
Round Skiddaw's dim and distant head.'

— What time or where
Did she pass, that maid with her heavenly brow,
With her look so sweet and her eyes so fair,
And her graceful step and her angel air,
And the eagle plume in her dark-brown hair,
That pass'd from my bower e'en now?

'Although it fell as faint and shy
As bashful maiden's half-form'd sigh,
When she thinks her lover near.'

'And light they fell, as when earth receives,
In morn of frost, the wither'd leaves,
That drop when no winds blow.'

'Or if 'twas but an airy thing,
Such as fantastic slumbers bring,
Framed from the rainbow's varying dyes,
Or fading tints of western skies.'

"These, it will be seen, are not exactly Coleridge, but they are precisely such an imitation of Coleridge as, we conceive, another poet of our acquaintance would write: on that ground, we are inclined to give some credit to the anecdote here related, and from it we leave our readers to guess, as we have done, who is the author of the poem."—Blackwood's Magazine, April, 1817.

"The quarto of 'Rokeby' was followed, within two months, by the small volume which had been designed for a twin-birth—the MS. had been transcribed by one of the Ballantynes themselves, in order to guard against any indiscretion of the press-people; and the mystification, added andabetted by Erskine, in no small degree heightened the interest of its reception.

"Scott says, in the Introduction to the 'Lord of the Isles,'

'As Mr. Erskine was more than suspected of a taste for poetry, and as I took care, in several places, to mix something that might resemble (as far as was in my power) my friend's feelings and manner, the train easily caught, and two large editions were sold.' Among the passages to which he here alludes are no doubt those in which the character of the minstrel Arthur is shaded with the colorings of an almost effeminate gentleness. Yet, in the midst of them, the 'mighty minstrel' himself, from time to time, escapes; as, for instance, where the lover bids Lucy, in the exquisite picture of crossing a mountain stream, trust to his 'stalwart arm,'

'Which could such oak's prone trunk uprear,'

Nor can I pass the compliment to Scott's own fair patroness, where Lucy's admirer is made to confess, with some mortifying lapse of gallantry, that he

'Never won,—best need to minstrel true,—
One favoring smile from fair Buccleuch;'

nor the burst of genuine Borderism,—

'Bewcastle now must keep the hold,
Speir-Adam's steeds must hide in stall;
Of Hartley-burn the bowmen bold
Must only shoot from battled wall;
And Liddesdale may huckle spur,
And Tievot now may belt the brand,
Taras and Eves keep nightly stir,
And Eskdale foray Cumberland.'—

But, above all, the choice of the scenery, both of the Introductions and of the story itself, reveals the early and treasured predilections of the poet.

"As a whole, the 'Bridal of Triermain' appears to me as characteristic of Scott as any of his larger poems. His genius pervades and animates it beneath a thin and playful veil, which perhaps adds as much of grace as it takes away of splendor. As Wordsworth says of the eclipse on the lake of Lugano—

'Tis sunlight sheathed and gently charm'd?"
and I think there is at once a lightness and a polish of versification beyond what he has elsewhere attained. If it be a miniature, it is such a one as a Cooper might have hung fearlessly beside the masterpieces of Vandyke.

"The Introductions contain some of the most exquisite passages he ever produced; but their general effect has always struck me as unfortunate. No art can reconcile us to contemptuous satire of the merest frivolities of modern life—some of them already, in twenty years, grown obsolete—interlaid between such bright visions of the old world of romance, when

'Strength was gigantic, valor high,
And wisdom soar'd beyond the sky,
And beauty had such matchless beam
As lights not now a lover's dream.'

The fall is grievous, from the hoary minstrel of Newark, and his feverish tears on Killiecrankie, to a pathetic swain who can stoop to denounce as objects of his jealousy

'The landaulet and four blood-bays—
The Hessian boot and pantaloon.'

APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

Like Collins, thread the maze of Fairy-land.—P. 377.

Collins, according to Johnson, "by indulging some peculiar habits of thought, was eminently delighted with those flights of imagination which pass the bounds of nature, and to which the mind is reconciled only by a passive acquiescence in popular traditions. He loved fairies, genii, giants, and monsters; he delighted to rove through the meanders of enchantment, to gaze on the magnificence of golden palaces, to repose by the waterfalls of Elysian gardens."

NOTE B.

— the Baron of Triermain!—P. 377.

Triermain was a fief of the barony of Gilscld, in Cumberland; it was possessed by a Saxon family at the time of the Conquest, but "after the death of Gilmore, Lord of Triermaine and Torrosseck, Hubert Vaux gave Triermaine and Torrosseck to his second son, Ranulph Vaux; which Ranulph afterwards became heir to his elder brother Robert, the founder of Lancingest, who died without issue. Ranulph, being Lord of all Gilscld, gave Gilmore’s lands to his younger son, named Roland, and let the barony descend to his eldest son Robert, son of Ranulph. Roland had issue Alexander, and he Ranulph, after whom succeeded Robert, and they were named Rolands successively, that were lords thereof, until the reign of Edward IV. That house gave for arms, Vert, a bend dexter, chequy, or and gules."—Burn’s Antiquities of Westmoreland and Cumberland, vol. ii. p. 482.

This branch of Vaux, with its collateral alliances, is now represented by the family of Bradyl of Conishhead Priory, in the county palatine of Lancaster; for it appears that about the time above mentioned, the house of Triermain was united to its kindred family Vaux of Caterlen, and, by marriage with the heiress of Delanoure and Leybourne, became the representative of those ancient and noble families. The male line failing in John de Vaux, about the year 1655, his daughter and heiress, Mabel, married Christopher Richmond, Esq., of Highhead Castle, in the county of Cumberland, descended from an ancient family of that name, Lords of Corby Castle, in the same county, soon after the Conquest, and which they alienated about the 15th of Edward II., to Andrea de Harele, Earl of Carlisle. Of this family was Sir Thomas de Raleighmont (niles auratus), in the reign of King Edward I., who appears to have greatly distinguished himself at the siege of Kaertaveroc, with William, Baron of Leybourne. In an ancient heraldic poem, now extant, and preserved in the British Museum, describing that siege, his arms are stated to be, Or, 2 bars gemelles gules, and a chief or, the same borne by his descendants at the present day. The Richards removed to their castle of Highhead in the reign of Henry VIII., when the then representative of the family married Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Lowther, by the Lady Dorothy de Clifford, only child by a second marriage of Henry, Lord Clifford, great grandson of Lord John Clifford, by Elizabeth Percy, daughter of Henry (surnamed Hotspur) by Elizabeth Mortimer, which said Elizabeth was daughter of Edward Mortimer, third Earl of Marche, by Philippa, sole daughter and heiress of Lionel, Duke of Clarence.

The third in descent from the above-mentioned John Richmond became the representative of the families of Vaux, of Triermain, Caterlen, and Torrosseck, by his marriage with Mabel de Vaux, the heiress of them. His grandson, Henry Richmond, died without issue, leaving five sisters co-heiresses, four of whom married; but Margaret, who married William Gale, Esq., of Whitehaven, was the only one who had male issue surviving. She had a son, and a daughter married to Henry Curwen of Workington, Esq., who represented the county of Cumberland for many years in Parliament, and by her had a daughter, married to John Christian, Esq. (now Curwen). John, son and heir of William Gale, married Sarah, daughter and heiress of Christopher Wilson of Bardsea Hall, in the county of Lancaster, by Margaret, aunt and co-heiress of Thomas Bradyl, Esq., of Bradyl, and Conishhead Priory, in the same county, and had issue four sons and two daughters—1st, William Wilson, died an infant; 2d, Wilson, who upon the death of his cousin, Thomas Bradyl, without issue, succeeded to his estates, and took the name of Bradyl, in pursuance of his will, by the king’s sign-manual; 3d, William, died young; and, 4th, Henry Richmond, a lieutenant-general of the army, married Sarah, daughter of the Rev. R. Baldwin; Margaret married Richard Greaves Townley, Esq., of Fulborne, in the county of Cambridge, and of Bellfield, in the county of Lancaster; Sarah married George Bigland of Bigland Hall, in the same county. Wilson Bradyl, eldest son of John Gale, and grandson of Margaret Richmond, married Jane, daughter and heiress of Matthias Gale, Esq., of Cagnall Hall, in the county of Cumberland, by Jane, daughter and heiress of the Rev. S. Bennet, D.D.; and, as the eldest surviving male branch of the families above mentioned, he quarters, in addition to his own, their paternal coats in the following order, as appears by the records in the College of Arms:—1st, Argent, a fess azure, between 2 lions’ heads erased, or,—Gale. 2d, Or, 2 bars gemelles gules, and a chief or,—Richmond. 3d, Or, a fess chequy, or and gules between 9 gorges gules.—Vaux of Caterlen. 4th, Gules, a fess chequy, or and gules between 6 gorges or,—Vaux of Torrosseck. 5th, Ar—

1 This poem has been recently edited by Sir Nicolas Harris Nichols, 1853.
gent (not vert, as stated by Burn), a bend chequy, or and gules, for Vaux of Triermain. 6th, Gules, a cross patonce, or, —Delamore. 7th, Gules, 6 lions rampant argent, 3, 2, and 1, —Leybourne. This more detailed geneology of the family of Triermain was obligingly sent to the author by Major Bradley of Conishead Priory.

NOTE C.

_He pass'd red Penrith's Table Round._—P. 379.

A circular entrenchment, about half a mile from Penrith, is thus popularly termed. The circle within the ditch is about one hundred and sixty paces in circumference, with openings, or approaches, directly opposite to each other. As the ditch is on the inner side, it could not be intended for the purpose of defence, and it has reasonably been conjectured that the enclosure was designed for the solemn exercise of feats of chivalry, and the embankment around for the convenience of the spectators.

NOTE D.

_Mayburgh's mound._—P. 379.

Higher up the river Eamont than Arthur's Round Table is a prodigious enclosure of great antiquity, formed by a collection of stones upon the top of a gently sloping hill, called Mayburgh. In the plain which it encloses there stands erect an unhewn stone of twelve feet in height. Two similar masses are said to have been destroyed during the memory of man. The whole appears to be a monument of Druidical times.

NOTE E.

_The Monarch, breathess and amazed,_
_Back on the fatal castle gazed—_
_Not lower nor donjon could he spy,_
_Darkening against the morning sky._—P. 384.

_We now gained a view of the Vale of St. John's, a very narrow dell, hemmed in by mountains, through which a small brook makes many meanderings, washing little enclosures of grass-ground, which stretch up the rising of the hills. In the widest part of the dale you are struck with the appearance of an ancient ruined castle, which seems to stand upon the summit of a little mount, the mountains around forming an amphithetre. This massive bulwark shows a front of various towers, and makes an awful, rude, and Gothic appearance, with its lofty turrets and ragged battlements; we traced the galleries, the bending arches, the buttresses. The greatest antiquity stands characterized in its architecture; the inhabitants near it assert it is an antediluvian structure. _The traveller's curiosity is roused, and he prepares to make a nearer approach, when that curiosity is put upon the rack by his being assured that, if he advances, certain genii who govern the place, by virtue of their supernatural art and necromancy, will strip it of all its beauties, and by enchantment transform the magic walls. The vale seems adapted for the habitation of such beings; its gloomy recesses and retirements look like haunts of evil spirits. There was no deduction in the report; we were soon convinced of its truth; for this piece of antiquity, so venerable and noble in its aspect, as we drew near, changed its figure, and proved no other than a shaken massive pile of rocks, which stand in the midst of this little vale, disunited from the adjoining mountains, and have so much the real form and resemblance of a castle that they bear the name of the Castle Rocks of St. John._—Hutchinson's Excursion to the Lakes, p. 121._

NOTE F.

_The flower of Chivalry,_
_There Galion sat with manly grace,_
_Yet maiden meekness in his face;_ _There Moroll of the iron mace,_
_And love-borne Tristrem there._—P. 385.

The characters named in the stanzas are all of them more or less distinguished in the romances which treat of King Arthur and his Round Table, and their names are strung together according to the established custom of minstrels upon such occasions; for example, in the ballad of the "Marriage of Sir Gawaline":

_"Sir Lanclof, Sir Stephen bolde,_
_They rode with them that daye,_
_And, foremost of the companye,_
_There rode the stewarde Kaye._

_"Soe did Sir Banier, and Sir Bore,_
_And eke Sir Garratte keen,_
_Sir Tristrem too, that gentle knight,_
_To the forest fresh and Greene._

NOTE G.

_Lancelot, that ever more_ _Look'd stol'wise on the Queen._—P. 385.

_Upon this delicate subject hear Richard Robinson, citizen of London, in his Assertion of King Arthur:—"But as it is a thing sufficiently apparent that she (Guenever, wife of King Arthur) was beautiful, so it is a thing doubted whether she was chaste, yea or no. Truly, so far as I can with honestie, I would spare the impayred honour and fame of noble women, But yet the truth of the historie pluckes me by the care, and wilith not onely, but commandeth me to declare what the ancients have deemeed of her. To wrestle or contend with so great authoritie were indee commenced a controversy, and that greate._—Assertion of King Arthure. Imprinted by John Wolfe. London, 1652._

NOTE H.

_There were two who loved their neighbor's wives,_
_And one who loved his own._—P. 386.

_In our forefathers' tyne, when Papistrie, as a standing poole, covered and overflowed all England, fewe books were_ read in our tongue, savying certaine bookes of chevalrie, as they said, for pastime and pleasure; which, as some say, were made in the monasteries, by idle monks or wanton chanons. As one, for example, La Morte d'Arthur; the whole pleasure of which book standeth in two speciall poynts, in open man-slaughter and bold bawdrye; in which booke they be counted the noblest knightes that do kill most men without any quarrell, and commit fowlest adoulteries by suilest shifts; as Sir Launcelot, with the wife of King Arthur, his master; Sir Tristram, with the wife of King Marke, his uncle; Sir Lamierocke, with the wife of King Lote, that was his own aunt. This is good stuffe for wise men to laugh at; or honest men to take pleasure at: yet I know when God's Bible was banished the Court, and La Morte d'Arthur received into the Prince's chamber."—Ascham's Schoolmaster.
The Lord of the Isles:
A POEM, IN SIX CANTOS.

NOTICE TO EDITION 1833.

The composition of the "Lord of the Isles," as we now have it in the author's MS., seems to have been begun at Abbotsford in the autumn of 1814, and it ended at Edinburgh the 16th of December. Some part of canto i. had probably been committed to writing in a rougher form earlier in the year. The original quarto appeared on the 2d of January, 1815.1

It may be mentioned that those parts of this poem which were written at Abbotsford were composed almost all in the presence of Sir Walter Scott's family, and many in that of casual visitors also—the original cottage which he then occupied not affording him any means of retirement. Neither conversation nor music seemed to disturb him.

INTRODUCTION TO EDITION 1830.

I could hardly have chosen a subject more popular in Scotland than any thing connected with the Bruce's history, unless I had attempted that of Wallace. But I am decidedly of opinion that a popular, or what is called a taking, title, though well qualified to ensure the publishers against loss, and clear their shelves of the original impression, is rather apt to be hazardous than otherwise to the reputation of the author. He who attempts a subject of distinguished popularity has not the privilege of awakening the enthusiasm of his audience; on the contrary, it is already awakened, and glows, it may be, more ardently than that of the author himself. In this case, the warmth of the author is inferior to that of the party whom he addresses, who has, therefore, little chance of being, in Bayes's phrase, "elevated and surprised" by what he has thought of with more enthusiasm than the writer.

The sense of this risk, joined to the consciousness of striving against wind and tide, made the task of composing the proposed poem somewhat heavy and hopeless; but, like the prize-fighter in "As You Like it," I was to wrestle for my reputation, and not neglect any advantage. In a most agreeable pleasure-voyage, which I have tried to commemorate in the Introduction to the new edition of the "Pirate," I visited, in social and friendly company,2 the coasts and islands of Scotland, and made myself acquainted with the localities of which I meant to treat. But this voyage, which was in every other effect so delightful, was in its conclusion saddened by one of those strokes of fate which so often mingle themselves with our pleasures. The accomplished and excellent person who had recommended to me the subject for the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," and to whom I proposed to inscribe what I already suspected might be the close of my poetical labors, was unexpectedly removed from the world, which she seemed only to have visited for purposes of kindness and benevolence. It is needless to say how the author's feelings, or the composition of his trilling work, were affected by a circumstance which occasioned so many tears and so much sorrow.3

True it is that the "Lord of the Isles" was concluded, unwillingly and in haste, under the painful feeling of one who has a task which must be finished, rather than with the ardor of one who endeavors to perform that task well. Although the poem cannot be said to have made a favorable impression on the public, the sale of fifteen thousand copies enabled the author to retreat from the field with the honors of war.4

In the meantime, what was necessarily to be considered as a failure was much reconciled to my feelings by the success attending my attempt in another species of composition. "Waverley" had, under strict incognito, taken its flight from the press just before visiting the Giant's Causeway, and immediately returned home.

1 Published by Archibald Constable & Co.
2 Sir Walter Scott's Journal of this voyage, some fragments of which were printed in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1814, is now given entire in his Life by Lockhart, vol. iv. chap. 28-32.
3 Harriet, Duchess of Bucceuch, died 24th August, 1814. Sir Walter Scott received the mournful intelligence while

4 "As Scott passed through Edinburgh on his return from his voyage, the negotiation as to the 'Lord of the Isles,' which had been protracted through several months, was completed—Constable agreeing to give fifteen hundred guineas for one-half of the copyright, while the other moiety was retained by the author."—Life, vol. iv. p. 394.
I set out upon the voyage already mentioned; it had now made its way to popularity, and the success of that work and the volumes which followed was sufficient to have satisfied a greater appetite for applause than I have at any time possessed.\textsuperscript{1}

I may as well add in this place that, being much urged by my intimate friend, now unhappily no more, William Erskine (a Scottish judge, by the title of Lord Kinnedder), I agreed to write the little romantic tale called the "Bridal of Triermain;" but it was on the condition that he should make no serious effort to disown the composition if report should lay it at his door. As he was more than suspected of a taste for poetry, and as I took care, in several places, to mix something which might resemble (as far as was in my power) my friend's feeling and manner, the train easily caught, and two large editions were sold. A third being called for, Lord Kinnedder became unwilling to aid any longer a deception which was going further than he expected or desired, and the real author's name was given. Upon another occasion, I sent up another of these trifles, which, like schoolboys' kites, served to show how the wind of popular taste was setting. The manner was supposed to be that of a rude minstrel or Scald, in opposition to the "Bridal of Triermain," which was designed to belong rather to the Italian school. This new fugitive piece was called "Harold the Dauntless,"\textsuperscript{2} and I am still astonished at my having committed the gross error of selecting the very name which Lord Byron had made so famous. It encountered rather an odd fate. My ingenious friend, Mr. James Hogg, had published, about the same time, a work called the "Poetic Mirror," containing imitations of the principal living poets.\textsuperscript{3} There was in it a very good imitation of my own style, which bore such a resemblance to "Harold the Dauntless" that there was no discovering the original from the imitation; and I believe that many who took the trouble of thinking upon the subject were rather of opinion that my ingenious friend was the true and not the fictitious Simon Pure. Since this period, which was in the year 1817, the author has not been an intruder on the public by any poetical work of importance.

\textit{Abbotsford, April, 1830.}

\textsuperscript{1} The first edition of "Waverley" appeared in July, 1814.

\textsuperscript{2} "Harold the Dauntless" was first published in a small 12mo volume, January, 1817.

\textsuperscript{3} Mr. Hogg's "Poetic Mirror" appeared in October, 1816.
The Lord of the Isles.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION.

The scene of this Poem lies, at first, in the Castle of Artornish, on the coast of Arrylishire; and afterwards in the Islands of Skye and Arran, and upon the coast of Ayrshire. Finally, it is laid near Stirling. The story opens in the spring of the year 1307, when Bruce, who had been driven out of Scotland by the English, and the Barons who adhered to that foreign interest, returned from the Island of Rachrin on the coast of Ireland, again to assert his claims to the Scottish crown. Many of the personages and incidents introduced are of historical celebrity. The authorities used are chiefly those of the venerable Lord Hailes, as well entitled to be called the restorer of Scottish history, as Bruce the restorer of Scottish monarchy; and of Archdeacon Barbour, a correct edition of whose Metrical History of Robert Bruce will, I trust, appear, under the care of my learned friend, the Rev. Dr. Jamieson.

Abbotsford, 10th December, 1814. 2

1 The work alluded to appeared in 1820, under the title of The Bruce and Wallace. 2 vols. 4to.
2 "Here is another genuine lay of the great Minstrel, with all his characteristic faults, beauties, and irregularities. The same glow of coloring, the same energy of narration, the same amplitude of description, are conspicuous here which distinguish all his other productions; with the same still more characteristic disdain of puny graces and small originalities—the true poetical hardihood, in the strength of which he urges on his Pegasus fearlessly through dense and rare, and, aiming gallantly at the great ends of truth and effect, stoops but rarely to study the means by which they are to be attained—avails himself, without scruple, of common sentiments and common images wherever they seem fitted for his purposes—and is original by the very boldness of his borrowing, and impressive by his disregard of epigram and emphasis.

"Though bearing all these marks of the master's hand, the work before us does not come up, in interest, to the 'Lady of the Lake,' or even to 'Marmion.' There is less connected story, and what there is is less skilfully complicated and disentangled, and less diversified with change of scene or variety of character. In the scantiness of the narrative and the broken and discontinuous order of the events, as well as the inartificial insertion of detached descriptions and morsels of ethical reflection, it bears more resemblance to the earliest of the author's greater productions, and suggests a comparison, perhaps not altogether to his advantage, with the structure and execution of the 'Lay of the Last Minstrel'; for though there is probably more force and substance in the latter parts of the present work, it is certainly inferior to that enchanting performance in delicacy and sweetness, and even—is it to be wondered at, after four such publications?—in originality.

The title of 'The Lord of the Isles' has been adopted, we presume, to match that of 'The Lady of the Lake'; but there is no analogy in the stories, nor does the title, on this occasion, correspond very exactly with the contents. It is no unusual misfortune, indeed, for the author of a modern epic to have his hero turn out but a secondary personage, in the gradual unfolding of the story, while some unruly underling runs off with the whole glory and interest of the poem. But here the author, we conceive, must have been aware of the misnomer from the beginning—the true and indeed the ostensible hero being, from the very first, no less a person than King Robert Bruce."—Edinburgh Review, No. xlviii. 1815.

"If it be possible for a poet to bestow upon his writings a superfluous degree of care and correction, it may also be possible, we should suppose, to bestow too little. Whether this be the case in the poem before us is a point upon which Mr. Scott can possibly form a much more competent judgment than ourselves; we can only say that, without possessing greater beauties than its predecessors, it has certain violations of propriety, both in the language and in the composition of the story, of which the former efforts of his muse afforded neither so many nor such striking examples.

"We have not now any quarrel with Mr. Scott on account of the measure which he has chosen; still less on account of his subjects: we believe that they are both of them not only pleasing in themselves, but well adapted to each other, and to the bent of his peculiar genius. On the contrary, it is because we admire his genius, and are partial to the subjects which he delights in, that we so much regret he should leave room for any difference of opinion respecting them, merely from not bestowing upon his publications that common degree of labor and meditation which we cannot help saying it is scarcely decorous to withhold."—Quarterly Review, No. xxvi. July 1815.
The Lord of the Isles.

CANTO FIRST.

Autumn departs—but still his mantle's fold
Rests on the groves of noble Somerville;¹
Beneath a shroud of russet dropp'd with gold
Tweed and his tributaries mingle still;
Hoarser the wind, and deeper sounds the rill,
Yet lingering notes of sylvan music swell,
The deep-toned cushat, and the redbreast shrill;
And yet some tints of summer splendor tell
When the broad sun sinks down on Ettrick's western fell.

Autumn departs—from Gala's² fields no more
Come rural sounds our kindred banks to cheer;
Blent with the stream, and gale that wafts it o'er,
No more the distant reaper's mirth we hear.
The last blithe shont hath died upon our ear,
And harvest-home hath hush'd the changling wain;
On the waste hill no forms of life appear,
Save where, sad laggard of the autumnal train,
Some age-struck wanderer gleans few ears of scatter'd grain.

Deem'st thou these sadder'd scenes have pleasure still?
Lovest thou through autumn's fading realms to stray,
To see the heath-flower wither'd on the hill,
To listen to the wood's expiring lay,
To note the red leaf shivering on the spray,
To mark the last bright tints the mountain stain,
On the waste fields to trace the gleaner's way,
And moralize on mortal joy and pain?—
Oh, if such scenes thou lovest, scorn not the minstrel strain.

No! do not scorn, although its hoarser note
Scarce with the cushat's homely song can vie,
Though faint its beauties as the tints remote
That gleam through mist in autumn's evening sky,
And few as leaves that tremble, srear and dry,
When wild November hath his baleful sound
Nor mock my toil—a lonely gleaner I,³
Through fields time-wasted, on sad inquest bound,
Where happier bards of yore have richer harvest found.

So shalt thou list, and haply not unmoved,
To a wild tale of Albin's warrior day;
In distant lands, by the rough West reproved,
Still live some relics of the ancient lay.
For when on Coolin's hills the lights decay,
With such the Seer of Skye⁴ the eve beguiles;
'Tis known amid the pathless wastes of Reay,
In Harries known, and in Iona's plies,
Where rest from mortal coil the Mighty of the Isles.

I.

"Wake, Maid of Lorn!" the minstrels sung;
Thy rugged halls, Arthornish! rung,⁵
And the dark seas thy towers that lave
Heaved on the beach a softer wave,
As 'mid the tuneful choir to keep
The diapason of the Deep.
Lull'd were the winds on Inninmore,
And green Loch-Alline's woodland shore,
As if wild woods and waves had pleasure
In listing to the lovely measure.
And ne'er to symphony more sweet
Gave mountain echoes⁶ answer meet,
Since, met from mainland and from isle,
Ross, Arran, Ilay, and Argyle,
Each minstrel's tributary lay
Paid homage to the festal day,
Dull and dishonour'd were the bard,
Worthless of guerdon and regard,
Deaf to the hope of minstrel fame,
Or lady's smiles, his noblest aim,
Who on that morn's resistless call
Were silent in Arthornish Hall.

II.

"Wake, Maid of Lorn!"—twas thus they sung,
And yet more proud the descant rung:
"Wake, Maid of Lorn! high right is ours
To charm dull sleep² from Beauty's bowers;
Earth, Ocean, Air, have nought so shy
But owns the power of minstrelsy.
In Lettermore the timid deer
Will pause the harp's wild chime to hear;
Rude Heiskar's seal through surges dark
Will long pursue the minstrel's bark;
To list his notes, the eagle proud
Will poise him on Ben-Cailliach's cloud;

¹ John, fifteenth Lord Somerville, illustrous for his patriotic devotion to the science of agriculture, resided frequently in his beautiful villa called the Pavilion, situated on the Tweed over against Melrose, and was an intimate friend and almost daily companion of the poet, from whose windows at Abbotsford his lordship's plantations formed a prominent object. Lord S. died in 1819.
² The river Gala, famous in song, flows into the Tweed a few hundred yards below Abbotsford; but probably the word

Gala here stands for the poet's neighbor and kinsman, and much attached friend, John Scott, Esq., of Gala.
³ MS.: ——— "an humble gleaner I."
⁴ MS.: ——— "the aged of Skye."
⁵ See Appendix, Note A.
⁷ MS.: ——— "for right is ours To summon sleep," &c.
⁸ See Appendix, Note B.
Then let not Maiden's ear disdain
The summons of the minstrel train,
But, while our harps wild music make,
Edith of Lorn, awake, awake!

III.
"Oh wake, while Dawn, with dewy shine,
Wakes Nature's charms to vie with thine!
She bids the mottled thrush rejoice
To mate thy melody of voice;
The dew that on the violet lies
Mocks the dark lustre of thine eyes;
But, Edith, wake, and all we see
Of sweet and fair shall yield to thee!"—
"She comes not yet," gray Ferrand cried;
"Brethren, let softer spell be tried,—
Those notes prolong'd, that soothing theme,
Which best may mix with Beauty's dream,
And whisper, with their silvery tone,
The hope she loves, yet fears to own."
He spoke, and on the harp-strings died
The strains of flattery and of pride;
More soft, more low, more tender fell
The lay of love he bade them tell.

IV.
"Wake, Maid of Lorn! the moments fly
Which yet that maiden name allow;
Wake, Maiden, wake! the hour is nigh
When love shall claim a plighted vow.
By Fear, thy bosom's fluttering guest,
By Hope, that soon shall fears remove,
We bid thee break the bonds of rest,
And wake thee at the call of Love!"

"Wake, Edith, wake! in yonder bay
Lies many a galley gayly mann'd;
We hear the merry pibrochs play,
We see the streamers' silken band.
What Chieftain's praise these pibrochs swell,
What crest is on these banners wove,
The harp, the minstrel, dare not tell—
The riddle must be read by Love."

V.
Retired her maiden train among,
Edith of Lorn received the song;
But tame the minstrel's pride had been
That had her cold demeanor seen;
For not upon her cheek awoke
The glow of pride when Flattery spoke,
Nor could their tenderest numbers bring
One sigh responsive to the string.
As vainly had her maidens vied
In skill to deck the princely bride.

Her locks, in dark-brown length array'd,
Cathleen of Uline, 'twas thine to braid;
Young Eva with meet reverence drew
On the light foot the silken shoe,
While on the ankle's slender round
Those strings of pearl fair Bertha wound,
That, bleach'd Lochryan's depths within,
Seem'd dusky still on Edith's skin.
But Einion, of experience old,
Had weightiest task—the mantle's fold
In many an artful plait she tied,
To show the form it seem'd to hide,
Till on the floor descending roll'd?
Its waves of crimson blent with gold.

VI.
Oh, lives there now so cold a maid,
Who thus in beauty's pomp array'd,
In beauty's proudest pitch of power,
And conquest won—the bridal hour—
With every charm that wins the heart,
By Nature given, enhanced by Art,
Could yet the fair reflection view,
In the bright mirror pictured true,
And not one dimple on her cheek
A tell-tale consciousness bespeak?—
Lives still such maid?—Fair damsels, say,
For further vouches not my lay,
Save that such lived in Britain's isle,
When Lorn's bright Edith scorn'd to smile.

VII.
But Morag, to whose fostering care
Proud Lorn had given his daughter fair—
Morag, who saw a mother's aid
By all a daughter's love repaid
(Such was that bond—most kind of all—Inviolate in Highland hall)—
Gray Morag sat a space apart,
In Edith's eyes to read her heart.
In vain the attendants' fond appeal
To Morag's skill, to Morag's zeal;
She mark'd her child receive their care,
Cold as the image sculptured fair
(Form of some sainted patroness)
Which cloister'd maids combine to dress;
She mark'd—and knew her nursling's heart
In the vain pomp took little part.
Wistful a while she gazed—then press'd
The maiden to her anxious breast
In finish'd loveliness—and led
To where a turret's airy head,
Slender and steep, and battled round,
O'erlook'd, dark Mull! thy mighty Sound,4

1 MS.: "Retired amid her menial train,
Edith of Lorn received the strain."
2 MS.: "The train upon the pavement
Then to the floor descending I slov'd."
3 MS.: "But Morag, who the maid had press'd,
An infant, to her fostering breast,
And seen a mother's early aid," &c.
4 See Appendix, Note C.
Where thwarting tides, with mingled roar,
Part thy swarth hills from Morven's shore.

VIII.
"Daughter," she said, "these seas behold,
Round twice a hundred islands roll'd,
From Hirt, that hears their northern roar,
To the green Lay's fertile shore;
Or mainland turn, where many a tower
Owns thy bold brother's feudal power;
Each on its own dark cape reclined,
And listening to its own wild wind,
From where Mingarry, sternly placed,
O'erawes the woodland and the waste;
To where Duustaffhage hears the raging
Of Connal with his rocks engaging.
Think'st thou, amid this ample round,
A single brow but thine has frown'd,
To sadden this auspicious morn,
That bids the daughter of high Lorn
Impledge her spousal faith to wed
The heir of mighty Somerled?
Ronald, from many a hero sprung,
The fair, the valiant, and the young,
LORD OF THE ISLES, whose lofty name
A thousand bards have given to fame,
The mate of monarchs, and allied
On equal terms with England's pride.—
From chieftain's tower to bondsman's cot,
Who hears the tale and triumphs not?
The damsels dons her best attire,
The shepherd lights his beltane fire;
Joy, joy! each warden's horn hath sung,
Joy, joy! each matin bell hath rung;
The holy priest says grateful mass,
Loud shouts each hardy galla-glass,
No mountain den holds outcast boor
Of heart so dull, of soul so poor,
But he hath flung his task aside,
And claim'd this morn for holy-tide;
Yet, empress of this joyful day,
Edith is sad while all are gay."

IX.
Proud Edith's soul came to her eye,
Resentment check'd the struggling sigh,
Her hurrying hand indignant dried
The burning tears of injured pride:—
"Morag, forbear! or lend thy praise
To swell yon hireling harpers' lays;
Make to yon maids thy boast of power,
That they may waste a wondering hour,
Telling of banners proudly borne,
Of pealing bell and bugle-horn,
Or,theme more dear, of robes of price,
Crownlets and gauds of rare device.
But thou, experienced as thou art,
Think'st thou with these to cheat the heart,
That, bound in strong affection's chain,
Looks for return and looks in vain?
No! sum thine Edith's wretched lot
In these brief words—He loves her not!

X.
"Debate it not—too long I strove
To call his cold observance love,
All blinded by the league that styled
Edith of Lorn,—while, yet a child,
She tripp'd the heath by Morag's side,—
The brave Lord Ronald's destined bride.
Ere yet I saw him, while afar
His broadsword blaz'd in Scotland's war,
Train'd to believe our fates the same,
My bosom throbb'd when Ronald's name
Came gracing Fame's heroic tale,
Like perfume on the summer gale.
What pilgrim sought our halls, nor told
Of Ronald's deeds in battle bold?
Who touch'd the harp to heroes' praise,
But his achievements swell'd the lays?
Even Morag—not a tale of fame
Was hers but closed with Ronald's name.
He came! and all that had been told
Of his high worth seem'd poor and cold,
Tame, lifeless, void of energy,
Unjust to Ronald and to me!

XI.
"Since then, what thought had Edith's heart
And gave not plighted love its part!—
And what requital? cold delay—
Excuse that shunn'd the spousal day.—
It dawns, and Ronald is not here!—
Hunts he Bentalla's nimble deer,
Or loiters he in secret dell
To bid some lighter love farewell.
And swear that though he may not scorn
A daughter of the House of Lorn,
Yet, when these formal rites are o'er,
Again they meet, to part no more?"

XII.
—"Hush, daughter, hush! thy doubts remove,
More nobly think of Ronald's love.

1 See Appendix, Note D.
2 MS.: ———— "father's feudal power."
3 See Appendix, Note E.
4 See Appendix, Note F.
5 See Appendix, Note G.
6 MS.: ——— "the news."

7 MS.: "When, from that hour, had Edith's heart
A thought, and Ronald lack'd his part!
And what her gudron?"

8 MS.: "And on its dawn the bridegroom lags;—
Hunts he Bentalla's nimble stags?"

9 See Appendix, Note H.
Look, where beneath the Castle gray
His fleet unmoor from Aros Bay!
Seest not each galley's topmast bend,
As on the yards the sails ascend?
Hiding the dark-blue land, they rise
Like the white clouds on April skies;
The shouting vassals man the oars,
Behind them sink Mull's mountain shores;
Onward their merry course they keep,
Through whistling breeze and foaming deep.
And mark the headmost, seaward cast,
Stoop to the freshening gale her mast,
As if she veild her banner'd pride,
To greet afar her prince's bride!
Thy Ronald comes, and while in speed
His galley mates the flying steed,
He chides her sloth!—Fair Edith sigh'd,
Blush'd, sadly smiled, and thus replied:—

XIII.
"Sweet thought, but vain!—No, Morag! mark,
Type of his course, you lonely bark,
That oft hath shifted helm and sail,
To win its way against the gale.
Since peep of morn, my vacant eyes
Have view'd by fits the course she tries;¹
Now, though the darkening cloud comes on,
And dawn's fair promises be gone,
And though the weary crew may see
Our sheltering haven on their lee,
Still closer to the rising wind
They strive her shivering sail to bind,
Still nearer to the shelves' dread verge²
At every tack her course they urge,
As if they fear'd Artrimish more
Than adverse winds and breakers' roar,"

XIV.
Sooth spoke the Maid.—Amid the tide
The skiff she mark'd lay tossing sore,
And shifted off her stooping side,
In weary tack from shore to shore.
Yet on her destined course no more
She gain'd, of forward way,
Than what a minstrel may compare
To the poor meed which peasants share,
Who toil the livelong day;
And such the risk her pilot braves,
That oft, before she wore,
Her boltsprit kiss'd the broken waves,
Where in white foam the ocean raves
Upon the shelving shore.
Yet, to their destined purpose true,

Undaunted toil'd her hardy crew,
Nor look'd where shelter lay,
Nor for Artornish Castle drew,
Nor steer'd for Aros Bay.

XV.
Thus while they strove with wind and seas,
Borne onward by the willing breeze,
Lord Ronald's fleet swept by,
Streamer'd with silk, and trick'd with gold,
Mann'd with the noble and the bold
Of island chivalry.
Around their prows the ocean roars,
And chafes beneath their thousand oars,
Yet bears them on their way:
So chafes the war-horse in his might,
That fieldward bears some valiant knight,³
Champs till both bit and boss are white,
But, foaming, must obey.
On each gay deck they might behold
Lances of steel and crests of gold,
And hauberks with their burnish'd fold,
That shimmer'd fair and free;
And each proud galley, as she pass'd,
To the wild cadence of the blast
Gave wilder minstrelsy.
Full many a shrill triumphant note
Saline and Scalcastle bade float
Their misty shores around;
And Morven's echoes answer'd well,
And Durnt heard the distant swell
Come down the darksome Sound.

XVI.
So bore they on with mirth and pride,
And if that laboring bark they spied,
'Twas with such idle eye
As nobles cast on lowly boor,
When, toiling in his task obscure,
They pass him careless by;⁴
Let them sweep on with heedless eyes!
But, had they known what mighty prize
In that frail vessel lay,
The famish'd wolf, that prowls the wold,
Had scatheless pass'd the unguarded fold,
Ere, drifting by these galleys bold,
Unchallenged were her way;⁵
And thou, Lord Ronald, sweep thou on,
With mirth, and pride, and minstrel tone!
But hadst thou known who sail'd so nigh,
Far other glance were in thine eye!
Far other flush were on thy brow,
That, shaded by the bonnet, now

¹ MS.: "Since dawn of morn, with vacant eyes
Young Eva view'd the course she tries."
² MS.: "the breakers' verge."
³ MS.: "So fumes," &c.
⁴ MS.: "That bears to fight some valiant knight."
⁵ MS.: "As the gay nobles give the boor,
When, toiling in his task obscure,
Their greatness passes by."
⁶ MS.: "She held unchallenged way."
Assumes but ill the blithesome cheer
Of bridegroom when the bride is near!

XVII.
Yes, sweep they on!—We will not leave,
For them that triumph, those who grieve.
With that armada gay
Be laughter loud and jocund shout,
And bards to cheer the wassail rout
With tale, romance, and lay;
And of wild mirth each clamorous art,
Which, if it cannot cheer the heart,
May stupefy and stun its smart,
For one loud busy day.
Yes, sweep they on!—But with that skiff
Abides the minstrel tale,
Where there was dread of surge and cliff,
Labor that strain'd each sinew stiff,
And one sad Maiden's wail.

XVIII.
All day with fruitless strife they toil'd;
With eve the ebbing currents boil'd
More fierce from strait and lake;
And midway through the channel met
Conflicting tides that foam and fret,
And high their mingled billows jet,
As spears that, in the battle set,
Spring upward as they break.
Then, too, the lights of eve were past,
And louder sung the western blast
On rocks of Inninmore;
Rent was the sail, and strain'd the mast,
And many a leak was gaping fast,
And the pale steersman stood aghast,
And gave the conflict o'er.

XIX.
'Twas then that One, whose lofty look
Nor labor dull'd nor terror shook,
Thus to the Leader spoke:—
"Brother, how hopest thou to abide
The fury of this wilder'd tide,
Or how avoid the rock's rude side,
Until the day has broke?
Didst thou not mark the vessel reel,
With quivering planks and groaning keel,
At the last billow's shock?
Yet how of better counsel tell,
Though here thou seest poor Isabel
Half dead with want and fear;
For look on sea, or look on land,
Or yon dark sky—on every hand
Despair and death are near.

For her alone I grieve,—on me
Danger sits light, by land and sea;
I follow where thou wilt:
Either to bide the tempest's lower,
Or wend to yon unfriendly tower,
Or rush amid their naval power,
With war-cry wake their wassail-hour,
And die with hand on hilt."

XX.
That elder Leader's calm reply
In steady voice was given:
"In man's most dark extremity
Oft succor dawns from Heaven,
Edward, trim thou the shatter'd sail,
The helm be mine, and down the gale
Let our free course be driven;
So shall we 'scape the western bay,
The hostile fleet, the unequal fray;
So safely hold our vessel's way
Beneath the Castle wall;
For if a hope of safety rest,
'Tis on the sacred name of guest,
Who seeks for shelter, storm-distress'd,
Within a chieftain's hall.
If not—it best besemi our worth,
Our name, our right, our lofty birth,
By noble hands to fall."

XXI.
The helm, to his strong arm consign'd,
Gave the reef'd sail to meet the wind,
And on her alter'd way,
Fierce bounding, forward sprung the ship,
Like greyhound starting from the slip
To seize his flying prey.
Awaked before the rushing prow,
The mimic fires of ocean glow;
Those lightnings of the wave;
Wild sparkles crest the broken tides,
And, flashing round, the vessel's sides
With elvish lustre lave;
While far behind their livid light
To the dark billows of the night
A gloomy splendor gave.
It seems as if old Ocean shaks
From his dark brow the lucid flakes
In envious pageantry,
To match the meteor-light that streaks
Grim Heela's midnight sky.

XXII.
Nor lack'd they steadier light to keep
Their course upon the darken'd deep;—
Artornish, on her frowning steep

1 MS.: "With mirth, song, tale, and lay."
2 MS.: "Then, too, the clouds were sinking fast."
3 MS.: "the hostile power."
4 See Appendix, Note I.
5 MS.: "And, burning round the vessel's sides,
A livid lustre gave."
6 MS.: "livel."
THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

'Twixt cloud and ocean hung,
Glanced with a thousand lights of glee,
And landward far, and far to sea,
Her festal radiance flung;¹
By that blithe beacon-light they steer'd,
Whose lustre mingled well
With the pale beam that now appear'd,
As the cold moon her head uprear'd
Above the eastern fell.

XXIII.
Thus guided, on their course they bore,
Until they near'd the mainland shore,
When frequent on the hollow blast
Wild shouts of merriment were cast,
And wind and wave and sea-birds' cry
With wassail sounds in concert vie;²
Like funeral shrieks with revelry,
Or like the battle-shout
By peasants heard from cliffs on high,
When Triumph, Rage, and Agony,
Madden the fight and rout.
Now nearer yet, through mist and storm
Dimly arose the Castle's form,
And deep'n'd shadow made,
Far lengthen'd on the main below,
Where, dancing in reflected glow,
A hundred torches play'd,
Spangling the wave with lights as vain
As pleasures in this vale of pain,
That dazzle as they fade.⁴

XXIV.
Beneath the Castle's sheltering lee
They staid their course in quiet sea.
Hewn in the rock, a passage there
Sought the dark fortress by a stair,
So strait, so high, so steep,
With peasant's stuff 'one valiant hand
Might well the dizzy pass have mann'd
'Gain hundreds arm'd with spear and brand,
And plunged them in the deep.⁵
His bugle then the helmsman wound;
Loud answer'd every echo round,
From turret, rock, and bay;
The postern's hinges crash and groan,
And soon the warden's cresset shone
On those rude steps of slippery stone,

To light the upward way.
"Thrice welcome, holy Sire!" he said;
"Full long the spousal train have staid,
And, vex'd at thy delay,
Fare' st, amidst those wildering seas,
The darksome night and freshening breeze
Had driven thy bark astray."—

XXV.
"Warder," the younger stranger⁶ said,
"Thine erring guess some mirth had made
In mirthful hour; but nights like these,
When the rough winds wake western seas,
Brook not of glee. We crave some aid
And needful shelter for this maid
Until the break of day;
For, to ourselves, the deck's rude plank
Is easy as the mossy bank
That's breath'd upon by May,
And for our storm-toss'd skiff we seek
Short shelter in this leeward creek,
Prompt when the dawn the east shall streak
Again to bear away."—
Answer'd the warden, "In what name
Assert ye hospitable claim?
Whence come, or whither bound?
Hath Erin seen your parting sails?
Or come ye on Norweyan gales?
And seek ye England's fertile vales,
Or Scotland's mountain ground?"—

XXVI.
"Warriors—for other title none
For some brief space we list to own,
Bound by a vow—warriors are we;
In strife by land, and storm by sea,
We have been known to fame;
And these brief words have import dear,
When sounded in a noble ear,
To harbor safe, and friendly cheer,
That gives us rightful claim.
Grant us the trivial boon we seek,
And we in other realms will speak
Fair of your courtesy
Deny—and be your niggard Hold
Scorn'd by the noble and the bold,
Shunn'd by the pilgrim on the wold,
And wanderer on the lea!"—

¹ "The description of the vessel's approach to the castle through the tempestuous and sparkling waters, and the contrast of the gloomy aspect of the billows with the glittering splendor of Artoomish.
² "Twixt cloud and ocean hung;" sending her radiance abroad through the terror of the night, and mingling at intervals the shouts of her revelry with the wilder cadence of the blast, is one of the happiest instances of Mr. Scott's felicity in awful and magnificent scenery."—Critical Review.
³ MS.: "The wind, the wave, the sea-birds' cry,
In melancholy concert vie."
⁴ MS.: ——— "darksome;"
⁵ "Mr. Scott, we observed in the newspapers, was engaged during last summer in a maritime expedition; and, accordingly, the most striking novelty in the present poem is the extent and variety of the sea pieces with which it abounds. One of the first we meet with is the picture of the distresses of the king's little bark, and her darkling run to the shelter of Artoomish Castle."—Edinburgh Review, 1815.
⁶ See Appendix, Note K.
⁷ MS.: ——— "that younger leader."
XXVII.

"Bold stranger, no—'gainst claim like thine,
No bolt revolves by hand of mine;
Though urged in tone that more express'd
A monarch than a suppliant guest.
Be what ye will, Artornish Hall
On this glad eve is free to all,
Though ye had drawn a hostile sword
'Gainst our ally, great England's Lord,
Or mail upon your shoulders borne,
To battle with the Lord of Lorn,
Or, outlaw'd, dwelt by greenwood tree
With the fierce Knight of Ellerslie;²
Or aided even the murderous strife,
When Comyn fell beneath the knife
Of that fell homicide the Bruce,³
This night had been a term of truce.—
Ho, vassals! give these guests your care,
And show the narrow posteru stair."

XXVIII.

To land these two bold brethren leapt
(The weary crew their vessel kept),
And, lighted by the torches' glare,
That seaward flung their smoky glare,
The younger knight that maiden bare
Half lifeless up the rock;
On his strong shoulder lean'd her head,
And down her long dark tresses shed,
As the wild vine in tendrils spread
Droops from the mountain oak.
Him follow'd close that elder Lord,
And in his hand a sheathed sword,
Such as few arms could wield;
But when he bounted him to such task,
Well could it cleave the strongest casque,
And rend the surest shield.⁴

XXIX.

The raised portcullis' arch they pass,
The wicket with its bars of brass,
The entrance long and low,⁵
Flank'd at each turn by loopholes strait,
Where bowmen might in ambush wait
(If force or fraud should burst the gate)
To gall an entering foe.

But every jealous post of ward
Was now defenceless and unbarr'd,
And all the passage free
To one low-brow'd and vaulted room,
Where squire and yeoman, page and groom,
Plied their loud revelry.

XXX.

And "Rest ye here," the warden bade,
"Till to our Lord your suit is said.—
And, comrades, gaze not on the maid,
And on these men who ask our aid,
As if ye ne'er had seen
A damsel tired of midnight bark,
Or wanders of a moulding stark,⁶
And bearing martial mien,"
But not for Eachin's reproof
Would page or vassal stand aloof,
But crowded on to stare,
As men of courtesy untaught,
Till fiery Edward roughly caught
From one, the foremost there,⁷
His chequer'd plaid, and in its shroud,
To hide her from the vulgar crowd,
Involved his sister fair.
His brother, as the clansman bent
His sullen brow in discontent,
Made brief and stern excuse:—
"Vassal, were thine the cloak of pall
That decks thy Lord in bridal hall,
'Twere honor'd by her use."

XXXI.

Proud was his tone, but calm: his eye
Had that compelling dignity,
His mien that bearing haught and high,
Which common spirits fear;⁸
Needed nor word nor signal more,
Nod, wink, and laughter, all were o'er;
Upon each other back they bore,
And gazed like startled deer.
But now appear'd the Seneschal,
Commission'd by his Lord to call
The strangers to the Baron's hall,
Where feasted fair and free

¹ MS. ———"'gainst claim like yours,
No bolt e'er closed our castle doors."

² Sir William Wallace.

³ See Appendix, Note S.

⁴ MS. ——"Well could it cleave the gilded casque,
And rend the trustiest shield;"

⁵ MS. ——"The entrance vaulted low."

⁶ MS. ——"Or warlike men of moulding stark."

⁷ MS. ——"Till that hot Edward fiercely caught
From one, the boldest there."

⁸ "Still sways their souls with that commanding art
That dazzles, leads, yet chills the vulgar heart.
What is that spell, that thus his lawless train
Confess and envy, yet oppose in vain?
What should it be, that thus their faith can bind?
The power of Thought—the magic of the Mind!
Link'd with success, assumed and kept with skill,
That moulds another's weakness to its will;
Wields with their hands, but, still to these unknown,
Makes even their mightiest deeds appear his own.
Such hath it been—shall be—beneath the sun,
The many still must labor for the one!
'Tis Nature's doom."
That Island Prince in nuptial tide,
With Edith there his lovely bride,
And her bold brother by her side,
And many a chief, the flower and pride
Of Western land and sea.¹

Here pause we, gentle, for a space;
And, if our tale hath won your grace,
Grant us brief patience, and again
We will renew the minstrel strain.²

The Lord of the Isles.

CANTO SECOND.

I.
Fill the bright goblet, spread the festive board!
Summon the gay, the noble, and the fair!
Through the loud hall, in joyous concert pour'd,
Let mirth and music sound the dirge of Care!
But ask them not if Happiness be there,
If the loud laugh disguise convulsive three,
Or if the brow the heart's true livery wear;
Lift not the festal mask:—enough to know,
No scene of mortal life but teems with mortal woe.³

II.
With beakers' clang, with harpers' lay,
With all that olden time deems gay,
The Island Chieftain feasted high;
But there was in his troubled eye
A gloomy fire, and on his brow,
Now sudden flush'd, and faded now,
Emotions such as draw their birth
From deeper source than festal mirth.
By fits he paused, and harper's strain
And jester's tale went round in vain,
Or fell but on his idle ear
Like distant sounds which dreamers hear.
Then would he rouse him, and employ
Each art to aid the clamorous joy,⁴
And call for pledge and lay,
And, for brief space, of all the crowd,
As he was loudest of the lond,
Seem gayest of the gay.⁵

III.
Yet nought amiss the bridal throng
Mark'd in brief mirth, or murmuring long;
The vacant brow, the unlistening ear,
They gave to thoughts of raptures near,
And his fierce starts of sudden glee
Seem'd bursts of bridegroom's ecstasy.
Nor thus alone misjudged the crowd,
Since lofty Lorn, suspicious, proud,⁶
And jealous of his honor'd line,
And that keen knight, De Argentine⁷
(From England sent on errand high,
The western league more firm to tie),
Both deem'd in Ronald's mood to find
A lover's transport-troubled mind,
But one sad heart, one tearful eye,
Pierced deeper through the mystery,
And watch'd, with agony and fear,
Her wayward bridegroom's varied cheer.

IV.
She watch'd—yet fear'd to meet his glance,
And he shunn'd hers;—till when by chance
They met, the point of foeman's lance
Had given a milder pang!
Beneath the intolerable smart
He writhed—then sternly man'd his heart
To play his hard but destined part,
And from the table sprang.
"Fill me the mighty cup," he said,
"Erst own'd by royal Somerled."³
Fill it, till on the studded brim
In burning gold the bubbles swim,
And every gem of varied shine
Glow doubly bright in rosy wine!
To you, brave Lord, and brother mine,
Of Lorn, this pledge I drink—
The union of Our House with thine,
By this fair bridal-link!"—

V.
"Let it pass round!" quoth He of Lorn,
"And in good time—that winded horn
Must of the Abbot tell;
The laggard monk is come at last."
Lord Ronald heard the bugle-blast,
And on the floor at random cast,
The untasted goblet fell.
But when the warder in his ear
Tells other news, his blither cheer
Returns like sun of May,
When through a thunder-cloud it beams!—
Lord of two hundred isles, he seems
As glad of brief delay

¹ MS.: "Of mountain chivalry."
² "The first canto is full of business and description, and the scenes are such as Mr. Scott's muse generally excels in. The scene between Edith and her nurse is spirited, and contains many very pleasing lines. The description of Lord Ronald's fleet, and of the bark endeavoring to make her way against the wind, more particularly of the last, is executed with extraordinary beauty and fidelity."—Quarterly Review.
³ "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness."—Proverbs xiv. 13.
⁴ MS.: —— "and give birth
To jest, to wassail, and to mirth."
⁵ MS.: "Would seem the loudest of the loud,
And gayest of the gay."
⁶ MS.: "Since Lorn, the proudest of the proud."
⁷ MS.: "And since the keen De Argentine."
See Appendix, Note L.
⁸ See Appendix, Note M.
As some poor criminal might feel
When from the gibbet or the wheel
Respited for a day.

VI.
"Brother of Lorn," with hurried voice
He said, "and you, fair lords, rejoice!
Here, to augment our glee,
Comes wandering knights from travel far,
Well proved, they say, in strife of war,
And tempest on the sea.—
Ho! give them at your board such place
As best their presences may grace,¹
And bid them welcome free!" ²
With solemn step, and silver wand,
The Seneschal the presence scannd³
Of these strange guests;⁴ and well he knew
How to assign their rank its due;⁵
For though the costly furs
That erst had deck'd their caps were torn,
And their gay robes were over-worn,
And soild their gilded spurs,
Yet such a high commanding grace
Was in their mien and in their face,
As suited best the princely dais,⁶
And royal canopy;
And there he marshald them their place,
First of that company.

VII.
Then lords and ladies spake aside,
And angry looks the error chide;⁷
That gave to guests unnamed, unknown,
A place so near their prince's throne;
But Owen Erraught said,
"For forty years a seneschal,
To marshal guests in bower and hall
Has been my honor'd trade.
Worship and birth to me are known
By look, by bearing, and by tone,
Not by furr'd robe or broider'd zone;
And 'gainst an oaken bough
I'll gage my silver wand of state,
That these three strangers oft have sate
In higher place than now."—⁶

VIII.
"I too," the aged Ferrand said,
"Am qualified by minstrel trade"⁷
Of rank and place to tell;—
Mark'd ye the younger stranger's eye,
My mates, how quick, how keen, how high,
How fierce its flashes fell,
Glancing among the noble rout⁸
As if to seek the noblest out,
Because the owner might not brook
On any save his peer's to look?
And yet it moves me more,
That steady, calm, majestic brow,
With which the elder chief even now
Scannd the gay presence o'er,
Like being of superior kind,
In whose high-toned impartial mind
Degrees of mortal rank and state
Seen objects of indifferent weight.
The lady too—though closely tied
The mantle veil both face and eye,
Her motions' grace it could not hide,
Nor could her form's fair symmetry."

IX.
Suspicious doubt and lordly scorn
Lower'd on the haughty front of Lorn.
From underneath his brows of pride,
The stranger guests he sternly eyed,
And whisper'd closely what the ear
Of Argentine alone might hear;
Then question'd, high and brief,
If, in their voyage, aught they knew
Of the rebellions Scottish crew,
Who to Rath-Erin's shelter drew,
With Carrick's outlaw'd chief,⁹
And if, their winter's exile o'er,
They harbord still by Ulster's shore,
Or launch'd their galleys on the main,
To vexo their native land again.

X.
That younger stranger, fierce and high,
At once confronts the Chieftain's eye¹¹
With look of equal scorn:—
"Of rebels have we nought to show;
But if of royal Bruce thou'dst know,
I warn thee he has sworn,¹²
Ere threc three days shall come and go,
His banner Scottish winds shall blow,
Despite each mean or mighty foe,
From England's every hill and bow,
To Allaster of Lorn."
Kindled the mountain Chieftain's ire,
But Ronald quench'd the rising fire:—

¹ MS.: "As may their presence fittest grace."
² MS.: "With solemn pace, and silver rod,
The Seneschal the entrance show'd to these strange guests."
³ See Appendix, Note X.
⁴ Datas, the great hall-table, elevated a step or two above the rest of the room.
⁵ MS.: "Aside then lords and ladies spake,
And ushers censured the mistake."
⁶ "The first entry of the illustrious strangers into the castle of the Celtic chief is in the accustomed and peculiar style of the poet of chivalry."—Jeffrey.
⁷ MS.: "I too," old Ferrand said, and laugh'd
"Am qualified by minstrel craft."
⁸ MS.: "The festal rout."
⁹ MS.: "Nor hide; &c."
¹⁰ See Appendix, Note O.
¹¹ MS.: "That younger stranger, nought out-dared,
Was prompt the haughty Chief to beard."
¹² MS.: "Men say that he has sworn."
"Brother, it better suits the time
To chase the night with Ferrand's rhyme,
Than wake, 'midst mirth and wine, the jars
That flow from these unhappy wars."—1

"Content," said Lorn; and spoke apart
With Ferrand, master of his art,
Then whisper'd Argentine,—
"The lay I named will carry smart
To these bold strangers' haughty heart,
If right this guess of mine." He ceased, and it was silence all,
Until the minstrel waked the hall.2

XI.
The Brooch of Lorn.3

Whence the brooch of burning gold,
That clasps the Chieftain's mantle-fold,
Wrought and chased with rare device,
Studded fair with gems of price,4
On the varied tartans beaming,
As, through night's pale rainbow gleaming,
Fainter now, now seen afar,
Fitful shines the northern star?

Gem! ne'er wrought on Highland mountain,
Did the fairy of the fountain,
Or the mermaid of the wave;
Frame thee in some coral cave?
Did, in Iceland's darksome mine,
Dwarf's swart hands thy metal twine?
Or, mortals-moulded, comest thou here
From England's love, or France's fear?

XII.
Song continued.

No!—thy splendors nothing tell
Foreign art or faery spell.
Moulded thou for monarch's use,
By the overweening Bruce,
When the royal robe he tied
O'er a heart of wrath and pride;
Thence in triumph wert thou torn
By the victor hand of Lorn!

When the gem was won and lost,
Widely was the war-cry toss'd!
Rung aloud Bendourish fell,
Answer'd Douchart's sounding dell,

Fled the deer from wild Teyndrum,
When the homicide, o'ercome,
Hardly 'scape'd, with sheathe and scorn,
Left the pledge with conquering Lorn!

XIII.
Song continued.

Vain was then the Douglas brand,
Vain the Campbell's vaunted hand,5
Vain Kirkpatrick's bloody dirk,
Making sure of murder's work;6
Bare-drown fied fast away,
Fled the fiery De la Haye;7
When this brooch, triumphant borne,
Beam'd upon the breast of Lorn.

Farthest fied its former Lord,
Left his men to brand and cord;8
Bloody brand of Highland steel,
England's gibbet, axe, and wheel.
Let him fly from coast to coast,
Dogg'd by Comyn's vengeful ghost,
While his spoils, in triumph worn,
Long shall grace victorious Lorn!

XIV.

As glares the tiger on his foes,
Hem'm'd in by hunters, spears, and bows,
And, ere he bounds upon the ring,
Selects the object of his spring,—
Now on the bard, now on his Lord,
So Edward glared and grasp'd his sword;
But stern his brother spoke,—"Be still,
What! art thou yet so wild of will,
After high deeds and sufferings long,
To chafe thee for a menial's song?—
Well hast thou framed, Old Man, thy strains,
To praise the hand that pays thy pains?9
Yet something might thy song have told
Of Lorn's three vassals, true and bold,
Who rent their Lord from Bruce's hold,
As underneath his knee he lay,
And died to save him in the fray.
I've heard the Bruce's cloak and clasp
Was e'ench'd within their dying grasp,
What time a hundred foemen more
Rush'd in, and back the victor bore,10
Long after Lorn had left the strife,11
Full glad to 'scape with limb and life.—

1 "The description of the bridal feast, in the second canto, has several animated lines; but the real power and poetry of the author do not appear to us to be called out until the occasion of the Highland quarrel which follows the feast."—Quarterly Review, March, 1815.
2 "In a very different style of excellence (from that of the first three stanzas) is the triumphant and insulting song of the bard of Lorn, commemorating the pretended victory of his chief over Robert Bruce, in one of their encounters. Bruce, in truth, had been set on by some of that clan, and had extricated himself from a fearful overmatch by stupen-
3 The MS.: "Left his followers to the sword."
4 See Appendix, Note P.
5 See Appendix, Note R.
6 See Appendix, Note T.
7 The MS. has not this couplet.
8 "When breathless Lorn had left the strife."
Enough of this—And, Minstrel, hold,
As minstrel-hire, this chain of gold,
For future lays a fair excuse,
To speak more nobly of the Bruce."—

XV.

"Now, by Columba's shrine, I swear,
And every saint's that's buried there,
'Tis he himself!" Lorn sternly cries,
"And for my kinsman's death he dies."
As loudly Ronald calls,—"Forbear!
Not in my sight while brand I wear,
O'ermatch'd by odds, shall warrior fall,
Or blood of stranger stain my hail!
This ancient fortress of my race
Shall be misfortune's resting-place,
Shelter and shield of the distress'd,
No slaughter-honse for shipwreck'd guest."—
"Talk not to me," fierce Lorn replied,
"Of odds or match!—when Comyn died,
Three daggers clash'd within his side!
Talk not to me of sheltering hall,
The Church of God saw Comyn fall!
On God's own altar stream'd his blood,
While o'er my prostrate kinsman stood
The ruthless murderer—e'en as now—
With armed hand and scornful brow!—
Up, who all love me! blow on blow!
And lay the outlaw'd felons low!"

XVI.

Then up sprang many a mainland Lord
Obedient to their Chieftain's word.
Barcaldine's arm is high in air,
And Kinloch-Alline's blade is bare,
Black Murthok's dirk has left its sheath,
And clenched is Dermid's hand of death.
Their murther'd threats of vengeance
Swell into a wild and warlike yell;
Ouward they press with weapons high,
The affrighted females shriek and fly,
And, Scotland, then thy brightest ray
Had darken'd ere its noon of day,—
But every chief of birth and fame,
That from the Isles of Ocean came,
At Ronald's side that hour withstood
Fierce Lorn's relentless thirst for blood.

XVII.

Brave Torquil from Dunvegan high,
Lord of the misty hills of Skye,
MacNiel, wild Bara's ancient thane,
Duart, of bold Clan-Gillian's strain,
Fergus, of Canna's castled bay,
MacDuffith, Lord of Colonsay,
Soon as they saw the broadswords glance,
With ready weapons rose at once,
More prompt, that many an ancient feud,
Full oft suppress'd, full oft renew'd,
Glow'd 'twixt the chieftains of Argyle
And many a lord of ocean's isle.
Wild was the scene—each sword was bare,
Back stream'd each chieftain's shaggy hair,
In gloomy opposition set,
Eyes, hands, and brandish'd weapons met;
Blue gleaming o'er the social board,
Flash'd to the torches many a sword;
And soon those bridal lights may shine
On purple blood for rosy wine.

XVIII.

While thus for blows and death prepared,
Each heart was up, each weapon bared,
Each foot advanced,—a surly pause
Still reverenced hospitable laws,
All menaced violence, but alike
Reluctant each the first to strike
(For eye accursed in minstrel line
Is he who brawls 'mid song and wine),
And, match'd in numbers and in might,
Doubtful and desperate seem'd the fight.
Thus threat and murmur died away,
Till on the crowded hall there lay
Such silence as the deadly still,
Ere bursts the thunder on the hill.
With blade advanced, each chieftain bold
Show'd like the Sworder's form of old,
As wanting still the torch of life
To wake the marble into strife.

XIX.

That awful pause the stranger maid,
And Edith, seized to pray for aid.
As to De Argentine she chung,
Away her veil the stranger flung,
And, lovely 'mid her wild despair,
Fast stream'd her eyes, wide flow'd her hair.
"Oh thou, of knighthood once the flower,
Sure refuge in distressful hour,
Thou, who in Judah well hast fought
For our dear faith, and oft hast sought
Renown in knightly exercise,
When this poor hand has dealt the prize,
Say, can thy soul of honor brook
On the unequal strife to look,
When, butcher'd thus in peaceful hall,
Those once thy friends, my brethren, fall!"
To Argentine she turn'd her word,
But her eye sought the Island Lord.
A flush like evening's setting flame
Glow'd on his cheek; his hardy frame,
As with a brief convulsion, shook:
With hurried voice and eager look,—
"Fear not," he said, "my Isabel!
What said I—Edith!—all is well—
Nay, fear not—I will well provide
The safety of my lovely bride—
My bride?—but there the accents clung
In tremor to his faltering tongue.

XX.
Now rose De Argentine, to claim
The prisoners in his sovereign's name,
To England's crown who, vassal, sworn
'Gainst their liege lord had weapon borne—
(Such speech, I ween, was but to hide
His care their safety to provide;
For knight more true in thought and deed
Than Argentine ne'er spurr'd a steed)
And Ronald, who his meaning guess'd,
Seem'd half to sanction the request.
This purpose fiery Torquil broke:—
"Somewhat we've heard of England's yoke,"
He said, "and, in our islands, Fame
Hath whisper'd of a lawful claim,
That calls the Bruce fair Scotland's Lord,
Though dispossess'd by foreign sword.
This craves reflection—but though right
And just the charge of England's Knight,
Let England's crown her rebels seize
Where she has power;—in towers like these,
'Midst Scottish chieftains summon'd here
To bridal mirth and bridal cheer,
Be sure, with no consent of mine,
Shall either Lorn or Argentine
With chains or violence, in our sight,
Oppress a brave and banish'd Knight."

XXI.
Then waked the wild debate again,
With brawling threat and clamor vain.
Vassals and menials, thronging in,
Leant their brute rage to swell the din;
When, far and wide, a bugle-clang
From the dark ocean upward rang,
"The Abbot comes!" they cry at once,
"The holy man, whose favor'd glance
Hath sainted visions known;
Angels have met him on the way,
Beside the blessed martyrs' bay,
And by Columba's stone.
His monks have heard their hymnings high
Sound from the summit of Dun-Y,
To cheer his penance lone,
When at each cross, on girth and wold²
(Their number thrice a hundred-fold),
His prayer he made, his beads he told,
With Aves many a one;—
He comes our feuds to reconcile,
A sainted man from sainted isle;
We will his holy doom abide,
The Abbot shall our strife decide."³

XXII.
Scarcely this fair accord was o'er,⁴
When through the wide revolving door
The black-stoled brethren wind;
Twelve sandall'd monks, who relics bore,
With many a torch-bearer before,
And many a cross behind.⁵
Then sunk each fierce uplifted hand,
And dagger bright and flashing brand
Dropp'd swiftly at the sight;
They vanish'd from the Churchman's eye,
As shooting stars, that glance and die,
Dart from the vault of night.

XXIII.
The Abbot on the threshold stood,
And in his hand the holy rood;
Back on his shoulders flow'd his hood;
The torch's glaring ray
Show'd, in its red and flashing light,
His wither'd cheek and amice white,
His blue eye glistening cold and bright,
His tresses scant and gray,
"Fair Lords," he said, "Our Lady's love,
And peace be with you from above,
And Benedicite!—
—But what means this? no peace is here!—
Do dirks unsheathed suit bridal cheer?
Or are these naked brands
A seemly show for Churchman's sight,
When he comes summon'd to unite
Betrothed hearts and hands?"

XXIV.
Then, cloaking hate with fiery zeal,
Proud Lorn first answer'd the appeal:—
"Thou comest, O holy Man,
True sons of blessed Church to greet,⁶
But little deeming here to meet
A wretch, beneath the ban

---

¹ The MS. adds:
"With such a frantic fond appeal
As only lovers make and feel."

² MS.: "What time at every cross of old."

³ MS.: "We will his holy rode obey,
The Abbot's voice shall end the fray."

⁴ MS.: "Scarcely was this peacefull paction o'er."

⁵ MS.: "Did slow procession wind;
Twelve monks, who stole and mantle wore,
And chalice, pyx, and relics bore,
With many," &c.

⁶ The MS. here adds:
"Men bound in her communion sweet,
And dutious to the Papal seat."
Of Pope and Church, for murder done
Even on the sacred altar-stone!—
Well may'st thou wonder we should know
Such miscreant here, nor lay him low,
Or dream of greeting, peace, or truce,
With excommunicated Bruce!
Yet well I grant, to end debate,
Thy sainted voice decide his fate."

XXV.
Then Ronald plead the stranger's cause,
And knighthood's oath, and honor's laws;
And Isabel, on bended knee,
Brought prayers and tears to back the plea;
And Edith lent her generous aid,
And wept, and Lorn for mercy pray'd.
"Hence," he exclaim'd, "degenerate maid!
Was't not enough to Ronald's bower
I brought thee, like a paramour,
Or bond-maid at her master's gate,
His careless cold approach to wait?—
But the bold Lord of Cumberland,
The gallant Clifford, seeks thy hand;
His it shall be—Nay, no reply!
Hence! till those rebel eyes be dry."
With grief the Abbot heard and saw,
Yet nought relax'd his brow of awe."

XXVI.
Then Argentine, in England's name,
So highly urged his sovereign's claim,
He waked a spark that, long suppress'd,
Had smoulder'd in Lord Ronald's breast;
And now, as from the flint the fire,
Flash'd forth at once his generous ire.
"Enough of noble blood," he said,
"By English Edward had been shed,
Since matchless Wallace first had been
In mock'y crown'd with wreaths of green,
And done to death by felon hand,
For guarding well his father's land.
Where's Nigel Bruce? and De la Haye,
And valiant Seton—where are they?
Where Somerville, the kind and free?
And Fraser, flower of chivalry?
Have they not been on gibbet bound,
Their quarters flung to hawck and hound,
And hold we here a cold debate,
To yield more victims to their fate?
What! can the English Leopard's mood
Never be gorged with northern blood?
Was not the life of Athole shed
To soothe the tyrant's sicken'd bed?
And must his word, till dying day,
Be nought but quarter, hang, and slay?
—Thou brow'st, De Argentine,—My gage
Is prompt to prove the strife I wage."

XXVII.
"Nor deem," said stout Dunvegan's
Knight,
"That thou shalt brave alone the fight!
By saints of isle and mainland both,
By Woden wild (my grandsire's oath),
Let Rome and England do their worst,
Howe'er attained or accursed,
If Bruce shall e'er find friends again,
Once more to brave a battle-plain,
If Douglas cough again his lance,
Or Randolph dare another chance,
Old Torquill will not be to lack
With twice a thousand at his back.—
Nay, chafe not at my bearing bold,
Good Abbot! for thou know'st of old,
7 The MS. adds:
"He raised the suppliants from the floor,
And bade their sorrowing be o'er,
And bade them give their weeping o'er,
But in a tone that well explain'd
How little grace their prayers had gain'd;
For though he purposed true and well,
Still stubborn and inflexible,
In what he deemed his duty high,
Was Abbot Adenar of Y."
8 MS.: "For Bruce's custody made claim." In place of the two couplets which follow, the MS. has:
"And Torquill, stout Dunvegan's Knight,
As well defended Scotland's right.
Enough of &c."
9 See Appendix, Note W.
10 See Appendix, Note X.
11 Ibid. Note Y.
12 See Appendix, Note Z.
13 In the MS. this couplet is wanting, and, without breaking the stanza, Lord Ronald continues,
"By saints of isle, &c."
14 The MacLeods and most other distinguished Hebridean families were of Scandinavian extraction, and some were late or imperfect converts to Christianity. The family names of Torquill, Thornew, &c., are all Norwegian.
Torquil’s rude thought and stubborn will Smack of the wild Norwegian still;
Nor will I barter Freedom’s cause
For England’s wealth, or Rome’s applause.”

XXVIII.
The Abbot seem’d with eye severe
The hardy Chieftain’s speech to hear;
Then on King Robert turn’d the Monk, 1
But twice his courage came and sunk,
Confronted with the hero’s look;
Twice fell his eye, his accents shook;
At length, resolved in tone and brow,
Sternly he question’d him—“And thou,
Unhappy! what hast thou to plead,
Why I denounce not on thy deed
That awful doom which canons tell
Shuts paradise, and opens hell;
Anathema of power so dread,
It blends the living with the dead,
Bids each good angel soar away,
And every ill one claim his prey;
Expels thee from the Church’s care,
And deafens Heaven against thy prayer;
Arms every hand against thy life,
Bans all who aid thee in the strife,
Nay, each whose succor, cold and scant, 2
With mearest alms relieves thy want;
Haunts thee while living,—and, when dead,
Dwells on thy yet devoted head,
Rends Honor’s scutcheon from thy heart,
Stills o’er thy bler the holy verse,
And spurns thy corpse from hallowed ground,
Flung like vile carrion to the hound!
Such is the dire and desperate doom
For sacrilege decreed by Rome;
And such the well-deserved meed
Of thine unhallow’d, ruthless deed.”—

XXIX.
“Abbot!” the Bruce replied, “thy charge
It boots not to dispute at large.
This much, howe’er, I bid thee know,
No selfish vengeance dealt the blow,
For Comyn died his country’s foe.
Nor blame I friends whose ill-timed speed
Fulfill’d my soon-repent’d deed,
Nor censure those from whose stern tongue
The dire anathema has rung.
I only blame mine own wild ire,
By Scotland’s wrongs incensed to fire.

Heaven knows my purpose to atone,
Far as I may, the evil done,
And hears a penitent’s appeal
From papal curse and prelate’s zeal.
My first and dearest task achieved,
Fair Scotland from her thrall relieved,
Shall many a priest in cope and stole
Say requiem for Red Comyn’s soul,
While I the blessed cross advance,
And expiate this unhappy chance
In Palestine, with sword and lance.
But, while content the Church should know
My conscience owns the debt I owe, 4
Unto De Argentine and Lorn
The name of traitor I return,
Bid them defiance stern and high, 5
And give them in their throats the lie!
These brief words spoke, I speak no more.
Do what thou wilt; my shrift is o’er.”

XXX.
Like man by prodigy amazed,
Upon the King the Abbot gazed;
Then o’er his pallid features glance
Convulsions of ecstatic trance.
His breathing came more thick and fast,
And from his pale blue eyes were cast
Strange rays of wild and wandering light;
Uprise his locks of silver white,
Flush’d is his brow, through every vein
In azure tide the currents strain,
And undistinguish’d accents broke
The awful silence ere he spoke.

XXXI.
“De Bruce! I rose with purpose dread
To speak my curse upon thy head, 7
And give thee as an outcast o’er
To him who burns to shed thy gore;—
But, like the Midianite of old,
Who stood on Zophim, Heaven-controll’d, 8
I feel within mine aged breast
A power that will not be repress’d.
It prompts my voice, it swells my veins,
It burns, it madden’s, it constrains!—
De Bruce, thy sacrilegious blow
Hath at God’s altar slain thy foe:
O’ermaster’d yet by high behest,
I bless thee, and thou shalt be bless’d!”
He spoke, and o’er the astonish’d throng
Was silence, awful, deep, and long.

1 MS.: “Then turn’d him on the Bruce the Monk.”
2 MS.: “Nay, curses each whose succor scant.”
3 See Appendix, Note 2 A.
4 The MS. adds:
   “For this ill-timed and luckless blow.”
5 MS.: “bold and high.”
6 MS.: “Swell on his wither’d brow the veins,
   Each in its azure current strains,
   And interrupted tears express’d
   The tumult of his laboring breast.”
7 See Appendix, Note 2 B.
8 See the Book of Numbers, chaps. xxiii. and xxiv.
9 See Appendix, Note 2 C.
XXXII.
Again that light has fired his eye,
Again his form swells bold and high;
The broken voice of age is gone,
'Tis vigorous manhood's lofty tone:—
"Thrice vanquish'd on the battle-plain,
Thy followers slaughter'd, fled, or ta'en,
A hunted wanderer on the wild,
On foreign shores a man exiled,!
Disown'd, deserted, and distress'd;
I bless thee, and thou shalt be bless'd!
Bless'd in the hall and in the field,
Under the mantle as the shield.
Avenger of thy country's shame,
Restorer of her injured fame,
Bless'd in thy sceptre and thy sword,
De Bruce, fair Scotland's rightful Lord,
Bless'd in thy deeds and in thy fame,
What lengthen'd honors wait thy name!
In distant ages, sire to son
Shall tell thy tale of freedom won,
And teach his infants, in the use
Of earliest speech, to falter Bruce.
Go, then, triumphant! sweep along
Thy course, the theme of many a song!
The Power whose dictates swell my breast
Hath bless'd thee, and thou shalt be bless'd!—
Enough—my short-lived strength decays,
And sinks the momentary blaze.—
Heaven hath our destined purpose broke,
Not here must nuptial vow be spoke;
Brethren, our errand here is o'er,
Our task discharged.—'Unmoor, unmoor!'—
His priests received the exhausted Monk,
As breathless in their arms he sunk,
Punctual his orders to obey,
The train refused all longer stay,
Embark'd, raised sail, and bore away.

1 See Appendix, Note 2 D.
2 "On this transcendent passage we shall only remark that of the gloomy part of the prophecy we hear nothing more through the whole of the poem; and though the abbot informs the king that he shall be 'On foreign shores a man exiled,' the poet never speaks of him but as resident in Scotland up to the period of the battle of Bannockburn."—Critical Review.
3 "The conception and execution of these stanzas constitute excellence which it would be difficult to match from any other part of the poem. The surprise is grand and perfect. The monk, struck with the heresy of Robert, forgoes the intended anathema, and breaks out into a prophetic annunciation of his final triumph over all his enemies, and the veneration in which his name will be held by posterity. These stanzas, which conclude the second canto, derive their chief title to encomium from the emphatic felicity of their burden,
'I bless thee, and thou shalt be bless'd!'; in which few and simple words, following, as they do, a series of predicated ills, there is an energy that instantaneously appeals to the heart, and surpasses, all to nothing, the results of passages less happy in their application, though more labored and tortuous in their construction."—Critical Review.
4 "The story of the second canto exhibits fewer of Mr. Scott's characteristic beauties than of his characteristic faults. The scene itself is not of a very edifying description; nor is the want of agreeableness in the subject compensated by any detached merit in the details. Of the language and versification in many parts it is hardly possible to speak favorably. The same must be said of the speeches which the different characters address to each other. The rude vehemence which they display seems to consist much more in the loudness and gesticulation with which the speakers express themselves than in the force and energy of their sentiments, which, for the most part, are such as the barbarous chiefs to whom they are attributed might without any great prevaleation, either as to the thought or language, have actually uttered. To find language and sentiments proportioned to characters of such extraordinary dimensions as the agents in the poems of Homer and Milton is indeed an admirable effort of genius; but to make such as we meet with in the epic poetry of the present day—persons often below the middle size, and never very much above it—merely speak in character, is not likely to occasion either much difficulty to the poet or much pleasure to the reader. As an example, we might adduce the speech of stout Dunvegan's knight, stanza xxi., which is not the less wanting in taste because it is natural and characteristic."—Quarterly Review.
5 MS.: "The rustling aspen bids his leaf be still."
And sternly flung apart;—
"And deem'st thou me so mean of mood
As to forget the mortal feud,
And clasp the hand with blood imbrued,"
From my dear kinsman's heart?
Is this thy rede?—a due return
For ancient league and friendship sworn!
But well our mountain proverb shows
The faith of Islesmen ebbs and flows.
Be it even so—believe, ere long,
He that now bears shall wreak the wrong.—
Call Edith—call the Maid of Lorn!
My sister, slaves! for further scorn,
Be sure nor she nor I will stay.—
Away, De Argentine, away!—
We nor ally nor brother know,
In Bruce's friend, or England's foe."

IV.
But who the Chieftain's rage can tell,
When, sought from lowest dungeon cell
To highest tower the Castle round,
No Lady Edith was there found!
He shouted, "Falsehood!—treachery!—
Revenge and blood!—a lordly need
To him that will avenge the deed!
A baron's lands!"—His frantic mood
Was scarcely by the news withstood,
That Morag shared his sister's flight,
And, that, in hurry of the night,
'Scaped noteless, and without remark,
Two strangers sought the Abbot's bark.—
"Man every galley!—fly—pursue!
The priest his treachery shall rue!
Ay, and the time shall quickly come
When we shall hear the thanks that Rome
Will pay his feigned prophecy!"
Such was fierce Lorn's indignant cry;³
And Cormac Doil in haste obey'd,
Hoisted his sail, his anchor weigh'd
(For, glad of each protest for spoil,
A pirate sworn was Cormac Doil),
But others, lingering, spoke apart,—
"The Maid has given her maiden heart
To Ronald of the Isles,
And, fearful lest her brother's word
Bestow her on that English Lord,
She seeks Iona's piles,
And wisely deems it best to dwell
A vavasors in the holy cell,
Until these feuds so fierce and fell
The Abbot reconciles."²

V.
As, impotent of ire, the ball
Ech'd to Lorn's impatient call—
"My horse, my mantle, and my train!
Let none who honors Lorn remain!—
Courteous, but stern, a bold request
To Bruce De Argentine express'd.
"Lord Earl," he said,—"I cannot choose
But yield such title to the Bruce,
Though name and earldom both are gone,
Since he braced rebel's armor on,—
But, Earl or Scrf, rude phrase was thine
Of late, and launch'd at Argentine;
Such as compels me to demand
Redress of honor at thy hand.
We need not to each other tell
That both can wield their weapons well;
Then do me but the soldier grace
This glove upon thy helm to place
Where we may meet in fight;
And I will say, as still I've said,
Though by ambition far misled,
Thou art a noble knight."—

VI.
"And I," the princely Bruce replied,
"Might term it stain on knighthood's pride,
That the bright sword of Argentine
Should in a tyrant's quarrel shine;
But, for your brave request,
Be sure the honor'd pledge you gave
In every battle-field shall wave
Upon my helmet-crest;
Believe that if my hasty tongue
Hath done thine honor causeless wrong,
It shall be well redress'd.
Not dearer to my soul was glove,
Bestow'd in youth by lady's love,
Than this which thou hast given!
Thus, then, my noble foe I greet:
Health and high fortune till we meet,
And then—what pleases Heaven."

VII.
Thus parted they—for now, with sound
Like waves roll'd back from rocky ground,
The friends of Lorn retire;
Each mainland chieftain, with his train,
Draws to his mountain towers again,
Pondering how mortal schemes prove vain,
And mortal hopes expire.
But through the Castle double guard,
By Ronald's charge, kept wakeful ward,
Wicket and gate were trebly barr'd,
By beam and bolt and chain;
Then of the guests, in courteous sort,
He pray'd excuse for mirth broke short,
And bade them in Artornish fort
In confidence remain.

¹ MS.: "And clasp the bloody hand imbrued."
² MS.: "Nor brother we, nor ally know."
³ The MS. has, "Such was fierce Lorn's cry."
⁴ See Appendix, Note 2 E.
⁵ MS.: "While friends shall labor fair and well
These feuds to reconcile."
Now torch and menial tendance led
Chieftain and knight to bower and bed,
And beads were told, and Aves said,
And soon they sunk away
Into such sleep as wont to shed
Oblivion on the weary head,
After a toilsome day.

VIII.
But soon uproused, the Monarch cried
To Edward slumbering by his side,
“Awake, or sleep for aye!
Even now there jarr’d a secret door—
A taper-light gleams on the floor—
Up, Edward! up, I say!
Some one glides in like midnight ghost—
Nay, strike not! ‘tis our noble Host.”
Advancing then his taper’s flame,
Ronald stept forth, and with him came
Dunvegan’s Chief—each bent the knee
To Bruce in sign of fealty,
And proffer’d him his sword,
And hail’d him, in a monarch’s style,
As king of mainland and of isle,
And Scotland’s rightful lord.
“Ah! oh!” said Ronald, “Ow ’a Heaven! Say, is my erring youth forgiven,
By falsehood’s arts from duty driven,
Who rebel falchion drew,
Yet ever to thy deeds of fame,
Even while I strove against thy claim,
Paid homage just and true?”—
“Alas! dear youth, the unhappy time,”
Answer’d the Bruce, “must bear the crime,
Since, guiltier far than you,
Even I”—he paused; for Falkirk’s woes
Upon his conscious soul arose,
The Chieftain to his breast he press’d,
And in a sigh conceal’d the rest.

IX.
They proffer’d aid, by arms and might,
To repossess him in his right;
But well their counsels must be weigh’d,
Ere banners raised and musters made,
For English hire and Lorn’s intrigues
Bound many chiefs in southern leagues,
In answer, Bruce his purpose bold
To his new vassals frankly told:—
“The winter worn in exile o’er,
I long’d for Carriek’s kindred shore,
I thought upon my native Ayr,
And long’d to see the hurly fare

That Clifford makes, whose lordly call
Now echoes through my father’s hall.
But first my course to Arran led,
Where valiant Lennox gathers head,
And on the sea, by tempest toss’d,
Our barks dispersed, our purpose cross’d,
Mine own, a hostile sail to shun,
Far from her destined course had run,
When that wise will, which masters ours,
Compell’d us to your friendly towers.”

X.
Then Torquil spoke:—“The time craves speed!
We must not linger in our deed,
But instant pray our Sovereign Liege
To shun the perils of a siege.
The wengeful Lorn, with all his powers,
Lies but too near Artoornsish towers,
And England’s light-arm’d vessels ride,
Not distant far, the waves of Clyde,
Prompt at these tidings to unmoor,
And sweep each strait, and guard each shore.
Then, till this fresh alarm pass by,
Counsel and safe my Liege must lie
In the far bounds of friendly Skye,
Torquil thy pilot and thy guide.”—
“Not so, brave Chieftain,” Ronald cried;
“Myself will on my Sovereign wait,
And raise in arms the men of Slate,
Whilst thou, renown’d where chiefs debate,
Shalt sway their souls by counsel sage,
And awe them by thy locks of age.”—
“And if my words in weight shall fail,
This ponderous sword shall turn the scale.”—

XI.
“The scheme,” said Bruce, “contents me well;
Meantime, ’twere best that Isabel,
For safety, with my bark and crew,
Again to friendly Erin drew.
There Edward, too, shall with her wend,
In need to cheer her and defend,
And must double each scatter’d friend.”—
Here seem’d it as Lord Ronald’s ear
Would other counsel gladlier hear;
But, all achieved as soon as planned,
Both barks, in secret arm’d and mann’d,
From out the haven bore;
On different voyage forth they ply,
This for the coast of winged Skye,
And that for Erin’s shore.

“’Aye,’ said the Chief, ‘or if they fail.
This broadsword’s weight shall turn the scale.’”
In altering this passage, the poet appears to have lost a link.—Ed.

3 The MS. adds:
“Our bark’s departure, too, will blind
To our intent the foe-man’s mind.”

3 See Appendix, Note 2 F.
4 MS.: —— “allies.”
5 MS.: “Myself thy pilot and thy guide.”—
“Not so, kind Torquil,” Ronald cried;
“Tis I will on my Sovereign wait.”
XII.

With Bruce and Ronald bides the tale.—
To favoring winds they gave the sail,
Till Mull's dark headlands scarce they knew,
And Ardnamurchan's hills were blue.
But then the squalls blew close and hard,
And, fain to strike the galley's yard,
And take them to the ear,
With these rude seas, in weary plight,
They strove the livelong day and night,
Nor till the dawning had a sight
Of Skye's romantic shore.
Where Coolin stoops him to the west,
They saw upon his shiver'd crest
The sun's arising gleam;
But such the labor and delay,
Ere they were moor'd in Seavgh Bay
(For calmer heaven compell'd to stay),
He shot a western beam.
Then Ronald said, "If true mine eye,
These are the savage wilds that lie
North of Strathnairdill and Dunskeye;
No human foot comes here,
And, since these adverse breezes blow,
If my good Liege love hunter's bow,
What hinders that on land we go,
And strike a mountain deer?
Allan, my page, shall with us wend;
A bow full deftly can be bend,
And, if we meet a herd, may send
A shaft shall mend our cheer."
Then each took bow and bolts in hand,
Their row-boat launch'd, and leapt to land,
And left their skiff and train
Where a wild stream, with headlong shock,
Came brawling down its bed of rock,
To mingle with the main.

XIII.

A while their route they silent made,
As men who stalk for mountain deer,
Till the good Bruce to Ronald said,
"St. Mary! what a scene is here!
I've traversed many a mountain strand,
Abroad and in my native land,
And it has been my lot to tread
Where safety more than pleasure led;
Thus many a waste I've wander'd o'er,
Clombe many a crag, cross'd many a moor,

But by my halidome,
A scene so rude, so wild as this,
Yet so sublime in barrenness,
Ne'er did my wandering footsteps press,
Where'er I happ'd to roam."

XIV.

No marvel thus the Monarch spake;
For rarely human eye has known
A scene so stern as that dread lake,
With its dark ledge of barren stone.
Seems that primeval earthquake's sway
Hath rent a strange and shatter'd way
Through the rude bosom of the hill,
And that each naked precipice,
Sable ravine, and dark abyss,
Tells of the outrage still.
The wildest glen, but this, can show
Some touch of Nature's genial glow;
On high Benmore green mosses grow,
And heath-bells bud in deep Glencoe,
And cope on Cruachan-Ben;
But here,—above, around, below,
On mountain or in glen,
Nor tree, nor shrub, nor plant, nor flower,
Nor aught of vegetative power,
The weary eye may ken.
For all is rocks at random thrown,
Black waves, bare crags, and banks of stone,
As if were here denied
The summer sun, the spring's sweet dew,
That clothe with many a varied hue
The bleakest mountain side.

XV.

And wilder, forward as they wound,
Were the proud cliffs and lake profound.
Huge terraces of granite black
Afforded rude and cumber'd track;
For from the mountain hoar,
Hurl'd headlong in some night of fear,
When yell'd the wolf and fled the deer,
Loose crags had toppled o'er;
And some, chance-poised and balanced, lay,
So that a stripling arm might sway
A mass no host could raise,
In Nature's rage at random thrown,
Yet trembling like the Druid's stone
On its precarious base.

Turner be worth any thing, "No words could have given a truer picture of this, one of the wildest of Nature's land-sapes." Mr. Turner adds, however, that he discents in one particular: but for one or two tufts of grass he must have broken his neck, having slipped when trying to attain the best position for taking the view which embellishes volume ten, edition 1833.

1 MS.: "Till Mull's dark isle no more they knew,
Nor Ardnamurchan's mountains blue."
2 MS.: "For favoring gales compell'd to stay."
3 See Appendix, Note 2 G.
4 MS.: —— "dark banks."
5 MS.: "And (deer have buds) in deep Glencoe."
6 MS.: —— a (wildest) barest
7 The Quarterly Reviewer says, "The picture of barren desolation is admirably touched;" and if the opinion of Mr.
8 MS.: "And wilder, at each step they take,
Turn the proud cliffs and yawning lake;
Huge naked sheets of granite black," &c.
9 MS.: "For from the mountain's crown."
10 MS.: "Huge crags had toppled down."
The evening mists, with ceaseless change,
Now clothed the mountains' lofty range,
Now left their foreheads bare,
And round the skirts their mantle curl'd,
Or on the sable waters curl'd,
Or on the eddying breezes whirl'd,
Dispersed in middle air.
And oft, condensed, at once they lower,
When, brief and fierce, the mountain shower
Pours like a torrent down,
And when return the sun's glad beams,
Whiten'd with foam a thousand streams
Leap from the mountain's crown.

XVI.
"This lake," said Bruce, "whose barriers drear
Are precipices sharp and sheer,
Yielding no track for goat or deer,
Save the black shelves we tread,
How term you its dark waves? and how
Yon northern mountain's pathless brow,
And yonder peak of dread,
That to the evening sun uplifts
The grisly gulfs and slaty rifts
Which seem its shiver'd head?"—
"Coriskin call the dark lake's name,
Coolin the ridge, as barns proclaim,
From old Cuchullin, chief of fame.
But barns, familiar in our isles
Rather with Nature's frowns than smiles,
Full oft their careless honors please
By sportive names from scenes like these.
I would old Torquil were to show
His Maidens with their breasts of snow,
Or that my noble Liege were nigh
To hear his Nurse sing lullaby!
(The Maidens—tall cliffs with breakers white,
The Nurse—a torrent's roaring might.)
Or that your eye could see the mood
Of Corryvreckin's whirlpool rude,
When dons the Hag her white'd hood—
'Tis thus our islesmen's fancy frames,
For scenes so stern, fantastic names."

XVII.
Answer'd the Bruce, "And musing mind
Might here a graver moral find.
These mighty cliffs, that heave on high
Their naked brows to middle sky,
Indifferent to the sun or snow,
Where nought can fade, and nought can blow,
May they not mark a Monarch's fate,—
Raised high 'mid storms of strife and state,
Beyond life's lowlier pleasures placed,
His soul a rock, his heart a waste?
Or hope and love and fear aloft
High rears his crowned head—But soft!
Look, underneath yon jutting crag
Are hunters and a slaughter'd stag,
Who may they be? But late you said
No steps these desert regions tread?"

XVIII.
"So said I—and believed in sooth," Ronald replied, "I spoke the truth.
Yet now I spy, by yonder stone,
Five men—thay mark us, and come on;
And by their badge on bonnet borne,
I guess them of the land of Lorn,
Foes to my Liege."—"So let it be;
I've faced worse odds than five to three—
But the poor page can little aid;
Then be our battle thus array'd,
If our free passage they contest:
Cope thou with two, I'll match the rest."—
"Not so, my Liege—for, by my life,
This sword shall meet the treble strife;
My strength, my skill in arms, more small,
And less the loss should Ronald fall.
But islesmen soon to soldiers grow:
Allan has sword as well as bow,
And were my Monarch's order given,
Two shafts should make our number even."—
"No! not to save my life!" he said;
"Enough of blood rests on my head,
Too rashly spill'd—we soon shall know
Whether they come as friend or foe."

XIX.
Nigh came the strangers, and more nigh;—
Still less they pleased the Monarch's eye,
Men were they all of evil mien,
Down-look'd, unwilling to be seen; 5
They moved with half-resolved pace,
And bent on earth each gloomy face.
The foremost two were fair array'd,
With brogue and bonnet, trews and plaid,
And bore the arms of mountaineers,
Daggers and broadswords, bows and spears,
The three, that lagg'd small space behind,
Seem'd serfs of more degraded kind;

Though high above the sun of glory glow,
And far beneath the earth and ocean spread
Round him are ley rocks, and loudly blow
Contending tempests on his naked head,
And thus reward the toils which to those summits led."

Chiilde Harold, canto III.

1 MS.: "Oft closing, too, at once they lower."
2 MS.: "Pour'd like a torrent dread."
3 MS.: "Leap from the mountain's head."
4 "He who ascends to mountain tops shall find
The loftiest peaks most wrapt in clouds and snow;
He who surpasses or subdues mankind
Must look down on the hate of those below.

5 See Appendix, Note 2 II.
THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

429

Goat-skins or deer-hides o'er them cast
Made a rude fence against the blast;
Their arms and feet and heads were bare,
Matted their beards, unshorn their hair;
For arms, the clubs bore in hand
A club, an axe, a rusty brand.

XX.

Onward, still mute, they kept the track;—
"Tell who ye be, or else stand back,"
Said Bruce; "In deserts when they meet,
Men pass not as in peaceful street." Still, at his stern command, they stood,
And proffer'd greeting brief and rude,
But acted courtesy so ill,
As seem'd of fear, and not of will.
"Wanderers we are, as you may be;
Men hither driven by wind and sea,
Who, if you list to taste our cheer,
Will share with you this fallow deer."—
"If from the sea, where lies your bark?"—
"Ten fathom deep in ocean dark!
Wreck'd yesternight: but we are men
Who little sense of peril ken.
The shades come down—the day is shut—
Will you go with us to our hut?"—
"Our vessel waits us in the bay!"
Thanks for your proffer—have good-day."—
"Was that your galley, then, which rode Not far from shore when evening glowerd?"—
"It was."—"Then spare your needless pain,
There will she soon be sought in vain.
We saw her from the mountain head,
When, with St. George's blazon red,
A southern vessel bore in sight,
And yours raised sail, and took to flight."—

XXI.

"Now, by the rood, unwelcome news!"
Thus with Lord Ronald communed Bruce;
"Nor rests there light enough to show
If this their tale be true or no,
The men seem bred of churlish kind,
Yet mellow nuts have hardest rind;
We will go with them—food and fire
And sheltering roof our wants require.
Sure guard 'gainst treachery will we keep,
And watch by turns our comrades' sleep.—
Good fellows, thanks; your guests we'll be,
And well will pay the courtesy.
Come, lead us where your lodging lies,—
Nay, soft! we mix not companies—
Show us the path o'er crag and stone,
And we will follow you;—lead on."

XXII.

They reach'd the dreary cabin, made
Of sails against a rock display'd,
And there, on entering, found
A slender boy, whose form and mien
Ill suited with such savage scene,
In cap and cloak of velvet green,
Low seated on the ground,
His garb was such as minstrels wear,
Dark was his hue, and dark his hair,
His youthful cheek was marr'd by care,
His eyes in sorrow drown'd.
"Whence this poor boy?"—As Ronald spoke,
The voice his trance of anguish broke;
As if awaked from ghastly dream,
He raised his head with start and scream,
And wildly gazed around;
Then to the wall his face he turn'd,
And his dark neck with blushes burn'd.

XXIII.

"Whose is the boy?" again he said,
"By chance of war our captive made;
He may be yours, if you should hold
That music has more charms than gold;
For, though from earliest childhood mute,
The lad can deftly touch the lute,
And on the rote and viol play,
And well can drive the time away
For those who love such glee;
For me, the favoring breeze, when loud
It pipes upon the galley's shroud,
Makes blither melody."—
"Nath he, then, sense of spoken sound?"—
"Aye; so his mother bade us know,
A crone in our late shipwreck drown'd,
And hence the silly strirling's woe.
More of the youth I cannot say,
Our captive but since yesterday;
When wind and weather wax'd so grim,
We little listed think of him.—
But why waste time in idle words?
Sit to your cheer—unbelt your swords." Sudden the captive turn'd his head,
And one quick glance to Ronald sped.
It was a keen and warning look,
And well the Chief the signal took.

XXIV.

"Kind host," he said, "our needs require
A separate board and separate fire;
For know that on a pilgrimage
Wend I, my comrade, and this page.

1 MS.: "Our boat and vessel cannot stay."
2 MS.: "Deep in the bay when evening glowerd."
3 MS.: "Yet rugged brows have bosoms kind;
Wend we with them—for food and fire."
4 MS.: "Wend you the first o'er stock and stone."
5 MS.: "entrance."
6 MS.: "But on the clairshoch he can play,
And help a weary night away,
With those who love such glee.
To me, the favoring breeze, when loud
It pipes through on my galley's shroud,
Makes better melody."
And, sworn to vigil and to fast,
Long as this hallow'd task shall last,
We never doff the plaid or sword,
Or feast us at a stranger's board;¹
And never share one common sleep,
But one must still his vigil keep.
Thus, for our separate use, good friend,
We'll hold this hut's remotest end."—
"A churlish vow," the eldest said,
"And hard, methinks, to be obey'd.
How say you, if, to wreak the scorn
That pays our kindness harsh return,
We should refuse to share our meal?"—
"Then say we, that our swords are steel!
And our vow binds us not to fast,
Where gold or force may buy repast."—
Their host's dark brow grew keen and fell,
His teeth are clenched, his features swell;
Yet sunk the felon's moody ire
Before Lord Ronald's glance of fire,
Nor could his craven courage brook
The Monarch's calm and dauntless look.
With laugh constrain'd,—"Let every man
Follow the fashion of his clan!
Each to his separate quarters keep,
And feed or fast, or wake or sleep."

XXV.

Their fire at separate distance burns,
By turns they eat, keep guard by turns;
For evil seem'd that old man's eye,
Dark and designing, fierce yet shy.
Still he avoided forward look,
But slow and circumspectly took
A circling, never-ceasing glance,
By doubt and cunning mark'd at once,
Which shot a mischief-boding ray²
From under eyebrows shagg'd and gray.
The younger, too, who seem'd his son,
Had that dark look the timid shun;
The half-clad serfs behind them sate,
And scowl'd a glare 'twixt fear and hate—
Till all, as darkness onward crept,
Couch'd down, and seem'd to sleep, or slept.
Nor he, that boy, whose powerless tongue
Must trust his eyes to wail his wrong,
A longer watch of sorrow made,
But stretch'd his limbs to slumber laid.³

XXVI.

Not in his dangerous host confides
The King, but wary watch provides,
Ronald keeps ward till midnight past,
Then wakes the King, young Allan last;

Thus rank'd, to give the youthful page
The rest required by tender age,
What is Lord Ronald's wakeful thought,
To chase the languor toil had brought?—
(For deem not that he deign'd to throw Much care upon such coward foe).
He thinks of lovely Isabel,
When at her foeman's feet she fell,
Nor less when, placed in princely selle,
She glance'd on him with favoring eyes,
At Woodstock when he won the prize.
Nor, fair in joy, in sorrow fair,
In pride of place as 'mid despair,
Must she alone engross his care.
His thoughts to his betrothed bride,⁴
To Edith, turn—oh how decide,
When here his love and heart are given,
And there his faith stands plighted to Heaven!
No drowsy ward 'tis his to keep,
For seldom lovers long for sleep.
Till sung his midnight hymn the owl,
Answer'd the dog-fox with his howl,
Then waked the King—at his request,
Lord Ronald stretch'd himself to rest.

XXVII.

What spell was good King Robert's say,
To drive the weary night away?
His was the patriot's burning thought,
Of Freedom's battle bravely fought,
Of castles storm'd, of cities freed,
Of deep design and daring deed,
Of England's roses reft and torn,
And Scotland's cross in triumph worn,
Of rout and rally, war and truce,—
As heroes think, so thought the Bruce.
No marvel, 'mid such musings high,
Sleep shunn'd the Monarch's thoughtful eye.
Now over Coolin's eastern head
The grayish light⁵ begins to spread,
The otter to his cavern drew,
And clamor'd shrill the wakening mew;
Then watch'd the page—to needful rest
The King resign'd his anxious breast.

XXVIII.

To Allan's eyes was harder task,
The weary watch their safeties ask.
He trimm'd the fire, and gave to shine
With bickering light the splinter'd pine;
Then gazed a while, where silent laid
Their hosts were shrouded by the plaid.
But little fear waked in his mind,
For he was bred of martial kind,

¹ MS.: "And we have sworn to [sainted] powers,
While lasts this hallow'd task of ours,
Never to doff the plaid or sword,
Nor feast us at a stranger's board."

² MS.: ———— "an ill-foreboding ray."
³ MS.: "But seems in senseless slumber laid."
⁴ MS.: "Must she alone his musings share.
They turn to his betrothed bride."
⁵ MS.: "The cold blue light."
And, if to manhood he arrive,
May match the boldest knight alive.
Then thought he of his mother's tower,
His little sisters' greenwood bower,
How there the Easter gambols pass,
And of Dan Joseph's length'n'd mass.
But still before his weary eye
In rays prolong'd the blazes die;—
Again he roused him—on the lake
Look'd forth, where now the twilight flakes
Of pale cold dawn began to wake.
On Coolin's cliffs the mist lay fur'd,
The morning breeze the lake had cur'd,
The short dark waves, heaved to the land,
With ceaseless shalp kiss'd cliff or sand;—
It was a slumbersome sound—he turn'd
To tales at which his youth had burn'd,
Of pilgrim's path by demon cross'd,
Of sprightly elf or yelling ghost.
Of the wild witch's baneful cot,
And mermaid's abaluster grot,
Who bathes her limbs in sunless well
Deep in Strathaird's enchanted cell.¹
Thither in fancy rapt he flies,
And on his sight the vaults arise;
That hut's dark walls he sees no more,
His foot is on the marble floor,
And o'er his head the dazzling spars
Gleam like a firmament of stars!
—Hark! hears he not the sea-nymph speak
Her anger in that thrilling shriek!—
No! all too late, with Allan's dream
Mingled the captive's warning scream,²
As from the ground he strives to start,
A ruffian's dagger finds his heart!
Upward he casts his dizzy eyes, ...
Murmurs his master's name, ... and dies!³

XXIX.
Not so awoke the King! his hand
Snatch'd from the flame a knotted brand,
The nearest weapon of his wrath;
With this he cross'd the murderer's path,
And veng'd young Allan well!
The spatter'd brain and bubbling blood
Hiss'd on the half-extinguish'd wood,
The miscreant gasp'd and fell!⁴
Nor rose in peace the Island Lord;
One caiff'd died upon his sword,

And one beneath his grasp lies prone,
In mortal grapple overthrown.
But while Lord Ronald's dagger drank
The life-blood from his panting flank,
The Father-ruffian of the band
Behind him rears a coward hand!
—Oh for a moment's aid,
Till Bruce, who deals no double blow,⁵
Dash to the earth another foe,
Above his comrade laid!—
And it is gain'd—the captive sprung
On the raised arm, and closely clung,
And, ere he shook him loose,
The master'd felon press'd the ground,
And gasp'd beneath a mortal wound,
While o'er him stands the Bruce.

XXX.
"Miscreant! while lasts thy flitting spark,
Give me to know the purpose dark
That arm'd thy hand with murderous knife
Against offeneless stranger's life?"—
"No stranger thou!" with accent fell
Murmur'd the wretch; "I know thee well;
And know thee for the foeman sworn
Of my high chief, the mighty Lorn."—
"Speak yet again, and speak the truth
For thy soul's sake!—from whence this youth?
His country, birth, and name declare,
And thus one evil deed repair."—
—"Vex me no more!... my blood runs cold...
No more I know than I have told,
We found him in a bark we sought
With different purpose... and I thought"...
Fate cut him short; in blood and broil,
As he had lived, died Cormac Doil.

XXXI.
Then resting on his bloody blade,
The valiant Bruce to Ronald said,
"Now shame upon us both!—that boy
Lifts his mute face to heaven,⁶
And clasps his hands, to testify
His gratitude to God on high,
For strange deliverance given.
His speechless gesture thanks hath paid,
Which our free tongues have left unsaid!"
He raised the youth with kindly word,
But mark'd him shudder at the sword:

¹ See Appendix, Note 2 I.
² MS.: "with empty dream,

Mingled the captive's real scream,"
³ "Young Allan's turn (to watch) comes last, which gives the poet the opportunity of marking, in the most natural and happy manner, that insensible transition from the reality of waking thoughts to the fanciful visions of slumber, and that delusive power of the imagination which so blends the confines of these separate states as to deceive and sport with the efforts even of determined vigilance."—British Critic, February, 1815.
⁴ MS.: "What time the miscreant fell."
⁵ "On witnessing the disinterment of Bruce's remains at Dunfermline, in 1822," says Sir Walter, "many people shed tears; for there was the wasted skull, which once was the head that thought so wisely and boldly for his country's deliverance; and there was the dry bone, which had once been the sturdy arm that killed Sir Henry de Bohun, between the two armies, at a single blow, on the evening before the battle of Bannockburn."—Tales of a Grandfather.
⁶ MS.: "Holds up his speechless face to heaven."
He cleansed it from its hue of death,
And plunged the weapon in its sheath.
"Alas, poor child! unfitting part
Fate doom'd, when with so soft a heart,
And form so slight as thine,
She made thee first a pirate's slave,
Then, in his stead, a patron gave
Of wayward lot like mine;
A landless prince, whose wandering life
Is but one scene of blood and strife;—
Yet scant of friends the Bruce shall be,
But he'll find resting-place for thee.—
Come, noble Ronald! o'er the dead
Enough thy generous grief is paid,
And well has Allan's fate been broke;
Come, wend we hence—the day has broke.
Seek we our bark—I trust the tale
Was false, that she had hoisted sail."

XXXII.
Yet, ere they left that charnel-cell,
The Island Lord bade sad farewell
To Allan:—"Who shall tell this tale?"
He said, "in halls of Donagaile!
Oh, who his widow'd mother tell
That, ere his bloom, her fairest fall!—
Rest thee, poor youth! and trust my care
For mass and knell and funeral prayer;
While o'er those caiffis, where they lie,
The wolf shall snarl, the raven cry!"—
And now the eastern mountain's head
On the dark lake threw lustre red;
Bright gleams of gold and purple streak
Ravine and precipice and peak—
(So earthy power at distance shows;
Reveals his splendor, hides his woes.)
O'er sheets of granite, dark and broad,¹
Rent and unequal, lay the road.
In sad discourse the warriors wind,
And the mute captive moves behind.²

¹ MS.: "Along the lake's rude margin slow,
O'er terraces of granite black they go."

² MS.: "And the mute page moves slow behind."

"This canto is full of beauties; the first part of it, containing the conference of the chiefs in Bruce's chamber, might perhaps have been abridged, because the discussion of a mere matter of business is unsuited for poetry; but the remainder of the canto is unobjectionable; the scenery in which it is laid excites the imagination; and the cave scene affords many opportunities for the poet, of which Mr. Scott has very successfully availed himself. The description of Allan's watch is particularly pleasing; indeed, the manner in which he is made to fall asleep, mingling the scenes of which he was thinking with the scene around him, and then mingling with his dreams the captive's sudden scream, is, we think, among the most happy passages of the whole poem."—Quarterly Review.

"We scarcely know whether we could have selected a passage from the poem that will more fairly illustrate its general merits and pervading blemishes than the one which we have

1. STRANGER! if e'er thine ardent step hath traced
The northern realms of ancient Caledon,
Where the proud Queen of Wilderness hath placed,
By lake and eataract, her lonely throne,
Sublime but sad delight thy soul hath known,
Gazing on pathless glen and mountain high,
Listing where from the cliffs the torrents thrown Mingle their echoes with the eagle's cry,
And with the sounding lake, and with the moaning sky.

Yes! 'twas sublimes, but sad.—The loneliness
Loaded thy heart, the desert tired thine eye;
And strange and awful fears began to press
Thy bosom with a stern solemnity.
Then hast thou wish'd some woodman's cottage nigh,
Something that show'd of life, though low and mean;
Glad sight, its curling wreath of smoke to spy,
Glad sound, its cock's blithe carol would have been,
Or children whooping wild beneath the willows green.

Such are the scenes where savage grandeur wakes
An awful thrill that softens into sighs;
Such feelings rouse them by dim Rannoch's lakes,
In dark Glenoe such gloomy raptures rise;
Or farther, where, beneath the northern skies,
Chides wild Loch Eribol his caverns hoar;—
But, be the minstrel judge, they yield the prize
Of desert dignity to that dread shore
That sees grim Coolin rise, and hears Coriskin roar.³

II.
Through such wild scenes the champion pass'd,
When bold halloo and bugle-blast
Upon the breeze came loud and fast.

just quoted (stanzas xxxi. and xxxii.). The same happy mixture of moral remark and vivid painting of dramatic situations frequently occurs, and is as frequently derived by prosaic expressions and couplets, and by every variety of ungrammatical license, or even barbarism. Our readers, in short, will immediately discover the powerful hand that has so often presented them with descriptions calculated at once to exalt and animate their thoughts, and to lower and deaden the language which is their vehicle; but, as we have before observed again and again, we believe, Mr. Scott is inaccessible even to the mildest and the most just reproach on this subject. We really believe that he cannot write correct English; and we therefore dismiss him as an ineradicable, with unfledged compassion for this one fault, and with the highest admiration of his many redeeming virtues."—Monthly Review.

³ "That Mr. Scott can occasionally clothe the grandeur of his thoughts in the majesty of expression, unobscured with the jargon of antiquated ballads, and unencumbered by the awkwardness of rugged expression or harsh involution, we can with pleasure acknowledge; a finer specimen cannot perhaps be exhibited than in this passage."—British Critic.
"There," said the Bruce, "rung Edward's horn! What can have caused such brief return? And see, brave Ronald,—see him dart O'er stock and stone like hunted hart, Precipitate, as is the use, In war or sport, of Edward Bruce.
—He marks us, and his eager cry Will tell his news ere he be nigh."

III.

Loud Edward shouts, "What make ye here, Warring upon the mountain deer,
When Scotland wants her King? A bark from Lennox cross'd our track,
With her in speed I hurried back,
These joyful news to bring—
The Stuart stirs in Teviotdale,
And Douglas wakes his native vale;
Thy storm-toss'd fleet hath won its way With little loss to Brodick Bay,
And Lennox, with a gallant band, Waits but thy coming and command To waft them o'er to Carrick strand.
There are blithe news!—but mark the close! Edward, the deadliest of our foes, As with his host he northward pass'd, Hath on the borders breathed his last."

IV.

Still stood the Bruce—his steady cheek Was little wont his joy to speak,
But then his color rose:—
"Now, Scotland! shortly shalt thou see, With God's high will, thy children free, And vengeance on thy foes! Yet to no sense of selfish wrongs, Bear witness with me, Heaven, belongs My joy o'er Edward's bier;
I took my knighthood at his hand, And lordship held of him, and land, And well may vouch it here, That, blot the story from his page Of Scotland ruin'd in his rage, You read a monarch brave and sage, And to his people dear."
"Let London's burghers mourn her Lord, And Croydon monks his praise record," The eager Edward said;
"Eternal as his own, my hate Surmounts the bounds of mortal fate, And dies not with the dead!"

Such hate was his on Solway's strand, When vengeance clench'd his palsied hand, That pointed yet to Scotland's land, As his last accents pray'd Disgrace and curse upon his heir If he one Scottish head should spare, Till stretch'd upon the bloody lair Each rebel corpse was laid!
Such hate was his, when his last breath Renounced the peaceful house of death, And bade his bones to Scotland's coast Be borne by his remorseless host, As if his dead and stony eye Could still enjoy her misery!
Such hate was his—dark, deadly, long; Mine,—as enduring, deep, and strong!—

V.

"Let women, Edward, war with words, With curses monks, but men with swords; Nor doubt of living foes, to sate Deepest revenge and deadliest hate. Now, to the sea! behold the beach, And see the galleys' tendents stretch Their fluttering length down favoring gale! Aboard, aboard! and hoist the sail, Hold we our way for Arran first, Where meet in arms our friends dispersed; Lennox the loyal, De la Haye, And Boyd the bold in battle fray. I long the hardy band to head, And see once more my standard spread,— Does noble Ronald share our course, Or stay to raise his island force?— "Come weal, come woe, by Bruce's side," Replied the Chief, "will Ronald ride; And since two galleys yonder ride, Be mine, so please my Liege, dismiss'd To wake to arms the clans of Uist, And all who hear the Minche's roar On the Long Island's lonely shore. The nearer Isles, with slight delay, Ourselves may summon in our way; And soon on Arran's shore shall meet, With Torquil's aid, a gallant fleet, If aught avails their Chieftain's best Among the islemen of the west."

VI.

Thus was their venturous counsel said; But, ere their sails the galleys spread,

---Critical Review.
Coriskin dark and Coolin high
Echo'd the dirge's doleful cry.
Along that sable lake pass'd slow,—
Fit scene for such a sight of woe,—
The sorrows of islemen, as they bore
The murder'd Allan to the shore.
At every pause, with dismal shout
Their corinach of grief rung out,
And ever, when they moved again,
The pipes resumed their clamorous strain,
And, with the pibroch's shrilling wall,
Mourn'd the young heir of Donagain.
Round and around, from cliff and cave,
His answer stern old Coolin gave,
Till high upon his misty side
Langusht'd the mournful notes, and died.
For never sounds, by mortal made,
Attain'd his high and haggard head,
That echoes but the tempest's moan,
Or the deep thunder's rending groan.

VII.
Merrily, merrily bounds the bark,
She bounds before the gale,
The mountain merrily from Ben-na-darch
Is joyous in her sail!
With fluttering sound like laughter hoarse,
The cords and canvas strain,
The waves, divided by her force,
In rippling eddies chased her course,
As if they laugh'd again.
Not down the breeze more blithely flew,
Skimming the wave, the light sea-mew,
Than the gay galley bore
Her course upon that favoring wind,
And Coolin's crest has sunk behind,
And Slapin's cavern's shore. 1
'Twas then that warlike signals wake
Dunsecath's dark towers and Eisord's lake,
And soon, from Cavillgarrigh's head,
Thick wreaths of eddying smoke were spread;
A summons these of war and wrath
To the brave clans of Sleate and Strath,
And, ready at the sight,
Each warrior to his weapons sprung,
And targe upon his shoulder flung;
Impatient for the fight.
MacKinnon's chief, in warfare gray,
Had charge to muster their array,
And guide their barks to Brodiekay Bay.

VIII.
Signal of Ronald's high command,
A beacon gleam'd o'er sea and land,
From Canna's tower, that, steep and gray,
Like falcon nest o'erhangs the bay. 2
Seek not the giddy crag to climb,
To view the turret scathed by time;
It is a task of doubt and fear.
To aught but goat or mountain deer.
But rest thee on the silver beach,
And let the aged herdsmen teach
His tale of former day;
His cur's wild clamor he shall chide,
And for thy seat by ocean's side
His varied plaid display;
Then tell how with their Chieftain came,
In ancient times, a foreign dame
To yonder turret gray. 3
Stern was her Lord's suspicious mind,
Who in so rude a jail confined
So soft and fair a thrill!
And oft, when moon on ocean slept,
That lovely lady sat and wept
Upon the castle wall,
And turn'd her eye to southern climes,
And thought perchance of happier times,
And touch'd her lute by fits, and sung
Wild ditties in her native tongue.
And still, when on the cliff and bay
Placid and pale the moonbeams play,
And every breeze is mute,
Upon the lone Hebridean's ear
Steals a strange pleasure mix'd with fear,
While from that cliff he seems to hear
The murmur of a lute,
And sounds, as of a captive lone,
That mourns her woes in tongue unknown.—
Strange is the tale—but all too long
Already hath it staid the song;
Yet who may pass them by,
That crag and tower in ruins gray, 5
Nor to their hapless tenant pay
The tribute of a sigh!

IX.
Merrily, merrily bounds the bark
O'er the broad ocean driven,
Her path by Ronin's mountains dark
The steersman's hand hath given.
And Ronin's mountains dark have sent
Their hunters to the shore, 6
And each his ashen bow unbent,
And gave his pastime o'er,
And, at the Island Lord's command,
For hunting spear took warrior's brand.
On Scooreig next a warning light
Summon'd her warriors to the fight;

1 MS. ——— "mountain shore."
2 See Appendix, Note 2 M.
3 MS. ——— "To Canna's turret gray."
4 "The stanzas which follow are, we think, touchingly beautiful, and breathe a sweet and melancholy tenderness, perfectly suitable to the sad tale which they record." —Critical Review.
5 MS. ——— "That crag with crest of ruins gray."
6 See Appendix, Note 2 N.
A numerous race ere stern MacLeod
O'er their bleak shores in vengeance strode,
When all in vain the ocean cave
Its refuge to his victims gave.
The Chief, relentless in his wrath,
With blazing heath blockades the path;
In dense and stifling volumes roll'd,
The vapor fill'd the cavern'd hold!
The warrior threat, the infant's plain,
The mother's screams, were heard in vain;
The vengeful Chief maintains his fires,
Till in the vault a tribe expires!
The bones which strew that cavern's gloom
Too well attest their dismal doom.

X.
Merrily, merrily goes the bark
On a breeze from the northward free;
So shoots through the morning sky the lark,
Or the swan through the summer sea.
The shores of Mull on the eastward lay,
And Ulva dark, and Colonsay,
And all the group of islets gay
That guard famed Staffa round.
Then all unknown its columns rose,
Where dark and undisturb'd did repose.
The cormorant had found,
And the shy seal had quiet home,
And welter'd in that wondrous dome,
Where, as to shame the temples deck'd
By skill of earthly architect,
Nature herself, it seem'd, would raise
A minister to her Maker's praise.
Not for a meager use ascend
Her columns, or her arches bend;
Nor of a theme less solemn tells
That mighty surge that ebbs and swells,
And still, between each awful pause,
From the high vault an answer draws,

In varied tone prolong'd and high,
That mocks the organ's melody.
Nor doth its entrance front in vain
To old Iona's holy fane,
That Nature's voice might seem to say,
"Well hast thou done, frail Child of clay!
Thy humble powers that stately shrine
Task'd high and hard—but witness mine!"

XI.
Merrily, merrily goes the bark—
Before the gale she bounds;
So darts the dolphin from the shark,
Or the deer before the bounds,
They left Loch Torn on their lee,
And they waken'd the men of the wild
Tiree,
And the Chief of the sandy Coll;
They paused not at Columba's isle,
Though peal'd the bells from the holy pile
With long and measured roll;
No time for matin or for mass,
And the sounds of the holy summons pass
Away in the billows' roll.
Lochbuie's fierce and warlike Lord
Their signal saw, and grasp'd his sword,
And verdant Ilay call'd her host,
And the clans of Jura's rugged coast
Lord Ronald's call obey,
And Scarba's isle, whose tortured shore
Still rings to Corryvrecken's roar,
And lonely Colonsay;
—Scenes sung by him who sings no more!
His bright and brief career is o'er,
And mute his tuneful strains;
Quench'd is his lamp of varied lore,
That loved the light of song to pour;
A distant and a deadly shore
Has LEYDEN's cold remains.

1 See Appendix, Note 2 O.
2 MS.: "Till in their smoke," &c.
3 "And so also 'merrily, merrily, goes the bark,' in a succession of merriment, which, like Dogberry's tediousness, he finds it in his heart to bestow wholly and entirely on us, through page after page, or wave after wave of his voyage. We could almost be tempted to believe that he was on his return from Skye when he wrote this portion of his poem—from Skye, the depository of the 'mighty cup of royal Somerled,' as well as of 'Rorie More's' comparatively modern 'horn'—and that, as he says himself of a minstrel who celebrated the hospitalities of Dunvegan Castle in that island, 'it is pretty plain that when this tribute of poetical praise was bestowed, the horn of Rorie More had not been inactive.'"—Monthly Review. See Appendix, Note M.
4 "Of the prominent beauties which abound in the poem, the most magnificent we consider to be the description of the celebrated Cave of Fingal, which is conceived in a mighty mind, and is expressed in a strain of poetry clear, simple, and sublime."—British Critic.
5 MS.: 'Where niched, his undisturb'd repose.'
6 See Appendix, Note 2 P.
7 The MS. adds:
"Which, when the ruins of thy pile
Cumber the desolate isle,
Firm and immutable shall stand,
'Gainst winds, and waves, and spoiler's hand."
8 "We were now treading that illustrious island which was once the luminum of the Caledonian regions, whence savage clans and roving barbarians derived the benefits of knowledge and the blessings of religion. To abstract the mind from all local emotion would be impossible if it were endeavored, and would be foolish if it were possible. Whatever withdraws us from the power of our senses, whatever makes the past, the distant, or the future predominate over the present, advances us in the dignity of thinking beings. Far from me and from my friends be such frigid philosophy as may conduct us indifferent and unmoved over any ground which has been dignified by wisdom, bravery, or virtue. That man is little to be envied whose patriotism would not gain force upon the plain of Marathon, or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Iona."—JOHNSON.
9 See Appendix, Note 2 Q.
10 MS.: "His short but bright," &c.
XII.

Ever the breeze blows merrily,
But the galley ploughs no more the sea.
Lest, rounding wild Cantire, they meet
The southern foeman's watchful fleet.
They held unwonted way:—
Up Tarbat's western lake they bore,
Then dragg'd their bark the isthmus o'er,¹
As far as Kilmacnannel's shore,
Upon the eastern bay.
It was a wondrous sight to see
Topmast and pennon glitter free,
High raised above the Greenwood tree,
As on dry land the galley moves,
By cliff and copse and elder groves.
Deep import from that seelouch sign
Did many a mountain seer divine,
For ancient legends told the Gael
That when a royal bark should sail
O'er Kilmacnannel moss,
Old Albin should in fight prevail,
And every foe should faint and quail
Before her silver Cross.

XIII.

Now, launch'd once more, the inland sea
They furrow with fair augury,
And steer for Arran's isle;
The sun, ere yet he sunk behind
Ben-Ghoil, "the Mountain of the Wind,"
Gave his grim peaks a greeting kind,
And bade Loch Ranza smile.²
Thither their destined course they drew;
It seem'd the isle her monarch knew,
So brilliant was the landward view,
The ocean so serene;
Each puny wave in diamonds roll'd
O'er the calm deep, where hues of gold
With azure strowe and green.
The hill, the vale, the tree, the tower,
Glow'd with the tints of evening's hour,
The beach was silver sheen,
The wind breathed soft as lover's sighs,
And, oft renew'd, seem'd oft to die,
With breathless pause between.
Oh who, with speech of war and woes,
Would wish to break the soft repose
Of such enchanting scene!

XIV.

Is it of war Lord Ronald speaks?
The blush that dyes his manly cheeks,
The timid look and downcast eye,
And faltering voice, the theme deny.

And good King Robert's brow express'd,
He ponder'd o'er some high request,
As doubtful to approve;
Yet in his eye and lip the while
Dwelt the half-pitying glance and smile
Which manhood's graver mood beguile,
When lovers talk of love.
Anxious his suit Lord Ronald plead;
"And for my bride betrothed," he said,
"My Liege has heard the rumor spread
Of Edith from Artornish fled.
Too hard her fate—I claim no right³
To blame her for her hasty flight;
Be joy and happiness her lot!—
But she hath fled the bridal-knot,
And Lorn recall'd his promised plight,
In the assembled chiefians' sight.—
When, to fulfill our fathers' band,
I proffer'd all I could—my hand—
I was repulsed with scorn;
Mine honor I should ill assert,
And worse the feelings of my heart,
If I should play a suitors part
Again, to pleasure Lorn."—

XV.

"Young Lord," the royal Bruce⁴ replied,
"That question must the Church decide;
Yet seems it hard, since rumors state
Edith takes Clifford for her mate,
The very tie which she hath broke
To thee should still be binding yoke.
But, for my sister Isabel—
The mood of woman who can tell?
I guess the Champion of the Rock,
Victorious in the tourney shock,
That knight unknown, to whom the prize
She dealt, had favor in her eyes;
But since our brother Nigel's fate,
Our ruin'd house and hapless state,
From worldly joy and hope estranged,
Much is the hapless mourner changed.
Perchance," here smiled the noble King,
"This tale may other musings bring.
Soon shall we know—you mountains hide
The little convent of Saint Bride;
There, sent by Edward, she must stay
Till fate shall give more prosperous day;⁵
And thither will I bear thy suit,
Nor will thine advocate be mute."

XVI.

As thus they talk'd in earnest mood,
That speechless boy beside them stood.
He stoo'd his head against the mast,
And bitter sobs came thick and fast,—
A grief that would not be repress'd,
But seem'd to burst his youthful breast.
His hands, against his forehead held,
As if by force his tears repel'd,
But through his fingers, long and slight,
Fast trill'd the drops of crystal bright.
Edward, who walk'd the deck apart,
First spied this conflict of the heart.
Thoughtless as brave, with bluntness kind
He sought to cheer the sorrower's mind;
By force the slender hand he drew
From those poor eyes that stream'd with dew.
As in his hold the stripling strove
('Twas a rough grasp, though meant in love),
Away his tears the warrior swept,
And bade shame on him that he wept.
"I would to Heaven thy helpless tongue
Could tell me who hath wrought thee wrong!
For, were he of our crew the best,
The insult went not unredress'd.
Come, cheer thee; thou art now of age
To be a warrior's gallant page;
Thou shalt be mine!—a palfrey fair
O'er hill and holt my boy shall bear,
To hold my bow in hunting grove,
Or speed on errand to my love;
For well I wot thou wilt not tell
The temple where my wishes dwell."

XVII.
Bruce interposed,—"Gay Edward, no,
This is no youth to hold thy bow,
To fill thy goblet, or to bear
Thy message light to lighter fair.
Thou art a patron all too wild
And thoughtless for this orphan child,
Seest thou not how apart he steals,
Keeps lonely couch, and lonely meals?
Fitter by far in yon calm cell
To tend our sister Isabel,
With Father Augustine to share
The peaceful change of convent prayer,
Than wander wild adventures through
With such a reckless guide as you."—
"Thanks, brother!" Edward answer'd gay,
"For the high laud thy words convey!
But we may learn some future day
If thou or I can this poor boy
Protect the best, or best employ.
Meanwhile, our vessel nears the strand;
Launch we the boat, and seek the land."

XVIII.
To land King Robert lightly sprung,
And thrice aloud his bugle rung

With note prolong'd and varied strain,
Till bold Ben-Ghoil replied again.
Good Douglas then, and De la Haye,
Had in a glen a hart at bay,
And Lennox cheer'd the laggard hounds,
When waked that horn the Greenwood bounds.
"It is the foe!" cried Boyd, who came
In breathless haste with eye of flame,—
"It is the foe!—Each valiant lord Fling by his bow, and grasp his sword!"—
"Not so," replied the good Lord James,
"That blast no English bugle claims.
Oft have I heard it fire the flight,
Cheer the pursuit, or stop the flight.
Dead were my heart, and deaf mine ear,
If Bruce should call, nor Douglas hear!
Each to Loch Ranza's margin spring;
That blast was warded by the King!"

XIX.
Fast to their mates the tidings spread,
And fast to shore the warriors sped.
Bursting from glen and Greenwood tree,
High waked their loyal jubilee!
Around the royal Bruce they crowd,
And elasp'd his hands, and wept aloud.
Veterans of early fields were there,
Whose helmets press'd their hoary hair,
Whose swords and axes bore a stain
From life-blood of the red-hair'd Dane;
And boys, whose hands scarce brook'd to wield
The heavy sword or bossy shield.
Men too were there that bore the scars
Impress'd in Albin's woeful wars,
At Falkirk's fierce and fatal fight,
Teyndrum's dread rout, and Methven's flight;
The might of Douglas there was seen,
There Lennox with his graceful mien;
Kirkpatrick, Closeburn's dread'd Knight;
The Lindsay, fiery, fierce, and light;
The Heir of murder'd De la Haye,
And Boyd the grave, and Seton gay.
Around their King regain'd they press'd,
Wept, shouted, elasp'd him to their breast,
And young and old, and serf and lord,
And he who ne'er unsheathed a sword,
And he in many a peril tried,
Alike resolved the brunt to hide,
And live or die by Bruce's side!

XX.
O War! thou hast thy fierce delight,
Thy gleams of joy intensely bright!
Such gleams as from thy polish'd shield
Fly dazzling o'er the battle-field!
Such transports wake, severe and high,
Amid the pealing conquest-ery;

1 MS.: "And as away the tears he swept,
He bade shame on him that he wept."

2 See Appendix, Note 2 T.
3 MS.: "Impress'd by life-blood of the Dane."
Scarcely when, after battle lost,
Muster the remnants of a host,
And as each comrade's name they tell,
Who in the well-fought conflict fell,
Knitting stern brow o'er flashing eye,
Vow to avenge them or to die!—
Warriors!—and where are warriors found,
If not on martial Britain's ground?4
And who, when waked with note of fire,
Love more than they the British lyre?—
Know ye not, hearts to honor dear!
That joy, deep-thrilling, stern, severe,
At which the heartstrings vibrate high,
And wake the fountains of the eye?2
And blame ye, then, the Bruce, if trace
Of tear is on his manly face,
When, scanty relics of the train
That hail'd at Scone his early reign,
This patriot band around him hung,
And to his knees and bosom clung?—
Blame ye the Bruce?—his brother blamed,
But shared the weakness, while ashamed,
With haughty laugh his head he turn'd,
And dash'd away the tear he scorn'd.3

XXI.
'Tis morning, and the Convent bell
Long time had ceased its matin knell
Within thy walls, Saint Bride!
An aged Sister sought the cell
Assign'd to Lady Isabel,
And hurriedly she cried,
"Haste, gentle Lady, haste!—there waits
A noble stranger at the gates;
Saint Bride's poor vot'ress ne'er has seen
A Knight of such a princely mien;
His errand, as he bade me tell,
Is with the Lady Isabel."—
The Princess rose,—for on her knee
Low bent she told her rosary,—
"Let him by thee his purpose teach;
I may not give a stranger speech."—
"Saint Bride foreswear, thou royal Maid!"
The portress cross'd herself and said,—
"Not to be prioress might I Debate his will, his suit deny."—
"Has earthly show then, simple fool,
Power o'er a sister of thy rule,
And art thou, like the worldly train,
Subdued by splendors light and vain?"—

XXII.
"No, Lady! in old eyes like mine,
Gauds have no glitter, gems no shine;
Nor grace his rank attendants vain,
One youthful page is all his train.
It is the form, the eye, the word,
The bearing of that stranger Lord;
His stature, manly, bold, and tall,
Built like a castle's battled wall,
Yet moulded in such just degrees,
His giant strength seems lightsome ease.
Close as the tendrils of the vine
His locks upon his forehead twine,
Jet-black, save where some touch of gray
Has ta'en the youthful hue away.
Weather and war their rougher trace
Have left on that majestic face;—
But 'tis his dignity of eye!
There, if a suppliant, would I fly,
Secure, amid danger, wrongs, and grief,
Of sympathy, redress, relief—
That glance, if guilty, would I dread
More than the doom that spoke me dead!"—
"Enough, enough," the Princess cried,
"'Tis Scotland's hope, her joy, her pride!
To meaner front was ne'er assign'd
Such mastery o'er the common mind—
Bestow'd thy high designs to aid,
How long, O Heaven! how long delay'd!—
Haste, Mona, haste to introduce
My darling brother, royal Bruce!"

XXIII.
They met like friends who part in pain,
And meet in doubtful hope again.
But when sublun'd that fitful swell,
The Bruce survey'd the humble cell;—
"And this is thine, poor Isabel!
That pallet-couch, and naked wall,
For room of state, and bed of pall;
For costly robes and jewels rare,
A string of beads and zone of hair;
And for the trumpet's sprightly call
To sport or banquet, grove or hall,
The bell's grim voice divides thy care
'Twixt hours of penitence and prayer!—
Oh ill for thee, my royal claim
From the First David's sainted name!
Oh woe for thee, that while he sought
His right, thy brother feeably fought!"—

1 MS.: "If not on Britain's warlike ground?"
2 "Ours are the tears, though few, sincerely shed,
When Ocean shrouds and sepulchres our dead.
For us, even banquets fond regret supply
In the red cup that crowns our memory;
And the brief epitaph in danger's day,
When those who win at length divide the prey,
And cry, Remembrance saddening o'er each brow,
How had the brave who fell exulted now!"

3 See Appendix, Note 2 U.

4 "Mr. Scott, we have said, contradicts himself. How will he explain the following facts to his reader's satisfaction? The third canto informs us that Isabel accompanies Edward to Ireland, there to remain till the termination of the war; and in the fourth canto, the second day after her departure, we discover the princess counting her beads and reading homilies in the cloister of St. Bride, in the Island of Arran! We humbly beseech the 'Mighty Minstrel' to clear up this matter."—Critical Review.

5 MS.: "But when subsides," &c.
XXIV.

"Now lay these vain regrets aside, And be the unshaken Bruce" she cried; "For more I glory to have shared The woes thy ventureson spirit dared, When raising first thy valiant band In rescue of thy native land, Than had fair Fortune set me down The partner of an empire's crown. And grieve not that on Pleasure's stream No more I drive in giddy dream, For Heaven the erring pilot knew, And from the gulf the vessel drew, Tried me with judgments stern and great, My house's ruin, thy defeat, Poor Nigel's death, till, tamed, I own, My hopes are fix'd on heaven alone; Nor e'er shall earthy prospects win My heart to this vain world of sin."—

XXV.

"Nay, Isabel, for such stern choice, First wilt thou wait thy brother's voice; Then ponder if in convent scene No softer thoughts might intervene— Say they were of that unknown Knight, Victor in Woodstock's tourney-fight— Nay, if his name such blush you owe, Victorious o'er a fairer foe?" True his penetrating eye Hast caught that blush's passing dye,— Like the last beam of evening thrown On a white cloud,—just seen and gone. Soon, with calm cheek and steady eye, The Princess made composed reply:— "I guess my brother's meaning well; For not so silent is the cell, But we have heard the islesmen all Arm in thy cause at Ronald's call, And mine eye proves that Knight unknown And the brave Island Lord are one.— Had then his suit been earlier made, In his own name, with thee to aid (But that his plighted faith forbade), I know not . . . . But thy page so near?— This is no tale for menial's ear."

1 "We would bow with veneration to the powerful and rugged genius of Scott. We would style him above all others, Homer and Shakespeare excepted, the Poet of Nature—of Nature in all her varied beauties, in all her wildest haunts. No appearance, however minute, in the scenes around him, escapes his penetrating eye; they are all marked with the finest discrimination, are introduced with the happiest effect. Hence, in his stanzas, both the genius and the judgment of the poet are peculiarly conspicuous; his accurate observation of the appearances of nature, which others have neglected, imparts an originality to those allusions, of which the reader immediately recognizes the aptness and propriety; and only wonders that what must have been so often witnessed should have been so uniformly passed unregarded by. Such is the simile applied to the transient blush observed by Bruce on

XXVI.

Still stood that page, as far apart As the small cell would space afford; With dizzy eye and bursting heart, He leant his weight on Bruce's sword; The Monarch's mantle too he bore, And drew the fold his visage o'er. "Fear not for him—in murderous strife," Said Bruce, "his warning saved my life; Full seldom parts he from my side, And in his silence I confide, Since he can tell no tale again. He is a boy of gentle strain, And I have purposed he shall dwell In Augustine the chaplain's cell, And wait on thee, my Isabel.— Mind not his tears; I've seen them flow, As in the thaw dissolves the snow. 'Tis a kind youth, but fanciful, Unfit against the tide to pull, And those that with the Bruce would sail Must learn to strive with stream and gale.— But forward, gentle Isabel— My answer for Lord Ronald tell."—

XXVII.

"This answer be to Ronald given— The heart he asks is fix'd on heaven. My love was like a summer flower, That wither'd in the wintry hour, Born but of vanity and pride, And with these sunny visions died, If further press his suit—then say, He should his plighted troth obey, Troth plighted both with ring and word, And sworn on crucifix and sword.— Oh, shame thee, Robert! I have seen Thou hast a woman's guardian been! Even in extremity's dread hour, When press'd on thee the Southern power, And safety, to all human sight, Was only found in rapid flight, Thou hearest a wretched female plain In agony of travail-pain, the comenenance of Isabel upon his mention of Donald."— British Critic.

2 MS.: "And well I judge that Knight unknown."

3 MS.: "But that his (earlier) plighted faith forbade."

4 MS.: "The Monarch's brand and cloak he bore."

5 MS.: "Answer'd the Bruce, 'he saved my life!'"

6 The MS. has: "Isabel's thoughts are fix'd on heaven?"
And thou didst bid thy little band
Upon the instant turn and stand,
And dare the worst the foe might do,
Rather than, like a knight untrue,
Leave to pursuers merciless
A woman in her last distress. 1
And wilt thou now deny thine aid
To an oppressed and injured maid,
Even plead for Ronald's perfidy,
And press his fickle faith on me?—
So witness Heaven, as true I vow,
I had those earthly feelings now,
Which could my former bosom move
Ere taught to set its hopes above,
I'd spurn each proffer he could bring,
Till at my feet he laid the ring,
The ring and spousal contract both,
And fair acquittal of his oath,
By her who brooks his perfurred scorn.
The ill-requited Maid of Lorn?"

XXVIII.
With sudden impulse forward sprung
The page, and on her neck he hung;
Then, recollected instantly,
His head he stoop'd, and bent his knee,
Kiss'd twice the hand of Isabel,
Arose, and sudden left the cell,—
The Princess, loosen'd from his hold,
Blush'd angry at his bearing bold;
But good King Robert cried,
"Chafe not—by signs he speaks his mind;
He heard the plan my care design'd,
Nor could his transports hide.—
But, sister, now bethink thee well:
No easy choice the convent cell;
Trust, I shall play no tyrant part,
Either to force thy hand or heart,
Or suffer that Lord Ronald scorn,
Or wrong for thee, the Maid of Lorn.
But, think—not long the time has been
That thou wert wont to sigh unseen,
And wouldst the ditties best approve
That told some lay of hapless love.
Now are thy wishes in thy power,
And thou art bent on cloister bower!
Oh, if our Edward knew the change,
How would his busy satiric range,
With many a sarcasm varied still
On woman's wish and woman's will!"—

XXIX.
"Brother, I well believe," she said,
"Even so would Edward's part be play'd,
Kindly in heart, in word severe,
A foe to thought, and grief, and fear,
He holds his humor uncontrolled;
But thou art of another mould.
Say then to Ronald as I say,
Unless before my feet he lay
The ring which bound the faith he swore,
By Edith freely yielded o'er,
He moves his suit to me no more.
Nor do I promise, even if now
He stood absolved of spousal vow,
That I would change my purpose made,
To shelter me in holy shade.—
Brother, for little space, farewell!
To other duties warns the bell."—

XXX.
"Lost to the world," King Robert said,
When he had left the royal maid,
"Lost to the world by lot severe,
Oh what a gem lies buried here,
Nipp'd by misfortune's cruel frost,
The buds of fair affection lost!—
But what have I with love to do?
Far sterner cares my lot pursue.
—Pent in this isle we may not lie, 3
Nor would it long our wants supply.
Right opposite, the mainland towers
Of my own Turnberry court our powers—
—Might not my father's headsmart hoar,
Cuthbert, who dwells upon the shore,
Kindle a signal-flame, to show
The time propitious for the blow?
It shall be so—some friend shall bear
Our mandate with despatch and care;
—Edward shall find the messenger.
That fortress o'er, the island fleet
May on the coast of Carrick meet.—
O Scotland! shall it e'er be mine
To wreak thy wrongs in battle-line,
To raise my victor-head, and see
Thy hills, thy dales, thy people free,—
That glance of bliss is all I crave
Betwixt my labors and my grave!" 4
Then down the hill he slowly went,
Oft pausing on the steep descent,
And reach'd the spot where his bold train
Held rustic camp upon the plain.

1 See Appendix, Note 2 V.
2 The MS here adds:
"She yields one shade of empty hope;
But well I guess her wily scope
Is to chide Lord Ronald's plea
And still my importunity."
3 This and the twelve succeeding lines are interpolated on the blank page of the MS.
4 "The fourth canto cannot be very greatly praised. It contains, indeed, many pleasing passages; but the merit which they possess is too much detached from the general interest of the poem. The only business is Bruce's arrival at the isle of Arran. The voyage is certainly described with spirit; but the remainder of the canto is rather tedious, and might, without any considerable inconvenience, have been left a good deal to the reader's imagination. Mr. Scott ought to reserve,
The Lord of the Isles.

CANTO FIFTH.

I.

On fair Loch-Ranza stream’d the early day,
Thin wreaths of cottage-smoke are upward curl’d
From the lone hamlet, which her inland bay
And circling mountains sever from the world.
And there the fisherman his sail unfurl’d,
The goat-herd drove his kids to steep Ben-Ghoil,
Before the hut the dame her spindle twirl’d,
Courting the sunbeam as she plied her toil,—
For, wake where’er he may, Man wakes to care and coil.

But other duties call’d each convent maid,
Roused by the summons of the moss-grown bell;
Sung were the matins, and the mass was said,
And every sister sought her separate cell—
Such was the rule—her rosary to tell.
And Isabel has knelt in lonely prayer;
The sunbeam, through the narrow lattice, fell
Upon the snowy neck and long dark hair,
As stoop’d her gentle head in meek devotion there.

II.

She raised her eyes, that duty done,
When glanced upon the pavement-stone,
Gemmed and enchased, a golden ring,
Bound to a scroll with silver string,¹
With few brief words inscribed to tell,
“This for the Lady Isabel.”

Within, the writing further bore,
“Twis with this ring his plight he swore,
With this his promise I restore;
To her who can the heart command,
Well may I yield the plighted hand.
And oh! for better fortune born,
Grudge not a passing sigh to mourn
Her who was Edith once of Lorn!”

One single flash of glad surprise
Just glanced from Isabel’s dark eyes,
But vanish’d in the blush of shame,
That, as its penance, instant came.

“O’thought unworthy of my race!
Selfish, ungenerous, mean, and base,
A moment’s throb of joy to own,²
That rose upon her hopes o’erthrown!”

Thou pledge of vows too well believed,
Of man ingrate and maid deceived,
Think not thy lustre here shall gain
Another heart to hope in vain!
For thou shalt rest, thou tempting gand,
Where worldly thoughts are overawed,
And worldly splendors sink debased,”
Then by the cross the ring she placed.

III.

Next rose the thought,—its owner far,
How came it here through bolt and bar?—
But the dim lattice is ajar.—
She looks abroad: the morning dew
A light short step had brush’d anew,
And there were footprints seen
On the carved buttress rising still,
Till on the mossy window-sill
Their track effaced the green.
The ivy twigs were torn and fray’d,
As if some climber’s steps to aid.—
But who the hardy messenger,
Whose venturesome path these signs infer?—
“Strange doubts are mine!—Mona, draw nigh;
—Nought ‘scapest old Mona’s curious eye—
What strangers, gentle mother, say,
Have sought these holy walls to-day?”—
“None, Lady, none of note or name;
Only your brother’s foot-page came,
At peep of dawn—I pray’d him pass
To chapel where they said the mass;
But like an arrow he shot by,
And tears seem’d bursting from his eye.”

IV.

The truth at once on Isabel,
As darted by a sunbeam, fell:
“Tis Edith’s self?—her speechless woe,
Her form, her looks, the secret show!
—Instant, good Mona, to the bay,
And to my royal brother say,
I do conjure him seek my cell,
With that mute page he loves so well.”—
“What! know’st thou not his wardlike host
At break of day has left our coast?
My old eyes saw them from the tower.
At eve they couch’d in Greenwood bower,
At dawn a bugle signal, made
By their bold Lord, their ranks array’d;
Up sprung the spears through bush and tree,
No time for beneficite!

¹ MS.: "a ring of gold,
A scroll around the jewel roll’d,
Had few brief words;" &c.

² MS.: "A single throb of joy to own."

³ MS.: "‘Tis she herself!"

⁴ MS.: "‘What! know’st thou not in sudden haste
The warriors from our woods have pass’d?"
Like deer that, rousing from their lair,
Just shake the dewdrops from their hair,
And toss their armed crests aloft,
Such matins theirs?"—"Good mother, soft—
Where does my brother bend his way?"—1
"As I have heard, for Brodick Bay,
Across the isle—of barks a score
Lie there, 'tis said, to waft them o'er,
On sudden news, to Carrick shore."—
"If such their purpose, deep the need,"
Said anxious Isabel, "of speed!
Call Father Augustine, good dame."—
The nun obey'd, the Father came.

V.
"Kind Father, he with delay
Across the hills to Brodick Bay;
This message to the Bruce be given: I pray him, by his hopes of heaven,
That, till he speak with me, he stay!
Or, if his haste brook no delay,
That he deliver, on my suit,
Into thy charge that stripling mute.
Thus prays his sister Isabel,
For causes more than she may tell:—
Away, good Father! and take heed,
That life and death are on thy speed."
His cowl the good old Priest did on,
Took his piked staff, and sandall'd soon,
And, like a Palmer by eld,
O'er moss and moor his journey held.2

VI.
Heavy and dull the foot of age,
And rugged was the pilgrimage;
But none was there beside whose care
Might such important message bear.
Through birchen copse he wander'd slow,
Stunted and sapless, thin and low;
By many a mountain stream he pass'd,
From the tall cliffs in tumult east,
Dashing to foam their waters dun,
And sparkling in the summer sun.
Round his gray head the wild curlew
In many a fearless circle flew.
O'er chasms he pass'd, where fractures wide
Craved wary eye and ample stride;3
He cross'd his brow beside the stone
Where Druids erst heard victims groan,4
And at the cairns upon the wild,
O'er many a heathen hero pile'd,5
He breathed a timid prayer for those Who died ere Shiloh's sun arose.

1 MS.: "Canst tell where they have bent their way?"
2 MS.: "And 'cross the island took his way,
O'er hill and holt, to Brodick Bay."
3 See Appendix, Note 2 W.
4 MS.: "He cross'd him by the Druids' stone,
That heard of yore the victim's groan."
5 See Appendix, Note 2 Z.

VII.
But though the beams of light decay,
'Twas dusky all in Brodick Bay.
The Bruce's followers crowd the shore,
And boats and barges some unmour.
Some raise the sail, some seize the oar;
Their eyes oft turn'd where glimmer'd far
What might have seem'd an early star
On heaven's blue arch, save that its light
Was all too flickering, fierce, and bright.
Far distant in the south, the ray
Shone pale amid retiring day,
But as, on Carrick shore,
Dim seen in outline faintly blue,
The shades of evening closer drew,3
It kindled more and more.
The Monk's slow steps now press the sands,
And now amid a scene he stands

Full strange to churchman's eye;
Warriors who, arming for the fight,
Rivet and clasp their harness light,
And twinkling spears, and axes bright,
And helmets flashing high.
Oft, too, with unaccustom'd ears,
A language much unmeet he hears;8
While, hastening all on board,
As stormy as the swelling surge
That mix'd its roar, the leaders urge
Their followers to the ocean verge,
With many a haughty word.

VIII.
Through that wild throng the Father pass'd,
And reach'd the royal Bruce at last.
He leant against a stranded boat,
That the approaching tide must float,
And counted every rippling wave,
As higher yet her sides they lave;
And oft the distant fire he eyed,
And closer yet his hauberk tied,
And loosen'd in his sheath his brand,
Edward and Lennox were at hand,

6 See Appendix, Note 2 X.
7 MS.: "The shades of even more closely drew,
It brighten'd more and more.
Now print his sandall'd feet the sands,
And now amid," &c.
See Appendix, Note 2 Z.
Douglas and Ronald had the care
The soldiers to the barks to share,—
The Monk approach’d, and hommage paid;
“And art thou come,” King Robert said,
“So far to bless us ere we part?”—
“My Liege, and with a loyal heart!—
But other charge I have to tell,”—
And spoke the hest of Isabel.
“Now by Saint Giles,” the Monarch cried,
“This moves me much!—this morning tide
I sent the stripping to Saint Bride,
With my commandment there to bide.”—
“Thither he came the portress show’d,
But there, my Liege, made brief abode.”—

IX.
"Twas I," said Edward, "found employ
Of nobler import for the boy.
Deep pondering in my anxious mind
A fitting messenger to find
To bear thy written mandate o’er
To Cuthbert on the Carrick shore,
I chanced, at early dawn, to pass
The chapel gate to snatch a mass.
I found the stripping on a tomb
Low-scented, weeping for the doom
That gave his youth to convert gloom.
I told my purpose, and his eyes
Flash’d joyful at the glad surprise,
He bounded to the skiff, the sail
Was spread before a prosperous gale;
And well my charge he hath obey’d;
For, see! the ruddy signal made,
That Clifford, with his merry-men all,
Guards carelessly our father’s hall.”—1

X.
"Oh wild of thought, and hard of heart!"
Answer’d the Monarch, "on a part
Of such deep danger to employ
A mute, an orphan, and a boy!"
Unfit for flight, unfit for strife,
Without a tongue to plead for life!
Now, were my right restored by Heaven,
Edward, my crown I would have given,
Ere, thrust on such adventure wild,
I perill’d thus the helpless child.”—
—Offended half, and half submit,
"Brother and Liege, of blame like this,"
Edward replied, "I little dream’d,
A stranger messenger, I deem’d,
My self might seek the beadsman’s cell,
Where all thy squires are known so well.
Noteless his presence, sharp his sense,
His imperfection his defence.

If seen, none can his errand guess;
If ta’en, his words no tale express.
Methinks, too, yonder beacon’s shine
Might expiate greater fault than mine.”—
"Rash," said King Robert, "was the deed—
But it is done. Embark with speed!—
Good Father, say to Isabel
How this unhappy chance befell;
If we thrive on yonder shore,
Soon shall my care her page restore.
Our greeting to our sister bear,
And think of us in mass and prayer.”—

XI.
"Aye!" said the Priest, "while this poor hand
Can chalice raise or cross command,
While my old voice has accents’ use,
Can Augustin forget the Bruce?"
Then to his side Lord Ronald press’d,
And whisper’d, "Bear thou this request,
That when by Bruce’s side I fight,
For Scotland’s crown and freedom’s right,
The Princess grace her Knight to bear
Some token of her favoring care;
It shall be shown where England’s best
May shrink to see it on my crest.
And for the boy—since weightier care
For royal Bruce the times prepare,
The helpless youth is Ronald’s charge,
His couch my plaid, his fence my targe;"
He ceased; for many an eager hand
Had urged the barges from the strand.
Their number was a score and ten,
They bore thrice threescore chosen men.
With such small force did Bruce at last
The die for death or empire cast!

XII.
Now on the darkening main afloat,
Ready and mann’d, rocks every boat;
Beneath their oars the ocean’s might
Was dash’d to sparks of glimmering light.
Faint and more faint, as off they bore,
Their armor glanced against the shore,
And, mingled with the dashing tide,
Their murmuring voices distant died.—
"God speed them!" said the Priest, as dark
On distant billows glides each bark;
"O Heaven! when swords for freedom shine,
And monarch’s right, the cause is thine!
Edge doubly every patriot blow!
Beat down the banners of the foe!
And be it to the nations known
That Victory is from God alone!” 2

1 The MS. reads:
"Keeps careless guard in Turnberry Hall.”
See Appendix, Note 3 A.

2 MS.: " Said Robert, ‘to assign a part
Of such deep peril, to employ
A mute, a stranger, and a boy.”

3 MS.: " is thine alone!"
As up the hill his path he drew,
He turn'd his blessings to renew,
Oft turn'd, till on the darken'd coast
All traces of their course were lost;
Then slowly bent to Brodick tower,
To shelter for the evening hour.

XIII.
In night the fairy prospects sink,
Where Cumray's isles with verdant link
Close the fair entrance of the Clyde;
The woods of Bute, no more descried,
Are gone—and on the placid sea
The rowers ply their task with glee,
While hands that knightly lances bore
Impatient aid the laboring oar.
The half-faced moon shone dim and pale,
And glanced against the whiten'd sail;
But on that ruddy beacon-light
Each steersman kept the helm aright,
And oft, for such the King's command,
That all at once might reach the strand,
From boat to boat loud shout and hail
Warn'd them to crowd or slacken sail.
South and by west the armada bore,
And near at length the Carrick shore,
As less and less the distance grows,
High and more high the beacon rose;
The light, that seem'd a twinkling star,
Now blazed portentous, fierce, and far.
Dark-red the heaven above it glow'd,
Dark-red the sea beneath it flow'd,
Red rose the rocks on ocean's brim,
In blood-red light her islets swim;
Wild scream the dazzled sea-fowl gave,
Dropp'd from their crags on plashing wave.

The deer to distant covert drew,
The black-cock deem'd it day, and crew.
Like some tall castle given to flame,
O'er half the land the Jutre came.
"Now, good my Liege, and brother sage,
What think ye of mine elfin page?"—
"Row on!" the noble King replied,
"We'll learn the truth, whate'er betide;
Yet sure the beardsman and the child
Could ne'er have waked that beacon wild."

XIV.
With that the boats approach'd the land,
But Edward's grounded on the sand;
The eager knight leap'd in the sea
Waist-deep, and first on shore was he,
Though every barge's hardy band
Contended which should gain the land,

When that strange light, which, seen afar,
Seem'd steady as the polar star,
Now, like a prophet's fiery chair,
Seem'd travelling the realms of air,
Wide o'er the sky the splendor glows,
As that portentous meteor rose;
Helm, axe, and falchion glitter'd bright,
And in the red and dusky light
His comrade's face each warrior saw,
Nor marvell'd it was pale with awe,
Then high in air the beams were lost,
And darkness sunk upon the coast,—
Ronald to Heaven a prayer address'd,
And Douglas cried his dauntless breast;
"Saint James protect us!" Lennox cried,
But reckless Edward spoke aside,
"Deem'st thou, Kirkpatrick, in that flame
Red Comyn's angry spirit came,
Or would thy dauntless heart endure
Once more to make assurance sure?"—
"Hush!" said the Bruce; "we soon shall know
If this be sorcerer's empty show,
Or stratagem of Southern foe.
The moon shines out—upon the sand
Let every leader rank his band."

XV.
Faintly the moon's pale beams supply
That ruddy light's unnatural dye;
The dubious cold reflection lay
On the wet sands and quiet bay.
Beneath the rocks King Robert drew
His scatter'd files to order due,
Till shield compact and serried spear
In the cool light shone blue and clear,
Then down a path that sought the tide
That speechless page was seen to glide;
He knelt him lowly on the sand,
And gave a scroll to Robert's hand.
"A torch," the Monarch cried, "what, ho!
Now shall we Cuthbert's tidings know."
But evil news the letters bare:
The Clifford's force was strong and ware,
Augmented, too, that very morn,
By mountaineers who came with Lorn.
Long harrow'd by oppressor's hand,
Courage and faith had fled the land,
And over Carrick, dark and deep,
Had sunk dejection's iron sleep.—
Cuthbert had seen that beacon flame,
Unwitting from what source it came.
Doubtful of perilous event,
Edward's mute messenger he sent,
If Bruce deceived should venture o'er,
To warn him from the fatal shore.

1 MS.: "Have sunk."
2 MS.: "And from their crags plash'd in the wave."
3 MS.: "With that the barges neard the land."
4 MS.: "a wizard's."
5 MS.: "'Gallants, be hush'd; we soon shall know;"
6 Said Bruce, 'if this be sorcerer's show."
7 MS.: "That Clifford's force in watch were ware."
XVI.
As round the torch the leaders crowd,
Bruce read these chilling news aloud.
“What counsel, nobles, have we now?—
To ambush us in Greenwood bough,
And take the chance which fate may send
To bring our enterprise to end?
Or shall we turn us to the main
As exiles, and embark again?”—
Answer’d fierce Edward, “Hap what may,
In Carrick Carrick’s Lord must stay.
I would not minstrels told the tale,
Wildfire or meteor made us quail.”—
Answer’d the Douglas, “If my Liege
May win yon walls by storm or siege,
Then were each brave and patriot heart
Kindled of new for loyal part.”—
Answer’d Lord Ronald, “Not for shame
Would I that aged Torquil came,
And found, for all our empty boast,
Without a blow we fled the coast.
I will not credit that this hand,
So famed for warlike heart and hand,
The nurse of Wallace and of Bruce,
Will long with tyrants hold a truce.”—
“Prove we our fate—the brunt we’ll ride!”
So Boyd and Haye and Lennox cried;
So said, so vow’d the leaders all;
So Bruce resolved: “And in my hall
Since the bold Southern make their home,
The hour of payment soon shall come,³
When with a rough and rugged host
Clifford may reckon to his cost.
Meantime, through well-known bosc and dell,
I’ll lead where we may shelter well.”

XVII.
Now ask you whence that wondrous light,
Whose fairy glow beguiled their sight?—
It ne’er was known—yet gray-hair’d eld
A superstitious credence held,
That never did a mortal hand
Wake its broad glare on Carrick strand;
Nay, and that on the selfsame night
When Bruce cross’d o’er, still gleams the light.
Yearly it gleams o’er mount and moor,
And glittering wave and crimson’d shore—
But whether beam celestial, lent
By Heaven to aid the King’s descent,
Or fire hell-kindled from beneath,
To lure him to defeat and death,
Or were it but some meteor strange,
Of such as oft through midnight range,

| MS.: “To play their part.” |
| MS.: “Since Clifford means will make his home,
The hour of reckoning soon shall come.” |
| See Appendix, Note 3 B. |

XVIII.
Now up the rocky pass they drew,
And Ronald, to his promise true,
Still made his arm the stripling’s stay,
To aid him on the rugged way.
“Now cheer thee, simple Amadine!
Why throbs that silly heart of thine?”—
—that name the pirates to their slave
(In Gaelic ’tis the Changeling) gave—
“Dost thou not rest thee on my arm?
Do not my plaid-folds hold thee warm?
Hath not the wild bull’s treble hide
This targe for thee and me supplied?
Is not Clan-Colla’s sword of steel?
And, trembler, canst thou terror feel?
Cheer thee, and still that throbbing heart;
From Ronald’s guard thou shalt not part.”—
Oh! many a shaft, at random sent,
Finds mark the archer little meant!
And many a word, at random spoken,
May soothe or wound a heart that’s broken!
Half soothed, half grieved, half terrified,
Close drew the page to Ronald’s side;
A wild delirious thrill of joy
Was in that hour of agony,
As up the steepy pass he strove,
Fear, toil, and sorrow, lost in love!

XIX.
The barrier of that iron shore,
The rock’s steep ledge, is now climb’d o’er;
And from the Castle’s distant wall,
From tower to tower the warders call:
The sound swings over land and sea,⁷
And marks a watchful enemy.—
They gain’d the Chase, a wide domain
Left for the Castle’s sylvan reign,⁸ (Seek not the scene—the axe, the plough,
The boor’s dull fence, have marr’d it now,) But then, soft swept in velvet green
The plain with many a glade between,
Whose tangled alleys far invade
The depth of the brown forest shade.
Here the tall fern obscured the lawn,
Fair shelter for the sportive fawn;
There, tufted close with copsewood green,
Was many a swelling hillock seen;
And all around was verdure meet
For pressure of the fairies’ feet.
The glossy holly loved the park,
The yew-tree lent its shadow dark,⁹

| MS.: “Such as through midnight range, A frighting oft the traveller lone.” |
| MS.: “Sounds sully over land and sea.” |
| See Appendix, Note 3 C. |
| MS.: “The dark-green holly loved the down, The yew-tree lent its shadow brown.” |
And many an old oak, worn and bare,
With all its shiver'd boughs, was there.
Lovely between, the moonbeams fell
On lawn and hillock, glade and dell.
The gallant Monarch sigh'd to see
These glades so loved in childhood free,
Bethinking that, as outlaw now,
He ranged beneath the forest bough.1

XX.
Fast o'er the moonlight Chase they sped
Well knew the band that measured tread,
When, in retreat or in advance,
The serried warriors move at once;
And evil were the luck if dawn
Descried them on the open lawn.
Copse they traverse, brooks they cross,
Strain up the bank and o'er the moss.
From the exhausted page's brow2
Cold drops of toil are streaming now;
With effort faint3 and length'nd pause,
His weary step the stripling draws.
"Nay, droop not yet!"4 the Warrior said;
"Come, let me give thee ease and aid!
Strong are mine arms, and little care
A weight so slight as thine to bear.—
What! wilt thou not—capricious boy!
Then thine own limbs and strength employ.
Pass but this night, and pass thy care,
I'll place thee with a lady fair,
Where thou shalt tune thy lute to tell
How Ronald loves fair Isabel!"5
Worn out, disharten'd, and dismay'd,
Here Amadine let go the plaid;
His trembling limbs their aid refuse,6
He sunk among the midnight dews!6

XXI.
What may be done?—the night is gone—
The Bruce's band moves swiftly on—
Eternal shame, if 't at the brunt
Lord Ronald grace not battle's front!—
"See yonder oak, within whose trunk
Decay a darken'd cell hath sunk;
Enter, and rest thee there a space,
Wrap in my plaid thy limbs, thy face."7

1 "Their moonlight muster on the beach, after the sudden extinction of this portentous flame, and their midnight march through the paternal fields of their royal leader, also display much beautiful painting (stanzas xv. and xix.). After the castle is won, the same strain is pursued."—JEFFREY.
2 MS.: "From Amadine's exhausted brow."
3 MS.: "And double toil," &c.
5 MS.: —— "his weight refuse."
6 "This canto is not distinguished by many passages of extraordinary merit; as it is, however, full of business, and comparatively free from those long rhyming dialogues which
7 MS.: "And mantle in my plaid thy face."
8 MS.: "In sylvan castle warm bestow'd,
He left the page."
9 MS.: "And now with Lorn he spoke aside,
And now to squire and yeoman cried.
War-horse and palfrey," &c.

are so frequent in the poem, it is, upon the whole, spirited and pleasing. The scene in which Ronald is described sheltering Edith under his plaid, for the love which he bears to Isabel, is, we think, more poetically conceived than any other in the whole poem, and contains some touches of great pathos and beauty."—Quarterly Review.
When in rude waves or roaring winds
Some words of woe the muser finds,
Until more loudly and more near,
Their speech arrests the page's ear.1

XXIV.
"And was she thus," said Clifford, "lost?
The Priest should rue it to his cost!
What says the Monk?"—"The holy Sire
Owne that masquer's quaint attire
She sought his skiff, disguised, unknown
To all except to him alone.
But, says the Priest, a bark from Lorn2
Laid them aboard that very morn,
And pirates seized her for their prey.
He proffer'd ransom-gold to pay,
And they agreed—but ere told o'er,
The winds blow loud, the billows roar;
They sever'd, and they met no more.
He deems—such tempests vex'd the coast—
Ship, crew, and fugitive, were lost.
So let it be, with the disgrace
And scandal of her lofty race;3
Thrice better she had ne'er been born,
Than brought her infamy on Lorn!"

XXV.
Lord Clifford now the captive spied:—
"Whom, Herbert, hast thou there?" he cried,
"A spy we seized within the Chase,
A hollow oak his lurking place?"—4
"What tidings can the youth afford?"—5
"He plays the mute."—"Then noose a cord—
Unless brave Lorn reverse the doom
For his plaid's sake?"—"Clan-Colla's lom,"
Said Lorn, whose careless glances trace
Rather the vesture than the face,
"Clan-Colla's dames such tartans twine;
Wearer nor plaid claims care of mine.
Give him, if 'tis advice you crave,
His own seathed oak;5 and let him wave
In air, unless, by terror wrung,
A frank confession find his tongue.—6
Nor shall he die without his rite;
—Thou, Angus Roy, attend the sight,
And give Clan-Colla's dirge thy breath,
As they convey him to his death?—

4 MS.: "A spy, whom, guided by our hound,
Lurking conceale'd this morn we found.

5 MS.: "You seathed oak."

6 MS.: "by terror wrung
To speech, confession finds his tongue."

7 MS.: "last human ill."

8 MS.: "Since that one word, that little breath,
May speak Lord Ronald's doom of death."

9 MS.: "Beneath that shatter'd oak-tree,
Design'd the slaughter place to be,"

10 MS.: "Soon as the due lamento was play'd,
The Island Lord in fury said,
'By heaven, they lead,' &c.
Douglas, lead fifty of our force
Up yonder hollow water-course,
And couch thee midway on the wold,
Between the flyers and their hold:
A spear above the copse display'd
Be signal of the ambush made.

—Edward, with forty spearmen, straight
Through yonder copse approach the gate,
And, when thou hear'st the battle-din,
Rush forward, and the passage win,
Secure the drawbridge, storm the port,
And man and guard the Castle court.—
The rest move slowly forth with me,
In shelter of the forest-tree,
Till Douglas at his post I see."

XXVIII.
Like war-horse eager to rush on,
Compell'd to wait the signal blown,
Hid, and scarce hid, by Greenwood bough,
Trembling with rage, stands Ronald now,
And in his grasp his sword gleams blue,
Soon to be dyed with deadlier hue.—
Meanwhile the Bruce, with steady eye,
Sees the dark death-train moving by,
And, heedful, measures oft the space
The Douglas and his band must trace,
Ere they can reach their destined ground.
Now sinks the dirge's wailing sound,
Now cluster round the direful tree
That slow and solemn company,
While hymn mistuned and mutter'd prayer
The victim for his fate prepare.—
What glances o'er the Greenwood shade?
The spear that marks the ambuscade!—
"Now, noble Chief! I leave thee loose; Upon them, Ronald!" said the Bruce.

XXIX.
"The Bruce! the Bruce!" to well-known cry
His native rocks and woods reply.
"The Bruce! the Bruce!" in that dread word
The knell of hundred deaths was heard.
The astonish'd Southern gazed at first,
Where the wild tempest was to burst,
That waked in that presaging name.
Before, behind, around, it came!
Half-arm'd, surprised, on every side
Hemm'd in, hew'd down, they bled and died.
Deep in the ring the Bruce engaged,
And fierce Clan-Colla's broadsword raged!
Full soon the few who fought were sped,

Nor better was their lot who fled,
And met, 'mid terror's wild career,
The Douglas's redoubted spear!
Two hundred yeomen on that morn
The Castle left, and none return.

XXX.
Not on their flight press'd Ronald's brand:
A gentle duty claim'd his hand.
He raised the page, where on the plain
His fear had sunk him with the slain;
And twice, that morn, surprise well near
Betray'd the secret kept by fear;
Once, when, with life returning, came
To the boy's lip Lord Ronald's name,
And hardly recollection'd drown'd
The accents in a murmuring sound;
And once, when scarce he could resist
The Chieftain's care to loose the vest,
Drawn tightly o'er his laboring breast,
But then the Bruce's bugle blew,
For martial work was yet to do.

XXXI.
A harder task fierce Edward waits,
Ere signal given, the Castle gates
His fury had assail'd;
Such was his wonted reckless mood,
Yet desperate valor oft made good,
Even by its daring, venture rude,
Where prudence might have fail'd.
Upon the bridge his strength he threw;
And struck the iron chain in two;
The warder next his axe's edge
Struck down upon the threshold ledge,
'Twixt door and post a ghastly wedge!
The gate they may not close.
Well fought the Southern in the fray,
Clifford and Lorn fought well that day,
But stubborn Edward forced his way
Against a hundred foes.
Loud came the cry, "The Bruce! the Bruce!"
No hope or in defence or truce,—
Fresh combatants pour in;
Mad with success, and drunk with gore,
They drive the struggling foe before,
And ward on ward they win.
Unspiring was the vengeful sword,
And limbs were lopp'd, and life-blood pour'd,
The cry of death and conflict roar'd,
And fearful was the din!

1 MS.: "Yet waiting for the trumpet tone."
2 MS.: "Sees the slow death-train."
3 MS.: "And scarce his recollection, &c.
4 MS.: "A harder task fierce Edward waits,
Whose ire assail'd the Castle gates."
5 MS.: "Where sober thought had fail'd.
Upon the bridge himself he threw."
6 MS.: "His axe was steel of temper'd edge.
That truth the warrior well might pledge,
He sunk upon the threshold ledge!
The gate," &c.
7 MS.: "Well fought the English yeomen then,
And Lorn and Clifford play'd the men,
But Edward mann'd the pass he won
Against," &c.
The startling horses plunged and flung,
Clamor’d the dogs till turrets rang,
Nor sunk the fearful cry
Till not a foeman was there found
Alive, save those who on the ground
Groan’d in their agony! ¹

XXXII.
The valiant Clifford is no more;²
On Ronald’s broadsword stream’d his gore.
But better hap had he of Lorn,
Who, by the foeman backward borne,
Yet gain’d with slender train the port,
Where lay his bark beneath the fort,
And cut the cable loose.³

Short were his shrift in that debate,
That hour of fury and of fate,
If Lorn encounter’d Bruce!⁴
Then long and loud the victor shout
From turret and from tower rung out,
The rugged vaults replied;
And from the donjon tower on high,
The men of Carrick may desery
Saint Andrew’s cross, in blazonry
Of silver, waving wide!

XXXIII.
The Bruce hath won his father’s hall;⁵
—“Welcome, brave friends and comrades all,
Welcome to mirth and joy!
The first, the last, is welcome here,
From lord and chieftain, prince and peer,
To this poor speechless boy.
Great God! once more my sire’s abode
Is mine—behold the floor I trode
In tottering infancy!
And there⁶ the vaulted arch, whose sound
Echo’d my joyous shout and bound
In boyhood, and that rung around
To youth’s unthinking glee!
Oh first to thee, all-gracious Heaven,
Then to my friends, my thanks be given!”—
He paused a space, his brow he cross’d—
Then on the board his sword he toss’d,

Yet steaming hot; with Southern gore
From hilt to point ’twas crimson’d o’er.

XXXIV.
“Bring here,” he said, “the mazers four
My noble fathers loved of yore;”
Thrice let them circle round the board,
The pledge, fair Scotland’s rights restored!
And he whose lip shall touch the wine,
Without a vow as true as mine,
To hold both lands and life at nought,
Until her freedom shall be bought,—
Be brand of a disloyal Scot,
And lasting infamy, his lot!⁸
Sit, gentle friends; our hour of glee
Is brief, we’ll spend it joyously!
Blithest of all the sun’s bright beams,
When betwixt storm and storm he gleams.
Well is our country’s work begun,
But more, far more, must yet be done.
Speed messengers the country through;
Arouse old friends, and gather new;⁹
Warn Lanark’s knights to gird their mail,
Rouse the brave sons of Teviotdale,
Let Ettrick’s archers sharp their darts,
The fairest forms, the truest hearts!
Call all, call all! from Reedswar Path
To the wild confines of Cape Wrath;
Wide let the news through Scotland ring,
The Northern Eagle claps his wing!”

The Lord of the Isles.

CANTO SIXTH.

I.
On who that shared them ever shall forget⁰
The emotions of the spirit-rousing time,
When breathless in the marts the couriers met,
Early and late, at evening and at prime;
When the loud cannon and the merry chime
Hail’d news on news, as field on field was won,¹¹

¹ The concluding stanza of the “Siege of Corinth” contains an obvious though no doubt an unconscious imitation of the preceding nine lines, magnificently expanded through an extent of about thirty couplets:—

“All the living things that heard
That deadly earth-shock disappear’d;
The wild birds flew; the wild dogs fled,
And howling left the unburied dead;
The camels from their keepers broke;
The distant steer forsook the yoke—
The nearer steed plunged o’er the plain,
And burst his girth, and tore his rein,” &c.

² In point of fact, Clifford fell at Bannockburn.

³ MS.: “And swiftly hoisted sail.”

⁴ MS.: “Short were his shrift, if in that hour
Of fate, of fury, and of power,
He ‘counter’d Edward Bruce!”

⁵ See Appendix, Note 3 D.
⁶ MS.: “And see the vaulted arch,” &c.
⁷ See Appendix, Note 3 E.
⁸ MS.: “Be lasting infamy his lot,
And brand of a disloyal Scot.”
⁹ See Appendix, Note 3 F.
¹⁰ MS.: “Hast thou forgot?—No! who can e’er forget.”
¹¹ Who can avoid conjuring up the idea of men with broad sheets of foolscap scored with victories rolled round their hats, and horns blowing loud defiance in each other’s mouth, from the top to the bottom of Pall-Mall, or the Haymarket, when he reads such a passage? We actually hear the Park and Tower guns, and the clattering of ten thousand bells, as we read, and stop our ears from the close and sudden intrusion of the clamors of some hot and horridated patriot, blowing ourselves, as well as Bonaparte, to the devil! And what has all this to do with Bannockburn?”—Monthly Review.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

When Hope, long doubtful, soar'd at length sublime,
And our glad eyes, awake as day begun,
Watch'd Joy's broad banner rise, to meet the rising sun!

Oh these were hours when thrilling joy repaid
A long, long course of darkness, doubts, and fears!
The heart-sick faintness of the hope delay'd,
The waste, the woe, the bloodshed, and the tears
That track'd with terror twenty rolling years,
All was forgot in that blithe jubilee!
Her downcast eye even pale Affliction rears,
To sigh a thankful prayer, amid the glee,
That hail'd the Despot's fall, and peace and liberty!

Such news o'er Scotland's hills triumphant rode,
When 'gainst the invaders turn'd the battle's scale,
When Bruce's banner had victorious flow'd
O'er Loudoun's mountain, and in Ury's vale; 2
When English blood o'er deluged Douglas dale, 3
And fiery Edward routed stout St. John, 4
When Randolph's war-ery swell'd the southern gale, 5
And many a fortress, town, and tower, was won,
And Fame still sounded forth fresh deeds of glory done.

II.
Blithe tidings flew from baron's tower
To peasant's cot, to forest bower,
And waked the solitary cell
Where lone Saint Bride's recluses dwell,
Princess no more, fair Isabel,
A vot'ress of the order now,
Say, did the rule that bid thee wear
Dim veil and woollen scapulare,
And reft thy locks of dark-brown hair,
That stern and rigid vow,
Did it condemn the transport high
Which glisten'd in thy watery eye
When minstrel or when Palmer told
Each fresh exploit of Bruce the bold?—
And whose the lovely form that shares
Thy anxious hopes, thy fears, thy prayers?
No sister she of convent shade;
So say these locks in lengthen'd braid,
So say the blushes and the sighs,
The tremors that unbidden rise,
When, mingled with the Bruce's fame,
The brave Lord Ronald's praises came.

III.
Believe, his father's Castle won,
And his bold enterprise begun,
That Bruce's earliest cares restore
The speechless page to Arran's shore:
Nor think that long the quaint disguise
Conceal'd her from a sister's eyes;
And sister-like in love they dwell
In that lone convent's silent cell.
There Bruce's slow assent allows
Fair Isabel the veil and vows;
And there, her sex's dress regain'd,
The lovely Maid of Lorn remain'd,
Unnamed, unknown, while Scotland far
Resound'd with the din of war;
And many a month, and many a day,
In calm seclusion wore away.

IV.
These days, these months, to years had worn,
When tidings of high weight were borne
To that lone island's shore;
Of all the Scottish conquests made
By the first Edward's ruthless blade,
His son retain'd no more,
Northward of Tweed, but Stirling's towers,
Beleaguer'd by King Robert's powers;
And they took term of truce. 6
If England's King should not relieve
The siege ere John the Baptist's eve,
To yield them to the Bruce.
England was roused—on every side
Courier and post and herald hied,
To summon prince and peer
At Berwick bounds to meet their Liege, 7
Prepared to raise fair Stirling's siege,
With buckler, brand, and spear.
The term was nigh—they mustered fast,
By beacon and by bugle-blast
Forth marshall'd for the field;
There rode each knight of noble name,
There England's hardy archers came,
The land they trod seem'd all on flame
With banner, blade, and shield!
And not famed England's powers alone,
Renown'd in arms, the summons own;
For Neustria's knights obey'd,
Gascony hath lent her horsemen good, 8
And Cambria, but of late subdued,
Sent forth her mountain multitude, 9
And Connacht pour'd from waste and wood
Her hundred tribes, whose sceptre rude
Dark Eth O'Connor sway'd. 10

V.
Right to devoted Caledon
The storm of war rolls slowly on, 11
With menace deep and dread;
So the dark clouds, with gathering power,
Suspending whilst the threaten'd shower,
Till every peak and summit lower
Round the pale pilgrim's head.

1 MS.: "Watch'd Joy's broad banner rise, watch'd Triumph's flashing gun."
2 See Appendix, Note 3 G.
3 Ibid. Note 3 H.
4 See Appendix, Note 3 I.
5 Ibid. Note 3 K.
6 See Appendix, Note 3 L.
7 Ibid. Note 3 M.
8 The MS. has not this line.
9 See Appendix, Note 3 N.
10 Ibid. Note 3 O.
11 MS.: "The gathering storm of war rolls on."
Not with such pilgrim’s startled eye
King Robert mark’d the tempest nigh!
Resolved the brunt to bide,
His royal summons warn’d the land
That all who own’d their King’s command
Should instant take the spear and brand,¹
To combat at his side.
Oh who may tell the sons of fame
That at King Robert’s bidding came
To battle for the right!
From Cheviot to the shores of Ross,
From Solway Sands to Marshal’s Moss,²
All bound them for the fight,
Such news the royal courier tells
Who came to rouse dark Arran’s dells;
But further tidings must the ear
Of Isabel in secret hear.
These in her cloister walk, next morn,
Thus shared she with the Maid of Lorn:—

VI.
“My Edith, can I tell how dear
Our intercourse of hearts sincere Hath been to Isabel?—
Judge then the sorrow of my heart,
When I must say the words, We part!
The cheerless convent cell
Was not, sweet maiden, made for thee;
Go thou where thy vocation free
On happier fortunes fell.
Nor, Edith, judge thyself betray’d,
Though Robert knows that Lorn’s high Maid
And his poor silent page were one,
Versed in the fickle heart of man,³
Earnest and anxious hath he look’d
How Ronald’s heart the message brook’d
That gave him, with her last farewell,
The charge of Sister Isabel,
To think upon thy better right,
And keep the faith his promise plighted.
Forgive him for thy sister’s sake,
At first if vain repinings wake—⁴
Long since that mood is gone;
Now dwells he on thy juster claims,
And oft his breach of faith he blames—
Forgive him for thine own!”⁵

VII.
“No! never to Lord Ronald’s bower
Will I again as paramour”——

“Nay, hush thee, too impatient maid,
Until my final tale be said!—
The good King Robert would engage
Edith once more his elfin page,
By her own heart, and her own eye,
Her lover’s penitence to try—⁶
Safe in his royal charge, and free,
Should such thy final purpose be,
Again unknown to seek the cell,
And live and die with Isabel.”
Thus spoke the maid—King Robert’s eye
Might have some glance of policy;
Dunstaffnage had the Monarch ta’en,
And Lorn had own’d King Robert’s reign;⁷
Her brother had to England fled,
And there in banishment was dead;
Ample, through exile, death, and flight,
O’er tower and land was Edith’s right;
This ample right o’er tower and land
Were safe in Ronald’s faithful hand.

VIII.

Embarrass’d eye and blushing cheek
Pleasure and shame and fear bespeak!
Yet much the reasoning Edith made:—
“Her sister’s faith she must upbraid,
Who gave such secret, dark and dear,
In counsel to another’s ear.
Why should she leave the peaceful cell?—
How should she part with Isabel?—
How wear that strange attire agen?—
How risk herself ‘midst martial men?—
And how be guarded on the way?—
At least she might entreat delay.”
Kind Isabel, with secret smile,
Saw and forgave the maiden’s wife,
Reluctant to be thought to move
At the first call of truant love.⁸

IX.

Oh, blame her not!—when zephyrs wake,
The aspen’s trembling leaves must shake;
When beams the sun through April’s shower,
It needs must bloom, the violet flower;
And Love, howe’er the maiden strive,
Must with reviving hope revive!
A thousand soft excuses came
To plead his cause ‘gainst virgin shame.
Pledged by their sires in earliest youth,
He had her plighted faith and truth——

¹ MS.: “Should instant belt them with the brand.”
² MS.: “From Solway’s sands to wild Cape Wrath,
From Kay’s Rinn’s to Colbrand’s Path.”
³ MS.: “And his mute page were one.
For, versant in the heart of man.”
⁴ MS.: “If brief and vain repinings wake.”
⁵ MS.: “Her lover’s alter’d mood to try.”
⁶ MS.: “Her aged sire had own’d his reign.”
⁷ The MS. here presents, erased—
⁸ “But all was overruled—a band
From Arran’s mountains left the land;
Their chief, MacLouis, had the care
The speechless Amadine to bear
To Bruce, with [honour, ] as behoved
(reverence, )
To page the monarch dearly loved.”
With one verbal alteration these lines occur hereafter—the poet having postponed them in order to apologize more at length for Edith’s acquiescence in an arrangement not, certainly, at first sight so delicate.
Then, 'twas her Liege's strict command,
And she, beneath his royal hand,
A ward in person and in land;
And, last, she was resolved to stay
Only brief space—one little day—
Close hidden in her safe disguise
From all, but most from Ronald's eyes—
But once to see him more!—nor blame
Her wish—to bear him name her name!—
Then, to bear back to solitude
The thought he had his falsehood rued!
But Isabel, who long had seen
Her pallid cheek and pensive mien,
And well herself the cause might know,
Though innocent, of Edith's woe,
Joy'd, generous, that revolting time
Gave means to expiate the crime.
High glow'd her bosom as she said,
"Well shall her sufferings be repaid!"
Now came the parting hour—a band
From Arran's mountains left the land;
Their chief, Fitz-Louis, had the care
The speechless Amadine to bear
To Bruce, with honor, as beloved
To page the monarch dearly loved.

X.
The King had deem'd the maiden bright
Should reach him long before the fight,
But storms and fate her course delay'd;
It was on eve of battle-day
When o'er the Gillies' hill she rode.
The landscape like a furnace glow'd,
And far as e'er the eye was borne,
The lances waved like autumn corn.
In battles four beneath their eye's
The forces of King Robert lie,
And one below the hill was laid,
Reserved for rescue and for aid;
And three, advanced, form'd vanward line
"Twixt launnoch's brook and Nui'n's shrine.
Detach'd was each, yet each so nigh
As well might mutual aid supply.

1 See Appendix, Note 3 P.
2 MS.: "Nearest and plainest to the eye."
3 See Appendix, Note 3 Q.
4 MS.: "One close beneath the hill was laid."
5 See Appendix, Note 3 R.
6 "As a reward for the loyalty and distinguished bravery of the men of Ayr on the occasion referred to in the text, King Robert the Bruce granted them upwards of 1300 Scots acres of land, part of the baillieery of Kyle Stewart, his paternal inheritance, lying in the immediate vicinity of the town of Ayr, which grant King James VI. confirmed to their successors by two charters; one to the freemen of Newton-when-Ayr, the other to the freemen of Prestwick, both boroughs of barony in the same parish, with all the peculiarities of the original constitution.

The former charter contains forty-eight freedoms or baronies—as these subdivisions are called—and the latter thirty-six. The right of succession to these freeholds is limited. A son succeeds his father, nor can his right of succession be beyond, the Southern host appears,
A boundless wilderness of spears,
Whose verge or rear the anxious eye
Strove far, but strove in vain, to spy.
Thick flashing in the evening beam,
Glaives, lancees, bills, and banners gleam;
And where the heaven join'd with the hill
Was distant armor flashing still,
So wide, so far, the boundless host
Seem'd in the blue horizon lost.

XI.
Down from the hill the maiden pass'd,
At the wild show of war aghast;
And travers'd first the rearward host,
Reserved for aid where needed most.
The men of Carrick and of Ayr,
Lennox and Lanark, too, were there,
And all the western land;
With these the valiant of the Isles
Beneath their chief's rank'd their files,
In many a plaided band.
There, in the centre proudly raised,
The Bruce's royal standard blazed,
And there Lord Ronald's banner bore
A galley driven by sail and oar.
A wild yet pleasing contrast made
Warriors in mail and plate array'd,
With the plumed bonnet and the plaid
By these Hebrideans worn;
But oh! unseen for three long years,
Dear was the garb of mountainers
To the fair Maid of Lorn!
For one she look'd—but he was far
Busied amid the ranks of war—
Yet with affection's troubled eye
She mark'd his banner boldly fly,
Gave on the countless fee a glance,
And thought on battle's desperate chance.

XII.
To centre of the vanward line
Fitz-Louis guided Amadine.

Anywise affected by the amount of his father's debts. A widow having no son may enjoy her husband's freehold as long as she lives, but at her death it reverts to the community, the female line being excluded from the right of succession. Nor can any freeman dispose of his freehold except to the community, who must, within a certain time, dispose of it to a neutral person, as no freeman or baron can possess more than one allotment, whereby the original number of freemen is always kept up.

"Each freethower has a vote in the election of the ballies, who have a jurisdiction over the freemen for the recovery of small debts. But though they have the power of committing a freeman to prison, they cannot, in right of their office, lock the prison doors on him, but if he leaves the prison without the proper liberation of the ballies, he thereby forfeits his heriotship or freedom."—Inquest. Spec., pp. 72, 555, 782; Sir John Sinclair's Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ii. pp. 263, 264, 551; Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. iii. pp. 504, 508; Note from Mr. Joseph Trench (1840).

7 See Appendix, Note 3 S.
8 MS.: "Her guard conducted Amadine."
Arm'd all on foot, that host appears
A serried mass of glimmering spears.
There stood the Marchers' warlike band,
The warriors there of Lodon's land;
Etrick and Liddell bent the yew,
A band of archers fierce, though few;
The men of Nith and Annan's vale,
And the bold Spears of Teviotdale;—
The dauntless Douglas these obey,
And the young Stuart's gentle sway.
Northeastward by Saint Ninian's shrine,
Beneath fierce Randolph's charge, combine
The warriors whom the hardy North
From Tay to Sutherland sent forth.
The rest of Scotland's war array
With Edward Bruce to westward lay,
Where Bannock, with his broken bank
And deep ravine, protects their flank.
Behind them, screen'd by sheltering wood,
The gallant Keith, Lord Marshal, stood:
His men-at-arms bare mace and lance,
And plumes that wave, and helms that glance.
Thus fair divided by the King,
Centre, and right, and leftward wing,
Composed his front; nor distant far
Was strong reserve to aid the war.
And 'twas from front of this array
Her guide and Edith made their way.

XIII.
Here must they pause; for, in advance
As far as one might pitch a lance,
The Monarch rode along the van,1
The foe's approaching force to scan,
His line to marshal and to range,
And ranks to square, and fronts to change.
 Alone he rode—from head to heel
Sheathed in his ready arms of steel;
Nor mounted yet on war-horse wight,
But, till more near the shock of fight,
Reining a palfrey low and light.
A diadem of gold was set
Above his bright steel basinet,
And clasp'd within its glittering twine
Was seen the glove of Argentine;
Truncheon or leading staff he lacks,
Bearing, instead, a battle-axe.
He ranged his soldiers for the fight,
Accoutred thus, in open sight
Of either host.—Three bowshots far
Paused the deep front of England's war,
And rested on their arms a while,
To close and rank their warlike file,
And hold high council, if that night
Should view the strife, or dawning light.

XIV.
Oh gay, yet fearful2 to behold,
Flash ing with steel and rough with gold,
And bristled o'er with bills and spears,
With plumes and pennons waving fair,
Was that bright battle-front! for there
Rode England's King and peers:
And who that saw that Monarch ride,
His kingdom battled by his side,
Could then his direful doom foretell!—
Fair was his seat in knightly selle,
And in his sprightly eye was set
Some spark of the Plantagenet.
Though light and wandering was his glance,
It flash'd at sight of shield and lance.
"Know'st thou," he said, "De Argentine,
Yon knight who marshals thus their line?"—
"The tokens on his helmet tell
The Bruce, my Liege: I know him well."—
"And shall the audacious traitor brave
The presence where our banners wave?"—
"So please my Liege," said Argentine,
"Were he but horsed on steed like mine,
To give him fair and knightly chance,
I would adventure forth my lance."—
"In battle-day," the King replied,
"Nice tourney rules are set aside.
—Still must the rebel dare our wrath?
Set on him—sweep him from our path!"—
And, at King Edward's signal, soon
Dash'd from the ranks Sir Henry Bouné.

XV.
Of Hereford's high blood3 he came,
A race renown'd for knightly fame.
He burn'd before his Monarch's eye
To do some deed of chivalry.
He spurr'd his steed, he couched his lance,
And darted on the Bruce at once.
—As motionless as rocks, that bide
The wrath of the advancing tide,
The Bruce stood fast.—Each breast beat high,
And dazzled was each gazing eye—
The heart had hardly time to think,
The eyelid scarce had time to wink,4
While on the King, like flash of flame,
Spurr'd to full speed the war-horse came!
The partridge may the falcon mock,
If that slight palfrey stand the shock;
But, swerving from the Knight's career,
Just as they met, Bruce shunn'd the spear.5
Onward the baffled warrior bore
His course—but soon his course was o'er!—
High in his stirrup's stood the King,
And gave his battle-axe the swing.

1 See Appendix, Note 3 T.
2 MS. t Oh yet fearful, &c.
3 MS. — princely blood, &c.
4 MS. The heart took hardly time to think,
The eyelid scarce had space to wink.
5 MS. Just as they closed in full career,
—Bruce swerved the palfrey from the spear.
Right on De Boune, the whiles he pass'd,
Fell that stern dint—the first—the last!—
Such strength upon the blow was put,
The helmet crash'd like hazel-nut;
The axe-shaft, with its brazed clasp,
Was shiver'd to the gauntlet grasp.
Springs from the blow the startled horse,
Drops to the plain the lifeless corse;
—First of that fatal field, how soon,
How sudden, fell the fierce De Boune!

XVI.

One pitting glance the Monarch sped,
Where on the field his foe lay dead;
Then gently turn'd his halfrey's head,
And, pacing back his sober way,
Slowly he gain'd his own array.
There round their King the leaders crowd,
And blame his recklessness aloud,
That risk'd 'gainst each adventurous spear
A life so valued and so dear.
His broken weapon's shaft survey'd
The King, and careless answer made,—
"My loss may pay my folly's tax;
I've broke my trusty battle-axe."
'Twas then Fitz-Louis, bending low,
Did Isabel's commission show;
Edith, disguised, at distance stands,
And hides her blushes with her hands.
The Monarch's brow has changed its hue;
Away the gory axe he threw,
While to the seeming page he drew,
Clearing war's terrors from his eye.
Her hand with gentle ease he took,
With such a kind protecting look
As to a weak and timid boy
Might speak, that elder brother's care
And elder brother's love were there.

XVII.

"Fear not," he said, "young Amadine!"
Then whisper'd, "Still that name be thine.
Fate plays her wonted fancy,1
Kind Amadine, with thee and me,
And sends thee here in doubtful hour.
But soon we are beyond her power;
For on this chosen battle-plain,
Victor or vanquish'd, I remain.
Do thou to yonder hill repair;
The followers of our host are there,
And all who may not weapons bear.—
Fitz-Louis, have him in thy care.—
Joyful we meet, if all go well;
If not, in Arran's holy cell
Thou must take part with Isabel;
For brave Lord Ronald, too, hath sworn,
Not to regain the Maid of Lorn
(The bliss on earth he covets most)
Would he forsake his battle-post,
Or shun the fortune that may fall
To Bruce, to Scotland, and to all.—
But, hark! some news these trumpets tell;
Forgive my haste—farewell!—farewell!"—
And in a lower voice he said,
"Be of good cheer—farewell, sweet maid!"—

XVIII.

"What train of dust, with trumpet-sound
And glistening spears, is wheeling round
Our leftward flank?"2 the Monarch cried
To Moray's Earl, who rode beside.
"Lo! round thy station pass the foes3
Randolph, thy wreath hath lost a rose."
The Earl his visor closed, and said,
"My wreath shall bloom, or life shall fade.—
Follow, my household!"—And they go
Like lightning on the advancing foe.
"My Liege," said noble Douglas then,
"Earl Randolph has but one to ten:4
Let me go forth his band to aid!"—
"Stir not. The error he hath made,
Let him amend it as he may;
I will not weaken mine array."
Then loudly rose the conflict-cry,
And Douglas's brave heart swell'd high,—
"My Liege," he said, "with patient ear
I must not Moray's death-knell hear!"—
"Then go—but speed thee back again."—
Forth sprung the Douglas with his train:
But, when they won a rising hill,
He bade his followers hold them still.—
"See, see! the routed Southern fly!
The Earl hath won the victory.
Lo! where ye steeds run masterless,
His banner towers above the press.
Rein up; our presence would impair
The fame we come too late to share."—
Back to the host the Douglas rode,
And soon glad tidings are abroad,5
That, Dayncourt by stout Randolph slain,
His followers fled with loosen'd rein,—
That skirmish closed the busy day,
And, couch'd in battle's prompt array,
Each army on their weapons lay.

XIX.

It was a night of lovely June,
High rode in cloudless blue the moon,
Demayet smiled beneath her ray;

1 MS.: ——— "her wonted pranks, I see."
2 See Appendix, Note 8 U.
3 MS.: "Lo! {round } thy post have pass'd the foes."
4 MS.: "Earl Randolph's strength is one to ten."
5 MS.: "Back to his post the Douglas rode,
And soon the tidings are abroad."
Old Stirling's towers arose in light,
And, twined in links of silver bright,
   Her winding river lay.¹
Ah, gentle planet! other sight
Shall greet thee next returning night,
Of broken arms and banners tore,
And marshes dark with human gore,
And piles of slaughter'd men and horse,
And Forth that floats the frequent corse,
And many a wounded wretch to plain
Beneath thy silver light in vain!
But now, from England's host, the cry
Thou hear'st of wassail revelry,
While from the Scottish legions pass
The murmur'd prayer, the early mass!—
Here, numbers had presumption given;
There, bands o'ermatch'd sought aid from Heaven.

XX.
On Gillies' hill, whose height commands
The battle-field, fair Edith stands,
With serf and page unfit for war,
To eye the conflict from afar.
Oh, with what doubtful agony
She sees the dawning tint the sky!—
Now on the Oehlins gleams the sun,
And glistens now Demayet dun;
Is it the lark that carols shrill,
Is it the bitter's early hum?
No!—distant, but increasing still,
The trumpet's sound swells up the drum,
With the deep murmur of the drum.
Responsive from the Scottish host,
Pipe-clang and bugle-sound were toss'd;²
His breast and brow each soldier cross'd,
And started from the ground;
Arm'd and array'd for instant fight,
Rose archer, spearman, squire, and knight,
And in the pomp of battle bright
The dread battalia frown'd.³

XXI.
Now onward, and in open view,
The countless ranks of England drew,⁴
Dark rolling like the ocean tide,
When the rough west has chafed his pride,
And his deep roar sends challenge wide
To all that bars his way!
In front the gallant archers trode,
The men-at-arms behind them rode,
And midmost of the phalanx broad
   The Monarch held his sway.
Beside him many a war-horse fumes,
Around him waves a sea of plumes,
Where many a knight in battle known,
And some who spurs had first braced on,
And deem'd that fight should see them won,
   King Edward's hests obey.
De Argentine attends his side,
With stout De Valence, Pembroke's pride,
Selected champions from the train,
To wait upon his bridle rein.
Upon the Scottish foe he gazed—
—At once, before his sight amazed,
   Sunk banner, spear, and shield;
Each weapon-point is downward sent,
Each warrior to the ground is bent.
   "The rebels, Argentine, repent!"
   For pardon they have kneel'd."—³
   "Aye!—but they bend to other powers,
And other pardon sue than ours!
See where you barefoot Abbot stands,
And blesses them with lifted hands!⁶
Upon the spot where they have kneel'd,
   These men will die, or win the field."
—⁴"Then prove we if they die or win!
Bid Gloster's Earl the fight begin."

XXII.
Earl Gilbert waved his truncheon high,
   Just as the Northern ranks arose,
Signal for England's archery
   To halt and bend their bows.
Then stepp'd each yeoman forth a pace,
   Glanced at the intervening space,
And raised his left hand high;
   To the right ear the cords they bring—⁷
—At once ten thousand bow-strings ring,
   Ten thousand arrows fly!
Nor paused on the devoted Scot
The ceaseless fury of their shot;
   As fiercely and as fast,
Forth whistling came the gray-goose wing
   As the wild hallstones pelt and ring
Adown December's blast.
Nor mountain targe of tough bull-hide,
Nor Lowland mail, that storm may bide;
Woe, woe to Scotland's banner'd pride,
   If the fell shower may last!

¹ The MS. here interposes the couplet—
   "Glancing by fits from hostile line, Armor and lance return'd the shine."
² See Appendix, Note 3 V.
³ "Although Mr. Scott retains that necessary and characteristic portion of his peculiar and well-known manner, he is free, we think, from any faulty self-imitation; and the battle of Bannockburn will remain for ever as a monument of the fertile poetical powers of a writer who had before so greatly excelled in this species of description."—Monthly Review.
⁴ See Appendix, Note 3 V.
⁵ MS. "De Argentine! the cowards repent!
   For mercy they have kneel'd."
⁶ See Appendix, Note 3 X.
⁷ MS. "Drew to his ear the silken string."
XXIII.

Then spurs were dash'd in chargers' flanks,
They rush'd among the archer ranks,
No spears were there the shock to let,
No stakes to turn the charge were set;
And how shall yeoman's armor slight
Stand the long lance and mace of might?
Or what may their short swords avail
'Gainst barbed horse and shirt of mail?
Amid their ranks the chargers sprung,
High o'er their heads the weapons swung,
And shriek and groan and vengeful shout
Give note of triumph and of rout!
A while, with stubborn hardihood,
Their English hearts the strife made good.
Borne down at length on every side,
Compell'd to flight, they scatter wide.—
Let stags of Sherwood leap for glee,
And bound the deer of Dalloch Lee!
The broken bows of Bannock's shore
Shall in the greenwood ring no more!
Round Wakefield's merry May-pole now
The maids may twine the summer bough,
May northward look with longing glance,
For those that went to lead the dance,
For the blithe archers look in vain!
Broken, dispersed, in flight o'erta'en,
Pierced through, trod down, by thousands slain,
They cumber Bannock's bloody plain.

XXIV.

The King with scorn beheld their flight,
"Are these," he said, "our yeomen wight?"
Each braggart churl could boast before,
Twelve Scottish lives his baldric bore! They Fitter to plunder chase or park
Than make a manly foe their mark.—
Forward, each gentleman and knight!
Let gentle blood show generous might,
And chivalry redeem the fight!
To rightward of the wild affray
The field show'd fair and level way;
But, in mid-space, the Bruce's care
Had bored the ground with many a pit,
With turf and brushwood hidden yet,
That form'd a ghastly snare.
Rushing, ten thousand horsemen came,
With spears in rest, and hearts on flame,
That panted for the shock!
With blazing crests and banners spread,
And trumpet-clang and clamor dread,
The wide plain thunder'd to their tread,
As far as Stirling rock.
Down! down! in headlong overthrow,
Horseman and horse, the foremost go,
Wild floundering on the field!
The first are in destruction's gorge,
Their followers wildly o'er them urge;—
The knightly helm and shield,
The mail, the acton, and the spear,
Strong-hand, high heart, are useless here!
Loud from the mass confused the cry
Of dying warriors swells on high,
And steeds that shriek in agony!
They came like mountain torrent red,
That thunders o'er its rocky bed;
They broke like that same torrent's wave
When swallow'd by a darksome cave.
Billows on billows burst and boil,
Maintaining still the stern turmoil,
And to their wild and tortured groan
Each adds new terrors of his own!

XXV.

Too strong in courage and in might
Was England yet, to yield the fight.
Her noblest all are here;

---

1 MS.: —— "their brandish'd spears."
2 See Appendix, Note 3 Y.
3 See Appendix, Note 3 Z.
4 MS.: —— "an armed foe."
5 MS.: "With many a pit the ground to bore,
With turf and brushwood cover'd o'er,
'Had form'd," &c.
6 See Appendix, Note 4 A.
7 See Appendix, Note 4 B.
8 The MS. has:
"When plunging down some darksome cave,
Billow on billow rushing on,
Follows the path the first had gone."
It is impossible not to recollect our author's own lines,—
"As Bracklinn's chasm, so black and steep,
Receives her roaring hum,
As the dark caverns of the deep
Suck the wild whirlpool in;
So did the deep and darksome pass
Devour the battle's mingled mass."

Lady of the Lake, canto vi. stanza xviii.
Names that to fear were never known,
Bold Norfolk’s Earl de Brotherton,
And Oxford’s famed De Vere.
There Glover plied the bloody sword,
And Berkley, Grey, and Hereford,
Bottetourt and Sanzavare,
Ross, Montague, and Manley, came; And Courtenay’s pride, and Percy’s fame—
Names known too well in Scotland’s war,
At Falkirk, Methven, and Dunbar,
Blazed broader yet in after years
At Cressy red and fell Poitiers.
Pembroke with these, and Argentine,
Brought up the rearward battle-line.
With caution o’er the ground they tread,
Slippery with blood and piled with dead,
Till hand to hand in battle set,
The bills with spears and axes met,
And, closing dark on every side,
Raged the full contest far and wide.
Then was the strength of Douglas tried,
Then proved was Randolph’s generous pride,
And well did Stuart’s actions grace
The sire of Scotland’s royal race!
Firmly they kept their ground;
As firmly England onward press’d,
And down went many a noble crest,
And rent was many a valiant breast,
And Slaughter revell’d round.

XXVI.
Unflinching foot! against foot was set,
Uncensing blow by blow was met;
The groans of those who fell
Were drown’d amid the shriller clang
That from the blades and harness rang,
And in the battle-yell.
Yet fast they fell, unheard, forgot,
Both Southern fierce and hardy Scot;
And oh, amid that waste of life,
What various motives fired the strife!
The aspiring Noble bled for fame,
The Patriot for his country’s claim;

This Knight his youthful strength to prove,
And that to win his lady’s love;
Some fought from ruffian thirst of blood,
From habit some, or hardihood.
But ruffian stern, and soldier good,
The noble and the slave,
From various cause the same wild road,
On the same bloody morning, trode,
To that dark inn, the grave!"
"Carrick, press on—they fail, they fail!
Press on, brave sons of Innisgail,
The foe is fainting fast!
Each strike for parent, child, and wife,
For Scotland, liberty, and life,—
The battle cannot last!"

XXIX.
The fresh and desperate onset bore
The foes three furlongs back and more,
Leaving their noblest in their gore.
Alone, De Argentine
Yet hears on high his red-cross shield,
Gathers the relics of the field,
Renews the ranks where they have reel'd,
And still makes good the line.
Brief strife, but fierce,—his efforts raise
A bright but momentary blaze.
Fair Edith heard the Southern shout,
Beheld them turning from the rout,
Heard the wild call their trumpets sent,
In notes 'twixt triumph and lament.
That rallying force, combined anew,
Appear'd in her distracted view
To hem the islemen round;
"O God! the combat they renew,
And is no rescue found!
And ye that look thus tamely on,
And see your native land o'erthrown,
Oh! are your hearts of flesh or stone?"

XXX.
The multitude that watch'd afar,
Rejected from the ranks of war,
Had not unmoved beheld the fight,
When strove the Bruce for Scotland's right;
Each heart had caught the patriot spark,
Old man and stripling, priest and clerk,
Bondsman and serf; even female hand
Stretch'd to the hatchet or the brand;
But, when mute Amadine they heard
Give to their zeal his signal word,
A frenzy fired the throng;
"Portents and miracles impeach
Our sloth—the dumb our duties teach—
And He that gives the mute his speech
Can bid the weak be strong.
To us, as to our lords, are given
A native earth, a promised heaven;
To us, as to our lords, belongs
The vengeance for our nation's wrongs;
The choice, 'twixt death or freedom, warms
Our breasts as theirs—To arms! to arms!"
To arms they flew,—axe, club, or spear,—
And mimic ensigns high they rear,
And, like a banner'd host afar,
Bear down on England's wearied war.

XXXI.
Already scatter'd o'er the plain,
Reproof, command, and counsel vain,
The rearward squadrons fled amain,
Or made but doubtful stay;—
But when they mark'd the seeming show
Of fresh and fierce and marshall'd foe,
The boldest broke array.
Oh, give their hapless Prince his due!
In vain the royal Edward throw
His person 'mid the spears,
Cried "Fight!" to terror and despair,
Menaced, and wept, and tore his hair,
And cursed their coward fears;
Till Pembroke turn'd his bridle rein,
And forced him from the fatal plain.
With them rode Argentine, until
They gain'd the summit of the hill,
But quitted there the train:—
"In yonder field a gage I left,—
I must not live of fame bereft;
I needs must turn again.
Speed hence, my Liege, for on your trace
The fiery Douglas takes the chase,—
I know his banner well.
God send my Sovereign joy and bliss,
And many a happier field than this!—
Once more, my Liege, farewell."

XXXII.
Again he faced the battle field,—
Wildly they fly, are slain, or yield.
"Now then," he said, and couch'd his spear,
"My course is run, the goal is near;
One effort more, one brave career,
Must close this race of mine."
Then in his stirrups rising high,
He shouted loud his battle-cry,
"Saint James for Argentine!"
And, of the bold pursuers, four
The gallant Knight from saddle bore,
But not unharm'd—a lance's point
Has found his breastplate's loosen'd joint,
An axe has razed his crest;
Yet still on Colonsay's fierce Lord,
Who press'd the chase with gory sword,
He rode with spear in rest,
And through his bloody tartans bored,
And through his gallant breast.
Nail'd to the earth, the mountaineer
Yet writhed him up against the spear,
And swung his broadsword round!

---

1 MS.: ———— "of lead or stone."
2 MS.: "To us, as well as them, belongs."
3 See Appendix, Note 4 D.
4 MS.: "And rode in bands away."
5 See Appendix, Note 4 E.
6 MS.: "And bade them hope amid despair."
7 The MS. has not the seven lines which follow.
—Stirrup, steel boot, and cuish gave way
Beneath that blow's tremendous sway;
The blood gush'd from the wound;
And the grim Lord of Colonsay
Hath turn'd him on the ground,
And laugh'd in death-pang that his blade
The mortal thrust so well repaid.

XXXIII.
Now toil'd the Bruce, the battle done,
To use his conquest boldly won;¹
And gave command for horse and spear
To press the Southron's scatter'd rear,
Nor let his broken force combine,
When the war-cry of Argentine
Fell faintly on his ear;
"Save, save his life," he cried, "oh save
The kind, the noble, and the brave!"¹
The squadrions round free passage gave,
The wounded Knight drew near;
He raised his red-cross shield no more,
Helm, cuish, and breastplate stream'd with gore,
Yet, as he saw the King advance,
He strove even then to couch his lance—
The effort was in vain!
The spur-stroke fail'd to rouse the horse;
Wounded and weary, in mid course
He stumbled on the plain.
Then foremost was the generous Bruce
To raise his head, his helm to loose;—
"Lord Earl, the day is thine!
My Sovereign's charge, and adverse fate,
Have made our meeting all too late:
Yet this may Argentine,
As soon from ancient comrade, crave—
A Christian's mass, a soldier's grave."²

XXXIV.
Bruce press'd his dying hand—its grasp
Kindly replied; but, in his clasp,
It stiffen'd and grew cold—
"And, oh farewell!" the victor cried,
"Of chivalry the flower and pride,
The arm in battle bold,
The courteous mixu, the noble race,
The stainless faith, the manly face!—
Bid Ninian's convent light their shrine
For late-wake of De Argentine.
O'er better knight, on death-bier laid,
Torch never gleam'd, nor mass was said!"³

XXXV.
Nor for De Argentine alone
Through Ninian's church these torches shone,
And rose the death-prayer's awful tone.²
That yellow lustre glimmer'd pale
On broken plate and bloodied mail,
Rent crest and shatter'd coronet,
Of baron, earl, and banneret;
And the best names that England knew
Claim'd in the death-prayer dismal due.³
Yet mourn not, Land of Fame!
Though ne'er the leopards on thy shield
Retreated from so sad a field,
Since Norman William came.
Oft may thine annals justly boast
Of battles stern by Scotland lost;
Grudge not her victory,
When for her freeborn rights she strove;
Rights dear to all who freedom love,¹
To none so dear as thee.⁵

XXXVI.
Turn we to Bruce, whose curious ear
Must from Fitz-Louis tidings hear;
With him, a hundred voices tell
Of prodigy and miracle,
"For the mute page had spoke."—
"Page!" said Fitz-Louis, "rather say,
An angel sent from realms of day,
To burst the English yoke.

¹ MS.: "Now toil'd the Bruce, as leaders ought,
   To use his conquest boldly bought."
² See Appendix, Note 4 F.
³ MS.: "And the best names that England owns Swell the sad death-prayer's dismal tones."
⁴ MS.: "When for her rights her sword was bare, Rights dear to all who freedom share."
⁵ "The fictitious part of the story is, on the whole, the least interesting—though we think that the author has hazarded rather too little embellishment in recording the adventures of the Bruce. There are many places, at least, in which he has evidently given an air of heaviness and flatness to his narration, by adhering too closely to the authentic history; and has lowered down the tone of his poetry to the tane level of the rude chroniclers by whom the incidents were originally recorded. There is a more serious and general fault, however, in the conduct of all this part of the story,—and that is, that it is not sufficiently national, and breathes nothing either of that animosity towards England, or that exultation over her defeat, which must have animated all Scotland at the period to which he refers, and ought, consequently, to have been the ruling passion of his poem. Mr. Scott, however, not only dwells fondly on the valor and generosity of the invaders, but actually makes an elaborate apology to the English for having ventured to select for his theme a story which records their disasters. We hope this extreme courtesy is not intended merely to appease critics and attract readers in the southern part of the island; and yet it is difficult to see for what other purposes it could be assumed. Mr. Scott certainly need not have been afraid either of exciting rebellion among his countrymen or of bringing his own liberality and loyalty into question, although, in speaking of the events of that remote period, where an overbearing conqueror was overthrown in a lawless attempt to subdue an independent kingdom, he had given full expression to the hatred and exultation which must have prevailed among the victors, and are indeed the only passions which can be supposed to be excited by the story of their exploits. It is not natural, and we are sure it is not poetical, to represent the agents in such tremendous scenes as calm and indulgent judges of the motives or merits of their opponents; and, by lending such a character to the leaders of his host, the author has actually lessened the interest of the mighty fight of Bannockburn, to that which might be supposed to belong to a well-regulated tournament among friendly rivals."—JEFFREY.
I saw his plume and bonnet drop,
When hurryng from the mountain top;
A lovely brow, dark locks that wave,
To his bright eyes new lustre gave,
A step as light upon the green
As if his pinions waved unseen!"—
"Spoke he with none?"—"With none—one word
Burst when he saw the Island Lord
Returning from the battle-field."—
"What answer made the Chief?"—"He kneel'd,
Durst not look up, but mutter'd low
Some mingled sounds that none might know;
And gretted him 'twixt joy and fear,
As being of superior sphere."

XXXVII.
Even upon Bannock's bloody plain,
Heap'd then with thousands of the slain,
Mid victor Monarch's musings high,
Mirth laugh'd in good King Robert's eye.
And bore he such angelic air,
Such noble front, such waving hair?
Hath Ronald kneel'd to him?"—he said;
Then must we call the Church to aid—
Our will be to the Abbot known,
Ere these strange news are wider blown,
To Cambus-kenneth straight ye pass,
And deck the church for solemn mass,
To pay, for high deliverance given,
A nation's thanks to gracious Heaven.

1 MS.: "Excepted to the Island Lord,
When turning," &c.
2 MS.: "Some mingled sounds of joy and woe."
3 The MS. adds:
"That priests and choir, with morning beams,
Prepare, with reverence as becometh,
To pay," &c.
4 "Bruce issues orders for the celebration of the nuptials; whether they were ever solemnized it is impossible to say. As critics, we should certainly have forbidden the banns; because, although it is conceivable that the mere lapse of time might not have eradicated the passion of Edith, yet how such a circumstance alone, without even the assistance of an interview, could have created one in the bosom of Ronald is altogether inconceivable. He must have proposed to marry her merely from compassion, or for the sake of her hand; and upon either supposition, it would have comported with the delicacy of Edith to refuse his proffered hand."—Quarterly Review.

"To Mr. James Ballantyne.—Dear Sir,—You have now the whole affair, excepting two or three concluding stanzas. As your taste for bride's-cake may induce you to desire to know more of the wedding, I will save you some criticism by saying, I have settled to stop short as above.—Witness my hand."

"W. S."

5 The reader is referred to Mr. Hogg's "Pilgrims of the Sun" for some beautiful lines, and a highly interesting note, on the death of the Duchess of Buccleuch. See ante, p. 407.
6 The Edinburgh Reviewer (Mr. Jeffrey) says, "The story of the 'Lord of the Isles,' in so far as it is fictitious, is palpably deficient both in interest and probability; and, in so far as it is founded on historical truth, seems to us to be objectionable, both for want of incident and want of variety and connection

Let him array, besides, such state
As should on princes' nuptials wait,
Ourself the cause, through fortune's spite,
That once broke short that spousal rite,
Ourself will grace, with early morn,
The bridal of the Maid of Lornu."'

CONCLUSION.
Go forth, my Song, upon thy venturous way;
Go boldly forth; nor yet thy master blame,
Who chose no patron for his humble lay,
And graced thy numbers with no friendly name
Whose partial zeal might smooth thy path to fame.
There was—and oh, how many sorrows crowd
Into these two brief words!—there was a claim
By generous friendship given—had fate allow'd,
It well had bid thee rank the proudest of the proud!

All angel now—yet little less than all,
While still a pilgrim in our world below!
What 'vails it us that patience to recall,
Which hid its own to soothe all other woe;
What 'vails to tell how Virtue's purest glow
Shone yet more lovely in a form so fair;'
And, least of all, what 'vails the world should know
That one poor garland, twined to deck thy hair,
Is hung upon thy hearse, to droop and wither there!'
in the incidents that occur. There is a romantic grandeur, however, in the scenery, and a sort of savage greatness and rude antiquity in many of the characters and events, which relieves the insipidity of the narrative, and atones for many defects in the execution."

After giving copious citations from what he considers as "the better parts of the poem," the critic says, "To give a complete and impartial idea of it, we ought to subjoin some of its more faulty passages. But this is but an irksome task at all times, and, with such an author as Mr. Scott, is both invidious and unnecessary. His faults are nearly as notorious as his beauties; and we have announced in the outset that they are equally conspicuous in this as in his other productions. There are innumerable harsh lines and uncouth expressions,—passages of a coarse and heavy diction,—and details of uninteresting minuteness and oppressive explanation. It is needless, after this, to quote such couples as

'A damsel tired of midnight bark,
Or wanderers of a moulding stark,'—
or—
"Tis a kind youth, but fanciful,
Unfit against the tide to pull;—
or to recite the many weary pages which contain the colloquies of Isabel and Edith, and set forth the unintelligible reasons of their unreasonable conduct. The concerns of these two young ladies, indeed, form the heaviest part of the poem. The mawkish generosity of the one, and the piteous fidelity of the other, are equally oppressive to the reader, and do not tend at all to put him in good humor with Lord Ronald,—who, though the beloved of both, and the nominal hero of the work, is certainly as far as possible from an interesting person. The lovers of poetry have a particular aversion to the inconstancy of other lovers,—and especially to that sort of inconstancy which is liable to the suspicion of being partly inspired by worldly ambition, and partly abjured from considerations of a still meaner selfishness. We suspect, therefore, that they will have but little indulgence for the fickleness of the Lord of the Isles, who breaks the tryst he had pledged to the heiress of Lorn as soon as he sees a chance of succeeding with the king's sister, and comes back to the slighted bride when his royal mistress takes the vows in a convent, and the heiress gets into possession of her lands by the forfeiture of her brother. These characters, and this story, form the great blish of the poem; but it has rather less fire and flow and facility, we think, on the whole, than some of the author's other performances."

The Monthly Reviewer thus assails the title of the poem:—
"The Lord of the Isles himself, selon les règles of Mr. Scott's compositions, being the hero, is not the first person in the poem. The attendent here is always in white muslin, and Tilburina herself in white linen. Still, among the Deuteroprotol (or second best) of the author, Lord Ronald holds a respectable rank. He is not so more a magic-lantern figure, once seen in bower and once in field, as Lord Cranstoun; he far exceeds that tame rabbit boiled to rags without onions or other sauce, De Wilton; and although he certainly falls infinitely short of that accomplished swimmer Malcolm Gramme, yet he rises proportionately above the red-haired Redmond. Lord Ronald, indeed, hated his intended marriage with one woman while he loves another; is a very noble fellow; and, were he not so totally eclipsed by 'The Bruce,' he would have served very well to give a title to any octosyllabic epic, were it even as vigorous and poetical as the present. Nevertheless, it would have been just as proper to call Virgil's divine poem 'The Anchised' as it is to call this 'The Lord of the Isles.' To all intents and purposes the aforesaid quartet is, and ought to be, 'The Bruce.'"

The Monthly Reviewer thus concludes his article:—"In some detached passages, the present poem may challenge any of Mr. Scott's compositions; and perhaps in the abbot's involuntary blessing it excels any single part of any one of them. The battle, too, and many dispersal lines besides, have transcendental merit. In point of fable, however, it has not the grace and elegance of 'The Lady of the Lake,' nor the general clearness and vivacity of its narrative, nor the unexpected happiness of its catastrophe; and still less does it aspire to the praise of the complicated but very proper and well-managed story of 'Rokeby.' It has nothing so pathetic as the 'Cypress Wreath,' nothing so sweetly touching as the last evening scene at Rokeby, before it is broken by Bertram; nothing (with the exception of the abbot) so awfully melancholy as much of Northam's history, or so powerful as Bertram's farewell to Edmund. It vies, as we have already said, with 'Marmion,' in the generally favorable part of that poem; but what has it (with the exception before stated) equal to the immurement of Constance? On the whole, however, we prefer it to 'Marmion,' which, in spite of much merit, always had a sort of noisy royal-circus air with it; a clagicherny, if we may venture on such a word. 'Marmion,' in short, has become quite identified with Mr. Braham in our minds; and we are therefore not perhaps unbiased judges of its perfections. Finally, we do not hesitate to place the 'Lord of the Isles' below both of Mr. Scott's remaining longer works; and as to the 'Play of the Last Minstrel,' for numerous commonplaces and separate beauties, that poem, we believe, still constitutes one of the highest steps, if not the very highest, in the ladder of the author's reputation. The characters of the present tale (with the exception of 'the Bruce,' who is vividly painted from history, and of some minor sketches) are certainly, in point of invention, of the most novel; that is, of the most Minerva-press description; and, as to the language and versification, the poem is in its general course as inferior to 'Rokeby' (by much the most correct and the least justly appreciated of the author's works) as it is in the construction and conduct of its fable. It supplies whole pages of the most prosaic narrative; but, as we conclude by recollecting, it displays also whole pages of the noblest poetry."

The British Critic says:—"No poem of Mr. Scott has yet appeared with fairer claims to the public attention. If it have less pathos than the 'Lady of the Lake,' or less display of character than 'Marmion,' it surpasses them both in grandeur of conception and dignity of versification. It is in every respect decidedly superior to 'Rokeby;' and though it may not reach the 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' in a few splendid passages, it is far more perfect as a whole. The fame of Mr. Scott, among those who are capable of distinguishing the rich ore of poetry from the dross which surrounds it, will receive no small advancement by this last effort of his genius. We discover in it a brilliancy in detached expressions, and a power of language in the combination of images, which has never yet appeared in any of his previous publications.

"We would also believe that as his strength has increased, so his glaring errors have been diminished. But so embedded and engrained are these in the gems of his excellence, that no blindness can overlook, no art can divide or destroy their connection. They must be tried together at the ordeal of time, and descend unseparated to posterity. Could Mr. Scott but 'endow his purposes with words'—could he but decorate the justice and the splendor of his conceptions with more unalloyed aptness of expression, and more uniform strength and harmony of numbers—he would claim a place in the highest rank among the poets of natural feeling and natural imagery. Even as it is, with all his faults, we love him still; and when he shall cease to write, we shall find it difficult to supply his place with a better."

The Quarterly Reviewer, after giving his outline of the story of the 'Lord of the Isles,' thus proceeds:—"In whatever point of view it be regarded, whether with reference to the incidents it contains, or the agents by whom it is carried on, we think that one less calculated to keep alive the interest and curiosity of the reader could not easily have been conceived. Of the characters we cannot say much; they are not conceived with any great degree of originality, nor delineated with any particular spirit. Neither are we disposed to criticise with minuteness the incidents of the story; but we conceive that the whole poem, considering it as a narrative poem, is projected upon wrong principles."

"The story is obviously composed of two independent plots, connected with each other merely by the accidental circumstances of time and place. The liberation of Scotland by Bruce has not naturally any more connection with the loves of Ronald and the Maid of Lorn than with those of Dido and Aeneas; whereas nor are we able to conceive any possible motive which should have induced Mr. Scott to weave them as he has done into the same narrative, except the desire of combining the advantages of a heroical with what we may call, for want of an appropriate word, an ethiop subject; an attempt which we feel assured he never would have made had he duly weighed the very different principles upon which these dissimilar sorts of poetry are founded. Thus, had Mr. Scott introduced the loves of Ronald and the Maid of Lorn as an episode of an epic poem upon the subject of the battle of Bannockburn, its want of connection with the main action might have been excused, in favor of its intrinsic merit; but, by a great singularity of judgment, he has introduced the battle of Bannockburn as an episode in the loves of Ronald and the Maid of Lorn. To say nothing of the obvious preposterousness of such a design, abstractedly considered, the effect of it has, we think, decidedly been to destroy that interest which either of them might separately have created; or, if any interest remain respecting the fate of the ill-requited Edith, it is because at no moment of the poem do we feel the slightest degree of it respecting the enterprise of Bruce.

"The many beautiful passages which we have extracted from the poem, combined with the brief remarks subjoined to each canto, will sufficiently show that, although the 'Lord of the Isles' is not likely to add very much to the reputation of Mr. Scott, yet this must be imputed rather to the greatness of his previous reputation than to the absolute inferiority of the poem itself. Unfortunately, its merits are merely incidental, while its defects are mixed up with the very elements of the poem. But it is not in the power of Mr. Scott to write with tameness; be the subject what it will (and he could not easily have chosen one more impracticable), he impresses upon whatever scenes he describes so much movement and activity,—he infuses into his narrative such a flow of life, and, if we may so express ourselves, of animal spirits,—that without satisfying the judgment, or moving the feelings, or elevating the mind, or even very greatly interesting the curiosity, he is able to seize upon and, as it were, exhilarate the imagination of his readers, in a manner which is often truly unaccountable. This quality Mr. Scott possesses in an admirable degree; and supposing that he had no other object in view than to convince the world of the great poetical powers with which he is gifted, the poem before us would be quite sufficient for his purpose. But this is of very inferior importance to the public; what they want is a good poem and, as experience has shown, this can only be constructed upon a solid foundation of taste and judgment and meditation."

"These passages [referring to the preceding extract from the Quarterly, and that from the Edinburgh Review, at the commencement of the poem] appear to me to condense the result of deliberate and candid reflection, and I have therefore quoted them. The most important remarks of either Essayist on the details of the plot and execution are annexed to the last edition of the poem; and show such an exact coincidence of judgment in two masters of their calling as had not hitherto been exemplified in the professional criticism of his metrical romances. The defects which both point out are, I presume, but too completely explained by the preceding statement of the rapidity with which this, the last of those great performances, had been thrown off [see Life, vol. v. pp. 13-15]; nor do I see that either Reviewer has failed to do sufficient justice to the beauties which redeem the imperfections of the 'Lord of the Isles,' except as regards the whole character of Bruce, its real hero, and the picture of the battle of Bannockburn, which, now that one can compare these works from something like the same point of view, does not appear to me in the slightest particular inferior to the Flodden of 'Marmion.'

"This poem is now, I believe, about as popular as 'Rokeby,' but it has never reached the same station in general favor with the 'Lay,' 'Marmion,' or the 'Lady of the Lake.' The first edition of 1800 copies in quarto was, however, rapidly disposed of, and the separate editions in octavo, which ensued before his poetical works were collected, amounted together to 15,250 copies. This, in the case of almost any other author, would have been splendid success; but, as compared with what he had previously experienced, even in his 'Rokeby,' and still more so as compared with the enormous circulation at once attained by Lord Byron's early tales, which were then following each other in almost breathless succession, the falling off was decided."—Lockhart, vol. v. p. 27.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

Thy rugged halla, Artornish! rung.—P. 410.

The ruins of the castle of Artornish are situated upon a promontory on the Morven or mainland side of the Sound of Mull, a name given to the deep arm of the sea which divides that island from the continent. The situation is wild and romantic in the highest degree, having on the one hand a high and precipitous chain of rocks overlooking the sea, and on the other the narrow entrance to the beautiful salt-water lake, called Loch Alline, which is in many places finely fringed with copsewood. The ruins of Artornish are not now very considerable, and consist chiefly of the remains of an old keep or tower, with fragments of outward defences; but in former days it was a place of great consequence, being one of the principal strongholds which the Lords of the Isles, during the period of their stormy independence, possessed upon the mainland of Argyleshire. Here they assembled what popular tradition calls their parliaments, meaning, I suppose, their cour pleniére, or assembly of feudal and patriarchal vassals and dependents. From this castle of Artornish, upon the 19th day of October, 1461, John de Yle, designating himself Earl of Ross and Lord of the Isles, granted, in the style of an Independent sovereign, a commission to his trusted and well-beloved cousin, Donald of the Isles and Duncan, Archdean of the Isles, for empowering them to enter into a treaty with the most excellent Prince Edward, by the grace of God King of France and England, and Lord of Ireland. Edward IV., on his part, named Laurence, Bishop of Durham, the Earl of Worcester, the Prior of St. John's, Lord Wenlock, and Mr. Robert Stillington, keeper of the privy seal, his deputies and commissioners, to confer with those named by the Lord of the Isles. The conference terminated in a treaty by which the Lord of the Isles agreed to become a vassal to the crown of England, and to assist Edward IV. and James, Earl of Douglas, then in banishment, in subduing the realm of Scotland.

The first article provides that John de Isle, Earl of Ross, with his son Donald Balloch, and his grandson John de Isle, with all their subjects, men, people, and inhabitants, become vassals and liegemen to Edward IV. of England, and assist him in his wars in Scotland or Ireland; and then follow the allowances to be made to the Lord of the Isles in recompense of his military service, and the provisions for dividing such conquests as their united arms should make upon the mainland of Scotland among the confederates. These appear such curious illustrations of the period that they are here subjoined:—

"Item, The said John, Earl of Rosse, shall, from the said fest of Whitsonstede next comyng, yereby, duryng his lyf, have and take, for fees and wages in tyme of pease, of the said most high and Christian prince e. marke sterling of Englysh money; and in tyme of werre, as long as he shall entrede with his myght and power in the said werres, in manner and fourme abovesaid, he shall have wages of xx lb. sterling of Englysh money yereby; and after the rate of the tyme that he shall be occupied in the said werres.

"Item, The said Donald shall, from the said feste of Whitsonstede, have and take, during his lyf, yereby, in tyme of pease, for his fees and wages, xx l. sterling of Englysh money; and when he shall be occupied and intend to the werre, with his myght and power, and in manner and fourme abovesaid, he shall have and take, for his wages yereby, xl l. sterling of Englysh money; or for the rate of the tyme of werre—

"Item, The said John, sonn and heire apparant of the said Donald, shall have and take yereby, from the said fest, for his fees and wages, in the tyme of pease, x l. sterling of Englysh money; and for tyme of werre, and his intenlyng thereto, in manner and fourme abovesaid, he shall have, for his fees and wages yereby, xx l. sterling of Englysh money; or after the rate of the tyme that he shall be occupied in the werre: And the said John, th' Erle Donald and John, and ech of them, shall have good and sufficient payment of the said fees and wages, as well for tyme of pease as of werre, according to these articules and appoyntements. Item, It is appointed, accorded, concluded, and finally determined, that, if it so be that hereafter the seid reame of Scotlande, or the more part thereof, be conquered, subdued, and brought to the obedience of the said most high and Christian prince, and his heires, or successours, of the seid Lionell, in fourme abovesaid descendyng, be the assistance, helpe, and aide of the seid John, Erle of Rosse, and Donald, and of James, Erle of Douglas, then, the seid fees and wages for the tyme of pease cessyng, the same erles and Donald shall have, by the grantee of the same most Christian prince, all the possessions of the seid reame beneyle the Scottishe see, they to be departed equally betwixt them; ech of them, his heires and successours, to hold his parte of the seid most Christian prince, his heires and successours, for evermore, in right of his crowne of England, by homaye and fente to be done therefor.

"Item, If so be that, by th' aide and assistance of the seid James, Erle of Douglas, the seid reame of Scotlande be conquered and subdued as above, then he shall have, enjole, and inherit all his own possessions, landes, and inherittance, on this syde the Scottishe see; that is to say, betwixt the seid Scottishe see and Englande, such he hath rejoiced and be possessed of before this; there to holde them of the seid most high and Christian prince, his heires, and successours, as is abovesaid, for evermore, in right of the crowne of Englonde, as weil the seid Erle of Douglas, as his heires and successours, by homaye and fente to be done therefor."—R YMER'S Federá Conventriones Litera et cuiuscumque generis Acta Publica, fol. vol. v., 1741.

Such was the treaty of Artornish; but it does not appear that the allies ever made any very active effort to realize their ambitious designs. It will serve to show both the power of these regual and their independence upon the crown of Scotland.

It is only further necessary to say of the castle of Artornish that it is almost opposite to the Bay of Aros, in the Island of Mull, where there was another castle, the occasional residence of the Lords of the Isles.

NOTE B.

Rude Heiskar’s seal through surges dark
Will long pursue the ruin’d bard.—P. 410.

The seal displays a taste for music which could scarcely be expected from his habits and local predilections. They will long follow a boat in which any musical instrument is played, and even a tune simply whistled has attractions for them. The Dean of the Isles says of Heiskar, a small uninhabited rock about twelve (Scottish) miles from the Isle of Uist, that an infinite number of seals visits place there.

—

NOTE C.

...a turret’s airy head,
Slender and steep, and batt’d round,
O’erlook’d, dark Mull! thy mighty sound.—P. 411.

The Sound of Mull, which divides that Island from the continent of Scotland, is one of the most striking scenes which the Hebrides afford to the traveller. Sailing from Oban to Aros or Tobernory, through a narrow channel, yet deep enough to bear vessels of the largest burden, he has on his left the bold and mountainous shores of Mull; on the right those of that district of Argyllshire called Morven or Morvern, successively indent by deep salt-water lochs, running up many miles inland. To the southeastward arise a prodigious range of mountains, among which Cruchan-Ben is pre-eminent; and to the northeast is the no less huge and picturesque range of the Ardnamurchan hills. Many ruined castles, situated generally upon cliffs overhanging the ocean, add interest to the scene. Those of Donolly and Dunstaffnage are first passed, then that of Duart, formerly belonging to the chief of the warlike and powerful sept of Macleans, and the scene of Miss Baillie’s beautiful tragedy entitled The Family Legend. Still passing on to the northward, Artornish and Aros become visible upon the opposite shores; and lastly Mingarry and other ruins of less distinguished note. In fine weather, a grander and more impressive scene, both from its natural beauties and associations with ancient history and tradition, can hardly be imagined. When the weather is rough, the passage is both difficult and dangerous, from the narrowness of the channel, and in part from the number of inland lakes, out of which sailly forth a number of conflicting and thwarting tides, making the navigation perilous to open boats. The sudden flaps and gusts of wind which issue without a moment’s warning from the mountain gulls are equally formidable; so that in unsettled weather a stranger, if not much accustomed to the sea, may sometimes add to the other sublime sensations excited by the scene the feeling of dignity which arises from a sense of danger.

NOTE D.

...these seas behold,
Round twice a hundred islands roll’d,
From Hirt, that hears their northern roar,
To the green Ilay’s fertile shore.—P. 412.

The number of the western isles of Scotland exceeds two hundred, of which St. Kilda is the most northerly, anciently called Hirth or Hirt, probably from “earth,” being in fact the whole globe to its inhabitants. Hirt, which now belongs almost entirely to Walter Campbell, Esq., of Shawfield, is by far the most fertile of the Hebrides, and has been greatly improved under the spirited and sagacious management of the present proprietor. This was in ancient times the principal abode of the Lords of the Isles, being, if not the largest, the most important island of their archipelago. In Martin’s time some relics of their grandeur were yet extant. “Loch-Finlagan, about three miles in circumference, affords salmon, trout, and cels: this lake lies in the centre of the isle. The Isle Finlagan, from which this lake hath its name, is in it. It’s famous for being once the court in which the great Mac-Donal’d, King of the Isles, had his residence; his houses, chapel, &c., are now ruined. His guards de corps, called Luchtach, kept guard on the lake side nearest to the isle; the walls of their houses are still to be seen there. The high court of judicature, consisting of fourteen, sat always here; and there was an appeal to them from all the courts in the isles: the eleventh share of the sum in debate was due to the principal judge. There was a big stone of seven foot square, in which there was a deep impression made to receive the feet of Mac-Donal’d; for he was crowned King of the Isles standing in this stone, and swore that he would continue his vassals in the possession of their lands, and do exact justice to all his subjects; and then his father’s sword was put into his hand. The Bishop of Argyle and seven priests anointed him king, in presence of all the heads of the tribes in the isles and continent, and were his vassals; at which time the orator rehearsed a catalogue of his ancestors, &c.”—MARTIN’S Account of the Western Isles. Lond. 1780, 1716, p. 240, l.

NOTE E.

—Mingarry, sternly placed,
Oversees the woodland and the waste.—P. 412.

The castle of Mingarry is situated on the sea-coast of the district of Ardnamurchan. The ruins, which are tolerably entire, are surrounded by a very high wall, forming a kind of polygon, for the purpose of adapting itself to the projecting angles of a precipice overhanging the sea, on which the castle stands. It was anciently the residence of the Macleans, a clan of MacDonalds, descended from Ian or John, a grandson of Angus Og, Lord of the Isles. The last time that Mingarry was of military importance occurs in the celebrated Leabhar-dearg or Red-book of Clanronald, a MS. renowned in the Osminian controversy. Allaster MacDonald, commonly called Colquitto, who commanded the Irish auxiliaries sent over by the Earl of Antrim during the great Civil War to the assistance of Montrose, began his enterprise in 1644 by taking the castle of Kialloch-Alline and Mingarry; the last of which made considerable resistance as might, from the strength of the situation, be expected. In the meanwhile, Allaster MacDonald’s ships, which had brought him over, were attacked in Loch Eisor, in Skye, by an armament sent round by the covenanting parliament, and his own vessel was taken. This circumstance is said chiefly to have induced him to continue in Scotland, where there seemed little prospect of raising an army in behalf of the king. He had no sooner moved eastward to join Montrose—a junction which he effected in the braces of Athole—than the Marquis of Argyle besieged the castle of Mingarry, but without success. Among other warriors and chiefs whom Argyle summoned to his camp to assist upon this occasion was John of Moidart, captain of Clanronald. Clanronald appeared; but, far from yielding effective assistance to Argyle, he took the opportunity of being in arms to lay waste the district of Sunart, then belonging to the adherents of Argyle, and sent part of the spoil to relieve the castle of Mingarry. Thus the castle was maintained until relieved by Allaster MacDonald (Colquitto), who had been detached for the purpose by Montrose. These particulars are hardly worth mentioning, were they not connected with the memorable successes of Montrose, related by an eyewitness, and hitherto unknown to Scottish historians.
APPENDIX TO THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

465

NOTE F.

The heir of mighty Somerdale.—P. 412.

Somerdale was Thane of Argyle and Lord of the Isles, about the middle of the twelfth century. He seems to have exercised his authority in both capacities, independent of the crown of Scotland, against which he often stood in hostility. He made various incursions upon the western lowlands during the reign of Malcolm IV., and seems to have made peace with him upon the terms of an independent prince, about the year 1157. In 1164 he resumed the war against Malcolm, and invaded Scotland with a large but probably a tenuous army, collected in the isles, in the mainland of Argyllshire, and in the neighboring provinces of Ireland. He was defeated and slain in an engagement with a very inferior force, near Renfrew. His son Gillicolane fell in the same battle. This mighty chief lain married a daughter of Olaus, King of Man. From him our genealogists deduce two dynasties, distinguished in the stormy history of the middle ages: the Lords of the Isles, descended from his elder son Ronald, and the Lords of Lorn, who took their surname of McDougal, as descended of his second son Dougall. That Somerdale's territories upon the mainland and upon the islands should have been thus divided between his two sons, instead of passing to the elder exclusively, may illustrate the uncertainty of descent among the great Highland families, which we shall presently notice.

NOTE G.

Lord of the Isles.—P. 412.

The representative of this independent principality, for such it seems to have been, though acknowledging occasionally the pre-eminence of the Scottish crown, was, at the period of the poem, Angus, called Angus Og: but the name has been, euphonious gratia, exchanged for that of Ronald, which frequently occurs in the genealogy. Angus was a protector of Robert Bruce, whom he received in his castle of Dunnaverty during the time of his greatest distress. As I shall be equally liable to censure for attempting to decide a controversy which has long existed between three distinguished chieftains of this family, who have long disputed the representation of the Lord of the Isles, or for leaving a question of such importance altogether untouched, I choose, in the first place, to give such information as I have been able to derive from Highland genealogists, and which, for those who have patience to investigate such subjects, really contains some curious information concerning the history of the Isles. In the second place, I shall offer a few remarks upon the rules of succession at that period, without pretending to decide their bearing upon the question at issue, which must depend upon evidence which I have had no opportunity to examine.

"Angus Og," says an ancient manuscript translated from the Gaelic, "son of Angus Mor, son of Donald, son of Ronald, son of Somerdale, high chief and superior Lord of Innisgall (or the Isles of the Gael, the general name given to the Hebrides), he married a daughter of Cunbui, namely, Cathan; she was mother to John, son of Angus, and with her came an unusual portion from Ireland, viz., twenty-four clans, of whom twenty-four families in Scotland are descended. Angus had another son, namely, young John Fraoch, whose descendants are called Clan-Ean of Glencoe, and the McDонаlds of Fraoch. This Angus Og died in Isla, where his body was interred. His son John succeeded to the inheritance of Innisgall. He had good descendants, namely, three sons procreate of Ann, daughter of Rodric, high chief of Lorn, and one daughter, Mary, married to John Maclean, Laird of Duart, and Lauchlan, his brother, Laird of Coll; she was interred in the church of the Black Nuns. The eldest sons of John were Ronald, Godfrey, and Angus. . . . He gave Ronald a great inheritance. These were the lands which he gave him, viz., from Kilcumin in Abertarf to the river Sell, and from thence to Beilli, north of Eig and Rum, and the two Uists, and from thence to the foot of the river Gliaichan, and threescore long ships. John married afterwards Margaret Stewart, daughter to Robert Stewart, King of Scotland, called John Perewyar; she bore him three good sons, Donald of the Isles, the heir, John the Tainister (i.e., Thane), the second son, and Alexander Carrach. John had another son called Marcus, of whom the clan Macdonald of Cnoc, in Tiweron, are descended. This John lived long, and made donations to Icolmukill; he covered the chapel of Eorsay-Elan, the chapel of Finlaggan, and the chapel of the Isle of Taibhne, and gave the proper furniture for the service of God, upholding the clergy and monks; he built or repaired the church of the Holy Cross immediately before his death. He died at his own castle of Arlitornish, many priests and monks took the sacrament at his funeral, and they embalmed the body of this dear man, and brought it to Icolmukill; the abbot, monks, and vicar, came as they ought to meet the King of Fionglaid, and out of great respect to his memory mourned eight days and nights over it, and laid it in the same grave with his father, in the church of Oran, 1380.

"Ronald, son of John, was chief ruler of the Isles in his father's lifetime, and was old in the government at his father's death.

"He assembled the gentry of the Isles, brought the sceptre from Klibbonan in Eig, and delivered it to his brother Donald, who was thereupon called McDonal, and Donald, Lord of the Isles, contrary to the opinion of the men of the Isles.

"Ronald, son of John, son of Angus Og, was a great supporter of the church and clergy; his descendants are called Clanronald. He gave the lands of Tiruma, in Uist, to the minister of it for ever, for the honor of God and Columcille; he was proprietor of all the lands of the north along the coast and the isle; he died in the year of Christ 1386, in his own mansion of Castle Tirim, leaving five children. Donald of the Isles, son of John, son of Angus Og, the brother of Ronald, took possession of Inisgall by the consent of his brother and the gentry thereof; they were all obedient to him: he married Mary Lesley, daughter to the Earl of Ross, and by her came the cadomin of Ross to the McDонаlds. After his succession to that cadomin, he was called McDonal, Lord of the Isles and Earl of Ross. There are many things written of him in other places.

"He fought the battle of Garloch (i.e., Harlaw) against Duke Murdoch, the governor, the Earl of Mar commanded the army, in support of his claim to the cadomin of Ross, which was ceded to him by King James I., after his release from the King of England; and Duke Murdoch, his two sons and retainers, were beheaded; he gave lands in Mull and Isla.

1 Western Isles and adjacent coast.

2 Innisgall.
to the minister of St. John, and every privilege which the minister of Iona had formerly, besides vessels of gold and silver to Columkille for the monastery, and became himself one of the feoffeees. He left issue, a lawful heir to Innisgall and Ross, namely, Alexander, the son of Donald: he died in Isla, and his body was interred in the south side of the temple of Oran. Alexander, called John of the Isles, son of Alexander of the Isles, son of Donald of the Isles. Angus, the third son of John, son of Angus Og, married the daughter of John, the son of Allan, which connection caused some disagreement between the two families about their marches and division of lands, the one party adhering to Angus, and the other to John: the differences increased so much that John obtained from Allan all the lands betwixt Abban Fadhot (i. e., the long river and old na standnach (i. e., the fox-burn brook), in the upper part of Cantyre. Allan went to the king to complain of his son-in-law; in a short time thereafter, there happened to be a great meeting about this young Angus's lands to the north of Inverness, where he was murdered by his own harper MacCairbre, by cutting his throat with a long knife. He lived a year thereafter, and many of those concerned were delivered up to the king.

Angus's wife was pregnant at the time of his murder, and she bore him a son who was named Donald, and called Donald Du. He was kept in confinement until he was thirty years of age, when he was released by the men of Glenco, by the strong hand. After this confinement, he came to the Isles, and convened the gentry thereof. There happened great feuds betwixt these families while Donald Du was in confinement, inasmuch that MacCean of Ardnamurchan destroyed the greatest part of the posterity of John Mor of the Ried and Cantyre. For John Cathanach, son of John, son of Donald Balloch, son of John Mor, son of John, son of Angus Og (the chief of the descendants of John Mor), and John Mor, son of John Cathanach, and young John, son of John Cathanach, and young Donald Balloch, son of John Cathanach, were treacherously taken by MacCean in the island of Finlagan, in Isla, and carried to Edinburgh, where he got them hanged at the Burrow-muir, and their bodies were buried in the Church of St. Anthony, called the New Church. There were none left alive at that time of the children of John Cathanach, except Alexander, the son of John Cathanach, and Agnes Flach, who concealed themselves in the gles of Ireland. MacCean, hearing of their hiding-places, went to cut down the woods of those gles, in order to destroy Alexander, and extirpate their race. At length MacCean and Alexander met, were reconciled, and a marriage alliance took place; Alexander married MacCean's daughter, and she brought him good children. The MacDonalds of the north had also descendants; for, after the death of John, Lord of the Isles, Earl of Ross, and the murder of Angus, Alexander, the son of Archibald, the son of Alexander of the Isles, took possession, and John was in possession of the earldom of Ross, and the north bordering country; he married a daughter of the Earl of Moray, of whom some of the men of the north had descended. The MacKenzies rose against Alexander, and fought the battle called Biar na Poire. Alexander had only a few of the men of Ross at the battle. He went after that battle to take possession of the Isles, and sailed in a ship to the south to see if he could find any of the posterity of John Mor alive, to rise again with him; but MacCean of Ardnamurchan watched him as he sailed past, followed him to Oronsay and Colonsay, went to the house where he was, and he and Alexander, son of John Cathanach, murdered him there.

"A good while after these things fell out, Donald Galda, son of Alexander, son of Archibald, became major; he, with the advice and direction of the Earl of Moray, came to the Isles, and MacLeod of the Lewis, and many of the gentry of the Isles, rose with him: they went by the promontory of Ardnamurchan, where they met Alexander, the son of John Cathanach, were reconciled to him, he joined his men with theirs against MacCean of Ardnamurchan, came upon him at a place called the Silver Craig, where he and his three sons, and a great number of his people, were killed, and Donald Galda was immediately declared MacDONALD: And, after the affair of Ardnamurchan, all the men of the Isles yielded to him, but he did not live above seven or eight weeks after it; he died at Carnoburg, in Mull, without issue. He had three sisters' daughters of Alexander, son of Archibald, who were portioned in the north upon the continent, but the earldom of Ross was kept for them. Alexander, the son of Archibald, had a natural son, called John Cam, of whom is descended Achmaiseochan, in Ross, and Donald Gorm, son of Alexander Duson, of John Can. Donald Du, son of Angus, son of John of the Isles, son of Alexander of the Isles, son of Donald of the Isles, son of John of the Isles, son of Angus Og, namely, the true heir of the Isles and Ross, came after his release from captivity to the Isles, and convened the men thereof, and he and the Earl of Lennox agreed to raise a great army for the purpose of taking possession, and a ship came from England with a supply of money to carry on the war, which landed at Mull, and the money was given to MacLean of Duart to be distributed among the commanders of the army, which they not receiving in proportion as it should have been distributed among them, caused the army to disperse, which, when the Earl of Lennox heard, he disbanded his own men, and made it up with the king. MacCbolard went to Ireland to raise men, but he died on his way to Dublin, at Drogheda, of a fever, without issue of either sons or daughters?"

In this history may be traced, though the Bard or Sen-nachie touches such a delicate discussion with a gentle hand, the point of difference between the three principal septs descended from the Lords of the Isles. The first question, and one of no easy solution where so little evidence is produced, respects the nature of the connection of John, called by the Archdeacon of the Isles "the Good John of Ila," and "the last Lord of the Isles," with Anne, daughter of Roderick MacDougall, high chief of Lorn. In the absence of positive evidence, presumptive must be resorted to, and I own it appears to render it in the highest degree improbable that this connection was not of the Legitimacy. In the wars between II and Edward Balliol, John of the Isles espoused the Balliol interest, to which he was probably determined by his alliance with Roderick of Lorn, who was, from every family predilection, friendly to Balliol and hostile to Bruce. It seems absurd to suppose that between two chiefs of the same descent, and nearly equal power and rank (though the MacDougals had been much crushed by Robert Bruce), such a connection should have been that of connubium; and it appears more likely that the tempting offer of an alliance with the Bruce family, when they had obtained the decided superiority in Scotland, induced "the Good John of Ila" to disinherit, to a certain extent, his eldest son Ronald, who came of a stock so unpopular as the MacDougals, and to make his succession his younger family, born of his eldest marriage, daughter of Robert, afterwards King of Scotland. The settling aside of this elder branch of his family was most probably a condition of his new alliance, and his being received into favor with the dynasty he had always opposed. Nor were the laws of succession at this early period so clearly understood as to bar such transactions. The numerous and strange claims set up to the crown of Scotland, when vacant by the death of Alexander III, make it manifest how very little the indefensible hereditary right of primogeniture was valued at that period. In fact, the title of the Bruces themselves to the crown, though justly the most popular, when assumed with the determination of asserting the independence of Scotland, was, upon pure principle, greatly inferior to that of Balliol. For Bruce, the competitor, claimed as son of Isabella, second... daughter of David, Earl of Huntingdon; and John Balliol, as grandson of Margaret, the elder daughter of that same earl.
So that the plea of Bruce was founded upon the very loose idea that as the great-grandson of David I, King of Scotland, and the nearest collateral relation of Alexander III., he was entitled to succeed in exclusion of the great-great-grandson of the same David, though by an elder daughter. This maxim savored of the ancient practice of Scotland, which often called a brother to succeed to the crown as nearer in blood than a grandchild, or even a son, of a deceased monarch. But, in truth, the maxims of inheritance in Scotland were sometimes departed from at periods when they were much more distinctly understood. Such a transposition took place in the family of Hamilton in 1513, when the descendants of James, third lord, by Lady Janet Home, were set aside, with an appanage of great value indeed, in order to call to the succession those which he had by a subsequent marriage with Janet Beaton. In short, many other examples might be quoted to show that the question of legitimacy is not always determined by the fact of succession; and there seems reason to believe that Ronald, descendant of "John of Ila" by Anne of Lorn, was legitimate, and therefore Lord of the Isles of Jura, though de facto his younger half-brother Donald, son of his father's second marriage with the Princess of Scotland, succeeded him in his right, and apparently by his own consent.
From this Donald so preferred is descended the family of Stewart, now Lords Macdonald. On the other hand, from Ronald, the excluded heir, upon whom a very large appanage was settled, descended the chiefs of Glengary and Clanronald, each of whom had large possessions and a numerous vassalage, and boasted a long descent of warlike ancestry. Their common ancestor Ronald was murdered by the Earl of Ross at the Monastery of Elcho, A.D. 1346. I believe it has been subject of fierce dispute whether Donald, who carried on the line of Glengary, or Allan of Moidart, the ancestor of the captains of Clanronald, was the eldest son of Ronald, the son of John of Ila. A humble Lowlander may be permitted to waive the discussion, since a Sannachie of no small note, who wrote in the sixteenth century, expresses himself upon this delicate topic in the following words:
"I have now given you an account of every thing you can expect of the descendants of the clan Colla (i.e. the Mac-Donalds), to the death of Donald Du at Drochda, namely, the true line of those who possessed the Isles, Ross, and the mountainous countries of Scotland. It was Donald, the son of Angus, that was killed at Inverness (by his own harper Mac-O'Caibre), son of John of the Isles, son of Alexander, son of Donald, son of John, son of Angus Og. And I know not which of his kindred or relations is the true heir, except these five sons of John, the son of Angus Og, whom I here set down for you, namely, Roland and Godfrey, the two sons of the daughter of Macdonald of Lorn, and Donald and John Mor, and Alexander Carrach, the three sons of Margaret Stewart, daughter of Robert Stewart, King of Scotland."—
Lochard-dearg.

NOTE II.

—the House of Lorn.—P. 412.

The House of Lorn, as we observed in a former note, was, like the Lord of the Isles, descended from a son of Somerled, slain at Reufrew in 1164. This son obtained the succession of his mainland territories, comprehending the greater part of the three districts of Lorn, in Argyleshire, and of course might rather be considered as petty princes than feudal barons. They assumed the patronymic appellation of Mac-
Dougal, by which they are distinguished in the history of the middle ages.
The Lord of Lorn, who flourished during the wars of Bruce, was Allaster (or Alexander) MacDougal, called Allaster of Argyle. He had married the third daughter of John, called the Red Comyn, who was slain by Bruce in the Dominican church at Dunfermline, and hence he was a mortal enemy of that prince, and more than once reduced him to great straits during the early and distressed period of his reign, as we shall have repeated occasion to notice. Bruce, when he began to obtain an ascendancy in Scotland, took the first opportunity in his power to requite these injuries.
He marched into Argyleshire to lay waste the country. John of Lorn, son of the chieftain, was posted with his followers in the formidable pass between Dalmally and Bunaw. It is a narrow path along the verge of the huge and precipitous mountain called Cruachan-Ben, and guarded on the other side by a precipice overhanging Loch Awe. The pass seems to the eye of a soldier as strong as it is wild and romantic to that of an ordinary traveller. But the skill of Bruce had anticipated this difficulty. While his main body, engaged in a skirmish with the men of Lorn, detained their attention to the front of their position, Janpye of Douglas, with Sir Alexander Fraser, Sir William Wiseman, and Sir Andrew Gry ascended the mountain with a select body of archers, and obtained possession of the heights which commanded the pass.
A volley of arrows descending upon them directly warned the Argyleshire men of their perilous situation, and their resistance, which had hitherto been bold and manly, was changed into a precipitate flight. The deep and rapid river of Awe was then (we learn the fact from Barbour with some surprise) crossed by a bridge. This bridge the mountaineers attempted to demolish, but Bruce's followers were too close upon their rear; they were, therefore, without refuge and defence, and were dispersed with great slaughter. John of Lorn, suspicious of the event, had early betaken himself to the galleys which he had upon the lake; but the feelings which Barbour assigns to him, while witnessing the rout and slaughter of his followers, exculpate him from the charge of cowar:
"To Thone off Lorne it sult displace
I trow, quhen he his men mycht se,
Owe off his schippis fra the se,
Be shayne and chassyt in the hill,
That he mycht set na help that till.
But it angrys als gretoun,
To gud harris that ar worthi,
To se thair fayis fulfilth thair will
As to thaim sel' to thole the ill."—B. vii. v. 394.

After this decisive engagement, Bruce laid waste Argyleshire, and besieged Dunstaffnage Castle, on the western shore of Lorn, compelled it to surrender, and placed in that principal stronghold of the MacDoulgs a garrison and governor of his own. The elder MacDougal, now wearied with the contest, submitted to the victor; but his son, "rebellious," says Barbour, "as he went to be," fled to England by sea. When the wars between the Bruce and Balliol factions again broke out in the reign of David II., the Lords of Lorn were again found upon the losing side, owing to their hereditary enmity to the

Tuk, and weldyt til bys wyf,
And on hyr he gat in-till bys lyfe
Jhon of Lorne, the qubilk gat
Ewyn of Lorne eftyr that."— WYNTOUN's Chronicles, book viii. chap. vi. line 206.
house of Bruce. Accordingly, upon the issue of that contest, they were deprived by David II. and his successor of by far the greater part of their extensive territories, which were conferred upon Stewart, called the Knight of Lorn. The house of MacDougal continued, however, to survive the loss of power, and affords a very rare, if not unique, instance of a family of such unlimited power, and so distinguished during the middle ages, surviving the decay of their grandeur, and flourishing in a private station. The castle of Dunolly, near Oban, with its dependencies, was the principal part of what remained to them, with their right of chiefship over the families of their name and blood. These they continued to enjoy until the year 1715, when the representative incurred the penalty of forfeiture, for his accession to the insurrection of that period; thus losing the remains of his inheritance to replace upon the throne the descendants of those princes whose accession his ancestors had opposed at the expense of their feudal grandeur. The estate was, however, restored, about 1745, to the father of the present proprietor, whom family experience had taught the hazard of interfering with the established government, and who remained quiet upon that occasion. He therefore regained his property when many Highland chiefs lost theirs.

Nothing can be more wildly beautiful than the situation of Dunolly. The ruins are situated upon a bold and precipitous promontory, overhanging Loch Etive, and distant about a mile from the village and port of Oban. The principal part which remains is the donjon or keep; but fragments of other buildings, overgrown with ivy, attest that it had been once a place of importance, as large apparently as Arternish or Dunstaffnage. These fragments enclose a courtyard, of which the keep probably formed one side; the entrance being by a steep ascent from the neck of the isthmus, formerly cut across by a moat, and defended doubtless by outworks and a drawbridge. Beneath the castle stands the present mansion of the family, having on the one hand Loch Etive, with its islands and mountains, on the other two romantic eminences tufted with copsewood. There are other accompaniments suited to the scene; in particular a huge upright pillar, or detached fragment of that sort of rock called plum-pudding stone, upon the shore, about a quarter of a mile from the castle. It is called Clach-na-cau, or the Dog's Pillar, because Fingal is said to have used it as a stake to which he bound his celebrated dog Bran. Others say that when the Lord of the Isles came upon a visit to the Lord of Lorn, the dogs brought for his sport were kept beside this pillar. Upon the whole, a more delightful and romantic spot can scarce be conceived; and it receives a moral interest from the considerations attached to the residence of a family once powerful enough to confront and defeat Robert Bruce, and now sunk into the shade of private life. It is at present possessed by Patrick MacDougal, Esq., the lineal and undisputed representative of the ancient Lords of Lorn. The heir of Dunolly fell lately in Spain, fighting under the Duke of Wellington, a death well becoming his ancestry.

NOTE I.

Awake before the rising morn,
The mimic fires of ocean glow,
Those lightenings of the wave.—P. 414.

The phenomenon called by sailors Sea-fire is one of the most beautiful and interesting which is witnessed in the Hebrides. At times the ocean appears entirely illuminated around the vessel, and a long train of lambent coruscations are perpetually bursting upon the sides of the vessel, or pur-of Henry of Luxemburg with such high reputation that he was, in popular estimation, the third worthy of the age. Those to whom fame assigned precedence over him were, Henry of Luxemburg himself, and Robert Bruce. Argentine had warred in Palestine, encountered thrice with the Saracens, and had slain two antagonists in each engagement: an easy matter, he said, for one Christian knight to slay two Pagan dogs. His death corresponded with his high character. With Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, he was appointed to attend immediately upon the person of Edward II. at Banockburn. When the day was utterly lost they forced the king from the field. De Argentine saw the king safe from immediate danger, and then took his leave of him; "God be with you, sir," he said, "it is not my wont to fly." So saying, he turned his horse, cried his war-cry, plunged into the midst of the combatants, and was slain. Baston, a rhyming monk who had been brought by Edward to celebrate his expected triumph, and who was compelled by the victors to compose a poem on his defeat, mentions with some feeling the death of Sir Giles de Argentine:

Nobilis Argeten, pagil inclyte, dolicis Egldii,
Viz scieram mentem curn te succumbere vidit.

"The first line mentions the three chief requisites of a true knight, noble birth, valour, and courtesaness. Few Leonine couplets can be produced that have so much sentiment, I wish that I could have collected more ample memorials concerning a character altogether different from modern manners. Sir Giles d'Argentine was a hero of romance in real life." So observes the excellent Lord Hailes.

NOTE M.

"Fill me the mighty cup," he said,
"First own'd by royal Somertet."—P. 417.

A Hebridean drinking cup, of the most ancient and curious workmanship, has been long preserved in the castle of Dunvegan in Skye, the romantic seat of MacLeod of MacLeod, the chief of that ancient and powerful clan. The horn of Rorie More, preserved in the same family, and recorded by Dr. Johnson, is not to be compared with this piece of antiquity, which is one of the greatest curiosities in Scotland. The following is a pretty accurate description of its shape and dimensions, but cannot, I fear, be perfectly understood without a drawing:

This very curious piece of antiquity is nine inches and three-quarters in inside depth, and ten and a half in height on the outside, the extreme measure over the lips being four inches and a half. The cup is divided into two parts by a wrougeth ledge, beautifully ornamented, about three-fourths of an inch in breadth. Beneath this ledge the shape of the cup is rounded off; and terminates in a flat circle, like that of a tea-cup; four short feet support the whole. Above the projecting ledge the shape of the cup is nearly square, projecting outward at the brim. The cup is made of wood (oak to all appearance), but most curiously wrought and embossed with silver work, which projects from the vessel. There are a number of regular projecting sockets, which appear to have been set with stones; two or three of them still hold pieces of coral, the rest are empty. At the four corners of the projecting ledge, or corncie, are four sockets, much larger, probably for pebbles or precious stones. The workmanship of the silver is extremely elegant, and appears to have been highly gilded. The ledge, brim, and legs of the cup are of silver, the family tradition bears that it was the property of Neil Ghluine-chu, or Black-knee. But who this Neil was no one pretends to say. Around the edge of the cup is a legend, perfectly legible, in the Saxon black-letter, which seems to run thus:

Ufo : Iohis : Mich : | Mgn : Puncips : Dr : |
Pr : Manac : Vich : | Lihia : Aryanell : |
Et : Spat : Bo : Da : | Elia : Illura Ipa : |
Feit : Ano : Di : | 930 Ouii : Oimi : |

The inscription may run thus at length: Ufo Johannis Mich Magni Principis de Hr Manac Vich Lihia Aryanell et oper Domino Thomi dari elementam illorum operae. Feit Ano Domini 930 Ouii Oimi. Which may run in English: Ufo, the son of John, the son of Magnus, Prince of Man, the grandson of Lihia Aryanell, trusts in the Lord Jesus that their works (i.e. his own and those of his ancestors) will obtain mercy. Oneil Oimi made this in the year of God nine hundred and ninety-three.

But this version does not include the puzzling letters ur before the word Manac. Within the month of the cup the letters Jhs. (Jesus) are repeated four times. From this and other circumstances it would seem to have been a chalice. This circumstance may perhaps account for the use of the two Arabic numerals 93. These figures were introduced by Pope Sylvester A. D. 991, and might be used in a vessel formed for church service so early as 993. The workmanship of the whole cup is extremely elegant, and resembles, I am told, antiques of the same nature preserved in Ireland.

The cups, thus elegantly formed and highly valued, were by no means utensils of mere show. Martin gives the following account of the festivals of his time, and I have heard similar instances of brutality in the Lowlands at no very distant period:

"The manner of drinking used by the chief men of the Isles is called in their language Strieh, i.e. a Round; for the company sat in a circle, the cup-bearer filled the drink round to them, and all was drunk out, whatever the liquor was, whether strong or weak; they continued drinking sometimes twenty-four, sometimes forty-eight hours: It was reckoned a piece of manhood to drink until they became drunk, and there were two men with a barrow attending punctually on such occasions. They stood at the door until some became drunk, and they carried them upon the barrow to bed, and returned again to their post as long as any continued fresh, and so carried off the whole company, one by one, as they became drunk. Several of my acquaintance have been witnesses to this custom of drinking, but it is now abolished." This savage custom was not entirely done away within this last generation. I have heard of a gentleman who happened to be a water-drinker, and was permitted to abstain from the strong potations of the company. The bearers carried away one man after another, till no one was left but this Scottish Mirogip. They then came to do him the same good office, which, however, he declined as unnecessary, and proposed to walk to his bedroom. It was a permission he could not obtain. Never such a thing had happened, they said, in the castle! that it was impossible but he must require their assistance, at any rate he must submit to receive it; and carried him off in the barrow accordingly. A classical penalty was sometimes imposed on those who balked the ruffs of good fellowship by evading their share of the banquet. The same author continues:

"Among persons of distinction it was reckoned an affront put upon any company to broach a piece of wine, ale, or aqua vites, and not to see it all drunk out at one meeting. If any man chance to go out from the company, though but for a few minutes, he is obliged, upon his return, and before he take his seat, to make an apology for his absence in rhyme; which if he cannot perform, he is liable to such a share of the reckoning as the company think fit to impose: which custom obtains in many places still, and is called Bianchez Bard, which, in their language, signifies the poet's congratulating the company."

Few cups were better, at least more actively, employed in the rude hospitality of the period than those of Dunvegan; one of which we have just described. There is in the Leabhar-darg a song intimating the overflowing gratitude of a bard of Clanronald, after the exuberance of a Hebridean festival at the patriarchal fortress of MacLeod. The translation being obviously very literal, has greatly flattened, as I am informed, the enthusiastic gratitude of the ancient bard; and it must be owned that the works of Homer or Virgil, to say nothing of MacVuirich, might have suffered by their transference through such a medium. It is pretty plain that when the tribute of poetical praise was bestowed, the horn of Rorie More had not been inactive.

Upon Sir Roderick Mor MacLeod, by Niall Mor Mac Vuirich.

"The six nights I remained in the Dunvegan, it was not a show of hospitality I met with there, but a plentiful feast in thy fair hall among thy numerous host of heroes.

"The family placed all around under the protection of their great chief, raised by his prosperity and respect for his warlike feats, now enjoying the company of his friends at the feast,—Amidst the sound of hargs, overflowing cups, and happy youth unaccustomed to gull, or feud, partaking of the generous fare by a flaming fire.

"Mighty Chief, liberal to all in your princely mansion, filled with your numerous warlike host, whose generous wine would overcome the hardest heroes, yet we continued to enjoy the feast, so happy our host, so generous our fare."—Translated by D. MacIntosh.

It would be unpardonable in a modern bard, who has experienced the hospitality of Dunvegan Castle in the present day, to omit paying his own tribute of gratitude for a reception more elegant indeed, but not less kindly sincere, than Sir Roderick More himself could have afforded. But Johnson has already described a similar scene in the same ancient patriarchal residence of the Lords of MacLeod:—"Whatever is imaged in the wildest tales, if giants, dragons, and enchantment be excepted, would be felt by him who, wandering in the mountains without a guide, or upon the sea without a pilot, should be carried, amidst his terror and uncertainty, to the hospitality and elegance of Raasay or Dunvegan."

---

Note O.

The rebellious Scottish crew,
Who to Rath-Erin's shelter drew,
With Garriel's outlaw'd Chief.—P. 418.

It must be remembered by all who have read the Scottish history that after he had slain Conyn at Dunfries, and asserted his right to the Scottish crown, Robert Bruce was reduced to the greatest extremity by the English and their adherents. He was crowned at Scone by the general consent of the Scottish barons, but his authority endured but a short time. According to the phrase said to have been used by his wife, he was for that year "a summer king, but not a winter one." On the 29th March, 1306, he was crowned king at Scone. Upon the 19th of June, in the same year, he was totally defeated at Methven, near Perth; and his most important adherents, with few exceptions, were either executed or compelled to embrace the English interest for safety of their lives and fortunes. After this disaster, his life was that of an outlaw rather than a candidate for monarchy. He separated himself from the females of his retinue, whom he sent for safety to the castle of Kildrummy, in Aberdeenshire, where they afterward became captives to England. From Aberdeenshire, Bruce retreated to the mountainous parts of Breadalbane, and approached the borders of Argyleshire. There, as mentioned in the Appendix, Note II, and more fully in Note I, he was defeated by the Lord of Lorn, who had assumed arms against him in revenge of the death of his relative, John the Red Conyn. Escaped from this peril, Bruce, with his few attendants, subsisted by hunting and fishing, until the weather compelled them to seek better sustenance and shelter than the Highland mountains afforded. With great difficulty they crossed, from Rowardennan probably, to the western banks of Loch Lomond, partly in a miserable boat, and partly by swimming. The valiant and loyal Earl of Lennox, to whose territories they had now found their way, welcomed them with tears, but was unable to assist them to make an effectual head. The Lord of the Isles, then in possession of great part of Cantyre, received the fugitive monarch and future restorer of his country's Independence, in his castle of Dunnaverty, in that district. But treason, says Barbour, was so general that the king durst not abide there. Accordingly, with the remnant of his followers, Bruce embarked for Rath-Erin, or Raerine, the Recla of Prolemy, a small island lying almost opposite to the shores of Ballycastle, on the coast of Ireland. The islanders at first fled from their new and armed guests, but upon some explanation submitted themselves to Bruce's sovereignty. He resided among them until the approach of spring (1306), when he again returned to Scotland, with the desperate resolution to reconquer his kingdom or perish in the attempt. The progress of his success, from its commencement to its completion, forms the brightest period in Scottish history.

---

Note N.

With solemn step, and siluer wand,
The Soneschal the presence sound'd
Of these strange guests.—P. 418.

The Sewer, to whom, rather than the Soneschal, the office of arranging the guests of an island chief appertained, was an officer of importance in the family of a Hebridean chief. "Every family had commonly two stewards, which, in their language, were called Marischal Tach: the first of these served always at home, and was obliged to be versed in the pedigree of all the tribes in the isles, and in the highlands of Scotland; for it was his province to assign every man at table his seat according to his quality; and this was done without one word speaking, only by drawing a score with a white rod, which this Marischal had in his hand, before the person who was bid by him to sit down; and this was necessary to prevent disorder and contention; and though the Marischal might sometimes be mistaken, the master of the family incurred no censure by such an escape; but this custom has been laid aside of late. They had also cup-bearers, who always filled and carried the cup round the company, and he himself always drank off the first draught. They had likewise purse-masters, who kept their money. Both these officers had an hereditary right to their office in writing, and each of them had a town and land for his service; some of those rights I have seen fairly written on good parchment."—Martin's Western Isles.
APPENDIX TO THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

NOTE P.

The Brooch of Lorn.—P. 419.

It has been generally mentioned in the preceding notes that Robert Bruce, after his defeat at Methven, being hard pressed by the English, endeavored, with the dispirited remnant of his followers, to escape from Breadalbane and the mountains of Perthshire into the Argyleshire Highlands. But he was encountered and repulsed, after a very severe engagement, by the Lord of Lorn. Bruce's personal strength and courage were never displayed to greater advantage than in this conflict. There is a tradition in the family of the MacDougalls of Lorn that their chieflain engaged in personal battle with Bruce himself; while the latter was employed in protecting the retreat of his men; that MacDougall was struck down by the King, whose strength of body was equal to his vigor of mind, and would have slain on the spot had not two of Lorn's men, a father and son, whom tradition terms MacKooch, rescued him by seizing the mantle of the monarch and dragging him from above his adversary. Bruce rid himself of these foes by two blows of his redoubted battle-axe, but was so closely pressed by the other followers of Lorn that he was forced to abandon the mantle, and brooch which fastened it, clasped in the dying grasp of the MacKoochs. A studded brooch, said to have been that which King Robert lost upon this occasion, was long preserved in the family of MacDougall, and was lost in a fire which consumed their temporary residence.

The metrical history of Barbour throws an air of credibility upon the tradition, although it does not entirely coincide either in the names or number of the vassals by whom Bruce was assaulted, and makes no mention of the personal danger of Lorn, or of the loss of Bruce's mantle. The last circumstance, indeed, might be warrantably omitted.

According to Barbour, the king, with his handful of followers, not amounting probably to three hundred men, encountered Lorn with about a thousand Argyleshire men in Glen-Douchart, at the head of Breadalbane, near Teydurnam. The place of action is still called Dalry, or the King's Field. The field of battle was unfavorable to Bruce's adherents, who were chiefly men-at-arms. Many of the horses were slain by the long poles-axes, of which the Argyleshire Scottish had learned the use from the Norwegians. At length Bruce commanded a retreat up a narrow and difficult pass, he himself bringing up the rear, and repeatedly turning and driving back the more venturesome assailants. Lorn, observing the skill and valor used by his enemy in protecting the retreat of his followers, "Methinks, Muthlochon," said he, addressing one of his followers, "he resembles Gol Mak-morn, protecting his followers from Fingal."—"A most unworthy comparison," observes the Archdeacon of Aberdeen, unsuspicious of the future fame of these names; "he might with more propriety have compared the king to Sir Gaudeor de Layrs, protecting the foragers of Gadyrs against the attacks of Alexander." Two brothers, the strongest among Lorn's followers, whose names Barbour calls Mackyn-Drosser (interpreted Durward, or Porterson), resolved to rid their chief of this formidable foe. A third person (perhaps the MacKooch of the family tradition) associated himself with them for this purpose. They watched their opportunity until Bruce's party had entered a pass between a lake (Loch Dochart probably) and a precipice, where the king, who was the last of the party, had scarce room to manage his steed. Here his three foes sprang upon him at once. One seized his bridle, but received a wound which bled off his arm; a second grasped Bruce by the stirrup and leg, and endeavored to dismount him, but the king, putting spurs to his horse, threw him down, still holding by the stirrup. The third, taking advantage of an activity, sprung up behind him upon his horse. Bruce however, whose personal strength is uniformly mentioned as exceeding that of most men, extricated himself from his grasp, threw him to the ground, and left his skull with his sword. By similar exertion he drew the stirrup from his grasp whom he had overthrown, and killed him also with his sword as he lay among the horse's feet. The story seems romantic, but this was the age of romantic exploit; and it must be remembered that Bruce was armed cap-a-pie, and the assailants were half-clad mountaineers. Barbour adds the following circumstance, highly characteristic of the sentiments of chivalry:—MacNaughton, a baron of Cowal, pointed out to the Lord of Lorn the deeds of valor which Bruce performed in this memorable retreat, with the highest expressions of admiration. "It seems to give thee pleasure," said Lorn, "that he makes such havoc among our friends."—"Not so, by my faith," replied MacNaughton; "but be he friend or foe who achieves high deeds of chivalry, men should bear faithful witness to his valor; and never have I heard of one who, by his knightly feats, has extricated himself from such dangers as have this day surrounded Bruce."

NOTE Q.

Wrought and chased with rare device,
Studded fair with gems of price.—P. 419.

Great art and expense was bestowed upon the fibula, or brooch, which secured the plaid, when the wearer was a person of importance. Martin mentions having seen a silver brooch of a hundred marks value. "It was broad as any ordinary pewter plate, the whole curiously engraven with various animals, &c. There was a lesser buckle, which was worn in the middle of the larger, and above two ounces weight; it had in the centre a large piece of crystal, or some finer stone, and this was set all round with several finer stones of a lesser size."—Western Islands. Pennant has given an engraving of such a brooch as Martin describes, and the workmanship of which is very elegant. It is said to have belonged to the family of Lochbain.—See PENNANT'S TOUR, vol. iii. p. 14.

NOTE R.

Vain was then the Douglas brand,
Vain the Campbell's vaited hand.—P. 419.

The gallant Sir James, called the Good Lord Douglas, the most faithful and valiant of Bruce's adherents, was wounded

1 "This is a very curious passage, and has been often quoted in the Ossianic controversy. That it refers to ancient Celtic tradition there can be no doubt, and as little that it refers to no incident in the poems published by Mr. Macpherson as from the Gaelic. The hero of romance, whom Barbour thinks a more proper prototype for the Bruce, occurs in the romance of Alexander, of which there is a unique translation into Scottish verse in the library of the Honorable Mr. Maule, now Earl of Panmure."—See WEBER'S ROMANCES, vol. i. appendix to Introduction, p. lxxiii.
at the battle of Dalry. Sir Nigel or Neil Campbell was also in that unfortunate skirmish. He married Marjorie, sister to Robert Bruce, and was among his most faithful followers. In a manuscript account of the house of Argyle, supplied, it would seem, as material for Archbishop Spottiswoode's History of the Church of Scotland, I find the following passage concerning Sir Neil Campbell:—Moreover, when all the nobles in Scotland had left King Robert after his hard success, yet this noble knight was most faithful, and shrunk not, as it is to be seen in an indeniture bearing these words:—Memorandum quod ab incarnatione Domini 1308 conventum fuit et concordantia inter nobis viros Dominum Alexanderum de Scatoun mittente et Dominium Gilbertum de Heye mittente et Dominium Nigelum Campbell mittente apud monasterium de Cambuskenneth.

At the battle of Dunbar, Sir Neil Campbell et al. were with the Earl of Angus; and he, with the Earl of Buchan, were with the Earl of Orkney.

Note S.

When Comyn fell beneath the knife Of that fell homicide the Bruce. —P. 416.

Vain Kirkpatrick's bloody dirk, Making sure of murder's work. —P. 419.

Every reader must recollect that the proximate cause of Bruce's asserting his right to the crown of Scotland was the death of John, called the Red Comyn. The causes of this act of violence, equally extraordinary from the high rank both of the perpetrator and sufferer and from the place where the slaughter was committed, are variously related by the Scottish and English historians, and cannot now be ascertained. The fact that they met at the high altar of the Minorites, or Greyfriars' Church in Dumfries, that their difference broke out into high and insulting language, and that Bruce drew his dagger and stabbed Comyn, is certain. Rushing to the door of the church, Bruce met two powerful barons, Kirkpatrick of Closeburn and James de Lindsay, who eagerly asked him what tidings. "Bad tidings," answered Bruce; "I doubt I have slain Comyn."—"Doubtest thou?" said Kirkpatrick; "I make sicker" (i.e., sure). With these words, he and Lindsay rushed into the church and despatched the wounded Comyn. The Kirkpatricks of Closeburn assumed, in memory of this deed, a hand holding a dagger, with the memorable words, "I make sicker." Some doubt having been started by the late Lord Hailes as to the identity of the Kirkpatrick who completed this day's work with Sir Roger, then representative of the ancient family of Closeburn, my kind and ingenious friend, Mr. Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, has furnished me with the following memorandum, which appears to fix the deed with his ancestor:—

"The circumstances of the Regent Cummin's murder, from which the family of Kirkpatrick, in Nithsdale, is said to have derived its crest and motto, are well known to all conversant with Scottish history; but Lord Hailes has started a doubt as to the authenticity of this tradition, when recording the murder of Roger Kirkpatrick in his own castle of Caerlaferrock, by Sir James Lindsay. 'Fordun,' says his lordship, 'remarks that Lindsay and Kirkpatrick were the heirs of the two men who accompanied Robert Bruce at the fatal conference with Comyn. If Fordun was rightly informed as to this particular, an argument arises, in support of a notion which I have long entertained, that the person who struck his dagger in Comyn's heart was not the representative of the honourable family of Kirkpatrick in Nithsdale. Roger de K. was made prisoner at the battle of Durham, in 1346. Roger de Kirkpatrick was alive on the 6th of August, 1357; for, on that day, Humphry, the son and heir of Roger de K., is proposed as one of the young gentlemen who were to be hostages for David Bruce. Roger de K. Miles was present at the parliament held at Edinburgh, 25th September, 1357, and he is mentioned as alive 31 October, 1357, (Foldec.) it follows, of necessary consequence, that Roger de K., murdered in June, 1357, must have been a different person.—Annals of Scotland, vol. ii. p. 212.

"To this it may be answered, that at the period of the regent's murder, there were only two families of the name of Kirkpatrick (nearly allied to each other) in existence—Stephen Kirkpatrick, styled in the Chartulary of Kelso (1278) Dominus villa de Closeburn, Filius et heres Domini Ade de Kirkpatrick, Militia, (whose father, Ivone de Kirkpatrick, witnesses a charter of Robert Brus, Lord of Annandale, before the year 1141,) had two sons, Sir Roger, who carried on the line of Closeburn, and Duncan, who married Isobel, daughter and heiress of Sir David Torthalward of that ilk; they had a charter of the lands of Torthalward from King Robert Brus, dated 16th August, the year being omitted—Umaphry, the son of Duncan and Isobel, got a charter of Torthalward from the king, 16th July, 1322—his son, Roger of Torthalward, got a charter from John the Grahame, son of Sir John Grahame of Moskess, of an annual rent of 40 shillings, out of the lands of Overdri, 1355—his son, William Kirkpatrick, grants a charter to John of Garroch, of the twa merk land of Glengip and Garvelligill, within the tenement of Wamphray, 23d April, 1372. From this, it appears that the Torthalward branch was not concerned in the affair of Comyn's murder, and the indignities of Providence which ensued: Duncan Kirkpatrick, if we are to believe the Blind Minstrel, was the firm friend of Wallace, to whom he was related:—

'Ane Kyrk Patrick, that cruel was and keyne, In Easail wed that half yer he had beyn; With Inglish men he cough nocht weyll accord, Off Torthorald he Barron was and Lord, Off kyn he was, and Wallace modyr neg.' A.D. 1314. B. v, v. 290.

But this baron seems to have had no share in the adventures of King Robert; the crest of his family, as it still remains on a carved stone built into a cottage wall, in the village of Torthalward, bears some resemblance, says Grose, to a rose.

'Universal tradition, and all our later historians, have attributed the regent's death-blow to Sir Roger K. of Closeburn. The author of the MS. History of the Presbytery of Penpont, in the Advocates' Library, affirms, that the crest and motto were given by the king on that occasion; and proceeds to relate some circumstances respecting a grant to a cottager and his wife in the vicinity of Closeburn Castle, which are certainly authentic, and strongly touch for the truth of the other report.—'The steep hill,' (says he,) 'called the Dune of Tynon, of a considerable height, upon the top of which there hath been some habitation or fort. There have been in ancient times, on all hands of it, very thick woods, and great about that place, which made it the more inaccessible, into which K. Ro. Bruce is said to have been conducted by Roger Kirkpatrick of Closeburn, after they had killed the Cumin at Dumfriss, which is nine miles from this place, whereabouts it is probable that he did abide for some time thenceafter; and it is reported, that during his abode there, he did often divert to a poor man's cottage, named Brownrig, situate in a small parcel of stony ground, encompassed with thick woods, where he was content, sometimes with such mean accommodation as the place could afford. The poor man's wife being advised to petition the king for somewhat, was so modest in her desires, that she sought no more but security for the croft in her husband's possession, and a liberty of pasturage for a very few cattle of different kinds on the hill, and the rest of the bounds. Of which privilege that ancient family, by the injury of time, hath a long time been, and is, deprived: but the croft continues in the possession of the heirs and successors lineally descended of this Brownrig and his wife; so that this family, being more ancient than rich, doth yet continue in the name, and, as they say, retains the old charter."
APPENDIX TO THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

NOTE T.

Barendown fled fast away,
Fled the fiery De la Haye.—P. 419.

These knights are enumerated by Barbour among the small number of Bruce's adherents who remained in arms with him after the battle of Methven.

"With him was a bold baron,
Schyr William the Barroundoun,
... ... ...
Schyr Gilbert de la Haye alsau."

There were more than one of the noble family of Hay engaged in Bruce's cause; but the principal was Gilbert de la Haye, Lord of Errol, a staunch adherent to King Robert's interest, and whom he rewarded by creating him hereditary Lord High Constable of Scotland, a title which he used 16th March, 1308, where in a letter to the peers of Scotland to Philip the Fair of France, he is designed Gilbertus de Haye Constabularius Scotiae. He was slain at the battle of Halidon Hill. Hugh de la Haye, his brother, was made prisoner at the battle of Methven.

NOTE U.

Well hast thou framed, Old Man, thy strains,
To praise the hand that pays thy pains.—P. 419.

The character of the Highland bards, however high in an earlier period of society, seems soon to have degenerated. The Irish affirm that in their kindred tribes severe laws became necessary to restrain their avarice. In the Highlands they seem gradually to have sunk into contempt, as well as the orators, or men of speech, with whose office that of family poet was often united. "The orators, in their language called Islane, were in high esteem both in these islands and the continent; until within these forty years, they sat always among the nobles and chiefs of families in the stew or circle. Their houses and little villages were sanctuaries, as well as churches, and they took place before doctors of physic. The orators, after the Druids were extinct, were brought in to preserve the genealogy of families, and to repeat the same at every succession of chiefs; and upon the occasion of marriages and births, they made epithalamiums and panegyrics, which the poet or bard pronounced. The orators, by the force of their eloquence, had a powerful ascendancy over the greatest men in their time; for if any orator did but ask the habit, arms, horse, or any other thing belonging to the greatest man in these islands, it was readily granted them, sometimes out of respect, and sometimes for fear of being exclaimed against by a satyre, which, in those days, was reckoned a great distinction. But these gentlemen becoming insolent, lost ever since both the profit and esteem which was formerly due to their character; for neither their panegyrics nor satyres are regarded to what they have been, and they are now allowed but a small salary. I must not omit to relate their way of study, which is very singular: They shut their doors and windows for a day's time, and lie on their backs, with a stone upon their belly, and plads about their heads, and their eyes being covered, they pump their brains for rhetorical encomium or panegyrick; and indeed they furnish such a style from this dark cell as is understood by very few; and if they purchase a couple of horses as the reward of their meditation, they think they have done a great matter. The poet, or bard, had a title to the bridegroom's upper garb, that is, the plaid and bonnet; but now he is satisfied with what the bridegroom pleases to give him on such occasions."—MARTIN's Western Isles.

NOTE W.

Since matchless Wallace first had been
In mock'ry crown'd with wreaths of green.—P. 422.

Stow gives the following curious account of the trial and execution of this celebrated patriot:—"William Wallace, who had oft-times set Scotland in great trouble, was taken and brought to London, with great numbers of men and women wondering upon him. He was lodged in the house of William Defect, a citizen of London, in Fenchurch-street. On the morrow, being the eye of St. Bartholomew, he was brought on horseback to Westminster, John Legrave and Geoffrey, knights, the mayor, sheriffs, and aldermen of London, and many others, both on horseback and on foot, accompanying him; and in the great hall at Westminster, he being placed on the south bench, crowned with laurel, for that he had said in times past that he ought to bear a crown in that hall, as it was commonly reported; and being appeached for a traitor by Sir Peter Malorie, the king's justice, he answered, that he was never traitor to the King of England; but for other things whereof he was accused, he confessed them; and was after headed and quartered."—Stow, Chr. p. 260. There is something singularly doubtful about the mode in which Wallace was taken. That he was betrayed to the English is indubitable; and popular fame charges Sir John Menteith with the indelible infamy. "Accursed," says Arnold Blair,
"the day of nativity of John de Menteith, and may his name be struck out of the book of Life." But John de Menteith was all along a zealous favorer of the English interest, and was governor of Dumbarton Castle by commission from Edward I., and therefore, as the accurate Lord Hailes has observed, could not be the friend and confidant of Wallace, as tradition states him to be. Truth seems to be that Menteith, thoroughly engaged in the English interest, pursued Wallace closely, and made him prisoner through the treachery of an attendant, whom Peter Langtoft calls Jack Short.

"William Wallace is nomen that master was of theives, Tiding to the king is comen that robbery mischives, Sir John of Menteith said William so nigh. He took him when he ween'd least, on night, his lenman him by, That was through treason of Jack Short his man, He was the euchenon that Sir John so him ran, Jack's brother had he slain, the Walleis that is said, The more Jack was fain to do William that braid."

From this it would appear that the infamy of seizing Wallace must rest between a degenerate Scottish nobleman, the vassal of England, and a domestic, the obscure agent of his treachery; between Sir John Menteith, son of Walter, Earl of Menteith, and the traitor Jack Short.

NOTE X.

Where's Nigel Bruce? and De la Haye, And valiant Seton—where are they? Where Somerville, the kind and free? And Fraser, flower of chivalry?—P. 422.

When these lines were written, the author was remote from the means of correcting his indistinct recollection concerning the individual fate of Bruce's followers, after the battle of Methven. Hugh de la Haye, and Thomas Somerville of Lin- toun and Cowdally, ancestor of Lord Somervile, were both made prisoners at that defeat, but neither was executed. Sir Nigel Bruce was the younger brother of Robert, to whom he committed the charge of his wife and daughter, Marjorie, and the defence of his strong castle of Kildrummie, near the head of the Don, in Aberdeenshire. Kildrummie long resisted the arms of the Earls of Lancaster and Hereford, until the magazine was treacherously burnt. The garrison was then compelled to surrender at discretion, and Nigel Bruce, a youth remarkable for personal beauty, as well as for gallantry, fell into the hands of the unrelentful Edward. He was tried by a special commission at Berwick, was condemned, and executed.

Christopher Scatoun shared the same unfortunate fate. He also was distinguished by personal valor, and signalized himself in the fatal battle of Methven. Robert Bruce adventured his person in that battle like a knight of romance. He dismounted Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, but was in his turn dismounted by Sir Philip Mowbray. In this emergence Scatoun came to his aid, and remounted him. Langtoft mentions that in this battle the Scottish wore white surplises or shirts over their armor, that those of rank might not be known. In this manner both Bruce and Scatoun escaped. But the latter was afterwards betrayed to the English, through means, according to Barbour, of one MacNab, "a disciple of Judas," in whom the unfortunate knight reposed entire confidence. There was some peculiarity respecting his punish-

1 Periwinkle. 2 Head. 3 He was condemned to be beheaded.
In a kirtle of bured, a selcouth wise,
And a garland on his head of the new guise.

Through Cheape
Many men of England
For to see Symond
Thitherward can leap.

"Though he cam to the gallows first he was on hung,
All quick behved that he thought long:
Then he was y-opened, his bowels y-bred,"
The heved to London-bridge was send
To shende,
So evermore mote I the,
Some while weened he
Thus little to stand.\(^1\)

"He rideth through the city, as I tell may,
With gamen and with solace that was their play,
To London-bridge he took the way,
Mony was the wives child that thereon lacketh a day,\(^3\)
With a sparrow in his hand,
To play on the green.\(^4\)

The preceding stanzas contain probably as minute an account as can be found of the trial and execution of state criminals of the period. Superstition mingled its horrors with those of a ferocious state policy, as appears from the following singular narrative:

"The Friday next before the assumption of Our Lady, King Edward met Robert the Bruce at Saint Johnstone, in Scotland, and with his company, of which company King Edward quelled seven thousand. When Robert the Bruce saw this mischief, and gan to see, and how'd him that men might not him find; but S. Simond Frisell pursued was so sore, so that he turned again and abode battle, for he was a worthy knight and a noble of body, and the Englishmen pursued him sore on every side, and quelled the steed that Sir Simon Frisell rode upon, and then toke him and led him to the host. And S. Symond began for to flatter and spoke fair, and said, Lordys, I shall give you four thousand markes of silver, and myne horse and harness, and all my armour and income. The anwered Thobaude of Pevenes, that was the kings archer, Now, God me so helpe, it is for nought that thou speakest, for all the gold of England I would not let thee go without commandment of King Edward. And tho' he was led to the king, and the king would not see him, but commanded to lead him away to his doom in London, on Our Lady's even nativity. And he was hung and drawn, and his head smitten off, and hanged again with chains of iron upon the gallows, and his head was set at London-bridge upon a spear, and against Christmas the body was burnt, for enchen (reason) that the men that kepted the body saw many devils ramping with iron crooks, running upon the gallows, and horribly tormenting the body. And many that them saw, anon thereafter died for dread, or waxen mad, or sore sickness they had."—MS. Chronicle in the British Museum, quoted by Ritson.

---

Note Y.

*Was not the life of Athole shed
To soothe the tyrant's sicken'd bed?—P. 422.*

John de Strathbogie, Earl of Athole, had attempted to escape out of the kingdom, but a storm cast him upon the coast, when he was taken, sent to London, and executed with circumstances of great barbarity, being first half strangled, then let down from the gallows while yet alive, barbarously dismembered, and his body burnt. It may surprise the reader to learn that this was a mitigated punishment; for in respect that his mother was a granddaughter of King John, by his natural son Richard, he was not drawn on a sledge to execution; "that point was forgiven," and he made the passage on horseback. Matthew of Westminster tells us that King Edward, then extremely ill, received great ease from the news that his relative was appehended. "Quo audite, Rex Angliae, esti gravisissimo, morbo tuace langueret, levis tamen tulit dolorem." To this singular expression the text alludes.

---

Note Z.

*And must his word, till dying day,
Be nought but quarter, hang, and stay?—P. 422.*

This alludes to a passage in Barbour, singularly expressive of the vindictive spirit of Edward I. The prisoners taken at the castle of Kildrummie had surrendered upon condition that they should be at King Edward's disposal. "But his will," says Barbour, "was always evil towards Scottishmen." The news of the surrender of Kildrummie arrived when he was in his mortal sickness at Burgh-upon-Sands.

"And when he to the death was near,
The folk that at Kildromy wer
Come with prisoners that they had tame,
And syne to the king are gane.
And for to comfort him they taid,
How they the castell to them yand;
And how they till his will were brought,
To do off that whatever he thought;
And ask'd what men should off them do.
Then look'd be angryly them to,
He said, grinning, 'HANGS AND DRAWS.'
That was wonder of sie saws,
That he, that to the death was near,
Should answer upon sic maner,
Forenten meaning and mercy;
How might he trust on him to cry,
That sooth-fasty dooms all thing
To have mercy for his crying,
Off him that, throw his felony,
Into sic point had no mercy?"

There was much truth in the Leonine couplet with which Matthew of Westminster concludes his euconium on the first Edward:

"Scotos Edwardus, dum vivit, suppeditavit, Tenuit, afflxit, depressit, dilaniavit."

like others in the same situation, was pitied by the female spectators as "a proper young man."
NOTE 2 A.

While I the blessed cross advance,
And expiate this unhappy chance.
In Palestine, with sword and lance.—P. 423.

Bruce uniformly professed, and probably felt, compunction for having violated the sanctuary of the church by the slaughter of Comyn; and finally, in his last hours, in testimony of his faith, penitence, and zeal, he requested James Lord Douglas to carry his heart to Jerusalem, to be there deposited in the Holy Sepulchre.

NOTE 2 B.

De Bruce! I rose with purpose dread
To speak my curse upon thy head.—P. 423.

So soon as the notice of Comyn's slaughter reached Rome, Bruce and his adherents were excommunicated. It was published first by the Archbishop of York, and renewed at different times, particularly by Lambryton, Bishop of St. Andrews, in 1308; but it does not appear to have answered the purpose which the English monarch expected. Indeed, for reasons which it may be difficult to trace, the thunders of Rome descended upon the Scottish mountains with less effect than in more fertile countries. Probably the comparative poverty of the benefices occasioned that fewer foreign clergy settled in Scotland; and the interest of the native churchmen was linked with that of their country. Many of the Scottish prelates, Lambryton the primate particularly, declared for Bruce while he was yet under the ban of the church, although he afterwards again changed sides.

NOTE 2 C.

I feel within mine aged breast
A power that will not be repress'd.—P. 423.

Bruce, like other heroes, observed omens, and one is recorded by tradition. After he had retreated to one of the miserable places of shelter in which he could venture to take some repose after his disasters, he lay stretched upon a handful of straw, and abandoned himself to his melancholy meditations. He had now been defeated four times, and was upon the point of resolving to abandon all hopes of further opposition to his fate, and to go to the Holy Land. It chanced his eye, while he was thus pondering, was attracted by the exertions of a spider, who, in order to fix his web, endeavored to swing himself from one beam to another above his head. Involuntarily he became interested in the pertinacity with which the insect renewed his exertions, after failing six times; and it occurred to him that he would decide his own course according to the success or failure of the spider. At the seventh effort the insect gained his object; and Bruce, in like manner, persevered and carried his own. Hence it has been held unlucky or ungrateful, or both, in one of the name of Bruce to kill a spider.

The Archdeacon of Aberdeen, instead of the abbot of this tale, introduces an Irish Pythoness, who not only predicted his good fortune as he left the island of Rathrin, but sent her two sons along with him, to ensure her own family a share in it:—

"Then in short time men mycht thaim see
Schuthe all thair galayis to the se,
And her to se baith ayr and ster,
And othyr things that mystir1 wer.
And as the king upon the sand
Wes gangand wp and doun, bidand2
Till that his menye redy war,
His ost come rycht till him thar.
And quhen that scho him halyest had,
And priwe spek till him scho made;
And said, 'Takis gud kep till my saw:
For or ye pass I sail yow schaw,
Oft your fortoon a gret party.
Bot our all speecly.
A wytring her I sail yow ma,
Qhat end that your purpos sail ta.
For in this land is nane trewly
Wate things to come sa well as I.
Ye pass now furth on your weige,
To wenge the harm, and the owtrag,
That Inglish men has to yow done;
Bot ye wat nocht quhbatkyne forton
Ye mon drey in your werraying.
Bot wyt ye weill, with outyn lesing,
That fra ye now haif takyn land,
Nama sa mychtys, na sa streth ki of hand,
Sail geryow pass owt of your countré
Till all to yow abandony ket.
With in secht tyme ye sail be king,
And haiift the land at your liking,
And oureum your fayis all.
Bot fele anojis thole ye sail,
Or that your purpos end haiift tane:
Bot ye sail thaimourdryte ilkane.
And, that ye trow this sekerly,
My twa sonnys with yow sail I
Send to take part of your trawail;
For I wate weill that sail nocht fail
To be rewardy ket till rycht,
Quhen ye ar heyit to yowr mycht."

BARBOUR'S Bruce, book iii. v. 856.

NOTE 2 D.

A hunted wanderer on the wild,
On foreign shores a man exiled.—P. 424.

This is not metaphorical. The echoes of Scotland did actually "ring
With the blood-hounds that bayed for her fugitive king."

A very curious and romantic tale is told by Barbour upon this subject, which may be abridged as follows:—

When Bruce had again got footing in Scotland, in the spring of 1306, he continued to be in a very weak and precarious condition, gaining, indeed, occasional advantages, but obliged to fly before his enemies whenever they assembled in force. Upon one occasion, while he was lying with a small party in the wilds of Cumnock, in Ayrshire, Aymer de Valentia, Earl of Pembroke, with his inveterate foe John of Lorn, came against him suddenly with eight hundred Highlanders, besides a large body of men-at-arms. They brought with them a slough-dog, or blood-hound, which, some say, had been once a favorite with the Bruce himself, and therefore was least likely to lose the trace.

Bruce, whose force was under four hundred men, continued to make head against the valiant till the men of Lorn had nearly cut off his retreat. Perceiving the danger of his situation, he acted as the celebrated and ill-requited Mina is said to have done in similar circumstances. He divided his force into three parts, appointed a place of rendezvous, and commanded them to retreat by different routes. But when John of Lorn arrived at the spot where they divided, he caused the hounds to be put upon the trace, which immediately directed him to the pursuit of that party which Bruce headed. This, therefore, Lorn pursued with his whole force, paying no attention to the others. The king again subdivided his small body into three parts, and with the same result, for the pursuers attached themselves exclusively to that which he led in person. He then caused his followers to disperse, and retained only his foster-brother in his company. The slough-dog followed the trace, and, neglecting the others, attached himself and his attendants to the pursuit of the king. Lorn became convinced that his enemy was nearly in his power, and detached five of his most active attendants to follow him, and interrupt his flight. They did so with all the agility of mountaineers. “What aid wilt thou make?” said Bruce to his single attendant, when he saw the five men gain ground on said Bruce, “here I make my stand.” The five pursuers came up fast. The king took three to himself, leaving the other two to his foster-brother. He slew the first who encountered him; but observing his foster-brother hard pressed, he sprang to his assistance, and despatched one of his assailants. Leaving him to deal with the survivor, he returned upon the other two, both of whom he slew before his foster-brother had despatched his single antagonist. When this hard encounter was over, with a courtesy which in the whole work marks Bruce’s character, he thanked his foster-brother for his aid. “It likes you to say so,” answered his follower; “but you yourself slew four of the five.”—“True,” said the king, “but only because I had better opportunity than you. They were not apprehensive of me when they saw me encounter three, so I had a moment’s time to spring to thy aid, and to return equally unexpectedly upon my own opponents.”

In the meanwhile Lorn’s party approached rapidly, and the king and his foster-brother betook themselves to a neighboring wood. Here they sat down, for Bruce was exhausted by fatigue, until the cry of the slough-hound came so near that his foster-brother enjoined Bruce to provide for his safety by retreating further. “I have heard,” answered the king, that “whosoever will wage a bow-shot length down a running stream shall make the slough-hound lose scent. Let us try the experiment, for were you devilish hound silenced, I should care little for the rest.”

Lorn in the meanwhile advanced, and found the bodies of his slain vassals, over whom he made his moan, and threatened the most deadly vengeance. Then he followed the hound to the side of the brook, down which the king had waded a great way. Here the hound was at fault, and John of Lorn, after long attempting in vain to recover Bruce’s trace, relinquished the pursuit. “Others,” says Barbour, “affirm that upon this occasion the king’s life was saved by an excellent archer who accompanied him, and who perceiving they would be finally taken by means of the blood-hound, hid himself in a thicket, and shot him with an arrow. In which way,” adds the metrical biographer, “this escape happened I am uncertain, but at that brook the king escaped from his pursuers.”

“Quhen the chassersis reiyt war,
And Jhon of Lorn had met thaim thar,
He tauld Schyr Aymer all the cassin
How that the king eschappit wass;
And how that he his fives men swaw,
And syne to the vode him drew.
Quhen Schyr Aymer herd this, in hy
He sanyt him for the ferly:
And said, ‘I hes gretly to pryss;
For I knew name that lifand is,
That at myscyell’ gan help him swa.
I trow he said he hard to sa,
And he war bodyn1 eweuly.’
On this wis spek Schyr Aymercy.”

BARBOUR’s Bruce, book v. v. 391.

The English historians agree with Barbour as to the mode in which the English pursued Bruce and his followers, and the dexterity with which they evaded them. The following is the testimony of Harding, a great enemy to the Scottish nation:—

“The King Edward with h sta:
But ay he led into woods and strayte forest,
And slowe his men at staytes and daungers thare,
And at marreys and mires was ay full prest
Englyshmen to kyll withoutyn any rest;
In the mountaynes and craggis he slew ay where,
And in the nyght his foes he frayred full sore:

“The King Edward with hornes and houndes him soght,
With menne on fote, through marris, mosse, and myre,
Through wodes also, and mountens (wher the foughht),
And euer the Kayng Edward hight men great hyre.
Hym for to take and by myght conquere;
But thei might hym not gatte by force me by train,
He satte by the fyre when thei went in the rain.”

HARDING’s Chronicle, p. 393-4.

Peter Langtoft has also a passage concerning the extremities to which King Robert was reduced, which he entitles

De Roberto Bruo et fugia circum circa fl. 1

“And wele I understode that the Kyng Robyn
Has drunken of that blode the drink of Dan Waryn.
Dan Waryn he les tounes that he held,
With wrong he mad a rea, and misberyng of scheld,
Sithen into the forest he yede naked and wode,
Als a wild beaest, ete of the gras that stode,
Thus of Dan Waryn in his boke men rode,
God gyf the Kyng Robyn, that alle his kynde so spede,
8vo, London, 1810.

NOTE 2 E.

For, glad of each pretex for spolt,
A pirate sworn was Cormac Dott.—P. 425.

A sort of persons common in the isles, as may be easily believed, until the introduction of civil polity. Witness the Dean of the Isles’ account of Ronay:—“At the north end of 1 Matched.

Baarsay, be half myle of sea frae it, layes ane ile callit Ronay, mair then a myle in lengthe, full of wood and haddir, with ane havein for heiland galeries in the middis of it, and the same havein is guid for fostering of thieves, rugged, and revairis, till a nail, upon the pellings and spulzieing of poor pepl. This ile pertains to McGillychullan of Baarsay by force, and to the bishop of the iles be heritage."—Sir Donald Monro's Description of the Western Islands of Scotland. Edinburgh, 1805, p. 22.

Note 2 F.

"Alas! dear youth, the unhappy time,
Answer'd the Bruce, "must bear the crime,
Since, guiltier far than you,
Even I"—he paused; for Falkirk's woes
Upon his conscious soul arose.—P. 426.

I have followed the vulgar and inaccurate tradition that Bruce fought against Wallace and the array of Scotland at the fatal battle of Falkirk. The story, which seems to have no better authority than that of Blind Harry, bears that, having made much slaughter during the engagement, he set down to dine with the conquerors without washing the filthy witness from his hands.

"Fasting he was, and had been in great need,
Blooded were all his weapons and his weed;
Southern lords scorn'd him in terms rude,
And said, Behold yon Scot eats his own blood.

"Then rue'd he sore, for reason bad be known,
That blood and land alike should be his own;
With them he long was, ere he got away,
But contrair Scots he fought not from that day."

The account given by most of our historians, of the conversation between Bruce and Wallace over the Carron river, is equally apocryphal. There is full evidence that Bruce was not at that time on the English side, nor present at the battle of Falkirk; nay, that he acted as a guardian of Scotland, along with John Comyn, in the name of Baliol, and in opposition to the English. He was the grandson of the competitor, with whom he has been sometimes confounded. Lord Hailes has well described, and in some degree apologized for, the earlier part of his life:—"His grandfather, the competitor, had patiently acquiesced in the award of Edward. His father, yielding to the times, had served under the English banners. But young Bruce had more ambition, and a more restless spirit. In his earlier years he acted upon no regular plan. By turns the partisan of Edward and the viceregent of Baliol, he seems to have forgotten or stifled his pretensions to the crown. But his character developed itself by degrees, and in maturer age became firm and consistent."—Annals of Scotland, p. 290. 4to, London, 1776.

Note 2 G.

These are the savage wilds that lie
North of Strathnaardill and Dunsky.—P. 427.

The extraordinary piece of scenery which I have here attempted to describe is, I think, unparalleled in any part of Scotland, at least in any which I have happened to visit. It lies just upon the frontier of the Laird of Macleod's country, which is thereabouts divided from the estate of Mr. MacAllister of Strathardle, called Strathnairy to the Dean of the Isles. The following account of it is extracted from a journal kept during a tour through the Scottish islands:

"The western coast of Skye is highly romantic, and at the same time displays a richness of vegetation in the lower grounds to which we have hitherto been strangers. We passed three salt-water lochs, or deep embayments, called Loch Brae-cadale, Loch Elsrot, and Loch —, and about 11 o'clock opened Loch Slavig. We were now under the western termin-or of the high ridge of mountains called Cullen, or Quillin, or Coolin, whose weather-beaten and serrated rocks we had admired at a distance from Dunvegan. They sank here upon the sea, but with the same bold and precipitous aspect, which their distant appearance indicated. They appeared to consist of precipitous sheets of naked rock, down which the torrents were leaping in a hundred lines of foam. The tops of the ridge, apparently inaccessible to human foot, were rent and split into the most tremendous pinnacles. Towards the base of these bare and precipitous crags, the ground, enriched by the soil washed down from them, is comparatively verdant and productive. Where we passed within the small isle of Soa, we entered Loch Slavig, under the shoulder of one of these grimy mountains, and observed that the opposite side of the loch was of a milder character, the mountains being softcened down into steep green declivities. From the bottom of the bay advanced a headland of high rocks, which divided its depth into two recesses, from each of which a brook issued. Here it had been intended to us to visit some romantic scetie scenery; but we were uncertain up which inlet we should proceed in search of it. We chose, against our better judgment, the southerly dip of the bay, where we saw a house which might afford us information. We found, upon inquiry, that there is a lake adjoining to each branch of the bay; and walked a couple of miles to see that near the farm-house, merely because the honest Highlander seemed jealous of the honor of his own loch, though we were speedily convinced it was not that which we were recommended to examine. It had no particular merit, excepting from its neighborhood to a very high cliff, or precipitous mountain, otherwise the sheet of water had nothing differing from any ordinary low-country lake. We returned and re-embarked in our boat, for this character had on our proposal to dine up the re-pinsula or rocky headland which divided the two lakes. In rowing round the headland, we were surprised at the infinite number of sea-fowl, then busy apparently with a shoal of fish.

"Arrived at the depth of the bay, we found that the discharge from this second lake forms a sort of waterfall, or rather a rapid stream, which rushes down to the sea with great fury and precipitation. Round this place were assembled hundreds of trout and salmon, struggling to get up into the fresh water: with a net we might have had twenty salmon at a haul; and a sailor, with no better hook than a crooked pin, caught a dish of trouts during our absence. Advancing up thisuddling and riotous brook, we found ourselves in a most extraordinary scene; we lost sight of the sea almost immediately after we had climbed over a low ridge of crags, and were surrounded by mountains of naked rock, of the boldest and most precipitous character. The ground on which we walked was the margin of a lake, which seemed to have sustained the constant ravage of torrents from these rude neighbors. The shores consisted of huge strata of naked granite, here and there intermixed with bogs, and heaps of gravel and sand piled in the empty water-courses. Vegetation there was little or none; and the mountains rose so perpendicularly from the water edge that Borrowdale, or even Glencoe, is a jest to them. We proceeded a mile and a half up this deep, dark, and solitary lake, which was about two miles long, half

1 This is the poet's own journal.—En.
a mile broad, and is, as we learned, of extreme depth. The murky vapors which enveloped the mountain ridges obliged us by assuming a thousand varied shapes, changing their drapery into all sorts of forms, and sometimes clearing off altogether. It is true, the mist made us pay the penalty by some heavy and downright showers, from the frequency of which a Highland boy, whom we brought from the farm, told us the lake was popularly called the Water-kettle. The proper name is Loch Coriskin, from the deep corrie, or hollow, in the mountains of Cuillen, which affords the basin for this wonderful sheet of water. It is as exquisite a savage scene as Loch Katrine is a scene of romantic beauty. After having penetrated so far as distinctly to observe the termination of the lake under an immense precipice, which rises abruptly from the water, we returned, and often stopped to admire the ravages which storms must have made in these recesses, where all human witnesses were driven to places of more shelter and security. Stones, or rather large masses and fragments of rocks of a composite kind, perfectly different from the strata of the lake, were scattered upon the bare rocky beach, in the strangest and most precarious situations, as if abandoned by the torrents which had borne them down from above. Some lay loose and tottering upon the ledges of the natural rock, with so little security that the slightest push moved them, though their weight might exceed many tons. These detached rocks or stones, were chiefly what is called plum-pudding stones. The bare rocks which formed the shore of the lake were a species of granite. The opposite side of the lake seemed quite pathless and inaccessible, as a huge mountain, one of the detached ridges of the Cuillen hills, sinks in a profound and perpendicular precipice down to the water. On the left-hand side, which we traversed, rose a higher and equally inaccessible mountain, the top of which strongly resembled the shivered erater of an exhausted volcano. I never saw a spot in which there was less appearance of vegetation of any kind. The eye rested on nothing but barren and naked crags, and the rocks on which we walked by the side of the loch were as bare as the pavements of Cheapside. There are one or two small islets in the loch, which seem to bear juniper, or some such low bushy shrub. Upon the whole, though I have seen many scenes of more extensive desolation, I never witnessed any in which it pressed more deeply upon the eye and the heart than at Loch Coriskin; at the same time that its grandeur elevated and redeemed it from the wild and dreary character of utter barrenness.

NOTE 2 H.

Men were they all of evil mien,
Downlook'd, unwilling to be seen.—P. 428.

The story of Bruce's meeting the banditti is copied, with such alterations as the fictitious narrative rendered necessary, from a striking incident in the monarch's history, told by Barbour, and which I shall give in the words of the hero's biographer. It is the sequel to the adventure of the blood-bound, narrated in Note 2 D. It will be remembered that the narrative broke off, leaving the Bruce escaped from his pursuers, but worn out with fatigue, and having no other attendant but his foster-brother.

"And the gude King held forth his way,
Beloeix him and his man, quhill thai
Passy oat throw the forest war;
Syc the more thai enterr thy.

It wes the hey, and lang, and braid;
And or thai halff it passy t had,
Thai saw on syd thre men cummand,
Lik to lycht men an wansarand.
Swerdis thai had, and axys als;
And ane of them, apin on his halts,
A mekill bounbyn wether bar.
Thai met the king, and haliest2 him thar:
And the king thaim thar hallising yasbl,3
And askyt thaim quether thai wald.
Thai said, Robert the Brays thai souch;
For mete with him giff that thai moucht,
Thar dwelling with him wald thai na.4
The king said, 'Giff thai ye will swa,
Haldys furth your way with me,
And I sall ger yow some him se.'

"Thai persawayt, be his speking,
That he wes the selwyn Robert king.
And chaungyn contenance and late5
And held nocht in the fyrst state.
For that war fayis to the king—
And thought to cum in t to sculking,
And duell with him, quhill thai saw
Thar poynt, and bryng him than off daw.6
Thai granthy till his spek forth?7
But the king, that was witty
Persawyt weill, by thar hawing,
That thai buffyt him na thing:
And said, 'Falowys, ye mae, all thre,
Forthir aqrent till that we be,
All be your selwyn furth ga;
And, on the sanyyn wyss, we twa
Sall folow behind weill nyr.'
Quoth thai, 'Schyrr, it is na myster
To twor in ws ony ill.'—
"Nane do I,' said he; 'bot I will,
That yhe ga fourth thus, quhull we Better with othyr knawin be.'—
"We grant,' thai said, 'sen ye will swa;
And furth upon thair gate gan ga.
"Thus yeid thai till the nyche wes nyr.
And than the formst cumyny nyr
Till a waist housand house;8
And thar
Thai slew the wethir that thai bar;
And slew for to rost thar mete;
And askyt the king gift he wald eie,
And rest him till the mete war dycht.
The king, that hungry was, Ik lycht,
Assentyt till thair spek in hy.
Bot he said, he wald anerly9
At a fyr; and thai all thre
On na wyss with thaim till gyldre be.
In the end off the hous thai sulk ma
Ane othyr fyr; and thai did swa.
Thai drew thaim in the hous end,
And halff the wether till him send.
And thot stynt in hy thair mete;
And fell rycht freschly for till ete.
For the king weill lang fastyt had;
And had rycht mekill trawall mad:
Tharfor he eyt full egrly.
And quhen he had eytn hastily,
He had to slep sa mekill will,
That he moucht set na let thar till.
For quhen the warays fillyt ar,
Men worthys hewy etuirmar;
And to slepe drawys hewynes.
The king, that all fortrawailly wees,

1 Neck.—2 Saluted.—3 Returned their salute.—4 Make—Gesturo or manner.—5 Kill him.—7 Therefore.—8 There is no need.—9 Husbandman's house, cottage.—10 Alone.—
11 Bellies.—12 Becomes.—13 Fatigued.
Saw that him worthy spen nedwayris.
Till his foster-brother he saith:
'May I trust in the, me to walk,
Till lik a little sleping tak?—'
'Ya, Schyr,' he said, 'till I may drey,'\(^1\)
The king then wynkyt a litill wye;
And slepyt nocht full encrly;
Bot glifnyt wp oft sodanly.
For he had dreeaff off that thee men,
That at the tothyr fyr war then.
That thai his fals war he wyst;
Tharför he slepyt as foule on twyst.\(^2\)

"The king slepyt bot a litill than;
Quhen sic slep fell on his man,
That he myecht nocht hald wp his ey,
Bot fell in slep, and rowtyt hey.
Now is the king in gret peril:
For slep he swa a litill qhilibale,
He sail be ded, for owtyn dreed.
For the thre trautts tuk gud held,
That he on slep was, and his man.
In full gret by thai rais wp thanne,
And drew the suerd hastily;
And went towart the king in by,
Quhen thai saw him sleip swa,
And slepand thoeth thei wald him sla.
The king wp blankit hastily,
And saw his man speland him by;
And saw cummand the tothyr thre.
Deliarly on fute gat he;
And drew his suerd owt, and thaim mete,
And, as he yede, his fute he set
Apon his man, weil hewely.
He waknyt, and rass disily:
For the slep maistryn hym sway,
That or he gat wp, anc off thai,
That come for to sla the king,
Gaiff hym a strak in his rysing,
Swa that he myecht help him no mar.
The king sa straitly stad \(^3\) wes thar,
That he wes neuir yeyt sa stad.
Ne war the armyns\(^4\) that he had,
He had been dede, for owtyn wer.
But nocht for thi\(^5\) on sic maner
He helpyt him, in that bargayne,
The that thee trateowris he has slan,
Throw Goddis grace, and his maneild,
His fostyr-brothyr thar was dede.
Then wes he wondre will of wayn,\(^6\)
Quhen he saw him left allane,
His fostyr-brother menyt he;
And waryst\(^7\) all the tothyr thre.
And syne lys way tuk him allane,
And rycht towart his tryst\(^8\) is gane."

_The Bruce_, book v. v. 405.

---

Note 2 I.

And mermaid's alabaster grot,
Who bathes her limbs in sunless well
Deep in Strathaird's enchanted cell.—P. 431.

Imagination can hardly conceive any thing more beautiful than the extraordinary grotto discovered not many years since upon the estate of Alexander MacAllister, Esq., of Strathaird. It has since been much and deservingly celebrated, and a full account of its beauties has been published by Dr. MacLeay of Oban. The general impression may perhaps be gathered from the following extract from a journal which, written under the feelings of the moment, is likely to be more accurate than any attempt to recollect the impressions then received:—"The first entrance to this celebrated cave is rude and unpromising; but the light of the torches with which we were provided was soon reflected from the roof, floor, and walls, which seem as if they were sheeted with marble, partly smooth, partly rough with frost-work and rustic ornaments and partly seeming to be wrought into stonework. The floor forms a steep and difficult ascent, and might be fancifully compared to a sheet of water, which, while it rushed whitening and foaming down a declivity, had been suddenly arrested and consolidated by the spell of an enchanter. Upon attaining the summit of this ascent, the cave opens into a splendid gallery, adorned with the most dazzling crystallizations, and finally descends with rapidity to the brink of a pool of the most limpid water, about four or five yards broad. There opens beyond this pool a portal arch, formed by two columns of white spar, with beautiful chasing upon the sides, which promises a continuation of the cave. One of our sailors swam across, for there is no other mode of passing, and informed us (as indeed we partly saw by the light he carried) that the enchantment of MacAllister's cave terminates with this portal, a little beyond which there was only a rude cavern, speciously choked with stones and earth. But the pool, on the brink of which we stood, surrounded by the most fanciful mouldings in a substance resembling white marble, and distinguished by the depth and purity of its waters, might have been the bathing grotto of a naiad. The groups of combined figures projecting or embossed, by which the pool is surrounded, are exquisitely elegant and fanciful. A statuary might catch beautiful hints from the singular and romantic disposition of these stalactites. There is scarce a form or group on which active fancy may not trace figures or grotesque ornaments, which have been gradually moulded in this cavern by the dropping of the calcareous water hardening into petrifications. Many of these fine groups have been injured by the senseless rage of appropriation of recent tourists; and the grotto has lost (I am informed) through the smoke of torches, something of that vivid silver tint which was originally one of its chief distinctions. But enough of beauty remains to compensate for all that may be lost." Mr. MacAllister of Strathaird has, with great propriety, built up the exterior entrance to this cave, in order that strangers may enter properly attended by a guide, to prevent any repetition of the wanton and selfish injury which this singular scene has already sustained.

---

Note 2 K.

_Yet to no sense of selfish wrongs,*
Bear witness with me, Heaven, belongs
*My joy o'er Edward's bier._—P. 433.

The generosity which does justice to the character of an enemy often marks Bruce's sentiments as recorded by the faithful Harboui. He seldom mentions a fallen enemy without praising such good qualities as he might possess. I shall only take one instance. Shortly after Bruce landed in Carrick, in 1306, Sir Ingram Bell, the English governor of Ayr,

---

\(^1\) Endure.—\(^2\) Bird on bough.—\(^3\) So dangerously situated.—\(^4\) Had it not been for the armor he wore.—\(^5\) Nevertheless.
APPENDIX TO THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

engaged a wealthy yeoman, who had hitherto been a follower of Bruce, to undertake the task of assassinating him. The king learned this treachery, as he is said to have done other secrets of the enemy, by means of a female with whom he had an intrigue. Shortly after he was possessed of this information, Bruce, resorting to a small thicket at a distance from his men, with only a single page to attend him, met the traitor, accompanied by two of his sons. They approached him with their wonted familiarity, but Bruce, taking his page's bow and arrow, commanded them to keep at a distance. As they still pressed forward with professions of zeal for his person and service, he, after a second warning, shot the father with the arrow, and, being assaulted successively by the two sons, despatched first one, who was armed with an axe, then, as the other charged him with a spear, avowed the thrust, struck the head from the spear, and left the skull of the assassin with a blow of his two-handed sword.

"He rushed down of blood all red,
And when the king saw they were dead,
All three lying, he wiped his brand.
With that his boy came fast running,
And said, 'Our lord might lowly be,
That granted you might and powesty.'
To fell the felony and the pride
Of three in so little tide.'
The king said, 'So our lord me see,
They have been worthy men all three,
Had they not been full of treason:
But that made their confusion.'"

Barbour's Bruce, book v. p. 152.

NOTE 2 L.

Such hate was his on Solway's strand,
When vengeance cleach'd his paled hand,
That pointed yet to Scotland's land.—P. 433.

To establish his dominion in Scotland had been a favorite object of Edward's ambition, and nothing could exceed the pertinacity with which he pursued it, unless his inveterate resentment against the insurgents, who so frequently broke the English yoke when he deemed it most firmly riveted. After the battles of Falkirk and Methven, and the dreadful examples which he had made of Wallace and other champions of national independence, he probably concluded every chance of insurrection was completely annihilated. This was in 1306, when Bruce, as we have seen, was utterly expelled from Scotland; yet, in the conclusion of the same year, Bruce was again in arms and formidable; and in 1307, Edward, though exhausted by a long and wasting march, put himself at the head of the army destined to destroy him utterly. This was, perhaps, partly in consequence of a vow which he had taken upon him, with all the pomp of chivalry, upon the day in which he dubbed his son a knight, for which see a subsequent note. But even his spirit of vengeance was unable to restore his exhausted strength. He reached Berwick- \-upon-Sands, a petty village of Cumberland, on the shores of the Solway Firth, and there, 5th July, 1307, expired in sight of the detested and devoted country of Scotland. His dying injunctions to his son required him to continue the Scottish war, and never to recall Gaveston. Edward II. disobeyed both charges. Yet more to mark his animosity, the dying monarch ordered his bones to be carried with the invading army. Froissart, who probably had the authority of eye-witnesses, has given us the following account of this remarkable charge:

"In the said forest, the old King Robert of Scotland dyed kepe hymselfe, whan King Edward the Fyrst conquerde nygh all Scotland; for he was so often chased, that none durst logo him in castell, nor fortresse, for scare of the said king.

"And ever whan the king was returned into England, than he would gather together agayn his people, and conquer townees, castells, and fortresses, juste to Berwick, some by battle, and some by fair speech and love: and when the said King Edward heard thereof, than would he assemble his power, and wyn the realme of Scotland again; thus the chance went between these two foresaid kings. It was shewed me, how that this King Robert wan and lost his realme v. times. So this continued till the said King Edward dyed at Berwick: and when he saw that he should die, he called before him his eldest son, who was king after him, and there, before all the barones, he caused him to swear, that as soon as he were dead, that he should take his body, and Boyle it in a caubron, till the flesh departed clean from the bones, and than to bury the flesh, and keep still the bones; and that as often as the Scotts should rebell against him, he should assemble the people against them, and carry with him the bones of his father; for he believed verily, that if they had his bones with them, that the Scotts should never attain any victory against them. The which thing was not accomplished, for when the king dyed his son carried him to London."—Berners' Froissart's Chronicle. London, 1912, pp. 39, 40.

Edward's commands were not obeyed, for he was interred in Westminster Abbey, with the appropriate inscription:

"EDWARDUS PRIMUS SCOTORUM MALLETS HIC EST.
PACTUM SERVA."

Yet some steps seem to have been taken towards rendering his body capable of occasional transportation, for it was exquisitely embalmed, as was ascertained when his tomb was opened some years ago. Edward II. judged wisely in not carrying the dead body of his father into Scotland, since he would not obey his living counsels.

It ought to be observed that, though the order of the incidents is reversed in the poem, yet in point of historical accuracy, Bruce had landed in Scotland, and obtained some successes of consequence, before the death of Edward I.

NOTE 2 M.

Cannay's tower, that, steep and gray,
Like falcon nest d'exchange the bay.—P. 434.

The little island of Cannay, or Cannay, adjoins to those of Rum and Muck, with which it forms one parish. In a pretty bay opening towards the east there is a lofty and slender rock detached from the shore. Upon the summit are the ruins of a very small tower, scarcely accessible by a steep and precipitous path. Here, it is said, one of the kings or lords of the Isles confined a beautiful lady, of whom he was jealous. The ruins are of course haunted by her restless spirit, and many romantic stories are told by the aged people of the island concerning her fate in life and her appearances after death.

1 Lauded.

2 Power.
Note 2 N.

And Ronin's mountains dark have sent
Their hunters to the shore.—P. 334.

Ronin (popularly called Ram, a name which a poet may be parodied for avoiding if possible) is a very rough and mountainous island, adjacent to those of Eigg and Cannay. There is almost no arable ground upon it, so that, except in the plenty of the deer, which of course are now nearly extirpated, it still deserves the description bestowed by the Archdean of the Isles:—"Ronin, sixteen myle north-west from the Isle of Coll, lies an ile callit Roman Ile, of sixteen myle long, and in breadth the narrowest, one forest of heigh mountains, and abundance of little deir in it, quhilk deir will never be shane dounwicht, but the principal saittis man be in the height of the hill, because the deir will be callit upwart ay be the tainchell, or without tynded they will pass upwart perforce. In this ile will be gotten about Britaine als many wild nests upon the plane more as men pleasit to gadder, and yet by resoun the fowls hes few to start them except deir. This ile lyes from the west to the east in lenth, and pertains to Mr Kenabre of Colla. Many solan geese are in this ile."—Monro's Description of the Western Isles, p. 18.

Note 2 O.

On Scoorrigg next a warning light
Summon'd her warriors to the fight;
A numerous race ere stern MacLeod
O'er their bleak shores in vengeance strode.—P. 435.

These and the following lines of the stanza refer to a dreadful tale of feudal vengeance, of which unfortunately there are relics that still attest the truth. Scoorrig is a high peak in the centre of the small Isle of Eigg or Egg. It is well known to mineralogists as affording many interesting specimens, and to others whom chance or curiosity may lead to the island, for the astonishing view of the mainland and neighboring islands which it commands. I shall again avail myself of the journal I have quoted:—

26th August, 1814.—At seven this morning we were in the sound which divides the Isle of Rum from that of Eigg. The latter, although hilly and rocky, and traversed by a remarkably high and barren ridge, called Scoorrigg, has, in point of soil, a much more promising appearance. Southward of both lies the Isle of Muck, or Mack, a low and fertile island, and though the least, yet probably the most valuable, of the three. We manned the boat and rowed along the shore of Eigg in quest of a cavern which had been the memorable scene of a horrid feudal vengeance. We had rounded more than half the island, admiring the entrance of many a bold natural cave which its rocks exhibited, without finding that which we sought, until we procured a guide. Nor, indeed, was it surprising that it should have escaped the search of strangers, as there are no outward indications more than might distinguish the entrance of a fox-earth. This noted cave has a very narrow opening, through which one can hardly creep on his knees and hands. It rises steep and lofty within, and runs into the bowels of the rock to the depth of 255 measured feet; the height at the entrance may be about three feet, but rises within to sixteen or twenty, and the breadth may vary in the same proportion. The rude and stony bottom of this cave is strewn with the bones of men, women, and children, the sad relics of the ancient inhabitants of the island, 200 in number, who were slain on the following occasion:—The MacDonalds of the Isle of Eigg, a people dependent on Clan-Ranald, had done some injury to the Laird of MacLeod. The tradition of the Isle says that it was by a personal attack on the chiefman, in which his back was broken. But that of the other islands bears, more probably, that the injury was offered to two or three of the MacLeods, who, landing upon Eigg, and with some freedom with the young women, were seized by the islanders, bound hand and foot, and turned adrift in a boat, which the wind and waves safely conducted to Skye. To avenge the offence given, MacLeod sailed with such a body of men as rendered resistance hopeless. The natives, fearing his vengeance, concealed themselves in this cavern, and, after a strict search, the MacLeods went on board their galleys, after doing what mischief they could, concluding the inhabitants had left the Isle, and betaken themselves to the Long Island, or some of Clan-Ranald's other possessions. But next morning they espied from the vessels a man upon the island, and immediately landing again, they traced his retreat by the marks of his footsteps, a light snow being unhappily on the ground. MacLeod then surrounded the cavern, summoned the subterranean garrison, and demanded that the individuals who had offended him should be delivered up to him. This was peremptorily refused. The chiefman then caused his people to divert the course of a rill of water, which, falling over the entrance of the cave, would have prevented his purpose vengeance. He then kindled at the entrance of the cavern a huge fire, composed of turf and fern, and maintained it with unrelenting assiduity, until all within were destroyed by suffocation. The date of this dreadful deed must have been recent, if one may judge from the fresh appearance of these relics. I brought off, in spite of the prejudices of our sailors, a skull from among the numerous specimens of mortality which the cavern afforded. Before re-embarking we visited another cave, opening to the sea, but of a character entirely different, being a large open vault, as high as that of a cathedral, and running back a great way into the rock at the same height. The height and width of the opening gives ample light to the whole. Here, after 1745, when the Catholic priests were scarcely tolerated, the priest of Eigg used to perform the Roman Catholic service, most of the islanders being of that persuasion. A huge ledge of rocks rising about half-way up one side of the vault served for altar and pulpit; and the appearance of a priest and Highland congregation in such an extraordinary place of worship might have engaged the pencil of Salvator;"—

Note 2 P.

That wondrous dome,
Where, as to shame the temple deck'd
By skilful earthly architect,
Nature herself, it seem'd, would raise
A minister to her Maker's praise.—P. 435.

It would be unpardonable to detain the reader upon a wonder so often described, and yet so incapable of being understood by description. This palace of Neptune is even grander upon a second view. The stupendous columns which form the sides of the cave; the depth and strength of the tide which rolls its deep and heavy swell up to the extremity of the vault; the variety of tints formed by white, crimson, and yellow stalactites or petrifications which occupy the vacancies between the base of the broken pillars which form the roof, and intersect them with a rich, curious, and variegated chancing, occupying each interstice; the corresponding variety below water, where the ocean rolls over a dark-red or violet-colored rock, from which, as from a base, the basaltic columns arise; the tremendous noise of the swelling tide, mingling with the deep-toned echoes of the vault,— are circumstances elsewhere unparalleled.

Nothing can be more interesting than the varied appearance of the little archipelago of islets, of which Staffa is the most remarkable. This group, called in Gaelic Tresharnish, affords a thousand varied views to the voyager, as they appear in different positions with reference to his course. The varety of their shape contributes much to the beauty of these effects.

NOTE 2 Q.

Scenes sung by him who sings no more.—P. 435.

The ballad entitled "Maeshall of Colonsay and the Mermaid of Corrieveknin" (see Border Minstrelsy vol. iv. p. 285) was composed by John Leyden, from a tradition which he found while making a tour through the Hebrides about 1801, soon before his fatal departure for India, where, after having made further progress in Oriental literature than any man of letters who had embraced those studies, he died a martyr to his zeal for knowledge, in the Island of Java, immediately after the landing of our forces near Batavia, in August, 1811.

NOTE 2 R.

Up Tarbat's western lake they bore,
Then drapp'd their bark the isthmus o'er.—P. 436.

The peninsula of Cantire is joined to South Knapdale by a very narrow isthmus, formed by a very western and eastern Loch of Tarbat. These two salt-water lakes or bays encroach so far upon the land, and the extremities come so near to each other,
that there is not above a mile of land to divide them.

"It is not long," says Pennant, "since vessels of nine or ten tons were drawn by horses out of the west loch into that of the east, to avoid the dangers of the Mull of Cantyre, so dreaded and so little known was the navigation round that promontory.
It is the opinion of many that these little isthmuses, so frequently styled Tarbat in North Britain, took their name from the above circumstance; Tarrning, signifying, to draw, and Eata, a boat. This too might be called, by way of pre-eminence, the Tarbat, from a very singular circumstance related by Torkeus. When Magnus, the barfooted King of Norway, obtained from Donald-bane of Scotland the cession of the Western Isles, or all those places that could be surrounded in a boat, he added to them the peninsula of Cantyre by this fraud:
he placed himself in the stern of a boat, held the rudder, drawn over this narrow track, and by this species of navigation wrested the country from his brother monarch."—

But that Bruce also made this passage, although at a period two or three years later than in the poem, appears from the evidence of Barbour, who mentions also the effect produced upon the minds of the Highlanders, from the prophecies current amongst them:

"Bot to King Robert will we gang,
That we had left wnspkyn of lang.
Gert he had conwyrit to the se
His brother Edward, and his menye,
And othyr men off gret noblay,
To Tarbat thal held their way,
In galayı ordanyt for thair far.
Bot thaim worthyl^ draw thair schippis thar:
And a myle wes betuix the seys;
Bot that wes lomnpyt all with treis.
The king his schippis thar gert^ draw.
And for the wynd couth4 stously blaw
Apon thair bak, as thai wald ga,
He gert men rapsys and mastic ta,
And set thaln in the schippis hey,
And sayllis to the toppis tcy;
And gert men gang thar by drawd.
The wynd thaim holsytt, that was blawand;
Swat that, in a littill space,
Thair floote all thair drawin was.

"And quebel thai, that in the Ils war,
Hard tell how the gid king had thar
Gert hys schippis with saillis ga
Owt our betuix [the] Tarbart [is] twa,
Thai war abayst^ sa wirlye.
For thai wyst, throw audh prophecy,
That he suld gert schippis saa
Betuix thai sels with saillis ga,
Suld wyne the Ils saa till hund.
That nane with streith suld him withstand.
Thairfor they come all to the king.
Wes nane withstuld his bidding,
Owtakyn' Jhone of Lorne allayne.
Bot well sone etfre wes he tayne;
And present rycht to the king.
And thai that war of his loding,
That till the king had brokyn fay; 4
War all dede, and destroyt away."

BARMBOUR'S Bruce, book x. v. 821.

NOTE 2 S.

The sun, ere yet he sunk behind
Ben-Ghoil, "the Mountain of the Wind,"
Gave his grim panka a greiting kind,
And bade Loch Ranza smile.—P. 436.

Loch Ranza is a beautiful bay, on the northern extremity of Arran, opening towards East Tarbat Loch. It is well described by Pennant:—"The approach was magnificent; a fine bay in front, about a mile deep, having a ruined castle near the lower end, on a low far projecting neck of land, that forms another harbor, with a narrow passage; but within has three fathom of water, even at the lowest ebb. Beyond is a little plain watered by a stream, and inhabited by the people of a small village. The whole is environed with a theatre of mountains; and in the background the serrated crags of Griannan-Aithol soar above."—PENNANT'S Tour to the Western Isles, pp.
191-2. Ben-Ghoil, "the mountain of the winds," is generally known by its English and less poetical name of Goatsfield.

1 Were obliged to. 2 Laid with trees. 3 Caused. 4 Could.
5 Confounded. 6 Make. 7 Excepting. 8 Faith.
The passage in Barbour describing the landing of Bruce, and his being recognized by Douglas and those of his followers who had preceded him by the sound of his horn, is in the original singularly simple and affecting. The king arrived in Arran with thirty-three small row-boats. He interrogated a female if there had arrived any warlike men of late in that country. "Surely, sir," she replied, "I can tell you of many who lately came hither, discomfited the English governor, and blockaded his castle of Brodick. They maintain themselves in a wood at no great distance." The king, truly conceiving that this must be Douglas and his followers, who had lately set forth to try their fortune in Arran, desired the woman to conduct him to the wood. She obeyed.

"The king then blew his horn on high; And gert his men that were him by, Hold them still, and all privy; And syne again his horn blew he, James of Douglas heard him blow, And at the last alone gan know, And said, 'Soothly yon is the king; I know long while since his blowing.' The third time therewithall he blew, And then Sir Robert Bold it knew; And said, 'Yon is the king, but dready, Go we forth till him, better speed.' Then went they till the king in hye, And him inclined courteously. And blithly welcomed them the king, And was joyful of their meeting. And kissed them; and speared3 syne How they had fared in hunting. And they him told all, but lessing 4 Syne land they God of their meeting. Syne with the king to his harboure Went both joyfu' and jolly."

The kind and yet fiery character of Edward Bruce is well painted by Barbour in the account of his behavior after the battle of Bannockburn. Sir Walter Ross, one of the very few Scottish nobles who fell in that battle, was so dearly beloved by Edward that he wished the victory had been lost, so Ross had lived.

"Out-taken him, men has not seen Where he for any men made meaning."

And here the venerable archdeacon intimates a piece of scandal. Sir Edward Bruce, it seems, loved Ross's sister, par amores, to the neglect of his own lady, sister to David de Strathbogie, Earl of Athol. This criminal passion had evil consequences; for, in resentment to the affront done to his sister, Athol attacked the guard which Bruce had left at Cambus-kenneth, during the battle of Bannockburn, to protect his magazine of provisions, and slew Sir William Keith, the commander, for which treason he was forfeited.

In like manner, when, in a sally from Carrickfergus, Neil Fleming and the guards whom he commanded had fallen, after the protracted resistance which saved the rest of Edward Bruce's army, he made such moan as surprised his followers:

"'Sie moan he made men had ferly,3 For he was not customably Wont for to moan men any thing, Nor would not hear men make moaning."

Such are the nice traits of character so often lost in general history.

Note 2 V.

Thou hearest a wretched female plain In agony of travail-pain, And thou didst bid thy little band Upon the instant turn and stand, And dare the worst the foe might do, Rather than, like a knight unwear, Leave to pursuers merciless A woman in her last distress.—P. 440.

This incident, which illustrates so happily the chivalrous generosity of Bruce's character, is one of the many simple and natural traits recorded by Barbour. It occurred during the expedition which Bruce made to Ireland to support the pretensions of his brother Edward to the throne of that kingdom. Bruce was about to retreat, and his host was arrayed for moving.

"The king has heard a woman cry, He asked what that was in by,4 'It is the haynder,5 sir,' sai ane, 'That her child-is right now has ta'en: And must leave now behind us here, Therefore she makes an evil cheer.' The king said, 'Certes,6 it were pity That she in that point left should be, For certes I trow there is no man That he will no rue7 a woman than,' His hosts all there arested he, And gert8 a tent soon stantned9 be, And gert her gang in hastily, And other women to be her by, While she was delivered he bade; And syne forth on his ways rade. And how she forth should carried be, Or he forth fore,10 ordained he. This was a full great courtesy, That swilk a king and so mighty, Gert his men dwell on this manner, But for a poor lavendar."

NOTE 2 W.

"Or obama he pass'd, where fractures wide Groved wary eye and ample stride."—P. 442.

The interior of the Island of Arran abounds with beautiful Highland scenery. The hills, being very rocky and precipitous, afford some cañyons of great height, though of incon siderable breadth. There is one pass over the river Machrai, renowned for the dilemma of a poor woman, who, being tempted by the narrowness of the ravine to step across, succeeded in making the first movement, but took fright when it became necessary to move the other foot, and remained in a posture equally ludicrous and dangerous, until some chance passenger assisted her to extricate herself. It is said she remained there some hours.

NOTE 2 X.

He cross'd his brow beside the stone
Where Druids erst heard victims groan,
And at the cairns upon the wild,
O'er many a heathen hero piled.—P. 442.

The Isle of Arran, like those of Man and Anglesea, abounds with many relics of heathen, and probably Druidical, superstition. There are high erect columns of unheaven stone, the most early of all monuments, the circles of rude stones, commonly entitled Druidical, and the cairns, or sepulchral piles, within which are usually found urns enclosing ashes. Much doubt necessarily rest upon the history of such monuments, nor is it possible to consider them as exclusively Celtic or Druidical. By much the finest circles of standing stones, excepting Stonehenge, are those of Stenhouse, at Stenness, in the Island of Pomona, the principal isle of the Orkneys. These, of course, are neither Celtic nor Druidical; and we are assured that many circles of the kind occur both in Sweden and Norway.

NOTE 2 Y.

Old Brodick's Gothic towers were seen;
From Hastings, late their English lord,
Douglas had won them by the sword.—P. 442.

Brodick or Brathwick Castle, in the Isle of Arran, is an ancient fortress, near an old roadhead called Brodick Bay, and not far distant from a tolerable harbor, closed in by the Island of Lamlash. This important place had been assailed a short time before Bruce's arrival in the island. James Lord Douglas, who accompanied Bruce to his retreat in Rashcrin, scorns, in the spring of 1306, to have tired of his abode there, and set out accordingly, in the phrase of the times, to see what adventure God would send him. Sir Robert Boyd accompanied him; and his knowledge of the localities of Arran appears to have directed his course thither. They landed in the island privately, and appear to have had an ambush for Sir John Hastings, the English governor of Brodick, and surprised a considerable supply of arms and provisions, and nearly took the castle itself. Indeed, that they actually did so has been generally averred by historians, although it does not appear from the narrative of Barbour. On the contrary, it would seem that they took shelter within a fortification of the ancient inhabitants, a rampart called Tor an Schlais. When they were joined by Bruce, it seems probable that they had gained Brodick Castle. At least tradition says that from the battlements of the tower he saw the supposed signal-fire on Turnberry-nook. . . . The castle is now much modernized, but has a dignified appearance, being surrounded by flourishing plantations.

NOTE 2 Z.

"Oft, too, with unaccustomed ear,
A language much unmeet he hears."—P. 442.

Barbour, with great simplicity, gives an anecdote, from which it would seem that the vice of profane swearing, afterwards too general among the Scottish nation, was, at this time, confined to military men. As Douglas, after Bruce's return to Scotland, was roving about the mountainous country of Tweeddale, near the water of Line, he chanced to hear some persons in a farm-house say "the devil." Concluding, from this hasty expression, that the house contained war-like guests, he immediately assailed it, and had the good fortune to make prisoners Thomas Randolph, afterwards the famous Earl of Murray, and Alexander Stuart, Lord Bonkle. Both were then in the English interest, and had come into that country with the purpose of driving out Douglas. They afterwards ranked among Bruce's most zealous adherents.

NOTE 3 A.

For, see! the ruddy signal made,
That Clifford, with his merry-men all,
Guards carelessly our father's hall.—P. 443.

The remarkable circumstances by which Bruce was induced to enter Scotland, under the false idea that a signal-fire was lighted upon the shore near his maternal castle of Turnberry—the disappointment which he met with, and the train of success which arose out of that very disappointment—are too curious to be passed over unnoticed. The following is the narrative of Barbour. The introduction is a favorable specimen of his style, which seems to be in some degree the model for that of Gawain Douglas:

"This wes in ver, quhen wynter tid,
With his blastis bidwyss to bbl,
Was our drywnyn: and byrdis smale,
As turturis and the nychtyngale,
Begouth3 rycht sarie3 to syng;
And for to mak in thair singyng
Swete notis, and sownys ser;4
And melodys plesand to her.
And the treis begouth to ma5
Burgeans,6 and brycht blomys alsua,
To wyn the helyng6 off thair hewid,

1 Spring,—2 Began,—3 Lofily,—4 Several.
5 Make,—6 Buds,—7 Covering.
That wykkyt wyntir had thain roewid.¹
And all gressys beought to spryng.
In to that tyne the nobill kynge,
With his flote, and a few menye;²
Thee hundlyr I trow that mycht be,
Is to the se, owte of Aranee
A litill fortow,³ e wyn gan.

"That rowit fast, with all thair mycht,
Till that upon thaim fell the nycht,
That wouz myrkt² upon gret maner,
Swa that wylt nocht qhaur thair wer.
For thot na neill had, na stane;
Bot rowyt always in till ane,
Sterand all tyne upon the fryr,
That thot saw brynnand lycht and schyr.⁵
It wes bot auentur² thaim led:
And they in shorn tyne sa thaim sped,
That at the fyr arryvyt thai;
And went to land bot mar delay.
And Cuthbert, that has sene the fyr,
Was ful off angry, and off ire;
For he durst nocht do it away;
And wes alsua dowtand ay
That his lord suld pass to se.
Tharfor thair cummyn waytik he;
And met them at thair arywing.
He wes wele some broucht to the king,
That speyt at him how he had done.
And he with sar hart tauld him sone,
Now that he fand nane wellich luffand;
Bot all war fayis, that he fand:
And that the lord the Persy,
With ner thre hundre in campany,
Was in the castell thair besid,
Fullilfit off dispyt and prid.
Bot ma than twa parthis off his rowt
War herbery in the toune without;
'And dyspytty yow mar, Schir King,
Than men may dyspyt ony thing.'
Than said the king, in full gret ire;
'Tratour, qhyth maid thow than the fyr?'—
'At Schyr,' sayd he, 'sa God me se!' The fyr wes newywr maid for me.
Na, or the nycht, I wyst it nocht;
But fra I wyst it, well I thocht.
That ye, and haly your menyce,
In hy? sudl put yow to the se.
For thi i cum to mete yow her,
To tell perelleys that may aper,'—

"The king wes off his spek angry,
And askyt his prywe men, in hy,
Qhath at thaim thought wes best to do.
Schyr Edward fryst answert that to,
Hys brodryr that wes swa handy,
And said: 'I saw yow seckryl
Thar sail na perell, that may be,
Dryve me eftsone by the se.
Myne auentur her tak will I,
Qhethir he be esfull or angry.'—
'Brothyr,' he said, 'sen thou will su,
It is gude that we samyn ta
Dissece or cee, or payne or play,
Effyr as God wil ws purway.⁶
And sen men says that the Persy
Myn heretage will occupi;

And his menyse sa ner ws lyis,
That ws dispytis mony wyss;
Ga we and wenge¹⁰ sum off the dispyt
And that may we haiff done als tite;¹¹
For thai ly triestly,¹² but dreding
Off ws, or off our her cummyng.
And thought we slepand slew thaim all,
Repruff tharof na man sail.
For werrayour na forss suld ma,
Qhethir he mycht outcom his fa
Throw strenth, or throw sultë;
Bot that gud faith by halyne be.' "

BARBOUR'S Bruce, book iv. v. i.

NOTE 3 B.

Now ask you whences that wondrous light,
Whose fairy glow beguiled their sight—
It ne'er was known.—P. 445.

The following are the words of an ingenious correspondent, to whom I am obliged for much information respecting Turnberry and its neighborhood:—"The only tradition now remembered of the landing of Robert the Bruce in Carrick relates to the fire seen by him from the Isle of Arran. It is still generally reported, and religiously believed by many; that this fire was really the work of supernatural power, unassisted by the hand of any mortal being; and it is said that, for several centuries, the flame arose yearly on the same hour of the same night of the year on which the king first saw it from the turrets of Brodick Castle; and some go so far as to say that if the exact time were known, it would still be seen. That this superstitious notion is very ancient is evident from the place where the fire is said to have appeared being called the Bogle's Brae, beyond the remembrance of man. In support of this curious belief, it is said that the practice of burning heath for the improvement of land was then unknown; that a spunkie (Jack o'lanthorn) could not have been seen across the breadth of the Forth of Clyde, between Ayrshire and Arran; and that the courier of Bruce was his kinsman, and never suspected of treachery."—Letter from Mr. Joseph Train, of Newton Stuart, author of an ingenious Collection of Poems, illustrative of many ancient Traditions in Galloway and Ayrshire, Edinburgh, 1814. [Mr. Train made a journey into Ayrshire at Sir Walter Scott's request, on purpose to collect accurate information for the Notes to this poem; and the reader will find more of the fruits of his labors in Note 3 D. This is the same gentleman whose friendly assistance is so often acknowledged in the Notes and Introductions of the Waverley Novels.]

NOTE 3 C.

They gain'd the Chase, a wide domain
Left for the Castle's sylvan reign.—P. 445.

The castle of Turnberry, on the coast of Ayrshire, was the property of Robert Bruce, in right of his mother. Lord Hailes mentions the following remarkable circumstance concerning the mode in which he became proprietor of it:—"Martha, Countess of Carrick in her own right, the wife of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, bare him a son, afterwards Robert I. (11th July, 1274). This son, Bruce, was afterwards the castle singular: happening to meet Robert Bruce in her domains, she became enamoured of him, and with some violence led him to her castle of Turnberry. A few days after she married him, without the knowledge of the relations of either party, and without the requisite consent of the king. The king instantly seized her castle and whole estates; she afterwards atoned by a fine for her feudal delinquency. Little did Alexander foresee that, from this union, the restorer of the Scottish monarchy was to arise."—Annals of Scotland, vol. ii. p. 189.

¹ Bereaved. ² Men. ³ Before. ⁴ Dark. ⁵ Clear. ⁶ Ad-venture. ⁷ Haste.

⁸ Soon after. ⁹ Prepare. ¹⁰ Avenge. ¹¹ Quickly. ¹² Con-fidently.

The same obliging correspondent whom I have quoted in the preceding note gives me the following account of the present state of the ruins of Turnberry:—"Turnberry Point is a rock projecting into the sea; the top of it is about eighteen feet above high-water mark. Upon this rock was built the castle. There is about twenty-five feet high of the wall next to the sea yet standing. Upon the land-side the wall is only about four feet high; the length has been sixty feet, and the breadth forty-five: it was surrounded by a ditch, but that is now nearly filled up. The top of the ruin, rising between forty and fifty feet above the water, has a majestic appearance from the sea. There is not much local tradition in the vicinity connected with Bruce or his history. In front, however, of the rock, upon which stands Culzean Castle, is the mouth of a romantic cavern, called the Cove of Colean, in which it is said Bruce and his followers concealed themselves immediately after landing, till they arranged matters for their further enterprises. Burns mentions it in his poem of 'Hallow'en.' The only place to the south of Turnberry worth mentioning, with reference to Bruce's history, is the Weary Nukk, a little romantic green hill, where he and his party are said to have rested after assaulting the castle."

Around the castle of Turnberry was a level plain of about two miles in extent, forming the castle park. There could be nothing, I am informed, more beautiful than the coppice and verdure of this extensive meadow, before it was invaded by the ploughshare.

Note 3 D.

The Bruce hath won his father's hail!—P. 448.

I have followed the flattering and pleasing tradition that the Bruce, after his descent upon the coast of Ayrshire, actually gained possession of his maternal castle. But the tradition is not accurate. The fact is that he was only strong enough to alarm and drive in the outposts of the English garrison, then commanded, not by Clifford, as assumed in the text, but by Percy. Neither was Clifford slain upon this occasion, though he had several skirmishes with Bruce. He fell afterwards in the battle of Falkirk, which is the first battle of Turnberry, and surprising some part of the garrison, who were quartered without the walls of the fortress, retreated into the mountainous parts of Carrick, and there made himself so strong that the English were obliged to evacuate Turnberry, and at length the castle of Ayr. Many of his benefactions and royal gifts attest his attachment to the hereditary followers of his house, in this part of the country.

It is generally known that Bruce, in consequence of his distresses after the battle of Methven, was affected by a scorbutic disorder, which was then called a leprosy. It is said he experienced benefit from the use of a medicinal spring, about a mile north of the town of Ayr, called from that circumstance King's Ease. The following is the tradition of the county of Ayr collected from Mr. Train, &c. of Robert the Bruce, who, during the whole of his life, was in love with the throne, he founded the priory of Dominican monks, every one of whom was under the obligation of putting up to Heaven a prayer once every week-day, and twice in holydays, for the recovery of the king; and after his death these masses were continued for the saving of his soul. The ruins of this old monastery are now nearly level with the ground. Robert likewise caused houses to be built around the well of King's Case, for eight lepers, and allowed eight bolls of oatmeal and £25 Scotch money, per annum, to each person. These donations were laid upon the lands of Fullarton, and are now payable by the Duke of Portland. The farm of Shielis, in the neighborhood of Ayr, has to give, if required, a certain quantity of straw for the lepers' beds, and so much to thatch their houses annually. Each leprous person had a drinking-horn provided him by the king, which continued to be hereditary in the house to which it was first granted. One of these identical horns, of very curious workmanship, was in the possession of the late Colonel Fullarton of that ilk."

My correspondent proceeds to mention some curious remains of antiquity respecting this foundation:—"In compliment to Sir William Wallace, the great deliverer of his country, King Robert Bruce invested the descendants of that hero with the right of placing all the lepers upon the establishment of King's Case. This patronage continued in the family of Craige, till it was sold along with the lands of the late Sir Thomas Wallace. The burgh of Ayr then purchased the right of applying the donations of King's Case to the support of the poor-house of Ayr. The lepers' charter-stone was a basaltic block, exactly the shape of a sheep's kidney, and weighing an Ayrshire boll of meal. The surface of this stone being as smooth as glass, there was not any other way of lifting it than by turning the hollow to the ground, there extending the arms along each side of the stone, and clasping the hands in the cavity. Young lads were always considered as deserving to be ranked among men when they could lift the blue stone of King's Case. It always lay beside the well, till a few years ago, when some English dragoons encamped at that place wantonly broke it, since which the fragments have been kept by the freemen of Prestwick in a place of security. There is one of these charter-stones at the village of Old Daily, in Carrick, which has been preserved up to the present day, by the following event, which happened only a few years ago:—The village of New Dally being now larger than the old place of the same name, the inhabitants insisted that the charter-stone should be removed from the old town to the new; but the people of Old Daily were unwilling to part with their ancient right. Demands and remonstrances were made on each side without effect, till at last man, woman, and child, of both villages, marched out, and by one desperate engagement put an end to a war the commencement of which no person then living remembered. Justice and victory in this instance being of the same party, the villagers of the old town of Dally now enjoy the pleasure of keeping the blue-stone unadmired. Legal privileges are often attached by the law to some of these stones. In Girvan, if a man can set his back against one of the above description, he is supposed not liable to be arrested for debt; nor can cattle, it is imagined, be pointed as long as they are fastened to the same stone. That stones were often used as symbols to denote the right of possessing land, before the use of written documents became general in Scotland, is, I think, exceedingly probable. The charter-stone of Inverness is still kept with great care, set in a frame, and hooped with iron, at the market-place of that of the royal foundation described below. Mr. Train's kindness enables the editor to make this correction. 1833.
town. It is called by the inhabitants of that district Clack na Coiquddin. I think it is very likely that Carey has mentioned this stone in his poem of 'Craig Phaderick.' This is only a conjecture, as I have never seen that work. While the famous marble chair was allowed to remain at Secon, it was considered as the charter-stone of the kingdom of Scotland.

NOTE 3 E.

"Bring here," he said, "the mazers four My noble fathers loved of yore."—P. 419.

These mazers were large drinking-cups or goblets. Mention of them occurs in a curious inventory of the treasure and jewels of James III., which will be published, with other curious documents of antiquity, by my friend, Mr. Thomas Thomson, D. Register of Scotland, under the title of A Collection of Inventories and other Records of the Royal Wardrobe, Jewel-House, &c. I copy the passage in which mention is made of the mazers, and also of a habitiment called "King Robert Bruce's serk," i.e., shirt, meaning, perhaps, his shirt of mail—although no other arms are mentioned in the inventory. It might have been a relic of more sanctified description, a penance-shirt perhaps.

Extract from "Inventare of ane Parte of the Gold and Silver conyelt and unconielt, Jovellers, and other Stuff pertaining to Unquhale ourere Soverane Lords Pader, that he had in Deposis the Tyme of his Deceis, and that came to the Handis of ourere Soverane Lord that now is, MCCCCLXXXVIII.

"Memorandum fundin in a bandilt kist like a gardeviant,¹ in the fyrst the grete cheny² of gold, contenedam sevin score sex linkis.

Item, thre platis of silver.

Item, twelv saltis³.

Item, fytone discheis⁴ ouregilt.

Item, a grete gilt plate.

Item, twa grete bassingis⁵ ouregilt.

Item, four Masaris, called King Robert the Brocis, with a cover.

Item, a grete cok maid of silver.

Item, the hole of silver of one of the coveris of masar.

Item, a farre diale.⁶

Item, twa basiss of knyffis.⁷

Item, a par of old knyffis.

Item, takin be the smyth that opinitt the lokkis, in gold fartyr demis.

Item, in Inglys groths⁸.........xxiii. ii. and the said silver given again to the takaris of hyun.

Item, resavitt in the closset of Davids tour, ane hyly waterfat of silver, twa boxis, a Lagatt tunne, a glas with rosinwater, a dosoune of torchis, King Robert Brocis Serk."

The real use of the antiquarian's studies is to bring the minute information which he collects to bear upon points of history. For example, in the inventory I have just quoted there is given the contents of the black kist, or chest, belonging to James III., which was his strong box, and contained a quantity of treasure, in money and jewels, surpassing what might have been at the period expected of "poor Scotland's gear." This illustrates and authenticates a striking passage in the history of the house of Douglas, by Hume of Godscroft. The last Earl of Douglas (of the elder branch) had been reduced to monastic seclusion in the Abbey of Lin- dores, by James II. James III., in his distresses, would willingly have recalled him to public life, and made him his lieutenant. "But he," says Godscroft, "laden with years and old age, and weary of troubles, refused, saying, Sir, you have kept me, and your black caffer in Stirling, too long, neither of us can doe you any good; I, because my friends have forsaken me, and my followers and dependers are fallen from me, betaking themselves to other masters; and your black trunk is too farre from you, and your enemies are between you and it; or (as others say) because there was in it a sort of black coyne, that the king had caused to be conveyed by the advice of his courtiers; which moneys (saith he), sir, if you had put out at the first, the people would have taken it; and if you had employed me in due time, I might have done you service. But now there is none that will take notice of me, nor meddle with your money."—HUME'S History of the House of Douglas. Fol. Edin. 1644, p. 206.

NOTE 3 F.

Arouse old friends, and gather now.—P. 419.

As soon as it was known in Kylie, says ancient tradition, that Robert Bruce had landed in Carrick, with the intention of recovering the crown of Scotland, the Laird of Craigle and forty-eight men in his immediate neighborhood declared in favor of their legitimate prince. Bruce granted them a tract of land, still retained by the freeman of Newton to this day. The original charter was lost when the pestilence was raging at Ayr; but it was renewed by one of the Jamess, and is dated at Faulkland. The freemen of Newton were formerly officers by rotation. The Provost of Ayr at one time was a freeman of Newton, and it happened to be his turn, while provost in Ayr, to be officer in Newton, both of which offices he discharged at the same time.

The forest of Selkirk or Ettrick at this period occupied all the forest which retains that denomination, and embraced the neighboring dales of Tweeddale and at least the Upper Ward of Clydesdale. All that tract was probably as waste as it is mountainous, and covered with the remains of the ancient Caledonian Forest, which is supposed to have stretched from Cheviot Hills as far as Hamilton, and to have comprehended even a part of Ayrshire. At the fatal battle of Falkirk, Sir John Stewart of Bonkill, brother to the Steward of Scotland, commanded the archers of Selkirk Forest, who fell around the dead body of their leader. The English historians have commemorated the tall and stately persons, as well as the unswooning faith, of these foresters. Nor has their interesting fall escaped the notice of an elegant modern poetess, whose subject led her to speak of that calamitous engagement:—

"The glance of the morn had sparkled bright
On their plumage green and their actions light;
The bugle was strung at each hunter's side,
As they had been bound to the chase to ride;
But the bugle is mute, and the shafts are spent,
The arm unserved, and the bow unempt,
And the tired forest is laid
Far, far from the clustering Greenwood shade!"

¹ Gard-vin, or wine-cooler.—² Chain.—³ Salt-cellars, anciently the object of much curious workmanship.

⁴ Dishes.—⁵ Basins.—⁶ Dial.—⁷ Cases of knives.—⁸ English groats.
Sore have they toil'd—they are fallen asleep,
And their slumber is heavy, and dull, and deep!
When over their bones the grass shall wave,
When the wild winds over their tombs shall rave,
Memory shall lean on their graves, and tell
How Selkirk's hunters bold around old Stewart fell!"—

Wallace, or the Fight of Pinkie [by Miss Holford]. Lond. 4to, 1889, pp. 179-180.

Note 3 G.

When Bruce's banner had victorious flow'd
O'er Loudoun's mountain, and in Cry's vale.—P. 450.

The first important advantage gained by Bruce, after landing at Turnberry, was over Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, the same by whom he had been defeated near Methven. They met, as has been said, by appointment, at London Hill, in the west of Scotland. Pembroke sustained a defeat; and from that time Bruce was at the head of a considerable flying army. Yet he was subsequently obliged to retreat into Aberdeenshire, and was there assaulted by Comyn, Earl of Buchan, desirous to avenge the death of his relative, the Red Comyn, and supported by a body of English troops under Philip de Mowbray. Bruce was ill at the time of a scrofulous disorder, but took horse to meet his enemies, although obliged to be supported on either side. He was victorious, and it is said that the agitation of his spirits restored his health.

Note 3 H.

When English blood oft delayed Douglas date.—P. 450.

The "good Lord James of Douglas," during these commotions, often took from the English his own castle of Douglas, but being unable to garrison it, contented himself with destroying the fortifications and retiring into the mountains. As a reward to his patriotism, it is said to have been prophesied that how often sooner Douglas Castle should be destroyed, it should always again arise more magnificent from its ruins. Upon one of these occasions he used fearful cruelty, causing all the store of provision which the English had laid up in his castle to be heaped together, bursting the wine and beer casks among the wheat and flour, slaughtering the cattle upon the same spot, and upon the top of the whole cutting the throats of the English prisoners. This pleasantry of the "good Lord James" is commemorated under the name of the Douglas's Larder. A more pleasing tale of chivalry is recorded by Godercroft:—"By this means, and such other exploits, he so afflicted the enemy that it was counted a matter of great jealousy to keep this castle, which began to be called the adventurous (or hazardous) Castle of Douglas; whereupon Sir John Walton being in suit of an English lady, she wrote to him, that when he had kept the adventurous Castle of Douglas seven years, then he might think himself worthy to be a suitor to her. Upon this occasion Walton took upon him the keeping of it, and succeeded to Thursohall, but he ran the same fortune with the rest that were before him. For Sir James, having first dressed an ambuscado near unto the place, he made fourteen of his men take so many sacks, and fill them with grass, as though it had been corn, which they carried in the way to Lanark, the chief market town in that county; so hoping to draw forth the captain by that bait, and either to take him or the castle, or both. Neither was this expectation frustrated, for the captain did bite, and came forth to have taken this victual (as he supposed). But ere he could reach these carriers, Sir James, with his company, had gotten between the castle and him; and these disguised carriers, seeing the captain following after them, did quickly cast off their sacks, mounted themselves on horseback, and met the captain with a sharp encounter, being so much the more amazed, as it was unlooked for; wherefor, when he saw these carriers metamorphosed into warriors, and ready to assault him, fearing that which was, that there was some train laid for them, he turned about to have retired to his castle, but there he also met with his enemies; between which two companies he and his whole followers were slain, so that none escaped: the captain afterwards being searched, they found (as it is reported) his mistress's letter about him."—Hume's History of the House of Douglas, fol. pp. 29, 30.

Note 3 I.

And fiery Edward roosted stout St. John.—P. 450.

"John de St. John, with 15,000 horsemen, had advanced to oppose the inroad of the Scots. By a forced march he endeavoured to surprise them, but intelligence of his motions was timely received. The courage of Edward Bruce, approaching to temerity, frequently enabled him to achieve what men of more judicious valour would never have attempted. He ordered the infantry and the meaner sort of his army to intrench themselves in strong narrow ground. He himself, with fifty horsemen well harnessed, issued forth under cover of a thick mist, surprised the English on their march, attacked and dispersed them."—Dalmly's Annals of Scotland. 4to, Edinburgh, 1779, p. 25.

Note 3 K.

When Randolph's war-cry would the southern gate.—P. 450.

Thomas Randolph, Bruce's sister's son, a renowned Scottish chief, was in the early part of his life not more remarkable for consistency than Bruce himself. He espoused his uncle's party when Bruce first assumed the crown, and was made prisoner at the fatal battle of Methven, in which his relative's hopes appeared to be ruined. Randolph accordingly not only submitted to the English, but took an active part against Bruce; appeared in arms against him; and, in the skirmish where he was so closely pursued by the blood-hound, it is said his nephew took his standard with his own hand. But Randolph was afterwards made prisoner by Douglas in Tweeddale, and brought before King Robert. Some harsh language was exchanged between the uncle and nephew, and the latter was committed for a time to close custody. Afterwards, however, they were reconciled, and Randolph was created Earl of Moray about 1312. After this period he eminently distinguished himself, first by the surprise of Edinburgh Castle, and afterwards by many similar enterprises, conducted with equal courage and ability.

1 This is the foundation of the author's last romance, "Castle Dangerous."—Ed.
When a long train of success, actively improved by Robert Bruce, had made him master of almost all Scotland, Stirling Castle continued to hold out. The care of the blockade was committed by the king to his brother Edward, who concluded a treaty with Sir Philip Mowbray, the governor, that he should surrender the fortress if it were not sundered by the King of England before St. John the Baptist’s day. The king severely blamed his brother for the impolicy of a treaty which gave time to the King of England to advance to the relief of the castle with all his assembled forces, and obliged himself either to meet them in battle with an inferior force or to retreat with dishonor. “Let all England come,” answered the reckless Edward; “we will fight them were they more.” The consequence was, of course, that each kingdom mustered its strength for the expected battle; and as the space agreed upon reached from Lent to Midsummer, full time was allowed for that purpose.

Note 3 N.

And Cumberland, but of late subdued,
Sent forth her mountain multitude.—P. 450.

Edward I., with the usual policy of a conqueror, employed the Welsh, whom he had subdued, to assist him in his Scottish wars, for which their habits, as mountaineers, particularly fitted them. But this policy was not without its risks. Previous to the battle of Falkirk, the Welsh quarrelled with the English men-at-arms, and after bloodshed on both parts, separated themselves from his army, and the feud between them, at so dangerous and critical a juncture, was reconciled with difficulty. Edward II. followed his father’s example in this particular, and with no better success. They could not be brought to exert themselves in the cause of their conquerors. But they had an indifferent reward for their forbearance. Without arms, and clad only in scanty dresses of linen cloth, they appeared naked in the eyes even of the Scottish penantry; and after the rout of Bannockburn were massacred by them in great numbers, as they retired in confusion towards their own country. They were under command of Sir Maurice de Berkeley.

Note 3 O.

And Connacht pour’d from waste and wood
Her hundred tribes, whose severe rude
Dark Eth O’Connor sway’d.—P. 450.

There is in the Fledora an invitation to Eth O’Connor, chief of the Irish of Connought, setting forth that the king was about to move against his Scottish rebels, and therefore requesting the attendance of all the force he could muster, either commanded by himself in person or by some nobleman of his race. These auxiliaries were to be commanded by Richard de Burgh, Earl of Ulster. Similar mandates were issued to the following Irish chiefs, whose names may astonish the unlearned and amuse the antiquary:

“Eth O Donnald, Duc i Hibernicorum de Tyconill;
Doneal O Kahan, Duc i Hibernicorum de Ferntrew;
Doneval O Neel, Duc i Hibernicorum de Trywyn;
Neel Machbrean, Duc i Hibernicorum de Kynallewan;
Eth Offyn, Duc i Hibernicorum de Turtery;
Adamol Mac Anegus, Duc i Hibernicorum de Oneagh;
Neel O Hanlan, Duc i Hibernicorum de Erthere;
Becn Mac Mahun, Duc i Hibernicorum de Uriel;
Laureragh Mac Wyr, Duc i Hibernicorum de Lougherin;
Gyllys O Railly, Duc i Hibernicorum de Bresfeyn;
Geoffrey O Ferger, Duc i Hibernicorum de Montragwill;
Felyn O Honughur, Duc i Hibernicorum de Connach;
Donethuth O Bien, Duc i Hibernicorum de Tothmund;
Dermol Mac Arthy, Duc i Hibernicorum de Dessemond;
Denenal Carbragh;
Maur. Kenenagh Mac Murg;
Murghugh O Eryn;
David O Tothvill;
Dermol O Tonoghir, Doffaly;
Fyn O Dymir;
Southealth Mac Gillephatrick;
Lyssagh O Morth;
Gilbertus Ekelly, Duc i Hibernicorum de Omany;
Mac Ethelau;
Omalan Helyn, Duc Hibernicorum Midlie.”

Note 3 P.

Their chief, Fitz-Louis.—P. 452.

Fitz Louis, or MacLouis, otherwise called Fullarton, is a family of ancient descent in the Isle of Arran. They are said to be of French origin, as the name intimates. They attached themselves to Bruce upon his first landing; and Fergus MacLouis, or Fullarton, received from the grateful
The arrangements adopted by King Robert for the decisive battle of Bannockburn are given very distinctly by Barbour, and form an edifying lesson to tacticians. Yet, till commented upon by Lord Halles, this important passage of history has been generally and strangely misunderstood by historians. I will here endeavor to detail it fully.

The military advantages of this position were obvious. The Scottish left flank, protected by the brook of Bannock, could not be turned; or, if that attempt were made, a movement by the reserve might have covered it. Again, the English could not pass the Scottish army and move towards Stirling without exposing their flank to be attacked while in march. If, on the other hand, the Scottish line had been drawn up east and west, and facing to the southward, as affirmed by Buchanan and adopted by Mr. Nimmo, the author of the History of Stirlingshire, there appears nothing to have prevented the English, approaching upon the carse or level ground from Falkirk, either from turning the Scottish left flank, or from passing their position, if they preferred it, without coming to an action, and moving on to the relief of Stirling. And the Gillies' hill, if this less probable hypothesis be adopted, would be situated, not in the rear, as allowed by all the historians, but upon the left flank, of Bruce's army.

The only objection to the hypothesis above laid down is that the left flank of Bruce's army was thereby exposed to a sally from the garrison of Stirling. But, 1st, the garrison were bound to neutrality by the terms of Mowbray's treaty; and Barbour even seems to censure as a breach of faith some secret assistance which they rendered their countrymen upon the eve of battle, in placing temporary bridges of doors and spars over the pools of water in the carse, to enable them to advance to the charge. 2dly, had this not been the case, the strength of the garrison was probably not sufficient to excite apprehension. 3dly, the adverse hypothesis leaves the rear of the Scottish army as much exposed to the Stirling garrison as the left flank would be in the case supposed. It only remains to notice the nature of the ground in front of Bruce's line of battle. Being part of a park or chase, it was considerably interrupted with trees; and an extensive marsh, still visible, in some places rendered it inaccessible, and in all of difficult approach. More to the northward, where the natural impediments were fewer, Bruce fortified his position against cavalry by digging a number of pits, so close together, says Barbour, as to resemble the cells in a honeycomb. They were a foot in breadth and between two and three feet deep, many rows of them being placed one behind the other. They were slightly covered with brushwood and green sods, so as not to be obvious to an impetuous enemy.

All the Scottish army were on foot, excepting a select body of cavalry stationed with Edward Bruce on the right wing, under the immediate command of Sir Robert Keith, the Marshal of Scotland, who were destined for the important service of charging and dispersing the English archers. Thus judiciously posted, in a situation fortified both by art and nature, Bruce awaited the attack of the English.
The copy of this curious document was supplied by my friend Mr. Thomson, Deputy Register of Scotland, whose researches into our ancient records are daily throwing new and important light upon the history of the country.

NOTE 3 T.

The Monarch rode along the van.—P. 453.

The English vanguard, commanded by the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford, came in sight of the Scottish army upon the evening of the 23rd of June. Bruce was then riding upon a little palfrey, in front of his foremost line, putting his host in order. It was then that the personal encounter took place betwixt him and Sir Henry de Bohun, a gallant English knight, the issue of which had a great effect upon the spirits of both armies. It is thus recorded by Barbour:

"And quhen Glosyster and Herfurd war With thair batail, approchand ner, Befor thaim all thar come rydand, With holm on heid, and sper in hand, Schyr Henry the Boune, the worthi, That was a wyeth knyacht, and a hardly; And to the Erle off Herfurdu eusyn: Arnyt in armys ged and fyne; Come on a sted, a low schote ner, Befor all othyr that ther war: And knew the king, for that he saw Him swa rang his men on raw; And by the crowne, that wes set Alsa upon his bassyet. And towart him he went in hy. And [quhen] the king sua apertly Saw him cum, forouth all his feris, In hy till him the hors he stersi. And quhen Schyr Henry saw the king Cum on, for owyt abaysing, Till him he rai'd in full gret hy. He tovth in that he suld weill lychtly Wyn him, and haf him at his will, Sen he hine horyt saw as ill. Sprent that sayny in till a ling. Schyr Henry myssyt the noble king. And he, that in his steraps sted, With the ax that wes hard and gud, With sa gret mayne6 ract he a dynt, That nothyr hat, na helm, mycht stynt The hewy'6 dusche6 that he him gave, That ner the held till the haryns clave. The hand ax schaft fruscht in twa; And he doun to the erd gan ga All flatlynys,6 for him failyt mychyt. This wes the fyrst streak off the fycht.6

BARBOUR'S BRUCE, book viii. v. 684.

The Scottish leaders demonstrated with the king upon his tenacity. He only answered, "I have broken my good battleaxe." The English vanguard retreated after witnessing this single combat. Probably their generals did not think it advisable to hazard an attack while its unfavorable issue remained upon their minds.

NOTE 3 U.

"What train of dust, with trumpet sound And glimmering spears, is wheeding round Our leftward flank?"—P. 454.

While the van of the English army advanced, a detached body attempted to relieve Stirling. Lord Hailes gives the following account of this manoeuvre and the result, which is accompanied by circumstances highly characteristic of the chivalrous manners of the age, and displays that generosity which reconciles us even to their ferocity upon other occasions.

1 Comrades. 2 Haste. 3 Without shrinking. 4 Spurred. 5 Line.

6 Strength or force. 7 Heavy. 8 Clash. 9 Broke. 10 Flat
Bruce had enjoined Randolph, who commanded the left wing of his army, to be vigilant in preventing any advanced parties of the English from throwing success into the castle of Stirling.

"Eight hundred horsemen, commanded by Sir Robert Clifford, were detached from the English army; they made a circuit by the low grounds to the east, and approached the castle. The king perceived their motions, and, coming up to Randolph, angrily exclaimed, 'Thoughtless man! you have suffered the enemy to pass.' Randolph hastened to repair his fault, or perish. As he advanced, the English cavalry wheeled to attack him. Randolph drew up his troops in a circular form, with their spears resting on the ground, and pretended to be retired on every side. At the first onset, Sir William Hay, an English commander of distinguished note, was slain. The enemy, far superior in numbers to Randolph, environed him, and pressed hard on his little band. Douglas saw his jeopardy, and requested the king's permission to go and succor him. 'You shall not move from your ground,' cried the king; 'let Randolph extricate himself as he best may. I will not alter my order of battle, and lose the advantage of my position.'—"In truth," replied Douglas, 'I cannot stand by and see Randolph perish; and, therefore, with your leave, I must aid him.' The king unwillingly consented, and Douglas flew to the assistance of his friend. While approaching, he perceived that the English were falling into disorder, and that the perseverance of Randolph had prevailed over their impetuous courage. 'Halt!' cried Douglas, 'those brave men have repulsed the enemy; let us not diminish their glory by sharing it,'—"D'ALRYMPLÉE'S Annals of Scotland. 4to, Edinburgh, 1779, pp. 44, 45.

Two large stones erected at the north end of the village of Newhouse, about a quarter of a mile from the south part of Stirling, ascertain the place of this memorable skirmish. The circumstance tended, on the one hand, to confirm the accuracy of the opinion of Lord Hailes that the Scottish line had Stirling on its left flank. It will be remembered that Randolph commanded infantry, Hayneecourt cavalry. Supposing, therefore, according to the vulgar hypothesis, that the Scottish line was drawn up, facing to the south, in the line of the brook of Dunsock, and consequently that Randolph was stationed with his left flank resting upon Milmount bog, it is morally impossible that his infantry, moving from that position with whatever celerity, could cut off from Stirling a body of cavalry who had already passed St. Ninians, or, in other words, were already between them and the town. Whereas, supposing Randolph's left to have approached St. Ninians, the short movement to Newhouse could easily be executed, so as to intercept the English in the manner described.

NOTE 3 V.

Responsive from the Scottish host,
Pipe-clang and bugle-sound were loud.—P. 455.

There is an old tradition that the well-known Scottish tune of "Hey, tuti tafti" was Bruce's march at the battle of Bannockburn. The late Mr. Ritson, no guarantor of propositions, doubts whether the Scots had any martial music, quotes Froissart's account of each soldier in the host bearing a little horn, on which, at the onset, they would make such a horrible noise, as if all the devils of hell had been among them. He observes that these horns are the only music mentioned by Barbour, and concludes that it must remain a moot point whether Bruce's army were cheered by the sound even of a solitary bugle.—"Historical Essay prefixed to Ritson's Scottish Songs." It may be observed in passing that the Scottish of this period certainly observed some monosyllabic cadence, even in winding their horns, since Bruce was at once recognized by his followers from his mode of blowing. See Note 2 on canto iv. But the tradition, true or false, has been the means of securing to Scotland one of the finest lyrics in the language, the celebrated war-song of Burns,—"Scots, wha hae w'll Wallace bled."

NOTE 3 W.

Now onward, and in open view,
The countless ranks of England drew.—P. 455.

Upon the 24th of June, the English army advanced to the attack. The narrowness of the Scottish front, and the nature of the ground, did not permit them to have the full advantage of their numbers, nor is it very easy to find out what was their proposed order of battle. The vanguard, however, appeared a distinct body, consisting of archers and spearmen on foot, and commanded, as already said, by the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford. Barbour, in one place, mentions that they formed nine battles or divisions; but from the following passage, it appears that there was no room or space for them to extend themselves, so that, except the vanguard, the whole army appeared to form one solid and compact body:

"The English men, on either party,
That as angels shone brightly,
Were not array'd on such manner:
For all their battles samny2 were
In a schiltrum.3 But whether it was Through the great straitness of the place
That they were in, to hide fighting;
Or that it was for absaying;4
I wete not. But in a schiltrum
It seemed they were all and some;
Out tawen the vaward anerly.5
That right with a great company,
Be them selwyn, arrayed were.
Who had been by, might have seen there
That folk outtake a meckill field
On breadth, where many a shining shield,
And many a burnished bright armour,
And many a man of great valour,
Might in that great schiltrum be seen:
And many a bright banner and sheen."—

BARBOUR'S Bruce, vol. II. p. 107.

was undoubtedly of a circular form, in order to resist the attacks of the English cavalry, on whatever quarter they might be charged. But it does not appear how or why the English, advancing to the attack at Bannockburn, should have arrayed themselves in a circular form. It seems more probable that by schiltrum, in the present case, Barbour means to express an irregular mass into which the English army was compressed by the unwieldiness of its numbers and the carelessness or ignorance of its leaders.

1 Barbour says expressly, they avoided the New Park (where Bruce's army lay), and held "well neath the Kirk," which can only mean St. Ninians.
2 Together.
3 Schiltrum.—This word has been variously limited or extended in its signification. In general, it seems to imply a large body of men drawn up very closely together. But it has been limited to imply a round or circular body of men so drawn up. I cannot understand it with this limitation in the present case. The schiltrum of the Scottish army at Falkirk was undoubtedly of a circular form, in order to resist the attacks of the English cavalry, on whatever quarter they might be charged. But it does not appear how or why the English, advancing to the attack at Bannockburn, should have arrayed themselves in a circular form. It seems more probable that by schiltrum, in the present case, Barbour means to express an irregular mass into which the English army was compressed by the unwieldiness of its numbers and the carelessness or ignorance of its leaders.
4 Frightening.
5 Alone.
NOTE 3 X.

See where you barefoot Abbot stands,
And blesses them with lifted hands.—P. 455.

"Maurice, Abbot of Inchaffray, placing himself on an eminence, celebrated mass in sight of the Scottish army. He then passed along the front barefooted, and bearing a crucifix in his hands, and exhorting the Scots, in few and forcible words, to combat for their rights and their liberty. The Scots kneeled down. 'They yield,' cried Edward; 'see, they implore mercy.' 'They do,' answered Ingelram de Umfraville, 'but not ours. On that field they will be victorious, or die.'—Annals of Scotland, vol. ii. p. 47.

NOTE 3 Y.

Forth, Marshal, on the peasant foe!
We'll tame the terror of their bow,
And cut the bow-string loose.—P. 456.

The English archers commenced the attack with their usual bravery and dexterity. But against a force whose importance he had learned by fatal experience, Bruce was provided. A small but select body of cavalry were detached from the right, under command of Sir Robert Keith. They rounded, as I conceive, the marsh called Miltown beg, and, keeping the firm ground, charged the left flank and rear of the English archers. As the bowmen had no spears nor long weapons fit to defend themselves against horse, they were instantly thrown into disorder, and spread through the whole English army a confusion from which they never fairly recovered.

"The Ingles archeris schot sa fast,
That mycht thair shaft haff ony last,
It had hene hard to Scottis men.
But King Robert, that wae gan ken1
That their archeris war peraulous,
And thair schot rycht hard and grewous
Ordanyt, fororth the assemble,
Hys marschell with a gret menye,
Fyve hundre arnyt in to stele,
That on lycht hors war horsyt welle,
For to pryk2 among the archeris;
And swa assaile thaim with thair speris,
That thay na layer haff to schote.
This marschell that Ik of mute,4
That Schyr Robert of Keyth was cauld,
As Ik befor her has yow tauld,
Quhen he saw the bataillis sua
Assemblis, and to gilder ga,
And saw the archeris schoty stontly;
With all thaim off his compyany,
In hy apon thaim gan he rid;
And our tuk thaim at a slid 5
And raschyt amang thaim sa rudly,
Stekand thaim sa disfitysly,
And in sic fusoun6 berand down,
And slayand thaim, for owyn ransoun,7
That thay thaim scalyt8 cuirilkan9
And fra that tyne furth thar wes none

1 Know.—2 Disjoined from the main body.—3 Spur.—4 That I speak of.—5 Set upon their flank.

That assemblyt schot to ma,10
Quhen Scottis archeris saw that thai sua
War rebyt,11 that wouix hardy,
And with all thair myecht schot egrey
Amang the hors men, that thair raid;
And woundis wid to thaim thai maid;
And slew of thaim a full gre dcle."

Barbour’s Bruce, book ix. v. 225.

Although the success of this manœuvre was evident, it is very remarkable that the Scottish generals do not appear to have profited by the lesson. Almost every subsequent battle which they lost against England was decided by the archers, to whom the close and compact array of the Scottish phalanx afforded an exposed and unresisting mark. The bloody battle of Halidon Hill, fought scarce twenty years afterwards, was so completely gained by the archers that the English are said to have lost only one knight, one esquire, and a few foot soldiers. At the battle of Neville’s Cross, in 1366, where David II., was defeated and made prisoner, John de Graham, observing the loss which the Scots sustained from the English bowmen, offered to charge and disperse them if a hundred men-at-arms were put under his command. "But, to confess the truth," says Fordun, "he could not procure a single horseman for the service proposed." Of such little use is experience in war, where its results are opposed by habit or prejudice.

NOTE 3 Z.

Each braggar chart could boast before,
Twelve Scottish lives his baldric bore.—P. 456.

Roger Ascham quotes a similar Scottish proverb, "whereby they give the whole praise of shooting honestly to Englishmen, saying thus, 'that every English archer beareth under his girle twenty-four Scottes.' Indeed Toxophilus says, before and truly, of the Scottish nation, 'The Scottes surely be good men of warre in theyre owne feates as can be; but as for shootinge, they can neither use it to any profite, nor yet challenge it for any praise.'"—Works of Ascham, edited by Bennet. 4to, p. 110.

It is said, I trust incorrectly, by an ancient English historian, that the "good Lord James of Douglas" dreaded the superiority of the English archers so much that when he made any of them prisoners, he gave him the option of losing the forefinger of his right hand or his right eye, either species of mutilation rendering him incapable to use the bow. I have mislaid the reference to this singular passage.

NOTE 4 A.

Down! down! in headlong overthrow
Horsemen and horse, the foremost go.—P. 456

It is generally alleged by historians that the English men-at-arms fell into the hidden snare which Bruce had prepared for them. Barbour does not mention the circumstance. According to his account, Randolph, seeing the slaughter made by the cavalry on the right wing among the archers, advanced courageously against the main body of the English, and entered into close combat with them. Douglas and Stuart, who commanded the Scottish centre, led their division also to the charge, and the battle becoming general along the whole line, was obstinately maintained on both sides for a long space of time; the Scottish archers doing great execution among the English men-at-arms, after the bowmen of England were dispersed.

6 Numbers. — 7 Ransom. — 8 Dispersed. — 9 Every one.—10 Make.—11 Driven back.

Note 4 B.

And steeds that shriek in agony.—P. 456.

I have been told that this line requires an explanatory note; and, indeed, those who witness the silent patience with which horses submit to the most cruel usage may be permitted to doubt that, in moments of sudden and intolerable anguish, they utter a most melancholy cry. Lord Erskine, in a speech made in the House of Lords, upon a bill for enforcing humanity towards animals, noticed this remarkable fact, in language which I will not mutilate by attempting to repeat it. It was my fortune, upon one occasion, to hear a horse, in a moment of agony, utter a thrilling scream, which I still consider the most melancholy sound I ever heard.

Note 4 C.

Lord of the Isles, my trust in thee
Is firm as Alian Roeb;
Rieh on with Highland sword and large,
I, with my Carrick spearsmen, charge.—P. 457.

When the engagement between the main bodies had lasted some time, Bruce made a decisive movement, by bringing up the Scottish reserve. It is traditionally said that at this crisis he addressed the Lord of the Isles in a phrase used as a motto by some of his descendants, "My trust is constant in thee." Barbour intimates that the reserve "assembled on one field," that is, on the same line with the Scottish forces already engaged; which leads Lord Hailes to conjecture that the Scottish ranks must have been much thinned by slaughter, since, in that circumserbed ground, there was room for the reserve to fall into the line. But the advance of the Scottish cavalry must have contributed a good deal to form the vacancy occupied by the reserve.

Note 4 D.

To arms they flew,—axe, club, or spear,—
And mimic ensign high they rear.—P. 458.

The followers of the Scottish camp observed, from the Gillies' hill in the rear, the impression produced upon the English army by the bringing up of the Scottish reserve, and, prompted by the enthusiasm of the moment, or the desire of plunder, assumed, in a tumultuary manner, such arms as they found nearest, fastened sheets to tent-poles and lances, and showed themselves like a new army advancing to battle.

Note 4 E.

Oh, give their hapless Prince his due.—P. 458.

Edward II., according to the best authorities, showed, in the fatal field of Bannockburn, personal gallantry not unworthy of his great sire and greater son. He remained on the

"Yomen, and swains, and pitail,
That in the Park yeont wictail,
War left; quhen thal wyst but lease,
That thair lordis, with full fechtyng,
On thair fayis assemblyt war,
Ane off thaim selwyn that war thar
Capitane of thaim all thal maid,
And schetics, that war sumede brad,
Thai festnyt in steid off baneris,
Apon lang treys and spieris:
And said that thal wald se the fycht;
And help thair lordis at thair mycht.
Quhen her till al assentwy ter,
In a rout assemblyt er?
Fyftene thousand that war, or ma.
And than in gret hy gan thal ga,
With thair baneris, all in a rout,
As thal had men bene styth and stout.
Thai come, with all that assemble,
Eycht quhill that mycht the battall se;
Than all at anys that gave a cry,
'Sla! sla! Apon thaln hastily.'"—Barbour's Bruce, book ix. v. 410.

The unexpected apparition of what seemed a new army completed the confusion which already prevailed among the English, who fled in every direction, and were pursued with immense slaughter. The brook of Bannock, according to Barbour, was so choked with the bodies of men and horses that it might have been passed dry-shod. The followers of the Scottish camp fell upon the disheartened fugitives, and added to the confusion and slaughter. Many were driven into the Firth, and perished there, which, by the way, could hardly have happened had the armies been drawn up east and west; since, in that case, to get at the river the English fugitives must have fled through the victorious army. About a short mile from the field of battle is a place called the Bloody Folds. Here the Earl of Gloucester is said to have made a stand, and died gallantly at the head of his own military tenants and vassals. He was much regretted by both sides; and it is said the Scottish would gladly have saved his life, but, neglecting to wear his surcoat with armorial bearings over his armor, he fell unknown, after his horse had been stabbed with spears.

Sir Marmaduke Twenge, an English knight, contrived to conceal himself during the fury of the pursuit, and when it was somewhat slackened, approached King Robert. "Whose prisoner are you, Sir Marmaduke?" said Bruce, to whom he was personally known. "Yours, sir," answered the knight. "I receive you," answered the king, and, treating him with the utmost courtesy, loaded him with gifts, and dismissed him without ransom. The other prisoners were all well treated. There might be policy in this, as Bruce would naturally wish to acquire the good opinion of the English barons, who were at this time at great variance with their king. But it also well accords with his high chivalrous character.

1 Swains.—Rabble.—2 Kept the provisions.

4 Lying.—5 Selves.—6 Somewhat.—7 Are.—8 Stiff.
field till forced away by the Earl of Pembroke, when all was lost. He then rode to the castle of Stirling, and demanded admittance; but the governor remonstrating upon the imprudence of shutting himself up in that fortress, which must so soon surrender, he assembled around his person five hundred men-at-arms, and, avoiding the field of battle and the victorious army, fled towards Linlithgow, pursued by Douglas with about sixty horse. They were augmented by Sir Lawrence Abernethy with twenty more, whom Douglas met in the Torwood upon their way to join the English army, and whom he easily persuaded to desert the defeated monarch, and to assist in the pursuit. They hung upon Edward’s flight as far as Dunbar, too few in number to assail him with effect, but enough to harass his retreat so constantly that whoever fell an instant behind was instantly slain or made prisoner. Edward’s ignominious flight terminated at Dunbar, where the Earl of March, who still professed allegiance to him, “received him full gently.” From thence the monarch of so great an empire, and the late commander of so gallant and numerous an army, escaped to Bamborough in a skirling vessel.

Bruce, as will appear from the following document, lost no time in directing the thunders of Parliamentary censure against such part of his subjects as did not return to their natural allegiance after the battle of Bannockburn:—

APUD MONASTERIUM DE CAMPUSKENNETH,
VI DIE NOVEMBRI, MCCCCXIV.
Judicium Redilum apud Kambuskeneth contra omnes libros qui tunc fuerunt contra fidem et pacem Domini Regis.

anno gracie millesimo tricentesimo quarto decimo sexto die Novembris tenente parlementum suum Excellentissimorum principes Domino Roberto de Gracia. Rege Scottorum et Illustri in monasterio de Cambuskeneth concordatam fuit finaliter Judicatam [ac super hoc] statutum de Concilio et Assensa Episcoporum et ceterorum Prelatorum Comitum Baronum et aliorum nobilium regni Scoecie nec non et tocius communis regni predicit quod omnes qui contra fidem et pacem dicti domini regis in bello seu alihi mortui sunt [vel qui dic] die ad pacem ejus et fidem non venerant licet se plebii vocati et legitime expectati fuissent de terris et temenitis et omni allo statu infra regnum Scoecie perpetuo sint exheredati et habeantur de cetero tanquam inimici Regis et Regni ab omnibus venelicione juris hereditarii vel juris alterius cuiusqueque in postero seque hereditatis suis in perpetuum privati Ad perpetuii igitur rei memoriae et evidentia producendun hujus Judicis et Statuti sigilla Episcoporum et aliorum Prelatorum nec non et comitum Baronum ac ceterorum nobilium dicti Regni presenti ordinacioni Judicio et statuto sunt appensa.

Sigillum Domini Regis
Sigillum Willelmi Episcopi Sancti Andree
Sigillum Roberti Episcopi Glasneunensis
Sigillum Willelmi Episcopi Dunkeldensis
. . . Episcopi . . . . . . . . . .
Sigillum Alani Episcopi Sodorensis
Sigillum Johannis Episcopi Brevehyneensis
Sigillum Andreas Episcopi Ergaudiensis
Sigillum Frechardis Episcopi Cathanensis
Sigillum Allatis de Scona
Sigillum Allatis de Calvo
Sigillum Allatis de Abirbrothok
Sigillum Allatis de Sancta Cruce
Sigillum Allatis de Londoris
Sigillum Allatis de Newbotill
Sigillum Allatis de Cupro
Sigillum Allatis de Paslet
Sigillum Allatis de Dunfermelyn
Sigillum Allatis de Lincluden
Sigillum Allatis de Insula Missaram
Sigillum Allatis de Sancto Columba
Sigillum Allatis de Deir
Sigillum Allatis de Dulce Corde
Sigillum Prioris de Coldingham
Sigillum Prioris de Rosythnot
Sigillum Prioris Sancte Andree
Sigillum Prioris de Pittinwem
Sigillum Prioris de Insula de Lochlevin
Sigillum Senescalli Scoecie
Sigillum Wilhelmi Comitis de Ros

NOTE 4 F.
Nor for De Argentine alone
Through Ninian’s church these torches shone,
And rose the death-prayer’s awful tone.—P. 459.

The remarkable circumstances attending the death of De Argentine have been already noticed (Note L). Besides this renowned warrior, there fell many representatives of the noblest houses in England, which never sustained a more bloody and disastrous defeat. Barbour says that two hundred pairs of gilded spurs were taken from the field of battle; and that some were left the author can bear witness, who has in his possession a curious antique spur, dug up in the morass, not long since.

“It was forth a gret ferly,
To se samyn sa fede de.
Twa hundre payr of spurs reid,
War tane of knichtis that war deid.”

I am now to take my leave of Barbour, not without a sincere wish that the public may encourage the undertaking of my friend Dr. Jamieson, who has issued proposals for publishing an accurate edition of his poem, and of Blind Harry’s Wallace. The only good edition of The Bruce was published by Scott’s poems have been uniformly corrected by the text of Dr. Jamieson’s Bruce, published, along with Blind Harry’s Wallace, Edin. 1820, 2 vols. 4to.—Ed.]

Mr. Pinkerton in three vols., in 1790; and, the learned editor having had no personal access to consult the manuscript, it is not without errors; and it has besides become scarce. Of Wallace there is no tolerable edition; yet these two poems do no small honor to the early state of Scottish poetry, and The Bruce is justly regarded as containing authentic historical facts.

The following list of the slain at Bannockburn, extracted from the continuator of Trivet's Annals, will show the extent of the national calamity:—

LIST OF THE SLAIN.

Knights & Knights Bannerets.
Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester,
Robert de Clifford,
Payn Tybetot,
William Le Mareschal,
John Comyn,
William de Vesey,
John de Montfort,
Nicolas de Hastedegh,
William Dayncourt,
Ægidius de Argenteyne,
Edmond Comyn,
John Love (the rich),
Edmund de Hastynge,
Milo de Stapleton,
Simon Ward,

Knights.
Robert de Felton,
Michael Poyning,
Edmund Mauley.

Robert de Boun,
Thomas de Ufford,
John de Elsingefelde,
John de Harcourt,
Walter de Hakelet,
Philip de Courtenay,
Hugo de Scales,
Radulph de Beauchamp,
John de Penbrigge,
With 33 others of the same rank, not named.

John de Wevelmont,
Robert de Nevil,
John de Segrave,
Gilbert Peeche,
John de Clavering,
Antony de Lucy,
Radulph de Camys,
John de Eyre,
Andrew de Abreymyn.

Knights.
Thomas de Berkeley,
The son of Roger Tyrryl,
Anselm de Mareschal,
Giles de Beauchamp,
John de Cytrewast,
John Bluwet,
Roger Corbet,
Gilbert de Boun,
Bartholomew de Enefeld,

Knights & Knights Bannerets.
Marmaduke de Twenge,
John de Wyletone,
Robert de Maulee,
Henry Fitz-Hugh,
Thomas de Gray,
Walter de Beauchamp,
Richard de Charon,

Prisoners.

Barons and Baronets.
Henry de Boun, Earl of Hereford,
Lord John Giffard,
William de Latimer,
Maurice de Berkeley,
Ingelram de Umfraville,

Marmaduke de Twenge,
John de Wyletone,
Robert de Maulee,
Henry Fitz-Hugh,
Thomas de Gray,
Walter de Beauchamp,
Richard de Charon,

Thomas de Ferrers,
Radulph and Thomas Botterton,
John and Nicholas de Kingston (brothers),
William Lovel,
Henry de Wileton,
Baldwin de Frevill,
John de Cliveudon,\(^1\)
Adomar la Touché,
John de Merewode,\(^2\)
John Maufe,\(^2\)
Thomas and Odo Lele Ercedekene,
Robert Beaupel (the son),
John Mautravers (the son),
William and William Giffard, and 34 other knights not named by the historian.

And in sum there were slain, along with the Earl of Gloucester, forty-two barons and bannerets. The number of earls, barons, and bannerets made captive was twenty-two, and sixty-eight knights. Many clerks and esquires were also there slain or taken. Roger de Northurpe, keeper of the king's signet (Castus Targie Domini Regis), was made prisoner with his two clerks, Roger de Wakenfelde and Thomas de Switon, upon which the king caused a seal to be made, and entitled it his privy seal, to distinguish the same from the signet so lost. The Earl of Hereford was exchanged against Bruce's queen, who had been detained in captivity ever since the year 1296. The Targie, or signet, was restored to England through the intercession of Ralph de Monthermer, ancestor of Lord Moira, who is said to have found favor in the eyes of the Scottish king.—Continuation of Trivet's Annals, Hall's ed. Oxford, 1712, vol. ii. p. 14.

Such were the immediate consequences of the field of Bannockburn. Its more remote effects, in completely establishing the national independence of Scotland, afford a boundless field for speculation.

---

\(^1\) Supposed Clinton.

\(^2\) Maufe.
The Field of Waterloo:

A POEM.

"Though Valois braved young Edward's gentle hand,
And Albert rush'd on Henry's wayworn band,
With Europe's chosen sons, in arms renown'd,
Yet not on Vere's bold archers long they look'd,
Nor Audley's squires nor Mowbray's yeomen brook'd,—
They saw their standard fall, and left their monarch bound."

Akenside.

To Her Grace

The Duchess of Wellington,
Princess of Waterloo,
&c., &c., &c.,

The Following Verses

Are Most Respectfully Inscribed

By

The Author.

ADVERTISEMENT.

It may be some apology for the imperfections of this poem that it was composed hastily, and during a short tour upon the Continent, when the author's labors were liable to frequent interruption; but its best apology is that it was written for the purpose of assisting the Waterloo Subscription.

Abbotsford, 1815.

The Field of Waterloo.

I.

Fair Brussels, thou art far behind,
Though, lingering on the morning wind,
We yet may hear the hour
Peal'd over orchard and canal,
With voice prolong'd and measured fall,
From proud St. Michael's tower;
Thy wood, dark Soignies, holds us now,²
Where the tall beeches' glossy bough

For many a league around,
With birch and darksome oak between,
Spreads deep and far a pathless screen
Of tangled forest ground.
Stems planted close by stems defy
The adventurous foot—the curious eye
For access seeks in vain;
And the brown tapestry of leaves,
Strew'd on the blighted ground, receives
Nor sun, nor air, nor rain.
No opening glade dawns on our way,
No streamlet, glancing to the ray;

¹ Published by Constable & Co. in October, 1815. 8vo.
² "The wood of Soignies is supposed to be a remnant of the forest of Ardennes, famous in Boiardo's Orlando, and immortal in Shakspeare's As You Like it. It is also celebrated in Tacitus as being the spot of successful defence by the Germans against the Roman encroachments."—Byron.

Our woodland path has cross'd;
And the straight causeway which we tread
Prolongs a line of dull arcade,
Unvarying through the unvaried shade
Until in distance lost.

II.
A brighter, livelier scene succeeds;¹
In groups the scattering wood recedes,
Hedge-rows, and huts, and sunny meads,
And corn-fields, glance between;
The peasant, at his labor blithe,
Plies the hook'd staff, and short'en'd scythe;—²
But when these ears were green,
Placed close within destruction's scope,
Full little was that rustic's hope
Their ripening to have seen!
And, lo, a hamlet and its pane:—
Let not the gazer with disdain
Their architecture view;
For yonder rude ungraceful shrine,
And disproportion'd spire, are thine,³
Immortal WATERLOO!⁴

III.
Fear not the heat, though full and high
The sun has scorched the autumn sky.
And scarce a forest struggler now
To shade us spreads a Greenwood bough;
These fields have seen a hotter day
Than e'er was fired by sunny ray.
Yet one mile on—yon shutter'd hedge
Crests the soft hill whose long smooth ridge

¹ "Southward from Brussels lies the field of blood,
Some three hours' journey for a well-girt man;
A horseman, who in haste pursued his road,
Would reach it as the second hour began,
The way is through a forest deep and wide,
Extending many a mile on either side.

² "No cheerful woodland this of antic trees,
With thickets varied and with sunny glade;
Look where he will, the weary traveller sees
One gloomy, thick, impenetrable shade
Of tall straight trunks, which move before his sight,
With interchange of lines of long green light.

³ "Here, where the woods, receding from the road,
Have left on either hand an open space
For fields and gardens, and for man's abode,
Stands WATERLOO,—a little lowly place,
Obscure till now, when it hath risen to fame,
And given the victory its English name."

⁴ See Appendix, Note A.

⁵ "Let not the stranger with disdain
Its misproportions view;
You { rude } form'd, { ungraceful shrine,
( awkward and )
And yonder humble spire, are thine."

⁶ "What time the second Carlos ruled in Spain,
Last of the Austrian line by fate decreed,
Here Castanaza reard a votive fane,
Praying the patron saints to bless with seed

Looks on the field below,
And sinks so gently on the dale
That not the folds of Beauty's veil
In easier curves can flow.
Brief space from thence, the ground, again
Ascending slowly from the plain,
Forms an opposing screen,
Which, with its crest of upland ground,
Shuts the horizon all around.
The soft'en'd vale between
Slopes smooth and fair for courser's tread;
Not the most timid maid need dread
To give her snow-white palfrey head
On that wide stubble-ground;⁶
Nor wood, nor tree, nor bush, are there,
Her course to intercept or sear,
Nor fosse nor fence are found,
Save where, from out her shutter'd bowers,
Rise Hougomont's dismantled towers.⁷

IV.
Now, seest thou aught in this lone scene
Can tell of that which late hath been?—
A stranger might reply,
"The bare extent of stubble-plain
Seems lately light'en'd of its grain;
And yonder sable tracks remain
Marks of the peasant's ponderous wain,
When harvest-home was nigh.⁸
On these broad spots of trampled ground,
Perchance the rustic's danced such round
As Teniers loved to draw;
And where the earth seems scorched by flame,

His childless sovereign. Heaven denied an heir,
And Europe mourn'd in blood the frustrate prayer."

SOUTHEY.

To the original chapel of the Marquis of Castanaza has now been added a building of considerable extent, the whole interior of which is filled with monumental inscriptions for the heroes who fell in the battle.

⁷ The MS. has not this compleat.

⁸ "As a plain, WATERLOO seems marked out for the scene of some great action, though this may be mere imagination.
I have viewed with attention those of Platea, Troy, Mantin-eas, Leuctra, Charon, and Marathon; and the field around Mont St. Jean and Hougomont appears to want little but a better cause; and that indecible but impresive halo which the lapse of ages throws around a consecrated spot, to vie in interest with any or all of these, except, perhaps, the last mentioned."—BYRON.

⁹ MS.: "Save where { its } fire-scarred bowers among,
Rise the rent towers of Hougomont."

"Is the spot mark'd with no colossal bust,
Nor column trophied for triumphal show?
None: But the moral's truth tells simpler so,
As the ground was before, thus let it be:—
How that red rain hath made the harvest grow!
And is this all the world has gain'd by thee,
Thou first and last of fields! king-making Victory?"—

BYRON.

"Was it a soothing or a mournful thought,
Amid this scene of slaughter as we stood,
To dress the homely feast they came,
And toil'd the kerchief'd village dame
    Around her fire of straw."

V.
So deem'st thou—so each mortal deems,
Of that which is from that which seems:—
    But other harvest here,
Than that which peasant's seythe demands,
Was gather'd in by sterner hands,
    With bayonet, blade, and spear.
No vulgar crop was theirs to reap,
No stinted harvest thin and cheap!
Heroes before each fatal sweep
    Fell thick as ripen'd grain;
And ere the darkening of the day,
    Piled high as autumn shocks, there lay
The ghostly harvest of the fray,
    The corpses of the slain.¹

VI.
Ay, look again—that line, so black
And trampled, marks the bivouac,
Yon deep-graved ruts the artillery's track,
    So often lost and won;
And close beside, the harden'd mud
Still shows where, fetlock-deep in blood,
The fierce dragon, through battle's flood,
    Dash'd the hot war-horse on.
These spots of excavation tell
The ravage of the bursting shell—
And feel'st thou not the tainted steam,
That reeks against the sultry beam,
From yonder trench'd mound?
The pestilential fumes declare
That Carnage has replenish'd there
    Her garner-house profound.

VII.
Far other harvest-home and feast,
Than claims the boor from seythe released,
    On these search'd fields were known!
Death hover'd o'er the maddening rout,
And, in the thrilling battle-shout,
    Sent for the bloody banquet out
A summons of his own.

Where armies had with recent fury fought,
To mark how gentle Nature still pursued
Her quiet course, as if she took no care
For what her noblest work had suffer'd there?

¹ "Earth had received into her silent womb
    Her slaughter'd creatures; horse and man they lay,
Through rolling smoke the Demon's eye
Could well each destined guest esp'y;
Well could his ear in ecstasy
Distinguish every tone
That fill'd the chorus of the fray,
From cannon-roar and trumpet-bray,
From charging squadrons' wild hurra,
From the wild clang that mark'd their way,
Down to the dying groan,
And the last sob of life's decay,
When breath was all but flown.

VIII.
Feast on, stern foe of mortal life,
Feast on!—but think not that a strife,
With such promisous carnage rife,
    Protracted space may last;
The deadly tug of war at length
Must limits find in human strength,
And cease when these are past.
Vain hope!—that morn's o'cerolended sun
Heard the wild shout of fight begun
Ere he attain'd his height,
And through the war-smoke, volumed high,
Still peals that unremitted cry,
Though now he stoops to night.
For ten long hours of doubt and dread,
Fresh succors from the extended head
Of either hill the contest fed;
Still down the slope they drew,
The charge of columns paused not,
Nor ceased the storm of shell and shot;
For all that war could do
Of skill and force was proved that day,
And turn'd not yet the doubtful fray
On bloody Waterloo.

IX.
Pale Brussels! then what thoughts were thine;²
When ceaseless from the distant line
Continued thunders came!
Each burgher held his breath, to hear
These forerunners³ of havoc near,
    Of rape and of flame.
What ghastly sights were thine to meet,
When rolling⁴ through thy stately street,

And friend and foe, within the general tomb.
Equal had been their lot: one fatal day
For all, . . one labor, . . and one place of rest
They found within their common parent's breast.

² See Appendix, Note B.
³ MS.: —— "harbingers."
⁴ MS.: —— "streaming."

SOUTHEY.
The wounded show'd their mangled plight,
In token of the unfinished fight,
And from each anguish-laden wain
The blood-drops laid thy dust like rain.
How often in the distant drum
Heardst thou the fell Invader come,
While Ruin, shouting to his band,
Shook high her torch and gory brand!—
Cheer thee, fair City!  From yon stand,
Impatient, still his outstretched hand
Points to his prey in vain,
While maddening in his eager mood,
And all unwont to be withstood,
He fires the fight again.

X.
"On! on!" was still his stern exclaim;
"Confront the battery's jaws of flame!
Rush on the level'd gun!"
My steel-clad cuirassiers, advance!
Each Hulan forward with his lance!
My Guard—my Chosen—charge for France,
France and Napoleon!"
Loud answer'd their acclamation shout,
Greeting the mandate which sent out
Their bravest and their best to dare
The fate their leader shunn'd to share,
But Hé, his country's sword and shield,
Still in the battle-front reveal'd,
Where danger fiercest swept the field,
Came like a beam of light,
In action prompt, in sentence brief—
"Soldiers, stand firm!" exclaim'd the Chief;
"England shall tell the fight!!"

XI.
On came the whirlwind—like the last
But fiercest sweep of tempest blast;
On came the whirlwind—steel-gleams broke
Like lightning through the rolling smoke;
The war was waked anew,
Three hundred cannon-mouths roar'd loud,
And from their throats, with flash and cloud,
Their showers of iron threw.
Beneath their fire, in full career,
Rush'd on the ponderous cuirassier,
The lanceer couched his ruthless spear,
And hurrying as to havoc near,
The cohorts' eagles flew.
In one dark torrent, broad and strong,
The advancing onset roll'd along,
Forth harbing'er'd by fierce acclaim,
That, from the shroud of smoke and flame,
Peal'd wildly the imperial name.

XII.
But on the British heart were lost
The terrors of the charging host;
For not an eye the storm that view'd
Changed its proud glance of fortitude,
Nor was one forward footstep staid,
As dropp'd the dying and the dead,
Fast as their ranks the thunders tear,
Fast they renew'd each serried square;
And on the wounded and the slain
Closed their diminish'd files again,
Till from their line scarce spear's lengths three,
Emerging from the smoke they see
Helmet, and plume, and panoply,—
Then waked their fire at once!
Each musketeer's revolving knell
As fast, as regularly fell,
As when they practice to display
Their discipline on festive day.
Then down went helm and lance,
Down were the eagle banners sent,
Down reeling steeds and riders went,
Corselets were pierced, and pennous rent;
And, to augment the fray,
Wheel'd full against their staggering flanks,
The English horsemen's foaming ranks
Forced their resistless way.
Then to the musket-knell succeeds
The clash of swords, the neigh of steeds;
As plies the smith his clanging trade,
Against the cuirass rang the blade;

Of wheels, which o'er the rough and stony road
Convey'd their living agonizing load!

"Hearts little to the melting mood inclined
Grew sick to see their sufferings; and the thought
Still comes with horror to the shuddering mind
Of those sad days, when Belgian ears were taught
The British soldier's cry, half groan, half prayer,
Breathed when his pain is more than he can bear!"

---

1 MS.: "bloody plight."

2 "Within those walls there linger'd at that hour
Many a brave soldier on the bed of pain,
Whom aid of human art should never restore
To see his country and his friends again;
And many a victim of that fell debate
Whose life yet wav'er'd in the scales of fate.

"Others in wagons borne abroad I saw,
Albeit recovering, still a mournful sight;
Languid and helpless, some were stretch'd on straw;
Some, more advanced, sustain'd themselves upright,
And with bold eye and careless front, methought,
Seem'd to set wounds and death again at nought.

"What had it been then, in the recent days
Of that great triumph, when the open wound
Was festering, and along the crowded ways;
Hour after hour, was heard the incessant sound

3 MS.: "his stern exclaim;
'Where falls the sword make way by flame!
Recall not from the cannon's aim;
Confront them, and they're won.'"

4 MS.: "Nor was one forward footstep stopp'd,
Though close beside a comrade dropp'd."

5 See Appendix, Note F.

6 "I heard the broadsword's deadly clang,
As if an hundred anvils rang!"—Lady of the Lake.
And while amid their close array
The well-served cannon rent their way; 1
And while amid their scatter'd band
Raged the fierce rider's bloody brand,
Recoil'd in common rout and fear
Lancer and guard and cuirassier,
Horsmen and foot—a mingled host,
Their leaders fall'n, their standards lost.

XIII.
Then, WELLINGTON! thy piercing eye
This crisis caught of destiny—
The British host had stood
That morn 'gainst charge of sword and lance 2
As their own ocean rocks hold stance,
But when thy voice had said, "Advance!"
They were their ocean's flood.—
O Thou, whose inauspicious aim
Hath wrought thy host this hour of shame,
Think'st thou thy broken bands will bide
The terrors of yon rushing tide?
Or will thy chosen brook to feel
The British shock of leveil'd steel? 3
Or dost thou turn thine eye
Where coming squadrons gleam afar,
And fresher thunders weal the war,
And other standards fly? —
Think not that in yon columns file
Thy conquering troops from Distant Dyle—

1 MS.: "Beneath that storm, in full career,
Rush'd on the ponderous cuirassier;
The lance (came with leveil'd) spear,
{conch'd his fatal } spear
Sworn { each } to do or die;
But not an instant would they bear
The (thunders) of each serried square:
They halt, they turn, they fly!
Not even their chosen brook to feel
The British shock of leveil'd steel;
Enough that through their close array
The well-plied cannon tore their way;
Enough that 'mid their broken band
The horsemen plied the bloody brand.
Recoil'd,}" 4

2 "The cuirassiers continued their dreadful onset, and rode up to the squares in the full confidence, apparently, of sweeping everything before the impetuosity of their charge. Their onset and reception was like a furious ocean pouring itself against a chain of insulated rocks. The British square stood unmoved, and never gave fire until the cavalry were within ten yards, when men rolled one way, horses galloped another, and the cuirassiers were in every instance driven back."—Life of Bonaparte, vol. ix. p. 12.

3 See Appendix, Note G.

4 MS.: "Or can th' memory fail to quote,
Heard to thy cost, the vengeful note
Of Prussia's trumpet tone?" 5

5 "We observe a degree of similitude in some passages of Mr. Scott's present work to the compositions of Lord Byron, and particularly his lordship's ode to Bonaparte; and we think that whoever peruses the 'Field of Waterloo' with that ode in his recollection will be struck with this new re-

Is Blucher yet unknown?
Or dwells not in thy memory still (Heard frequent in thine hour of ill)
What notes of hate and vengeance thrill
In Prussia's trumpet tone? 4
What yet remains?—shall it be thine
To head the relics of thy line
In one dread effort more?—
The Roman lore thy leisure loved.5
And thou canst tell what fortune proved
That Chieftain who, of yore,
Ambition's dizzy paths essay'd,
And with the gladiators' aid
For empire enterprise—
He stood the cast his rashness play'd,
Left not the victims he had made,
Dug his red grave with his own blade,
And on the field he lost was laid,
Abhor'd—but not despised.6

XIV.
But if revolves thy fainter thought
On safety—howsoever bought—
Then turn thy fearful rein and ride,
Though twice ten thousand men have died
On this eventful day
To gild the military fame
Which thou, for life, in traffic tame
Wilt barter thus away.

semblance. We allude principally to such passages as that which begins,
'The Roman lore thy leisure loved,' &c., and to such lines as
'Now, seest thou aught in this loved scene,
Can tell of that which late has been?'
or,
'So deem'st thou—so each mortal deems—
Of that which is, from that which seems;'
lines, by the way, of which we cannot express any very great admiration. This sort of influence, however, over even the principal writers of the day (whether they are conscious of the influence or not), is one of the surest tests of genius, and one of the proudest tributes which it receives."—Monthly Review.

6 "When the engagement was ended, it evidently appeared with what undaunted spirit and resolution Cætînus's army had been fired; for the body of every one was found on that very spot which during the battle he had occupied, those only excepted who were forced from their posts by the Prætorian cohort; and even they, though they fell a little out of the ranks, were all wounded before. Cætînus himself was found, far from his own men, amidst the dead bodies of the enemy, breathing a little, with an air of that fierceness still in his face which he had when alive. Finally, in all his army there was not so much as one free citizen taken prisoner, either in the engagement or in flight; for they spared their own lives as little as those of the enemy. The army of the republic obtained the victory, indeed, but it was neither a cheap nor a joyful one, for their bravest men were either slain in battle or dangerously wounded. As there were many, too, who went to view the field, either out of curiosity or a desire of plunder, in turning over the dead bodies some found a friend, some a relation, and some a guest; others there were likewise who discovered their enemies; so that through the whole army there appeared a mixture of gladness and sorrow, joy and mourning."—Sallust.
Shall future ages tell this tale
Of inconsistence faint and frail?
And art thou He of Lodi's bridge,
Marengo's field, and Wagram's ridge?
Or is thy soul like mountain tide,
That, swell'd by winter storm and shower,
Rolls down in turbulence of power,
A torrent fierce and wide;
Reft of these aids, a rill obscure,
Shrinking unnoticed, mean, and poor,
Whose channel shows display'd
The wrecks of its impetuous course,
But not one symptom of the force
By which these wrecks were made!

XV.
Spur on thy way!—since now thine ear
Has brook'd thy veterans' wish to hear,
Who, as thy flight they eyed,
Exclaim'd,—while tears of anguish came,
Wrung forth by pride, and rage, and shame,—
"Oh, that he had but died!"¹
But yet, to sum this hour of ill,
Look, ere thou leavest the fatal hill,
Back on you broken ranks—
Upon whose wild confusion gleams
The moon, as on the troubled streams
When rivers break their banks,
And, to the ruin'd peasant's eye,
Objects half seen roll swiftly by,
Down the dread current hurl'd—
So mingle banner, wain, and gun,
Where the tumultuous flight rolls on
Of warriors who, when morn begun,²
Defied a banded world.

XVI.
List—frequent to the hurrying rout,
The stern pursuers' vengeful shout
Tells that upon their broken rear
Rages the Prussian's bloody spear.
So fell a shriek was none
When Beresina's icy flood
Redden'd and thaw'd with flame and blood,³
And, pressing on thy desperate way,
Raised oft and long their wild hurra
The children of the Don.
Thine ear no yell of horror eleft
So ominous when, all bereft
Of aid, the valiant Polack left—⁴
Ay, left by thee—found soldier's grave⁵
In Leipsic's corpse-encumber'd wave.
Fate, in those various perils past,
Reserved thee still some future cast;
On the dread die thou now hast thrown
Hangs not a single field alone,
Nor one campaign—thy martial fame,
Thy empire, dynasty, and name,
Have felt the final stroke;
And now, o'er thy devoted head
The last stern vial's wrath is shed,
The last dread seal is broke.⁶

XVII.
Since live thou wilt—refuse not now
Before these demagogues to bow,
Late objects of thy scorn and hate,
Who shall thy once imperial fate
Make wordy theme of vain debate.—
Or shall we say, thou stoop'st less low
In seeking refuge from the foe,
Against whose heart, in prosperous life
Thine hand hath ever held the knife?
Such homage hath been paid
By Roman and by Grecian voice,
And there were honor in the choice,
If it were freely made.
Then safely come: in one so low,
So lost, we cannot own a foe;
Though dear experience bid us end,
In thee we ne'er can hail a friend.—
Come, howsoe'er—but do not hide
Close in thy heart that germ of pride
Erewhile by gifted bard espied,⁷
That "yet imperial hope;"⁸

¹ The MS. adds:
"That pang survived, refuse not then
To humble thee before the men,
Late objects of thy scorn and hate,
Who shall thy once imperial fate
Make wordy theme of vain debate,
And chaffer for thy crown;
As usurers wont, who suck the all
Of the foolishly prodigal,
When on the giddy diec's fall
His latest hope has flown.
But yet, to sum," &c.

² MS.: "Where in one tide of terror run
The warriors that, when morn begun,"
³ MS.: "So ominous a shriek was none,
Not even when Beresina's flood
Was thaw'd by streams of tepid blood."
⁴ For an account of the death of Poniatowski at Leipsic
⁵ MS.: "Not such were heard when, all bereft
Of aid, the valiant Polack left—
Ay, left by thee—found gallant grave."
⁶ "I, who with faith unshaken from the first,
Even when the tyrant seem'd to touch the skies,
Had look'd to see the high-blown bubble burst,
And for a fall conspicuous as his rise,
Even in that faith had look'd not for defeat
So swift, so overwhelming, so complete."—SOUTHBY.
⁷ MS.: "The germ, "but do not hide
Once more that secret germ of pride
Which erst you gifted bard espied."
⁸ "The Desolator desolate!
The Victor overthrown!
The Arbiter of others' fate
A Suppliant for his own!
Is it some yet imperial hope
That with such change can calmly cope,
Or dread of death alone?
The Field of Waterloo.

Think not that for a fresh rebound,
To raise ambition from the ground,
We yield thee means or scope,
In safety come—but ne'er again
Hold type of independent reign;
No islet calls thee lord,
We leave thee no confederate band,
No symbol of thy lost command,
To be a dagger in the hand
From which we wrench'd the sword.

XVIII.
Yet, even in your sequester'd spot
May worthier conquest be thy lot
Than yet thy life has known;
Conquest unbought by blood or harm,
That needs nor foreign aid nor arm,
A triumph all thine own.
Such waits thee when thou shalt control
Those passions wild, that stubborn soul,
That marr'd thy prosperous scene:—
Hear this—from no unmoved heart,
Which sighs, comparing what thou art
With what thou might'st have been!

XIX.
Thou, too, whose deeds of fame renew'd
Bankrupt a nation's gratitude,
To thine own noble heart must owe
More than the meed she can bestow.
For not a people's just acclaim,
Not the full hail of Europe's fame,
Thy Prince's smiles, thy State's decree,
The ducal rank, the garter'd knee,
Not these such pure delight afford
As that, when hanging up thy sword,
Well may'st thou think, "This honest steel
Was ever drawn for public weal;
And, such was rightful Heaven's decree,
Ne'er sheathed unless with victory!"

XX.
Look forth, once more, with softer'd heart,
Ere from the field of fame we part; 2
To die a prince—or live a slave—
Thy choice is most ignobly brave!"

Byron's Ode to Napoleon.

1 "Tis done—but yesterday a king!
And arm'd with kings to strive—
And now thou art a nameless thing;
So object—yet alive!
Is this the man of thousand thrones,
Who share'd our earth with hostile bones,
And can he thus survive?
Since he, miscall'd the Morning Star,
Nor man nor fiend hath fallen so far."

Byron's Ode to Napoleon.

2 "We left the field of battle in such mood
As human hearts from thence should bear away;
And, musing thus, our purposed route pursued,
Which still through scenes of recent bloodshed lay,

Triumph and sorrow border near,
And joy oft melts into a tear.
Alas! what links of love that morn
Has War's rude hand asunder torn!
For ne'er was field so sternly fought,
And ne'er was conquest dearer bought.
Here piled in common slaughter sleep
Those whom affection long shall weep:
Here rests the sire, that ne'er shall strain
His orphans to his heart again;
The son, whom, on his native shore,
The parent's voice shall bless no more;
The bridegroom, who has hardly press'd
His blushing consort to his breast;
The husband, whom through many a year
Long love and mutual faith endear.
Thou canst not name one tender tie,
But here dissolved its relics lie!
Oh! when thou seest some mourner's veil
Shroud her thin form and visage pale,
Or mark'st the matron's bursting tears
Stream when the stricken drum she hears;
Or seest how manlier grief, suppress'd,
Is laboring in a father's breast,—
With no inquiry vain pursue
The cause, but think on Waterloo!

XXI.
Period of honor as of woes,
What bright careers 'twas thine to close!—
Mark'd on thy roll of blood, what names
To Britain's memory, and to Fame's,
Laid there their last immortal claims!
Thou saw'st in seas of gore expire
Redoubted Picton's soul of fire—
Saw'st in the mingled carnage lie
All that of Ponsonby could die—
De Lancey change Love's bridal wreath
For laurels from the hand of Death— 3
Saw'st gallant Miller's falling eye
Still bent where Albion's banners fly,
And Cameron, 4 in the shock of steel,
Die like the offspring of Lochiel;

Where Prussia late, with strong and stern delight,
Hung on her fated foes to persecute their flight.

Southey.

3 The poet's friend, Colonel Sir William de Lancey, married the beautiful daughter of Sir James Hall, Bart., in April, 1815, and received his mortal wound on the 18th of June. See Captain B. Hall's affecting narrative in the first series of his Fragments of Voyages and Travels, vol. ii. p. 369.

4 Colonel Miller, of the Guards, son to Sir William Miller, Lord Glenlee. When mortally wounded in the attack on the Bois de Bosso, he desired to see the colors of the regiment once more ere he died. They were waved over his head, and the expiring officer declared himself satisfied.

5 "Colonel Cameron, of Fassiefern, so often distinguished in Lord Wellington's despatches from Spain, fell in the action at Quatre Bras (16th June, 1815), while leading the 92d or Gordon Highlanders to charge a body of cavalry supported by infantry."—Paul's Letters, p. 91.
And generous Gordon, 1 'mid the strife,
Fall while he watch'd his leader's life.—
Ah! though her guardian angel's shield
Fenced Britain's hero through the field,
Fate not the less her power made known
Through his friends' hearts to pierce his own!

XXII.
Forgive, brave Dead, the imperfect lay!
Who may your names, your numbers, say?
What high-strung harp, what lofty line,
To each the dear-earn'd praising assign,
From high-born chiefs of martial fame
To the poor soldier's lowlier name?
Lightly ye rose that dawning day
From your cool couch of swamp and clay,
To fill, before the sun was low,
The bed that morning cannot know.—
Oft may the tear the green sod steep,
And sacred be the heroes' sleep,
Till time shall cease to run;
And ne'er beside their noble grave
May Briton pass and fail to crave
A blessing on the fallen brave
Who fought with Wellington!

XXIII.
Farewell, sad Field! whose blighted face
Wears desolation's withering trace;
Long shall my memory retain
Thy shatter'd huts and trampled grain,
With every mark of martial wrong
That scarth thy towers, fair Hougomont!
Yet though thy garden's green arcade
The marksman's fatal post was made,
Though on thy shatter'd beeches fell
The blended rage of shot and shell,
Though, from thy blacken'd portals torn,
Their fall thy blighted fruit-trees mourn,
Has not such havoc bought a name
Immortal in the rolls of fame?
Yes—Agincourt may be forgot,
And Cressy be an unknown spot,
And Blenheim's name be new;
But still in story and in song,
For many an age remember'd long,
Shall live the towers of Hougomont,
And Field of Waterloo.

1 Colonel the Honorable Sir Alexander Gordon, brother to the Earl of Aberdeen, who has erected a pillar on the spot where he fell by the side of the Duke of Wellington.

2 "Beyond these points the fight extended not,—
Small theatre for such a tragedy!
Its breadth scarce more, from eastern Popelot
To where the groves of Hougomont on high
Rear in the west their venerable head,
And cover with their shade the countless dead.
"But wouldst thou tread this celebrated ground,
And trace with understanding eyes a scene
Above all other fields of war renown'd,
From western Hougomont thy way begin;"

CONCLUSION.

STERN tide of human Time! that know'st not rest,
But, sweeping from the cradle to the tomb,
Bear'st ever downward on thy dusky breast
Successive generations to their doom;
While thy capacious stream has equal room
For the gay bark where Pleasure's streamers sport,
And for the prison-ship of guilt and gloom,
The fisher-skiff, and barge that bears a court,
Still wafting onward all to one dark silent port;—

STERN tide of Time! through what mysterious change
Of hope and fear have our frail barks been driven!
For ne'er, before, vicissitude so strange
Was to one race of Adam's offspring given.
And sure such varied change of sea and heaven,
Such unexpected bursts of joy and woe,
Such fearful strife as that where we have striven,
Succeeding ages ne'er again shall know,
Until the awful term when Thou shalt cease to flow!

Well hast thou stood, my Country!—the brave fight
Hast well maintain'd through good report and ill;
In thy just cause and in thy native might,
And in Heaven's grace and justice, constant still;
Whether the banded prowess, strength, and skill
Of half the world against thee stood array'd,
Or when, with better views and freer will,
Beside thee Europe's noblest drew the blade,
Each emulous in arms the Ocean Queen to aid.

Well art thou now repaid—though slowly rose,
And struggled long with mists, thy blaze of fame,
While like the dawn that in the orient glows
On the broad wave its earlier lustre came;
Then eastern Egypt saw the growing flame,
And Maida's myrtles gleam'd beneath its ray,
Where first the soldier, stung with generous shame,
Rival'd the heroes of the wat'ry way,
And wash'd in foemen's gore unjust reproach away.

Now, Island Empress, wave thy crest on high,
And bid the banner of thy Patron flow,
Gallant Saint George, the flower of Chivalry,
For thou hast faced, like him, a dragon foe,
And rescued innocence from overthrow,

There was our strength on that side, and there first,
In all its force, the storm of battle burst."—SOUTHEY.

Mr. Southey adds, in a note on these verses:—"So important a battle, perhaps, was never before fought within so small an extent of ground. I computed the distance between Hougomont and Popelot at three miles; in a straight line it might probably not exceed two and a half. Our guide was very much dispirited at the name which the battle had obtained in England. 'Why call it the battle of Waterloo?' he said. 'Call it Hougomont, call it La Haye Sainte, call it Popelot—any thing but Waterloo,'"—*Pilgrimage to Waterloo."
And trampled down, like him, tyrannic might,
And to the gazing world may'st proudly show
He chosen emblem of thy sainted Knight,
Who quell'd devouring pride, and vindicated right.

Yet 'mid the confidence of just renown,—
Renown dear-bought, but dearest thus acquired,— Write, Britain, write the moral lesson down:
'Tis not alone the heart with valor fired,

The discipline so dreaded and admired,
In many a field of bloody conquest known;
—Such may by fame be lured, by gold be hired—
'Tis constancy in the good cause alone,
Best justifies the meed thy valiant sons have won.

END OF THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

Is one, indeed, in which he illustrates what he then thought Bonaparte's poorness of spirit in adversity, which always struck me as pre-eminently characteristic of Scott's manner of interweaving, both in prose and verse, the moral energies with analogous natural description, and combining thought with imagery:—

'Saw'st gallant Miller's fading eye
Still bent where Albion's banners fly,
And Cameron, in the shock of steel,
Die like the offspring of Lochiel,' &c.;

and this is far from being the only redeeming passage. There

1 In the Life of Sir W. Scott, vol. v. pp. 99-104, the reader will find a curious record of minute alterations on this poem, suggested, while it was proceeding through the press, by the printer and the bookseller, with the author's good-natured replies, sometimes adopting, sometimes rejecting, what was proposed.

2 "The Field of Waterloo" was published before the end of October, in octavo; the profits of the first edition being the author's contribution to the fund raised for the relief of the widows and children of the soldiers slain in the battle. This piece appears to have disappointed those most disposed to sympathize with the author's views and feelings. The descent is indeed heavy from his Bannockburn to his Waterloo; the presence, or all but visible reality, of what his dreams cheriished, seems to have overawed his imagination, and tamed it into a weak pomposity of movement. The burst of pure native enthusiasm upon the Scottish heroes that fell around the Duke of Wellington's person bears, however, the broadest marks of 'the Mighty Minstrel':—

'Saw'st gallant Miller's fading eye
Still bent where Albion's banners fly,
And Cameron, in the shock of steel,
Die like the offspring of Lochiel,' &c.;

The poem was the first upon a subject likely to be sufficiently hackneyed; and, having the advantage of coming out in a small cheap form (prudently imitated from Murray's innovation with the tales of Byron, which was the deathblow to the system of verse in quarto), it attained rapidly a measure of circulation above what had been reached either by 'Rokeby' or the 'Lord of the Isles.'—Lockhart. Life of
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

_The peasant, at his labor blithe,_
_Plies the hook'd staff and short'en'd scythe._—P. 500.

The reaper in Flanders carries in his left hand a stick with an iron hook, with which he collects as much grain as he can cut at one sweep with a short scythe, which he holds in his right hand. They carry on this double process with great spirit and dexterity.

NOTE B.

_Pote Brussels! then what thoughts were thine._—P. 501.

It was affirmed by the prisoners of war that Bonaparte had promised his army, in case of victory, twenty-four hours' plunder of the city of Brussels.

NOTE C.

"On! on!" was still his stern exclaim.—P. 502.

The characteristic obstinacy of Napoleon was never more fully displayed than in what we may be permitted to hope will prove the last of his fields. He would listen to no advice, and allow of no obstacles. An eye-witness has given the following account of his demeanor towards the end of the action—

"It was near seven o'clock; Bonaparte, who till then had remained upon the ridge of the hill whence he could best behold what passed, contemplated with a stern countenance the scene of this horrible slaughter. The more that obstacles seemed to multiply, the more his obstinacy seemed to increase. He became indignant at these unforeseen difficulties; and, far from fearing to push to extremities an army whose confidence in him was boundless, he ceased not to pour down fresh troops, and to give orders to march forward—to charge with the bayonet—to carry by storm. He was repeatedly in-

1 The mistakes concerning this observatory have been mutual. The English supposed it was erected for the use of Bonaparte; and a French writer affirms it was constructed by the Duke of Wellington. were either killed or wounded, whereas scarcely one of the Duke of Wellington's personal attendants escaped unhurt.

Note E.

"England shall tell the fight!"—P. 502.

In riding up to a regiment which was hard pressed, the duke called to the men, "Soldiers, we must never be beat,—what will they say in England?" It is needless to say how this appeal was answered.

Note F.

As plies the smith his clanging trade.—P. 502.

A private soldier of the 95th regiment compared the sound which took place immediately upon the British cavalry mingling with those of the enemy, to "a thousand tinkers at work mending pots and kettles."

Note G.

The British shock of levell'd steel.—P. 503.

No persuasion or authority could prevail upon the French troops to stand the shock of the bayonet. The Imperial Guards, in particular, hardly stood till the British were within thirty yards of them, although the French author already quoted has put into their mouths the magnanimous sentiment, "The Guards never yield—they die." The same author has covered the plateau or eminence of St. Jean, which formed the British position, with redoubts and intrenchments which never had an existence. As the narrative, which is in many respects curious, was written by an eye-witness, he was probably deceived by the appearance of a road and ditch which run along part of the hill. It may be also mentioned, in criticising this work, that the writer mentions the chateau of Hougomont to have been carried by the French, although it was resolutely and successfully defended during the whole action. The enemy, indeed, possessed themselves of the wood by which it is surrounded, and at length set fire to the house itself; but the British (a detachment of the Guards, under the command of Colonel Macdonnell, and afterwards of Colonel Home) made good the garden, and thus preserved, by their desperate resistance, the post which covered the return of the Duke of Wellington's right flank.
Harold the Dauntless:

A POEM,¹ IN SIX CANTOS.

"Upon another occasion," says Sir Walter, "I sent up another of these tritses, which, like schoolboys' kites, served to show how the wind of popular taste was setting. The manner was supposed to be that of a rude minstrel or Scald, in opposition to the 'Bridal of Triermain,' which was designed to belong rather to the Italian school. This new fugitive piece was called 'Harold the Dauntless'; and I am still astonished at my having committed the gross error of selecting the very name which Lord Byron had made so famous. It encountered rather an odd fate. My ingenious friend, Mr. James Hogg, had published, about the same time, a work called the 'Poetic Mirror,' containing imitations of the principal living poets. There was in it a very good imitation of my own style, which bore such a resemblance to 'Harold the Dauntless' that there was no discovering the original from the imitation; and I believe that many who took the trouble of thinking upon the subject were rather of opinion that my ingenious friend was the true and not the fictitious Simon Pure."—INTRODUCTION TO THE LORD OF THE ISLES. 1830.²

¹ Published by Constable & Co., January, 1817, in 12mo.
² "Within less than a month, the 'Black Dwarf' and 'Old Mortality' were followed by "'Harold the Dauntless," by the author of the "Bridal of Triermain.'" This poem had been, it appears, begun several years back; nay, part of it had been actually printed before the appearance of 'Childe Harold,' though that circumstance had escaped the author's remembrance when he penned, in 1830, his Introduction to the 'Lord of the Isles;' for he there says, 'I am still astonished at my having committed the gross error of selecting the very name which Lord Byron had made so famous.' The volume was published by Messrs. Constable, and had, in those booksellers' phrase, 'considerable success.' It has never, however, been placed on a level with 'Triermain; and, though it contains many vigorous pictures and splendid verses, and here and there some happy humor, the confusion and harsh transitions of the fable, and the dim rudeness of character and manners, seem sufficient to account for this inferiority in public favor. It is not surprising that the author should have redoubled his aversion to the notion of any more serious performances in verse. He had seized on an instrument of wider compass, and which, handled with whatever rapidity, seemed to reveal at every touch treasures that had hitherto slept unconsciously within him. He had thrown off his fetters, and might well go forth rejoicing in the native elasticity of his strength."—Life of Scott, vol. v. p. 181.
Harold the Dauntless.

INTRODUCTION.

There is a mood of mind, we all have known
On drowsy eve, or dark and low'ring day,
When the tired spirits lose their sprightly tone,
And nought can chase the lingering hours away.
Dull on our soul falls Fancy's dazzling ray,
And Wisdom holds his steadier torch in vain;
Obscured the painting seems, mistuned the lay
Nor dare we of our listless load complain,
For who for sympathy may seek that cannot tell of pain?

The jolly sportsman knows such dreariness,
When bursts in deluge the autumnal rain,
Clouding that morn which threatens the heath-cock's brood;
Of such, in summer's drought, the anglers plain,
Who hope the soft mild southern shower in vain;
But, more than all, the discontented fair,
Whom father stern, and sternest aunt, restrain
From county ball, or race occurring rare,
While all her friends around their vestments gay prepare.

Ennui!—or, as our mothers call'd thee, Spleen!—
To thee we owe full many a rare device;—
Thine is the sheaf of painted cards, I ween,
The rolling billiard-ball, the rattling dice,
The turning-lathe for framing gimcrack nice;
The amateur's blotch'd pallet thou may'st claim,
Retort, and air-pump, threatening frogs and mice
(Murders disguised by philosophic name),
And much of trifling grave, and much of buxom game.

Then of the books, to catch thy drowsy glance
Compiled, what bard the catalogue may quote!
Plays, poems, novels, never read but once;—
But not of such the tale fair Edgeworth wrote,
That bears thy name, and is thine antidote;
And not of such the strain my Thomson sung,
Delicious dreams inspiring by his note,
What time to Indolence his harp he strung;—
Oh, might my lay be rank'd that happier list among?!

Each hath his refuge whom thy cares assail.
For me, I love my study-fire to trim,
And con right vacantly some idle tale,
Displaying on the couch each listless limb,
Till on the drowsy page the lights grow dim,
And doubtful slumber half supplies the theme;
While antique shapes of knight and giant grim,
Damsel and dwarf, in long procession gleam,
And the Romaner's tale becomes the Reader's dream.

'Tis thus my malady I well may bear,
Albeit outstretch'd, like Pope's own Faridel,
Upon the rack of a too-easy chair;
And find, to cheat the time, a powerful spell
In old romants of errantry that tell,
Or later legends of the Fairy-folk,
Or Oriental tale of Afrite fell,
Of Genii, Talisman, and broad-winged Roc,
Though taste may blush and frown, and sober reason mock.

Oft at such season, too, will rhymes unsought
Arrange themselves in some romantic lay;
The which, as things unfitting graver thought,
Are burnt or blotted on some wiser day.—

that have not something attractive to the lover of natural poetry; while any one page will show how extremely like it is to the manner of Scott."—Blackwood's Magazine, 1817.

1 "The dry humor and sort of half Spenserian cast of these,
as well as all the other introductory stanzas in the poem, we think excellent, and scarcely outdone by any thing of the kind we know of; and there are few parts, taken separately,
Peace of that heathen leader he sought,
Gifts he gave, and quiet he bought;
And the Count took upon him the peaceable style
Of a vassal and liegeman of Britain's broad isle.

IV.
Time will rust the sharpest sword,
Time will consume the strongest cord;
That which moulders hemp and steel,
Mortal arm and nerve must feel.
Of the Danish band whom Count Witikind led,
Many wax'd aged, and many were dead:
Himself found his armor full weighty to bear,
Wrinkled his brows grew, and hoary his hair;
He lean'd on a staff when his step went abroad,
And patient his palfrey when steed he bestrade.
As he grew feeble, his wildness ceased,
He made himself peace with prelate and priest,—
Made his peace, and, stooping his head,
Patiently listed the counsel they said:
Saint Cuthbert's Bishop was holy and grave,
Wise and good was the counsel he gave.

V.
"Thou hast murder'd, robb'd, and spoil'd,
Time it is thy poor soul were assail'd;
Priests didst thou slay, and churches burn,
Time it is now to repentance to turn:
Fiends hast thou worship'd, with fiendish rite,
Leave now the darkness, and wend into light:
Oh, white life and space are given,
Turn thee yet, and think of heaven!"
That stern old heathen his head he raised,
And on the good Prelate he steadfastly gazed;
"Give me broad lands on the Wear and the Tyne,
My faith I will leave, and I'll cleave unto thine."

VI.
Broad lands he gave him on Tyne and Wear,
To be held of the Church by bridle and spear;
Part of Monkwearmouth, of Tynedale part,
To better his will, and to soften his heart:
Count Witikind was a joyful man,
Less for the faith than the lands that he wan.
The high church of Durham is dress'd for the day,
The clergy are rank'd in their solemn array:
There came the Count, in a bear-skin warm,
Leaning on Hilda his concubine's arm.
He kneel'd before Saint Cuthbert's shrine,
With patience unwonted at rites divine;
He abjured the gods of heathen race,
And he bent his head at the font of grace.
But such was the grisy old proselyte's look
That the priest who baptized him grew pale and shook,
And the old monks mutter'd beneath their hood,
"Of a stem so stubborn can never spring good!"

VII.
Up then arose that grim convertite,
Homeward he hied him when ended the rite;
The Prelate in honor will with him ride,
And feast in his Castle on Tyne's fair side.
Banners and banderols danced in the wind,
Monks rode before them, and spearmen behind;
Onward they pass'd, till fairly did shine
Pennon and cross on the bosom of Tyne;
And full in front did that fortress lower,
In darksome strength with its buttress and tower:
At the Castle gate was young Harold there,
Count Witikind's only offspring and heir.

VIII.
Young Harold was fear'd for his hardihood,
His strength of frame, and his fury of mood,
Rude he was and wild to behold,
Wore neither collar nor bracelet of gold,
Cap of vair nor rich array,
Such as should grace that festal day:
His doublet of bull's hide was all unbraided,
Uncover'd his head, and his sandal unshod:
His shaggy blacklocks on his brow hung low,
And his eyes glanced through them a swarthy glow;
A Danish club in his hand he bore,
The spikes were dotted with recent gore;
At his back a she-wolf, and her wolfcubs twain,
In the dangerous chase that morning slain.
Rude was the greeting his father he made,—
None to the Bishop,—while thus he said:—

IX.
"What priest-led hypocrite art thou,
With thy humbled look and thy monkish brow,
Like a shaveling who studies to cheat his vow?
Canst thou be Witikind the Waster known,
Royal Eric's fearless son,
Haughty Gunhilda's haughtier lord,
Who won his bride by the axe and sword;
From the shrine of St. Peter the chalice who tore,
And melted to bracelets for Freya and Thor;
With one blow of his gauntlet who burst the skull,
Before Odin's stone, of the Mountain Bull?
Then ye worship'd with rites that to war-gods belong,
With the deed of the brave, and the blow of the strong;
And now, in thine age to dotage sunk,
Wilt thou pater thy crimes to a shaven monk,—
Lay down thy mail-shirt for clothing of hair,—
Fasting and scourge, like a slave, wilt thou bear?
Or, at best, be admitted in slothful bower
To banquet with priest and with paramour?
Oh, out upon thine endless shame!
Each Scald's high harp shall blast thy fame,
And thy son will refuse thee a father's name!"

X.
Irelful wax'd old Witikind's look,
His faltering voice with fury shook:—
"Hear me, Harold of harden'd heart!
Stubborn and willful ever thou wert.
Thine outrage insane I command thee to cease,
Fear my wrath and remain at peace:—

Just is the debt of repentance I've paid,
Richly the Church has a recompense made,
And the truth of her doctrines I prove with my blade.
But reckoning to none of my actions I owe,
And least to my son such accounting will show.
Why speak I to thee of repentance or truth,
Who ne'er from thy childhood knew reason or ruth?
Hence! to the wolf and the bear in her den;
These are thy mates, and not rational men."

XI.
Grimly smiled Harold, and coldly replied,
"We must honor our sires, if we fear when they chide.
For me, I am yet what thy lessons have made,
I was rock'd in a buckler and fed from a blade;
An infant, was taught to clasp hands and to shout,
From the roofs of the tower when the flame had broke out;
In the blood of slain foemen my finger to dip,
And tinge with its purple my cheek and my lip.—
'Tis thou know'st not truth, that hast barter'd in eld,
For a price, the brave faith that thine ancestors held.
When this wolf?"—and the caresse he flung on the plain,—
"Shall awake and give food to her nurslings again,
The face of his father will Harold review;
Till then, aged Heathen, young Christian, adieu!"

XII.
Priest, Monk, and Prelate, stood aghast,
As through the pageant the heathen pass'd,
A cross-bearer out of his saddle he flung,
Laid his hand on the pommele, and into it sprung.
Loud was the shriek, and deep the groan,
When the holy sign on the earth was thrown!
The fierce old Count unshenethed his brand,
But the calmer Prelate stay'd his hand.
"Let him pass free!—Heaven knows its hour,—
But he must own repentance's power,
Pray and weep, and penance bear,
 Ere he hold land by the Tyne and the Wear."
Thus in scorn and in wrath from his father is gone
Young Harold the Dauntless, Count Witikind's son.

XIII.
High was the feasting in Witikind's hall,
Revel'd priests, soldiers, and pagans, and all;
And e'en the good Bishop was fain to endure
The scandal which time and instruction might cure:
It were dangerous, he deem'd, at the first to restrain,
In his wine and his wassail, a half-christen'd Dane.
The mead flow'd around, and the ale was drain'd dry,
Wild was the laughter, the song, and the cry;
With Kyrie Eleison came clamorously in
The war-songs of Danesmen, Norweyan, and Finn,
Till man after man the contention gave o'er,
Outstretcher'd on the rushes that strew'd the hall floor;
And the tempest within, having ceased its wild rout,
Gave place to the tempest that thunder'd without.
XIV.

Apart from the wassail, in turret alone,

Lay flaxen-haired Gunnar, old Ermengarde’s son;

In the train of Lord Harold that Page was the first,

For Harold in childhood had Ermengarde nursed;

And griefed was young Gunnar his master should roam,

Unhoused and unfriended, an exile from home,

He heard the deep thunder, the plashing of rain,

He saw the red lightning through shot-hole and pane;

“And oh!” said the Page, “on the shelterless wold,

Lord Harold is wandering in darkness and cold!

What though he was stubborn, and wayward, and wild,

He endured me because I was Ermengarde’s child,

And often from dawn till the set of the sun,

In the chase, by his stirrup, unbidden I ran;

I would I were older, and knighthood could bear,

I would soon quit the banks of the Tyne and the Wear;

For my mother’s command, with her last parting breath,

Bade me follow her nursing in life and to death.

The flaxen-haired Gunnar his purpose told,

Show’d the palfrey, and proffer’d the gold,

“Back, back, and home, thou simple boy!

Thou canst not share my grief or joy:

Have I not mark’d thee wail and cry

When thou hast seen a sparrow die?

And canst thou, as my follower should,

Wade ankle-deep through foeman’s blood,

Dare mortal and immortal foe,

The gods above, the fiends below,

And man on earth, more hateful still,

The very fountain-head of ill?

Desperate of life, and careless of death,

Lover of bloodshed, and slaughter, and scathe,

Such must thou be with me to roam,

And such thou canst not be—back, and home!”

XVIII.

Young Gunnar shook like an aspen bough,

As he heard the harsh voice and beheld the dark brow,

And half he repented his purpose and vow.

But now to draw back were bootless shame,

And he loved his master, so urged his claim:

“Alas! if my arm and my courage be weak,

Bear with me a while for old Ermengarde’s sake;

Nor deem so lightly of Gunnar’s faith,

As to fear he would break it for peril of death.

Have I not risk’d it to fetch thee this gold,

This surcoat and mantle to fence thee from cold?

And, did I bear a baser mind,

What lot remains if I stay behind?

The priests’ revenge, thy father’s wrath,

A dungeon, and a shameful death.”

XIX.

With gentler look Lord Harold eyed the Page,

Then turn’d his head aside;

And either a tear did his eyelash stain,

Or it caught a drop of the passing rain.

“Art thou an outcast, then?” quoth he;

“The meeter page to follow me.”

’Twere bootless to tell what climes they sought,

Ventures achieved, and battles fought;

How oft with few, how oft alone,

Fierce Harold’s arm the field hath won.

Men swore his eye, that flash’d so red

When each other glance was quench’d with dread,

Bore oft a light of deadly flame,

That ne’er from mortal courage came.

Those limbs so strong, that mood so stern,

That loved the couch of heath and fern,

Afar from hamlet, tower, and town,

More than to rest on driven down;

That stubborn frame, that sullen mood,

Men deem’d must come of anghit but good;

And they whisper’d, the great Master Fiend was at one

With Harold the Dauntless, Count Witikind’s son.
XX.

Years after years had gone and fled,
The good old Prelate lies lapp'd in lead;
In the chapel still is shown
His sculptured form on a marble stone,
With staff and ring and scapulare,
And folded hands in the act of prayer.

Saint Cuthbert's mitre is resting now
On the haughty Saxon, bold Aldingar's brow;
The power of his crozier he loved to extend
O'er whatever would break, or whatever would bend;
And now hath he cloathed him in cope and in pall,
And the Chapter of Durham has met at his call.

"And hear ye not, brethren," the proud Bishop said,
"That our vassal the Danish Count Wigi kid's dead?
All his gold and his goods hath he given
To holy Church for the love of Heaven,
And hath founded a chantry with stipend and dole,
That priests and that beaders may pray for his soul:
Harold his son is wandering abroad,
Dreaded by man and abhorrid by God;
Meet it is not that such should hear
The lands of the Church on the Tyne and the Wear,
And at her pleasure, her hallow'd hands
May now resume these wealthy lands."

XXI.

Answer'd good Eustace, a canon old,—
"Harold is timeless, and furious, and bold;
Ever Renown blows a note of fame,
And a note of fear, when she sounds his name:
Much of bloodshed and much of seethe
Have been their lot who have waked his wrath.

Leave him these lands and lordships still,
Heaven in its hour may change his will;
But if reft of gold, and of living bare,
An evil counsellor is despair.

More had he said, but the Prelate frown'd,
And murmur'd his brethren who sat around,
And with one consent they given their doom,
That the Church should the lands of Saint Cuthbert resume.

So will'd the Prelate; and canon and dean
Gave to his judgment their loud amen.

---

Harold the Dauntless.

CANTO SECOND.

I.

'Tis merry in Greenwood,—thus runs the old lay,—
In the gladsome month of lively May,
When the wild birds' song on stem and spray
Invites to forest bower;
Then rears the ash his airy crest,
Then shines the birch in silver vest,
And the beech in glistening leaves is drest,
And dark between shows the oak's proud breast,
Like a chieftain's frowning tower;
Though a thousand branches join their screen,
Yet the broken sunbeams glance between,
And tip the leaves with lighter green,
With brighter tints the flower;

Dull is the heart that loves not then
The deep recess of the wildwood glen,
Where roe and red-deer find sheltering den,
When the sun is in his power.

II.

Less merry perchance is the fadimg leaf
That follows so soon on the gather'd sheaf,
When the Greenwood loses the name;
Silent is then the forest bound,
Save the redbreast's note, and the rustling sound
Of frost-nipt leaves that are dropping round,
Or the deep-mouth'd ery of the distant hound
That opens on his game:

Yet then, too, I love the forest wide,
Whether the sun in splendor ride,
And gild its many-color'd side;
Or whether the soft and silvery haze,
In vapory folds, o'er the landscape strays,
And half involves the woodland maze,
Like an early widow's veil,
Where wimpling tissue from the gaze
The form half hides, and half betrays,
Of beauty wan and pale.

III.

Fair Metelill was a woodland maid,
Her father a rover of Greenwood shade,
By forest statutes undismayed,
Who lived by bow and quiver;
Well known was Wulfstan's archery,
By merry Tyne both on Moor and Lea,
Through warded Weardale's glens so free,
Well beside Stanhope's wildwood tree,
And well on Ganlesse river.

Yet free though he trespass'd on woodland game,
More known and more fear'd was the wizard fame
Of Jutta of Rookhope, the Outlaw's dame;
Fear'd when she frown'd was her eye of flame,
More fear'd when in wrath she laugh'd;

For then, 'twas said, more fatal true
To its dread aim her spell-glance flew
Than when from Wulfstan's bended yew
Sprang forth the gray-goose shaft.

1 "It may be worthy of notice that in 'Harold the Dauntless' there is a wise and good Eustace, as in the 'Monastery,' and a Prior of Jorvaux, who is robbed (ante, stanza xvi.), as in 'Ivanhoe.'—ADOLPHUS' Letters on the Author of Waverley. 1825, p. 281.

IV.
Yet had this fierce and dreaded pair,
So Heaven decreed, a daughter fair;
None brighter crown'd the bed,
In Britain's bounds, of peer or prince,
Nor hath, perchance, a lovelier since
In this fair isle been bred.
And nought of fraud, or ire, or ill,
Was known to gentle Metelill,—
A simple maiden she;
The spells in dimpled smile that lie,
And a downcast blush, and the darts that fly
With the sidelong glance of a hazel eye,
Were her arms and witchery.
So young, so simple was she yet,
She scarce could childhood's joys forget,
And still she loved, in secret set
Beneath the Greenwood tree,
To plait the rushy coronet,
And braid with flowers her locks of jet,
As when in infancy—;
Yet could that heart, so simple, prove
The early dawn of stealing love:
Ah! gentle maid, beware!
The power who, now so mild a guest,
Gives dangerous yet delicious zest
To the calm pleasures of thy breast,
Will soon, a tyrant o'er the rest,
Let none his empire share.

V.
One morn, in kirtle green array'd,
Deep in the wood the maiden stray'd,
And, where a fountain sprung,
She sat her down, unseen, to thread
The scarlet berry's nimic braid,
And while the beads she strung,
Like the blithe lark, whose carol gay
Gives a good-morrow to the day,
So lightsomely she sung.

VI.

“Lord William was born in gilded bower,
The heir of Wilton's lofty tower;
Yet better loves Lord William now
To roam beneath wild Rookhope's brow;
And William has lived where ladies fair
With gawds and jewels deck their hair,
Yet better loves the dewdrops still
That pearl the locks of Metelill.

“The pious Palmer loves, I wis,
Saint Cuthbert's hallow'd beads to kiss;
But I, though simple girl I be,
Might have such homage paid to me;
For did Lord William see me suit
This necklace of the bramble's fruit,
He fain—but must not have his will—
Would kiss the beads of Metelill.

“My nurse has told me many a tale,
How vows of love are weak and frail;
My mother says that courtly youth
By rustic maid means seldom sooth.
What should they mean? it cannot be
That such a warning's meant for me,
For nought—oh! nought of fraud or ill
Can William mean to Metelill!”

VII.
Sudden she stops—and starts to feel
A weighty hand, a glove of steel,
Upon her shrinking shoulders laid;
Fearful she turn'd, and saw, dismay'd,
A Knight in plate and mail array'd,
His crest and bearing worn and fray'd,
His surcoat soil'd and riven,
Form'd like that giant race of yore
Whose long-continued crimes outwore
The sufferance of Heaven.
Sterne accents made his pleasure known,
Though then he used his gentlest tone:
“Maiden,” he said, “sing forth thy glee.
Start not—sing on—it pleases me.”

VIII.
Secured within his powerful hold,
To bend her knee, her hands to fold,
Was all the maiden might;
And “Oh, forgive,” she faintly said,
“The terrors of a simple maid,
If thou art mortal wight!
But if—of such strange tales are told—
Unearthly warrior of the wold,
Thou comest to chide mine accents bold,
My mother, Jutta, knows the spell,
At noon and midnight pleasing well
The disembodied ear;
Oh, let her powerful charms atone
For aught my rashness may have done,
And cease thy grasp of fear.”
Then laugh'd the Knight—his laughter's sound
Half in the hollow helmet drown'd;
His barred visor then he raised,
And steady on the maiden gazed.
He smooth'd his brows, as best he might,
To the dread calm of autumn night,
When sinks the tempest roar;
Yet still the cautious fisher's eye
The clouds, and fear the gloomy sky,
And haul their barks on shore.

IX.

“Damsel,” he said, “be wise, and learn
Matters of weight and deep concern:
From distant realms I come,
And, wanderer long, at length have plann'd
In this my native Northern land
To seek myself a home.
Nor that alone—a mate I seek;
She must be gentle, soft, and meek,—
   No lordly dame for me;
Myself am something rough of mood,
And feel the fire of royal blood,
And therefore do not hold it good
   To match in my degree.
Then, since coy maidens say my face
Is harsh, my form devoid of grace,
For a fair lineage to provide,
' Tis meet that my selected bride
In lineaments be fair;
I love thine well—till now I ne'er
Look'd patient on a face of fear,
But now that tremulous sob and tear
   Become thy beauty rare.
One kiss—nay, damsel, coy it not!—
And now go seek thy parents' cot,
And say, a bridegroom soon I come,
To woo my love, and bear her home."

X.
Home sprung the maid without a pause,
As leveret 'seaped from greyhound's jaws;
But still she lock'd, howe'er distress'd,
The secret in her boding breast;
Dreading her sire, who oft forbade
Her steps should stray to distant glade.
Night came—to her accustom'd nook
Her distaff aged Jutta took,
And by the lamp's imperfect glow,
Rough Wulfstane trimm'd his shafts and bow.
Sudden and clamorous, from the ground
Upstarted slumbering brach and hound;
Loud knocking next the lodge alarms,
And Wulfstane snatches at his arms,
When open flew the yielding door,
And that grim Warrior press'd the floor.

XI.
"All peace be here—What! none replies?
Dismiss your fears and your surprise.
'Tis I—that Maid hath told my tale,—
Or, trembler, did thy courage fail?
It reeks not—it is I demand
Fair Metelill in marriage band;
Harold the Dauntless I, whose name
Is brave men's boast and caiffits' shame."
The parents sought each other's eyes,
With awe, resentment, and surprise;
Wulfstane, to quarrel prompt, began
The stranger's size and thews to scan;
But as he scannd, his courage sunk,
And from unequal strife he shrunk.
Then forth, to blight and blemish, flies
The harmful curse from Jutta's eyes;
Yet, fatal howse'cr, the spell
On Harold innocently fell!
And disappointment and amaze
Were in the witch's wilder'd gaze.

XII.
But soon the wit of woman woke,
And to the Warrior mild she spoke:
"Her child was all too young."—"A toy,
The refuge of a maiden coy."—
Again, "A powerful baron's heir
Claims in her heart an interest fair."—
"A tribute—whisper in his ear,
That Harold is a suitor here!"—
Baffled at length she sought delay:
"Would not the Knight till morning stay?
Late was the hour—he there might rest
Till morn, their lodge's honor'd guest."
Such were her words,—her craft might cast,
Her honor'd guest should sleep his last.
"No, not to-night—but soon," he swore,
"He would return, nor leave them more."
The threshold then his huge stride crost,
And soon he was in darkness lost.

XIII.
Appall'd a while the parents stood,
Then changed their fear to angry mood,
And foremost fell their words of ill
On unresisting Metelill:
Was she not caution'd and forbid,
Forewarn'd, implored, accused, and chid,
And must she still to Greenwood roam,
To marshal such misfortune home?
"Hence, minion! to thy chamber hence—
There prudence learn, and penitence."
She went—her lonely couch to steep
In tears which absent lovers weep;
Or if she gain'd a troubled sleep,
Fierce Harold's suit was still the theme
And terror of her feverish dream.

XIV.
Scarce was she gone, her dame and sire
Upon each other bent their ire:—
"A woodsman thou, and hast a spear,
And couldst thou such an insult bear?"
Sullen he said, "A man contends
With men, a witch with sprites and fiends;
Not to mere mortal wight belong
Yon gloomy brow and frame so strong.
But thou—is this thy promise fair,
That your Lord William, wealthy heir
To Ulrick, Baron of Witton-le-Wear,
Should Metelill to altar bear?
Do all the spells thou boast'st as thine
Serve but to slay some peasant's kine,
His grain in autumn's storms to steep,
Or thorough fog and fen to sweep,
And hag-ride some poor rustic's sleep?
Is such mean mischief worth the fame
Of sorceress and witch's name?
Fame, which with all men's wish conspires,
With thy deserts and my desires,
To damn thy corpse to penal fires?
Out on thee, witch! aroint! aroint!
What now shall put thy schemes in joint?
What save this trusty arrow's point,
From the dark dingle when it flies,
And he who meets it gasps and dies?"

XV.
Stern she replied, "I will not wage
War with thy folly or thy rage;
But ere the morrow's sun be low,
Wulfstane of Rookhope, thou shalt know
If I can venge me on a foe.
Believe the while that whatsoever I
Spoke, in ire, of bow and spear,
It is not Harold's destiny
The death of pilfer'd deer to die,
But he, and thou, and yon pale moon
(That shall be yet more pallid soon,
Before she sink behind the dell),
Thou, she, and Harold too, shall tell
What Jutta knows of charm or spell."
Thus muttering, to the door she bent
Her wayward steps, and forth she went,
And left alone the moody sire,
To cherish or to slake his ire.

XVI.
Far faster than belong'd to age
Has Jutta made her pilgrimage.
A priest has met her as she pass'd,
And cross'd himself and stood agast:
She traced a haunlet—not a cur
His throat would ope, his foot would stir;
By crouch, by trembling, and by groan,
They made her hated presence known!
But when she trod the sable fell,
Were wilder sounds her way to tell,—
For far was heard the fox's yell,
The black-cock waked and faintly crew,
Scream'd o'er the moss the scared curlew;
Where o'er the cataract the oak
Lay slant, was heard the raven's croak;
The mountain cat, which sought his prey,
Glares, scream'd, and started from her way.
Such music cheer'd her journey lone
To the deep dell and rocking stone:
There, with unhallov'd hymn of praise,
She call'd a god of heathen days.

XXVII.

Hear me! Sovereign of the Rock,
Hear me! mighty Zernebock! /

"'Mightiest of the mighty known,
Here thy wonders have been shown;
Hundred tribes in various tongue
Oft have here thy praises sung;
Down that stone with Runic seam'd,
Hundred victors' blood hath stream'd!
Now one woman comes alone,
And but wets it with her own,
The last, the feeblest of thy flock,—
Hear—and be present, Zernebock!"

"Hark! he comes! the night-blast cold
Wilder sweeps along the wold;
The cloudless moon grows dark and dim,
And bristling hair and quaking limb
Proclaim the Master Demon nigh,—
Those who view his form shall die!
Lo! I stoop and veil my head;
Thou who ridest the tempest dread,
Shaking hill and rending oak—
Spare me! spare me! Zernebock.

"He comes not yet! Shall cold delay
Thy votaress at her need repay?—
 Thou—shall I call thee god or fiend?—
Let others on thy mood attend
With prayer and ritual—Jutta's arms
Are necromantic words and charms;
Mine is the spell that, utter'd once,
Shall wake thy Master from his trance,
Shake his red mansion-house of pain,
And burst his seven-times-twisted chain!—
So! com'st thou ere the spell is spoke?
I own thy presence, Zernebock."—

XXVIII.

"Daughter of dust," the Deep Voice said,
—Shook while it spoke the vale for dread,
Rock'd on the base that massive stone,
The Evil Deity to own,—

"Daughter of dust! not mine the power
Thou seek'st on Harold's fatal hour.
'Twixt heaven and hell there is a strife
Waged for his soul and for his life,
And fain would we the combat win,
And snatch him in his hour of sin.
There is a star now rising red,
That threatens him with an influence dread:
Woman, thine arts of malice whet,
To use the space before it set.
Involveth him with the Church in strife,
Push on adventurous chance his life;
Ourselves will in the hour of need,
As best we may, thy counsels speed."

So ceased the Voice; for seven leagues round
Each hamlet started at the sound;
But slept again, as slowly died
Its thunders on the hill's brown side.

XIX.
"And is this all," said Jutta stern,
"That thou canst teach and I can learn?
Hence! to the land of fog and waste,
There fittest is thine influence placed,
Thou powerless, sluggish Deity!
But ne'er shall Briton bend the knee
Again before so poor a god."
She struck the altar with her rod;
Slight was the touch, as when at need
A damsel stirs her tardy steed;
But to the blow the stone gave place,
And, starting from its balanced base,
Roll'd thudding down the moonlight dell,—
Re-echo'd moorland, rock, and fell;
Into the moonlight tarn it dash'd,
Their shores the sounding surges lash'd,
And there was ripple, rage, and foam;
But on that lake, so dark and lone,
Placid and pale the moonbeam shone
As Jutta bade her home.

- - -

Harold the Dauntless.

CANTO THIRD.

I.
Gray towers of Durham! there was once a time
I view'd your battlements with such vague hope
As brightens life in its first dawning prime;
Not that e'en then came within fancy's scope
A vision vain of mitre, throne, or cope;
Yet, gazing on the venerable hall,
Her flattering dreams would in perspective ope
Some reverend room, some probendary's stall,—
And thus Hope me deceived as she deceiver'd all.

Well yet I love thy mix'd and massive piles,
Half church of God, half castle 'gainst the Scot,
And long to roam these venerable aisles,
With records stored of deeds long since forgot;
There might I share my Surtess' 2 happier lot,
Who leaves at will his patrimonial field
To ransack every crypt and hallow'd spot,
And from oblivion rend the spoils they yield,
Restoring priestly chant and clang of knightly shield,

1 In this stanza occurs one of many touches by which, in the introductory passages of "Harold the Dauntless" as of "Triermain," Sir Walter Scott betrays his half-purpose of identifying the author with his friend William Erskine. That gentleman, the son of an Episcopal clergyman, a staunch churchman, and a man of the gentlest habits, if he did not in early life design to follow the paternal profession, might be supposed to have nourished such an intention—one which no one could ever have dreamt of ascribing at any period of his days to Sir Walter Scott himself.

To speak a warning word.
So when the torrent's billows shrink,
The timid pilgrim on the brink
Waits long to see them wave and sink,
Ere he dare brave the ford,
And often, after doubtful pause,
His step advances or withdraws:
Fearful to move the slumbering ire
Of his stern lord, thus stood the squire,
Till Harold raised his eye,
That glanced as when athwart the shroud
Of the dispersing tempest-cloud
The bursting sunbeams fly.

V.
"Arouse thee, son of Ermengarde,
Offspring of prophetess and bard!
Take harp, and greet this lovely prime
With some high strain of Runic rhyme,
Strong, deep, and powerful! Peal it round
Like that loud bell's sonorous sound,
Yet wild by fits, as when the lay
Of bird and bugle hail the day.
Such was my grandsire Eric's sport,
When dawn glean'd on his martial court.
Heymar the Scald, with harp's high sound,
Summon'd the chiefs who slept around;
Couch'd on the spoils of wolf and bear,
They roused like lions from their lair,
Then rush'd in emulation forth
To enhance the glories of the North.—
Proud Eric, mightiest of thy race,
Where is thy shadowy resting-place?
In wild Valhalla hast thou quaff'd
From foeman's skull methex'gin draught,
Or wanderest where thy cairn was piled
To frown o'er oceans wide and wild?
Or have the milder Christians given
Thy refuge in their peaceful heaven?
Where'er thou art, to thee are known
Our toils endured, our trophies won,
Our wars, our wanderings, and our woes." He ceased, and Gunnar's song arose.

VI.
Song.
"Hawk and osprey scream'd for joy
O'er the beetling cliffs of Hoy,
Crimson foam the beach o'erspread,
The heath was dyed with darker red,
When o'er Eric, Inguar's son,
Dane and Northman piled the stone;
Singing wild the war-song stern
' Rest thee, Dweller of the Cairn!'

"Where eddying currents foam and boil
By Bersa's burgh and Grønmsay's isle,
The seaman sees a martial form
Half mingled with the mist and storm.

In anxious awe he bears away
To moor his bark in Stromna's bay,
And murmurs from the bounding stern,
' Rest thee, Dweller of the Cairn!'

"What cares disturb the mighty dead?
Each honor'd rite was duly paid;
No daring hand thy helm unlaced,
Thy sword, thy shield, were near thee placed,—
Thy flinty couch, no tear profaned,
Without with hostile blood was stain'd;
Within, 'twas lined with moss and fern,—
Then rest thee, Dweller of the Cairn!—

"He may not rest: from realms afar
Comes voice of battle and of war,
Of conquest wrought with bloody hand
On Carmel's cliffs and Jordan's strand,
When Odin's warlike son could daunt
The turban'd race of Termagaunt."—

VII.
"Peace!" said the Knight; "the noble Scald
Our warlike fathers' deeds recall'd,
But never strove to soothe the son
With tales of what himself had done.
At Odin's board the bard sits high
Whose harp ne'er stoop'd to flattery;
But highest he whose daring lay
Hath dared unwelcome truths to say."
With doubtful smile young Gunnar eyed
His master's looks, and naught replied—
But well that smile his master led
To construe what he left unsaid.
"Is it to me, thou timid youth,
Thou fear'st to speak unhelpful truth?
My soul no more thy censure grieves
Than frosts rob laurels of their leaves,
Say on—and yet—beware the rude
And wild distemper of my blood;
Loth were I that mine ire should wrong
The youth that bore my shield so long,
And who, in service constant still,
Though weak in frame, art strong in will."—
"Oh," quoth the Page, "even there depends
My counsel—there my warning tends.
Oft seems as of my master's breast
Some demon were the sudden guest;
Then at the first misconstrued word
His hand is on the mace and sword,
From her firm seat his wisdom driven,
His life to countless dangers given.—
Oh, would that Gunnar could suffice
To be the fiend's last sacrifice,
So that, when glutted with my gore,
He fled, and tempted thee no more!"

VIII.
Then waved his hand and shook his head
The impatient Dane, while thus he said:
“Profane not, youth—it is not thine
To judge the spirit of our line—
The bold Berserks’ rage divine,
Through whose inspiring, deeds are wrought
Past human strength and human thought.
When full upon his gloomy soul
The champion feels the influence roll,
He swims the lake, he leaps the wall—
Heeds not the depth, nor plumbs the fall—
Unshielded, mail-less, on he goes
Singly against a host of foes;
Their spears he holds like wither’d reeds,
Their mail like maiden’s silken weeds;
One ‘gainst a hundred will he strive,
Take countless wounds, and yet survive.
Then rush the eagles to his cry
Of slaughter and of victory,—
And blood he quaffs like Odin’s bowl,
Deep drinks his sword,—deep drinks his soul;
And all that meet him in his ire
He gives to ruin, rout, and fire;
Then, like gorged lion, seeks some den,
And couches till he’s man agen.—
Thou know’st the signs of look and limb
When ‘gins that rage to overbrim—
Thou know’st when I am moved, and why;
And when thou seest me roll mine eye,
Set my teeth thus, and stamp my foot,
Regard thy safety and be mute;
But else speak boldly out whate’er
Is fitting that a knight should hear.
I love thee, youth. Thy lay has power
Upon my dark and sullen hour;—
So Christian monks are wont to say
Demons of old were charm’d away;
Then fear not I will rashly deem I’ll of thy speech, whate’er the theme.”

IX.
As down some strait in doubt and dread
The watchful pilot drops the lead,
And, cautious in the midst to steer,
The shoaling channel sounds with fear;
So, lest on dangerous ground he swerved,
The Page his master’s brow observed,
Pausing at intervals to fling
His hand o’er the melodious string,
And to his moody breast apply
The soothing charm of harmony,
While hinted half, and half express,
This warning song convey’d the rest.—

Song.
1.

“Ill fares the bark with tackle riven,
And ill when on the breakers driven,—
Ill when the storm-sprite shrieks in air,
And the seared mermaid tears her hair;
But worse when on her helm the hand
Of some false traitor holds command.

2.

“Ill fares the fainting Palmer, placed
‘Mid Hebron’s rocks or Rana’s waste,—
Ill when the scorching sun is high,
And the expected font is dry,—
Worse when his guide o’er sand and heath,
The barbarous Copt, has plann’d his death.

3.

“Ill fares the Knight with buckler eft,
And ill when of his helm bereft,—
Ill when his steed to earth is flung,
Or from his grasp his falchion wrung;
But worse, if instant ruin token,
When he lists rede by woman spoken.”—

X.

“How now, fond boy?—Canst thou think ill,”
Said Harold, “of fair Metelill?”—
“She may be fair,” the Page replied,
As through the strings he ranged,—
“She may be fair; but yet,” he cried,
And then the strain he changed,—

Song.
1.

“She may be fair,” he sang, “but yet
Far fairer have I seen
Than she, for all her locks of jet,
And eyes so dark and sheen.
Were I a Danish knight in arms,
As one day I may be,
My heart should own no foreign charms,—
A Danish maid for me.

2.

“I love my fathers’ northern land,
Where the dark pine-trees grow,
And the bold Baltic’s echoing strand
Looks o’er each grassy oe,!
I love to mark the lingering sun,
From Denmark loth to go,
And leaving on the billows bright,
To cheer the short-lived summer night,
A path of ruddy glow.

3.

“But most the northern maid I love,
With breast like Denmark’s snow,
And form as fair as Denmark’s pine,
Who loves with purple heath to twine
Her locks of sunny glow;
And sweetly blend that shade of gold
With the cheek’s rosy hue,
And Faith might for her mirror hold
That eye of matchless blue.

1 Oe, island.
4.
"Tis hers the manly sports to love
That southern maidens fear,
To bend the bow by stream and grove,
And lift the hunter's spear.
She can her chosen champion's flight
With eye undazzled see,
Clasp him victorious from the strife,
Or on his corpse yield up her life,—
A Danish maid for me!"

XI.
Then smiled the Dane—"Thou canst so well
The virtues of our maidens tell,
Half could I wish my choice had been
Blue eyes, and hair of golden sheen,
And lofty soul;—yet what of ill
Hast thou to charge on Metehill?"—
"Nothing on her," young Gunnar said,
"But her base sire's ignoble trade,
Her mother, too—the general fame
Hath given to Jutta evil name,
And in her gray eye is a flame
Art cannot hide, nor fear can tame.—
That sordid woodman's peasant cot
Twice have thine honor'd footsteps sought,
And twice return'd with such ill rede
As sent thee on some desperate deed."—

XII.
"Thou errest; Jutta wisely said,
He that comes suitor to a maid,
Ere link'd in marriage, should provide
Lands and a dwelling for his bride—
My father's, by the Tyne and Wear,
I have reclaim'd,—"—"Oh, all too dear
And all too dangerous the prize,
E'en were it won," young Gunnar cries;—
"And then this Jutta's fresh device,
That thou shouldst seek, a heathen Dane,
From Durham's priests a boon to gain,
When thou hast left their vassals slain
In their own halls!"—Flash'd Harold's eye,
Thunder'd his voice—"False Page, you lie!
The castle, hall and tower, is mine,
Built by old Witikind on Tyne.
The wild-cat will defend his den,
Fights for her nest the timid wren;
And think'st thou I'll forego my right
For dread of monk or monkish knight?—

And up and away, that deepening bell
Both of the Bishop's conclave tell.
Thither will I, in manner due,
As Jutta bade, my claim to sue;
And, if to right me they are loth,
Then woe to church and chapter both!"
Now shift the scene, and let the curtain fall,
And our next entry be Saint Cuthbert's hall.

Harold the Dauntless.

Canto Fourth.

I.
FULL many a bard hath sung the solemn gloom
Of the long Gothic aisle and stone-ribb'd roof,
O'er-canopying shrine and gorgeous tomb,
Carved screen, and altar glimmering far aloof,
And blending with the shade—a matchless proof
Of high devotion, which hath now wax'd cold;
Yet legends say that Luxury's brute hoof
Intruded oft within such sacred fold,
Like step of Bel's false priest, track'd in his fane of old.

Well pleased am I, how'er, that when the rout
Of our rude neighbors whileome deign'd to come,
Uncall'd, and eke unwelcome, to sweep out
And cleanse our chancel from the rags of Rome,
They spoke not on our ancient fane the doom
To which their bigot zeal gave o'er their own,
But spared the martyr'd saint and storied tomb,
Though papal miracles had graced the stone,
And though the aisles still loved the organ's swelling tone.

And deem not, though 'tis now my part to paint
A Prelate sway'd by love of power and gold,
That all who wore the mitre of our Saint
Like to ambitious Aldingar I hold;
Since both in modern times and days of old
It sat on those whose virtues might alone
Their predecessors' frailties trebly told:
Matthew and Morton we as such may own—
And such (if fame speak truth) the honor'd Barrington.

And monumental caves of death look cold,
And shoot a chillness to my trembling heart.

Congreve's Mourning Bride, act ii. scene 1.

See also Joanna Baillie's De Montfort, acts iv. and v.

3 See, in the Apocryphal Books, "The History of Bel and the Dragon,"
4 See, for the lives of Bishop Matthew and Bishop Morton, here alluded to, Mr. Surtees' History of the Bishopric of Durham.

The venerable Shute Barrington, their honored successor, ever a kind friend of Sir Walter Scott, died in 1826.
But now to earlier and to ruder times,
As subject meet, I tune my rugged rhymes,
Telling how fairly the chapter was met,
And rood and books in seemly order set;
Huge brass-clasp'd volumes, which the hand
Of studious priest but rarely seann'd,
Now on fair carved desk display'd,
'Twas theirs the solemn scene to aid.

O'erhead with many a scutcheon graced,
And quaint devices interlaced,
A labyrinth of crossing rows,
The roof in lessening arches shows;
Beneath its shade placed proud and high,
With footstool and with canopy,
Sat Aldingar,—and prelate ne'er
More haughty graced Saint Cuthbert's chair;
Canons and deacons were placed below,
In due degree and lengthen'd row.
Unmoved and silent each sat there,
Like image in his oaken chair;
Nor head, nor hand, nor foot they stirr'd,
Nor lock of hair, nor tress of beard;
And of their eyes severe alone
The twinkle show'd they were not stone.

The Prelate was to speech address'd,
Each head sunk reverent on each breast;
But ere his voice was heard, without Arose a wild tumultuous shout,
Offspring of wonder mix'd with fear,
Such as in crowded streets we hear
Hailing the flames, that, bursting out,
Attract yet scare the rabble rout.
Ere it had ceased, a giant hand
Shook oaken door and iron band,
Till oak and iron both gave way,
 Clash'd the long bolts, the hinges Bray,
And, ere upon angel or saint they can call,
Stands Harold the Dauntless in midst of the hall.

"Now save ye, my masters, both rocket and rood,
From Bishop with mitre to Deacon with hood!
For here stands Count Harold, old Witikind's son,
Come to sue for the lands which his ancestors won."
The Prelate look'd round him with sore-troubled eye,
Unwilling to grant, yet afraid to deny;
While each Canon and Deacon who heard the Dane spoke,
To be safely at home would have fasted a week.
Then Aldingar roused him, and answer'd again,
"Thou suest for a boon which thou canst not obtain;
The Church hath no fiefs for an unchristen'd Dane.
Thy father was wise, and his treasure hath given
That the priests of a chantry might hymn him to heaven;
And the fiefs which whilome he possess'd as his due
Have lapsed to the Church, and been granted anew
To Anthony Conyers and Alberic Vere,
For the service Saint Cuthbert's bless'd banner to bear,
When the hands of the North come to foray the Wear;
Then disturb not our conclave with wrangling or blame,
But in peace and in patience pass hence as ye came."

Loud laugh'd the stern Pagan,—"They're free from the care
Of fief and of service, both Conyers and Vere,—
Six feet of your chancel is all they will need,
A buckler of stone and a corselet of lead.—
Ho, Gunnar!—the tokens;"—and, sever'd anew,
A head and a hand on the altar he threw.
Then shudder'd with terror both Canon and Monk,
They knew the glazed eye and the countenance shrunk,
And of Anthony Conyers the half-grizzled hair,
And the scar on the hand of Sir Alberic Vere,
There was not a churchman or priest that was there
But grew pale at the sight, and betook him to prayer.

Count Harold laugh'd at their looks of fear:
"Was this the hand should your banner bear?
Was that the head should wear the casque
In battle at the Church's task?
Was it to such you gave the place
Of Harold with the heavy mace?
Find me between the Wear and Tyne
A knight will wield this club of mine,—
Give him my fiefs, and I will say
There's wit beneath the cowl of gray."
He raised it, rough with many a stain,
Caught from crush'd skull and spouting brain;
He wheel'd it that it shrilly sung,
And the aisles echo'd as it swung,
Then dash'd it down with sheer descent,
And split King Osric's monument.—
"How like ye this music? How trow ye the hand
That can wield such a mace may be reft of its land?
No answer?—I spare ye a space to agree,
And Saint Cuthbert inspire you, a saint if he be.
Ten strides through your chancel, ten strokes on your bell,
And again I am with you—grave fathers, farewell."

He turn'd from their presence, he clash'd the oak door,
And the clang of his stride died away on the floor;
And his head from his bosom the Prelate uprears
With a ghost-seer's look when the ghost disappears.
"Ye Priests of Saint Cuthbert, now give me your rede,
For never of counsel had Bishop more need!
Were the arch-fiend incarnate in flesh and in bone,
The language, the look, and the laugh were his own.
In the bounds of Saint Cuthbert there is not a knight
Dare confront in our quarrel you goblin in fight;
Then rede me aright to his claim to reply:
'Tis unlawful to grant, and 'tis death to deny."

VIII.
On ven'son and malmsey that morning had fed
The Cellarer Vinsauf—"twas thus that he said:
"Delay till to-morrow the chapter's reply:
Let the feast be spread fair, and the wine be pour'd high:
If he's mortal he drinks,—if he drinks, he is ours—
His bracelets of iron, his bed in our towers."
This man had a laughing eye,
Trust not, friends, when such you spy;
A beaker's depth he well could drain,
Revel, sport, and jest amain—
The haunch of the deer and the grape's bright dye,
Never bard loved them better than I;
But sooner than Vinsauf fill'd me my wine,
Pass'd me his jest, and laugh'd at mine,
Though the buck were of Bearpark, of Bourdeaux the vine,
With the dullest hermit I'd rather dine
On an oaken cake and a draught of the Tyne.

IX.
Walwayn the leech spoke next—he knew
Each plant that loves the sun and dew,
But special those whose juice can gain
Dominion o'er the blood and brain;
The peasant who saw him by pale moonbeam
Gathering such herbs by bank and stream,
Deem'd his thin form and soundless tread
Were those of wanderer from the dead,—
"Vinsauf, thy wine," he said, "hath power,
Our gyves are heavy, strong our tower;
Yet three drops from this flask of mine,
More strong than dungeons, gyves, or wine,
Shall give him prison under ground
More dark, more narrow, more profound.
Short rede, good rede, let Harold have—
A dog's death and a heathen's grave."
I have lain on a sick man's bed,
Watching for hours for the leech's tread,
As if I deem'd that his presence alone
Were of power to bid my pain begone;
I have listed his words of comfort given,
As if to oracles from heaven;
I have counted his steps from my chamber door,
And bless'd them when they were heard no more;—
But sooner than Walwayn my sick couch should nigh,
My choice were, by leech-craft unaided, to die.

X.
"Such service done in fervent zeal
The Church may pardon and conceal,"
The doubtful Prelate said, "but ne'er
The counsel ere the act should hear.—
Anselm of Jarrow, advise us now,
The stamp of wisdom is on thy brow;
Thy days, thy nights, in cloister pent,
Are still to mystic learning lent;—
Anselm of Jarrow, in thee is my hope,
Thou well may'st give counsel to Prelate or Pope."
XIV.
The Castle of the Seven Shields.
A BALLAD.
The Druid Urien had daughters seven, Their skill could call the moon from heaven; So fair their forms and so high their fame, That seven proud kings for their suitors came.

King Mador and Rhys came from Powis and Wales, Unshorn was their hair, and unpruned were their nails; From Strath-Clwyde was Ewain, and Ewain was lame, And the red-bearded Donald from Galloway came.

Lot, King of Lodon, was hunchback'd from youth; Dumnail of Cumbria had never a tooth; But Adolf of Bambrugh, Northumberland's heir, Was gay and was gallant, was young and was fair.

There was strife 'mongst the sisters, for each one would have For husband King Adolf, the gallant and brave; And envy bred hate, and hate urged them to blows, When the firm earth was eft, and the arch-fiend arose!

He swore to the maidsen their wish to fulfill— They swore to the foe they would work by his will. A spindle and distaff to each hath he given: "Now hearken my spell," said the Outcast of heaven.

"Ye shall ply these spindles at midnight hour, And for every spindle shall rise a tower, Where the right shall be feeble, the wrong shall have power, And there shall ye dwell with your paramour."

Beneath the pale moonlight they sat on the wold, And the rhymes which they chanted must never be told; And as the black wool from the distaff they sped, With blood from their bosom they moisten'd the thread.

As light danced the spindles beneath the cold gleam, The Castle arose like the birth of a dream— The seven towers ascended like mist from the ground, Seven portals defend them, seven ditches surround.

Within that dread Castle seven monarchs were wed, But six of the seven ere the morning lay dead;

With their eyes all on fire, and their daggers all red, Seven damsels surround the Northumbrian's bed.

"Six kingly bridegrooms to death we have done, Six gallant kingdoms King Adolf hath won, Six lovely brides all his pleasure to do, Or the bed of the seventh shall be husbandless too."

Well chanced it that Adolf the night when he wed Had confess'd and had sain'd him ere boun to his bed; He sprung from the couch and his broadsword he drew, And there the seven daughters of Urien he slew.

The gate of the Castle he bolted and seal'd, And hung o'er each arch-stone a crown and a shield; To the cells of Saint Dunstan then wended his way, And died in his cloister an anchorite gray.

Seven monarchs' wealth in that Castle lies stow'd, The foul fiends brood o'er them like raven and toad; Whoever shall guesten these chambers within, From curfew till matins, that treasure shall win.

But manhood grows faint as the world waxes old! There lives not in Britain a champion so bold, So dauntless of heart, and so prudent of brain, As to dare the adventure that treasure to gain.

The waste ridge of Cheviot shall wave with the rye, Before the rude Scots shall Northumberland fly, And the flint cliffs of Bambro' shall melt in the sun, Before that adventure be peril'd and won.1

"And is this my probation?" wild Harold he said, "Within a lone castle to press a lone bed?— Good even, my Lord Bishop,—Saint Cuthbert to borrow, The Castle of Seven Shields receives me to-morrow."

XV.
Harold the Dauntless.
CANTO FIFTH.
I.
DENMARK's sage courtier to her princely youth, Granting his cloud an ouzel or a whale,2

1 "The word 'peril' is continually used as a verb by both writers:— "Nor peril aught for me agen, 'Lady of the Lake,' canto ii. stanza 26.

'I peril'd thus the helpless child.' 'Lord of the Isles,' canto v. stanza 10.

'Were the blood of all my ancestors in my veins, I would have perilled it in this quarrel.'—Waverley.

2 'I was undeserving his grace, did I not peril it for his good.'—Ivanhoe.

&c. &c.—ADOLPHUS' Letters on the Author of Waverley.

'Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel? Polonius. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed! Ham. Methinks, it is like a weasel. Pol. It is backed like a weasel. Ham. Or, like a whale? Pol. Very like a whale.'—Hamlet.
Spoke, though unwittingly, a partial truth;
For Fantasy embroiders Nature's veil.
The tints of ruddy eve, or dawning pale,
Of the swart thunder-cloud, or silver haze,
Are but the ground-work of the rich detail
Which Fantasy with pencil wild portrays,
Blending what seems and is, in the wrapt muser's gaze.

Nor are the stubborn forms of earth and stone
Less to the Sorceress's empire given;
For not with unsubstantial hues alone,
Caught from the varying surge, or vacant heaven,
From bursting sunbeam, or from flashing levin,
She limns her pictures: on the earth, as air,
Arise her castles, and her car is driven;
And never gazed the eye on scene so fair,
But of its boasted charms gave Fancy half the share.

II.
Up a wild pass went Harold, bent to prove,
Hugh Meneville, the adventure of thy lay;
Gunnar pursued his steps in faith and love,
Ever companion of his master's way.
Midward their path, a rock of granite gray
From the adjoining eliff' had made descent,—
A barren mass—yet with her drooping spray
Had a young birch-tree crowned its battlement,
Twisting her fibrous roots through cranny, flaw, and rent.

This rock and tree could Gunnar's thought engage Till Fancy brought the teardrop to his eye,
And at his master ask'd the timid Page,
"What is the emblem that a bard should spy
In that rude rock and its green canopy?"
And Harold said, "Like to the helmet brave
Of warrior slain in fight it seems to lie,
And these same drooping boughs do o'er it wave
Not all unlike the plume his lady's favor gave."—

"Ah, no!" replied the Page; "the ill-starr'd love
Of some poor maid is in the emblem shown,
Whose fates are with some hero's interwove,
And rooted on a heart to love unknown:
And as the gentle dews of heaven alone
Nourish those drooping boughs, and as the scathe
Of the red lightning rends both tree and stone,
So fares it with her unrequited faith,—
Her sole relief is tears—her only refuge death."—

III.
"Thou art a fond fantastic boy,"
Harold replied, "to females coy,
Yet prating still of love;
Even so amid the clash of war
I know thou lovest to keep afar,

Though destined by thy evil star
With one like me to rove,
Whose business and whose joys are found
Upon the bloody battle-ground.
Yet, foolish trembler as thou art,
Thou hast a nook of my rude heart,
And thou and I will never part:—
Harold would wrap the world in flame
Ere injury on Gunnar came!"

IV.
The grateful Page made no reply,
But turn'd to heaven his gentle eye,
And clasp'd his hands, as one who said,
"My toils, my wanderings, are o'erpaid!"
Then in a gayer, lighter strain,
Compell'd himself to speech again;
And, as they flow'd along,
His words took cadence soft and slow,
And liquid, like dissolving snow,
They melted into song.

V.
"What though through fields of carnage wide
I may not follow Harold's stride,
Yet who with faithful Gunnar's pride
Lord Harold's feats can see?
And dearer than the couch of pride,
He loves the bed of gray wolf's hide,
When slumbering by Lord Harold's side
In forest, field, or lea,?—

VI.
"Break off!" said Harold, in a tone
Where hurry and surprise were shown,
With some slight touch of fear,—
"Break off, we are not here alone;
A Palmer form comes slowly on!
By cowl, and staff, and mantle known,
My monitor is near.
Now mark him, Gunnar, heedfully;
He pauses by the blighted tree—
Dost see him, youth?—Thou couldst not see
When in the vale of Galilee
I first beheld his form,
Nor when we met that other while
In Cephalonia's rocky isle,
Before the fearful storm,—
Dost see him now?"—The Page, distraught
With terror, answer'd, "I see nought,
And there is nought to see,
Save that the oak's seathed boughs fling down
Upon the path a shadow brown,
That, like a pilgrim's dusky gown,
Waves with the waving tree."

VII.
Count Harold gazed upon the oak
As if his eyestrings would have broke,
And then resolvedly said,—
"Be what it will yon phantom gray—
Nor heaven, nor hell, shall ever say
That for their shadows from his way
Count Harold turn'd dismay'd:
I'll speak him, though his accents fall
My heart with that unwonted thrill
Which vulgar minds call fear! I
I will subdue it!"—Forth he strode,
Paused where the blighted oak-tree show'd
Its sable shadow on the road,
And, folding on his bosom broad
His arms, said, "Speak—I hear."

VIII.
The Deep Voice said, "Oh, wild of will,
Furious thy purpose to fulfill—
Heart-sear'd and unrepentant still,
How long, O Harold, shall thy tread
Disturb the slumbers of the dead?
Each step in thy wild way thou makest,
The ashes of the dead thou wakest;
And shout in triumph o'er thy path
The fiends of bloodshed and of wrath,
In this thine hour, yet turn and hear!
For life is brief and judgment near."

IX.
Then ceased the Voice.—The Dane replied
In tones where awe and inborn pride
For mastery strove,—"In vain ye chide
The wolf for ravaging the flock,
Or with its hardness taunt the rock,—
I am as they—my Danish strain
Sends streams of fire through ev'ry vein.
Amid thy realms of gloire and ghost,
Say, is the fame of Eric lost,
Or Witikind's the Waster, known
Where fame or spoil was to be won;
Whose galleys ne'er bore off a shore
They left not black with flame?—
He was my sire,—and, sprung of him,
That rover merciless and grim,
Can I be soft and tame?
Part hence, and with my crimes no more upbraided;
I am that Waster's son, and am but what he made me."

X.
The Phantomin quondam;—the mountain shook around,
The fawn and wild- doe started at the sound,
The gorse and fern did wildly round them wave,
As if some sudden storm the impulse gave.
"All thou hast said is truth—Yet on the head
Of that bad sire let not the charge be laid,
That he, like thee, with unrelenting pace,
From grave to cradle ran the evil race:"—

Relentless in his avarice and ire,
Churches and towns he gave to sword and fire;
Shed blood like water, wasted every land,
Like the destroying angel's burning brand;
Fulfill'd what'er of ill might be invented,
Yes—all these things he did—he did, but he REPEATED! Perchance it is part of his punishment still,
That his offspring pursues his example of ill.
But thou, when thy tempest of wrath shall next shake thee,
Gird thy loins for resistance, my son, and awake thee;
If thou yieldst to thy fury, how tempted soever,
The gate of repentance shall opèr for thee NEVER!—

XI.
"He is gone," said Lord Harold, and gazed as he spoke;
"There is nought on the path but the shade of the oak.
He is gone, whose strange presence my feeling oppress'd,
Like the night-hag that sits on the slumberer's breast.
My heart beats as thick as a fugitive's tread,
And cold dews drop from my brow and my head.—
Ho! Gunnar, the flasket yon almoner gave;
He said that three drops would recall from the grave.
For the first time Count Harold owns leech-craft has power,
Or, his courage to aid, lacks the juice of a flower?"
The Page gave the flasket, which Walwayn had fill'd
With the juice of wild roots that his art had distill'd—
So baneful their influence on all that had breath,
One drop had been frenzy, and two had been death.
Harold took it, but drank not; for jubilee shrill,
And music and clamor, were heard on the hill,
And down the steep pathway, o'er stock and o'er stone,
The train of a bridal came blithesomely on;
There was song, there was pipe, there was timbrel, and still
The burden was, "Joy to the fair Metelill!"

XII.
Harold might see from his high stance,
Himself unseen, that train advance
With mirth and melody:—
On horse and foot a mingled throng,
Measuring their steps to bridal song
And bridal minstrelsy;
And ever when the blithesome rout
Lent to the song their choral shout,

Thou aged carle, so stern and gray?

"Know'st thou not me?" the Deep Voice cried.
Redoubling echoes roll’d about,
While echoing cave and cliff sent out
The answering symphony
Of all those mimic notes which dwell
In hollow rock and sounding dell.

XIII.
Joy shook his torch above the band,
By many a various passion fann’d;—
As elemental sparks can feed
On essence pure and coarsest weed,
Gentle, or stormy, or refined,
Joy takes the colors of the mind.
Lightsome and pure, but unpress’d,
He fired the bridegroom’s gallant breast;
More feebly strove with maiden fear,
Yet still joy glimmer’d through the tear
On the bride’s blushing cheek, that shows
Like dewdrop on the budding rose;
While Wulfstane’s gloomy smile declared
The glee that selfish avarice shared,
And pleased revenge and malice high
Joy’s semblance took in Jutta’s eye.
On dangerous adventure sped,
The witch deem’d Harold with the dead,
For thus that morn her Demon said:—
“If, ere the set of sun, be tied
The knot ’twixt bridegroom and his bride,
The Dane shall have no power of ill
O’er William and o’er Metellil.”
The pleased witch made answer, “Then
Must Harold have pass’d from the paths of men!
Evil repose may his spirit have,— May hemlock and mandrake find root in his grave,—
May his death-sleep be dogged by dreams of dismay,
And his waking be worse at the answering day!”

XIV.
Such was their various mood of glee
Blent in one shout of ecstasy.
But still when Joy is brimming highest,
Of Sorrow and Misfortune highest,
Of Terror with her auge cheek,
And lurking Danger, sages speak:—
These haunt each path, but chief they lay
Their snares beside the primrose way,—
Thus found that bridal band their path
Beset by Harold in his wrath.
Trembling beneath his maddening mood,
High on a rock the giant stood;
His shout was like the doom of death
Spoke o’er their heads that pass’d beneath.
His destined victims might not spy
The reddening terrors of his eye,—
The frown of rage that writhed his face,—
The lip that foam’d like boar’s in chase;—
But all could see—and, seeing, all
Bore back to shun the threaten’d fall—
The fragment which their giant foe
Rent from the cliff and beaved to throw.

XV.
Backward they bore;—yet are there two
For battle who prepare:
No pause of dread Lord William knew
Ere his good blade was bare;
And Wulfstane bent his fatal yew,
But ere the silken cord he drew,
As hurl’d from Hecla’s thunder, flew
That ruin through the air!
Full on the Outlaw’s front it came,
And all that late had human name,
And human face, and human frame,
That lived, and moved, and had free will
To choose the path of good or ill,
Is to its reckoning gone;
And nought of Wulfstane rests behind,
Save that beneath that stone,
Half-buried in the dented clay,
A red and shapeless mass there lay
Of mingled flesh and bone!

XVI.
As from the bosom of the sky
The eagle darts amain,
Three bounds from yonder summit high
Placed Harold on the plain.
As the scared wild-fowl scream and fly,
So fled the bridal train;
As ’gainst the eagle’s peerless might
The noble falcon dares the fight,
But dares the fight in vain,
So fought the bridegroom; from his hand
The Dane’s rude mace has struck his brand,
Its glittering fragments strew the sand,
Its lord lies on the plain.
Now, Heaven! take noble William’s part,
And melt that yet unmelted heart,
Or, ere his bridal hour depart,
The hapless bridegroom’s slain!

XVII.
Count Harold’s frenzied rage is high,
There is a death-fire in his eye,
Deep furrows on his brow are trench’d,
His teeth are set, his hand is clench’d,
The foam upon his lip is white,
His deadly arm is up to smite!
But, as the mace aloft he swung,
To stop the blow young Gunnar sprung,
Around his master’s knees he clung,
And cried, “In mercy spare!
Oh, think upon the words of fear
Spoke by that visionary Seer;
The crisis he foretold is here,—
Grant mercy,—or despair!”
This word suspended Harold’s mood,
Yet still with arm upraised he stood,
And visage like the headsman's rude
That pauses for the sign.
"Oh mark thee with the blessed rood,"
The Page implored; "speak word of good,
Resist the fiend, or be subdued!"
He sign'd the cross divine—
Instant his eye hath human light,
Less red, less keen, less fiercely bright;
His brow relax'd the obdurate frown,
The fatal mace sinks gently down,
He turns and strides away;
Yet oft, like revellers who leave
Unfinish'd feast, looks back to grieve,
As if repenting the reprieve
He granted to his prey;
Yet still of forbearance one sign hath he given,
And fierce Witikind's son made one step towards heaven.

XVIII.
But though his dreaded footsteps part,
Death is behind and shakes his dart;
Lord William on the plain is lying,
Beside him Metelill seems dying!—
Bring odors—essences in haste—
And lo! a flasket richly chased,—
But Jutta the elixir proves
Ere pouring it for those she loves—
Then Walwain's potion was not wasted,
For when three drops the hag had tasted,
So dismal was her yell,
Each bird of evil omen woke,
The raven gave his fatal croak,
And shriek'd the night-crow from the oak,
The screech-owl from the thicket broke,
And flutter'd down the dell
So fearful was the sound and stern,
The slumbers of the full-gorged erne
Were startled, and from furze and fern
Of forest and of fell,
The fox and fainish'd wolf replied
(For wolves then prow'd the Cheviot side).
From mountain head to mountain head
The unhallow'd sounds around were sped;
But when their latest echo fled,
The sorceress on the ground lay dead.

XIX.
Such was the scene of blood and woes
With which the bridal morn arose
Of William and of Metelill;
But oft, when dawning 'gins to spread,
The summer morn peeps dim and red
Above the eastern hill,
Ere, bright and fair, upon his road
The King of Splendor walks abroad;
So, when this cloud had pass'd away,

\[1\] See a note on the "Lord of the Isles," canto v. stanza 31, p. 449, ante.

Bright was the noontide of their day,
And all serene its setting ray.

——

Harold the Dauntless.

CANTO SIXTH.

I.
Well do I hope that this my minstrel tale
Will tempt no traveller from southern fields,
Whether in tilbury, barouche, or mail,
To view the Castle of these Seven Proud Shields.
Small confirmation its condition yields
To Menerville's high lay.—No towers are seen
On the wild heath, but those that Fancy builds,
And, save a fosse that tracks the moor with green,
Is nought remains to tell of what may there have been.

And yet grave authors, with the no small waste
Of their grave time, have dignified the spot
By theories, to prove the fortress placed
By Roman bands to curb the invading Scot.
Hutchinson, Horsley, Camden, I might quote,
But rather choose the theory less evil
Of boors, who, origin of things forgot,
Refer still to the origin of evil,
And for their master-mason choose that master-fiend
the Devil.

II.

Therefore, I say, it was on fiend-built towers
That stout Count Harold bent his wondering gaze.
When evening dew was on the heather flowers,
And the last sunbeams made the mountain blaze,
And tinged the battlements of other days
With the bright level light ere sinking down,—
Illumined thus, the dauntless Dane surveys
The Seven Proud Shields that o'er the portal frown,
And on their blazons traced high marks of old renown.

A wolf North Wales had on his armor-coat,
And Rhys of Powis-land a couchant stag;
Strath-Cwyde's strange emblem was a stranded boat,
Donald of Galloway's a trotting nag;
A corn-sheaf gilt was fertile Lodou's brag;
A dudgeon-dagger was by Dunmail worn;
Northumbrian Adolf gave a sea-beat erg
Surmounted by a cross—such signs were borne
Upon these antique shields, all wasted now and worn.

III.

These scann'd, Count Harold sought the Castle door,
Whose ponderous bolts were rusted to decay;
Yet till that hour adventurous knight forbore
The unobstructed passage to essay.
More strong than armed warders in array,
And obstacle more sure than bolt or bar,
Sat in the portal Terror and Dismay,
While Superstition, who forbade to war
With foes of other mould than mortal clay,
Cast spells across the gate, and bann’d the onward way.

Vain now those spells; for soon with heavy clank
The feebly-fasten’d gate was inward push’d,
And, as it oped, through that emblazon’d rank
Of antique shields the wind of evening rush’d
With sound most like a groan, and then was hush’d.
Is none who on such spot such sounds could hear
But to his heart the blood had faster rush’d;
Yet to bold Harold’s breast that thrab was dear—
It spoke of danger nigh, but had no touch of fear.

IV.
Yet Harold and his Page no signs have traced
Within the Castle that of danger show’d;
For still the halls and courts were wild and waste,
As through their precincts the adventurers trode.
The seven huge towers rose stately, tall, and broad,
Each tower presenting to their scrutiny
A hall in which a king might make abode,
And fast beside, garnish’d both proud and high,
Was placed a bower for rest in which a king might lie.

As if a bridal there of late had been,
Deck’d stood the table in each gorgeous hall;
And yet it was two hundred years, I ween,
Since date of that unhallow’d festival.
Flagons, and ewers, and standing cups, were all
Of tarnish’d gold, or silver nothing clear,
With throne begilt, and canopy of pall,
And tapestry clothed the walls with fragments scar—
Frail as the spider’s mesh did that rich woof appear.

V.
In every bower, as round a hearse, was hung
A dusky crimson curtain o’er the bed,
And on each conch in ghastly wise were flung
The wasted relics of a monarch dead;
Barbaric ornaments around were spread,
Vests twined with gold, and chains of precious stone,
And golden circlets, meet for monarch’s head;
While grin’d, as if in scorn amongst them thrown,
The weaver’s fleshless skull, alike with dust bestrown.

For these were they who, drunken with delight,
On pleasure’s opiate pillow laid their head,
For whom the bride’s shy footstep, slow and light,
Was changed ere morning to the murderer’s tread,
For human bliss and woe in the frail thread
Of human life are all so closely twined,
That till the shears of Fate the texture shred,
The close succession cannot be disjoin’d,
Nor dare we, from one hour, judge that which comes behind.

VI.
But where the work of vengeance had been done,
In that seventh chamber, was a sterner sight;
There of the witch-brides lay each skeleton,
Still in the posture as to death when right.
For this lay prone, by one blow slain outright;
And that, as one who struggled long in dying;
One bony hand held knife, as if to smite;
One bent on fleshless knees, as mercy crying;
One lay across the door, as kill’d in act of flying.
The stern Dane smiled this charnel-house to see,—
For his chafed thought return’d to Metellis;—
And “Well,” he said, “hath woman’s perfidy,
Empty as air, as water volatile,
Been here avenged—The origin of ill
Through woman rose, the Christian doctrine saith:
Nor deem I, Gunnar, that thy minstrel skill
Can show example where a woman’s breath
Hath made a true-love vow, and, tempted, kept her faith.”

VII.
The minstrel-boy half smiled, half sigh’d,
And his half-filling eyes he dried,
And said, “The theme I should but wrong,
Unless it were my dying song
(Our Scalds have said, in dying hour
The Northern harp has treble power),
Else could I tell of woman’s faith,
Defying danger, scorn, and death.
Firm was that faith,—as diamond stone
Pure and unflaw’d,—her love unknown
And unrequited,—firm and pure,
Her stainless faith could all endure;
From clime to clime,—from place to place,—
Through want, and danger, and disgrace,
A wanderer’s wayward steps could trace.—
All this she did, and guerdon none
Required, save that her burial-stone
Should make at length the secret known,
‘Thus hath a faithful woman done.’—

until some hundred years after the era of the poem, and many of the scenes described, like that last quoted (stanzas iv. v. vi.), belong even to a still later period. At least this defect is not an imitation of Mr. Scott, who, being a skilful antiquary, is extremely careful as to niceties of this sort.—Critical Review.
Not in each breast such truth is laid,
But Elvir was a Danish maid."—

VIII.

"Thou art a wild enthusiast," said
Count Harold, "for thy Danish maid;
And yet, young Gunnar, I will own
Hers were a faith to rest upon.
But Elvir sleeps beneath her stone,
And all resembling her are gone.
What maid e'er show'd such constancy
In plefted faith, like thine to me?
But couch thee, boy; the darksome shade
Falls thickly round, nor be dismay'd
Because the dead are by.
They were as we; our little day
O'erspent, and we shall be as they.
Yet near me, Gunnar, be thou laid,
Thy couch upon my mantle made,
That thou may'st think, should fear invade
Thy master slumbers nigh."
Thus couch'd they in that dread abode,
Until the beams of dawning glow'd.

IX.

An alter'd man Lord Harold rose,
When he beheld that dawn unclose—
There's trouble in his eyes,
And traces on his brow and cheek
Of mingled awe and wonder speak;
"My Page," he said, "arise—
Leave we this place, my Page."—No more
He utter'd till the Castle door
They cross'd—but there he paused and said,
"My wildness hath awaked the dead—
Disturb'd the sacred tomb!
Methought this night I stood on high,
Where Hecla roars in middle sky,
And in her cavern'd gulfs could spy
The central place of doom;
And there before my mortal eye
Souls of the dead came flitting by,
Whom fiends, with many a fiendish cry,
Bore to that evil den!
My eyes grew dizzy, and my brain
Was wilder'd, as the elvish train,
With shriek and howl, dragg'd on amain
Those who had late been men.

"With haggard eyes and streaming hair,
Jutta the Sorecess was there,
And there pass'd Wulftane, lately slain,
All crush'd and foul with bloody stain.—
More had I seen, but that uprose
A whirlwind wild, and swept the snows;
And with such sound as when at need
A champion spurs his horse to speed,
Three arm'd knights rush on, who lead
Caparison'd a sable steed.

Sable their harness, and there came
Through their closed visors sparks of flame.
The first proclaim'd, in sounds of fear,
"Harold the Dauntless, welcome here!"
The next cried, "Jubilee! we've won
Count Witikind the Waster's son!"
And the third rider sternly spoke,
"Mount, in the name of Zernebock!—
From us, O Harold, were thy powers,—
Thy strength, thy dauntlessness, are ours;
Nor think, a vassal thou of hell,
With hell can strive." The fiend spoke true!
My inmost soul the summons knew,
As captives know the knell
That says the headman's sword is bare,
And, with an accent of despair,
Commands them quit their cell.
I felt resistance was in vain,
My foot had that fell stirrup ta'en,
My hand was on the fatal mane,
When to my rescue sped
That Palmer's visionary form,
And—like the passing of a storm—
The demons yell'd and fled!

XI.

"His sable cowl, flung back, reveal'd
The features it before conceal'd;
And, Gunnar, I could find
In him whose counsels strove to stay
So oft my course on willful way,
My father Witikind!
Doom'd for his sins, and doom'd for mine,
A wanderer upon earth to pine
Until his son shall turn to grace,
And smooth for him a resting-place.—
Gunnar, he must not haunt in vain
This world of wretchedness and pain:
I'll tame my willful heart to live
In peace—to pity and forgive;—
And thou, for so the Vision said,
Must in thy Lord's repentance aid.
Thy mother was a prophetess,
He said, who by her skill could guess
How close the fatal textures join
Which knit thy thread of life with mine;
Then, dark, he hinted of disguise
She framed to cheat too curious eyes,
That not a moment might divide
Thy fated footsteps from my side.
Methought while thus my sire did teach,
I caught the meaning of his speech,
Yet seems its purport doubtful now."
His hand then sought his thoughtful brow;
Then first he mark'd that in the tower
His glove was left at waking hour.

XII.

Trembling at first, and deadly pale,
Had Gunnar heard the vision'd tale;
Nor glove, nor buckler, splent, nor nail,
Shall rest with thee—that youth release,
And God, or Demon, part in peace."—
"Eivir," the Shape replied, "is mine,
Mark'd in the birth-hour with my sign.
Think'st thou that priest with drops of spray
Could wash that blood-red mark away?
Or that a borrow'd sex and name
Can abrogate a Godhead's claim?"
Thrive'd this strange speech through Harold's brain;
He clench'd his teeth in high disdain,
For not his new-born faith subdued
Some tokens of his ancient mood.—
"Now, by the hope so lately given
Of better trust and purer heaven,
I will assial thee, Fiend!"—Then rose
His mace, and with a storm of blows
The mortal and the Demon close.

XVI.
Smoke roll'd above, fire flash'd around,
Darken'd the sky and shook the ground;
But not the artillery of hell,
The bickering lightning, nor the rock
Of turrets to the earthquake's shock,
Could Harold's courage quell.
Sterlly the Dane his purpose kept,
And blows on blows resistless heap'd,
Till quail'd that Demon Form,
And—for his power to hurt or kill
Was bounded by a higher will—
Evansh'd in the storm.

Nor paused the Champion of the North,
But raised and bore his Eivir forth,
From that wild scene of fiendish strife,
To light, to liberty, and life!

XVII.
He placed her on a bank of moss,
A silver runnel bubble'd by,
And new-born thoughts his soul engross,
And terrors yet unknown across
His stubborn sinews fly,
The while with timid hand the dew
Upon her brow and neck he threw,
And mark'd how life with rosy hue
On her pale cheek revived anew,
And gimmer'd in her eye.
Inly he said, "That silken tress,—
What blindness mine that could not guess!
Or how could page's rugged dress
That bosom's pride belie?
Oh, dull of heart, through wild and wave
In search of blood and death to rave,
With such a partner nigh!"

---

1 Mr. Adolphus, in his Letters on the Author of Waverley, p. 229, remarks on the coincidence between the catastrophe of the 'Black Dwarf,' the recognition of Mortham's lost son in the Irish orphan of 'Rokeby,' and the conversion of Harold's page into a female,—all which he calls "specimens of unsuccessful contrivance, at a great expense of probability."
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

XVIII.
Then in the mirror'd pool he peer'd,
Blamed his rough locks and shaggy beard,
The stains of recent conflict clear'd,—
   And thus the Champion proved
That he fears now who never fear'd,
   And loves who never loved.
And Evir—life is on her cheek,
And yet she will not move or speak,
Nor will her eyelid fully ope;
Perchance it loves, that half-shut eye,
Through its long fringe, reserved and shy,
Affection's opening dawn to spy;
And the deep blush, which bids its dye
O'er cheek, and brow, and bosom fly,
Speaks shame-facedness and hope.

XIX.
But vainly seems the Dane to seek
For terms his new-born love to speak,—
For words, save those of wrath and wrong,
Till now were strangers to his tongue;
So, when he raised the blushing maid,
In blunt and honest terms he said
('Twere well that maids, when lovers woo, Heard none more soft, were all as true),

"Evir! since thou for many a day
Hast follow'd Harold's wayward way,
It is but meet that in the line
Of after-life I follow thine.
To-morrow is Saint Cuthbert's tide,
And we will grace his altar's side,
A Christian knight and Christian bride;
And of Witkind's son shall the marvel be said,
That on the same morn he was christen'd and wed."

CONCLUSION.

And now, Ennui, what ails thee, weary maid?
And why these listless looks of yawning sorrow?
No need to turn the page, as if 'twere lead,
Or fling aside the volume till to-morrow.—
Be cheer'd—'tis ended—and I will not borrow,
To try thy patience more, one anecdote
From Bartholome, or Perinskiold, or Snorro.
Then pardon thou thy minstrel, who hath wrote
A Tale six cantos long, yet scorn'd to add a note.

"This is an elegant, sprightly, and delightful little poem, written apparently by a person of taste and genius, but who either possesses not the art of forming and combining a plot, or regards it only as a secondary and subordinate object.
In this we do not widely differ from him, but are sensible, meantime, that many others will; and that the rambling and uncertain nature of the story will be the principal objection urged against the poem before us, as well as the greatest bar to its extensive popularity. The character of Mr. Scott's romances has effected a material change in our mode of estimating poetical compositions. In all the estimable works of our former poets, from Spenser down to Thomson and Cowper, the plot seems to have been regarded as good or bad only in proportion to the advantages which it furnished for poetical description; but, of late years, one half, at least, of the merit of a poem is supposed to rest on the interest and management of the tale.

"We speak not exclusively of that numerous class of readers who peruse and estimate a new poem, or any poem, with the same feelings, and precisely on the same principles, as they do a novel. It is natural for such persons to judge only by the effect produced by the incidents; but we have often been surprised that some of our literary critics, even those to whose judgment we were most disposed to bow, should lay so much

---

1 "Harold the Dauntless," like the 'Bridal of Triernmain,' is a tolerably successful imitation of some parts of the style of Mr. Walter Scott; but, like all imitations, it is clearly distinguishable from the prototype; it wants the life and seasoning of originality. To illustrate this familiarity from the stage:—We have all witnessed a hundred imitations of popular actors—of Kemble, for instance—in which the voice, the gesture, and somewhat even of the look, were copied. In externals the resemblance might be sufficiently correct; but where was the informing soul, the mind that dictated the action and expression? Who could endure the tedium of seeing the imitator go through a whole character? In 'Harold the Dauntless,' the imitation of Mr. Scott is pretty obvious, but we are weary of it before we arrive near the end. The author has talent, and considerable facility in versification, and on this account it is somewhat laudable, not only that he should not have selected a better model, but that he should copy the parts of that model which are least worthy of study. Perhaps it was not easy to equal the energy of Mr. Scott's line, or his picturesque descriptions. His peculiarities and defects were more attainable, and with these the writer of this novel in verse has generally contented himself; he will also content a certain number of readers, who merely look for a few amusing or surprising incidents. In these, however, 'Harold the Dauntless' does not abound so much as the 'Bridal of Triernmain.' They are, indeed, romantic enough to satisfy all the parlor-boarders of ladies' schools in England; but they want that appearance of probability which should give them interest."—Critical Review, April, 1817.
stress on the probability and fitness of every incident which the fancy of the poet may lead him to embellish in the course of a narrative poem, a great proportion of which must necessarily be descriptive. The author of ‘Harold the Dauntless’ seems to have judged differently from these critics; and in the lightsome rapid strain of poetry which he has chosen, we feel no disposition to quarrel with him on account of the easy and careless manner in which he has arranged his story. In many instances he undoubtedly shows the hand of a master, and has truly studied and seized the essential character of the antique—his attitudes and draperies are unconfined, and varied with demi-tints, possessing much of the lustre, freshness, and spirit of Rembrandt. The airs of his heads have grace, and his distances something of the lightness and keeping of Salvator Rosa. The want of harmony and union in the carnations of his females is a slight objection, and there is likewise a meagre sheetiness in his contrasts of chiaroscuro; but these are all redeemed by the felicity, execution, and master traits distinguishable in his grouping, as in a Murillo or Caravaggio.

"But the work has another quality, and though its leading one, we do not know whether to censure or approve it. It is an avowed imitation, and therefore loses part of its value if viewed as an original production. On the other hand, regarded solely as an imitation, it is one of the closest and most successful, without being either a caricature or a parody, that perhaps ever appeared in any language. Not only is the general maner of Scott ably maintained throughout, but the very structure of the language, the associations, and the train of thinking, appear to be precisely the same. It was once alleged by some writers that it was impossible to imitate Mr. Scott's style; but it is now fully proved to the world that there is no style more accessible to imitation; for it will be remarked (laying parodies aside, which any one may execute) that Mr. Davidson and Miss Halford, as well as Lord Byron and Wordsworth, each in one instance, have all, without we believe intending it, imitated him with considerable closeness. The author of the 'Poetic Mirror' has given us one specimen of his most polished and tender style, and another, still more close, of his rapid and careless manner; but all of them fall greatly short of the 'Bridal of Triermain,' and the poem now before us. We are sure the author will laugh heartily in his sleeve at our silliness and want of perception, when we confess to him that we never could open either of these works, and peruse his pages for two minutes with attention, and at the same time divest our minds of the idea that we were engaged in an early or experimental work of that great master. That they are gene-rrally inferior to the works of Mr. Scott in vigor and interest admits not of dispute; still they have many of his wild and softer beauties; and if they fail to be read and admired, we shall not on that account think the better of the taste of the age."—Blackwood's Magazine, April, 1817.
INTRODUCTORY REMARKS1

ON

Popular Poetry,

AND ON THE

VARIOUS COLLECTIONS OF BALLADS OF BRITAIN, PARTICULARLY THOSE OF SCOTLAND.

THE Introduction originally prefixed to the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border was rather of a historical than a literary nature; and the remarks which follow have been added to afford the general reader some information upon the character of Ballad Poetry.

It would be throwing away words to prove, what all must admit, the general taste and propensity of nations in their early state to cultivate some species of rude poetry. When the organs and faculties of a primitive race have developed themselves, each for its proper and necessary use, there is a natural tendency to employ them in a more refined and regulated manner for purposes of amusement. The savage, after proving the activity of his limbs in the chase or the battle, trains them to more measured movements, to dance at the festivals of his tribe, or to perform obeisance before the altar of his deity. From the same impulse, he is disposed to refine the ordinary speech which forms the vehicle of social communication betwixt him and his brethren, until, by a more ornate diction, modulated by certain rules of rhythm, cadence, assonance of termination, or recurrence of sound or letter, he obtains a dialect more solemn in expression, to record the laws or exploits of his tribe, or more sweet in sound, in which to plead his own cause to his mistress.

This primeval poetry must have one general character in all nations, both as to its merits and its imperfections. The earlier poets have the advantage, and it is not a small one, of having the first choice out of the stock of materials which are proper to the art; and thus they compel later authors, if they would avoid slavishly imitating the fathers of verse, into various devices, often more ingenious than elegant, that they may establish, if not an absolute claim to originality, at least a visible distinction betwixt themselves and their predecessors. Thus it happens that early poets almost uniformly display a bold, rude, original cast of genius and expression. They have walked at free will, and with unconstrained steps, along the wilds of Parnassus, while their followers move with constrained gestures and forced attitudes, in order to avoid placing their feet where their predecessors have stepped before them. The first bard who compared his hero to a lion struck a bold and congenial note, though the simile, in a nation of hunters, be a very obvious one; but every subsequent poet who shall use it must either struggle hard to give his lion, as heralds say, with a difference, or lie under the imputation of being a servile imitator.

It is not probable that, by any researches of modern times, we shall ever reach back to an earlier model of poetry than Homer; but as there lived heroes before Agamemnon, so, unquestionably, poets existed before the immortal Bard who gave the King of kings his fame; and he whom all civilized nations now acknowledge as the Father of Poetry must have himself looked back to an ancestry of poetical predecessors, and is only held original because we know not from whom he copied. Indeed, though much must be ascribed to the riches of his own individual genius, the poetry of Homer argues a degree of perfection in art which practice had already rendered regular, and concerning which his frequent mention of the bards, or chanters of poetry, indicates plainly that it was studied by many, and known and admired by all.2

It is indeed easily discovered that the qualities doubted that the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" were substantially the works of one and the same individual. He said of the Wofian hypothesis that it was the most irreligious one he had heard of, and could never be believed in by any poet.—Ed.

1 These remarks were first appended to the edition of the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, 1838.—Ed.

2 Sir Walter Scott, as this paragraph intimates, never necessary for composing such poems are not the portion of every man in the tribe; that the bard, to reach excellence in his art, must possess something more than a full command of words and phrases, and the knack of arranging them in such form as ancient examples have fixed upon as the recognized structure of national verse. The tribe speedily become sensible that besides this degree of mechanical facility, which (like making what are called at school nonsense verses) may be attained by dint of memory and practice, much higher qualifications are demanded. A keen and active power of observation, capable of perceiving at a glance the leading circumstances from which the incident described derives its character; quick and powerful feelings, to enable the bard to comprehend and delineate those of the actors in his piece; and a command of language, alternately soft and elevated, and suited to express the conceptions which he had formed in his mind, are all necessary to eminence in the poetical art.

(587)

Above all, to attain the highest point of his profession, the poet must have that original power of embodying and detailing circumstances which can place before the eyes of others a scene which only exists in his own imagination. This last high and creative faculty, namely, that of impressing the mind of the hearers with scenes and sentiments having no existence save through their art, has procured for the bards of Greece the term of ὑπέρτατος, which, as it singularly happens, is literally translated by the Scottish epithet for the same class of persons, whom they termed the Makers. The French phrase of Trouveurs or Troubadours, namely, the Finders or Inventors, has the same reference to the quality of original conception and invention proper to the poetical art, and without which it can hardly be said to exist to any pleasing or useful purpose.

The mere arrangement of words into poetical rhythm, or combining them according to a technical rule or measure, is so closely connected with the art of music that an alliance between these two fine arts is very soon closely formed. It is fruitless to inquire which of them has been first invented, since doubtless the precedence is accidental; and it signifies little whether the musician adapts verses to a rude tune, or whether the primitive poet, in reciting his productions, falls naturally into a chant or song. With this additional accomplishment, the poet becomes ἄνθος, or the man of song, and his character is complete when the additional accompaniment of a lute or harp is added to his vocal performance.

Here, therefore, we have the history of early poetry in all nations. But it is evident that, though poetry seems a plant proper to almost all soils, yet not only is it of various kinds, according to the climate and country in which it has its origin, but the poetry of different nations differs still more widely in the degree of excellence which it attains. This must depend in some measure, no doubt, on the temper and manners of the people, or their proximity to those spirit-stirring events which are naturally selected as the subject of poetry, and on the more comprehensive or energetic character of the language spoken by the tribe. But the progress of the art is far more dependent upon the rise of some highly-gifted individual, possessing in a pre-eminently and uncommon degree the powers demanded, whose talents influence the taste of a whole nation, and entail on their posterity and language a character almost indelibly sacred. In this respect Homer stands alone and unrivalled, as a light from whose lamp the genius of successive ages and of distant nations has caught fire and illumination; and who, though the early poet of a rude age, has purchased for the era he has celebrated so much reverence that, not daring to bestow on it the term of barbarous, we distinguish it as the heroic period.

No other poet (sacred and inspired authors excepted) ever did or ever will possess the same influence over posterity, in so many distant lands, as has been acquired by the blind old man of Chios; yet we are assured that his works, collected by the pious care of Pisistratus, who caused to be united into their present form those divine poems, would otherwise, if preserved at all, have appeared to succeeding generations in the humble state of a collection of detached ballads, connected only as referring to the same age, the same general subjects, and the same cycle of heroes, like the metrical poems of the Cid in Spain1 or of Robin Hood in England.

In other countries, less favored either in language or in picturesquely incident, it cannot be supposed that even the genius of Homer could have soared to such exclusive eminence, since he must at once have been deprived of the subjects and themes so well adapted for his muse, and of the lofty, melodious, and flexible language in which he recorded them. Other nations, during the formation of their ancient poetry, wanted the genius of Homer, as well as his picturesque scenery and lofty language. Yet the investigation of the early poetry of every nation, even the rudest, carries with it an object of curiosity and interest. It is a chapter in the history of the childhood of society, and its resemblance to, or dissimilarity from, the popular rhymes of other nations in the same stage, must needs illustrate the ancient history of states; their slower or swifter progress towards civilization; their gradual or more rapid adoption of manners, sentiments, and religion. The study, therefore, of lays rescued from the gulf of oblivion must in every case possess considerable interest for the moral philosopher and general historian.

The historian of an individual nation is equally or dently more ancient than the detached ballads on the Adventures of the Campeador, which are included in the Cancion-erios.—Ed.

---

1 The "Poema del Cid" (of which Mr. Frere has translated some specimens) is, however, considered by every historian of Spanish literature as the work of one hand; and is evidently more ancient than the detached ballads on the Adventures of the Campeador, which are included in the Cancion-erios.—Ed.
more deeply interested in the researches into popular poetry, since he must not disdain to gather from the tradition conveyed in ancient ditties and ballads the information necessary to confirm or correct intelligence collected from more certain sources. And although the poets were a fabricing race from the very beginning of time, and so much addicted to exaggeration that their accounts are seldom to be relied on without corroborative evidence, yet instances frequently occur where the statements of poetical tradition are unexpectedly confirmed.

To the lovers and admirers of poetry as an art, it cannot be uninteresting to have a glimpse of the National Muse in her cradle, or to hear her babbling the earliest attempts at the formation of the tuneful sounds with which she was afterwards to charm posterity. And I may venture to add that among poetry, which, however rude, was a gift of Nature’s first fruits, even a reader of refined taste will find his patience rewarded by passages in which the rude minstrel rises into sublimity or melts into pathos. These were the merits which induced the classical Addison to write an elaborate commentary upon the ballad of “Cherry Chase,” and which roused, like the sound of a trumpet, the heroic blood of Sir Philip Sidney.

It is true that passages of this high character seldom occur; for, during the infancy of the art of poetry, the bards have been generally satisfied with a rude and careless expression of their sentiments; and even when a more felicitous expression, or loftier numbers, have been dictated by the enthusiasm of the composition, the advantage came unsought for, and perhaps unnoticed, either by the minstrel or the audience.

Another cause contributed to the tenuity of thought and poverty of expression by which old ballads are too often distinguished. The apparent simplicity of the ballad stanza carried with it a strong temptation to loose and trivial composition. The collection of rhymes accumulated by the earliest of the craft appear to have been considered as forming a joint stock for the common use of the profession; and not mere rhymes only, but verses and stanzas, have been used as common property, so as to give an appearance of sameness and crudity to the whole series of popular poetry. Such, for instance, is the salutation so often repeated,—

“Now Heaven thee save, thou brave young knight,
Now Heaven thee save and see.”

And such the usual expression for taking counsel with,— “Rode me, rode me, brother dear,

My rode shall rise at thee.”

---

1 See the Spectator, Nos. 70 and 74.

2 “I never heard the old song of Percie and Douglas, that I found not my heart moved more than with the sound of a trumpet; and yet it is sung but by some blind crowder, with no rougher voice than rude style.”—SIR PHILIP SIDNEY.

Such also is the unvaried account of the rose and the brier, which are said to spring out of the grave of the hero and heroine of these metrical legends, with little effort at a variation of the expressions in which the incident is prescriptively told. The least acquaintance with the subject will recall a great number of commonplace verses, which each ballad-maker has unceremoniously appropriated to himself; thereby greatly facilitating his own task, and at the same time degrading his art by his slovenly use of oversketchèd phrases. From the same indolence, the ballad-mongers of most nations have availed themselves of every opportunity of prolonging their pieces, of the same kind, without the labor of actual composition. If a message is to be delivered, the poet saves himself a little trouble by using exactly the same words in which it was originally couched, to secure its being transmitted to the person for whose ear it was intended. The bards of ruder climes and less favored languages may indeed claim the contumence of Homer for such repetitions; but whilst, in the Father of Poetry, they give the reader an opportunity to pause and look back upon the enchanted ground over which they have travelled, they afford nothing to the modern bard, save facilitating the power of stupefying the audience with stanzas of dull and tedious iteration.

Another cause of the flatness and insipidity which is the great imperfection of ballad poetry is to be ascribed less to the compositions in their original state, when rehearsed by their authors, than to the ignorance and errors of the reciters or transcribers by whom they have been transmitted to us. The more popular the composition of an ancient poet or Maker became, the greater chance there was of its being corrupted; for a poem transmitted through a number of reciters, like a book reprinted in a multitude of editions, incurs the risk of imperient interpolations from the conceit of one rehearser, unintelligible blunders from the stupidity of another, and omissions equally to be regretted from the want of memory in a third. This sort of injury is felt very early, and the reader will find a curious instance in the Introduction to the romance of “Sir Tristrem.” Robert de Brunne there complains that though the romance of “Sir Tristrem” was the best which had ever been made, if it could be recited as composed by the author, Thomas of Ercildoune, yet that it was written in such an ornate style of language, and such a difficult strain of versification, as to lose all value in the mouths of ordinary minstrels, who could scarcely repeat one stanza without omitting some part of it, and marring, consequently, both the sense and the rhythm of the passage. This deterioration... could not be limited to one author alone; others must have suffered from the same cause, in the same or a greater degree. Nay, we are authorized to conclude that in proportion to the care bestowed by the author upon any poem, to attain what his age might suppose to be the highest graces of poetry, the greater was the damage which it sustained by the inaccuracy of reciters, or their desire to humble both the sense and diction of the poem to their powers of recollection and the comprehension of a vulgar audience. It cannot be expected that compositions subjected in this way to mutilation and corruption should continue to present their original sense or diction; and the accuracy of our editions of popular poetry, unless in the rare event of recovering original or early copies, is lessened in proportion.

But the chance of these corruptions is incalculably increased when we consider that the ballads have been, not in one but innumerable instances of transmission, liable to similar alterations through a long course of centuries, during which they have been handed from one ignorant reciter to another, each discarding whatever original words or phrases time or fashion had, in his opinion, rendered obsolete, and substituting anachronisms by expressions taken from the customs of his own day. And here it may be remarked that the desire of the reciter to be intelligible, however natural and laudable, has been one of the greatest causes of the deterioration of ancient poetry. The minstrel who endeavored to recite with fidelity the words of the author might indeed fall into errors of sound and sense, and substitute corruptions for words he did not understand. But the ingenuity of a skillful critic could often, in that case, revive and restore the original meaning; while the corrupted words became, in such cases, a warrant for the authenticity of the whole poem.1

In general, however, the later reciters appear to have been far less desirous to speak the author's words than to introduce amendments and new readings of their own, which have always produced the effect of modernizing, and usually that of degrading and vulgarizing, the rugged sense and spirit of the antique minstrel. Thus undergoing from age to age a gradual process of alteration and recomposition, our popular and oral minstrelsy has lost, in a great measure, its original appearance; and the strong touches by which it had been formerly characterized have been generally smoothed down and destroyed by a process similar to that by which a coin, passing from hand to hand, loses in circulation all the finer marks of the impress.

The very fine ballad of "Chevy Chase" is an example of this degrading species of alchemy, by which the ore of antiquity is deteriorated and adulterated. While Addison, in an age which had never attended to popular poetry, wrote his classical criticism on that ballad, he naturally took for his text the ordinary stall-copy, although he might and ought to have suspected that a ditty couched in the language nearly of his own time could not be the same with that which Sir Philip Sidney, more than one hundred years before, had spoken of as being "evil appareled in the dust and cobwebs of an uncivilized age." The venerable Bishop Percy was the first to correct this mistake, by producing a copy of the song, as old at least as the reign of Henry VII., bearing the name of the author or transcriber, Richard Sheple.2 But even the reverend editor himself fell under the mistake of supposing the modern "Chevy Chase" to be a new copy of the original ballad, expressly modernized by some one later bard. On the contrary, the current version is now universally allowed to have been produced by the gradual alterations of numerous reciters, during two centuries, in the course of which the ballad has been gradually moulded into a composition bearing only a general resemblance to the original—expressing the same events and sentiments in much smoother language, and more flowing and easy versification; but losing in poetical fire and energy, and in the vigor and pithiness of the expression, a great deal more than it has gained in suavity of diction. Thus—

"The Percy owt of Northumberland,

And a vow to God may he,

That he wold hunte in the mountayns

Off Cheviot within dayes thre,

In the maner of dougherty Dougles,

And all that ever with him be," becomes

"The stout Earl of Northumberland

A vow to God did make,

His pleasure in the scottish woods

Three summer days to take," &c.

From this and other examples of the same kind, of which many might be quoted, we must often expect to find the remains of minstrel poetry, composed originally for the courts of princes and halls of nobles, disguised in the more modern and vulgar dialect in which they have been of late sung to the frequenters of the rustic ale-bench. It is unnecessary to mention more than one other remarkable and humbling instance, printed in the curious collection entitled a Ballad-Book, where we find, in the words of the ingenious editor,3 a stupid ballad, printed as it was sung for casting darts or stones; the restoration of which reading gives a precise and clear sense to the lines.

1 An instance occurs in the valuable old ballad called "Auld Maitland." The reciter repeated a verse, descriptive of the defence of a castle, thus:

"With spring-wall, stanes and goads of airm

Among them fast he throw."

Spring-wall is a corruption of springald, a military engine

3 Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, Esq. The Ballad-Book was printed in 1825, and inscribed to Sir Walter Scott; the impression consisting of only thirty copies.
in Amandale, founded on the well-known story of the Prince of Salern’s daughter, but with the uncouth change of Dysmal for Ghismond, and Guiscard transformed into a greasy kitchen-boy.

“To what base uses may we not return!”

Sometimes a still more material and systematic difference appears between the poëms of antiquity as they were originally composed and as they now exist. This occurs in cases where the longer metrical romances, which were in fashion during the middle ages, were reduced to shorter compositions, in order that they might be chanted before an inferior audience. A ballad, for example, of Thomas of Ercildoune, and his intrigues with the Queen of Faery-land, is, or has been, long current in Teviotdale and other parts of Scotland. Two ancient copies of a poem or romance on the same subject, and containing very often the same words and turns of expression, are preserved in the libraries of the Cathedral of Lincoln and Peterborough. We are left to conjecture whether the originals of such ballads have been gradually contracted into their modern shape by the impatience of later audiences, combined with the lack of memory displayed by more modern reciters, or whether, in particular cases, some ballad-maker may have actually set himself to work to retrench the old details of the minstrels, and regularly and systematically to modernize, and, if the phrase be permitted, to balladize, a metrical romance. We are assured, however, that “Roswald and Lillian” was sung through the streets of Edinburgh two generations since; and we know that the romance of “Sir Eger, Sir Grime, and Sir Greysteel” had also its own particular chant or tune. The stall-copies of both these romances, as they now exist, are very much abbreviated, and probably exhibit them when they were undergoing, or had nearly undergone, the process of being cut down into ballads.

Taking into consideration the various indirect channels by which the popular poetry of our ancestors has been transmitted to their posterity, it is nothing surprising that it should reach us in a mutilated and degraded state, and that it should little correspond with the ideas we are apt to form of the first productions of national genius; nay, it is more to be wondered at that we possess so many ballads of considerable merit, than that the much greater number of them which must have once existed should have perished before our time.

Having given this brief account of ballad poetry in general, the purpose of the present prefatory remarks will be accomplished by shortly noticing the popular poetry of Scotland, and some of the efforts which have been made to collect and illustrate it.

It is now generally admitted that the Scots and Picts, however differing otherwise, were each by descent a Celtic race; that they advanced in a course of victory somewhat farther than the present frontier between England and Scotland, and about the end of the eleventh century subdued and rendered tributary the Britons of Strathclyde, who were also a Celtic race like themselves. Excepting, therefore, the provinces of Berwickshire and the Lothians, which were chiefly inhabited by an Anglo-Saxon population, the whole of Scotland was peopled by different tribes of the same aboriginal race,—a race passionately addicted to music, as appears from the kindred Celtic nations of Irish, Welsh, and Scottish, preserving each to this day a style and character of music peculiar to their own country, though all three bear marks of general resemblance to each other. That of Scotland, in particular, is early noticed and extolled by ancient authors, and its remains, to which the natives are passionately attached, are still found to afford pleasure even to those who cultivate the art upon a more refined and varied system.

This skill in music did not, of course, exist without a corresponding degree of talent for a species of poetry adapted to the habits of the country, celebrating the victories of triumphant clans, pouring forth lamentations over fallen heroes, and recording such marvelous adventures as were calculated to amuse individual families around their household fires, or the whole tribe when regaling in the hall of the chief. It happened, however, singularly enough, that while the music continued to be Celtic in its general measure, the language of Scotland, most commonly spoken, began to be that of their neighbors the English, introduced by the multitude of Saxons who thronged to the court of Malcolm Canmore and his successors; by the crowds of prisoners of war whom the repeated ravages of the Scots in Northumberland carried off as slaves to their country; by the influence of the inhabitants of the richest and most populous provinces in Scotland—Berwickshire, namely, and the Lothians—over the more mountainous; lastly, by the superiority which a language like the Anglo-Saxon, considerably refined, long since reduced to writing, and capable of expressing the wants, wishes, and sentiments of the speakers, must have possessed over the jargon of various tribes of Irish and British origin, limited and contracted in every varying dialect, and differing, at the same time, from each other.

This superiority being of the Picts, “It would appear the Scandinavians had colonies along the fertile shores of Moray, and among the mountains of Sutherland, whose name speaks for itself that it was given by the Norwegians; and probably they had also settlements in Caithness and the Orcades.” In this essay, however, he adheres in the main to his anti-Pinkertonian doctrine, and treats the Picts as Celts.—Ed.
considered, and a fair length of time being allowed, it is no wonder that, while the Scottish people retained their Celtic music and many of their Celtic customs, together with their Celtic dynasty, they should nevertheless have adopted, throughout the Lowlands, the Saxon language, while in the Highlands they retained the Celtic dialect, along with the dress, arms, manners, and government of their fathers.

There was, for a time, a solemn national recognizance that the Saxon language and poetry had not originally been that of the royal family. For, at the coronations of the kings of Scotland, previous to Alexander III., it was a part of the solemnity that a Celtic bard stepped forth, so soon as the king assumed his seat upon the fated stone, and recited the genealogy of the monarch in Celtic verse, setting forth his descent, and the right which he had by birth to occupy the place of sovereignty. For a time, no doubt, the Celtic songs and poems remained current in the Lowlands, while any remnant of the language yet lasted. The Gaelic or Irish bards, we are also aware, occasionally strolled into the Lowlands, where their music might be received with favor, even after their recitation was no longer understood. But though these aboriginal poets showed themselves at festivals and other places of public resort, it does not appear that, as in Homer's time, they were honored with high places at the board and savory morsels of the chieft; but they seem rather to have been accounted fit company for the feigned fools and sturdy beggars with whom they were ranked by a Scottish statute.

Time was necessary wholly to eradicate one language and introduce another; but it is remarkable that at the death of Alexander III., the last Scottish king of the pure Celtic race, the popular lament for his death was composed in Scoto-English, and, though closely resembling the modern dialect, is the earliest example we have of that language, whether in prose or poetry. About the same time flourished the celebrated Thomas the Rhymier, whose poem, written in English or Lowland Scottish, with the most anxious attention both to versification and alliteration, forms, even as it now exists, a very curious specimen of the early romance. Such complicated construction was greatly too concise for the public ear, which is best amused by a looser diction, in which numerous repetitions and prolonged descriptions enable the comprehension of the audience to keep up with the voice of the singer or reciter, and supply the gaps which in general must have taken place, either through a failure of attention in the hearers or of voice and distinct enunciation on the part of the minstrel.

The usual stanza which was selected as the most natural to the language and the sweetest to the ear, after the complex system of the more courtly measures, used by Thomas of Ercildoune, was laid aside, was that which, when originally introduced, we very often find arranged in two lines, thus:

"Earl Douglas on his milk-white stead, most like a baron bold, Rode foremost of his company, whose armor shone like gold,"

but which, after being divided into four, constitutes what is now generally called the ballad stanza,—

"Earl Douglas on his milk-white stead,
Most like a baron bold,
Rode foremost of his company,
Whose armor shone like gold."

The breaking of the lines contains a plainer intimation how the stanza ought to be read than every one could gather from the original mode of writing out the poem, where the position of the caesura, or inflection of voice, is left to the individual's own taste. This was sometimes exchanged for a stanza of six lines, the third and sixth rhyming together. For works of more importance and pretension, a more complicated versification was still retained, and may be found in the tale of "Ralph Colzear,9 the "Adventures of Arthur at the Tarn-Wathelyn," "Sir Gawain and Sir Goloergas," and other scarce romances. A specimen of this structure of verse has been handed down to our times in the stanza of "Christ Kirk on the Green," transmitted by King James I. to Allan Ramsay and to Burns. The excessive passion for alliteration which formed a rule of the Saxon poetry was also retained in the Scottish poems of a more elevated character, though the more ordinary minstrels and ballad-makers threw off the restraint.

The varieties of stanza thus adopted for popular poetry were not, we may easily suppose, left long unemployed. In frontier regions, where men are continually engaged in active enterprise, betwixt the task of defending themselves and annoying their neighbors, they may be said to live in an atmosphere of danger, the excitation of which is peculiarly favorable to the encouragement of poetry. Hence the expressions of Lesley the historian, quoted in the following Introduction,4 in which he paints the delight taken by the Borderers in their peculiar species of music, and the rhyming ballads in which they celebrated the feats of their ancestors, or recorded their own ingenious stratagems in predatory warfare. In the same Introduction the reader will find the reasons alleged why the taste for song was and must have been longer

1 A curious account of the reception of an Irish or Celtic bard at a festival is given in Sir John Holland's Bake of the Houstat, Bannatyne edition, p. liiii.
2 "Whan Alexander our king was ded,
When Scotland led in love and lee,
Away was sons of ale and brede,
Of wine and wax of game and glee," &c.
3 This and most of the other romances here referred to may be found reprinted in a volume entitled Select Remains of the Ancient Popular Poetry of Scotland (Edin. 1822, Small 4to). Edited by Mr. David Laing, and inscribed to Sir Walter Scott.
4 See Munsterey of the Scottish Border, vol. i. p. 213.
preserved on the Border than in the interior of the country.

Having thus made some remarks on early poetry in general, and on that of Scotland in particular, the editor's purpose is to mention the fate of some previous attempts to collect ballad poetry, and the principles of selection and publication which have been adopted by various editors of learning and information; and although the present work chiefly regards the ballads of Scotland, yet the investigation must necessarily include some of the principal collections among the English also.

Of manuscript records of ancient ballads, very few have been yet discovered. It is probable that the minstrels, seldom knowing either how to read or write, trusted to their well-exercised memories. Nor was it a difficult task to acquire a sufficient stock in trade for their purpose, since the editor has not only known many persons capable of retaining a very large collection of legendary lore of this kind, but there was a period in his own life when a memory that ought to have been charged with more valuable matter enabled him to recollect as many of these old songs as would have occupied several days in the recitation.

The press, however, at length superseded the necessity of such exertions of recollection, and sheafs of ballads issued from it weekly, for the amusement of the sojourners at the alehouse, and the lovers of poetry in grange and hall, where such of the audience as could not read had at least read unto them. These fugitive leaves, generally printed upon broadsides, or in small miscellanies called Garlands, and circulating amongst persons of loose or careless habits — so far as books were concerned — were subject to destruction from many causes; and as the editions in the early age of printing were probably much limited, even those published as chap-books in the early part of the eighteenth century are rarely met with.

Some persons, however, seem to have had what their contemporaries probably thought the bizarre taste of gathering and preserving collections of this fugitive poetry. Hence the great body of ballads in the Pepsian collection at Cambridge, made by that Secretary Pepys whose Diary is so very amusing; and hence the still more valuable deposit, in three volumes folio, in which the late Duke John of Roxburgh took so much pleasure that he was often found enlarging it with fresh acquisitions, which he pasted in and registered with his own hand.

The first attempt, however, to reprint a collection of ballads for a class of readers distinct from those for whose use the stall-copies were intended was that of an anonymous editor of three duodecimo volumes which appeared in London, with engravings. These volumes came out in various years, in the beginning of the eighteenth century. The editor writes with some flippancy, but with the air of a person superior to the ordinary drudgery of a mere collector. His work appears to have been got up at considerable expense, and the general introductions and historical illustrations which are prefixed to the various ballads are written with an accuracy of which such a subject had not till then been deemed worthy. The principal part of the collection consists of stall-ballads, neither possessing much poetical merit nor any particular rarity or curiosity. Still this original Miscellany holds a considerable value amongst collectors; and as the three volumes — being published at different times — are seldom found together, they sell for a high price when complete.

We may now turn our eyes to Scotland, where the facility of the dialect, which cuts off the consonants in the termination of the words, so as greatly to simplify the task of rhyming, and the habits, dispositions and manners of the people, were of old so favorable to the composition of ballad poetry that, had the Scottish songs been preserved, there is no doubt a very curious history might have been composed by means of minstrelsy only, from the reign of Alexander III. in 1255 down to the close of the Civil Wars in 1745. That materials for such a collection existed cannot be disputed, since the Scottish historians often refer to old ballads as authorities for general tradition. But their regular preservation was not to be hoped for or expected. Successive garlands of song sprung, flourished, faded, and were forgotten, in their turn; and the names of a few specimens are only preserved to show us how abundant the display of these wild flowers had been.

Like the natural free gifts of Flora, these poetical garlands can only be successfully sought for where the land is uncultivated; and civilization and increase of learning are sure to banish them, as the plough of the agriculturist bears down the mountain daisy. Yet it is to be recorded with some interest that the earliest surviving specimen of the Scottish press is a Miscellany of Myllar and Chepman, which preserves a considerable fund of Scottish popular poetry, and among other things, no had specimen of the gests of Robin Hoed, "the English ballad-maker's joy," and whose renown seems to have been as freshly preserved in the north as on the southern shores of the Tweed. There were probably several collections of Scottish ballads and metrical pieces during the seventeenth century. A very fine one, belonging to Lord Montagu,

1 A Collection of Old Ballads, collected from the best and most ancient Copies extant, with Introductions, Historical and Critical, illustrated with copperplates. This anonymous collection, first published in 1725, was so well received that it soon passed to a second edition, and two more volumes were added in 1728 and 1725. The third edition of the first volume is dated 1727.—Ed.

2 A facsimile reprint, in black letter, of the Original Tracts which issued from the press of Walter Chepman and Andro Myllar at Edinburgh, in the year 1568, was published under the title of The Knightly Tale of Galenurg and Gawane, and other Ancient Poems, in 1827, 4to. The "Hilil gesto" of Robin Hoed, referred to in the text, is a fragment of a piece contained in Ritson's Collection.—Ed.
perished in the fire which consumed Ditton House, about twenty years ago.

James Watson, in 1706, published at Edinburgh a miscellaneous collection in three parts, containing some ancient poetry. But the first editor who seems to have made a determined effort to preserve our ancient popular poetry was the well-known Allan Ramsay, in his Evergreen, containing chiefly extracts from the ancient Scottish Makers, whose poems have been preserved in the Bannatyne Manuscript, but exhibiting amongst them some popular ballads. Amongst these is the "Battle of Harlaw," apparently from a modernized copy, being probably the most ancient Scottish historical ballad of any length now in existence. He also inserted in the same collection the genuine Scottish Border ballad of "Johnnie Armstrong," copied from the recitation of a descendant of the unfortunate hero, in the sixth generation. This poet also included in the Evergreen "Hardyknute," which, though evidently modern, is a most spirited and beautiful imitation of the ancient ballad. In a subsequent collection of lyrical pieces, called the Tea-Table Miscellany, Allan Ramsay inserted several old ballads, such as "Cruel Barbara Allan," the "Bonnie Earl of Murray," "There came a Ghost to Margaret's door," and two or three others. But his unhappy plan of writing new words to old tunes, without at the same time preserving the ancient verses, led him, with the assistance of "some ingenious young gentlemen," to throw aside many originals the preservation of which would have been much more interesting than any thing which has been substituted in their stead.

In fine, the task of collecting and illustrating ancient popular poetry, whether in England or Scotland, was never executed by a competent person, possessing the necessary powers of selection and annotation, till it was undertaken by Dr. Percy, afterwards Bishop of Dromore in Ireland. This reverend gentleman, himself a poet, and ranking high among the literati of the day, commanding access to the individuals and institutions which could best afford him materials, gave the public the result of his researches in a work entitled Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, in three volumes, published in London 1765, which has since gone through four editions. The taste with which the materials were chosen, the extreme felicity with which they were illustrated, the display at once of antiquarian knowledge and classical reading which the collection indicated, render it difficult to imitate, and impossible to excel, a work which must always be held among the first of its class in point of merit, though not actually the foremost in point of time. But neither the high character of the work nor the rank and respectability of the author could protect him or his labors from the invidious attacks of criticism.

The most formidable of these were directed by Joseph Ritson, a man of acute observation, profound research, and great labor. These valuable attributes were unhappily combined with an eager irritability of temper which induced him to treat antiquarian trifles with the same seriousness which men of the world reserve for matters of importance, and disposed him to drive controversies into personal quarrels, by neglecting, in literary debate, the courtesy of ordinary society. It ought to be said, however, by one who knew him well, that this irritability of disposition was a constitutional and physical infirmity; and that Ritson's extreme attachment to the severity of truth corresponded to the rigor of his criticisms upon the labors of others. He seems to have attacked Bishop Percy with the greater animosity, as bearing no good will to the hierarchy in which that prelate held a distinguished place.

Ritson's criticism, in which there was too much horse-play, was grounded on two points of accusation. The first point regarded Dr. Percy's definition of the order and office of minstrels, which Ritson considered as designedly overcharged, for the sake of giving an undue importance to his subject. The second objection respected the liberties which Dr. Percy had taken with his materials, in adding to, retrenching, and improving them, so as to bring them nearer to the taste of his own period. We will take some brief notice of both topics.

First, Dr. Percy, in the first edition of his work, certainly laid himself open to the charge of having given an inaccurate and somewhat exaggerated account of the English minstrels, whom he defined to be an "order of men in the middle ages, who subsisted by the arts of poetry and music, and sung to the harp the verses which they themselves composed." The reverend editor of the Reliques produced in support of this definition many curious quotations, to show that in many instances the persons of these minstrels had been honored and respected, their performances applauded and rewarded by the great and the courtly, and their craft imitated by princes themselves.

Against both these propositions Ritson made a determined opposition. He contended, and probably with justice, that the minstrels were not necessarily poets, or in the regular habit of composing the verses which they sung to the harp; and, indeed, that the word minstrel, in its ordinary acceptation, meant no more than musician.

Dr. Percy, from an amended edition of his "Essay on Minstrelsy," prefixed to the fourth edition of the Reliques of Ancient Poetry, seems to have been, to a certain point, convinced by the critic's reasoning; for he has extended the definition impugned by Ritson, and the minstrels are thus described as singing verses "composed by themselves or others." This we

1 See Appendix, Note A.
2 See Appendix, Note B.
3 Sir Walter Scott corresponded frequently with the Bishop of Dromore, at the time when he was collecting the materials of the Border Minstrelsy.—Ed.
4 See Appendix, Note C.
apprehend to be a tenable position; for, as on the one hand it seems too broad an averment to say that all minstrels were by profession poets, so, on the other, it is extravagant to affirm that men who were constantly in the habit of reciting verse should not frequently have acquired that of composing it, especially when their bread depended on giving pleasure; and to have the power of producing novelty is a great step towards that desirable end. No unprejudiced reader, therefore, can have any hesitation in adopting Bishop Percy's definition of the minstrels and their occupation, as qualified in the fourth edition of his Essay, implying that they were sometimes poets, sometimes the mere reciters of the poetry of others.

On the critic's second proposition, Dr. Percy successfully showed that at no period of history was the word minstrel applied to instrumental music exclusively; and he has produced sufficient evidence that the talents of the profession were as frequently employed in chanting or reciting poetry as in playing the mere tunes. There is appearance of distinction being sometimes made between minstrel recitations and minstrelsy of music alone; and we may add a curious instance to those quoted by the Bishop. It is from the singular ballad respecting Thomas of Ercildoune, which announces the proposition that tongue is chief of minstrelsy.

We may also notice that the word minstrel, being in fact derived from the Mininé-singer of the Germans, means, in its primary sense, one who sings of love, a sense totally inapplicable to a mere instrumental musician.

A second general point on which Dr. Percy was fiercely attacked by Mr. Ritson was also one on which both the parties might claim a right to sing Te Deum. It respected the rank or status which was held by the minstrels in society during the middle ages. On this point the editor of the Reliques of Ancient Poetry had produced the most satisfactory evidence that, at the courts of the Anglo-Norman princes, the professors of the gay science were the favorite solace of the leisure hours of princes, who did not themselves disdain to share their tuneful labors and imitate their compositions. Mr. Ritson replied to this with great ingenuity, arguing that such instances of respect paid to French minstrels reciting in their native language in the court of Norman monarchs, though held in Britain, argued nothing in favor of English artists professing the same trade, and of whose compositions, and not of those existing in the French language, Dr. Percy professed to form his collection. The reason of

---
2 That monarch first used the vernacular English dialect in a motto which he displayed on his shield at a celebrated tournament. The legend which graced the representation of a white swan on the king's buckler ran thus:—

"Ha! ha! the whyte swan! By God's soule I am thy man."

---
3 The learned editor of Warton's History of English Poetry is of opinion that Sir Walter Scott misinterpreted the passage referred to. De Brunne, according to this author's text, says of the elder reciters of the metrical romance,

"They said it for pride and noblere,
That non were souk as they;"

i.e., they recited it in a style so lofty and noble that none have since equalled them.—Warton, edit. 1824, vol. I. p. 183.—Ed.
the poetical exercises of the Duke of Orleans, in English, written during his captivity after the battle of Agincourt. It could not be supposed that the noble prisoner was to solace his hours of imprisonment with a degrading and vulgar species of composition.

We could produce other instances to show that this acute critic has carried his argument considerably too far. But we prefer taking a general view of the subject, which seems to explain clearly how contradictory evidence should exist on it, and why instances of great personal respect to individual minstrels, and a high esteem of the art, are quite reconcilable with much contempt thrown on the order at large.

All professors of the fine arts—all those who contribute, not to the necessities of life, but to the enjoyments of society—hold their professional respectability by the severe tenure of exhibiting excellence in their department. We are well enough satisfied with the tradesman who goes through his task in a workmanlike manner, nor are we disposed to look down upon the divine, the lawyer, or the physician, unless they display gross ignorance of their profession; we hold it enough that if they do not possess the highest knowledge of their respective sciences, they can at least instruct us on the points we desire to know. But

—— “mediocribus esse poetae
Non di, non homines, non concessere columnae.”

The same is true respecting the professors of painting, of sculpture, of music, and the fine arts in general. If they exhibit paramount excellence, no situation in society is too high for them which their manners enable them to fill; if they fall short of the highest point of aim, they degenerate into sign-painters, stonecutters, common crowders, doggerel rhymers, and so forth, the most contemptible of mankind. The reason of this is evident. Men must be satisfied with such a supply of their actual wants as can be obtained in the circumstances, and should an individual want a coat, he must employ the village tailor, if Stultze is not to be had. But if he seeks for delight, the case is quite different; and he that cannot hear Pasta or Sontag would be little solaced for the absence of these sirens by the strains of a crack-voiced ballad-singer. Nay, on the contrary, the offer of such inadequate compensation would only be regarded as an insult, and resented accordingly.

The theatre affords the most appropriate example of what we mean. The first circles in society are open to persons eminently distinguished in the drama; and their rewards are, in proportion to those who profess the useful arts, incalculably higher. But those who lag in the rear of the dramatic art are proportionally poorer and more degraded than those who are the lowest of a useful trade or profession. These instances will enable us readily to explain why the greater part of the minstrels, practicing their profession in scenes of vulgar mirth and debauchey, humbling their art to please the ears of drunken clowns, and living with the dissipation natural to men whose precarious subsistence is, according to the ordinary phrase, from hand to mouth only, should fall under general contempt, while the stars of the profession, to use a modern phrase, looked down on them from the distant empyrean, as the planets do upon those shooting exhalations arising from gross vapors in the nether atmosphere.

The debate, therefore, resembles the apologue of the gold and silver shield. Dr. Percy looked on the minstrel in the palmy and exalted state to which, no doubt, many were elevated by their talents, like those who possess excellence in the fine arts in the present day; and Ritson considered the reverse of the medal, when the poor and wandering glee-man was glad to purchase his bread by singing his ballads at the ale-house, wearing a fantastic habit, and latterly sinking into a mere crowder upon an untuned fiddle, accompanying his rude strains with a ruder ditty, the helpless associate of drunken revellers, and marvellously afraid of the constable and parish beadle. The difference betwixt those holding the extreme positions of highest and lowest in such a profession cannot surely be more marked than that which separated David Garrick or John Kemble from the outcasts of a strolling company, exposed to penury, indignence, and persecution according to law.3

There was still another and more important subject of debate between Dr. Percy and his hostile critic. The former, as a poet and a man of taste, was tempted to take such freedoms with his original ballads as might enable him to please a more critical age than that in which they were composed. Words were thus altered, phrases improved, and whole verses were inserted or omitted at pleasure. Such freedoms were especially taken with the poems published from a folio manuscript in Dr. Percy’s own possession, very curious from the miscellaneous nature of its contents, but unfortunately having many of the leaves mutilated and injured in other respects by the gross carelessness and ignorance of the transcriber. Anxious to avail himself of the treasures which this manuscript contained, the editor of the Reliques did not hesitate to repair and renovate the songs which he drew from this corrupted yet curious source, and to accommodate them with such emendations as might recommend them to the modern taste.

For these liberties with his subject Ritson censured Dr. Percy in the most uncompromising terms, accused him, in violent language, of interpolation and forgery, and insinuated that there existed no such thing in rerum natura as that folio manuscript, so often referred to as the authority of originals inserted in the Reliques. In this charge the eagerness of Ritson again betrayed

1 See the edition printed by Mr. Watson Taylor for the Roxburghe Club.

2 See Appendix, Note D.

3 See Appendix, Note E.
him farther than judgment and discretion, as well as courtesy, warranted. It is no doubt highly desirable that the text of ancient poetry should be given untouche and uncorrupted. But this is a point which did not occur to the editor of the Reliques in 1765, whose object it was to win the favor of the public, at a period when the great difficulty was not how to secure the very words of old ballads, but how to arrest attention upon the subject at all. That great and important service to national literature would probably never have been attained without the work of Dr. Percy; a work which first fixed the consideration of general readers on ancient poetry, and made it worth while to inquire how far its graces were really antique, or how far derived from the taste with which the publication had been superintended and revised. The object of Dr. Percy was certainly intimated in several parts of his work, where he ingeniously acknowledges that certain ballads have received emendations, and that others are not of pure and unmixed antiquity; that the beginning of some and end of others have been supplied; and upon the whole, that he has, in many instances, decorated the ancient ballads with the graces of a more refined period.

This system is so distinctly intimated that if there be any critic still of opinion, like poor Ritson, whose morbid temperament led him to such a conclusion, that the crime of literary imitation is equal to that of commercial forgery, he ought to recollect that guilt, in the latter case, does not exist without a corresponding charge of uttering the forged document, or causing it to be uttered, as genuine, without which the mere imitation is not culpable, at least not criminally so. This quality is totally wanting in the accusation so roughly brought against Dr. Percy, who avowedly indulged in such alterations and improvements upon his materials as might adapt them to the taste of an age not otherwise disposed to bestow its attention upon them.

We have to add that, in the fourth edition of the Reliques, Mr. Thomas Percy of St. John's College, Oxford, pleading the cause of his uncle with the most gentlemanlike moderation, and with every respect to Mr. Ritson's science and talents, has combated the critic's opinion, without any attempt to retort his injurious language.

It would be now, no doubt, desirable to have had some more distinct account of Dr. Percy's folio manuscript and its contents; and Mr. Thomas Percy, accordingly, gives the original of the "Marriage of Sir Gawain," and collates it with the copy published in a complete state by his uncle, who has on this occasion given entire rein to his own fancy, though the rude origin of most of his ideas is to be found in the old ballad. There is also given a copy of that elegant metrical tale, the "Child of Elle," as it exists in the folio manuscript, which goes far to show it has derived all its beauties from Dr. Percy's poetical powers.

Judging from these two specimens, we can easily conceive why the reverend editor of the Reliques should have declined, by the production of the folio manuscript, to furnish his severe Aristarch with weapons against him which he was sure would be unsparingly used. Yet it is certain the manuscript contains much that is really excellent, though mutilated and sophisticated. A copy of the fine ballad of "Sir Caulin" is found in a Scottish shape, under the name of "King Malcolm and Sir Colvin," in Buchan's North Country Ballads, to be presently mentioned. It is, therefore, unquestionably ancient, though possibly retouched, and perhaps with the addition of a second part, of which the Scottish copy has no vestiges. It would be desirable to know exactly to what extent Dr. Percy had used the license of an editor, in these and other cases; and certainly, at this period, would be only a degree of justice due to his memory.

On the whole, we may dismiss the Reliques of Ancient Poetry with the praise and censure conferred on it by a gentleman, himself a valuable laborer in the vineyard of antiquities:—"It is the most elegant compilation of the early poetry that has ever appeared in any age or country. But it must be frankly added that so numerous are the alterations and corrections that the severe antiquary, who desires to see the old English ballads in a genuine state, must consult a more accurate edition than this celebrated work."1

Of Ritson's own talents as an editor of ancient poetry we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. The first collector who followed the example of Dr. Percy was Mr. T. Evans, bookseller, father of the gentleman we have just quoted. His Old Ballads, Historical and Narrative, with some of Modern Date, appeared in two volumes, in 1777, and were eminently successful. In 1784 a second edition appeared, extending the work to four volumes. In this collection many ballads found acceptance which Bishop Percy had not considered as possessing sufficient merit to claim admittance into the Reliques. The octavo miscellany of 1723 yielded a great part of the materials. The collection of Evans contained several modern pieces of great merit, which are not to be found elsewhere, and which are understood to be the productions of William Julius Mickle, translator of the Lusiad, though they were never claimed by him, nor received among his works. Amongst them is the elegiac poem of "Cumnor Hall," which suggested the fictitious narrative entitled "Kenilworth," The "Red-Cross Knight," also by Mickle, which has furnished words for a beautiful glee, first occurred in the same collection. As Mickle, with a vein of great facility, united a power of verbal melody which might have been envied by bards of much greater renown,2 he must be considered as very successful in these efforts, if the ballads be regarded as avowedly modern. If they are to be judged of as accurate imitations of ancient poetry, they have less merit; the deception being only maintained by a huge store of double consonants, strewn at random into ordinary words, resembling the real fashion of antiquity as little as the niches, turrets, and tracery of plaster stuck upon a modern front. In the year 1810, the four volumes of 1784 were republished by Mr. R. H. Evans, the son of the original editor, with very considerable alterations and additions. In this last edition the more ordinary modern ballads were judiciously retrenched in number, and large and valuable additions made to the ancient part of the collection. Being in some measure a supplement to the Reliques of Ancient Poetry, this miscellany cannot be dispensed with on the shelves of any bibliomaniac who may choose to emulate Captain Cox of Coventry, the prototype of all collectors of popular poetry.

---

1 Introduction to Evans's Ballads, 1810. New edition, enlarged, &c.

2 See Appendix, Note F.

While Dr. Percy was setting the example of a classical publication of ancient English poetry, the late David Herd was, in modest retirement, compiling a collection of Scottish Songs, which he has happily described as “the poetry and music of the heart.” The first part of his miscellany contains heroic and historical ballads, of which there is a respectable and well-chosen selection. Mr. Herd,1 an accountant, as the profession is called in Edinburgh, was known and generally esteemed for his shrewd, mainly common sense and antiquarian science, mixed with much good nature and great modesty. His Hardy and antique mould of countenance, and his venerable grizzled locks, procured him, amongst his acquaintance, the name of Greysteil. His original collection of songs, in one volume, appeared in 1769; an enlarged one, in two volumes, came out in 1776. A publication of the same kind, being Herd’s book still more enlarged, was printed for Lawrie & Symington in 1791. Some modern additions occur in this latter work, of which by far the most valuable were two fine imitations of the Scottish ballad by the gifted author of the “Man of Feeling” (now, alas! no more), called “Dunean” and “Kenneth.”

John Pinkerton, a man of considerable learning, and some severity as well as acuteness of disposition, was now endeavoring to force himself into public attention; and his collection of Select Ballads, London, 1753, contains sufficient evidence that he understood, in an extensive sense, Horace’s maxim, quidlibet audendi. As he was possessed of considerable powers of poetry, though not equal to what he was willing to take credit for, he was resolved to enrich his collection with all the novelty and interest which it could derive from a liberal insertion of pieces dressed in the garb of antiquity, but equipped from the wardrobe of the editor’s imagination. With a boldness suggested perhaps by the success of Mr. Macpherson, he included, within a collection amounting to only twenty-one tragic ballads, no less than five of which he afterwards owned himself to have been altogether, or in great part, the author. The most remarkable article in this miscellany was a second part to the noble ballad of “Hardyknute,” which has some good verses. It labors, however, under this great defect, that, in order to append his own conclusion to the original tale, Mr. Pinkerton found himself under the necessity of altering a leading circumstance in the old ballad, which would have rendered his catastrophe inapplicable. With such license, to write continuations and conclusions would be no difficult task. In the second volume of the Select Ballads, consisting of comic pieces, a list of fifty-two articles contained nine written entirely by the editor himself. Of the manner in which these supposititious compositions are executed, it may be briefly stated that they are the work of a scholar much better acquainted with ancient books and manuscripts than with oral tradition and popular legends. The poetry smells of the lamp; and it may be truly said that if ever a ballad had existed in such quaint language as the author employs, it could never have been so popular as to be preserved by oral tradition. The glossary displays a much greater acquaintance with learned lexicons than with the familiar dialect still spoken by the Lowland Scottish, and it is, of course, full of errors.2 Neither was Mr. Pinkerton more happy in the way of conjectural illustration. He chose to fix on Sir John Bruce of Kinnoull the paternity of the ballad of “Hardyknute,” and of the fine poem called the “Vision.” The first is due to Mrs. Halket of Wardlaw, the second to Allan Ramsay, although, it must be owned, it is of a character superior to his ordinary poetry. Sir John Bruce was a brave, blunt soldier, who made no pretense whatever to literature, though his daughter, Mrs. Bruce of Arnott, had much talent, a circumstance which may perhaps have misled the antiquary.

1 David Herd was a native of St. Cyrus, in Kincardineshire, and though often termed a writer, he was only a clerk in the office of Mr. David Russell, accountant in Edinburgh. He died, aged seventy-eight, in 1810, and left a very curious library, which was dispersed by auction. Herd by no means

Mr. Pinkerton read a sort of recantation, in a List of Scottish Poets, prefixed to a Selection of Poems from the Maitland Manuscript, vol. i., 1786, in which he acknowledges as his own composition the pieces of spurious antiquity included in his Select Ballads with a coolness which, when his subsequent invective against others who had taken similar liberties is considered, infers as much audacity as the studied and labored defence of obscenity with which he disregarded the same pages.

In the meantime, Joseph Ritson, a man of diligence and acumen equal to those of Pinkerton, but of the most laudable accuracy and fidelity as an editor, was engaged in various publications respecting poetical merited the character, given him by Pinkerton, of “an illiterate and injudicious compiler.”—Ed.

2 Banteras, for example, a word generally applied to the men on a harvest field who bind the sheaves, is derived from ban, to curse, and explained to mean “blustering, swearing fellows.”
INTRODUCTORY REMARKS ON POPULAR POETRY.

antiquities, in which he employed profound research. A select collection of English songs was compiled by him, with great care and considerable taste, and published at London, 1783. A new edition of this has appeared since Ritson's death, sanctioned by the name of the learned and indefatigable antiquary, Thomas Park, and augmented with many original pieces, and some which Ritson had prepared for publication.

Ritson's collection of songs was followed by a curious volume, entitled Ancient Songs from the time of Henry III. to the Revolution, 1790; Pieces of Ancient Popular Poetry, 1792; and A Collection of Scottish Songs, with the genuine music, London, 1794. This last is a genuine but rather meagre collection of Caledonian popular songs. Next year Mr. Ritson published Robin Hood, 2 vols., 1795, being "A Collection of all the Ancient Poems, Songs, and Ballads now extant, relative to that celebrated Outlaw." This work is a notable illustration of the excellencies and defects of Mr. Ritson's system. It is almost impossible to conceive so much zeal, research, and industry bestowed on a subject of antiquity. There scarcely occurs a phrase or word relating to Robin Hood, whether in history or poetry, in law books, in ancient proverbs, or common parlance, but it is here collected and explained. At the same time, the extreme fidelity of the editor seems driven to excess, when we find him pertinaciously retaining all the numerous and gross errors which repeated recitations have introduced into the text, and regarding it as a sacred duty to prefer the worst to the better readings, as if their inferiority was a security for their being genuine. In short, when Ritson copied from rare books or ancient manuscripts, there could not be a more accurate editor; when taking his authority from oral tradition, and judging between two recited copies, he was apt to consider the worst as most genuine, as if a poem was not more likely to be deteriorated than improved by passing through the mouths of many reciters. In the ballads of Robin Hood, this superstitious scrupulosity was especially to be regretted, as it tended to enlarge the collection with a great number of doggerel compositions, which are all copies of each other, turning on the same idea of Bold Robin meeting with a shepherd, a tinker, a mendicant, a tanner, &c. &c., by each and all of whom he is soundly thrashed, and all of whom he receives into his band. The tradition, which avers that it was the brave outlaw's custom to try a hont at quarter-staff with his young recruits, might indeed have authorized one or two such tales, but the greater part ought to have been rejected as modern imitations of the most paltry kind, composed probably about the age of James I. of England. By adopting this spurious trash as part of Robin Hood's history, he is represented as the best cudgelled hero, Don Quixote excepted, that ever was celebrated in prose or rhyme. Ritson also published several garlands of North Country songs.

Looking on this eminent antiquary's labors in a general point of view, we may deprecate the eagerness and severity of his prejudices, and feel surprise that he should have shown so much irritability of disposition on such a topic as a collection of old ballads, which certainly have little in them to affect the passions; and we may be sometimes provoked at the pertinacity with which he has preferred bad readings to good. But while industry, research, and antiquarian learning, are recommendations to works of this nature, few editors will ever be found so competent to the task as Joseph Ritson. It must also be added to his praise that, although not willing to yield his opinion rashly, yet if he saw reason to believe that he had been mistaken in any fact or argument, he resigned his own opinion with a candor equal to the warmth with which he defended himself while confident he was in the right. Many of his works are now almost out of print, and an edition of them in common orthography, and altering the bizarre spelling and character which his prejudices induced the author to adopt, would be, to antiquaries, an acceptable present.

We have now given a hasty account of various collections of popular poetry during the eighteenth century; we have only further to observe that, in the present century, this species of lore has been sedulously cultivated. The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border first appeared in 1802, in two volumes; and what may appear a singular coincidence, it was the first work printed by Mr. James Ballantyne (then residing at Kelso), as it was the first serious demand which the present author made on the patience of the public. The Border Minstrelsy, augmented by a third volume, came to a second edition in 1803. In 1803, Mr., now Sir John Grahame Dalzell, to whom his country is obliged for his antiquarian labors, published Scottish Poems of the Sixteenth Century, which, among other subjects of interest, contains a curious contemporary ballad of Belrinnes, which has some stanzas of considerable merit.1

The year 1806 was distinguished by the appearance of Popular Ballads and Songs, from Traditions, Manuscripts, and Scarce Editions, with Translations of Similar Pieces from the Ancient Danish Language, and a few Originals by the Editor, Robert Jamieson, A. M. and F. A. S.2 This work, which was not greeted by the public with the attention it deserved, opened a new discovery respecting the original source of the Scottish ballads. Mr. Jamieson's extensive acquaintance with the Scandinavian literature enabled him to detect not only a general similarity betwixt these and

---

1 The first opening of the ballad has much of the martial strain with which a piobroch commences. Proserpina medias res—according to the classical admonition.

2 MacCallummore came from the west With many a bow and brand;

To waste the Rinnes he thought it best, The Earl of Huntly's land."
the Danish ballads preserved in the Kampe Viser, an early collection of heroic ballads in that language, but to demonstrate that, in many cases, the stories and songs were distinctly the same, a circumstance which no antiquary had hitherto so much as suspected. Mr. Jamieson’s annotations are also very valuable, and preserve some curious illustrations of the old poets. His imitations, though he is not entirely free from the affectation of using rather too many obsolete words, are generally highly interesting. The work fills an important place in the collection of those who are addicted to this branch of antiquarian study.

Mr. John Finlay, a poet whose career was cut short by a premature death, published a short catalogue of Scottish Historical and Romantic Ballads in 1808. The beauty of some imitations of the old Scottish ballad, with the good sense, learning, and modesty of the preliminary dissertations, must make all admirers of ancient lore regret the early loss of this accomplished young man.

Various valuable collections of ancient ballad-poetry have appeared of late years, some of which are illustrated with learning and acuteness, as those of Mr. Motherwell and of Mr. Kinloch intimate much taste and feeling for this species of literature. Nor is there any want of editions of ballads, less designed for public sale than to preserve floating pieces of minstrelsy which are in immediate danger of perishing. Several of those, edited, as we have occasion to know, by men of distinguished talent, have appeared in a smaller form and more limited edition, and must soon be among the introuvable of Scottish typography. We would particularize a duodecimo, under the modest title of a Ballad Book, without place or date annexed, which indicates, by a few notes only, the capacity which the editor possesses for supplying the most extensive and ingenious illustrations upon antiquarian subjects. Most of the ballads are of a comic character, and some of them admirable specimens of Scottish dry humor. Another collection, which calls for particular distinction, is in the same size, or nearly so, and bears the same title with the preceding one, the date being Edinburgh, 1827. But the contents are announced as containing the budget, or stock-in-trade, of an old Aberdeenshire minstrel, the very last, probably, of the race, who, according to Percy’s definition of the profession, sung his own compositions, and those of others, through the capital of the county, and other towns in that country of gentlemen. This man’s name was Charles Leslie, but he was known more generally by the nickname of Mussel-mou’d Charlie, from a singular projection of his upper lip. His death was thus announced in the newspapers for October, 1792:—“Died at Old Rain, in Aberdeenshire, aged one hundred and four years, Charles Leslie, a hawkers or ballad-singer, well known in that country by the name of Mussel-mou’d Charlie. He followed his occupation until within a few weeks of his death.” Charlie was a devoted Jacobite, and so popular in Aberdeen that he enjoyed in that city a sort of monopoly of the minstrel calling, no other person being allowed, under any pretence, to chant ballads on the causeway, or plain-stanes, of “the brave burgh.” Like the former collection, most of Mussel-mou’d Charlie’s songs were of a jocose character.

But the most extensive and valuable additions which have been of late made to this branch of ancient literature are the collections of Mr. Peter Buchan of Peterhead, a person of indefatigable research in that department, and whose industry has been crowned with the most successful results. This is partly owing to the country where Mr. Buchan resides, which, full as it is of minstrel relics, has been but little ransacked by any former collectors; so that, while it is a very rare event south of the Tay to recover any ballad having a claim to antiquity which has not been examined and republished in some one or other of our collections of ancient poetry, those of Aberdeenshire have been comparatively little attended to. The present editor was the first to solicit attention to these northern songs, in consequence of a collection of ballads communicated to him by his late respected friend, Lord Woodhouselee. Mr. Jamieson, in his collections of Songs and Ballads, being himself a native of Moray-shire, was able to push this inquiry much farther, and at the same time, by doing so, to illustrate his theory of the connection between the ancient Scottish and Danish ballads, upon which the publication of Mr. Buchan throws much light. It is, a list of desiderata in Scottish Song. His communication to the editor of that work contains the following paragraph:—

“I am now writing out for the press a Collection of Popular Ballads and Songs from tradition, Mss, and scarce publications, with a few of modern date which have been written for and are exclusively dedicated to my collection. As many of the pieces were common property, I have heretofore waited for the completion of Mr. Walter Scott’s work, with more anxiety for the cause in general than for any particular and selfish interest of my own; as I was sure of having the satisfaction of seeing such pieces as that gentleman might choose to adopt appear with every advantage which I, partial as I was, could wish them. The most sanguine expectations of the public have now been amply gratified; and much curious and valuable matter is still left for me by Mr. Scott, to whom I am much indebted for many acts of friendship, and much liberality and good will shown towards me and my undertaking.”—Ed.

1 Mr. Finlay, best known by his Wallace, or the Vale of Es- terlaid, died in 1810, in his twenty-eighth year. An affect­ionate and elegant tribute to his memory, from the pen of Professor Wilson, appeared in Blackwood’s Magazine, November, 1817.—Ed.

2 Minstrelsy, Ancient and Modern, with an Historical Intro­duction and Notes. By William Motherwell. 4to, Glasg. 1827.

3 Ancient Scottish Ballads, recovered from Tradition, and never before published; with Notes, Historical and Explanatory, and an Appendix, containing the Airs of several of the Ballads. 8vo, Edin. 1827.

4 This is Mr. C. K. Sharpe’s work, already alluded to.—En.
indeed, the most complete collection of the kind which has yet appeared.\(^1\)

Of the originality of the ballads in Mr. Buchan's collection we do not entertain the slightest doubt. Several (we may instance the curious tale of the "Two Magicians") are translated from the Norse, and Mr. Buchan is probably unacquainted with the originals. Others refer to points of history with which the editor does not seem to be familiar. It is out of no disrespect to this laborious and useful antiquary that we observe his prose composition is rather florid, and forms, in this respect, a strong contrast to the extreme simplicity of the ballads, which gives us the most distinct assurance that he has delivered the latter to the public in the shape in which he found them. Accordingly, we have never seen any collection of Scottish poetry appearing, from internal evidence, so decidedly and indubitably original. It is perhaps a pity that Mr. Buchan did not remove some obvious errors and corruptions; but, in truth, though their remaining on record is an injury to the effect of the ballads, in point of composition it is, in some degree, a proof of their authenticity. Besides, although the exertion of this editorial privilege of selecting readings is an advantage to the ballads themselves, we are contended rather to take the whole in their present though imperfect state than that the least doubt should be thrown upon them by amendments or alterations which might render their authenticity doubtful. The historical poems, we observe, are few and of no remote date. That of the "Bridge of Dee" is among the oldest, and there are others referring to the times of the Covenanters. Some, indeed, are composed on still more recent events; as the marriage of the mother of the illustrious Byron,\(^2\) and a catastrophe of still later occurrence, the "Death of Leith Hall."

As we wish to interest the admirers of ancient minstrel lore in this curious collection, we shall only add that, on occasion of a new edition, we would recommend to Mr. Buchan to leave out a number of songs which he has only inserted because they are varied, sometimes for the worse, from sets which have appeared in other publications. This restriction would make considerable room for such as, old though they be, possess to this age all the grace of novelty.

To these notices of late collections of Scottish ballads, we ought to add some remarks on the very curious Ancient Legendary Tales, printed chiefly from Original Sources, edited by the Rev. Charles Henry Hartshorne, M.A., 1829. The editor of this unostentations work has done his duty to the public with much labor and care, and made the admirers of this species of poetry acquainted with very many ancient legendary poems, which were hitherto unpublished and very little known. It increases the value of the collection, that many of them are of a comic turn, a species of composition more rare, and, from its necessary allusion to domestic manners, more curious and interesting, than the serious class of romances.

——

We have thus, in a cursory manner, gone through the history of English and Scottish popular poetry, and noticed the principal collections which have been formed from time to time of such compositions, and the principles on which the editors have proceeded. It is manifest that, of late, the public attention has been so much turned to the subject by men of research and talent that we may well hope to retrieve from oblivion as much of our ancient poetry as there is now any possibility of recovering.

Another important part of our task consists in giving some account of the modern imitation of the English ballad, a species of literary labor which the author has himself pursued with some success.

ABBOTSFORD, 1st March, 1830.

---

2 This song is quoted in Moore's Life of Byron, vol. i.—ED.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

THE BATTLE OF HARLAW.—P. 544.

That there was such an ancient ballad is certain, and the tune, adapted to the bagpipes, was long extremely popular, and, within the remembrance of man, the first which was played at Burns and other rustic festivals. But there is a suspicious phrase in the ballad as it is published by Allan Ramsay. When describing the national confusion, the bard says,

"Sen the days of auld King Harrie,
Such slaughter was not heard or seen."

Query, Who was the "auld King Harrie" here meant? If Henry VIII. be intended, as is most likely, it must bring the date of the poem, at least of that verse, as low as Queen Mary's time. The ballad is said to have been printed in 1668. A copy of that edition would be a great curiosity.

See the preface to the reprint of this ballad, in the volume of Early Metrical Tales, ante referred to.

NOTE B.

ALLAN RAMSAY'S "EVERGREEN."—P. 544.

Green be the pillow of honest Allan, at whose lamp Burns lighted his brilliant torch! It is without enmity to his memory that we record his mistake in this matter; but it is impossible not to regret that such an affecting tale as that of Bessie Bell and Mary Gray should have fallen into his hands. The southern reader must learn (for what northern reader is ignorant?) that these two beautiful women were kinsfolk, and so strictly united in friendship that even personal jealousy could not interrupt their union. They were visited by a handsome and agreeable young man, who was acceptable to them both, but so captivated with their charms, that, while confident of a preference on the part of both, he was unable to make a choice between them. While this singular situation of the three persons of the tale continued, the breaking out of the plague forced the two ladies to take refuge in the beautiful valley of Lynedoch, where they built themselves a bower, in order to avoid human intercourse and the danger of infection. The lover was not included in their renunciation of society. He visited their retirement, brought with him the fatal disease, and unable to return to Perth, which was his usual residence, was nursed by the fair friends with all the tenderness of affection. He died, however, having first communicated the infection to his lovely attendants. They followed him to the grave, lovely in their lives, and undivided in their death. Their burial-place, in the vicinity of the bower which they built, is still visible, in the romantic vicinity of Lord Lyndoch's mansion, and prolongs the memory of female friendship which even rivalry could not dissolve.

Two stanzas of the original ballad alone survive:—

"Bessie Bell and Mary Gray,
They were two bonnie lasses;
They bigged a bower on yon burn brae,
And thek it ower wil' rashes.

"They wadna rest in Methvin kirk,
Among their gentle kin;
But they wad lie in Lednoch brae,
To biek against the sun."

There is, to a Scottish ear, so much tenderness and simplicity in these verses as must induce us to regret that the rest should have been superseded by a pedantic modern song, turning upon the most unpoetic part of the legend, the hesitation, namely, of the lover which of the ladies to prefer. One of the most touching expressions in the song is the following exclamation:—

"Oh, Jove! she's like thy Pallas."

Another song, of which Ramsay chose a few words for the theme of a Rifacimento, seems to have been a curious specimen of minstrel recitation. It was partly verse, partly narrative, and was alternately sung and repeated. The story was the escape of a young gentleman, pursued by a cruel uncle, desirous of his estate; or a bloody rival, greedy of his life; or the relentless father of his lady-love, or some such remorseless character, having sinister intentions on the person of the fugitive. The object of his rapacity or vengeance being nearly overtaken, a shepherd undertakes to mislead the pursuer, who comes in sight just as the object of his pursuit disappears, and greets the shepherd thus:—

"Pursuer.

Good morrow, shepherd, and my friend,
Saw you a young man this way riding;
With long black hair, on a bab-tail'd mare,
And I know that I cannot be far behind him?

THE SHEPHERD.

Yes, I did see him this way riding,
And what did much surprise my wit,
The man and the mare flew up in the air,
And I see, and I see, and I see her yet.
Behind you white cloud I see her tail wave,
And I see, and I see, and I see her yet."

The tune of these verses is an extremely good one, and Allan Ramsay has adapted a baa-chalian song to it with some success; but we should have thanked him much had he taken the trouble to preserve the original legend of the old minstrel. The valuable and learned friend to whom we owe this mutilated account of it has often heard it sung among the High Jinks of Scottish lawyers of the last generation.

NOTE C.

JOSEPH RITSON.

— "neglecting, in literary debate, the courtesies of ordinary society."—P. 544.

For example, in quoting a popular song, well known by the name of "Maggie Lauder," the editor of the Reliques had given a line of the Dame’s address to the merry minstrel, thus:

"Gin ye be Rob, I’ve heard of you,
You dwell upon the Border."

Ritson insisted the genuine reading was,

"Come ye frae the Border?"

and he expatiates with great keenness on the crime of the Bishops having sophisticated the text (of which he produces no evidence) to favor his opinion that the Borders were a favorite abode of the minstrels of both kingdoms. The fact, it is believed, is undoubted, and the one reading seems to support it as well as the other.—[Joseph Ritson died in 1863.]

NOTE D.

"A MERE CROWDER UPON AN UNTUNED FIDDLE."—P. 546.

In Fletcher’s comedy of Monsieur Thomas, such a fiddler is questioned as to the ballads he is best versed in, and replies,

"Under your mastership’s correction I can sing
‘The Duke of Norfolk,’ or the merry ballad
Of ‘Diivis and Lazarus,’ ‘The Rose of England,’
‘In Crete, where Dedimus first began;’
‘Jonas his crying out against Coventry.’

Thomas. Excellent!

Rare matters all.

Fiddler. ‘Mawdlin the Merchant’s Daughter;’
‘The Devil and ye Dainty Dames.’

Thomas. Rare still.

Fiddler. ‘The Landing of the Spaniards at Bow,
With the bloody battle at Miffe-end.’"

The poor minstrel is described as accompanying the young rake in his revels. Launcelot describes

"The gentleman himself, young Monsieur Thomas,
Errant with his furious myrmidons;
The fiery fiddler and myself—now singing,
Now beating at the doors," &c.

NOTE E.

MINSTRELS.—P. 546.

The “Song of the Traveller,” an ancient piece lately discovered in the Cathedral Library of Exeter, and published by the Rev. Mr. Conybear, in his Illustrations of Anglo-Saxon Poetry (1826), furnishes a most curious picture of the life of the Northern Scald or minstrel, in the high and palmy state of the profession. The reverend editor thus translates the closing lines:

"Ille est carissimus Terrae incolis
Cui Deus addidit Honominim imperium gerendum,
Quam ille eos [bardos] habeat caros.
Ita concantes cum cantilenis furantur
Eardi hominum per terras multas;
Simul eos remuneratur ob cantilenas pulchras,
Muneribus immenis, ille qui ante nobles
Vult judicium suum extollere, dignitatem sustinere.
Habet ille sub celo stabilim famam."—P. 22.

Mr. Conybear contrasts this “flattering picture” with the following “melancholy specimen” of the minstrel life of later times, contained in some verses by Richard Shake (the alleged author of the old” Chevy Chase”) which are preserved in one of the Ashmolean MSS.:

"Now for the good cheere that I have hadd here,
I give you heartly thanks with bowing of my shanks,
Desiring you by petition to grant me such commissi—
Because my name is Shake, that both for meat and muckle,
To you I may resort sumyme for my confortie.
For I perceive here at all tymes is good cheere,
Both ale, wyne, and beere, as hyt doth now appere,
I perceive without fable ye kepe a good table.
I can be contente, if hyt be out of Lent,
A piece of beeve to take my honger to asake,
Both mutton and veale is good for Rychards Shake;
Though I looke so grave, I was a veri knave,
If I wolde think skorne ether evenyng or morne,
Beyng in honger, of fresche samon or kongar,
I can fynde in my hearte, with my frendis to take a parte
Of such as Godde shal sende, and thus I make an ende.
Now farewel, good myn Ioste, I thank yone for youre coste
Untyl another tymes, and therfore do I ende my ryme."—P. 28.

NOTE F.

WILLIAM JULIUS MICKLE.—P. 547.

In evidence of what is stated in the text, the author would quote the introductory stanza to a forgotten poem of Mickle, originally published under the injudicious and equivocal title of “The Concubine,” but in subsequent editions called “Sir Martyn, or the Progress of Dissipation”:

"Awake, ye west winds, through the lonely dale,
And, Fancy, to thy airy bower betake,
Even now with balmy sweetness breathes the gale,
Dimpling with downy wing the stilly lake;
Through the pale willows faltering whispers wake,
And evening comes with locks bedropp’d with dew;
On Desmond’s mouldering turrets slowly shake
The wither’d ryegrass, and the hairbell blue,
And ever and anon sweet Mollia’s plaints renew."}

Mickle’s facility of versification was so great that, being a printer by profession, he frequently put his lines into types without taking the trouble previously to put them into writing; thus uniting the composition of the author with the mechanical operation which typographers call by the same name.
ESSAY

ON

Imitations of the Ancient Ballad.

THE invention of printing necessarily occasioned the downfall of the Order of Minstrels, already reduced to contempt by their own bad habits, by the disrepute attached to their profession, and by the laws calculated to repress their license. When the Metrical Romances were very many of them in the hands of every one, the occupation of those who made their living by reciting them was in some degree abolished, and the minstrels either disappeared altogether, or sunk into mere musicians, whose utmost acquaintance with poetry was being able to sing a ballad. Perhaps old Anthony, who acquired, from the song which he accounted his masterpiece, the name of Anthony Now Now, was one of the last of this class in the capital; nor does the tenor of his poetry evince whether it was his own composition or that of some other.

But the taste for popular poetry did not decay with the class of men by whom it had been for some generations practiced and preserved. Not only did the simple old ballads retain their ground, though circulated by the new art of printing, instead of being preserved by recitation; but in the Garlands, and similar collections for general sale, the authors aimed at a more ornamental and regular style of poetry than had been attempted by the old minstrels, whose composition, if not extemporaneous, was seldom committed to writing, and was not, therefore, susceptible of accurate revision. This was the more necessary, as even the popular poetry was now feeling the effects arising from the advance of knowledge, and the revival of the study of the learned languages, with all the elegance and refinement which it induced.

In short, the general progress of the country led to an improvement in the department of popular poetry, tending both to soften and melodize the language employed, and to ornament the diction beyond that of the rude minstrels, to whom such topics of composition had been originally abandoned. The monotony of the ancient recitats was, for the same causes, altered and improved upon. The eternal description of battles and of love dilemmas which, to satiety, filled the old romances with trivial repetition, was retrenched. If any one wishes to compare the two eras of lyrical poetry, a few verses taken from one of the latest minstrel ballads, and one of the earliest that were written for the press, will afford him, in some degree, the power of doing so.

The rude lines from Anthony Now Now, which we have just quoted, may, for example, be compared, as Ritson requests, with the ornamented commencement of the ballad of “Fair Rosamond:”—

“When as King Henry ruled this land,
The second of that name,
Besides his queen he dearly loved
A fair and comely dame.

Most peerless was her beauty found,
Her favor, and her face;
A sweeter creature in the world
Could never prince embrace.

Her crisped locks like threads of gold
Appeard to each man’s sight;
Her sparkling eyes, like orient pearls,
Did cast a heavenly light.

The blood within her crystal cheeks
Did such a color drive,
As though the lily and the rose
For mastership did strive.”

It may be rash to affirm that those who lived by singing this more refined poetry were a class of men different from the ancient minstrels; but it appears that both the name of the professors and the character of the minstrel poetry had sunk in reputation.

The facility of versification and of poetical diction

1 This essay was written in April, 1839, and forms a continuation of the “Remarks on Popular Poetry.”—Ed.

2 He might be supposed a contemporary of Henry VIII., if the greeting which he pretends to have given to that monarch is of his own composition, and spoken in his own person:— is decidedly in favor of the moderns, as might reasonably be expected from the improved taste and enlarged knowledge of an age which abounded to such a degree in poetry, and of a character so imaginative as was the Elizabethan era. The poetry addressed to the populace, and enjoyed by them alone, was animated by the spirit that was breathed around. We may cite Shakspeare's unquestionable and decisive evidence in this respect. In Twelfth Night he describes a popular ballad, with a beauty and precision which no one but himself could have affixed to its character; and the whole constitutes the strongest appeal in favor of that species of poetry which is written to suit the taste of the public in general, and is most naturally preserved by oral tradition. But the remarkable part of the circumstance is that when the song is actually sung by Feste the clown, it differs in almost all particulars from what we might have been justified in considering as attributes of a popular ballad of that early period. It is simple, doubtless, both in structure and phraseology, but is rather a love song than a minstrel ballad—a love song, also, which, though its imaginative figures of speech are of a very simple and intelligible character, may nevertheless be compared to any thing rather than the boldness of the preceding age, and resembles nothing less than the ordinary minstrel ballad. The original, though so well known, may be here quoted for the purpose of showing what was, in Shakspeare's time, regarded as the poetry of "the old age." Almost every one has the passage by heart, yet I must quote it, because there seems a marked difference between the species of poem which is described and that which is sung:—

"Mark it, Cesario; it is old and plain:
The splinters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maidens, that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it; it is sily sooth,
And dailies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age."

The song thus beautifully prefaced is as follows:—

"Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O, prepare it;
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.

"Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet.
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
A thousand, thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O, where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there."\(^1\)

On comparing this love elegy, or whatever it may be entitled, with the ordinary and especially the earlier popular poetry, I cannot help thinking that a great difference will be observed in the structure of the verse, the character of the sentiments, the ornaments and refinement of the language. Neither indeed, as might be expected from the progress of human affairs, was the change in the popular style of poetry achieved without some disadvantages, which counterbalanced, in a certain degree, the superior art and exercise of fancy which had been introduced of late times.

The expressions of Sir Philip Sidney, an unquestionable judge of poetry, flourishing in Elizabeth's golden reign, and drawing around him, like a magnet, the most distinguished poets of the age, amongst whom we need only name Shakspeare and Spenser, still show something to regret when he compared the highly wrought and richly ornamented poetry of his own time with the ruder but more energetic dietion of "Chevy Chase." His words, often quoted, cannot yet be dispensed with on the present occasion. They are a chapter in the history of ancient poetry. "Certainly," says the brave knight, "I must confess my own barbarousness; I never heard the old song of Percy and Douglas that I found not my heart more moved than with a trumpet. And yet it is sung by some blind crowder, with no rougher voice than rude style, which being so evil apparelled in the dust and cobwebs of that uncivil age, what would it work, trimmed in the gorgeous eloquence of Pindar?"\(^2\)

If we inquire more particularly what were the peculiar charms by which the old minstrel ballad produced an effect like a trumpet-sound upon the bosom of a real son of chivalry, we may not be wrong in ascribing it to the extreme simplicity with which the narrative moves forward, neglecting all the more minute ornaments of speech and diction, to the grand object of enforcing on the hearer a striking and affecting catastrophe. The author seems too serious in his wish to affect the audience, to allow himself to be drawn aside by any thing which can, either by its tenor or the manner in which it is spoken, have the perversive effect of distracting attention from the catastrophe.

Such grand and serious beauties, however, occurred but rarely to the old minstrels; and in order to find them, it became necessary to struggle through long passages of monotony, languor, and inanity. Unfortunately it also happened that those who, like Sidney, could ascertain, feel, and do full justice to the beauties of the heroic ballad, were few compared to the numbers who could be sensible of the trite verbiage of a bald passage, or the ludicrous effect of an absurd rhyme. In England, accordingly, the popular ballad fell into contempt during the seventeenth century; and although in remote counties\(^3\) its inspiration was occasionally the source of a few verses, it seems to

---

1 Twelfth Night, act ii. scene 4.
2 Sir Philip Sidney's Defence of Poety.
3 A curious and spirited specimen occurs in Cornwall, as late as the trial of the Bishops before the Revolution. The have become almost entirely obsolete in the capital. Even the Civil Wars, which gave so much occasion for poetry, produced rather song and satire than the ballad or popular epic. The curious reader may satisfy himself on this point, should he wish to ascertain the truth of the allegation, by looking through D'Urfe's large and curious collection, when he will be aware that the few ballads which it contains are the most ancient productions in the book, and very seldom take their date after the commencement of the seventeenth century.

In Scotland, on the contrary, the old minstrel ballad long continued to preserve its popularity. Even the last contests of Jacobitism were recited with great vigor in ballads of the time, the authors of some of which are known and remembered; nor is there a more spirited ballad preserved than that of Mr. Skirving (father of Skirving the artist) upon the battle of Prestonpans, so late as 1745. But this was owing to circumstances connected with the habits of the people in a remote and rude country which could not exist in the richer and wealthier provinces of England.

On the whole, however, the ancient Heroic ballad, as it was called, seemed to be fast declining among the more enlightened and literary part of both countries; and if retained by the lower classes in Scotland, it had in England ceased to exist, or degenerated into doggerel of the last degree of vileness.

Subjects the most interesting were abandoned to the poorest rhymers, and one would have thought that, as in an ass-race, the prize had been destined to the slowest of those who competed for the prize. The melancholy fate of Miss Ray, who fell by the hands of a frantic lover, could only inspire the Grub Street muse with such verses as these,—that is, if I remember them correctly:—

"A Sandwich favourite was this fair,
And her he dearly loved;
By whom six children had, we hear;
This story fatal proved.

"A clergyman, O wicked one,
In Covent Garden shot her;
No time to cry upon her God,
It's hoped He's not forgot her."

If it be true, as in other cases, that when things are at the worst they must mend, it was certainly time to expect an amelioration in the department in which such doggerel passed current.

Accordingly, previous to this time, a new species of poetry seems to have arisen, which, in some cases, endeavored to pass itself as the production of genuine antiquity, and, in others, honestly avowed an attempt to emulate the merits and avoid the errors with which the old ballad was encumbered; and in the effort to accomplish this, a species of composition was discovered which is capable of being subjected to peculiar rules of criticism, and of exhibiting excellences of its own.

In writing for the use of the general reader, rather than the poetical antiquary, I shall be readily excused from entering into any inquiry respecting the authors who first showed the way in this peculiar department of modern poetry, which I may term the imitation of the old ballad, especially that of the latter or Elizabethan era. One of the oldest, according to my recollection, which pretends to engrat modern refinement upon ancient simplicity, is extremely beautiful, both from the words and the simple and affecting melody to which they are usually sung. The title is "Lord Henry and Fair Catherine." It begins thus:—

"In ancient days, in Britain's isle,
Lord Henry well was known;
No knight in all the land more famed,
Or more deserved renown.

"His thoughts were all on honor bent,
He ne'er would stoop to love;
No lady in the land had power
His frozen heart to move."

Early in the eighteenth century, this peculiar species of composition became popular. We find Tickell, the friend of Addison, who produced the beautiful ballad, "Of Leinster famed for maidens fair," Mallet, Goldsmith, Shenstone, Percy, and many others, followed an example which had much to recommend it, especially as it presented considerable facilities to those who wished, at as little exertion of trouble as possible, to attain for themselves a certain degree of literary reputation.

Before, however, treating of the professed imitators of Ancient Ballad Poetry, I ought to say a word upon those who have written their imitations with the preconceived purpose of passing them for ancient.

There is no small degree of cant in the violent inVectives with which impostors of this nature have been assailed. In fact, the case of each is special, and ought to be separately considered, according to its own circumstances. If a young, perhaps a female, author chooses to circulate a beautiful poem, we will suppose that of "Hardyknute," under the disguise of antiquity, the public is surely more enriched by the contribution than injured by the deception. It is hardly possible, indeed, without a power of poetical genius and acquaintance with ancient language and

President of the Royal Society of London (Mr. Davies Gilbert) has not disdained the trouble of preserving it from oblivion.

1 Pill to Purge Melancholy.
2 See Hogg's Jacobite Relics, vol. i.—Ed.
3 Miss Ray, the beautiful mistress of the Earl of Sandwich, whose memory is preserved in the ballad "The famous Miss Ray," a subject of which a MS. note of Sir Walter Scott on a leaf of Allan Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscellany.
manner possessed by very few, to succeed in deceiving those who have made this branch of literature their study. The very desire to unite modern refinement with the verse of the ancient minstrels will itself betray the masquerade. A minute acquaintance with ancient customs and with ancient history is also demanded to sustain a part which, as it must rest on deception, cannot be altogether an honorable one.

Two of the most distinguished authors of this class have in this manner been detected, being deficient in the knowledge requisite to support their genius in the disguise they meditated. "Hardyknute," for instance, already mentioned, is irreconcilable with all chronology, and a chief with a Norwegian name is strangely introduced as the first of the nobles brought to resist a Norse invasion, at the battle of Largs; the "needlework so rare," introduced by the fair authoress, must have been certainly long posterior to the reign of Alexander III. In Chatterton's ballad of "Sir Charles Bandwin," we find an anxious attempt to represent the composition as ancient, and some entries in the public accounts of Bristol were appealed to in corroboration. But neither was this ingenious but most unhappy young man, with all his powers of poetry, and with the antiquarian knowledge which he had collected with indiscriminating but astonishing research, able to impose on that part of the public qualified to judge of the compositions, which it had occurred to him to pass off as those of a monk of the fourteenth century. It was in vain that he in each word doubled the consonants, like the sentinels of an endangered army. The art used to disguise and misspell the words only overlaid what was intended, and afforded sure evidence that the poems published as antiquites had been, in fact, tampered with by a modern artist, as the newly-forged medals of modern days stand convicted of imposture from the very tinctures of the file, by which there is an attempt to imitate the cracks and fissures produced by the hammer upon the original.\footnote{1 See Appendix, Note A.}

I have only met, in my researches into these matters, with one poem which, if it had been produced as ancient, could not have been detected on internal evidence. It is the "War Song upon the victory at Brunanburg, translated from the Anglo-Saxon into Anglo-Norman," by the Right Honorable John Hookham Frere. See Ellis' Specimens of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. p. 32. The accomplished editor tells us that this very singular poem was intended as an imitation of the style and language of the fourteenth century, and was written during the controversy occasioned by the poems attributed to Rowley. Mr. Ellis adds, "the reader will probably hear with some surprise that this singular instance of critical ingenuity was the composition of an Eton schoolboy."

The author may be permitted to speak as an artist on this occasion (disowning, at the same time, all purpose of imposition), as having written, at the request of the late Mr. Ritson, one or two things of this kind; among others, a continuation of the romance of Thomas of Erleighdoute, the only one which chances to be preserved.\footnote{2 See "Sir Tristrem," Scott's Poetical Works, vol. v., edition 1833.} And he thinks himself entitled to state that a modern poet engaged in such a task is much in the situation of an architect of the present day, who, if acquainted with his profession, finds no difficulty in copying the external forms of a Gothic castle or abbey, but when it is completed, can hardly, by any artificial tints or cement, supply the spots, weather-stains, and hues of different kinds, with which time alone had invested the venerable fabric which he desires to imitate.

Leaving this branch of the subject, in which the difficulty of passing off what is modern for what is ancient cannot be matter of regret, we may bestow with advantage some brief consideration on the fair trade of manufacturing modern antiques, not for the purpose of passing them as contraband goods on the skillful antiquary, but in order to obtain the credit due to authors as successful imitators of the ancient simplicity, while their system admits of a considerable infusion of modern refinement. Two classes of imitations may be referred to as belonging to this species of composition. When they approach each other, there may be some difficulty in assigning to individual poems their peculiar character, but in general the difference is distinctly marked. The distinction lies betwixt the authors of ballads or legendary poems who have attempted to imitate the language, the manners, and the sentiments of the ancient poems which were their prototypes and those, on the contrary, who, without endeavoring to do so, have struck out a particular path for themselves, which cannot, with strict propriety, be termed either ancient or modern.

In the actual imitation of the ancient ballad, Dr. Percy, whose researches made him well acquainted with that department of poetry, was peculiarly successful. The "Hermit of Warkworth," the "Child of Elle," and other minstrel tales of his composition, must always be remembered with fondness by those who have perused them in that period of life when the feelings are strong, and the taste for poetry, especially of this simple nature, is keen and poignant. This learned and amiable prelate was also remarkable for his power of restoring the ancient ballad by throwing in touches of poetry so adapted to its tone and tenor as to assimilate with its original structure, and impress every one who considered the subject as being coeval with the rest of the piece. It must be owned that such freedoms, when assumed by a professed antiquary, addressing himself to antiquaries, and for the sake of illustrating literary antiquities, are subject to great and licentious abuse; and herein the severity of Ritson was to a certain extent justified.
But when the license is avowed, and practiced without the intention to deceive, it cannot be objected to but by scrupulous pedantry.

The poet, perhaps, most capable, by verses, lines, even single words, to relieve and heighten the character of ancient poetry, was the Scottish bard Robert Burns. We are not here speaking of the avowed lyrical poems of his own composition, which he communicated to Mr. George Thomson, but of the manner in which he recomposed and repaired the old songs and fragments for the collection of Johnson and others, when, if his memory supplied the theme or general subject of the song, such as it existed in Scottish lore, his genius contributed that part which was to give life and immortality to the whole. If this praise should be thought extravagant, the reader may compare his splendid lyric, "My heart's in the Highlands," with the tame and scarcely half-intelligible remains of that song as preserved by Mr. Peter Buchan. Or, what is perhaps a still more magnificent example of what we mean, "Macpherson's Farewell," with all its spirit and grandeur, as repaired by Burns, may be collated with the original poem called "Macpherson's Lament," or sometimes the "Ruffian's Rant." In Burns' brilliant rifacimento, the same strain of wild ideas is expressed as we find in the original, but with an infusion of the savage and impassioned spirit of Highland chivalry, which gives a splendor to the composition of which we find not a trace in the rudeness of the ancient ditty. I can bear witness to the older verses having been current while I was a child, but I never knew a line of the inspired edition of the Ayrshire bard until the appearance of Johnson's Museum.

Besides Percy, Burns, and others, we must not omit to mention Mr. Finlay, whose beautiful song, is so happily descriptive of antique manners; or Mickle, whose accurate and interesting imitations of the ancient ballad we have already mentioned with approbation in the former Essay on Ballad Composition. These, with others of modern date, at the head of whom we must place Thomas Moore, have aimed at striking the ancient harp with the same bold and rough note to which it was awakened by the ancient minstrels. Southey, Wordsworth, and other distinguished names of the present century, have, in repeated instances, dignified this branch of literature; but no one more than Coleridge, in the wild and imaginative tale of the "Ancient Mariner," which displays so much beauty with such eccentricity. We should act most unjustly in this department of Scottish ballad poetry not to mention the names of Leyden, Hogg, and Allan Cunningham. They have all three honored their country by arriving at distinction from an humble origin, and there is none of them under whose hand the ancient Scottish harp has not sounded a bold and distinguished tone. Miss Anne Bannerman likewise should not be forgotten, whose Tales of Superstition and Chivalry appeared about 1802. They were perhaps too mystical and too abrupt; yet if it be the purpose of this kind of ballad poetry powerfully to excite the imagination, without pretending to satisfy it, few persons have succeeded better than this gifted lady, whose volume is peculiarly fit to be read in a lonely house by a decaying lamp.

"There came a knight from the field of the slain,"

As we have already hinted, a numerous class of the authors (some of them of the very first class) who condescended to imitate the simplicity of ancient poetry gave themselves no trouble to observe the costume, style, or manner, either of the old minstrel or ballad-singer, but assumed a structure of a separate and peculiar kind, which could not be correctly termed either ancient or modern, although made the vehicle of beauties which were common to both. The discrepancy between the mark which they avowed their purpose of shooting at and that at which they really took aim is best illustrated by a production of one of the most distinguished of their number. Goldsmith describes the young family of his Vicar of Wakefield as amusing themselves with conversing about poetry. Mr. Burchell observes that the British poets, who imitated the classics, have especially contributed to introduce a false taste, by loading their lines with epithets, so as to present a combination of luxuriant images, without plot or connection,—a string of epithets that improve the sound, without carrying on the sense. But when an example of popular poetry is produced as free from the fault which the critic has just censured, it is the well-known and beautiful poem of "Edwin and Angelina!" which, in felicities of attention to the language, and in fanciful ornament of imagery, is as unlike to a minstrel ballad as a lady assuming the dress of a shepherdess for a masquerade is different from the actual Sisy of Salisbury Plain. Tickell's beautiful ballad is equally formed upon a pastoral, sentimental, and ideal model, not, however, less beautifully executed; and the attention of Addison's friend had been probably directed to the ballad stanza (for the stanza is all which is imitated) by the praise bestowed on "Chery Chase" in the Spectator.

Upon a later occasion, the subject of Mallet's fine poem, "Edwin and Emma," being absolutely rural in itself, and occurring at the hamlet of Bowes, in Yorkshire, might have seduced the poet from the beau ideal which he had pictured to himself, into something more immediately allied to common life. But Mallet was not a man to neglect what was esteemed fashionable, and poor Hannah Railton and her lover Wrightson were enveloped in the elegant but tinsel frippery appertaining to Edwin and Emma; for the similes, reflections, and suggestions of the poet are, in fact, too intrusive and too well said to suffer the reader to feel the full taste of the tragic tale. The verses are doubtless beautiful, but I must own the simple prose of the Curate's letter, who gives the narrative of the tale as

1 Johnson's Musical Museum, in six vols., was lately reprinted at Edinburgh.
it really happened, has to me a tone of serious veracity more affecting than the ornaments of Mallet’s fiction.
The same author’s ballad, “William and Margaret,” has, in some degree, the same fault. A disembodied spirit is not a person before whom the living spectator takes leisure to make remarks of a moral kind, as,

“So will the fairest face appear
When youth and years are flown,
And such the robe that kings must wear
When death has reft their crown.”

Upon the whole, the ballad, though the best of Mal-let’s writing, is certainly inferior to its original, which I presume to be the very fine and even terrific old
Scottish tale beginning,

“There came a ghost to Margaret’s door.”

It may be found in Allan Ramsay’s Tea-Table Mise-cllany.

We need only stop to mention another very beautiful piece of this fanciful kind, by Dr. Cartwright, called “Armin and Elvira,” containing some excellent poetry, expressed with unusual felicity. I have a vision of having met this accomplished gentleman in my very early youth, and am the less likely to be mistaken, as he was the first living poet I recollect to have seen.1 His poem had the distinguished honor to be much admired by our celebrated philosopher, Dugald Stewart, who was wont to quote with much pathos the picture of resignation in the following stanza:—

“And while his eye to heaven he raised,
Its silent waters stole away.”

After enumerating so many persons of undoubted genius who have cultivated the Arcadian style of poetry (for to such it may be compared), it would be endless to enumerate the various Sir Eldreds of the hills and downs whose stories were woven into legendary tales—which came at length to be the name assigned to this half-ancient, half-modern style of composition.

In general I may observe that the supposed facility of this species of composition, the alluring simplicity of which was held sufficient to support it, afforded great attractions for those whose ambition led them to exercise their untried talents in verse, but who were desirous to do so with the least possible expense of thought. The task seems to present, at least to the inexperienced acolyte of the Muses, the same advantages which an instrument of sweet sound and small compass offers to those who begin their studies in music. In either case, however, it frequently happens that the scholar, getting tired of the palling and monotonous character of the poetry or music which he produces, becomes desirous to strike a more independent note, even at the risk of its being a more difficult one.

The same simplicity involves an inconvenience fatal to the continued popularity of any species of poetry, by exposing it in a peculiar degree to ridicule and to parody. Dr. Johnson, whose style of poetry was of a very different and more stately description, could ridicule the ballads of Percy in such stanzas as these,—

“The tender infant, meek and mild,
Fell down upon a stone;
The nurse took up the squalling child,
But still the child squall’d on;”

with various slipshod imitations of the same quality.2
It did not require his talents to pursue this vein of raillery, for it was such as most men could imitate, and all could enjoy. It is, therefore, little wonderful that this sort of composition should be repeatedly laid aside for considerable periods of time, and certainly as little so that it should have been repeatedly revived, like some forgotten melody, and have again obtained some degree of popularity, until it sunk once more under satire, as well as parody, but, above all, the effects of satiety.

During the thirty years that I have paid some attention to literary matters, the taste for the ancient ballad melody, and for the closer or more distant imitation of that strain of poetry, has more than once arisen, and more than once subsided, in consequence, perhaps, of too unlimited indulgence. That this has been the case in other countries we know; for the Spanish poet, when he found that the beautiful Mo-risco romances were excluding all other topics, confer upon them a hearty malediction.3

A period when this particular taste for the popular ballad was in the most extravagant degree of fashion became the occasion, unexpectedly indeed, of my deserting the profession to which I was educated, and in which I had sufficiently advantageous prospects for a person of limited ambition. I have, in a former publication, undertaken to mention this circumstance;
and I will endeavor to do so with becoming brevity,
and without more egotism than is positively exacted
by the nature of the story.

I may, in the first place, remark that although the assertion has been made, and that by persons who seemed satisfied with their authority, it is a mistake to suppose that my situation in life or place in society

1 If I am right in what must be a very early recollection, I saw Mr. Cartwright (then a student of medicine at the Edinburgh University) at the house of my maternal grandfather,
John Rutherford, M. D.

2 Happily altered by an admiring foreigner, who read
“ The silent waters stole away.”

3 Percy was especially annoyed, according to Boswell, with
“I put my hat upon my head,
And walked into the Strand,
And there I met another man
With his hat in his hand.”—Ed.

4 See the introduction to Lockhart’s Spanish Ballads, 1823,
p. xxii.
was materially altered by such success as I attained in literary attempts. My birth, without giving the least pretensions to distinction, was that of a gentleman, and connected me with several respectable families and accomplished persons. My education had been a good one, although I was deprived of its full benefit by indifferent health, just at the period when I ought to have been most studious in improving it. The young men with whom I was brought up and lived most familiarly were those who, from opportunities, birth, and talents, might be expected to make the greatest advances in the career for which we were all destined; and I have the pleasure still to preserve my youthful intimacy with no inconsiderable number of them, whom their merit has carried forward to the highest honors of their profession. Neither was I in a situation to be embarrassed by the res angusta domi, which might have otherwise brought painful additional obstructions to a path in which progress is proverbially slow. I enjoyed a moderate degree of business for my standing, and the friendship of more than one person of consideration and influence efficiently disposed to aid my views in life. The private fortune, also, which I might expect, and finally inherited, from my family, did not, indeed, amount to affluence, but placed me considerably beyond all apprehension of want. I mention these particulars merely because they are true. Many better men than myself have owed their rise from indigence and obscurity to their own talents, which were, doubtless, much more adequate to the task of raising them than any which I possess. But although it would be absurd and ungracious in me to deny that I owe to literature many marks of distinction to which I could not otherwise have aspired, and particularly that of securing the acquaintance, and even the friendship, of many remarkable persons of the age, to whom I could not otherwise have made my way; it would, on the other hand, be ridiculous to affect gratitude to the public favor, either for my general position in society or the means of supporting it with decency, matters which had been otherwise secured under the usual chances of human affairs. Thus much I have thought it necessary to say upon a subject which is, after all, of very little consequence to any one but myself. I proceed to detail the circumstances which engaged me in literary pursuits.

During the last ten years of the eighteenth century, the art of poetry was at a remarkably low ebb in Britain. Hayley, to whom fashion had some years before ascribed a higher degree of reputation than posterity has confirmed, had now lost his reputation for talent, though he still lived beloved and respected as an amiable and accomplished man. The Bard of Memory slumbered on his laurels, and Ile of Hope had scarce begun to attract his share of public attention. Cowper, a poet of deep feeling and bright genius, was still alive, indeed; but the hypochondria which was his mental malady impeded his popularity. Burns, whose genius our southern neighbors could hardly yet comprehend, had long confined himself to song-writing. Names which are now known and distinguished wherever the English language is spoken were then only beginning to be mentioned; and, unless among the small number of persons who habitually devote a part of their leisure to literature, even those of Southey, Wordsworth, and Coleridge, were still but little known. The realms of Parnassus, like many a kingdom at the period, seemed to lie open to the first bold invader, whether he should be a daring usurper or could show a legitimate title of sovereignty.

As far back as 1788, a new species of literature began to be introduced into this country. Germany, long known as a powerful branch of the European confederacy, was then, for the first time, heard of as the cradle of a style of poetry and literature of a kind much more analogous to that of Britain than either the French, Spanish, or Italian schools, though all three had been at various times cultivated and imitated among us. The names of Lessing, Klopstock, Schiller, and other German poets of eminence, were only known in Britain very imperfectly. The Sorrows of Werter was the only composition that had attained any degree of popularity, and the success of that remarkable novel, notwithstanding the distinguished genius of the author, was retarded by the nature of its incidents. To the other compositions of Goethe, whose talents were destined to illuminate the age in which he flourished, the English remained strangers, and much more so to Schiller, Bürger, and a whole cycle of foreigners of distinguished merit. The obscurity to which German literature seemed to be condemned did not arise from want of brilliancy in the lights by which it was illuminated, but from the palpable thickness of the darkness by which they were surrounded. Frederick II. of Prussia had given a partial and ungracious testimony against his native language and native literature, and impolitically and unwisely, as well as unjustly, had yielded to the French that superiority in letters which, after his death, paved the way for their obtaining, for a time, an equal superiority in arms. That great Prince, by setting the example of undervaluing his country in one respect, raised a belief in its general inferiority, and destroyed the manly pride with which a nation is naturally disposed to regard its own peculiar manners and peculiar literature.

Unmoved by the scornful neglect of its sovereigns and nobles, and encouraged by the tide of native genius which flowed in upon the nation, German literature began to assume a new, interesting, and highly impressive character, to which it became impossible for strangers to shut their eyes. That it exhibited the faults of exaggeration and false taste, almost inseparable from the first attempts at the heroic and at the pathetic, cannot be denied. It was, in a word, the first crop of a rich soil, which throws out weeds as well as flowers with a prolific abundance.
It was so late as the 21st day of April, 1788, that the literary persons of Edinburgh, of whom, at that period, I am better qualified to speak than of those of Britain generally, or especially those of London, were first made aware of the existence of works of genius in a language cognate with the English, and possessed of the same manly force of expression. They learned, at the same time, that the taste which dictated the German compositions was of a kind as nearly allied to the English as their language. Those who were accustomed from their youth to admire Milton and Shakspeare became acquainted, I may say for the first time, with the existence of a race of poets who had the same lofty ambition to spurn the flaming boundaries of the universe, and investigate the realms of chaos and old night; and of dramatists who, disclosing the pedantry of the unities, sought, at the expense of occasional improbabilities and extravagances, to present life in its scenes of wildest contrast, and in all its boundless variety of character, mingling, without hesitation, livelier with more serious incidents, and exchanging scenes of tragic distress, as they occur in common life, with those of a comic tendency. This emancipation from the rules so servilely adhered to by the French school, and particularly by their dramatic poets, although it was attended with some disadvantages, especially the risk of extravagance and bombast, was the means of giving free scope to the genius of Goethe, Schiller, and others, which, thus relieved from shackles, was not long in soaring to the highest pitch of poetical sublimity. The late venerable Henry MacKenzie, author of The Man of Feeling, in an Essay upon the German Theatre, introduced his countrymen to this new species of national literature, the peculiarities of which he traced with equal truth and spirit, although they were at that time known to him only through the imperfect and uncongenial medium of a French translation. Upon the day already mentioned (21st April, 1788) he read to the Royal Society an Essay on German Literature, which made much noise and produced a powerful effect. "Germany," he observed, "in her literary aspect, presents herself to observation in a singular point of view: that of a country arrived at maturity, along with the neighboring nations, in the arts and sciences, in the pleasures and refinements of manners, and yet only in its infancy with regard to writings of taste and imagination. This last path, however, from these very circumstances, she pursues with an enthusiasm which no other situation could perhaps have produced—the enthusiasm which novelty inspires, and which the servility incident to a more cultivated and critical state of literature does not restrain." At the same time, the accomplished critic showed himself equally familiar with the classical rules of the French stage, and failed not to touch upon the acknowledged advantages which these produced, by the encouragement and regulation of taste, though at the risk of repressing genius.

But it was not the dramatic literature alone of the Germans which was hitherto unknown to their neighbors; their fictitious narratives, their ballad poetry, and other branches of their literature, which are particularly apt to bear the stamp of the extravagant and the supernatural, began to occupy the attention of the British literati.

In Edinburgh, where the remarkable coincidence between the German language and that of the Lowland Scottish encouraged young men to approach this newly-discovered spring of literature, a class was formed, of six or seven intimate friends, who proposed to make themselves acquainted with the German language. They were in the habit of living much together, and the time they spent in this new study was felt as a period of great amusement. One source of this diversion was the laziness of one of their number, the present author, who, averse to the necessary toil of grammar and its rules, was in the practice of fighting his way to the knowledge of the German by his acquaintance with the Scottish and Anglo-Saxon dialects, and, of course, frequently committed blunders which were not lost on his more accurate and more studious companions. A more general source of amusement was the despair of the teacher on finding it impossible to extract from his Scottish students the degree of sensibility necessary, as he thought, to enjoy the beauties of the author to whom he considered it proper first to introduce them. We were desirous to penetrate at once into the recesses of the Teutonic literature, and therefore were ambitious of perusing Goethe and Schiller, and others whose fame had been sounded by MacKenzie. Dr. Willich (a medical gentleman), who was our teacher, was judiciously disposed to commence our studies with the more simple diction of Gesner, and prescribed to us the "Death of Abel," as the production from which our German tasks were to be drawn. The pietistic style of this author was ill adapted to attract young persons of our age and disposition. We could no more sympathize with the overstrained sentimentality of Adam and his family than we could have had a fellow-feeling with the jolly Fann of the same author, who broke his beautiful jug, and then made a song on it which might have affected all Staffordshire. To sum up the distresses of Dr. Willich, we, with one consent, voted Abel an insufferable bore, and gave the pre-eminence, in point of masculine character, to his brother Cain, or even to Lucifier himself. When these jests, which arose out of the sickly monotony and affected ecstasies of the poet, failed to amuse us, we had for our entertainment the unutterable sounds manufactured by a Frenchman, our fellow-student, who, with the economical purpose of learning two languages at once, was endeavoring to acquire German, of which he knew nothing, by means of English, concerning which he was nearly as ignorant. Heaven only knows the notes which he uttered in attempting, with unpracticed organs, to imitate the gutturals of these two intractable languages. At length, in the midst of much laughing and little study, most of us acquired some knowledge, more or less extensive, of the German language, and selected for ourselves, some in the philosophy of Kant, some in the more animated works of the German dramatists, specimens more to our taste than the "Death of Abel."

1 "Flammantia meonia mundii."—Lucretius.

About this period, or a year or two sooner, the accomplished and excellent Lord Woodhouselee, one of the friends of my youth, made a spirited version of The Robbers of Schiller, which I believe was the first published, though an English version appeared soon afterwards in London, as the metropolis then took the lead in every thing like literary adventure. The enthusiasm with which this work was received greatly increased the general taste for German compositions.

While universal curiosity was thus distinguishing the advancing taste for the German language and literature, the success of a very young student, in a juvenile publication, seemed to show that the prevailing taste in that country might be easily employed as a formidable auxiliary to renewing the spirit of our own, upon the same system as when medical persons attempt, by the transfusion of blood, to pass into the veins of an aged and exhausted patient the vivacity of the circulation and liveliness of sensation which distinguish a young subject. The person who first attempted to introduce something like the German taste into English fictitious dramatic and poetical composition, although his works, when first published, engaged general attention, is now comparatively forgotten. I mean Matthew Gregory Lewis, whose character and literary history are so immediately connected with the subject of which I am treating that a few authentic particulars may be here inserted by one to whom he was well known.

Lewis' rank in society was determined by his birth, which, at the same time, assured his fortune. His father was Under-Secretary at War, at that time a very lucrative appointment, and the young poet was provided with a seat in Parliament as soon as his age permitted him to fill it. But his mind did not incline him to politics, or, if it did, they were not of the complexion which his father, attached to Mr. Pitt's administration, would have approved. He was, moreover, indolent, and though possessed of abilities sufficient to conquer any difficulty which might stand in the way of classical attainments, he preferred applying his exertions in a path where they were rewarded with more immediate applause. As he completed his education abroad, he had an opportunity of indulging his inclination for the extraordinary and supernatural by wandering through the whole enchanted land of Ger-

1 Alexander Fraser Tytler, a Judge of the Court of Session by the title of Lord Woodhouselee, author of the well-known Elements of General History, and long eminent as Professor man faery and diablerie, not forgetting the paths of her enthusiastic tragedy and romantic poetry.

We are easily induced to imitate what we admire, and Lewis early distinguished himself by a romance in the German taste, called The Monk. In this work, written in his twentieth year, and founded on the Eastern apologue of the Santon Barsis, the author introduced supernatural machinery with a courageous consciousness of his own power to manage its ponderous strength which commanded the respect of his reader. The Monk was published in 1785, and, though liable to the objections common to the school to which it belonged, and to others peculiar to itself, placed its author at once high in the scale of men of letters. Nor can that he regarded as an ordinary exertion of genius, to which Charles Fox paid the unusual compliment of crossing the House of Commons that he might congratulate the young author, whose work obtained high praise from many other able men of that able time. The party which approved The Monk was at first superior in the lists, and it was some time before the anonymous author of the Pursuits of Literature denounced as puerile and absurd the supernatural machinery which Lewis had introduced—

"I bear an English heart, Unused at ghosts or rattling bones to start."

Yet the acute and learned critic betrays some inconsistency in praising the magic of the Italian poets, and complimenting Mrs. Radcliffe for her success in supernatural imagery, for which at the same moment he thus sternly censures her brother novelist.

A more legitimate topic of condemnation was the indelicacy of particular passages. The present author will hardly be deemed a willing or at least an interested apologist for an offence equally repugnant to decency and good breeding. But as Lewis at once, and with a good grace, submitted to the voice of censure, and expunged the objectionable passages, we cannot help considering the manner in which the fault was insisted on, after all the amendments had been offered of which the case could admit, as in the last degree ungenerous and uncandid. The pertinacity with which the passages so much found fault with were dwelt upon seemed to warrant a belief that something more was desired than the correction of the author's errors; and that, where the apologies of extreme youth, foreign education, and instant submission, were unable to satisfy the critics' fury, they must have been determined to act on the severity of the old proverb, "Confess and be hanged." Certain it is that other persons, offenders in the same degree, have been permitted to sue out their pardon without either retraction or pallioste.

Another peccadillo of the author of The Monk of History in the University of Edinburgh. He died in 1810.

---

3 See Appendix, Note B.
was his having borrowed from Museus, and from the popular tales of the Germans, the singular and striking adventures of the "Bleeding Nun." But the bold and free hand with which he traced some scenes, as well of natural terror as of that which arises from supernatural causes, shows distinctly that the plagiarism could not have been occasioned by any deficiency of invention on his part, though it might take place from wantonness or willfulness.

In spite of the objections we have stated, The Monk was so highly popular that it seems to create an epoch in our literature. But the public were chiefly captivated by the poetry with which Mr. Lewis had interspersed his prose narrative. It has now passed from recollection among the changes of literary taste; but many may remember, as well as I do, the effect produced by the beautiful ballad of "Durandarte," which had the good fortune to be adapted to an air of great sweetness and pathos; by the ghost tale of "Alonzo and Imagine;" and by several other pieces of legendary poetry, which addressed themselves in all the charms of novelty and of simplicity to a public who had for a long time been unused to any regale of the kind. In his poetry as well as his prose Mr. Lewis had been a successful imitator of the Germans, both in his attachment to the ancient ballad and in the tone of superstition which they willingly mingle with it. New arrangements of the stanza, and a varied construction of verses, were also adopted, and welcomed as an addition of a new string to the British harp. In this respect, the stanza in which "Alonzo the Brave" is written was greatly admired, and received as an improvement worthy of adoption into English poetry.

In short, Lewis' works were admired, and the author became famous, not merely through his own merit, though that was of no mean quality, but because he had in some measure taken the public by surprise, by using a style of composition which, like national melodies, is so congenial to the general taste that, though it falls by being much hackneyed, it has only to be for a short time forgotten in order to recover its original popularity.

It chanced that, while his fame was at the highest, Mr. Lewis became almost a yearly visitor to Scotland, chiefly from attachment to the illustrious family of Argyle. The writer of these remarks had the advantage of being made known to the most distinguished author of the day, by a lady who belongs by birth to that family, and is equally distinguished by her beauty and accomplishments. Out of this accidental acquaintance, which increased into a sort of intimacy, consequences arose which altered almost all the Scottish ballad-maker's future prospects in life.

In early youth I had been an eager student of Ballad Poetry, and the tree is still in my recollection beneath which I lay and first entered upon the enchanting perusal of Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, although it has long perished in the general blight which affected the whole race of Oriental platanus to which it belonged. The taste of another person had strongly encouraged my own researches into this species of legendary lore. But I had never dreamed of an attempt to imitate what gave me so much pleasure.

I had, indeed, tried the metrical translations which were occasionally recommended to us at the High School. I got credit for attempting to do what was enjoined, but very little for the mode in which the task was performed, and I used to feel not a little mortified when my versions were placed in contrast with others of admitted merit. At one period of my school-boy days I was so far left to my own desires as to become guilty of "Verses on a Thunder-storm," which were much approved of, until a malevolent critic sprang up, in the shape of an apothecary's blue-buckskinned wife, who affirmed that my most sweet poetry was stolen from an old magazine. I never forgave the imputation, and even now I acknowledge some resentment against the poor woman's memory. She indeed accused me unjustly when she said I had stolen my brooms ready made; but as I had, like most premature poets, copied all the words and ideas of which my verses consisted, she was so far right. I made one or two faint attempts at verse, after I had undergone this sort of daw-plucking at the hands of the apothecary's wife; but some friend or other always advised me to put my verses in the fire, and, like Dorax in the play, I submitted, though "with a swelling heart." In short, excepting the usual tribute to a mistress's eyebrow, which is the language of passion rather than poetry, I had not for ten years indulged the wish to couple so much as love and dote, when, finding Lewis in possession of so much reputation, and conceiving that, if I fell behind him in poetical powers, I considerably exceeded him in general information, I suddenly took it into my head to attempt the style of poetry by which he had raised himself to fame.

This idea was hurried into execution in consequence of a temptation which others as well as the author found it difficult to resist. The celebrated ballad of "Lenoré," by Bürger, was about this time introduced into England; and it is remarkable that, written as far back as 1775, it was upwards of twenty years before it was known in Britain, though calculated to make so strong an impression. The wild character of the tale was such as struck the imagination of all who read it, although the idea of the lady's ride behind the spectre horseman had been

1 The Lady Charlotte Bury.—Ed.
2 See Life of Scott, vol. i. p. 53.
3 This tree grew in a large garden attached to a cottage at Kelso, the residence of my father's sister, where I spent many of the happiest days of my youth. 1831. [See Life, vol. i. p. 156.—Ed.]
4 See these verses among the "Miscellanies" which follow this "Essay," where also many other pieces from the pen of Sir Walter Scott are now for the first time included in an edition of his poetical works. 1841.
long before hit upon by an English ballad-maker. But this pretended English original, if in reality it be such, is so dull, flat, and prosaic, as to leave the distinguished German author all that is valuable in his story, by clothing it with a fanciful wildness of expression, which serves to set forth the marvellous tale in its native terror. The ballad of "Lenoré" accordingly possessed general attractions for such of the English as understood the language in which it is written; and, as if there had been a charm in the ballad, no one seemed to cast his eyes upon it without a desire to make it known by translation to his own countrymen, and six or seven versions were accordingly presented to the public. Although the present author was one of those who intruded his translation on the world at this time, he may fairly exculpate himself from the rashness of entering the lists against so many rivals. The circumstances which threw him into this competition were quite accidental, and of a nature tending to show how much the destiny of human life depends upon unimportant occurrences, to which little consequence is attached at the moment.

About the summer of 1793 or 1794, the celebrated Miss Letitia Aikin, better known as Mrs. Barbauld, paid a visit to Edinburgh, and was received by such literary society as the place then boasted with the hospitality to which her talents and her worth entitled her. Among others, she was kindly welcomed by the late excellent and admired Professor Dugald Stewart, his lady, and family. It was in their evening society that Miss Aikin drew from her pocket-book a version of "Lenoré," executed by William Taylor, Esq., of Norwich, with as much freedom as was consistent with great spirit and scrupulous fidelity. She read this composition to the company, who were electrified by the tale. It was the more successful, that Mr. Taylor had boldly copied the imitative harmony of the German, and described the spectral journey in language resembling that of the original. Bürger had thus painted the ghostly career:

"Und hurre, hurre, hop, hop, hop,
Ginge fort in sausendem Galopp,
Dass Ross und Reiter schnaben,
Und Kies und Funken stoben."

The words were rendered by the kindred sounds in English:

"Tramp, tramp, across the land they speed,
Splash, splash, across the sea;
Hurrah! the dead can ride apace!
Dost fear to ride with me?"

When Miss Aikin had finished her recitation, she replaced in her pocket-book the paper from which she had read it, and enjoyed the satisfaction of having made a strong impression on the hearers, whose bosoms thrilled yet the deeper, as the ballad was not to be more closely introduced to them.

The author was not present upon this occasion, although he had then the distinguished advantage of being a familiar friend and frequent visitor of Professor Stewart and his family. But he was absent from town while Miss Aikin was in Edinburgh, and it was not until his return that he found all his friends in rapture with the intelligence and good sense of their visitor, but in particular with the wonderful translation from the German, by means of which she had delighted and astonished them. The enthusiastic description given of Bürger's ballad, and the broken account of the story, of which only two lines were recollected, inspired the author, who had some acquaintance, as has been said, with the German language, and a strong taste for popular poetry, with a desire to see the original.

This was not a wish easily gratified; German works were at that time seldom found in London for sale—in Edinburgh never. A lady of noble German descent, whose friendship I have enjoyed for many years, found means, however, to procure me a copy of Bürger's works from Hamburg. The perusal of the original rather exceeded than disappointed the expectations which the report of Mr. Stewart's family had induced me to form. At length, when the book had been a few hours in my possession, I found myself giving an animated account of the poem to a friend, and rashly added a promise to furnish a copy in English ballad verse.

I well recollect that I began my task after supper, and finished it about daybreak the next morning, by which time the ideas which the task had a tendency to summon up were rather of an uncomfortable character. As my object was much more to make a good translation of the poem for those whom I wished to please than to acquire any poetical fame for myself, I retained in my translation the two lines which Mr. Taylor had rendered with equal boldness and fidelity.

My attempt succeeded far beyond my expectations; and it may readily be believed that I was induced to persevere in a pursuit which gratified my own vanity, while it seemed to amuse others. I accomplished a translation of "Der Wilde Jäger"—a romantic ballad founded on a superstition universally current in Germany, and known also in Scotland and France. In this I took rather more license than in versifying "Lenoré;" and I balladized one or two other poems of Bürger with more or less success. In the course of a few weeks, my own vanity, and the favorable opinion of friends, interested by the temporary revival of a species of poetry containing a germ of popularity of which perhaps they were not themselves aware, urged me to the decisive step of sending a selection, at least, of my translations to the press, to save the numerous applications which were made for copies. When was there an author deaf to such a recommendation? In 1786, the present author was prevailed the author's relative, and much-valued friend almost from infancy.

1 Born Countess Harriet Bruhl of Martinskirchen, and married to Hugh Scott, Esq., of Harden, now Lord Polwarth, ESSAY ON IMITATIONS OF THE ANCIENT BALLAD.

with which publications were then procured from the continent. The worthy and excellent friend of whom I gave a sketch many years afterwards in the person of Jonathan Oldbuck5 procured me Adelung's Dictionary, through the mediation of Father Pepper, a monk of the Scotch College of Ratisbon. Other wants of the same nature were supplied by Mrs. Scott of Harden, whose kindness in a similar instance I have had already occasion to acknowledge. Through this lady's connections on the continent, I obtained copies of Bürger, Schiller, Goethe, and other standard German works; and though the obligation be of a distant date, it still remains impressed on my memory, after a life spent in a constant interchange of friendship and kindness with that family, which is, according to Scottish ideas, the head of my house.

Being thus furnished with the necessary originals, I began to translate on all sides, certainly without any thing like an accurate knowledge of the language; and although the dramas of Goethe, Schiller, and others, powerfully attracted one whose early attention to the German had been arrested by MacKenzie's Dissertation and the play of The Robbers, yet the ballad poetry, in which I had made a bold essay, was still my favorite. I was yet more delighted on finding that the old English and especially the Scottish language were so nearly similar to the German, not in sound merely, but in the turn of phrase, that they were capable of being rendered line for line, with very little variation.6

By degrees I acquired sufficient confidence to attempt the imitation of what I admired. The ballad called "Glenfulas" was, I think, the first original poem which I ventured to compose. As it is supposed to be a translation from the Gaelic, I considered myself as liberated from imitating the antiquated language and rude rhythm of the minstrel ballad. A versification of an Osianic fragment came nearer to the idea I had formed of my task; for although controversy may have arisen concerning the authenticity of these poems, yet I never heard it disputed, by those whom an accurate knowledge of the Gaelic rendered competent judges, that in their spirit and diction they nearly resemble fragments of poetry extant in that language, to the genuine antiquity of which no doubt can attach. Indeed the celebrated dispute on that subject is something like the more bloody, though scarce fiercer, controversy about the Popish Plot in Charles II.'s time, concerning which Dryden has said—

"Succeeding times will equal folly call Believing nothing, or believing all."

1 Under the title of "William and Helen."—Ed.
2 This thin quarto was published by Messrs. Manners & Miller, of Edinburgh.—Ed.
3 The list here referred to was drawn up and inserted in the Caledonian Mercury, by Mr. James Shaw, for nearly forty years past in the house of Sir Walter Scott's publishers, Messrs. Constable & Cadell, of Edinburgh.—Ed. (See it in Life of Scott, vol. x. pp. 299-307.)
4 Sir Walter Scott's second publication was a translation of Goethe's drama of Goetz of Berlichingen with the Iron Hand, which appeared in 1799. He about the same time translated several other German plays, which yet remain in MS.—Ed.
5 The late George Constable, Esq. See introduction to the "Antiquary." Waverley Novels, vol. v. p. iv.—Ed.
6 See Appendix, Note C.
The Celtic people of Erin and Albyn had, in short, a style of poetry properly called national, though Macpherson was rather an excellent poet than a faithful editor and translator. This style and fashion of poetry, existing in a different language, was supposed to give the original of "Glenfinlas," and the author was to pass for one who had used his best command of English to do the Gaelic model justice. In one point, the incidents of the poem were irreconcilable with the costume of the times in which they were laid. The ancient Highland chieftains, when they had a mind to "hunt the dun deer down," did not retreat into solitary bothies, or trust the success of the chase to their own unassisted exertions, without a single gillie to help them; they assembled their clans, and all partook of the sport, forming a ring or enclosure, called the Tinchel, and driving the prey towards the most distinguished persons of the hunt. This course would not have suited me, so Ronald and Moy were cooped up in their solitary wigwam, like two moorfowl-shooters of the present day.

After "Glenfinlas," I undertook another ballad called "The Eye of St. John." The incidents, except the hints alluded to in the marginal notes, are entirely imaginary, but the scene was that of my early childhood. Some idle persons had of late years, during the proprietor's absence, torn the iron-grated door of Smailholm Tower from its hinges, and thrown it down the rock. I was an earnest suitor to my friend and kinsman, Mr. Scott of Harden, already mentioned, that the dilapidation might be put a stop to, and the mischief repaired. This was readily promised, on condition that I should make a ballad, of which the scene should lie at Smailholm Tower, and among the crags where it is situated. The ballad was approved of, as well as its companion "Glenfinlas," and I remember that they procured me many marks of attention and kindness from Duke John of Roxburgh, who gave me the unlimited use of that celebrated collection of volumes from which the Roxburgh Club derives its name.

Thus I was set up for a poet, like a peddler who has got two ballads to begin the world upon, and I hastened to make the round of all my acquaintances, showing my precious wares, and requesting criticism—a boon which no author asks in vain. For it may be observed that, in the fine arts, those who are in no respect able to produce any specimens themselves hold themselves not the less entitled to decide upon the works of others; and, no doubt, with justice to a certain degree; for the merits of composition produced for the express purpose of pleasing the world at large can only be judged of by the opinion of individuals, and perhaps, as in the case of Molière's old woman, the less sophisticated the person consulted so much the better. But I was ignorant, at the time I speak of, that though the applause of the many may justly appreciate the general merits of a piece, it is not so safe to submit such a performance to the more minute criticism of the same individuals, when each, in turn, having seated himself in the censor's chair, has placed his mind in a critical attitude, and delivers his opinion sententiously and cx cathedrâ. General applause was in almost every case freely tendered, but the abatements in the way of proposed alterations and corrections were cruelly puzzling. It was in vain the young author, listening with becoming modesty, and with a natural wish to please, cut and carved, tinkered and coopered, upon his unfortunate ballads; it was in vain that he placed, displaced, replaced, and misplaced; every one of his advisers was dispelled with the concessions made to his co-assessors, and the author was blamed by some one, in almost every case, for having made two holes in attempting to patch up one.

At last, after thinking seriously on the subject, I wrote out a fair copy of "Glenfinlas," I think), and marked all the various corrections which had been proposed. On the whole, I found that I had been required to alter every verse, almost every line, and the only stanzas of the whole ballad which escaped criticism were two which could neither be termed good nor bad, speaking of them as poetry, but were of a mere commonplace character, absolutely necessary for conducting the business of the tale. This unexpected result, after about a fortnight's anxiety, led me to adopt a rule from which I have seldom departed during more than thirty years of literary life. When a friend, whose judgment I respect, has decided, and upon good advice told me, that a manuscript was worth nothing, or at least possessed no redeeming qualities sufficient to atone for its defects, I have generally cast it aside; but I am little in the custom of paying attention to minute criticisms, or of offering such to any friend who may do me the honor to consult me. I am convinced that, in general, in removing even errors of a trivial or venial kind, the character of originality is lost, which, upon the whole, may be that which is most valuable in the production.

About the time that I shook hands with criticism, and reduced my ballads back to the original form, stripping them without remorse of those "lendings" which I had adopted at the suggestion of others, an opportunity unexpectedly offered of introducing to the world what had hitherto been confined to a circle of friends, Lewis had announced a collection, first intended to bear the title of Tales of Terror, and afterwards published under that of Tales of Wonder. As this was to be a collection of tales turning on the preternatural, there were risks in the plan of which the ingenious editor was not aware. The supernatural, though appealing to certain powerful emotions

1 This is of little consequence, except in so far as it contradicts a story which I have seen in print, averring that Mr. Scott of Harden was himself about to destroy this ancient building; than which nothing can be more inaccurate.

2 See the account of a conversation between Sir Walter Scott and Sir Thomas Lawrence, in Cunningham's Lives of British Painters, &c., vol. vi. p. 236.—Ed.
very widely and deeply sown amongst the human race, is, nevertheless, a spring which is peculiarly apt to lose its elasticity by being too much pressed on, and a collection of ghost stories is not more likely to be terrible than a collection of jests to be merry or entertaining. But although the very title of the proposed work carried in it an obstruction to its effect, this was far from being suspected at the time, for the popularity of the editor and of his compositions seemed a warrant for his success. The distinguished favor with which the Castle Spectre was received upon the stage seemed an additional pledge for the safety of his new attempt. I readily agreed to contribute the ballads of "Glenfinlas" and of the "Eve of St. John," with one or two others of less merit; and my friend Dr. Leyden became also a contributor. Mr. Southey, a tower of strength, added the "Old Woman of Berkeley," "Lord William," and several other interesting ballads of the same class, to the proposed collection.

In the meantime, my friend Lewis found it no easy matter to discipline his northern recruits. He was a martinet, if I may so term him, in the accuracy of rhymes and of numbers; I may add, he had a right to be so, for few persons have exhibited more mastery of rhyme or greater command over the melody of verse. He was, therefore, rigid in exacting similar accuracy from others; and as I was quite unaccustomed to the mechanical part of poetry, and used rhymes which were merely permissible as readily as those which were legitimate, contests often arose amongst us, which were exasperated by the pertinacity of my Mentor, who, as all who knew him can testify, was no granter of propositions. As an instance of the obstinacy with which I had so lately adopted a tone of defiance to criticism, the reader will find in the Appendix a few specimens of the lectures which I underwent from my friend Lewis, and which did not at the time produce any effect on my inflexibility, though I did not forget them at a future period.

The proposed publication of the Tales of Wonder was, from one reason or another, postponed till the year 1801, a circumstance by which, if of itself, the success of the work was considerably impeded; for protracted expectation always leads to disappointment. But besides, there were circumstances of various kinds which contributed to its depreciation, some of which were imputable to the editor or author, and some to the bookseller.

The former remained insensible of the passion for ballads and ballad-mongers having been for some time on the wane, and that, with such alteration in the public taste, the chance of success in that line was diminished. What had been at first received as simple and natural was now sneered at as puerile and extravagant. Another objection was that my friend Lewis had a high but mistaken opinion of his own powers of humor. The truth was that though he could throw some gayety into his lighter pieces, after the manner of the French writers, his attempts at what is called pleasantry in English wholly wanted the quality of humor, and were generally failures. But this he would not allow; and the Tales of Wonder were filled, in a sense, with attempts at comedy which might be generally accounted abortive.

Another objection, which might have been more easily foreseen, subjected the editor to a charge of which Mat Lewis was entirely incapable,—that of collusion with his publisher in an undue attack on the pockets of the public. The Tales of Wonder formed a work in royal octavo, and were, by large printing, driven out, as it is technically termed, to two volumes, which were sold at a high price. Purchasers murmured at finding that this size had been attained by the insertion of some of the best-known pieces of the English language, such as Dryden's "Theodore and Honoria," Parnell's "Hermit," Lisle's "Porsenna King of Russia," and many other popular poems of old date, and generally known, which ought not in conscience to have made part of a set of tales "written and collected" by a modern author. His bookseller was also accused in the public prints, whether truly or not I am uncertain, of having attempted to secure to himself the entire profits of the large sale which he expected, by refusing to his brethren the allowances usually, if not in all cases, made to the retail trade.

Lewis, one of the most liberal as well as benevolent of mankind, had not the least participation in these proceedings of his biblioplist; but his work sunk under the obloquy which was heaped on it by the offended parties. The book was termed "Tales of Plunder," was censured by reviewers, and attacked in newspapers and magazines. A very clever parody was made on the style and the person of the author, and the world laughed as willingly as if it had never applauded.

Thus, owing to the failure of the vehicle I had chosen, my efforts to present myself before the public as an original writer proved as vain as those by which I had previously endeavored to distinguish myself as a translator. Like Lord Home, however, at the battle of Flodden, I did so far well that I was able to stand and save myself; and amidst the general depreciation of the Tales of Wonder, my small share of the obnoxious publication was dismissed without much censure, and in some cases obtained praise from the critics.

The consequence of my escape made me naturally more daring, and I attempted, in my own name, a collection of ballads of various kinds, both ancient and modern, to be connected by the common tie of relation to the Border districts in which I had gathered the materials. The original preface explains my purpose, and the assistance of various kinds which I met with. The edition was curious, as being the first work printed by my friend and school-fellow, Mr. James Ballantyne, who, at that period, was editor of a provincial newspaper, called the Kelso Mail. When the book came out, in 1802, the imprint, Kelso, was read with wonder by amateurs of typography, who had never heard of such a place, and were astonished at the example of handsome printing which so obscure a town produced.

---

1 See Appendix, Note D.

As for the editorial part of the task, my attempt to imitate the plan and style of Bishop Percy, observing only more strict fidelity concerning my originals, was favorably received by the public, and there was a demand within a short space for a second edition, to which I proposed to add a third volume. Messrs. Cadell & Davies, the first publishers of the work, declined the publication of this second edition, which was undertaken, at a very liberal price, by the well-known firm of Messrs. Longman & Rees of Paternoster Row. My progress in the literary career, in which I might now be considered as seriously engaged, the reader will find briefly traced in an introduction prefixed to the "Lay of the Last Minstrel."

In the meantime, the editor has accomplished his proposed task of acquainting the reader with some particulars respecting the modern imitations of the Ancient Ballad, and the circumstances which gradually, and almost insensibly, engaged himself in that species of literary employment.

W. S.

Abbotsford, April, 1830.
Note A.

The Production of Modern as Ancient Ballads.—P. 557.

This failure applies to the repairs and rifacimentos of old ballads as well as to complete imitations. In the beautiful and simple ballad of "Gil Morris" some affected person has stuck in one or two factitious verses, which, like vulgar persons in a drawing-room, betray themselves by their over- finery. Thus, after the simple and affecting verse which prepares the reader for the coming tragedy—

"Gil Morris sat in good green wood,
He whistled and he sang;
'O, what mean a' you folk coming?
My mother tarries lang."

some such "vicious intrimitter" as we have described (to use a barbarous phrase for a barbarous proceeding) has inserted the following quintessence of affection:

"His locks were like the threads of gold
Drawn from Minerva's loom;
His lips like roses dropping dew,
His breath was a' perfume.

"His brow was like the mountain snow,
Girt by the morning beam;
His cheeks like living roses blow,
His eye like azure stream.

"The boy was clad in robes of green,
Sweet as the infant spring;
And like the mavis on the bush
He gart the valleys ring."

Note B.

M. G. Lewis.—P. 562.

In justice to a departed friend I have subjoined his own defence against an accusation so remorselessly persisted in. The following is an extract of a letter to his father:

"My dear Father:

"Though certain that the clamor raised against The Monk cannot have given you the smallest doubt of the rectitude of my intentions or the purity of my principles, yet I am conscious that it must have grieved you to find any doubts on the subject existing in the minds of other people. To express my sorrow for having given you pain is my motive for now addressing you, and also to assure you that you shall not feel that pain a second time on my account. Having made you feel it at all would be a sufficient reason, had I no others, to make me regret having published the first edition of The Monk; but I have others, weaker, indeed, than the one mentioned, but still sufficiently strong. I perceive that I have put too much confidence in the accuracy of my own judgment; that, convinced of my object being unexceptionable, I did not sufficiently examine whether the means by which I attained that object were equally so; and that, upon many accounts, I have to accuse myself of high imprudence. Let me, however, observe that twenty is not the age at which prudence is most to be expected. Inexperience prevented my distinguishing what would give offence; but as soon as I found that offence was given, I made the only reparation in my power—I carefully revised the work, and expunged every syllable on which could be grounded the slightest construction of immorality. This, indeed, was no difficult task; for the objections rested entirely on expressions too strong and words carelessly chosen, not on the sentiments, characters, or general tendency of the work;—that the latter is undeserving censure, Addison will vouch for me. The moral and outline of my story are taken from an allegory inserted by him in the Guardian, and which he commends highly for ability of invention and 'propriety of object.' Unluckily, in working it up, I thought that the stronger my colors, the more effect would my picture produce; and it never struck me that the exhibition of Vice in her temporary triumph might possibly do as much harm as her final exposure and punishment could do good. To do much good, indeed, was more than I expected of my book; having always believed that our conduct depends on our own hearts and characters, not on the books we read or the sentiments we hear. But though I did not hope much benefit to arise from the perusal of a trifling romance, written by a youth of twenty, I was in my own mind convinced that no harm could be produced by a work whose subject was furnished by one of our best moralists, and in the composition of which I did not introduce a single incident or a single character without meaning to illustrate some maxim universally allowed. It was, then, with infinite surprise that I heard the outcry raised against the" . . . .

[I regret that the letter, though once perfect, now only exists in my possession as a fragment.]

Note C.

German Ballads.—P. 565.

Among the popular ballads, or Volkslieder, of the celebrated Herder, is (take one instance out of many) a version of the old Scottish song of "Sir Patrick Spence," in which, but for difference of orthography, the two languages can be scarcely distinguished from each other. For example—

"The king sits in Dunfermling town,
Drinking the blood-red wine;
'Where will I get a good skipper
To sail this ship of mine?"
Scott's Poetical Works.

"Der Kemig sitzt in Dunfermling Schluss:
Er trinkt blutrothen Wein;
'O wo trifft ich einen Segler get Dies Schiff zu segeln mein?"

In like manner, the opening stanzas of "Child Waters," and many other Scottish ballads, fall as naturally and easily into the German habits and forms of speech as if they had originally been composed in that language:—

"About Yule, when the wind was eue,
And the round tables began,
O there is come to our king's court
Many weel-favour'd man."

"In Christmassfeast, in winter kalt,
Als Tafel rund began,
Da kam zu König's Hof and Hall
Manch wackrer Ritter an."

It requires only a smattering of both languages to see at what cheap expense, even of rhymes and rhythms, the popular poetry of the one may be transferred to the other. Hardly any thing is more flattering to a Scottish student of German; it resembles the unexpected discovery of an old friend in a foreign land.

Note D.

Extracts from the Correspondence of M. G. Lewis.— P. 567.

My attention was called to this subject, which is now of an old date, by reading the following passage in Medwin's Account of Some Passages in Lord Byron's Later Years. Lord Byron is supposed to speak:— "When Walter Scott began to write poetry, which was not at a very early age, Monk Lewis corrected his verse: he understood little tho' of the mechanical part of the art. The 'Fire King,' in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, was almost all Lewis's. One of the ballads in that work, and, except some of Leyden's, perhaps one of the best, was made from a story picked up in a stage-coach: I mean that of 'Will Jones.'

'They hold'd Will Jones within the pot,
And not much fat had Will.'

"I hope Walter Scott did not write the review on 'Christabel,' for he certainly, in common with many of us, is indebted to Coleridge. But for him, perhaps, the 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' would never have been thought of. The line, 'Jesu Maria shield thee well!' is word for word from Coleridge."

There are some parts of this passage extremely mistaken and exaggerated, as generally attends any attempt to record what passes in casual conversation, which resembles in difficulty the experiments of the old chemists for fixing quicksilver.

The following is a specimen of my poor friend Lewis' criticism on my juvenile attempts at ballad poetry; severe enough, perhaps, but for which I was much indebted to him, as forcing upon the notice of a young and careless author hints which the said author's vanity made him unwilling to attend to, but which were absolutely necessary to any hope of his ultimate success:—

"Supposed 1799.

"Thank you for your revised 'Glenfinlas.' I grumble, but say no more on this subject, although I hope you will not be so inflexible on that of your other ballads; for I do not despair of convincing you in time that a bad rhyme is, in fact, no rhyme at all. You desired me to point out my objections, leaving you at liberty to make use of them or not, and so have at 'Frederic and Alice.' Stanza 1st, 'bles' and 'joes' are not rhymes; the 1st stanza ends with 'joes'; the 2d begins with 'juggling.' In the 4th there is too sudden a change of tenses, 'flaws' and 'rose.' 6th, 7th, and 8th, I like much. 9th, Does not 'ring his ears' sound ludicrous in yours? The first idea that presents itself is that his ears were pulled; but even the ringing of the ears does not please. 12th, 'Shower' and 'roar,' not rhymes. 'Soll' and 'oile,' in the 13th, are not much better; but 'head' and 'descried' are excerable. In the 14th, 'gar' and 'star' are ditto; and 'groping' is a nasty word. Vide Johnson, 'He gropes his breeches with a monarch's air.' In the 15th you change your metre, which has always an unpleasant effect; and 'safe' and 'receiver,' rhyme just about as well as Scott and Lewis would. 16th, 'within' and 'strain' are not rhymes. 17th, 'hear' and 'air,' not rhymes. 18th, Two metres are mixed; the same objection to the third line of the 19th. Observe that, in the ballad, I do not always object to a variation of metre; but then it ought to increase the melody, whereas, in my opinion, in these instances it is diminished.

"The Chase.—12th, The 2d line reads very harshly; and 'choir' and 'fore,' not rhymes. 13th, 'Bicker' and 'side' are not rhymes. 30th, 'Pore' and 'obscure,' not rhymes. 40th, 'Sprays' and 'wades' are not rhymes. 46th, 'Rends' and 'assend' are not rhymes.

"William and Helen.—In order that I may bring it nearer the original title, pray introduce, in the first stanza, the name of Ellinora, instead of Ellen. 'Grande' and 'spent,' not rhymes in the 2d. 24th, 'Made' and 'shed' are not rhymes; and if they were, come too close to the rhymes in the 2d. In the 4th, 'Joy' and 'victory' are not rhymes. 7th, The first line wants a verb, otherwise is not intelligible. 13th, 'Grace' and 'bliss' are not rhymes. 14th, 'Bale' and 'hell' are not rhymes. 18th, 'Vain' and 'fruitless' is tautology; and as a verb is wanted, the line will run better thus, 'And vain is every prayer.' 19th, Is not 'to her' absolutely necessary in the 4th line? 20th, 'Grace' and 'bliss,' not rhymes. 21st, 'Bale' and 'hell,' not rhymes. 22d, I do not like the word 'spent.' 26d, 'Offer' and 'star' are vile rhymes. 26th, A verb is wanted in the 4th line; better thus, 'Then whispers a voice;' 29th, Is not 'I sit thou,' better than 'My love, my love!' 31st, If 'right' means, as I conjecture, 'enchanted,' does not this let the cat out of the bag? Ought not the spur to be sharp rather than bright? In the 4th line, 'Stay' and 'day' jingle together; would it not be better, 'I must be gone ere day'? 32d, 'Steed' and 'bed' are not rhymes. 34th, 'Bride' and 'bed' are not rhymes. 35th, 'Scott' and 'await,' not rhymes. 36th, 'Keep hold' and 'sit fast' seem to my ear vulgar and prosaic. 40th, The 4th line is defective in point of English, and, indeed, I do not quite understand the meaning. 49d, 'Arose' and 'pursues' are not rhymes. 54th, I am not pleased with the epithet 'savage;' and the latter part of the stanza is, to me, unintelligible. 60th, Is it not closer to the original in line 3'd to say, Swift ride the dead? 56th, Does the rain 'whistle?' 55th, line 3d, Does it express, 'Is Helen afraid of them?' 59th, 'Door' and 'flower' do not rhyme together. 69th, 'Scared' and 'heard' are not rhymes. 63d, 'Bone' and 'skleton,' not rhymes. 64th, The last line sounds ludicrous; one fancies the heroine coming down with a plump, and sprawling upon her bottom. I have now finished my severe examination, and pointed out every objection which I think can be suggested."

"Dear Scott: Your last ballad reached me just as I was stepping into my chaise to go to Brompton Hall (Lord Melbourne's), so I took it with me, and exhibited both that and 'Glenfinlas' with great success. I must not, however, conceal from you that nobody understood the Lady Flora of Glenlyne to be a disguised demon till the catastrophe arrived; and that the opinion was universal that some previous stanzas ought to be introduced descriptive of the nature and office of the wayward Ladies of the Wood. William Lambe, too (who writes good verses himself, and, therefore, may be allowed to judge those other people), was decidedly for the omission of the last stanza but one. These were the only objections started. I thought it as well that you should know them, whether you attend to them or not. With regard to 'St. John's Eve,' I like it much, and, instead of finding fault with its broken metre, I approve of it highly. I think, in this last ballad, you have hit off the ancient manner better than in your former ones. 'Glenfinlas,' for example, is more like a polished tale than an old ballad. But why, in verse 6th, is the baron's helmet hacked and hewed, if (as we are given to understand) he had assassinated his enemy? Ought not tore to be torn? Tore seems to me not English. In verse 16th, the last line is word for word from 'Gil Morrice.' 21st, 'Floor' and 'bower' are not rhymes, &c., &c., &c.

The gentleman noticed in the following letter, as partaker in the author's heresies respecting rhyme, had the less occasion to justify such license, as his own have been singularly accurate. Mr. Smythe is now Professor of Modern History at Cambridge:—

"LONDON, January 21, 1799.

"I must not omit telling you, for your own comfort and that of all such persons as are wicked enough to make bad rhymes, that Mr. Smythe (a very clever man at Cambridge) took great pains the other day to convince me, not merely that a bad rhyme might pass, but that occasionally a bad rhyme was better than a good one!!!!!!! I need not tell you that he left me as great an infidel on this subject as he found me.

"Ever yours,

"M. G. LEWIS."

The next letter respects the ballad called the "Fire King," stated by Captain Medwin to be almost all Lewis's. This is an entire misconception. Lewis, who was very fond of his idea of four elementary kings, had prevailed on me to supply a Fire King. After being repeatedly urged to the task, I sat down one day after dinner, and wrote the "Fire King," as it was published in the Tales of Wonder. The next extract gives an account of the manner in which Lewis received it, which was not very favorable; but instead of writing the greater part, he did not write a single word of it. Dr. Leyden, now no more, and another gentleman who still survives, were sitting at my side while I wrote it; nor did my occupation prevent the circulation of the bottle.

Leyden wrote a ballad for the Cloud King, which is mentioned in the ensuing extract. But it did not answer Mat's ideas, either in the color of the wings or some point of costume equally important; so Lewis, who was otherwise fond of the ballad, converted it into the Elfin King, and wrote a Cloud King himself, to finish the hierarchy in the way desired.

There is a leading mistake in the passage from Captain Medwin. The Minstrelsy of the Border is spoken of, but what is meant is the Tales of Wonder. The former work contains none of the ballads mentioned by Mr. Medwin; the latter has them all. Indeed, the dynasty of Elemental Kings were written entirely for Mr. Lewis' publication.

My intimate friend, William Clerk, Esq., was the person who heard the legend of "Will Jones" told in a mail-coach by a sea captain, who imagined himself to have seen the ghost to which it relates. The tale was versified by Lewis himself. I forget where it was published, but certainly in no miscellany or publication of mine.

I have only to add, in allusion to the passage I have quoted, that I never wrote a word parodying either Mr. Coleridge or any one else, which, in that distinguished instance, it would have been most ungracious in me to have done; for which the reader will see reasons in the introduction to the "Lay of the Last Minstrel."

"LONDON, 3d February, 1800.

"Dear Scott:

"I return you many thanks for your ballad and the extract, and I shall be very much obliged to your friend for the 'Cloud King.' I must, however, make one criticism upon the stanzas which you sent me. The Spirit, being a wicked one, must not have such delicate wings as pale blue ones. He has nothing to do with heaven except to deface it with storms; and therefore in The Monk, I have fitted him with a pair of sable pinions, to which I must request your friend to adapt his stanza. With the others I am much pleased, as I am with your 'Fire King;' but every body makes the same objection to it, and expresses a wish that you had conformed your Spirit to the description given of him in The Monk, where his office is to play the Will o' the Wisp, and lead travellers into bogs, &c. It is also objected to, his being removed from his native land, Denmark, to Palestine; and that the office assigned to him in your ballad has nothing peculiar to the 'Fire King,' but would have suited Arinmanes, Beelzebub, or any other evil spirit, as well. However, the ballad itself I think very pretty. I suppose you have heard from Bell respecting the copies of the ballads. I was too much distressed at the time to write myself," &c., &c.

"M. G. L."
CONTRIBUTIONS

to

Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

IMITATIONS OF THE ANCIENT BALLAD.

Thomas the Rhymer.

IN THREE PARTS.

PART FIRST.—ANCIENT.

FEW personages are so renowned in tradition as Thomas of Ercildoun, known by the appellation of The Rhymer. Uniting, or supposing to unite, in his person the powers of poetical composition and of vaticination, his memory, even after the lapse of five hundred years, is regarded with veneration by his countrymen. To give any thing like a certain history of this remarkable man would be indeed difficult; but the curious may derive some satisfaction from the particulars here brought together.

It is agreed on all hands that the residence, and probably the birthplace, of this ancient bard was Ercildoun, a village situated upon the Leader, two miles above its junction with the Tweed. The ruins of an ancient tower are still pointed out as the Rhymer's castle. The uniform tradition bears that his surname was Lermont, or Learmont, and that the appellation of The Rhymer was conferred on him in consequence of his poetical compositions. There remains, nevertheless, some doubt upon the subject. In a charter, which is subjoined at length, the son of our poet designed himself "Thomas of Ercildoun, son and heir of Thomas Rymour of Ercildoun," which seems to imply that the father did not bear the hereditary name of Learmont; or, at least, was better known and distinguished by the epithet which he had acquired by his personal accomplishments. I must, however, remark that, down to a very late period, the practice of distinguishing the parties, even in formal writings, by the epithets which had been bestowed on them from personal circumstances, instead of the proper surnames of their families, was common, and indeed necessary, among the Border clans. So early as the end of the thirteenth century, when surnames were hardly introduced in Scotland, this custom must have been universal. There is, therefore, nothing inconsistent in supposing our poet's name to have been actually Learmont, although, in this charter, he is distinguished by the popular appellation of The Rhymer.

We are better able to ascertain the period at which Thomas of Ercildoun lived, being the latter end of the thirteenth century. I am inclined to place his death a little farther back than Mr. Pinkerton, who supposes that he was alive in 1300 (List of Scottish Poets), which is hardly, I think, consistent with the charter already quoted, by which his son, in 1299, for himself and his heirs, conveys to the convent of the Trinity of Soltra the tenement which he possessed by inheritance (hereditarie) in Ercildoun, with all claim which he or his predecessors could pretend thereto. From this we may infer that the Rhymer was now dead, since we find the son disposing of the family property. Still, however, the argument of the learned historian will remain unimpeached as to the time of the poet's birth. For if, as well as Barbour, his prophesies were held in reputation as early as

1 See Appendix, Note A.

2 The lines alluded to are these:—
1306, when Bruce slew the Red Cummin, the sanctity and (let me add to Mr. Pinkerton's words) the uncertainty of antiquity must have already involved his character and writings. In a charter of Peter de Haga de Bemersyde, which unfortunately wants a date, the Rhymer, a near neighbor, and, if we may trust tradition, a friend of the family, appears as a witness.—Chartulary of Melrose.

It cannot be doubted that Thomas of Ercildonne was a remarkable and important person in his own time, since, very shortly after his death, we find him celebrated as a prophet and as a poet. Whether he himself made any pretensions to the first of these characters, or whether it was gratuitously conferred upon him by the credulity of posterity, it seems difficult to decide. If we may believe Mackenzie, Learmont only verified the prophecies delivered by Eliza, an inspired nun of a convent at Haddington. But of this there seems not to be the most distant proof. On the contrary, all ancient authors who quote the Rhymer's prophecies uniformly suppose them to have been emitted by himself. Thus, in Winton's Chronicle—

"Of this sycht qu'ilum spak Thomas Of Eryldonne, that say'd in derne, There suld melt stawlarty, starke and sterne. He sayd it in his prophecy; But how he wist it was ferly."

Book viii. chap. 32.

There could have been no ferly (marvellous) in Winton's eyes at least, how Thomas came by his knowledge of future events, had he ever heard of the inspired nun of Haddington, which, it cannot be doubted, would have been a solution of the mystery much to the taste of the Prior of Lochleven.

Whatever doubts, however, the learned might have as to the source of the Rhymer's prophetic skill, the vulgar had no hesitation to ascribe the whole to the intercourse between the bard and the Queen of Faery. The popular tale bears that Thomas was carried off, at an early age, to the Fairy-land, where he acquired all the knowledge which made him afterwards so famous. After seven years' residence, he was permitted to return to the earth, to enlighten and astonish his countrymen by his prophetic powers; still, however, remaining bound to return to his royal mistress when she should intimate her pleasure. Accordingly, while Thomas was making merry with his friends in the Tower of Ercildonne, a person came running in, and told, with marks of fear and astonishment, that a hart and hind had left the neighboring forest, and were composedly and slowly parading the street of the village. The prophet instantly arose, left his habitation, and followed the wonderful animals to the forest, whence he was never seen to return. According to the popular belief, he still "dres his weird" in Fairy-land, and is one day expected to revisit earth. In the meanwhile, his memory is held in the most profound respect. The Eildon Tree, from beneath the shade of which he delivered his prophecies, now no longer exists; but the spot is marked by a large stone, called Eildon Tree Stone. A neighboring rivulet takes the name of the Bogle Burn (Goblin Brook) from the Rhymer's supernatural visitants. The veneration paid to his dwelling-place even attached itself in some degree to a person who, within the memory of man, chose to set up his residence in the ruins of Learmont's tower. The name of this man was Murray, a kind of herbalist; who, by dint of some knowledge in simples, the possession of a musical clock, an electrical machine, and a stuffed alligator, added to a supposed communication with Thomas the Rhymer, lived for many years in very good credit as a wizard.

It seemed to the editor unpardonable to dismiss a person so important in Border tradition as the Rhymer, without some further notice than a simple commentary upon the following bawd. It is given from a copy, obtained from a lady residing not far from Ercildon, corrected and enlarged by one in Mrs. Brown's MSS. The former copy, however, as might be expected, is far more minute as to local description. To this old tale the editor has ventured to add a Second Part, consisting of a kind of cento, from the printed prophecies vulgarly ascribed to the Rhymer; and a Third Part, entirely modern, founded upon the tradition of his having returned with the hart and hind to the Land of Faery. To make his peace with the more severe antiquaries, the editor has prefixed to the Second Part some remarks on Learmont's prophecies.

THOMAS THE RHYMER.

PART FIRST.

True Thomas lay on Huntlie bank;
A ferlie he spied wi' his ee;
And there he saw a ladye bright
Come riding down by the Eildon Tree.

I cannot say by wrong or righteousness.
It may be deemed by division of grace;  &c.

1 Henry the Minstrel, who introduces Thomas into the History of Wallace, expresses the same doubt as to the source of his prophetic knowledge:

"Thomas Rhymer into the faile was than
With the minister, which was a worthy man.
He usef oft to that religious place;
The people deemed of wit he meikle can,
And so he told, though that they bess or ban,
In rule of war whether they tuit or wan;
Which happened sooth in many divers case;"

3 There is a singular resemblance betwixt this tradition and an incident occurring in the life of Merlin Caledonicus, which the reader will find a few pages onwards.

4 Huntly Bank and the adjoining ravine, called, from immemorial tradition, the Rhymer's Glen, were ultimately included in the domain of Abbotsford. The scenery of this glen forms
Her shirt was o' the grass-green silk,
Her mantle o' the velvet fyne;
At ilka tett of her horse's mane,
Hung fifty siller bells and nine.

True Thomas, he pull'd aff his cap,
And louted low down to his knee,
"All hail, thou mighty Queen of Heaven!
For thy peer on earth I never did see."—

"Oh no, oh no, Thomas," she said,
"That name does not belong to me;
I am but the Queen of fair Eililand,
That am hither come to visit thee.

"Harp and carp, Thomas," she said;
"Harp and carp along wi' me;
And if ye dare to kiss my lips,
Sure of your bodie I will be."—

"Betide weal, betide me woe,
That weird shall never daunton me,"—
Syne he has kiss'd her rosy lips,
All underneath the Eildon Tree.

"Now, ye maun go wi' me," she said;
"True Thomas, ye maun go wi' me;
And ye maun serve me seven years,
Thro' weal or woe as may chance to be."

She mounted on her milk-white steed;
She's ta'en true Thomas up behind:
And aye, whene'er her bridle rung,
The steed flew swifter than the wind.

Oh they rade on, and farther on;
The steed gaed swifter than the wind;
Until they reach'd a desert wide,
And living land was left behind.

"Light down, light down, now, true Thomas,
And lean your head upon my knee;
Abide and rest a little space,
And I will shew you ferries three.

"Oh see ye not you narrow road,
So thick beset with thorns and briers?
That is the path of righteousness,
Though after it but few inquires.

"And see ye not that haid braid road,
That lies across that lily leven?
That is the path of wickedness,
Though some call it the road to heaven.

"And see not ye that bonny road,
That winds about the fernie brae?
That is the road to fair Eililand,
Where thou and I this night maun gae.

"But, Thomas, ye maun hold your tongue,
Whatever ye may hear or see;
For, if ye speak word in Ellyn land,
Ye'll ne'er get back to your ain countrie."

Oh they rade on, and farther on,
And they waded through rivers aboon the knee,
And they saw neither sun nor moon,
But they heard the roaring of the sea.

It was mirk mirk night, and there was nae stern light,
And they waded through red blude to the knee;
For a' the blude that's shed on earth
Rins through the springs o' that countrie.

Syne they came on to a garden green,
And she pu'd an apple frae a tree—
"Take this for thy wages, true Thomas;
It will give thee the tongue that can never lie."—

"My tongue is mine ain," true Thomas said;
"A gudely gift ye wad gie to me!
I neither dought to buy nor sell,
At fair or tryst where I may be.

"I dought neither speak to prince or peer,
Nor ask of grace from fair ladye."—
"Now hold thy peace!" the lady said,
"For as I say, so must it be."

He has gotten a coat of the even cloth,
And a pair of shoes of the velvett green;
And till seven years were gane and past,
True Thomas on earth was never seen.

Thomas the Rhymer.

PART SECOND.—ALTERED FROM ANCIENT PROPHECIES.

The prophecies ascribed to Thomas of Ercildoune have been the principal means of securing to him remembrance "amongst the sons of his people." The

---

The background of Edwin Landseer's portrait of Sir Walter Scott, painted in 1833. —Ed.

1 That weird, &c.—That destiny shall never frighten me.

2 The traditional commentary upon this ballad informs us that the apple was the produce of the fatal Tree of Knowledge, and that the garden was the terrestrial paradise. The repugnance of Thomas to be debared the use of falsehood, when he might find it convenient, has a comic effect.

3 See Appendix, Note B.
author of "Sir Tristrem" would long ago have joined, in the vale of oblivion, "Clerk of Tranent, who wrote the adventure of Schir Gauzin," if, by good hap, the same current of ideas respecting antiquity which causes Virgil to be regarded as a magician by the Lazaroni of Naples had not exalted the bard of Erieilounge to the prophetic character. Perhaps, indeed, he himself affected it during his life. We know, at least, for certain, that a belief in his supernatural knowledge was current soon after his death. His prophecies are alluded to by Barbour, by Winton, and by Henry the Minstrel, or Blind Harry, as he is usually termed. None of these authors, however, give the words of any of the Rhymr's vaticinations, but merely narrate, historically, his having predicted the events of which they speak. The earliest of the prophecies ascribed to him which is now extant is quoted by Mr. Pinkerton from a MS. It is supposed to be a response from Thomas of Erieilounge to a question from the heroic Countess of March, renowned for the defence of the castle of Dunbar against the English, and termed, in the familiar dialect of her time, Black Agnes of Dunbar. This prophecy is remarkable, in so far as it bears very little resemblance to any verses published in the printed copy of the Rhymr's supposed prophecies. The verses are as follows:

"La Countesse de Dunbar demande a Thomas de Ercildoune quant la guerre d'Ecosse prendroit fin. E'yl la repoussy et dy.

When man is nae a kyng of a capped man;
When man is levere other mones thynge than his owen;
When bonde thouns forest, ant forest is fele;
When hares kendles o' the her'stane;
When Wytt and Willie werres togedere;
When mon makes stables of kyrkys, and steles castels with sty;
When Rokesborough nys no burgh ant market is at Forwy-le;
When Bambourne is dongs with dede men;
When men ledes men in ropes to buyen and to sullen;
When a quarter of whaty whote is changed for a colt of ten markes;
When prude (pride) prikies and pees is leyd in prisoun;
When a Scot ne me hym halee asse hare in forme that the English ne shall hym fynde;
When rycht ant wronge astente the togedere;
When laddies weddeth lovedis;
When Scottes flen so fuste, that, for fuste of shep, by drowneth hemselfe;
When shal this be?
Neither in thine tymne ne in mine;
Ae comen ant gone
Withinne twenty winter ant one."

Pinkerton's Poems, from Maitland's MSS. quoting from Harl. Lib. 2233, F. 127.

As I have never seen the MS. from which Mr. Pinkerton makes this extract, and as the date of it is fixed by him (certainly one of the most able antiquaries of our age) to the reign of Edward I. or II., it is with great diffidence that I hazard a contrary opinion. There can, however, I believe, be little doubt that these prophetic verses are a forgery, and not the production of our Thomas the Rhymr. But I am inclined to believe them of a later date than the reign of Edward I. or II.

The gallant defence of the castle of Dunbar by Black Agnes took place in the year 1297. The Rhymr died previous to the year 1299 (see the charter, by his son, in the Appendix). It seems, therefore, very improbable that the Countess of Dunbar could ever have an opportunity of consulting Thomas the Rhymr, since that would infer that she was married, or at least engaged in state matters, previous to 1299; whereas she is described as a young or a middle-aged woman at the period of her being besieged in the fortress which she so well defended. If the editor might indulge a conjecture, he would suppose that the prophecy was contrived for the encouragement of the English invaders during the Scottish wars; and that the names of the Countess of Dunbar and of Thomas of Erieilounge were used for the greater credit of the forgery. According to this hypothesis, it seems likely to have been composed after the siege of Dunbar, which had made the name of the Countess well known, and consequently in the reign of Edward III. The whole tendency of the prophecy is to aver that there shall be no end of the Scottish war (concerning which the question was proposed) till a final conquest of the country by England, attended by all the usual severities of war. "When the cultivated country shall become forest," says the prophecy; "when the wild animals shall inhabit the abode of men;—when Scots shall not be able to escape the English, should they couch as hares in their form;"—all these denunciations seem to refer to the time of Edward III., upon whose victories the prediction was probably founded. The mention of the exchange betwixt a colt worth ten marks and a quarter of "whaty [indifferent] wheat" seems to allude to the dreadful famine, about the year 1388. The independence of Scotland was, however, as impregnable to the mines of superstition as to the steel of our more powerful and more wealthy neighbors. The war of Scotland is, thank God, at an end; but it is ended without her people having either crouched like hares in their form, or being drowned in their flight, "for fante of ships,"—thank God for that too. The prophecy quoted in the preceding page is probably of the same date, and intended for the same purpose.

A minute search of the records of the time would probably throw additional light upon the allusions contained in these ancient legends. Among various rhymes of prophetic import, which are at this day current amongst the people of Teviotdale, is one, supposed to be pronounced by Thomas the Rhymr, presaging the destruction of his habitation and family:

"The hare sail kittle [litter] on my hearth stane,
And there will never be a Laird Learmont again."

The first of these lines is obviously borrowed from that in the MS. of the Harl. Library—"When hares kendles o' the her'stane"—an emphatic image of desolation. It is also inaccurately quoted in the prophecy of Waldhave, published by Andro Hart, 1613:—

"This is a true talking that Thomas of tells,\nThe hare shall hirple on the hard [hearth] stane."

Spottiswoode, an honest but credulous historian, seems to have been a firm believer in the authenticity of the prophetic wares vended in the name of Thomas of Ercildoune. "The prophecies, yet extant in Scottish rhymes, wherein he was commonly called Thomas the Rhymer, may justly be admired; having foretold, so many ages before the union of England and Scotland in the ninth degree of the Bruce's blood, with the succession of Bruce himself to the crown, being yet a child, and other divers particulars, which the event hath ratified and made good. Boethius, in his story, relateth his prediction of King Alexander's death, and that he did foretell the same to the Earl of March, the day before it fell out; saying, 'That before the next day at noon, such a tempest should blow, as Scotland had not felt for many years before.' The next morning, the day being clear, and no change appearing in the air, the nobleman did challenge Thomas of his saying, calling him an impostor. He replied, that noon was not yet passed. About which time a post came to advertise the earl of the king his sudden death. 'Then,' said Thomas, 'this is the tempest I foretold; and so it shall prove to Scotland.' Whence, or how, he had this knowledge, can hardly be affirmed; but sure it is, that he did divine and answer truly of many things to come." —SPOTTISWOODE, p. 47. Besides that notable voucher, Master Hector Boece, the good archbishop might, had he been so minded, have referred to Fordun for the prophecy of King Alexander's death. That historian calls our bard "rualis ille vates." —FORDUN, lib. x. cap. 40.

What Spottiswoode calls "the prophecies extant in Scottish rhyme" are the metrical productions ascribed to the seer of Ercildoune, which, with many other compositions of the same nature, bearing the names of Bede, Merlin, Gildas, and other approved soothsayers, are contained in one small volume, published by Andro Hart, at Edinburgh, 1615. Nisbet the herald (who claims the prophet of Ercildoune as a brother-professor of his art, founding upon the various allegorical and emblematical allusions to heraldry) intimates the existence of some earlier copy of his prophecies than that of Andro Hart, which, however, he does not pretend to have seen.¹ The late excellent Lord Hailes made these compositions the subject of a dissertation, published in his Remarks on the History of Scotland. His attention is chiefly directed to the celebrated prophecy of our bard, mentioned by Bishop Spottiswoore, bearing that the crowns of England and Scotland should be united in the person of a king, son of a French queen, and related to the Bruce in the ninth degree. Lord Hailes plainly proves that this prophecy is perverted from its original purpose, in order to apply it to the succession of James VI. The groundwork of the forgery is to be found in the prophecies of Bertlpton, contained in the same collection, and runs thus:—

"Of Bruce's left side shall spring out a leaf,\nAs meare as the ninth degree;\nAnd shall be fleem'd of faire Scotland,\nIn France farre beyond the sea.\nAnd then shall come again ryding,\nWith eyes that many men may see.\nAt Aberlady he shall light,\nWith hempen helteres and horse of tre.\n
However it happen for to fall,\nThe lyon shall be lord of all;\nThe French Quean shall barse the sonne,\nShall rule all Britaine to the sea;\nAne from the Bruce's blood shall come also,\nAs neer as the ninth degree."

Yet shall there come a keene knight over the salt sea,\nA keene man of courage and bold man of armes;\nA duke's son dowbled [i. e. dubbed], a born man in France,\nThat shall our mirths augment, and mend all our harms;\nAfter the date of our Lord 1513, and thrice three thereafter;\nWhich shall broke all the broad isle to himself,\nBetween thirteen and thrice thre the treip shall be ended;\nThe Saxons shall never recover after."

There cannot be any doubt that this prophecy was intended to excite the confidence of the Scottish nation in the Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland, who arrived from France in 1515, two years after the death of James IV. in the fatal field of Flodden. The regent was descended of Bruce by the left, i. e. by the female side, within the ninth degree. His mother was daughter of the Earl of Boulogne, his father banished from his country—"fleem't of fair Scotland." His arrival must necessarily be by sea, and his landing was expected at Aberlady, in the Firth of Forth. He was a duke's son, dubbed knight; and nine years, from 1513, are allowed him by the pretended prophet for the accomplishment of the salvation of his country and the exaltation of Scotland over her sister and rival. All this was a pious fraud, to excite the confidence and spirit of the country.

The prophecy put in the name of our Thomas the Rhymer, as it stands in Hart's book, refers to a later period. The narrator meets the Rhymer upon a land beside a loch, who shows him many emblematical visions, described in no mean strain of poetry. They chiefly relate to the fields of Flodden and Pinkie, to the national distress which followed these defeats, and to future halcyon days which are promised to Scotland. One quotation or two will be sufficient to establish this fully:—

"Our Scottish King sae come ful keene,\nThe red lyon beareth he;\nA federed arrow sharp, I ween,\nShall make him winke and warre to see.\nOut of the field he shall be led,\nWhen he is bludie and woe for blood;\nYet to his men shall he say,\n'For God's love turn you againe,
The Rhymer's Glen.

Thomas the Rhymer, Part I.
And give you sutherne folk a frey!
Why should I lose, the right is mine?
My date is not to die this day!"

Who can doubt, for a moment, that this refers to the battle of Flodden, and to the popular reports concerning the doubtful fate of James IV.? Allusion is immediately afterwards made to the death of George Douglas, heir apparent of Angus, who fought and fell with his sovereign:—

"The sternes three that day shall die,
That bears the harte in silver sheen."

The well-known arms of the Douglas family are the heart and three stars. In another place, the battle of Pinkie is expressly mentioned by name:—

"At Pinken Clichen there shall be spilt
Much gentle blood that day;
There shall the bear lose the guilt,
And the eagl bear it away."

To the end of all this allegorical and mystical rhapsody is interpolated, in the later edition by Andro Hart, a new edition of Berlimont's verses, before quoted, altered and manufactured so as to bear reference to the accession of James VI., which had just then taken place. The insertion is made with a peculiar degree of awkwardness, betwixt a question, put by the narrator, concerning the name and abode of the person who showed him these strange matters, and the answer of the prophet to that question:—

"Then to the Beinne could I say,
Where dwells thou, or in what countrie?
[or who shall rule the isle of Britaine,
From the north to the south sey?]
A French queue shall bear the sonne,
Shall rule all Britaine to the sea;
Which of the Bruce's blood shall come,
As nere as the nint degree:
I trained fast what was his name,
Where that he came, from what countrie.]
In Eldounf I dwell at hame,
Thomas Rymour men calls me."

There is surely none who will not conclude, with Lord Hailes, that the eight lines enclosed in brackets are a clumsy interpolation, borrowed from Berlimont, with such alterations as might render the supposed prophecy applicable to the union of the crowns. While we are on this subject, it may be proper briefly to notice the scope of some of the other predictions in Hart's collection. As the prophecy of Berlimont was intended to raise the spirits of the nation, during the regency of Albany, so those of Sybilla and Eltralue refer to that of the Earl of Arran, afterwards Duke of Chatelherault, during the minority of Mary, a period of similar calamity. This is obvious from the following verses:—

"Take a thousand in calculation,
And the longest of the Lyon,
Four crescents under one crowne,
With Saint Andrew's crose thrisse,
Then trescore and thrisse three:

Take tent to Merling truely,
Then shall the wars ended be,
And never again rise,
In that yere there shall a king,
A duke, and no crown'd king:
Because the prince shall be yong,
And tender of yeares."

The date above hinted at seems to be 1549, when the Scottish regent, by means of some success derived from France, was endeavoring to repair the consequences of the fatal battle of Pinkie. Allusion is made to the supply given to the "Moldwarte [England] by the fained hart" (the Earl of Angus). The regent is described by his bearing the antelope; large supplies are promised from France, and complete conquest predicted to Scotland and her allies. Thus was the same hackneyed stratagem repeated whenever the interest of the rulers appeared to stand in need of it. The regent was not, indeed, till after this period, created Duke of Chatelherault; but that honor was the object of his hopes and expectations.

The name of our renowned soothsayer is liberally used as an authority throughout all the prophecies published by Andro Hart. Besides those expressly put in his name, Gildas, another assumed personage, is supposed to derive his knowledge from him; for he concludes thus:—

"True Thomas me told in a troublesome time,
In a harvest morn at Eldoun hills:"

The Prophecy of Gildas.

In the prophecy of Berlimont, already quoted, we are told,

"Marvellous Merlin, that many men of tells,
And Thomas's sayings comes all at once."

While I am upon the subject of these prophecies, may I be permitted to call the attention of antiquaries to Merwynn Wyllt, or Merlin the Wild, in whose name, and by no means in that of Ambrose Merlin, the friend of Arthur, the Scottish prophecies are issued? That this personage resided at Drummelzier, and roamed, like a second Nebuchadnezzar, the woods of Tweeddale, in remorse for the death of his nephew, we learn from Fordun. In the Scotti-Chronicon, lib. 3, cap. 31, is an account of an interview betwixt St. Kentigern and Merlin, then in this distracted and miserable state. He is said to have been called Lai-loken, from his mode of life. On being commanded by the saint to give an account of himself, he says that the penance which he performs was imposed on him by a voice from heaven, during a bloody contest betwixt Lidel and Carwalore, of which battle he had been the cause. According to his own prediction, he perished at once by wood, earth, and water; for, being pursued with stones by the rustics, he fell from a rock into the river Tweed, and was transfixed by a sharp stake, fixed there for the purpose of extending a fishing-net:—

"Sude perrosus, lapide percuusus, et unda, Hae tria Merlinum fortur inire necem."

37
But, in a metrical history of Merlin of Caledonia, compiled by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from the traditions of the Welsh bards, this mode of death is attributed to a page, whom Merlin's sister, desirous to convict the prophet of falsehood, because he had betrayed her intrigues, introduced to him, under three various disguises, inquiring each time in what manner the person should die. To the first demand Merlin answered, the party should perish by a fall from a rock; to the second, that he should die by a tree; and to the third, that he should be drowned. The youth perished, while hunting, in the mode imputed by Fordun to Merlin himself.

Fordun, contrary to the French authorities, confounds this person with the Merlin of Arthur; but concludes by informing us that many believed him to be a different person. The grave of Merlin is pointed out at Drummelzir, in Tweeddale, beneath an aged thorn-tree. On the east side of the churchyard, the brook called Pausay falls into the Tweed; and the following prophecy is said to have been current concerning their union:

"When Tweed and Pausay join at Merlin's grave, Scotland and England shall one monarch have."

On the day of the coronation of James VI., the Tweed accordingly overflowed, and joined the Pausay at the prophet's grave.—

PENNYCUICK'S History of Tweeddale, p. 26. These circumstances would seem to infer a communication betwixt the southwest of Scotland and Wales, of a nature peculiarly intimate; for I presume that Merlin would retain sense enough to choose for the scene of his wanderings a country having a language and manners similar to his own.

Be this as it may, the memory of Merlin Sylvester, or the Wild, was fresh among the Scots during the reign of James V. Waldhave,1 under whose name a set of prophecies were published, describes himself as lying upon Lonmond Law; he hears a voice, which bids him stand to his defence; he looks around, and beholds a flock of hares and foxes2 pursued over the mountain by a savage figure, to whom he can hardly give the name of man. At the sight of Waldhave, the apparition leaves the objects of his pursuit, and assaults him with a club. Waldhave defends himself with his sword, throws the savage to the earth, and refuses to let him arise till he swear, by the law and lead he lives upon, "to do him no harm." This done, he permits him to arise, and marvels at his strange appearance:

"He was formed like a freke [man] all his four quarters;
And then his chin and his face haired so thick,
With hair growing so grime, fearful to see."

He answers briefly to Waldhave's inquiry concerning his name and nature, that he "drees his weird," i.e., does penance in that wood; and, having hinted that questions as to his own state are offensive, he pours forth an obscure rhapsody concerning futurity, and concludes,—

"Go musing upon Merlin if thou wilt: For I mean no more, man, at this time."

This is exactly similar to the meeting betwixt Merlin and Kentigern in Fordun. These prophecies of Merlin seem to have been in request in the minority of James V.; for among the amusements with which Sir David Lindsay diverted that prince during his infancy are

"The prophecies of Rymer, Bede, and Merlin."

SIR DAVID LINDSAY'S Epistle to the King.

And we find in Waldhave at least one allusion to the very ancient prophecy addressed to the Countess of Dunbar:—

"This is a true token that Thomas of tells,
When a ladde with a ladye shall go over the fields."

The original stands thus:—

"When laddes weddeth lovedy's."

Another prophecy of Merlin seems to have been current about the time of the Regent Morton's execution. When that nobleman was committed to the charge of his accuser, Captain James Stewart, newly created Earl of Arran, to be conducted to his trial at Edinburgh, Spottiswoode says that he asked, "Who was Earl of Arran?" and being answered that Captain James was the man, after a short pause, he said, 'And is it so? I know then what I may look for;' meaning, as was thought, that the old prophecy of the 'Falling of the heart'3 by the mouth of Arran' should then be fulfilled. Whether this was his mind or not, it is not known; but some spared not, at the time when the Hamiltons were banished, in which business he was held too earnest, to say that he stood in fear of that prediction, and went that course only to disappoint it. But if so it was, he did find himself now deluded; for he fell by the mouth of another Arran than he imagined."—SPOTTISWOODE, 313. The fatal words alluded to seem to be these in the prophecy of Merlin:

"In the mouthe of Arrane a sleuch' shall fall,
Two bloodie hearts shall be taken with a false traine,
And derfy dung down without any dome."

To return from these desultory remarks, into which I have been led by the celebrated name of Merlin, the style of all these prophecies published by Hart is very much the same. The measure is alliterative,

---

1 I do not know whether the person here meant be Waldhave, an abbot of Melrose, who died in the odor of sanctity, about 1160.

2 See Appendix, Note D.

3 The heart was the cognizance of Morton.
and somewhat similar to that of Pierce Plowman's _Visions_; a circumstance which might entitle us to ascribe to some of them an earlier date than the reign of James V., did we not know that Sir Gallorun of Galloway and Gawaine and Golgozus, two romances rendered almost unintelligible by the extremity of affected alliteration, are perhaps not prior to that period. Indeed, although we may allow that, during much earlier times, prophecies, under the names of those celebrated soothsayers, have been current in Scotland, yet those published by Hart have obviously been so often vamped and revamped, to serve the political purposes of different periods, that it may be shrewdly suspected that, as in the case of Sir John Cutler's transmigrated stockings, very little of the original materials now remains. I cannot refrain from indulging my readers with the publisher's title to the last prophecy, as it contains certain curious information concerning the Queen of Sheba, who is identified with the Cumean Sibyl:—

"Here followeth a prophetic, pronounced by a noble queen and matron, called Sybilla, Regina Austri, that come to Solomon. Through the which she compiled four bookees, at the instance of the said King Sol, and others divers: and the fourth book was directed to a noble king, called Baldwine, King of the broad ile of Britain; in the which she maketh mention of two noble princes and emperours, the which is called Leones. How these two shall subdue and overcome all earthly princes to their diademe and crownes, and also be glorified and crowned in the heaven among saints. The first of these two is Constantinus Magnus; that was Leprous, the son of Saint Helena, that found the croce. The second is the sixt king of the name of Steward of Scotland, the which is our most noble king." With such editors and commentators, what wonder that the text became unintelligible, even beyond the usual oracular obscurity of prediction?

If there still remain, therefore, among these predictions, any verses having a claim to real antiquity, it seems now impossible to discover them from those which are comparatively modern. Nevertheless, as there are to be found, in these compositions, some uncommonly wild and masculine expressions, the editor has been induced to throw a few passages together, into the sort of ballad to which this disposition is prefixed. It would, indeed, have been no difficult matter for him, by a judicious selection, to have excelled, in favor of Thomas of Ercildoune, a share of the admiration bestowed by sundry wise persons upon Mass Robert Fleming.1 For example—

"But then the lily shall be loused when they least think; Then clear king's blood shall quake for fear of death; For charis shall chop off heads of their chief beirs, And carve of the crowns that Christ hath appointed.

Thereafter, on every side, sorrow shall arise;"

1 The Rev. R. Fleming, pastor of a Scotch congregation in London, published in 1701 _Discourses on the Rise and Fall of Papacy_, in which he expressed his belief, founded on a text

The barges of clear barons down shall be sunken; Seculars shall sit in spiritual seats, Occupying offices anointed as they were."

Taking the lily for the emblem of France, can there be a more plain prophecy of the murder of her monarch, the destruction of her nobility, and the desolation of her hierarchy?

But, without looking further into the signs of the times, the editor, though the least of all the prophets, cannot help thinking that every true Briton will approve of his application of the last prophecy quoted in the ballad.

Hart's collection of prophecies was frequently reprinted during the last century, probably to favor the pretensions of the unfortunate family of Stuart. For the prophetic renown of Gildas and Bede, see _Fordun_, lib. 3.

Before leaving the subject of Thomas' predictions, it may be noticed that sundry rhymes, passing for his prophetic effusions, are still current among the vulgar. Thus, he is said to have prophesied of the very ancient family of Haig of Bemerside,

"Betide, betide, what'er betide, Haig shall be Haig of Bemerside."

The grandfather of the present proprietor of Bemerside had twelve daughters before his lady brought him a male heir. The common people trembled for the credit of their favorite soothsayer. The late Mr. Haig was at length born, and their belief in the prophecy confirmed beyond a shadow of doubt.

Another memorable prophecy bore that the Old Kirk at Kelso, constructed out of the ruins of the abbey, should "fall when at the fullest." At a very crowded sermon, about thirty years ago, a piece of lime fell from the roof of the church. The alarm, for the fulfillment of the words of the seer, became universal; and happy were they who were nearest the door of the predestined edifice. The church was in consequence deserted, and has never since had an opportunity of tumbling upon a full congregation. I hope, for the sake of a beautiful specimen of Saxo-Gothic architecture, that the accomplishment of this prophecy is far distant.

Another prediction, ascribed to the Rhymer, seems to have been founded on that sort of insight into futurity possessed by most men of a sound and combining judgment. It runs thus:—

"At Eldon Tree if you shall be, A brig over Tweed you there may see."

The spot in question commands an extensive prospect of the course of the river; and it was easy to foresee that when the country should become in the least degree improved, a bridge would be somewhere thrown over the stream. In fact, you now see no less than three bridges from that elevated situation.

_in the Apocalypse, that the French monarchy would undergo some remarkable humiliation about 1794._—Ed.
Corsepatrick (Comes Patrick), Earl of March, but more commonly taking his title from his castle of Dunbar, acted a noted part during the wars of Edward I. in Scotland. As Thomas of Eureidoune is said to have delivered to him his famous prophecy of King Alexander's death, the editor has chosen to introduce him into the following ballad. All the prophetic verses are selected from Hart's publication.¹

THOMAS THE RHYMER.

PART SECOND.

When seven years were come and gane,
The sun blink'd fair on pool and stream;
And Thomas lay on Hunteh bank,
Like one awak'd from a dream.

He heard the trampling of a steed,
He saw the flash of armour flee,
And he beheld a gallant knight
Come riding down by the Eildon-tree.

He was a stalwart knight, and strong;
Of giant make he 'pear'd to be:
He stirr'd his horse, as he were wode,
Wi' gilded spurs, of faunshion free.

Says—"Well met, well met, true Thomas!
Some uncouth ferlies show to me."—
Says—"Christ thee save, Corsepatrick brave!
Thrice welcome, good Dunbar, to me!

"Light down, light down, Corsepatrick brave!
And I will show thee curses three,
Shall gar fair Scotland greet and grane,
And change the green to the black livery.

"A storm shall roar this very hour,
From Ross's hills to Solway sea."—
"Ye lied, ye lied, ye warlock hoar!
For the sun shines sweet on fauld and lee."

He put his hand on the Earlie's head;
He show'd him a rock beside the sea,
Where a king lay sti' beneath his steed,²
And steel-light nobles wiped their ee.

¹ An exact reprint of these prophecies, from the edition of Waldegrave, in 1663, collated with Hart's, of 1615, from the copy in the Abbotsford Library, was completed for the Bannatyne Club, under the care of the learned antiquary, Mr. David Laing of Edinburgh.—Ed. 1833.

² King Alexander, killed by a fall from his horse, near Kinghorn.

"The neist curse lights on Brantxon hills:
By Flodden's high and heathery side,
Shall wave a banner red as blude,
And chieftains throng wi' meikle pride.

"A Scottish King shall come full keen,
The ruddy lion bear eth he;
A feather'd arrow sharp, I ween,
Shall make him wink and warre to see.

"When he is bloody, and all to bledde,
Thus to his men he still shall say—
'For God's sake, turn ye back again,
And give ye southern folk a fray!
Why should I lose, the right is mine?
My doom is not to die this day."³

"Yet turn ye to the eastern hand,
And woe and wonder ye sall see!
How forty thousand spearmen stand,
Where yeon rank river meets the sea.

"There shall the lion lose the gylte,
And the libbards bear it clean away;
At Pinkyn Clench there shall be spilt
Much gentil bluid that day."—

"Enough, enough, of curse and ban;
Some blessings show thou now to me,
Or, by the faith o' my bodie," Corsepatrick said,
"Ye shall rue the day ye e'er saw me!"—

"The first of blessings I shall thee show
Is by a burn, that's call'd of bread;⁴
Where Saxon men shall tine the bow,
And find their arrows lack the head.

"Beside that brigg, out ower that burn,
Where the water bickereth bright and sheen,
Shall many a fallen courser spurn,
And knights shall die in battle keen.

"Beside a headless cross of stone,
The libbards there shall lose the gree;
The raven shall come, the erne shall go,
And drink the Saxon bluid sae free.
The cross of stone they shall not know,
So thick the corses there shall be."—

"But tell me now," said brave Dunbar,
"True Thomas, tell now unto me,
What man shall rule the isle of Britain,
Even from the north to the southern sea?"—

³ The uncertainty which long prevailed in Scotland concerning the fate of James IV. is well known.
⁴ One of Thomas' rhymes, preserved by tradition, runs thus:—
"The burn of breid Shall run forw reid."

Bannock-burn is the brook here meant. The Scots give the name of bannock to a thick round cake of unleavened bread.
"A French Queen shall bear the son,
Shall rule all Britain to the sea;
He of the Bruce's blood shall come,
As near as in the ninth degree.

"The waters worship shall his race;
Likewise the waves of the farthest sea;
For they shall ride over ocean wide,
With hempen bridles, and horse of tree."

Thomas the Rhymer.

PART THIRD.—MODERN.

BY WALTER SCOTT.

Thomas the Rhymer was renowned among his contemporaries as the author of the celebrated romance of "Sir Tristrem." Of this once-admired poem only one copy is now known to exist, which is in the Advocates' Library. The editor, in 1804, published a small edition of this curious work; which, if it does not revive the reputation of the bard of Ercildoune, is at least the earliest specimen of Scottish poetry hitherto published. Some account of this romance has already been given to the world in Mr. Ellis' Specimens of Ancient Poetry, vol. i. p. 165, iii. p. 410; a work to which our predecessors and our posterity are alike obliged; the former, for the preservation of the best-selected examples of their poetical taste, and the latter, for a history of the English language which will only cease to be interesting with the existence of our mother-tongue, and all that genius and learning have recorded in it. It is sufficient here to mention that so great was the reputation of the romance of "Sir Tristrem" that few were thought capable of reciting it after the manner of the author—a circumstance alluded to by Robert de Brunne, the annalist:

"I see in song, in sedgying tale,
Of Ercildan, and of Kendale,
Now thame says as they thame wroth,
And in thare saying it semes nocht.
That thon may here in Sir Tristern,
Over gestes it has the steme,
Over all that is or was;
If men it said as made Thomas," &c.

It appears, from a very curious MS. of the thirteenth century, penned Mr. Douce of London, containing a French metrical romance of "Sir Tristrem," that the work of our Thomas the Rhymer was known and reverenced to by the minstrels of Normandy and Bretagne. Having arrived at a part of the romance where reciters were wont to differ in the mode of telling the story, the French bard expressly cites the authority of the poet of Ercildoune:

"Plaisur de nos granter ne volent,
Co que del natin dire se solent,
Ki femme Khererdin dat ainem,
Li natin redut Tristrem nerrer,
E cuestechy par grant engin,
Quant il ajde Kaherdin;
Pour est plat e pur est mat,
Enceied Tristrom Guerual,
En Engleterre pur Yoldt;
THOMAS ico granter ne volt,
Et si volt par raisum mostrer,
Quo ico ne put pas ester," &c.

The tale of "Sir Tristrem," as narrated in the Edin- burgh MS., is totally different from the voluminous romance in prose originally compiled on the same subject by Rusticien de Puise, and analyzed by M. de Tressan; but agrees in every essential particular with the metrical performance just quoted, which is a work of much higher antiquity.

The following attempt to commemorate the Rhymer's poetical fame, and the traditional account of his marvellous return to Fairy-land, being entirely modern, would have been placed with greater propriety among the class of Modern Ballads, had it not been for its immediate connection with the first and second parts of the same story.

THOMAS THE RHYMER.

PART THIRD.

When seven years more were come and gone, 1
Was war through Scotland spread,
And Ruberslaw show'd high Dunyon 2
His beacon blazing red.

Then all by bonny Coldingknow, 3
Pitch'd palliouns took their room,
And crested helms, and spears a-row,
Glanced gayly through the broom.

The Leader, rolling to the Tweed,
Resounds the ensenie; 4
They roused the deer from Caddenhead,
To distant Torwoodlee. 5

The spot is rendered classical by its having given name to the beautiful melody called the "Broom o' the Cowdenknows."

1 Ruberslaw and Dunyon are two hills near Jedburgh.

2 An ancient tower near Ercildoune, belonging to a family of the name of Home. One of Thomas' prophecies is said to have run thus:

"Vengeance! vengeance! when and where?
On the house of Coldingknow, now and ever mair!"

3 Ensenie, war-cry, or gathering word.

4 Torwoodlee and Caddenhead are places in Selkirkshire; both the property of Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlee.
The feast was spread in Ereildoune,
In Learmont's high and ancient hall:
And there were knights of great renown,
And ladies, laced in pall.

Nor lacked they, while they sat at dine,
The music nor the tale,
Nor goblets of the blood-red wine,
Nor mantling quaighs\(^1\) of ale.

True Thomas rose, with harp in hand,
When as the feast was done:
(In minstrel strife, in Fairy-land,
The elfin harp he won.)

Hush'd were the throng, both limb and tongue,
And harpers for envy pale;
And armed lords lean'd on their swords,
And hearken'd to the tale.

In numbers high, the witching tale
The prophet pour'd along;
No after bard might e'er avail\(^2\)
Those numbers to prolong.

Yet fragments of the lofty strain
Float down the tide of years,
As, buoyant on the stormy main,
A parted wreck appears.\(^3\)

He sung King Arthur's Table Round:
The Warrior of the Lake;
How courteous Gawaine met the wound,\(^4\)
And bled for ladies' sake.

But chief, in gentle Tristrem's praise,
The notes melodions swell;
Was none excelling in Arthur's days
The knight of Lionelle.

For Marke, his cowardly uncle's right,
A venom'd wound he bore;
When fierce Morholde he slew in fight,
Upon the Irish shore.

No art the poison might withstand;
No medicine could be found,
Till lovely Isolde's lily hand
Had probed the rankling wound.

With gentle hand and soothing tongue
She bore the leech's part;
And, while she o'er his sick-bed hung,
He paid her with his heart.

---

1 Quaighs, wooden cups, composed of staves hooped together.

2 See introduction to this ballad.

3 This stanza was quoted by the Edinburgh Reviewer, of

---

Oh fatal was the gift, I ween!
For, doom'd in evil tide,
The maid must be rude Cornwall's queen,
His cowardly uncle's bride.

Their loves, their woes, the gifted bard
In fairy tissue wove;
Where lords, and knights, and ladies bright,
In gay confusion strove.

The Garde Joyeuse, amid the tale,
High rear'd its glittering head;
And Avalon's enchanted vale
In all its wonders spread.

Brangwain was there, and Segramore,
And fiend-born Merlin's gramarye;
Of that famed wizard's mighty lore,
Oh who could sing but he?

Through many a maze the winning song
In changeful passion led,
Till bent at length the listening throng
O'er Tristrem's dying bed.

His ancient wounds their scars expand,
With agony his heart is wrung:
Oh where is Isolde's lily hand,
And where her soothing tongue?

She comes! she comes!—like flash of flame
Can lovers' footsteps fly:
She comes! she comes!—she only came
To see her Tristrem die.

She saw him die; her latest sigh
Join'd in a kiss his parting breath;
The gentlest pair that Britain bare
United are in death.

There paused the harp: its lingering sound
Died slowly on the ear;
The silent guests still bent around,
For still they seem'd to hear.

Then woe broke forth in murmurs weak:
Nor ladies heaved alone the sigh;
But, half ashamed, the rugged cheek
Did many a gauntlet dry.

On Leader's stream, and Learmont's tower,
The mists of evening close;
In camp, in castle, or in bower,
Each warrior sought repose.

---

1804, as a noble contrast to the ordinary humility of the genuine ballad diction.—Ed.

\(^4\) See, in the Fabliaux of Monsieur le Grand, elegantly translated by the late Gregory Way, Esq., the tale of the "Knight and the Sword." [Vol. ii. p. 3]
Lord Douglas, in his lofty tent,
Dream’d o’er the woeful tale;
When footsteps light, across the bent,
The warrior’s ears assail.

He starts, he wakes;—“What, Richard, ho!
Arise, my page! arise!
What venturous wight, at dead of night,
Dare step where Douglas lies?”

Then forth they rush’d; by Leader’s tide,
A secoluth sight they see—
A hart and hind pace side by side,
As white as snow on Fairnalie.

Beneath the moon, with gesture proud,
They stately move and slow;
Nor scarce they at the gathering crowd,
Who marvel as they go.

To Learmont’s tower a message sped,
As fast as page might run;
And Thomas started from his bed,
And soon his clothes did on.

First he woxe pale, and then woxe red;
Never a word he spake but three:—
“My blood is run; my thread is spun;
This sign regardeth me.”

The elfin harp his neck around,
In minstrel guise, he hung;
And on the wind, in doleful sound,
Its dying accents rung.

Then forth he went; yet turn’d him oft
To view his ancient hall:

On the gray tower, in lustre soft,
The autumn moonbeams fall;
And Leader’s waves, like silver sheen,
Danced shimmering in the ray;
In deepening mass, at distance seen,
Broad Soltra’s mountains lay.

“Farewell, my fathers’ ancient tower!
A long farewell,” said he:
“The scene of pleasure, pomp, or power,
Thou never more shalt be.

“To Learmont’s name no foot of earth
Shall here again belong,
And, on thy hospitable hearth,
The bare shall leave her young.

“Adieu! adieu!” again he cried,
All as he turn’d him round—
“Farewell to Leader’s silver tide!
Farewell to Ercildoune!”

The hart and hind approach’d the place,
As lingering yet he stood;
And there, before Lord Douglas’ face,
With them he cross’d the flood.

Lord Douglas leap’d on his berry-brown steed,
And spur’d him the Leader o’er;
But, though he rode with lightning speed,
He never saw them more.

Some said to hill, and some to glen,
Their wondrous course had been;
But ne’er in haunts of living men
Again was Thomas seen.

---

APPENDIX.

NOTE A.—P. 572.

From the Chartulary of the Trinity House of Soltra.

ERSYLTON.

Omnibus has literas visurus vel auditaris Thomas de Ercildoun filius et heres Thome Rymour de Ercildoun salutem in Domino, Noveritis me per fustem et baculum in pleno judicio resignasse ac per presentes quietem clamasse pro me et here-dibus meis Magistro domus Sancte Trinitatis de Solute et fratribus ejusdem domus totam terram meam cum omnibus pertinentibus suis quam in tenemento de Ercildoun hereditarie tenui renunciando de toto pro me et heredibus meis onni jure et clameo que ego seu antecessors mei in cadem terra alloque tempore de perpetuo habuimus sive de futuro habere possumus. In cujus rei testimonio presentibus his sigillum meum apposui data apud Ercildoun die Martis prox-imo post festum Sanctorum Apostolorum Symonius et Jude Anno Domini Millesimo cc. Nonagesimo Nono.

1 Selcouth, wondrous.
2 An ancient seat upon the Tweed, in Selkirkshire. In a popular edition of the first part of Thomas the Rhymer, the Fairy Queen thus addresses him:—

“Gin ye wad meet wi’ me again,
Gang to the bonny banks of Fairnallie.”
Fairnallie is now one of the seats of Mr. Pringle of Clifton,
M.P. for Selkirkshire. 1833.
NOTE B.—P. 574.

The reader is here presented, from an old and unfortunately an imperfect MS., with the undoubted original of Thomas the Rhymers intrigue with the Queen of Faery. It will afford great amusement to those who would study the nature of traditional poetry, and the changes effected by oral tradition, to compare this ancient romance with the foregoing ballad. The same incidents are narrated, even the expression is often the same; yet the poems are as different in appearance as if the older tale had been regularly and systematically modernized by a poet of the present day.

Incipt Prophesia Thomas de Erhelwoun.
In a lande as I was lent,
In the grkyng of the day,
Ay alone as I went,
In Huntle bankys me for to play;
I saw the throstyl and the jay,
Ye mawes noyrde of her song,
Ye wodwale sanye notes gay,
That al the wod about range.
In that longynge as I lay,
Undir neth a dern tre,
I was war of a lady gay,
Come rydyng ouyr a faire le;
Zogh I sull sitt to domdaysd,
With my tong to wrabbe and wry,
Certenly al hyr array,
It beth neuyer discryued for me.
Hyr palfra was daffylly gray,
Sycke on say never none;
As the son in somers day,
All abowte that lady schene.
Hyr sadel was of a grewel bone,
A semyly sght it was to se,
Bryht with mony a preycous stone,
And compaydyd all with crapste;
Stones of oryens, gret plente,
Her hair about her hede it hang,
She rode over the farnyle,
A while she blew, a while she sang,
Her girths of nobil sylke they were,
Her boculs were of beryl stone,
Salyll and brydil war .
; With sylk and sendel about bedeone,
Hyr patyrle was of a palle fyn,
And hyr croper of the arase,
Her brydil was of gold fine,
On ever sylk forsethe the hang bells thre,
Her brydil reynes .
. A semyly sızyt .
. Crop and patyrle .
. In every joynt .
She led thre grew houndes in a leas,
And ratches cowpled by her ran;
She bar an horn about her halse,
And undir her gyrdil mene flene,
Thomas lay and sa .
. In the bankes of .
He sayd Yonder is Mary of Might,
That bar the child that died for me,
Cerises bot I may speke with that lady bright,
My thel heret breke in three;
I schal me bye with all my might,
Hyr to mele at Eldyn Tre;
Thomas rathely up her rase,
And ran ouer mountayn bye,
If it he tho the story says,
He met her cyun at Eldyn Tre.
Thomas knelyd down on his kne
Undir neth the grenewood spray,
And sayd, Lovely lady, thou rae on me,
He pressed to pull fruit with his hand,
As man for faute that was fauyt;
She sayd, Thomas, lat al stand,
Or els the deuyl wil the ataynt.
Sche sayd, Thomas, I the hyzt,
To lay thi hede upon my kene,
And thou shalt see fayrer sght
Than ouyr sawe man in their kintre.
Sees thou, Thomas, yon fayr way,
That lygges ouyr yone fayr playn?
Yonder is the way to heuyyn for ay,
When synful sawles haf derayed their payne.
Sees thou, Thomas, yon secony way,
That lygges laue undir the ryse?
Sreight is the way, sothly to say,
To the joyes of paradylce.
Sees thou, Thomas, yon thryd way,
That lygges ouyr yone bow?
Wide is the way, sothly to say,
To the byrnyng fyres of helle.
Sees thou, Thomas, yone fayr castell,
That stands ouyr yone fair hill?
Of towne and tower it beareth the helle,
In middell erth is none like theretil.
When thou comyst in yone castell gaye,
I pray thee curtes man to be;
What so any man to you say,
Looke thu answer none but me.
My lord is servyd at yche messe,
With xxx kniztes feir and fre;
I shall say syttyng on the dese,
I toke thy speche beyonde the le.
Thomas stode as still as stone,
And behelde that ladye gaye;
Than was sche fayr, and ryche anone,
And also ryal on hir palfreye.
The grewhonse had fyble thalm on the dere,
The caches coupled, by my fay,
She blew thore horne Thomas to chere,
To the castell she went her way.
The ladye into the hall went,
Thomas folowyd at her hand;
Thar kept her mony a lady gent,
With curtesy and lawe.
Harp and fadyl both he fande,
The getern and the savtry,
Lut and ryhid ther gon gan,
Thair was al maner of manstralsy,
The most fertyl that Thomas thoght,
When he com emynides the flore.
Fourth berto to quary were broght,
That had been befor both long and store.
Lymors lay lappynge blode,
And kokes standyns with dressynge knyfe,
And dressyd dere as thai wer wode,
And rewell was thair wonder.
Knyghtes dansyd by two and thre,
All that leue long day.
Ladyes that were gret of gre,
Sat and sang of rych aray.
Thomas saw much more in that place,
Than I can descriwy,
Til on a day, alas, alas,
My lovele ladye sawd to me,
Busk ye, Thomas, you must agayn,
Here you may no longer be.
Hy then zerne that you were at hame,
I sal ye hrynig to Eldyn Tre.
Thomas answerd with heuy,
And said, Lowely ladye, lat ma be,
For I saye ye certenny here.
Haf I be bot the space of dayes three.

Sothly, Thomas, as I telle ye,
You hath ben here thre yeres,
And here you may no longer be;
And I sal tel ye a skole,
To-morrow of helle ye foule ende.
Amang our folke shall chuse his fee;
For you art a larg man and an hende,
Trowe you welie he will chuse thee.
Fore all the golde that may be,
Fro hens unto the worldes ende,
Sall you not be betrayed by me,
And thairfor sall you hens wende.
She brought hym euyyn to Eldyn Tre,
Undir nethe the grene wode spray,
In Huntle bankes was fayr to be,
Ther breddes synyng both nitz and day.
Ferre ouyr yon montays gray,
Ther hathe my facon;
Fare wele, Thomas, I wende my way.

The Elin Queen, after restoring Thomas to earth, pours forth a string of prophecies, in which we distinguish reference to the events and personages of the Scottish wars of Edward III. The battles of Dupplin and Haldon are mentioned, and also Black Agnes, Countess of Dunbar. There is a copy of this poem in the museum of the Cathedral of Lincoln, another in the collection in Peterborough, but unfortunately they are all in an imperfect state. Mr. Jamieson, in his curious Collection of Scottish Ballads and Songs, has an entire copy of this ancient poem, with all the collations. The lacunae of the former editions have been supplied from his copy.

Note C.

Allusions to Heraldry.—P. 576.

"The muscle is a square figure like a lozenge, but it is always voided of the field. They are carried as principal figures by the name of Learmont. Learmont of Earlston, in the Mers, carried or on a bend azure three muscles; of which family was Sir Thomas Learmont, who is well known by the name of Thomas the Rhymer, because he wrote his prophecies in rhime. This prophetic herald lived in the days of King Alexander the Third, and prophesied of his death, and of many other remarkable occurrences; particularly of the union of Scotland with England, which was not accomplished until the reign of James the Sixth, some hundred years after it was foretold by this gentleman, whose prophecies are much esteemed by many of the vulgar even at this day. I was promised by a friend a sight of his prophecies, of which there is everywhere to be had an epitome, which, I suppose, is erroneous, and differs in many things from the original, it having been oft reprinted by some unskilful persons. Thus many things are amiss in the small book which are to be met with in the original, particularly these two lines concerning his neighbour, Bemerside:"

'Tyde what may betide,
Haig shall be laird of Bemerside.'

And indeed his prophecies concerning that ancient family have hitherto been true; for, since that time to this day, the Haigs have been lairds of that place. They carry, Azure a saltier cantonel with two stars in chief and in base argent, as many crescents in the flanques or; and for crest a rock proper, with this motto, taken from the above-written rhyme—"Tide what may."—Nisbet on Marks of Codene, p. 158. He adds "that Thomas' meaning may be understood. by heralds when he speaks of kingdoms, whose insignia seldom vary, but that individual families cannot be discovered, either because they have altered their bearings, or because they are pointed out by their crests and exterior ornaments, which are changed at the pleasure of the bearer." Mr. Nisbet, however, comforts himself for this obscurity by reflecting that "we may certainly conclude, from his writings, that heraldry was in good esteem in his days, and well known to the vulgar."—Ibid. p. 160. It may be added that the publication of predictions, either printed or hieroglyphical, in which noble families were pointed out by their armorial bearings, was, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, extremely common; and the influence of such predictions on the minds of the common people was so great as to occasion a prohibition, by statute, of prophecy by reference to heraldic emblems. Lord Henry Howard also (afterwards Earl of Northampton) directs against such practice much of the reasoning in his learned treatise entitled "A Defense against the Pouyon of pretended Prophecies."

NOTE D.—P. 578.

The strange occupation in which Waldhave beholds Merlin engaged derives some illustration from a curious passage in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Life of Merlin, above quoted. The poem, after narrating that the prophet had fled to the forest in a state of distraction, proceeds to mention that, looking upon the stars one clear evening, he discerned from his astrological knowledge that his wife, Guendolen, had resolved upon the next morning to take another husband. As he had presaged to her that this would happen, and had promised her a nuptial gift (cautioning her, however, to keep the bridegroom out of his sight), he now resolved to make good his word. Accordingly, he collected all the stags and lesser game in his neighborhood, and, having seated himself upon a buck, drove the herd before him to the capital of Cumberland, where Guendolen resided. But her lover's curiosity leading him to inspect too nearly this extraordinary cavalcade, Merlin's rage was awakened, and he slew him with the stroke of an antler of the stag. The original runs thus:—

"Dizerat: et silvas ex silvis circuit unam, Cervorumque regress agmen collegit in unum, Et damas, caprasque simul; cervo resedit, Et, veniente dies, compellens agmina pra se, Festivas vadit quo nubit Guendolena, Postquam venit eo, pacienter ipse coegit Ceravis ante forsas, proclaman, 'Guendolena, Guendolena, veni, te tali munera spectant.'

Ocias ergo venit subrida Guendolena, Gedariique virum cervo miratur, et illum

Sic pareo viro, tantum quoque posse ferarum

Uniri numero quas pra se solus agabet.

Sicut pastor orea, quas ducere suavit ad herbam.

Stabat ad exceda sponusa spectando fenestra,

In solo mirans equitut, risenque morebat.

At ubi vidit cum vates, animoguos quis esset

Calluit, extemplo ditulit coram cervo

Quo pestabatur, vibratique jactit in illum,

Et capit illius pennis contrivit, evumque

Reddidit exanimem, vitamque fugavit in auris;

Ocias inde suum, talorum verbere, cervum

Diffugientes egit, silvaque redire paravit."

For a perusal of this curious poem, accurately copied from a manuscript in the Cotton Library, nearly coeval with the author, I was indebted to my learned friend, the late Mr. Rison. There is an excellent paraphrase of it in the curious and entertaining Specimens of Early English Romances, published by Mr. Ellis.

---

Glenfinlas;

or,

LORD RONALD'S CORONACH.

The simple tradition upon which the following stanzas are founded runs thus:—While two Highland hunters were passing the night in a solitary bothy (a hut built for the purpose of hunting), and making merry over their venison and whisky, one of them expressed a wish that they had pretty lasses to complete their party. The words were scarcely uttered when two beautiful young women, habitèd in green, entered the hut, dancing and singing. One of the hunters was seduced by the siren who attached herself particularly to him, to leave the hut: the other remained, and, suspicious of the fair seducers, continued to play upon a trump, or Jew's-harp, some strain consacred to the Virgin Mary. Day at length came, and the temptress vanished. Searching in the forest, he found the bones of his unfortunate friend, who had been torn to pieces and devoured by the fiend into whose toils he had fallen. The place was from thence called the Glen of the Green Women.

Glenfinlas is a tract of forest ground, lying in the Highlands of Perthshire, not far from Callender in Menteith. It was formerly a royal forest, and now belongs to the Earl of Moray. This country, as well as the adjacent district of Balquidder, was, in times of yore, chiefly inhabited by the Macgregors. To the west of the Forest of Glenfinlas lies Loch Katrine, and its romantic avenue, called the Trosachs. Ben-Ledi, Benmore, and Benvoirich, are mountains in the same district, and at no great distance from Glenfin-

---

1 Coronach is the lamentation for a deceased warrior, sung by the aged of the clan.
CONTRIBUTIONS TO MINSTRELSY.

las. The river Teith passes Callender and the castle of Doune, and joins the Forth near Stirling. The Pass of Lenny is immediately above Callender, and is the principal access to the Highlands from that town. Glenartney is a forest near Benvoe-rich. The whole forms a sublime tract of Alpine scenery.

This ballad first appeared in the Tales of Wonder.1

Glenfinlas;
or,

LORD RONALD’S CORONACH.

"For them the viewless forms of air obey,
Their bidding heed, and at their beck repair;
They know what spirit brews the stormful day,
And heartless oft, like moody madness stare,
To see the phantom train their secret work prepare." COLLINS.

"Oh hone a rie'! oh hone a rie'!2
The pride of Albin's line is o'er,
And fall'n Glenartney's stateliest tree;
We ne'er shall see Lord Ronald more!"

Oh, sprung from great Macgillanmore, 3
The chief that never fear'd a foe,
How matchless was thy bold claymore,
How deadly thine unerring bow!

Well can the Saxon widows tell4
How, on the Teith's resounding shore,
The boldest Lowland warriors fell,
As down from Lenny's pass you bore.

But o'er his hills, in festal day,
How blazed Lord Ronald's beltane-tree,5
While youths and maidens the light strathspey
So nimbly danced with Highland glee.

Cheer'd by the strength of Ronald's shell,
E'en age forgot his tresses hoar;
But now the loud lament we swell,
Oh ne'er to see Lord Ronald more!

From distant isles a chief's air came,
The joys of Ronald's halls to find,
And chase with him the dark-brown game
That bounds o'er Albin's hills of wind.

"Twas Moy; whom in Columba's isle
The seer's prophetic spirit found,5

As, with a minstrel's fire the while,
He waked his harp's harmonious sound.

Full many a spell to him was known,
Which wandering spirits shrink to hear;
And many a lay of potent tone,
Was never meant for mortal ear.

For there, 'tis said, in mystic mood,
High converse with the dead they hold,
And oft espy the fated shroud,
That shall the future corpse enfold.

Oh so it fell that on a day,
To rouse the red deer from their den,
The Chiefs have ta'en their distant way,
And scour'd the deep Glenfinlas glen.

No vassals wait their sports to aid,
To watch their safety, deck their board;
Their simple dress, the Highland plaid,
Their trusty guard, the Highland sword.

Three summer days, through brake and dell,
Their whistling shafts successful flew;
And still, when dewy evening fell,
The quarry to their hut they drew.

In gray Glenfinlas' deepest nook
The solitary cabin stood,
Fast by Moneira's sullen brook,
Which murmurs through that lonely wood.

Soft fell the night, the sky was calm,
When three successive days had flown;
And summer mist in dewy balm
Steep'd heathy bank and mossy stone.

The moon, half hid in silvery flakes,
Afar her dubious radiance shed,
Quivering on Katrine's distant lakes,
And resting on Benledi's head.

Now in their hut, in social guise,
Their sylvan fare the Chiefs enjoy;
And pleasure laughs in Ronald's eyes,
As many a pledge he quaffs to Moy.

"What lack we here to crown our bliss,
While thus the pulse of joy beats high?
What but fair woman's yielding kiss,
Her panting breath and melting eye?

"To chase the deer of yonder shades,
This morning left their father's pile.

1 In 1891. See ante, p. 565. The scenery of this, the author's first serious attempt at poetry, reappears in the "Lady of the Lake," in Waverley," and in "Rob Roy."—Ed.
2 Oh hone a rie' signifies "Alas for the prince or chief."
3 The term Sassenach, or Saxon, is applied by the Highlanders to their Low-Country neighbors.
4 See Appendix, Note A.
5 See Appendix, Note B.
The fairest of our mountain maids,
The daughters of the proud Glengyle.

"Long have I sought sweet Mary's heart,
And dropp'd the tear, and heaved the sigh:
But vain the lover's wily art,
Beneath a sister's watchful eye.

"But thou may'st teach that guardian fair,
While far with Mary I am flown,
Of other hearts to cease her care,
And find it hard to guard her own.

"Touch but thy harp, thou soon shalt see
The lovely Flora of Glengyle,
Unmindful of her charge and me,
Hang on thy notes, 'twixt tear and smile.

"Or, if she choose a melting tale,
All underneath the greenwood bough,
Will good St. Oran's rule prevail,
Stern huntsman of the rigid brow?"

"Since Ernique's fight, since Morna's death,
No more on me shall rapture rise,
Responsive to the panting breath,
Or yielding kiss, or melting eyes.

"E'en then, when o'er the heath of woe,
Where sunk my hopes of love and fame,
I bade my harp's wild wailings flow,
On me the seer's sad spirit came.

"The last dread curse of angry Heaven,
With ghastly sights and sounds of woe,
To dash each glimpse of joy was given—
The gift, the future ill to know.

"The bark thou saw'st, yon summer morn,
So gayly part from Oban's bay,
My eye beheld her dash'd and torn,
Far on the rocky Colonsay.

"Thy Fergus too, thy sister's son—
Thou saw'st, with pride, the gallant's power,
As marching 'gainst the Lord of Downe,
He left the skirts of huge Benmore.

"Thou only saw'st their tartans wave,
As down Benvoirliche's side they wound,
Heardst but the pibroch, answering brave
To many a target clanking round.

"I heard the groans, I mark'd the tears,
I saw the wound his bosom bore,
When on the serried Saxon spears
He pour'd his clan's resistless roar.

1 See Appendix, Note C.
2 Tartans, the full Highland dress, made of the chequered stuff so termed.

"And thou, who bidst me think of bliss,
And bidst my heart awake to glee,
And court, like thee, the wanton kiss—
That heart, O Ronald, bleeds for thee!

"I see the death-damps chill thy brow;
I hear thy Warning Spirit cry;
The corpse-lights dance—they're gone, and now...
No more is given to gifted eye!"

"Alone enjoy thy dreary dreams,
Sad prophet of the evil hour!
Say, should we scorn joy's transient beams,
Because to-morrow's storm may lower?

"Or false or sooth thy words of woe,
Clangi'llian's Chieftain ne'er shall fear;
His blood shall bound at rapture's glow,
Though doom'd to stain the Saxon spear.

"E'en now, to meet me in yon dell,
My Mary's buskins brush the dew."

He spoke, nor bade the Chief farewell,
But call'd his dogs, and gay withdrew.

Within an hour return'd each hound;
In rush'd the rousers of the deer;
They howl'd in melancholy sound,
Then closely couch'd beside the Seer.

No Ronald yet; though midnight came,
And sad were Moy's prophetic dreams,
As, bending o'er the dying flame,
He fed the watch-fire's quivering gleams.

Sudden the hounds erect their ears,
And sudden cease their moaning howl;
Close press'd to Moy, they mark their fears
By shivering limbs and stifled growl.

Untouch'd, the harp began to ring,
As softly, slowly, oped the door;
And shook responsive every string,
As light a footstep press'd the floor.

And by the watch-fire's glimmering light,
Close by the minstrel's side was seen
An huntress maid, in beauty bright,
All dropping wet her robes of green.

All dropping wet her garments seem;
Chill'd was her cheek, her bosom bare,
As, bending o'er the dying gleam,
She wrung the moisture from her hair.

With maiden blush she softly said,
"Oh, gentle huntsman, hast thou seen,

3 Pibroch, a piece of martial music, adapted to the Highland bagpipe.
In deep Glenfinlas’ moonlight glade,
A lovely maid in vest of green:

"With her a Chief in Highland pride;
His shoulders bear the hunter's bow,
The mountain dirk adorns his side,
Far on the wind his tartans flow?"—

"And who art thou? and who are they?"
All ghastly gazing, Moy replied:
"And why, beneath the moon's pale ray,
Dare ye thus roam Glenfinlas’ side?"—

"Where wild Loch Katrine pours her tide,
Blue, dark, and deep, round many an isle,
Our father's towers o'erhang her side,
The castle of the bold Glenyle.

"To chase the dun Glenfinlas deer,
Our woodland course this morn we bore,
And haply met, while wandering here,
The son of great Macgillianore.

"Oh aid me, then, to seek the pair,
Whom, loitering in the woods, I lost;
Alone, I dare not venture there,
Where walks, they say, the shrieking ghost."—

"Yes, many a shrieking ghost walks there;
Then, first, my own sad vow to keep,
Here will I pour my midnight prayer,
Which still must rise when mortals sleep."

"Oh first, for pity's gentle sake,
Guide a lone wanderer on her way!
For I must cross the haunted brake,
And reach my father's towers ere day."—

"First, three times tell each Ave-bead,
And thrice a Paternoster say;
Then kiss with me the holy rede;
So shall we safely wend our way."—

"Oh shame to knighthood, strange and foul!
Go doff the bonnet from thy brow,
And shroud thee in the monkish cowl,
Which bestfits thy sullen vow.

"Not so, by high Dunlathmon’s fire,
Thy heart was froze to love and joy,
When gayly rung thy raptured lyre
To wak't Morna's melting eye."

Wild stared the minstrel's eyes of flame,
And high his sable locks arose,
And quick his color went and came,
As fear and rage alternate rose.

"And thou! when by the blazing oak
I lay, to her and love resign'd,

Say, rode ye on the eddying smoke,
Or sail'd ye on the midnight wind?

"Not thine a race of mortal blood,
Nor old Glenyle's pretended line;
Thy dame, the Lady of the Flood—
Thy sire, the Monarch of the Mine."

He mutter'd thrice St. Oran's rhyme,
And thrice St. Fillan's powerful prayer;
Then turn'd him to the eastern clime,
And sternly shook his coal-black hair.

And, bending o'er his harp, he flung
His wildest witch-notes on the wind;
And loud, and high, and strange, they rung,
As many a magic change they find.

Tall wax'd the Spirit's altering form,
Till to the roof her stature grew;
Then, mingling with the rising storm,
With one wild yell away she flew.

Rain beats, hail rattles, whirlwinds tear:
The slender hut in fragments flew;
But not a lock of Moy's loose hair
Was waved by wind, or wet by dew.

Wild mingling with the howling gale,
Loud bursts of ghastly laughter rise;
High o'er the minstrel's head they sail,
And die amid the northern skies.

The voice of thunder shook the wood,
As ceased the more than mortal yell;
And, spattering foul, a shower of blood
Upon the hissing firebrands fell.

Next dropp'd from high a mangled arm;
The fingers strain'd an half-drawn blade:
And last, the life-blood streaming warm,
Torn from the trunk, a gasping head.

Oft o'er that head, in battling field,
Stream'd the proud crest of high Benmore;
That arm the broad claymore could wield,
Which dyed the Teith with Saxon gore.

Woe to Moneira's sullen rills!
Woe to Glenfinlas' dreary glen!
That never son of Albin's hills
Shall draw the hunter's shaft agen!

E'en the tired pilgrim's burning feet
At noon shall shun that sheltering den,
Lest, journeying in their rage, he meet
The wayward Ladies of the Glen.

1 See Appendix, Note D.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

Oh hone a rie! oh hone a rie!
The pride of Albin's line is o'er,
And fall'n Glenartney's stateliest tree;
We ne'er shall see Lord Ronald more!

makes a German use of his Scottish materials; that the legend, as briefly told in the simple prose of his preface, is more affecting than the lofty and sonorous stanzas himself, that the vague terror of the old druidic race, instead of gaining, by the expanded elaboration of the detail, there may be something in those objections; but no man can pretend to be an impartial critic of the piece which first awoke his own childish ear to the power of poetry and the melody of verse."—Life of Scott, vol. ii. p. 25.

APPENDIX.

Note A.

How blazed Lord Ronald's beltane-tree.—P. 587.

The fires lighted by the Highlanders on the first of May, in compliance with a custom derived from the pagan times, are termed the Beltane-tree. It is a festival celebrated with various superstitious rites, both in the north of Scotland and in Wales.

Note B.

The seer's prophetic spirit found.—P. 587.

I can only describe the second sight by adopting Dr. Johnson's definition, who calls it "An impression, either by the mind upon the eye or by the eye upon the mind, by which things distant and future are perceived and seen as if they were present." To which I would only add that the spectral appearances thus presented usually presage misfortune; that the faculty is painful to those who suppose they possess it; and that they usually acquire it while themselves under the pressure of melancholy.

Note C.

Will good St. Oran's rule prevail.—P. 588.

St. Oran was a friend and follower of St. Columba, and was buried at Icolmkill. His pretensions to be a saint were rather dubious. According to the legend, he consented to be buried alive in order to propitiate certain demons of the soil who obstructed the attempts of Columba to build a chapel. Columba caused the body of his friend to be dug up, after three days had elapsed; when Oran, to the horror and scandal of the assistants, declared that there was neither a God, a judgment, nor a future state! He had no time to make further discoveries, for Columba caused the earth once more to be shovelled over him with the utmost dispatch. The chapel, however, and the cemetery was called Relig Oran; and, in memory of his rigid celiüey, no female was permitted to pay her devotions or be buried in that place. This is the rule alluded to in the poem.

Note D.

And thrice St. Fillan's powerful prayer.—P. 589.

St. Fillan has given his name to many chapels, holy fountains, &c., in Scotland. He was, according to Camerarius, an abbot of Pitenweem, in Fife; from which situation he retired, and died a hermit in the wilds of Glenarechy, A. D. 649. While engaged in transcribing the Scriptures, his left hand was observed to send forth such a splendor as to afford light to that with which he wrote; a miracle which saved many candles to the convent, as St. Fillan used to spend whole nights in that exercise. The 9th of January was dedicated to this saint, who gave his name to Killilan, in Renfrew, and St. Phillus, or Forgand, in Fife. Lesley, lib. 7, tells us that Robert the Bruce was possessed of Fillan's miraculous and luminous arm, which he enclosed in a silver shrine, and had it carried at the head of his army. Previous to the battle of Bannockburn, the king's chaplain, a man of little faith, abstracted the relic and deposited it in a place of security, lest it should fall into the hands of the English. But, lo! while Robert was addressing his prayers to the empty casket, it was observed to open and shut suddenly; and, on inspection, the saint was found to have himself deposited his arm in the shrine as an assurance of victory. Such is the tale of Lesley. But though Bruce little needed that the arm of St. Fillan should assist his own, he dedicated to him, in gratitude, a priory at Killin, upon Loch Tay.

In the Scots Magazine for July, 1802, there is a copy of a very curious crown grant, dated 11th July, 1457, by which James III. confirms to Malice Doire, an inhabitant of Strathfillan, in Perthshire, the peaceable exercise and enjoyment of a relic of St. Fillan, being apparently the head of a pastoral staff called the Quegrich, which he and his predecessors are said to have possessed since the days of Robert Bruce. As the Quegrich was used to cure diseases, this document is probably the most ancient patent ever granted for a quack medicine. The ingenious correspondent by whom it is furnished further observes that additional particulars concerning St. Fillan are to be found in Bellenden's Boece, book 4, folio cxxiii., and in Pennant's Tour in Scotland, 1772, pp. 11, 15.

See a note on the lines in the first canto of Marmion:—

"Thence to St. Fillan's blessed well,
Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel,
And the crazed brain restore," &c.—Ed.
The Eve of St. John.

SMAYLO'ME or Smallholm Tower, the scene of the following ballad, is situated on the northern boundary of Roxburghshire, among a cluster of wild rocks, called Sandikon-Crags, the property of Hugh Scott, Esq., of Harden [now Lord Polwarth]. The tower is a high square building, surrounded by an outer wall, now ruinous. The circuit of the outer court, being defended on three sides by a precipe and morass, is accessible only from the west, by a steep and rocky path.
The apartments, as is usual in a Border keep or fortress, are placed one above another, and communicate by a narrow stair; on the roof are two bartizans or platforms, for defence or pleasure. The inner door of the tower is wood, the outer an iron gate; the distance between them being nine feet, the thickness, namely, of the wall. From the elevated situation of Smayl-ho'me Tower, it is seen many miles in every direction.
Among the crags by which it is surrounded, one, more eminent, is called the Watchfold, and is said to have been the station of a beacon, in the times of war with England. Without the tower-court is a ruined chapel. Brotherstone is a heath in the neighborhood of Smaylho'me Tower.

This ballad was first printed in Mr. Lewis' Tales of Wonder. It is here published, with some additional illustrations—particularly an account of the battle of Ancrem Moor—which seemed proper in a work upon Border antiquities. The catastrophe of the tale is founded upon a well-known Irish tradition. This ancient fortress and its vicinity formed the scene of the editor's infancy, and seemed to claim from him this attempt to celebrate them in a Border tale.

The Eve of St. John.
The Baron of Smaylho'me rose with day,
He spur'd his curser on,
Without stop or stay, down the rocky way
That leads to Brotherstone.

He went not with the bold Bucleuch,
His banner broad to rear;
He went not 'gainst the English yew
To lift the Scottish spear.

Yet his plate-jack* was braced, and his helmet was laced,
And his vaunt-brace of proof he wore;
At his saddle-gerthe was a good steel sperthe,
Full ten pound weight and more.

The Baron return'd in three days' space,
And his books were sad and sour;
And weary was his curser's pace,
As he reach'd his rocky tower.

He came not from where Aneram Moor
Ran red with English blood;
Where the Douglas true, and the bold Buccleuch,

'Gainst keen Lord Evers stood.

Yet was his helmet hack'd and hew'd,
His acton pierced and tore,
His axe and his dagger with blood imbrued,—
But it was not English gore.

He lighted at the Chapellage,
He held him close and still;
And he whistled thrice for his little foot-page,
His name was English Will.

"Come thou hither, my little foot-page,
Come hither to my knee;
Though thou art young, and tender of age,
I think thou art true to me.

"Come tell me all that thou hast seen,
And look thou tell me true!
Since I from Smaylho'me tower have been,
What did thy lady do?"—

1 "This place* is rendered interesting to poetical readers by its having been the residence, in early life, of Mr. Walter Scott, who has celebrated it in his 'Eve of St. John.' To it he probably alludes in the introduction to the third canto of
'Marmion':—

'But there rise those crags, that mountain tower,
Which charm'd my fancy's waking hour.'
Scots Mag. March, 1809.

2 The following passage in Dr. Henry More's Appendix to the Antidote against Atheism relates to a similar phenomenon:
"I confess that the bodies of devils may not be only warm, but singeingly hot, as it was in him that took one of Molan-thon's relations by the hand, and so scorched her that she bare the mark of it to her dying day. But the examples of cold are more frequent; as in that famous story of Cunlus, when he touched the arm of a certain woman of Pontoch, as she lay in her bed, he felt as cold as ice; and so did the spirit's claw to Annie Styles."—Ed. 1602, p. 135.

3 See the introduction to the third canto of "Marmion":—
"It was a barren scene, and wild,
Where naked cliffs were rudely piled;
But ever and anon between
Lay velvet tufts of softest green;
And well the lonely infant knew
Recesses where the walltow'r grew," &c.—Ed.

4 The plate-jack is coat-armor; the vaunt-brace, or wam-brace, armor for the body; the sperthe, a battle-axe.

5 See Appendix, Note A.
My lady, each night, sought the lonely light
That burns on the wild Watchfold;
For, from height to height, the beacons bright
Of the English foemen told.

The bittern clamor'd from the moss,
The wind blew loud and shrill;
Yet the craggy pathway she did cross
To the e'ry Beacon Hill.

I watch'd her steps, and silent came
Where she sat her on a stone;
No watchman stood by the dreary flame,
It burned all alone.

The second night I kept her in sight,
Till to the fire she came,
And, by Mary's might! an armed Knight
Stood by the lonely flame.

And many a word that warlike lord
Did speak to my lady there;
But the rain fell fast, and loud blew the blast,
And I heard not what they were.

The third night there the sky was fair,
And the mountain blast was still,
As again I watch'd the secret pair,
On the lonesome Beacon Hill.

And I heard her name the midnight hour,
And name this holy eve;
And say,'Come this night to thy lady's bower;
Ask no bold Baron's leave.

'He lifts his spear with the bold Buclevench;
His lady is all alone;
The door she'll undo to her knight so true,
On the eve of good St. John.'

'I cannot come; I must not come;
I dare not come to thee;
On the eve of St. John I must wander alone:
In thy bower I may not be.'

'Now, out on thee, faint-hearted knight!
Thou shouldst not say me nay;
For the eve is sweet, and when lovers meet,
Is worth the whole summer's day.

'And I'll chain the blood-hound, and the warden shall not sound,
And rushes shall be strewn'd on the stair;

So, by the black rood-stone, and by holy St. John,
I conjure thee, my love, to be there!'—

'Though the blood-hound be mute, and the rush
beneath my foot,
And the warder his bugle should not blow,
Yet there sleepeth a priest in the chamber to the east,
And my footstep he would know!'—

'Oh fear not the priest who sleepeth to the east!
For to Dryburgh the way he has ta'en;
And there to say mass, till three days do pass,
For the soul of a knight that is slayn.'—

'He turn'd him around, and grimly he frown'd;
Then he laugh'd right scornfully—
'He who says the mass-rite for the soul of that knight
May as well say mass for me:

'At the lone midnight hour, when bad spirits have power,
In thy chamber will I be.'—
With that he was gone, and my lady left alone,
And no more did I see.'

Then changed, I trow, was that bold Baron's brow,
From the dark to the blood-red high:
'Now, tell me the mien of the knight thou hast seen,
For, by Mary, he shall die!'

'His arms shone full bright, in the beacon's red light;
His plume it was scarlet and blue;
On his shield was a hound, in a silver leash bound,
And his crest was a branch of the yew.'—

'Thou liest, thou liest, thou little foot-page,
Loud dost thou lie to me!
For that knight is cold, and low laid in the mould,
All under the Eildon-tree.'—

'Yet hear but my word, my noble lord!
For I heard her name his name;
And that lady bright, she called the knight
Sir Richard of Coldingham.'—

The bold Baron's brow then changed, I trow,
From high blood-red to pale—
'The grave is deep and dark—and the corpse is stiff
And stark—
So I may not trust thy tale.

Where fair Tweed flows round holy Melrose,
And Eildon slopes to the plain,

1 The black rood of Melrose was a crucifix of black marble, and of superior sanctity.
2 Dryburgh Abbey is beautifully situated on the banks of the Tweed. After its dissolution it became the property of the Halliburtons of Newmains, and is now the seat of the Right Honorable the Earl of Buchan. It belonged to the order of Premonstratenses. [The ancient Barons of New-mains were ultimately represented by Sir Walter Scott, whose remains now repose in the cemetery at Dryburgh.—Ed.]

3 Eildon is a high hill, terminating in three conical summits, immediately above the town of Melrose, where are the admired ruins of a magnificent monastery. Eildon-tree is said to be the spot where Thomas the Rhymer uttered his prophecies. See ante, p. 573.
Full three nights ago, by some secret foe,
That gay gallant was slain.

"The varying light deceived thy sight,
And the wild winds drown'd the name;
For the Dryburgh bells ring, and the white monks
do sing,
For Sir Richard of Coldinghame!"

He pass'd the court-gate, and he oped the tower-gate,
And he mounted the narrow stair,
To the bartizan-seat, where, with maids that on her wait,
He found his lady fair.

That lady sat in mournful mood;
Look'd over hill and vale;
Over Tweed's fair flood, and Mertonn's wood,
And all down Teviotdale.

"Now hail, now hail, thou lady bright!"—
"Now hail, thou Baron true!
What news, what news, from Aneram fight?
What news from the bold Buccleuch?"—

"The Aneram Moor is red with gore,
For many a southron fell;
And Buccleuch has charged us, evermore,
To watch our beacons well."

The lady blush'd red, but nothing she said;
Nor added the Baron a word:
Then she step'd down the stair to her chamber fair,
And so did her moody lord.

In sleep the lady mourn'd, and the Baron toss'd and turn'd,
And oft to himself he said,—
"The worms around him creep, and his bloody grave is deep . . . . .
It cannot give up the dead!"

It was near the ringing of matin-bell,
The night was wellnigh done,
When a heavy sleep on that Baron fell,
On the eve of good St. John.

The lady look'd through the chamber fair,
By the light of a dying flame;
And she was aware of a knight stood there—
Sir Richard of Coldinghame!

"Alas! away, away!" she cried,
"For the holy Virgin's sake!"—
"Lady, I know who sleeps by thy side;
But, lady, he will not awake.

"By Eildon-tree, for long nights three,
In bloody grave have I lain;
The mass and the death-prayer are said for me,
But, lady, they are said in vain.

"By the Baron's brand, near Tweed's fair strand,
Most foully slain, I fell;
And my restless sprite on the beacon's height
For a space is doom'd to dwell.

"At our trysting-place, for a certain space,
I must wander to and fro;
But I had not had power to come to thy bower,
Hadst thou not conjured me so."

Love master'd fear—her brow she cross'd;
"How, Richard, hast thou sped?
And art thou saved, or art thou lost?"—
The vision shook his head.

"Who spilleth life shall forfeit life;
So bid thy lord believe:
That lawless love is guilt above,
This awful sign receive."

He laid his left palm on an oaken beam;
His right upon her hand;
The lady shrunk, and fainting sunk,
For it scorched like a fiery brand.

The sable score of fingers four
Remains on that board impress'd;
And for evermore that lady bore
A covering on her wrist.

There is a nun in Dryburgh bower
Ne'er looks upon the sun;
There is a monk in Melrose tower,
He speaketh word to none.

That nun who ne'er beholds the day,
That monk who speaks to none—
That nun was Smaylho'me's lady gay,
That monk the bold Baron.

1 Mertonn is the beautiful seat of Lord Polwarth.
2 Trysting-place, place of rendezvous.
3 See Appendix, Note B.

The next of these compositions was, I believe, the 'Eve of St. John,' in which Scott repopulates the tower of Smallholm, the awe-inspiring haunt of his infancy; and here he touches, for the first time, the one superstition which can still be appealed to with full and perfect effect; the only one which lingers in minds long since weaned from all sympathy with the machinery of witches and goblins. And surely this mystery was never touched with more thrilling skill than in that noble ballad. It is the first of his original pieces, too, in which he uses the measure of his own favorite minstrels—a measure which the monotony of mediocrity had long and successfully been laboring to degrade, but in itself adequate to the expression of the highest thoughts as well as the gentlest emotions; and capable, in fit hands, of as rich a variety of music as any other of modern times. This was written at Merton House in the autumn of 1799."—Life of Scott, vol. ii.
p. 25. See ante, p. 566.
APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

BATTLE OF ANCRAM MOOR.—P. 391.

Lord Evers and Sir Brian Latoun, during the year 1544, committed the most dreadful ravages upon the Scottish frontier, compelling most of the inhabitants, and especially the men of Liddesdale, to take assurance under the King of England. Upon the 17th November, in that year, the sum total of their depredations stood thus, in the bloody ledger of Lord Evers:

- Towns, towers, barnecynes, pury-she churches, bastill houses, burned and destroyed, 192
- Scots slain, prisoners taken, 463
- Nolt (cattle), 10,286
- Shipe, 12,492
- Nags and geldings, 1,296
- Gayt, 200
- Bolls of corn, 850
- Insight gear, &c. (furniture), an incalculable quantity.

Murdin’s State Papers, vol. i. p. 51.

For these services Sir Ralph Evers was made a Lord of Parliament. See a strain of exulting congratulation upon his promotion, poured forth by some contemporary minstrel, in vol. i. p. 417.

The King of England had promised to these two barons a feudal grant of the country which they had thus reduced to a desert; upon hearing which Archibald Douglas, the seventh Earl of Angus, is said to have sworn to write the deed of investiture upon their skins, with sharp pens and bloody ink, in remembrance for their having defaced the tombs of his ancestors at Melrose.—Godscroft. In 1545, Lord Evers and Latoun again entered Scotland, with an army consisting of 3000 mercenaries, 1500 English Borderers, and 700 assured Scottish men, chiefly Armstrongs, Turnballs, and other broken clans. In this second incursion the English generals even exceeded their former cruelty. Evers burned the tower of Broumhouse, with its lady (a noble and aged woman, says Lesley) and her whole family. The English penetrated as far as Melrose, which they had destroyed last year, and which they now again pillaged. As they returned towards Jedburgh, they were followed by Angus at the head of 1000 horse, who was shortly after joined by the famous Norman Lesley, with a body of Fife men. The English, being probably unwilling to cross the Teviot while the Scots hung upon their rear, halted upon Ancram Moor, above the village of that name; and the Scottish general was deliberating whether to advance or retire, when Sir Walter Scott, 1 of Buceleuch, came up at full speed with a small but chosen body of his retainers, the rest of whom were near at hand. By the advice of this experienced warrior (to whose conduct Pitscottie and Buchanan ascribe the success of the engagement), Angus withdrew from the height which he occupied, and drew up his forces behind it, upon a piece of low flat ground, called Panier-heugh or Paniel-heugh. The spare horses, being sent to an eminence in their rear, appeared to the English to be the main body of the Scots in the act of flight. Under this persuasion, Evers and Latoun hurried precipitately forward, and having ascended the hill, which their foes had abandoned, were no less dismayed than astonished to find the phalanx of Scottish spear- men drawn up in firm array upon the flat ground below. The Scots in their turn became the assailants. A heron, roused from the marshes by the tumult, soared away betwixt the encroaching armies. “Oh,” exclaimed Angus, “that I here my white goss-hawk, that we might all yoke at once!”—Godscroft. The English, breathless and fatigued, having the setting sun and wind full in their faces, were unable to withstand the resolute and desperate charge of the Scottish lances. No sooner had they begun to waver than their own allies, the assured Borderers, who had been waiting the event, threw aside their red crosses, and, joining their countrymen, made a most merciless slaughter among the English fugitives, the pursuers calling upon each other to “remember Broumhouse!”—Lesley, p. 478.

In the battle fell Lord Evers and his son, together with Sir Brian Latoun and eight hundred Englishmen, many of whom were persons of rank. A thousand prisoners were taken. Among these was a patriotic alderman of London, Read by name, who, having contumaciously refused to pay his portion of a benevolence demanded from the city by Henry VIII., was sent by royal authority to serve against the Scots. These, at settling his ransom, he found still more exorbitant in their exactions than the monarch.—Redpath’s Border History, p. 365.

Evers was much regretted by King Henry, who swore to avenge his death upon Angus, against whom he conceived himself to have particular grounds of resentment, on account of favors received by the earl at his hands. The answer of Angus was worthy of a Douglas. “Is our brother-in-law offended,” 2 said he, “that I, as a good Scotsman, have avenged my ravaged country, and the defaced tombs of my ancestors, upon Ralph Evers? They were better men than he, and I was bound to do no less; and will he take my life for that? Little knows King Henry the skirts of Kirnatable? I can keep myself there against all his English host.”—Godscroft.

Such was the noted battle of Ancram Moor. The spot on which it was fought is called Lilyard’s edge, from an Amazonian Scottish woman of that name, who is reported by tradition to have distinguished herself in the same manner as Squire Witherington. 3 The old people point out her monument, now broken and defaced. The inscription is said to have been legible within this century, and to have run thus.—Murdin’s State Papers, pp. 45, 46.

1 The editor has found no instance upon record of this family having taken assurance with England—hence they usually suffered dreadfully from the English forays. In August, 1544 (the year preceding the battle), the whole lands belonging to Buceleuch, in West Teviotdale, were harried by Evers; the outworks, or barakin, of the tower of Braxholme burned; eight Scots slain, thirty made prisoners, and an immense prey of horses, cattle, and sheep, carried off. The lands upon the Kale Water, belonging to the same chiefestain, were also plundered, and much spoil obtained; thirty Scots

2 Angus had married the widow of James IV., sister to King Henry VIII.

3 Kirnatable, now called Cairntable, is a mountainsous tract at the head of Douglasdale. [See Notes to “Castle Dangerous,” Waverley Novels, vol. xlviii.]

4 See “Chery Chase.”
CONTRIBUTIONS TO MINSTRELSY.

"Fair maiden Lilliard lies under this stane, Little was her stature, but great was her fame; Upon the English louns she laid many thumps, And, when her legs were cut off, she fought upon her stumps."

Vide Account of the Parish of Melrose.

It appears, from a passage in Stowe, that an ancestor of Lord Evers held also a grant of Scottish lands from an English monarch. "I have seen," says the historian, "under the broad scale of the said King Edward I, a manor, called Ketnes, in the county of Forfar, in Scotland, and near the furthest part of the same nation northward, given to John Ure and his heirs, ancestor to the Lord Ure that now is, for his service done in these parts, with market, &c. dated at Lanercost, the 20th day of October, anno regis, 34."—STOWE'S Annals, p. 210. This grant, like that of Henry, must have been dangerous to the receiver.

NOTE B.

That nun who ne'er beholds the day.—P. 593.

The circumstance of the nun "who never saw the day" is not entirely imaginary. About fifty years ago, an unfortunate female wanderer took up her residence in a dark vault, among the ruins of Dryburgh Abbey, which, during the day, she never quitted. When night fell, she issued from this miserable habitation, and went to the house of Mr. Haliburton of Newmans, the editor's great-grandfather, or to that of Mr. Erskine of Sheffield, two gentlemen of the neighborhood. From their charity she obtained such necessaries as she could be prevailed upon to accept. At twelve, each night, she lighted her candle and returned to her vault, assuring her friendly neighbors that, during her absence, her habitation was arranged by a spirit, to whom she gave the uncouth name of Fatfips; describing him as a little man, wearing heavy iron shoes, with which he trampled the clay floor of the vault, to dispel the dampe. This circumstance caused her to be regarded, by the well-informed, with compassion, as deranged in her understanding; and by the vulgar, with some degree of terror. The cause of her adopting this extraordinary mode of life she would never explain. It was, however, believed to have been occasioned by a vow that, during the absence of a man to whom she was attached, she would never look upon the sun. Her lover never returned. He fell during the Civil War of 1745-6, and she never more would behold the light of day. The vault, or rather dungeon, in which this unfortunate woman lived and died, passes still by the name of the supernatural being with which its gloom was tenanted by her disturbed imagination, and few of the neighboring peasants dare enter it by night. 1863.

Cadyow Castle.

The ruins of Cadyow or Cadzow Castle, the ancient baronial residence of the family of Hamilton, are situated upon the precipitous banks of the river Evan, about two miles above its junction with the Clyde. It was dismantled in the conclusion of the Civil Wars, during the reign of the unfortunate Mary, to whose cause the house of Hamilton devoted themselves with a generous zeal which occasioned their temporary obscurity, and, very nearly, their total ruin. The situation of the ruins, embosomed in wood, darkened by ivy and creeping shrubs, and overhanging the brawling torrent, is romantic in the highest degree. In the immediate vicinity of Cadyow is a grove of immense oaks, the remains of the Caledonian Forest, which anciently extended through the south of Scotland, from the eastern to the Atlantic Ocean. Some of these trees measure twenty-five feet and upwards in circumference; and the state of decay in which they now appear shows that they have witnessed the rites of the Druids. The whole scenery is included in the magnificent and extensive park of the Duke of Hamilton. There was long preserved in this forest the breed of the Scottish wild cattle, until their ferocity occasioned their being extirpated, about forty years ago. 1 Their appearance was beautiful, being milk-white, with black muzzles, horns, and hoofs. The bulls are described by ancient authors as having white manes; but those of latter days had lost that peculiarity, perhaps by intermixture with the tame breed. 2

In detailing the death of the Regent Murray, which is made the subject of the following ballad, it would be injustice to my reader to use other words than those of Dr. Robertson, whose account of that memorable event forms a beautiful piece of historical painting.

"Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh was the person who committed this barbarous action. He had been condemned to death soon after the battle of Langside, as we have already related, and owed his life to the regent's clemency. But part of his estate had been bestowed upon one of the regent's favorites, 3 who seized his house, and turned out his wife, naked, in a cold night, into the open fields, where, before next morning, she became furiously mad. This injury made a deeper impression on him than the benefit he are still to be seen at Chillingham Castle, in Northumberland. For their nature and ferocity, see Notes.

1 The breed had not been entirely extirpated. There remained certainly a magnificent herd of these cattle in Cadyow Forest within these few years. 1833.—Ed.

2 They were formerly kept in the park at Drumlaurig, and had received, and from that moment he vowed to be revenged of the regent. Party rage strengthened and inflamed his private resentment. His kinsmen, the Hamiltons, applauded the enterprise. The maxims of that age justified the most desperate course he could take to obtain vengeance. He followed the regent for some time, and watched for an opportunity to strike the blow. He resolved at last to wait till his enemy should arrive at Linlithgow, through which he was to pass in his way from Stirling to Edinburgh. He took his stand in a wooden gallery, which had a window towards the street; spread a feather-bed on the floor to hinder the noise of his feet from being heard; hung up a black cloth behind him, that his shadow might not be observed from without; and, after all this preparation, calmly expected the regent's approach, who had lodged, during the night, in a house not far distant. Some indistinct information of the danger which threatened him had been conveyed to the regent, and he paid so much regard to it that he resolved to return by the same gate through which he had entered, and to fetch a compass round the town. But, as the crowd about the gate was great, and he himself unacquainted with fear, he proceeded directly along the street; and the throng of people obliging him to move very slowly, gave the assassin time to take so true an aim that he shot him, with a single bullet, through the lower part of his belly, and killed the horse of a gentleman who rode on his other side. His followers instantly endeavored to break into the house whence the blow had come; but they found the door strongly barricaded, and before it could be forced open, Hamilton had mounted a fleet horse, which stood ready for him at a back passage, and was got far beyond their reach. The regent died the same night of his wound."—History of Scotland, book v.

3 This was Sir James Bellenden, Lord Justice-Clerk, whose shameful and inhuman rapacity occasioned the catastrophe in the text.—SPOTTISWOODE.

Bothwellhaugh rode straight to Hamilton, where he was received in triumph; for the ashes of the houses in Clydesdale, which had been burned by Murray's army, were yet smoking; and party prejudice, the habits of the age, and the enormity of the provocation, seemed to his kinsmen to justify the deed. After a short abode at Hamilton, this fierce and determined man left Scotland, and served in France, under the patronage of the family of Guise, to whom he was doubtless recommended by having avenged the cause of their niece, Queen Mary, upon her ungrateful brother. De Thou has recorded that an attempt was made to engage him toante urine Gaspar de Coligny, the famous Admiral of France, and the buckler of the Huguenot cause. But the character of Bothwellhaugh was mistaken. He was no mercenary trader in blood, and rejected the offer with contempt and indignation. He had no authority, he said, from Scotland to commit murders in France; he had avenged his own just quarrel, but he would neither, for price nor prayer, avenge that of another man.—Thuanus, cap. 46.

The regent's death happened 23rd January, 1569. It is applauded or stigmatized, by contemporary historians, according to their religious or party prejudices. The triumph of Blackwood is unbounded. He not only extols the pious feat of Bothwellhaugh, "who," he observes, "satisfied, with a single ounce of lead, him whose sacrilegious avarice had stripped the metropolitan church of St. Andrews of its covering," but he ascribes it to immediate divine inspiration, and the escape of Hamilton to little less than the miraculous interference of the Deity.—Jebb, vol. ii. p. 263. With equal injustice, it was, by others, made the ground of a general national reflection; for, when Mather urged Berney to assassinate Burleigh, and quoted the examples of Poltrot and Bothwellhaugh, the other conspirator answered, "that neyther Poltrot nor Hambleton did attempt their enterprise without some reason or consideration to lead them to it; as the one, by hyre, and promise of prefferment or reward; the other, upon desperate mind of revenge, for a lyttle wrong done unto him, as the report goeth, according to the vyle trayterous dysposysyon of the hoole natyon of the Scottes."—Murdin's State Papers, vol. i. p. 197.

Cadbyow Castle.

Addressed to

The Right Honorable

Lady Anne Hamilton.

When princely Hamilton's abode
Ennobled Cadbyow's Gothic towers,
The song went round, the goblet flow'd,
And revel sped the laughing hours.

Then, thrilling to the harp's gay sound,
So sweetly rung each vaulted wall,
And echo'd light the dancer's bound,
As mirth and music cheer'd the hall.

But Cadbyow's towers, in ruins laid,
And vaults, by ivy mantled o'er,
Thrift to the music of the shade,
Or echo Evan's hoarser roar.

1 This projecting gallery is still shown. The house to which it was attached was the property of the Archbishop of St. Andrews, a natural brother to the Duke of Chatelherault, and uncle to Bothwellhaugh. This, among many other circumstances, seems to evince the aid which Bothwellhaugh received from his clan in effecting his purpose.

2 The gift of Lord John Hamilton, Commandator of Arbroath.

3 Eldest daughter of Archibald, ninth Duke of Hamilton.

—En.
CONTRIBUTIONS TO MINSTRELSY. 597

Yet still, of Cadyow's faded fame,
You bid me tell a minstrel tale,
And tune my harp, of Border frame,
On the wild banks of Evandale.

For thou, from scenes of courtly pride,
From pleasure’s lighter scenes, canst turn,
To draw oblivion’s pall aside,
And mark the long-forgotten urn.

Then, noble maid! at thy command,
Again the crumbled halls shall rise;
Lo! as on Evan’s banks we stand,
The past returns—the present flies.

Where, with the rock’s wood-cover’d side,
Were blended late the ruins green,
Rise turrets in fantastic pride,
And feudal banners flaunt between:

Where the rude torrent’s brawling course
Was shagg’d with thorn and tangling sloe,
The ashlar buttress braves its force,
And ramparts frown in battled row.

’Tis night—the shade of keep and spire
Obscurely dance on Evan’s stream;
And on the wave the warder’s fire
Is chequering the moonlight beam.

Fades slow their light; the east is gray;
The weary warder leaves his tower;
Steeds snort, uncoupled stag-hounds bay,
And merry hunters quit the bower.

The drawbridge falls—they hurry out—
Clatters each plank and swinging chain,
As, dashing o’er, the jovial rout
Urge the shy steed, and slack the rein.

First of his troop, the Chief rode on;
His shouting merry-men throng behind;
The steed of princeley Hamilton
Was fleeter than the mountain wind.

From the thick copse the roe bounds back,
The startled red-deer sends the plain,
For the hoarse bugle’s warrior sound
Has roused their mountain haunts again.

Through the huge oaks of Evandale,
Whose limbs a thousand years have worn,
What sullen roar comes down the gale,
And drowns the hunter’s pealing horn?

Mightiest of all the beasts of chase
That roam in woody Caledon,
Crashing the forest in his race,
The Mountain Bull comes thundering on.

Fierce, on the hunter’s quiver’d band,
He rolls his eyes of swarthy glow,
Spurns, with black hoof and horn, the sand,
And tosses high his mane of snow.

Aim’d well, the Chieftain’s lance has flown;
Struggling in blood the savage lies;
His roar is sunk in hollow groan—
Sound, merry huntsmen! sound the pryse!

’Tis noon—against the knotted oak
The hunters rest the idle spear;
Curls through the trees the slender smoke,
Where yeomen dight the woodland cheer.

Proudly the Chieftain mark’d his clan,
On Greenwood lap all careless thrown,
Yet miss’d his eye the boldest man
That bore the name of Hamilton.

“Why fills not Bothwellhaugh his place,
Still wont our weal and woe to share?
Why comes he not our sport to grace?
Why shares he not our hunter’s fare?”

Stern Claud replied, with darkening face
(Gray Paisley’s haughty lord was he),
“’At merry feast, or buxom chase,
No more the warrior wilt thou see.

“Few suns have set since Woodhouselee!
Saw Bothwellhaugh’s bright goblets foam,
When to his hearths, in social glee,
The war-worn soldier turn’d him home.

“Here, wan from her maternal thrones,
His Margaret, beautiful and mild,
Sat in her bower, a pallid rose,
And peaceful nursed her new-born child.

“Oho change accursed! past are those days;
False Murray’s ruthless spoilers came,
And, for the hearth’s domestic blaze,
Ascends destruction’s volumed flame.

“What sheeted phantom wanders wild
Where mountain Esk through woodland flows?
Her arms enfold a shadowy child—
Oh, is it she, the pallid rose?

1 The head of the family of Hamilton, at this period, was James, Earl of Arran, Duke of Chatelherault in France, and first peer of the Scottish realm. In 1569 he was appointed by Queen Mary her lieutenant-general in Scotland, under the singular title of her adopted father.

2 See Appendix, Note A.

3 See Appendix, Note B.

4 See Appendix, Note C.
“The wilder'd traveller sees her glide,
And hears her feeble voice with awe—
‘Revenge,’ she cries, ‘on Murray’s pride!
And woe for injured Bothwellhaugh!’”

He ceased—and cries of rage and grief
Burst mingling from the kindred band,
And half arose the kindling Chief,
And half unsheathed his Arran brand.

But who, o’er bush, o’er stream and rock,
Rides headlong, with resistless speed,
Whose bloody poniard’s frantic stroke
Drives to the leap his jaded steed;¹

Whose cheek is pale, whose eyeballs glare,
As one some vision’d sight that saw,
Whose hands are bloody, loose his hair?—
’Tis he! ’tis he! ’tis Bothwellhaugh.

From gory selle² and reeling steed
Sprung the fierce horseman with a bound,
And, recking from the recent deed,
He dash’d his carbine on the ground.

Sternly he spoke—”’Tis sweet to hear
In good greenwood the bugle blown,
But sweeter to Revenge’s ear,
To drink a tyrant’s dying groan.

“Your slaughter’d quarry proudly trode,
At dawning morn, o’er dale and down,
But prouder base-born Murray rode
Through old Linlithgow’s crowded town.

“From the wild Border’s humbled side³
In haughty triumph marched he,
While Knox relax’d his bigot pride,
And smiled the traitorous pomp to see.

“But can stern Power, with all his vaunt,
Or Pomp, with all her courtly glare,
The settled heart of Vengeance daunt,
Or change the purpose of Despair?

“With hackbut bent,⁴ my secret stand,
Dark as the purposed deed, I chose,
And mark’d where, mingling in his band,
Troop’d Scottish pikes and English bows.

“Dark Morton,⁵ girt with many a spear,
Murder’s foul minion, led the van;
And clash’d their broadswords in the rear
The wild Macfarlanes’ plaided clan.⁶

¹ See Appendix, Note D.
² Selle, saddle; a word used by Spenser and other ancient writers.
³ See Appendix, Note E.
⁴ Ibid. Note F.
⁵ Of this noted person it is enough to say that he was active in the murder of David Rizzio, and at least party to that of Darnley.
⁶ See Appendix, Note G.
⁷ Ibid. Note H.
⁸ See Appendix, Note I.
⁹ Ibid. Note K.
¹⁰ An oak, half sawn, with the motto through, is an ancient cognizance of the family of Hamilton.
For the loud bugle, pealing high,
The blackbird whistles down the vale,
And sunk in ivied ruins lie
The banner'd towers of Evandale.

For Chiefs intent on bloody deed,
And Vengeance shouting o'er the slain,

"Scott spent the Christmas of 1801 at Hamilton Palace, in Lanarkshire. To Lady Anne Hamilton he had been introduced by her friend, Lady Charlotte Campbell, and both the late and the present Dukes of Hamilton appear to have partaken of Lady Anne's admiration for 'Glenfinlas' and the 'Eve of St. John.' A morning's ramble in the majestic ruins of the old baronial castle on the precipitous banks of the Eran, and among the adjoining remains of the primeval Caledonian forest, suggested to him a ballad, not inferior in execution to any that he had hitherto produced, and especially interesting as the first in which he grapples with the world of picturesque incident unfolded in the authentic annals of Scotland. With the magnificent localities before him, he skillfully interwove the daring assassination of the Regent Murray by one of the clansmen of 'the princely Hamilton.' Had the subject been taken up in after years, we might have had another 'Marmion' or 'Heart of Mid-Lothian;' for in 'Cadyow Castle' we have the materials and outline of more than one of the noblest ballads.

"About two years before this piece began to be handed about in Edinburgh, Thomas Campbell had made his appearance there, and at once seized a high place in the literary world by his 'Pleasures of Hope.' Among the most eager to welcome him had been Scott; and I find the brother bard thus expressing himself concerning the MS. of 'Cadyow':—

"The verses of "Cadyow Castle" are perpetually ringing in my imagination—

"Where, mightiest of the beasts of chase
That roam in woody Caledon,
Crashing the forest in his race,
The mountain bull comes thundering on"— and the arrival of Hamilton, when

"Recking from the recent deed,
He dashed his carbine on the ground."

I have repeated these lines so often on the North Bridge that the whole fraternity of coffee-house himself had me by tongue as I pass. To be sure, to a mind in sober, serious street-walking humor, it must bear an appearance of lunacy when one stamps with the hurried pace and fervent shake of the head which strong, pithy poetry excites."—Life of Scott, vol. ii. p. 77.

APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

sound the prysse!—P. 597.

Prysse, the note blawn at the death of the game.—In Caledonia oligo frequens erat Sylvestris quidam bos, nunc vero rarior, qui, colore candidissimo, jubam denaum et demissaum instar leonis gestat, truculentus ac ferus ab humano genere abhorrens, ut quaque homines vel mansus constrictus, vel habita perfavorint, ubi his multos post dies omnino abstatuere. Ad hoc tanta audacia haec bovi tulit erat, ut non solet irritatus eques furient propterterceret, sed ut tantum facessisse omnes praeitiue homines cornibus ac angulis pedit; et canum, qui apud nos ferocissimi sunt, impetus plane contemneret. Ejus cornes cartilaginosae, sed soporis suavissimae. Erat is olmus ille in media villis Caledoniis atque frequens, sed humanus ingluviarum annuum et impetu tanta tona loca est religiosus, Stirivillii, Cumbrius, et Kincarius.—Lesales, Scotia Descriptio, p. 13. [See a note on "Castle Dangerous," Waverley Novels, vol. xliv.—Ed.]

NOTE B.

Sternly Claud replied.—P. 597.

Lord Claud Hamilton, second son of the Duke of Chatelherault, and commissary of the Abbey of Paisley, acted a distinguished part during the troubles of Queen Mary's reign, and remained unalterably attached to the cause of that unfortunate princess. He led the van of her army at the fatal battle of Langside, and was one of the commanders at the raid of Stirling, which had so nearly given complete success to the queen's faction. He was ancestor of the present Marquis of Abercorn.

NOTE C.

Woodhouselee.—P. 597.

This barony, stretching along the banks of the Esk, near Auchendinny, belonged to Bothwellhaugh, in right of his wife. The ruins of the mansion, from whence she was expelled in the brutal manner which occasioned her death, are still to be seen in a hollow glen beside the river. Popular report tenants them with the restless ghost of the Lady Bothwellhaugh—whom, however, it confounds with Lady Anne Bothwell, whose "Lament" is so popular. This spectre is so tenacious of her rights that, a part of the stones of the ancient edifice having been employed in building or repairing the present Woodhouselee, she has deemed it a part of her privilege to haunt that house also; and, even of very late years, has excited considerable disturbance and terror among the domestics. This is a more remarkable vindication of the rights of ghosts, as the present Woodhouselee, which gives his title to the Honorable Alexander Fraser Tytler, a senator of the College of Justice, is situated on the slope of the Pentland Hills, distant at least four miles from her proper abode. She always appears in white, and with her child in her arms.

---

NOTE D.

Drives to the leap his jaded steed.—P. 598.

Birrel informs us that Bothwellhaugh, being closely pursued, "after that spur and wand had failed him, he drew forth his dagger, and stroke his horse behind, whilk caused the horse to leap a very brode stanke [i.e. ditch], by whilk means he escapit, and gat away from all the rest of the horses."—Birrel's Diary, p. 18.

---

NOTE E.

From the wild Border's humbled side.—P. 598.

Murray's death took place shortly after an expedition to the Borders, which is thus commemorated by the author of his elegy:

"So having stablischt all thing in this sort,
To Liddisdalill agane he did resort,
Throw Ewisdall, Eckdall, and all the dallys rode he,
And also lay three nights in Cannabale,
Whair na prince lay thir hundred yeirs before.
Nac thief durst stir, they did him feir sa sair;
And, that thay sold na mair thair thift allege,
Threescore and twelf he brocht of thame in pledge,
Syne wadit thame, whilk maid the rest keep ordour;
Than mycht the rasch-bus keep ky on the Border."

Scottish Poems, sixteenth century, p. 252.

---

NOTE F.

With hackbut bent.—P. 598.

Hackbut bent, gun cocked. The carbine with which the regent was shot is preserved at Hamilton Palace. It is a brass piece, of a middling length, very small in the bore, and, what is rather extraordinary, appears to have been rifled or indented in the barrel. It had a matchlock, for which a modern firelock has been injudiciously substituted.

---

NOTE G.

The wild Macfarlanes' plaudit clan.—P. 598.

This clan of Lennox Highlanders were attached to the Regent Murray. Holinshed, speaking of the battle of Langside, says, "In this batayle the valiancie of an Heiland gentleman, named Macfarlane, stood the regent's part in great stede; for, in the hottest brunte of the fighte, he came up with two hundred of his friends and countrymen, and so manfully gave in upon the flankes of the queen's people, that he was a great cause of the disordering of them. This Macfarlane had been lately before, as I have heard, condemned to die, for some outrage by him committed, and obtaining pardon through suyte of the Countess of Murray, he recompened that clemencie by this piece of service now at this batayle." Calderwood's account is less favorable to the Macfarlanes. He states that "Macfarlane, with his Highlandmen, fled from the wing where they were set. The Lord Lindsay, who stood nearest to them in the regent's battle, said, 'Let them go! I shall fill their place better,' and so, stepping forward, with a company of fresh men, charged the enemy, whose spears were now spent, with long weapons, so that they were driven back by force, being before almost overthrown by the avuant-guard and harquebusiers, and so were turned to flight."—Calderwood's MS. app'd Keith, p. 490. Melville mentions the flight of the vanguard, but states it to have been commanded by Morton, and composed chiefly of commoners of the barony of Renfrew.

---

NOTE H.

Glencairn and stout Parkhead were nigh.—P. 598.

The Earl of Glencairn was a steady adherent of the regent. George Douglas of Parkhead was a natural brother of the Earl of Morton, whose horse was killed by the same ball by which Murray fell.

---

NOTE I.

—— haggard Lindsay's iron eye,

That saw fair Mary weep in vain.—P. 598.

Lord Lindsay of the Byres was the most ferocious and brutal of the regent's faction, and as such was employed to extort Mary's signature to the deed of resignation presented to her at Lochleven Castle. He discharged his commission with the most savage rigor; and it is even said that when the weeping captive, in the act of signing, avverted her eyes from the fatal deed, he pinched her arm with the grasp of his iron glove.

---

NOTE K.

So close the minions crowded nigh.—P. 598.

Not only had the regent notice of the intended attempt upon his life, but even of the very house from which it was threatened. With that infatuation at which men wonder after such events have happened, he deemed it would be a sufficient precaution to ride briskly past the dangerous spot. But even this was prevented by the crowd; so that Bothwellhaugh had time to take a deliberate aim.—Scottiswoode, p. 233. Buchanan.
The Gray Brother.

A FRAGMENT.

The imperfect state of this ballad, which was written several years ago, is not a circumstance affected for the purpose of giving it that peculiar interest which is often found to arise from ungratified curiosity. On the contrary, it was the editor's intention to have completed the tale if he had found himself able to succeed to his own satisfaction. Yielding to the opinion of persons whose judgment, if not biassed by the partiality of friendship, is entitled to deference, he has preferred inserting these verses as a fragment, to his intention of entirely suppressing them.

The tradition upon which the tale is founded regards a house upon the barony of Gilmerton, near Lasswade, in Mid-Lothian. This building, now called Gilmerton Grange, was originally named Burndale, from the following tragic adventure:—The barony of Gilmerton belonged, of yore, to a gentleman named Heron, who had one beautiful daughter. This young lady was seduced by the Abbot of Newbattle, a richly endowed abbey upon the banks of the South Esk, now a seat of the Marquis of Lothian. Heron came to the knowledge of this circumstance, and learned also that the lovers carried on their guilty intercourse by the connivance of the lady's nurse, who lived at this house of Gilmerton Grange, or Burndale. He formed a resolution of bloody vengeance, undeterred by the supposed sanctity of the clerical character, or by the stronger claims of natural affection. Choosing, therefore, a dark and windly night, when the objects of his vengeance were engaged in a stolen interview, he set fire to a stack of dried thorns and other combustibles which he had caused to be piled against the house, and reduced to a pile of glowing ashes the dwelling, with all its inmates.

The scene with which the ballad opens was suggested by the following curious passage extracted from the Life of Alexander Peden, one of the wandering and persecuted teachers of the sect of Cameronians, during the reign of Charles II. and his successor, James. This person was supposed by his followers, and, perhaps, really believed himself, to be possessed of supernatural gifts; for the wild scenes which they frequented, and the constant dangers which were incurred through their proscription, deepened upon their minds the gloom of superstition, so general in that age.

"About the same time he [Peden] came to Andrew Normand's house, in the parish of Alloway, in the shire of Ayr, being to preach at night in his barn. After he came in, he halted a little, leaning upon a chair-back, with his face covered; when he lifted up his head, he said, 'They are in this house that I have not one word of salvation unto;' he halted a little again, saying, 'This is strange, that the devil will not go out, that we may begin our work!' Then there was a woman went out, ill-looked upon almost all her life, and to her dying hour, for a witch, with many presumptions of the same. It escaped me, in the former passages, what John Muirhead (whom I have often mentioned) told me, that when he came from Ireland to Galloway, he was at family worship, and giving some notes upon the Scripture read, when a very ill-looking man came, and sat down within the door, at the back of the hallan [partition of the cottage]: immediately he halted and said, 'There is some unhappy body just now come into this house. I charge him to go out, and not stop my mouth!' This person went out, and he insisted [went on], yet he saw him neither come in nor go out."—The Life and Prophecies of Mr. Alexander Peden, late Minister of the Gospel at New Gленlue, in Galloway, part ii. 26.

A friendly correspondent remarks "that the incapacity of proceeding in the performance of a religious duty, when a contaminated person is present, is of much higher antiquity than the era of the Reverend Mr. Alexander Peden."—Vide Higgin Fabulas, cap. 26. "Medea Corintho eizl, Athenas, ad [Aegaeum Pandionis filium devenit in hospitium, eique nupti.

—Postea sacerdos Dionis Medeam exagitare copit, regique negabat sacra custode fuerre posse, eo quod in ea civitate esset mulier venefica et sacer orata; tune euctatur."

The Gray Brother.

The Pope he was saying the high, high mass, All on Saint Peter's day,

Britain to concentrate her thunders, and to launch them against her foes with an unerring aim.
With the power to him given, by the saints in heaven,
To wash men's sins away.

The Pope he was saying the blessed mass,
And the people kneel'd around,
And from each man's soul his sins did pass,
As he kiss'd the holy ground.

And all, among the crowded throng,
Was still, both limb and tongue,
While, through vaulted roof and aisles aloof,
The holy accents rung.

At the holiest word he quiver'd for fear,
And falter'd in the sound—
And, when he would the chalice rear,
He dropp'd it to the ground.

"The breath of one of evil deed
Pollutes our saered day;
He has no portion in our creed,
No part in what I say.

"A being whom no blessed word
To ghostly peace can bring;
A wretch at whose approach abhorr'd
Recoils each holy thing.

"Up, up, unhappy! haste, arise!
My adjuration fear!
I charge thee not to stop my voice,
Nor longer tarry here!"

Amid them all a pilgrim kneel'd,
In gown of sackcloth gray;
Far journeying from his native field,
He first saw Rome that day.

For forty days and nights so drear,
I ween he had not spoke,
And, save with bread and water clear,
His fast he ne'er had broke.

Amid the penitential flock,
Seem'd none more bent to pray;
But, when the Holy Father spoke,
He rose and went his way.

Again unto his native land
His weary course he drew,
To Lothian's fair and fertile strand,
And Pentland's mountains blue.

His unblest feet his native seat,
'Mid Esk's fair woods, regain;
Thro' woods more fair no stream more sweet
Rolls to the eastern main.

And lords to meet the pilgrim came,
And vassals bent the knee;

For all 'mid Scotland's chiefs of fame,
Was none more famed than he.

And boldly for his country, still,
In battle he had stood,
Ay, even when on the banks of Till
Her noblest pour'd their blood.

Sweet are the paths, oh passing sweet!
By Esk's fair streams that run,
O'er airy steep, through eopsed deep,
Impervious to the sun.

There the rapt poet's step may rove,
And yield the muse the day;
There Beauty, led by timid Love,
May shun the tell-tale ray;

From that fair dome, where suit is paid
By blast of bugle free,
To Auchendinny's hazel glade,
And haunted Woodhouselee.

Who knows not Melville's beechy grove,
And Roslin's rocky glen,
Dalkeith, which all the virtues love,
And classic Hawthornden?

Yet never a path, from day to day,
The pilgrim's footsteps range,
Save but the solitary way
To Burndale's ruin'd grange.

A woeful place was that, I ween,
As sorrow could desire;
For nodding to the fall was each crumbling wall,
And the roof was seathed with fire.

It fell upon a summer's eve,
While on Carneithy's head
The last faint gleams of the sun's low beams
Had streak'd the gray with red,

And the convent bell did vespers tell
Newbattle's oaks among,
And mingled with the solemn knell
Our Ladye's evening song,—

The heavy knell, the choir's faint swell,
Came slowly down the wind,
And on the pilgrim's ear they fell,
As his wonted path he did find.

Deep sunk in thought, I ween, he was,
Nor ever raised his eye,
Until he came to that dreary place,
Which did all in ruins lie.

1 See Appendix, Notes 1 to 7.
He gazed on the walls, so seathed with fire,
With many a bitter groan—
And there was aware of a Gray Friar,
Resting him on a stone.

"Now, Christ thee save!" said the Gray Brother;
"Some pilgrim thou seemest to be."
But in sore amaze did Lord Albert gaze,
Nor answer again made he.

"Oh come ye from east, or come ye from west,
Or bring relics from over the sea;
Or come ye from the shrine of St. James the divine,
Or St. John of Beverley?"—

"I come not from the shrine of St. James the divine,
Nor bring relics from over the sea;
I bring but a curse from our father, the Pope,
Which forever will cling to me."—

"Now, woeful pilgrim, say not so!
But kneel thee down to me,
And shrieve thee so clean of thy deadly sin,
That absolved thou may'st be."

"And who art thou, thou Gray Brother,
That I should shrieve to thee,
When He, to whom are given the keys of earth
And heaven,
Has no power to pardon me?"—

"Oh I am sent from a distant clime,
Five thousand miles away,
And all to absolve a foul, foul crime,
Done here 'twixt night and day."

The pilgrim kneel'd him on the sand,
And thus began his saye—
When on his neck an ice-cold hand
Did that Gray Brother laye.1

* * * * * *

"Then came the 'Gray Brother,' founded on another superstition, which seems to have been almost as ancient as the belief in ghosts,—namely, that the holiest service of the altar cannot go on in the presence of an unclean person—a heinous sinner unconfessed and unabsolved. The fragmentary form of this poem greatly heightens the awfulness of its impression; and in expression and metre, the verses which really belong to the story appear to me the happiest that have ever been produced expressly in imitation of the ballad of the middle age. In the stanzas, previously quoted, on the scenery of the Esk, however beautiful in themselves, and however interesting now as marking the locality of the composition, he must be allowed to have lapsed into another strain, and produced a parvenus purperea which interferes with and mars the general texture."—Life of Scott, vol. ii.

APPENDIX.

Notes 1 to 7.

SCENERY OF THE ESK.—P. 602.

1 The barony of Pennycuik, the property of Sir George Clerk, Bart., is held by a singular tenure,—the proprietor being bound to sit upon a large rocky fragment called the Bucksband, and wind three blasts of a horn, when the king shall come to hunt on the Borough Muir, near Edinburgh.
Hence the family have adopted as their crest a demi-forester proper, winding a horn, with the motto, "Free for a blast."
The beautiful mansion-house of Pennycuik is much admired, both on account of the architecture and surrounding scenery.

2 Auchendinny, situated upon the Esk, below Pennycuik, the present residence of the ingenious H. MacKenzie, Esq.,

3 "Haunted Woodhouselee."—For the traditions connected with this ruinous mansion, see ballad of "Cadyow Castle,"
Note, p. 509.

4 Melville Castle, the seat of the Right Honorable Lord
Melville, to whom it gives the title of viscount, is delightfully situated upon the Esk, near Lasswade.

5 The ruins of Roslin Castle, the baronial residence of the ancient family of St. Clair. The Gothic chapel, which is still in beautiful preservation, with the romantic and woody dell in which they are situated, belong to the Right Honorable the Earl of Rosslyn, the representative of the former Lords of Roslin.

6 The village and castle of Dalkeith belonged of old to the famous Earl of Morton, but is now the residence of the noble family of Bucleuch. The park extends along the Esk, which is there joined by its sister stream of the same name.

7 Hawthornden, the residence of the poet Drummond.
A house of more modern date is enclosed, as it were, by the ruins of the ancient castle, and overhangs a tremendous precipice upon the banks of the Esk, perforated by winding caves, which in former times were a refuge to the oppressed patriots of Scotland. Here Drummond received Ben Jonson, who journeyed from London on foot in order to visit him. The beauty of this striking scene has been much injured of late years by the indiscriminate use of the axe. The traveler now looks in vain for the leafy bowers.

"Where Jonson sat in Drummond's social shade."

Upon the whole, tracing the Esk from its source till it joins the sea at Musselburgh, no stream in Scotland can boast such a varied succession of the most interesting objects, as well as of the most romantic and beautiful scenery. 1803. . . The beautiful scenery of Hawthornlen has, since the above note was written, recovered all its proper ornament of wood. 1831.

War-Song of the Royal Edinburgh Light Dragoons.

"Nennius. Is not peace the end of arms?
"Caratach. Not where the cause implies a general conquest.
Had we a difference with some petty Isle,
Or with our neighbors, Britons, for our landmarks,
The taking in of some rebellious Lord,
Or making head against a slight commotion,
After a day of blood, peace might be argued:
But where we grapple for the land we live on,
The liberty we hold more dear than life,
The gods we worship, and, next these, our honors,
And, with those, swords that know no end of battle—
Those men, beside themselves, allow no neighbor,
Those minds that, where the day is, claims inheritance,
And, where the sun makes ripe the fruit, their harvest,
And, where they march, but measure out more ground
To add to Rome—
It must not be—No! as they are our foes,
Let's use the peace of honor—that's fair dealing;
But in our hands our swords. The hardy Roman,
That thinks to graft himself into my stock,
Must first begin his kindred under ground,
And be allied in ashes."—Bondura.

The following War-Song was written during the apprehension of an invasion. The corps of volunteers to which it was addressed was raised in 1797, consisting of gentlemen mounted and armed at their own expense. It still subsists as the Right Troop of the Royal Mid-Lothian Light Cavalry, commanded by the Honorable Lieutenant-Colonel Dundas. The noble and constitutional measure of arming freemen in defence of their own rights was nowhere more successful than in Edinburgh, which furnished a force of 3000 armed and disciplined volunteers, including a regiment of cavalry, from the city and county, and two corps of artillery, each capable of serving twelve guns. To such a force, above all others, might, in similar circumstances, be applied the exhortation of our ancient Galgacus: "Proinde ituri in aciem, et majores vestros et posteros cogitate." 1812.

War-Song of the
ROYAL EDINBURGH LIGHT DRAGOONS.

To horse! to horse! the standard flies,
The bugles sound the call;
The Gallic navy stems the seas,
The voice of battle's on the breeze;
Arouse ye, one and all!

From high Dunedin's towers we come,
A band of brothers true;
Our casques the leopard's spoils surround,
With Scotland's hardy thistle crown'd;
We boast the red and blue.3

Though tamely crouch to Gallia's frown
Dull Holland's tardy train;
Their ravish'd joys though Romans mourn;
Though gallant Switzers vainly spurn,
And, foaming, gnaw the chain,—

Oh! had they mark'd the avenging call!4
Their brethren's murder gave, regarded the death of their bravest countrymen, mercilessly slaughtered in discharge of their duty, encouraged and authorized the progressive injustice by which the Alps, once the seat of the most virtuous and free people upon the continent, have at length been converted into the citadel of a foreign and military despot. A state degraded is half enslaved. 1812.

---

1 The song originally appeared in the Scots Magazine for 1802.—Ed.
2 Now Viscount Melville. 1831.
3 The royal colors.
4 The allusion is to the massacre of the Swiss Guards, on the fatal 16th August, 1792. It is painful, but not useless, to remark that the passive temper with which the Swiss
CONTRIBUTIONS TO MINSTRELSY.

Disunion ne'er their ranks had mown,
Nor patriot valor, desperate grown,
Sought freedom in the grave!

Shall we, too, bend the stubborn head,
In Freedom's temple born,
Dress our pale cheek in timid smile,
To hail a master in our isle,
Or brook a victor's scorn?

No! though destruction o'er the land
Come pouring as a flood,
The sun, that sees our falling day,
Shall mark our sabres' deadly sway,
And set that night in blood.

For gold let Gallia's legions fight,
Or plunder's bloody gain;
Unbribed, unbought, our swords we draw,
To guard our king, to fence our law,
Nor shall their edge be vain.

If ever breath of British gale
Shall fan the tri-color,
Or footstep of invader rude,
With rapine foul, and red with blood,
Pollute our happy shore,—

Then farewell home! and farewell friends!
Adieu each tender tie!
Resolved, we mingle in the tide,
Where charging squadrons furious ride,
To conquer or to die.

To horse! to horse! the sabres gleam;
High sounds our bugle-call;
Combined by honor's sacred tie,
Our word is Laws and Liberty!
March forward, one and all!!

1 Sir Walter Scott was, at the time when he wrote this song, quartermaster of the Edinburgh Light Cavalry. See one of the epistles introductory to "Marmion."—Ed.
Ballads,

TRANSLATED OR IMITATED FROM THE GERMAN, &c.

William and Helen.

1796.¹

IMITATED FROM THE "LENORE" OF BÜRGER.

The author had resolved to omit the following version of a well-known poem in any collection which he might make of his poetical trifles. But the publishers having pleaded for its admission, the author has consented, though not unaware of the disadvantage at which this youthful essay (for it was written in 1795) must appear with those which have been executed by much more able hands, in particular that of Mr. Taylor of Norwich, and that of Mr. Spencer.

The following translation was written long before the author saw any other, and originated in the following circumstances:—A lady of high rank in the literary world read this romantic tale, as translated by Mr. Taylor, in the house of the celebrated Professor Dugald Stewart of Edinburgh. The author was not present, nor indeed in Edinburgh at the time; but a gentleman who had the pleasure of hearing the ballad afterwards told him the story, and repeated the remarkable chorus—

"Tramp! tramp! across the land they speed,
Splash! splash! across the sea;
Hurrah! The dead can ride apace!
Dost fear to ride with me?"

In attempting a translation, then intended only to circulate among friends, the present author did not hesitate to make use of this impressive stanza; for which freedom he has since obtained the forgiveness of the ingenious gentleman to whom it properly belongs.

WILLIAM AND HELEN.

I.

From heavy dreams fair Helen rose,
And eyed the dawning red:
"Alas, my love, thou tarriest long!
Oh art thou false, or dead?"

II.

With gallant Fred'rick's princely power
He sought the bold Crusade;
But not a word from Judah's wars
Told Helen how he sped.

III.

With Paynim and with Saracen
At length a truce was made,
And every knight return'd to dry
The tears his love had shed.

IV.

Our gallant host was homeward bound
With many a song of joy;
Green waved the laurel in each plume,
The badge of victory.

V.

And old and young, and sire and son,
To meet them crowd the way;
With shouts, and mirth, and melody,
The debt of love to pay.

VI.

Full many a maid her true-love met,
And sobb'd in his embrace,
And fluttering joy in tears and smiles
Array'd full many a face.

¹ "The Chase" and "William and Helen," two Ballads, from the German of Gottfried Augustus Bürger. Edinburgh: Printed by Mundell & Son, Royal Bank Close, for Manners & Miller, Parliament Square; and sold by T. Cadell, Jun., and

VII.
Nor joy nor smile for Helen sad;
She sought the host in vain;
For none could tell her William's fate,
If faithless, or if slain.

VIII.
The martial band is past and gone;
She rends her raven hair,
And in distraction's bitter mood
She weeps with wild despair.

IX.
"Oh rise, my child," her mother said,
"Nor sorrow thus in vain;
A perjured lover's fleeting heart
No tears recall again."—

X.
"Oh, mother, what is gone, is gone,
What's lost, for ever lorn:
Death, death alone can comfort me;
Oh had I ne'er been born!

XI.
"Oh break, my heart,—oh break at once!
Drink my life-blood, Despair!
No joy remains on earth for me,
For me in heaven no share."—

XII.
"Oh enter not in judgment, Lord!"
The pious mother prays;
"Impute not guilt to thy frail child!
She knows not what she says.

XIII.
"Oh say thy pater noster child!
Oh turn to God and grace!
His will, that turn'd thy bliss to bale,
Can change thy bale to bliss."—

XIV.
"Oh, mother, mother, what is bliss?
Oh mother, what is bale?
My William's love was heaven on earth,
Without it earth is hell.

XV.
"Why should I pray to ruthless Heaven,
Since my loved William's slain?
I only pray'd for William's sake,
And all my prayers were vain."—

XVI.
"Oh take the sacrament, my child,
And check these tears that flow;
By resignation's humble prayer,
Oh hallow'd be thy woe!"—

XVII.
"No sacrament can quench this fire,
Or slake this searching pain;
No sacrament can bid the dead
Arise and live again.

XVIII.
"Oh break, my heart,—oh break at once!
Be thou my god, Despair!
Heaven's heaviest blow has fallen on me,
And vain each fruitless prayer."—

XIX.
"Oh enter not in judgment, Lord,
With thy frail child of clay!
She knows not what her tongue has spoke;
Impute it not, I pray!

XX.
"Forbear, my child, this desperate woe,
And turn to God and grace;
Well can devotion's heavenly glow
Convert thy bale to bliss."—

XXI.
Oh, mother, mother, what is bliss?
Oh, mother, what is bale?
Without my William what were heaven,
Or with him what were hell?

XXII.
Wild she arraigns the eternal doom,
Upbraids each sacred power,
Till, spent, she sought her silent room,
All in the lonely tower.

XXIII.
She beat her breast, she wrung her hands,
Till sun and day were o'er,
And through the glimmering lattice shone
The twinkling of the star.

XXIV.
Then, crash! the heavy drawbridge fell
That o'er the moat was hung;
And clatter! clatter! on its boards
The hoof of courser rung.

XXV.
The clank of echoing steel was heard
As off the rider bounded;
And slowly on the winding stair
A heavy footstep sounded.

XXVI.
And hark! and hark! a knock—Tap! tap!
A rustling stifled noise;—
Door-latch and tinkling staples ring:
At length a whispering voice.
XXVII.
"Awake, awake, arise, my love!
How, Helen, dost thou fare?
Wak'st thou, or sleep'st? laugh'st thou, or weep'st?
Hast thought on me, my fair?"—

XXXVII.
And hurry! hurry! off they rode,
As fast as fast might be;
Spurn'd from the courser's thundering heels
The flashing pebbles flee.

XXXVIII.
"Sit fast—dost fear? The moon shines clear—
Fleet goes my barb—keep hold!
Fear'st thou?"—"Oh no!" she faintly said;
"But why so stern and cold?"

XXXIX.
"What yonder rings? what yonder sings?—
Why shrieks the owlet gray?"—
"Tis death-bells' clang, 'tis funeral song,
The body to the clay.

XL.
"With song and clang, at morrow's dawn,
Ye may inter the dead:
To-night I ride, with my young bride,
To deck our bridal bed.

XLII.
"Come with thy choir, thou coffin'd guest
To swell our nuptial song!
Come, priest, to bless our marriage feast
Come all, come all along!"

XXX.
"Let the wind howl through hawthorn bush!
This night we must away;
The steed is wight, the spur is bright;
I cannot stay till day.

XLIII.
Ceased clang and song; down sunk the bier;
The shrouded corpse arose:
And hurry! hurry! all the train
The thundering steed pursues.

XXXI.
"Busk, busk, and bouné! Thou mount'st behind
Upon my black barb steed:
O'er stock and stile, a hundred miles,
We haste to bridal bed."—

XXXIV.
"To-night—to-night a hundred miles!—
Oh, dearest William, stay!
The bell strikes twelve—dark, dismal hour!
Oh wait, my love, till day!"—

XXXV.
"Look here, look here—the moon shines clear—
Full fast I ween we ride;
Mount and away! for ere the day
We reach our bridal bed.

XXXVI.
Strong love prevail'd; she busks, she bounes,
She mounts the barb behind,
And round her darling William's waist
Her lily arms she twined.

XXXV.
"The black barb snorts, the bridle rings;
Haste, busk, and bouné, and seat thee!
The feast is made, the chamber spread,
The bridal guests await thee."

XXXVIII.
And on the right, and on the left,
Ere they could snatch a view,
Fast, fast each mountain, mead, and plain,
And cot and castle, flew.

XXXIX.
"My love! my love!—so late by night!—
I wak'd, I wept for thee:
Much have I borne since dawn of morn;
Where, William, couldst thou be?"—

XL.
"Oh, William, why this savage haste?
And where thy bridal bed?"—
"'Tis distant far, low, damp, and chill,
And narrow, trustless maid."—

XLII.
"No room for me?"—"Enough for both;—
Speed, speed, my barb, thy course!"
O'er thundering bridge, through boiling surge,
He drove the furious horse.
XLVII.
Tramp! tramp! along the land they rode,
Splash! splash! along the sea;
The scourge is wight, the spur is bright,
The flashing pebbles flee.

XLVIII.
Fled past on right and left how fast
Each forest, grove, and bower!
On right and left fled past how fast
Each city, town, and tower!

XLIX.
"Dost fear? dost fear? The moon shines clear;
Dost fear to ride with me?—
Hurrah! hurrah! the dead can ride!"—
"Oh, William, let them be!—

L.
"See there, see there! What yonder swings
And creaks 'mid whistling rain'?—
"Gibbet and steel, th' accursed wheel;
A murderer in his chain.—

II.
"Hollo! thou felon, follow here:
To bridal bed we ride;
And thou shalt prance a fetter dance
Before me and my bride."

III.
And hurry! hurry! clash, clash, clash!
The wasted form descends;
And fleet as wind through hazel bush
The wild career attends.

IV.
Tramp! tramp! along the land they rode,
Splash! splash! along the sea;
The scourge is red, the spur drops blood,
The flashing pebbles flee.

V.
How fled what moonshine faintly show'd!
How fled what darkness hid!
How fled the earth beneath their feet,
The heaven above their head!

VI.
"Dost fear? dost fear? The moon shines clear,
And well the dead can ride;
Does faithful Helen fear for them?"—
"Oh leave in peace the dead!"—

VII.
"Barb! Barb! methinks I hear the cock;
The sand will soon be run:
Barb! Barb! I smell the morning air;
The race is wellnigh done."
The Wild Huntsman.

This is a translation, or rather an imitation, of the "Wilde Jäger" of the German poet Bürger. The tradition upon which it is founded bears that formerly a Wildgrave, or keeper of a royal forest, named Falkenburg, was so much addicted to the pleasures of the chase, and otherwise so extremely profligate and cruel, that he not only followed this unhallowed amusement on the Sabbath, and other days consecrated to religious duty, but accompanied it with the most unheard-of oppression upon the poor peasants who were under his vassalage. When this second Nimrod died, the people adopted a superstition, founded probably on the many various uncouth sounds heard in the depth of a German forest during the silence of the night. They conceived they still heard the cry of the Wildgrave's hounds; and the well-known caw of the deceased hunter, the sounds of his horses' feet, and the rustling of the branches before the game, the pack, and the sportmen, are also distinctly discriminated; but the phantoms are rarely, if ever, visible. Once, as a benighted Chasseur heard this infernal chase pass by him, at the sound of the hallow, with which the Spectre Huntsman cheered his hounds, he could not refrain from crying, "Glück zu, Falkenburgh!" [Good sport to ye, Falkenburgh!] "Dost thou wish me good sport?" answered a hoarse voice; "thou shalt share the game!" and there was thrown at him what seemed to be a huge piece of foul carrion. The daring Chasseur lost two of his best horses soon after, and never perfectly recovered the personal effects of this ghostly greeting. This tale, though told with some variations, is universally believed all over Germany.

The French had a similar tradition concerning an aërial hunter who infested the forest of Fontainbleau. He was sometimes visible; when he appeared as a huntsman, surrounded with dogs, a tall grisy figure. Some account of him may be found in Sully's Mémoires, who says he was called Le Grand Veneur. At one time he chose to hunt so near the palace that the attendants, and, if I mistake not, Sully himself, came out into the court, supposing it was the sound of the king returning from the chase. This phantom is elsewhere called Saint Hubert.

The superstition seems to have been very general, as appears from the following fine poetical description of this phantom chase, as it was heard in the wilds of Ross-shire:

"For since of old the haughty thanes of Ross,—
So to the simple swain tradition tells,—
Were wont with clans, and ready vessels throng'd,
To wake the bounding stag or guilty wolf,
There oft is heard, at midnight or at noon,
Beginning faint, but rising still more loud,
And nearer, voice of hunters and of hounds,
And horns, hoarse winded, blowing far and keen:—
Forthwith the hmbhub multiplies: the gale
Labors with wilder shrieks, and rifer din
Of hot pursuit; the broken cry of deer
Mangled by throttling dogs; the shouts of men,
And hoofs thick beating on the hollow hill.
Sudden the gazing heifer in the vale
Starts at the noise, and both the herdsman's ears
Tingle with inward dread. Aghast he eyes
The mountain's height, and all the ridges round,
Yet not one trace of living wight discerns,
Nor knows, o'erawed and trembling as he stands,
To what or whom he owes his idle fear,
To ghost, to witch, to fairy, or to fiend;
But wonders, and no end of wondering finds."

A posthumous miracle of Father Lesley, a Scottish capuchin, related to his being buried on a hill haunted by these unearthly cries of hounds and huntsmen. After his sainted relics had been deposited there, the noise was never heard more. The reader will find this and other miracles recorded in the life of Father Bonaventura, which is written in the choicest Italian.

THE WILD HUNTSMAN.

1796.

The Wildgrave winds his bugle-horn,
To horse, to horse! hallow! hallow!
His fiery courser sniffs the morn,
And thronging scents their lord pursue.

The eager pack, from couples freed,
Dash through the bush, the brier, the brake:
While answering hound, and horn, and steed,
The mountain echoes startling wake.

The beams of God's own hallow'd day
Had painted yonder spire with gold,
And, calling sinful man to pray,
Loud, long, and deep the bell had toll'd:

But still the Wildgrave onward rides;
Hallow! hallow! and hark again!
When, spurring from opposing sides,
Two Stranger Horsemen join the train.

Who was each Stranger, left and right,
Well may I guess, but dare not tell;
The right-hand steed was silver white,
The left, the swarthy hue of hell.

The right-hand Horseman, young and fair,
His smile was like the morn of May;
The left, from eye of tawny glare
Shot midnight lightning's lurid ray.

He waved his huntsman's cap on high,
Cried, "Welcome, welcome, noble lord!"
What sport can earth, or sea, or sky,
To match the princely chase, afford?"—

1 Published (1796) with "William and Helen," and entitled "The Chase."
BALLADS FROM THE GERMAN.

"Cease thy loud bugle's changing knell,"
Cried the fair youth, with silver voice;
"And for devotion's choral swell
Exchange the rude unhallow'd noise.

"To-day, the ill-omen'd chase forbear,
You bell yet summons to the fane;
To-day the Warning Spirit hear,
To-morrow thou may'st mourn in vain."—

"Away, and sweep the glades along!"
The Sable Hunter hoarse replies;
"To muttering monks leave matin-song,
And bells, and books, and mysteries."

The Wildgrave spurr'd his ardent steed,
And, launching forward with a bound,
"Who, for thy drowsy priestlike rede,
Would leave the jovial horn and hound?"

"Hence, if our manly sport offend!
With pious fools go chant and pray:—
Well hast thou spoke, my dark-brow'd friend;
Hallow! hallow! and hark away!"

The Wildgrave spurr'd his courser light,
O'er moss and moor, o'er holt and hill;
And on the left and on the right,
Each Stranger Horseman follow'd still.

Up springs, from yonder tangled thorn,
A stag more white than mountain snow
And lowder rung the Wildgrave's horn,
"Hark forward, forward! holla, ho!"

A heedless wretch has cross'd the way;
He gasps the thundering hoofs below;
But, live who can, or die who may,
Still, "Forward, forward!" on they go.

See, where yon simple fences meet,
A field with autumn's blessings crown'd;
See, prostrate at the Wildgrave's feet,
A husbandman with toil embrown'd:—

"Oh mercy, mercy, noble lord!
Spare the poor's pittance," was his cry,
"Earn'd by the sweat these brows have pour'd,
In scorching hours of fierce July."

Earnest the right-hand Stranger pleads,
The left still cheering to the prey;
The impetuous Earl no warning heeds,
But furious holds the onward way.

"Away, thou hound! so basely born,
Or dread the scourge's echoing blow!"
Then loudly rung his bugle-horn,
"Hark forward, forward! holla, ho!"

So said, so done:—A single bound
Clears the poor laborer's humble pale,
Wild follows man, and horse, and hound,
Like dark December's stormy gale.

And man and horse, and hound and horn,
Destructive sweep the field along;
While, joying o'er the wasted corn,
Fell Famine marks the maddening throng.

Again uproused, the timorous prey
Scours moss and moor, and holt and hill;
Hard run, he feels his strength decay,
And trusts for life his simple skill.

Too dangerous solitude appear'd;
He seeks the shelter of the crowd;
Amid the flock's domestic herd
His harmless head he hopes to shroud.

O'er moss and moor, and holt and hill,
His track the steady blood-hounds trace;
O'er moss and moor, unwearied still,
The furious Earl pursues the chase.

Full lowly did the herdsman fall:—
"Oh spare, thou noble Baron, spare
These herds, a widow's little all,
These flocks, an orphan's fleecy care?"

Earnest the right-hand Stranger pleads,
The left still cheering to the prey;
The Earl nor prayer nor pity heeds,
But furious keeps the onward way.

"Unmanner'd dog! To stop my sport
Vain were thy cant and beggar whine,
Though human spirits, of thy sort,
Were tenants of these carriion kine!"

Again he winds his bugle-horn,
"Hark forward, forward! holla, ho!
And through the herd, in ruthless scorn,
He cheers his furious hounds to go.

In heaps the throttled victims fall;
Down sinks their mangled herdsman near;
The murderous cries the stag appall,—
Again he starts, new-nerved by fear.

With blood besmear'd, and white with foam,
While big the tears of anguish pour,
He seeks, amid the forest's gloom,
The humble hermit's hallow'd bower.

But man and horse, and horn and hound,
Fast rattling on his traces go;
The sacred chapel rung around
With, "Hark away! and holla, ho!"
All mild, amid the rout profane,
The holy hermit pour'd his prayer:—
"Forbear with blood God's house to stain;
Revere his altar, and forbear!

"The meanest brute has rights to plead,
Which, wrong'd by cruelty or pride,
Draw vengeance on the ruthless head;—
Be warn'd at length, and turn aside."

Still the Fair Horseman anxious pleads;
The Black, wild whooping, points the prey;—
Alas! the Earl no warning heed,
But frantic keeps the forward way.

"Holy or not, or right or wrong,
Thy altar and its rites I spuru;
Not sainted martyrs' sacred song,
Not God himself, shall make me turn!"

He spurs his horse, he winds his horn,
"Hark forward, forward! holla, ho!"—
But off, on whirlwind's pinions borne,
The stag, the hut, the hermit, go.

And horse and man, and horn and hound,
And clamor of the chase, was gone;
For hoofs, and howls, and bugle-sound,
A deadly silence reign'd alone.

Wild gazed the affrighted Earl around;
He strove in vain to wake his horn,
In vain to call; for not a sound
Could from his anxious lips be borne.

He listens for his trusty hounds;
No distant baying reach'd his ears:
His courser, rooted to the ground,
The quickening spur unmindful bears.

Still dark and darker frown the shades,
Dark as the darkness of the grave;
And not a sound the still invades,
Save what a distant torrent gave.

High o'er the sinner's humbled head
At length the solemn silence broke;
And, from a cloud of swarthy red,
The awful voice of thunder spoke.

"Oppressor of creation fair!
Apostate Spirit's harden'd tool!
Scoener of God! scourge of the poor!
The measure of thy cup is full.

"Be chased for ever through the wood;
For ever roam the affrighted wild;
And let thy fate instruct the proud,
God's meanest creature is his child."

'Twas hush'd:—One flash, of sombre glare,
With yellow tinged the forest brown;
Uprose the Wildgrave's bristling hair,
And horror chill'd each nerve and bone.

Cold pour'd the sweat in freezing rill;
A rising wind began to sing;
And louder, louder, louder still,
Brought storm and tempest on its wing.

Earth heard the call;—her entrails rend;
From yawning rifts, with many a yell,
Mix'd with sulphurous flames, ascend
The misbegotten dogs of hell.

What ghastly Huntsman next arose,
Well may I guess, but dare not tell;
His eye like midnight lightning glows,
His steed the swarthy hue of hell.

The Wildgrave flies o'er bush and thorn,
With many a shriek of helpless woe;
Behind him hound and horse and horn,
And "Hark away! and holla, ho!"

With wild despair's reverted eye,
Close, close behind, he marks the throng,
With bloody fangs and eager cry;
In frantic fear he scours along.—

Still, still shall last the dreadful chase,
Till time itself shall have an end;
By day, they scour earth's cavern'd space,
At midnight's witching hour, ascend.

This is the horn, and hound, and horse,
That oft the lated peasant hears;
Appall'd, he signs the frequent cross,
When the wild din invades his ears.

The wakeful priest oft drops a tear
For human pride, for human woe,
When, at his midnight mass, he hears
The infernal cry of "Holla, ho!"

_The Fire-King._

"The blessings of the evil Genii, which are curses, were upon him." _Eastern Tale._

1801.

This ballad was written at the request of Mr. Lewis, to be inserted in his _Tales of Wonder._ It is the third

1 Published in 1801. See ante, p. 571.
in a series of four ballads, on the subject of Elementary Spirits. The story is, however, partly historical; for it is recorded that, during the struggles of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem, a Knight-Templar, called Saint Alban, deserted to the Saracens, and defeated the Christians in many contests, till he was finally routed and slain, in a conflict with King Baldwin, under the walls of Jerusalem.

Bold knights and fair dames, to my harp give an ear, Of love, and of war, and of wonder to hear; And you haply may sigh, in the midst of your glee, At the tale of Count Albert and fair Rosalie.

Oh see you that castle, so strong and so high? And see you that lady, the tear in her eye? And see you that palmer, from Palestine's land, The shell on his hat, and the staff in his hand?—

"Now, palmer, gray palmer, oh tell unto me, What news bring you home from the Holy Countrie? And how goes the warfare by Galilee's strand? And how fare our nobles, the flower of the land?"

"Oh well goes the warfare by Galilee's wave, For Gilead, and Nablous, and Ramah we have; And well fare our nobles by Mount Lebanon, For the Heathen have lost, and the Christians have won."

A fair chain of gold 'maid her ringlets there hung; O'er the palmer's gray locks the fair chain has she flung: "Oh, palmer, gray palmer, this chain be thy fee, For the news thou hast brought from the Holy Countrie.

"And, palmer, good palmer, by Galilee's wave, Oh saw ye Count Albert, the gentle and brave? When the Crescent went back, and the Red Cross rush'd on, Oh saw ye him foremost on Mount Lebanon?"

"Oh, lady, fair lady, the tree green it grows; Oh, lady, fair lady, the stream pure it flows; Your castle stands strong, and your hopes soar on high; But, lady, fair lady, all blossoms to die.

"The green boughs they wither, the thunderbolt falls, It leaves of your castle but levin-scorch'd walls; The pure stream runs muddy; the gay hope is gone; Count Albert is prisoner on Mount Lebanon."

Oh she's ta'en a horse, should be fleet at her speed; And she's ta'en a sword, should be sharp at her need; And she has ta'en shipping for Palestine's land, To ransom Count Albert from Soldanrie's hand.

Small thought had Count Albert on fair Rosalie, Small thought on his faith or his knighthood had he; A heathenish damsel his light heart had won, The Soldan's fair daughter of Mount Lebanon.

"Oh, Christian, brave Christian, my love wouldst thou be, Three things must thou do ere I hearken to thee: Our laws and our worship on thee shalt thou take; And this thou shalt first do for Zulema's sake.

"And, next, in the cavern, where burns evermore The mystical flame which the Curdman doth adore, Alone, and in silence, three nights shalt thou wake; And this thou shalt next do for Zulema's sake.

"And, last, thou shalt aid us with counsel and hand To drive the Frank robber from Palestine's land; For my lord and my love then Count Albert I'll take, When all this is accomplish'd for Zulema's sake."

He has thrown by his helmet, and cross-handled sword, Renouncing his knighthood, denying his Lord; He has ta'en the green caftan, and turban put on, For the love of the maiden of fair Lebanon.

And in the dread cavern, deep deep under ground, Which fifty steel gates and steel portals surround, He has watch'd until daybreak, but sight saw he none, Save the flame burning bright on its altar of stone.

Amazed was the Princess, the Soldan amazed, Sore murmur'd the priests as on Albert they gazed; They search'd all his garments, and, under his weeds, They found, and took from him, his rosary beads.

Again in the cavern, deep deep under ground, He watch'd the lone night, while the winds whistled round; Far off was their murmur, it came not more nigh, The flame burn'd unmoved, and nought else did he spy.

Loud murmur'd the priests, and amazed was the King, While many dark spells of their witchcraft they sing; They search'd Albert's body, and, lo! on his breast Was the sign of the Cross, by his father impress'd.

The priests they erase it with care and with pain, And the recreant return'd to the cavern again; But, as he descended, a whisper there fell: It was his good angel, who bade him farewell!

High bristled his hair, his heart flutter'd and beat, And he turn'd him five steps, half resolved to retreat; But his heart it was harden'd, his purpose was gone, When he thought of the maiden of fair Lebanon.

Scarce pass'd he the archway, the threshold scarce trod, When the winds from the four points of heaven were abroad;
They made each steel portal to rattle and ring,
And, borne on the blast, came the dread Fire-King.

Full sore rock'd the cavern whene'er he drew nigh,
The fire on the altar blazed bickering and high;
In volcanic explosions the mountains proclaim
The dreadful approach of the Monarch of Flame.

Unmeasured in height, undistinguish'd in form,
His breath it was lightning, his voice it was storm;
I ween the stout heart of Count Albert was tame,
When he saw in his terrors the Monarch of Flame.

In his hand a broad falchion blue-glimmer'd through smoke,
And Mount Lebanon shook as the monarch he spoke:
"With this brand shalt thou conquer, thus long, and no more,
Till thou bend to the Cross, and the Virgin adore."

The cloud-shrouded Arm gives the weapon; and see!
The recreant receives the charm'd gift on his knee:
The thunders growl distant, and faint gleam the fires,
As, borne on the whirlwind, the phantom retires.

Count Albert has arm'd him the Paynim among,
Though his heart it was false, yet his arm it was strong;
And the Red Cross wax'd faint, and the Crescent came on,
From the day he commanded on Mount Lebanon.

From Lebanon's forests to Galilee's wave,
The sands of Samaar drank the blood of the brave;
Till the Knights of the Temple, and Knights of Saint John,
With Salem's King Baldwin, against him came on.

The war-ymbals clatter'd, the trumpets replied,
The lances were couch'd, and they closed on each side;
And horsemen and horses Count Albert o'erthrew,
Till he pierced the thick tumult King Baldwin unto.

Against the charm'd blade which Count Albert did wield,
The fence had been vain of the King's Red Cross shield;
But a Page thrust him forward the monarch before,
And clent the proud turban the renegade wore.

So fell was the dint, that Count Albert stoop'd low
Before the cross'd shield, to his steel saddlebow;
And scarce had he bent to the Red Cross his head,—
"Bonne Grace, Notre Dame!" he unwittingly said.

Sore sigh'd the charm'd sword, for its virtue was o'er,
It sprung from his grasp, and was never seen more;
But true men have said that the lightning's red wing
Did waft back the brand to the dread Fire-King.

He clench'd his set teeth, and his gauntleted hand;
He stretch'd, with one buffet, that Page on the strand;
As back from the stripling the broken casque roll'd,
You might see the blue eyes, and the ringlets of gold.

Short time had Count Albert in horror to stare
On those death-swimming eyeballs, and blood-clotted hair;
For down came the Templars, like Cedron in flood,
And dyed their long lances in Saracen blood.

The Saracens, Curdmans, and Ishmaelites yield
To the scallop, the salltier, and crossleted shield;
And the eagles were gorged with the infidel dead,
From Bethsaida's fountains to Naphtali's head.

The battle is over on Bethsaida's plain.—
Oh, who is yon Paynim lies stretch'd 'mid the slain?
And who is yon Page lying cold at his knee?—
Oh, who but Count Albert and fair Rosalie!

The Lady was buried in Salem's bless'd bound,
The Count he was left to the vulture and hound:
Her soul to high mercy Our Lady did bring;
His went on the blast to the dread Fire-King.

Yet many a minstrel, in harping, can tell
How the Red Cross it conquer'd, the Crescent it fell:
And lords and gay ladies have sigh'd, 'mid their glee,
At the tale of Count Albert and fair Rosalie.

________________________________________

Frederick and Alice.

1801.

This tale is imitated, rather than translated, from a fragment introduced in Goethe's Claudiia von Villa Bella, where it is sung by a member of a gang of banditti, to engage the attention of the family while his companions break into the castle. It owes any little merit it may possess to my friend Mr. Lewis, to whom it was sent in an extremely rude state; and who, after some material improvements, published it in his Tales of Wonder.

Frederick leaves the land of France,
Homeward hastes his steps to measure,
Careless casts the parting glance
On the scene of former pleasure.

Joying in his prancing steed,
Keen to prove his untried blade,
Hope's gay dreams the soldier lead
Over mountain, moor, and glade.
Helpless, ruin'd, left forlorn,
Lovely Alice wept alone;
Mourn'd o'er love's fond contract torn,
Hope, and peace, and honor flown.

Mark her breast's convulsive throbs!
See, the tear of anguish flows!—
Mingling soon with bursting sob's,
Loud the laugh of frenzy rose.

Wild she cursed, and wild she pray'd;
Seven long days and nights are o'er;
Death in pity brought his aid,
As the village bell struck four.

Far from her, and far from France,
Faithless Frederick onward rides;
Marking, blithe, the morning's glance
Mantling o'er the mountain's sides.

Heard ye not the boding sound,
As the tongue of yonder tower,
Slowly, to the hills around,
Told the fourth, the fated hour?

Starts the steed, and snuffs the air,
Yet no cause of dread appears;
Bristles high the rider's hair,
Struck with strange mysterious fears.

Desperate, as his terrors rise,
In the steed the spur he hides;
From himself in vain he flies;
Anxious, restless, on he rides.

Seven long days, and seven long nights,
Wild he wander'd, woe the while!
Ceaseless care, and ceaseless fright,
Urged his footsteps many a mile.

Dark the seventh sad night descends;
Rivers swell, and rain-streams pour;
While the deafening thunder lends
All the terrors of its roar.

Weary, wet, and spent with toil,
Where his head shall Frederick hide?
Where, but in yon ruin'd aisle,
By the lightning's flash descried.

To the portal, dank and low,
Fast his steed the wanderer bound:
Down a ruin'd staircase slow,
Next his darkling way he wound.

Long drear vaults before him lie!
Glimmering lights are seen to glide!—
"Blessed Mary, hear my cry!"
Deign a sinner's steps to guide?"

Often lost their quivering beam,
Still the lights move slow before,
Till they rest their ghastly gleam
Right against an iron door.

Thundering voices from within,
Mix'd with peaks of laughter, rose;
As they fell, a solemn strain
Lent its wild and wondrous close!

Midst the din he seem'd to hear
Voice of friends, by death removed;—
Well he knew that solemn air,
'Twas the lay that Alice loved.—

Hark! for now a solemn knell
Four times on the still night broke;
Four times, at its deaden'd swell,
Echoes from the ruins spoke.

As the lengthen'd clangors die,
Slowly opes the iron door!
Straight a banquet met his eye,
But a funeral's form it wore!

Coffins for the seats extend;
All with black the board was spread;
Girt by parent, brother, friend,
Long since number'd with the dead!

Alice, in her grave-clothes bound,
 Ghastly smiling, points a seat;
All arose, with thundering sound;
All the expected stranger greet.

High their meagre arms they wave,
Wild their notes of welcome swell:—
"Welcome, traitor, to the grave!"
Perjured, bid the light farewell!"

---

The Battle of Sempach.

1818.

These verses are a literal translation of an ancient Swiss ballad upon the battle of Sempach, fought 9th July, 1386, being the victory by which the Swiss cantons established their independence; the author, Albert Tchudi, denominated the Souter, from his profession of a shoemaker. He was a citizen of Lucerne, esteemed highly among his countrymen, both for his powers as a Meister-Singer, or minstrel, and his courage as a soldier; so that he might share the praise conferred by Collins on Eschylus, that—

—"Not alone he nursed the poet's flame,
But reach'd from Virtue's hand the patriot steel."
The circumstance of their being written by a poet returning from the well-fought field he describes, and in which his country's fortune was secured, may confer on Tchudi's verses an interest which they are not entitled to claim from their poetical merit. But ballad poetry, the more literally it is translated, the more it loses its simplicity, without acquiring either grace or strength; and, therefore, some of the faults of the verses must be imputed to the translator's feeling it a duty to keep as closely as possible to his original. The various puns, rude attempts at pleasantry, and disproportioned episodes, must be set down to Tchudi's account, or to the taste of his age.

The military antiquary will derive some amusement from the minute particulars which the martial poet has recorded. The mode in which the Austrian men-at-arms received the charge of the Swiss was by forming a phalanx, which they defended with their long lances. The gallant Winkelreid, who sacrificed his own life by rushing among the spears, elapsing in his arms as many as he could grasp, and thus opening a gap in those iron battalions, is celebrated in Swiss history. When fairly mingled together, the unwieldy length of their weapons, and cumbrous weight of their defensive armor, rendered the Austrian men-at-arms a very unequal match for the light-armed mountaineers. The victories obtained by the Swiss over the German chivalry, hitherto deemed as formidable on foot as on horseback, led to important changes in the art of war. The poet describes the Austrian knights and squires as cutting the peaks from their boots ere they could act upon foot, in allusion to an inconvenient piece of hoppery, often mentioned in the middle ages. Leopold III., Archduke of Austria, called "the handsome man-at-arms," was slain in the battle of Sempach, with the flower of his chivalry.

THE BATTLE OF SEMPACH.1

'Twas when among our linden-trees
The bees had housed in swarms
(And gray-hair'd peasants say that these Betoken foreign arms),

Then look'd we down to Willisow,
The land was all in flame;
We knew the Archduke Leopold
With all his army came.

The Austrian nobles made their vow,
So hot their heart and bold,
"On Switzer carles we'll trample now
And slay both young and old."

With clarion loud and banner proud,
From Zürich on the lake,
In martial pomp and fair array
Their onward march they make.

"Now list, ye lowland nobles all—
Ye seek the mountain strand,
Nor wit ye what shall be your lot
In such a dangerous land.

"I rede ye, shrieve ye of your sins
Before ye farther go;
A skirmish in Helvetican hills
May send your souls to woe."—

"But where now shall we find a priest
Our shrift that he may hear?"—
"The Swiss priest² has ta'en the field;
He deals a penance drear.

"Right heavily upon your head
He'll lay his hand of steel;
And with his trusty partisan
Your absolution deal."

'Twas on a Monday morning then,
The corn was steep'd in dew,
And merry maids had sickles ta'en,
When the host to Sempach drew.

The stalwart men of fair Lucerne
Together have they join'd;
The pith and core of manhood stern,
Was none cast looks behind.

It was the Lord of Hare-castle,
And to the Duke he said,
"You little band of brethren true
Will meet us undismay'd."—

"Oh, Hare-castle,² thou heart of hare!"
Fierce Oxenstern replied,—
"Shall see then how the game will fare,
The taunted knight replied.

There was lacing then of helmets bright,
And closing ranks amain;
The peaks they hew'd from their boot-points
Might wellnigh load a wain.₄

---

Footnotes:
1 This translation first appeared in Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine for February, 1818.—Ed.
2 All the Swiss clergy who were able to bear arms fought in this patriotic war.
3 In the original, Haazenstein, or Hare-stone.
4 This seems to allude to the preposterous fashion, during the middle ages, of wearing boots with the points or peaks turned upwards, and so long that in some cases they were fastened to the knees of the wearer with small chains. When they alighted to fight upon foot, it would seem that the Austrian gentlemen found it necessary to cut off these peaks, that they might move with the necessary activity.
And thus they to each other said,
   "Yon handful down to hew
Will be no boastful tale to tell,
The peasants are so few."

The gallant Swiss Confederates there
   They pray'd to God alon,
And he display'd his rainbow fair
Against a swarthy cloud.

Then heart and pulse throbb'd more and more
   With courage firm and high,
And down the good Confederates bore
On the Austrian chivalry.

The Austrian Lion1 'gan to growl,
   And toss his mane and tail;
And ball, and shaft, and crossbow bolt,
   Went whistling forth like hail.

Lance, pike, and halbert, mingled there,
   The game was nothing sweet;
The boughs of many a stately tree
   Lay shiver'd at their feet.

The Austrian men-at-arms stood fast;
   So close their spears they laid,
It chafed the gallant Winkelreid,
   Who to his comrades said—

   "I have a virtuous wife at home,
       A wife and infant son;
I leave them to my country's care,—
   This field shall soon be won.

   "These nobles lay their spears right thick,
       And keep full firm array,
Yet shall my charge their order break,
   And make my brethren way."

He rush'd against the Austrian band,
   In desperate career,
And with his body, breast, and hand,
   Bore down each hostile spear.

Four lances splinter'd on his crest,
   Six shiver'd in his side;
Still on the serried files he press'd—
   He broke their ranks, and died.

This patriot's self-devoted deed
   First tamed the Lion's mood,
And the four forest cantons freed
From thraldom by his blood.

Right where his charge had made a lane,
   His valiant comrades burst,

With sword, and axe, and partisan,
   And hack, and stab, and thrust.

The daunted Lion 'gan to whine,
   And granted ground amain;
The Mountain Bull2 he bent his brows,
   And gored his sides again.

Then lost was banner, spear, and shield,
   At Sempach in the flight;
The cloister vaults at Konig's-field
   Hold many an Austrian knight.

It was the Archduke Leopold,
   So lordly would he ride,
But he came against the Switzer churls,
   And they slew him in his pride.

The heifer said unto the bull,
   "And shall I not complain?"
There came a foreign nobleman
   To milk me on the plain.

   "One thrust of thine outrageous horn
       Has gall'd the knight so sore,
That to the churchyard he is borne,
   To range our glens no more."

An Austrian noble left the stour,
   And fast the flight 'gan take;
And he arrived in luckless hour
   At Sempach on the lake.

He and his squire a fisher call'd
   (His name was Hans Von Rot),
"For love, or need, or charity,
   Receive us in thy boat!"

Their anxious call the fisher heard,
   And, glad the need to win,
His shallop to the shore he steer'd,
   And took the flyers in.

And while against the tide and wind
   Hans stoutly rowed his way,
The noble to his follower sign'd
   He should the boatman slay.

The fisher's back was to them turn'd,
   The squire his dagger drew,
Hans saw his shadow in the lake,
   The boat he overthrew.

He whelm'd the boat, and as they strove,
   He stunn'd them with his ear:
"Now, drink ye deep, my gentle sirs,
   You'll ne'er stab boatman more.

1 A pun on the archduke's name, Leopold.

2 A pun on the Urus, or wild bull, which gives name to the canton of Ury.
"Two gilded fishes in the lake
This morning have I caught;
Their silver scales may much avail,
Their carion flesh is naught."

It was a messenger of woe
Has sought the Austrian land:
"Ah! gracious lady, evil news!
My lord lies on the strand.

"At Senapach, on the battle-field,
His bloody corpse lies there."—
"Ah, gracious God!" the lady cried,
"What tidings of despair?"

Now would you know the minstrel wight
Who sings of strife so stern,
Albert the Souter is he hight,
A burgher of Lucerne.

A merry man was he, I wot,
The night he made the lay,
Returning from the bloody spot
Where God had judged the day.

The Noble Moringer.

AN ANCIENT BALLAD.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

1819.1

The original of these verses occurs in a collection of German popular songs, entitled Sammlung Deutscher Volkslieder, Berlin, 1807, published by Messrs. Busching & Von der Hagen, both, and more especially the last, distinguished for their acquaintance with the ancient popular poetry and legendary history of Germany.

In the German editor's notice of the ballad, it is stated to have been extracted from a manuscript Chronicle of Nicolaus Thomann, chaplain to Saint Leonard in Weisenhorn, which bears the date 1533; and the song is stated by the author to have been generally sung in the neighborhood at that early period. Thomann, as quoted by the German editor, seems faithfully to have believed the event he narrates. He quotes tombstones and obituaries to prove the existence of the personages of the ballad, and discovers that there actually died, on the 11th May, 1349, a Lady Von Neuffen, Countess of Marstetten, who was, by birth, of the house of Moringer. This lady he supposes to have been Moringer's daughter, mentioned in the ballad. He quotes the same authority for the death of Berckhold Von Neuffen, in the same year. The editors, on the whole, seem to embrace the opinion of Professor Smith of Ulm, who, from the language of the ballad, ascribes its date to the fifteenth century.

The legend itself turns on an incident not peculiar to Germany, and which, perhaps, was not unlikely to happen in more instances than one, when crusaders abode long in the Holy Land, and their disconsolate dames received no tidings of their fate. A story, very similar in circumstances, but without the miraculous machinery of Saint Thomas, is told of one of the ancient Lords of Haigh Hall in Lancashire, the patrimonial inheritance of the late Countess of Balcarras; and the particulars are represented on stained glass upon a window in that ancient manor-house.2

THE NOBLE MORINGER.

I.

Oh, will you hear a knightly tale of old Bohemian day?
It was the noble Moringer in wedlock bed he lay;
He halsed and kiss'd his dearest dame, that was as sweet as May,
And said, "Now, lady of my heart, attend the words I say.

II.

"Tis I have vow'd a pilgrimage unto a distant shrine,
And I must seek Saint Thomas-land, and leave the land that's mine;
Here shalt thou dwell the while in state, so thou wilt pledge thy stay
That thou for my return wilt wait seven twelvemonths and a day."

III.

Then out and spoke that Lady bright, sore troubled in her cheer,
"Now tell me true, thou noble knight, what order takest thou here;
And who shall lead thy vassal band, and hold thy lordly sway,
And be thy Lady's guardian true when thou art far away?"

IV.

Out spoke the noble Moringer, "Of that have thou no care,
There's many a valiant gentleman of me holds living fair;

1 The translation of the "Noble Moringer" appeared originally in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1816 (published in 1819). It was composed during Sir Walter Scott's severe and alarming illness of April, 1819, and dictated, in the intervals of exquisite pain, to his daughter Sophia and his friend William Laidlaw.—Ed. See Life of Scott, vol. vi. p. 71.

The trustiest shall rule my land, my vassals, and my state,
And be a guardian tried and true to thee, my lovely mate.

V.
"As Christian man, I needs must keep the vow which I have plighted,
When I am far in foreign land, remember thy true knight;
And cease, my dearest dame, to grieve, for vain were sorrow now,
But grant thy Moringer his leave, since God hath heard his vow."

VI.
It was the noble Moringer from bed he made him bouné,
And met him there his Chamberlain, with ever and with gown:
He flung the mantle on his back, 'twas fur'd with miniver,
He dipp'd his hand in water cold, and bathed his forehead fair.

VII.
"Now hear," he said, "Sir Chamberlain, true vassal art thou mine,
And such the trust that I repose in that proved worth of thine,
For seven years shalt thou rule my towers, and lead my vassal train,
And pledge thee for my Lady's faith till I return again."

VIII.
The Chamberlain was blunt and true, and sturdily said he,
"Abide, my Lord, and rule your own, and take this rede from me:
That woman's faith's a brittle trust—Seven twelve-months didst thou say?
I'll pledge me for no lady's truth beyond the seventh fair day."

IX.
The noble Baron turn'd him round, his heart was full of care;
His gallant Esquire stood him nigh, he was Marstetten's heir,
To whom he spoke right anxiously, "Thou trusty squire to me,
Wilt thou receive this weighty trust when I am o'er the sea?

X.
"To watch and ward my castle strong, and to protect my land,
And to the hunting or the host to lead my vassal band;

And pledge thee for my Lady's faith till seven long years are gone,
And guard her as Our Lady dear was guarded by Saint John."

XI.
Marstetten's heir was kind and true, but fiery, hot, and young,
And readily he answer made with too presumptuous tongue:
"My noble Lord, cast care away, and on your journey wend,
And trust this charge to me until your pilgrimage have end.

XII.
"Rely upon my plighted faith, which shall be truly tried,
To guard your lands, and ward your towers, and with your vassals ride;
And for your lovely Lady's faith, so virtuous and so dear,
I'll gage my head it knows no change, be absent thirty year."

XIII.
The noble Moringer took cheer when thus he heard him speak,
And doubt forsook his troubled brow, and sorrow left his cheek;
A long adieu he bids to all—hoists topsails, and away,
And wanders in Saint Thomas-land seven twelve-months and a day.

XIV.
It was the noble Moringer within an orchard slept,
When on the Baron's slumbering sense a boding vision crept;
And whisper'd in his ear a voice, "Tis time, Sir Knight, to wake,
Thy Lady and thy heritage another master take.

XV.
"Thy tower another banner knows, thy steeds another rein,
And stoop them to another's will thy gallant vassal train;
And she, the Lady of thy love, so faithful once and fair,
This night within thy fathers' hall she weds Marstetten's heir."

XVI.
It is the noble Moringer starts up and tears his beard,
"Oh would that I had ne'er been born! what tidings have I heard!
To lose my lordship and my lands the less would be my care,
But, God! that e'er a squire untrue should wed my Lady fair.
XVII.
"Oh, good Saint Thomas, hear," he pray'd, "my patron Saint art thou,
A traitor robs me of my land even while I pay my vow!
My wife he brings to infamy that was so pure of name,
And I am far in foreign land, and must endure the shame."

XVIII.
It was the good Saint Thomas, then, who heard his pilgrim's prayer,
And sent a sleep so deep and dead that it o'erpower'd his care;
He waked in fair Bohemian land outstretch'd beside a rill,
High on the right a castle stood, low on the left a mill.

XIX.
The Moringer he started up as one from spell unbound,
And dizzy with surprise and joy gazed wildly all around;
"I know my fathers' ancient towers, the mill, the stream I know,
Now blessed be my patron Saint who cheer'd his pilgrim's woe!"

XX.
He leant upon his pilgrim staff, and to the mill he drew,
So alter'd was his goodly form that none their master knew;
The Baron to the miller said, "Good friend, for charity, Tell a poor Palmer in your land what tidings may there be?"

XXI.
The miller answer'd him again, "He knew of little news,
Save that the Lady of the land did a new bridegroom choose;
Her husband died in distant land, such is the constant word,
His death sits heavy on our souls, he was a worthy Lord.

XXII.
"Of him I held the little mill which wins me living free,
God rest the Baron in his grave, he still was kind to me!
And when Saint Martin's tide comes round, and millers take their toll,
The priest that prays for Moringer shall have both cope and stole."

XXIII.
It was the noble Moringer to climb the hill begun,
And stood before the bolted gate a woe and weary man;
"Now help me, every saint in heaven that can compassion take,
To gain the entrance of my hall this woeful match to break."

XXIV.
His very knock it sounded sad, his call was sad and slow,
For heart and head, and voice and hand, were heavy all with woe;
And to the warder thus he spoke: "Friend, to thy Lady say,
A pilgrim from Saint Thomas-land craves harbor for a day.

XXV.
"I've wander'd many a weary step, my strength is wellnigh done,
And if she turn me from her gate I'll see no morrow's sun;
I pray, for sweet Saint Thomas' sake, a pilgrim's bed and dole,
And for the sake of Moringer's, her once-loved husband's soul."

XXVI.
It was the stalwart warder then he came his dame before;
"A pilgrim, worn and travel-toil'd, stands at the castle door;
And prays, for sweet Saint Thomas' sake, for harbor and for dole,
And for the sake of Moringer, thy noble husband's soul."

XXVII.
The Lady's gentle heart was moved: "Do up the gate," she said,
"And bid the wanderer welcome be to banquet and to bed;
And since he names my husband's name, so that he lists to stay,
These towers shall be his harborage a twelvemonth and a day."

XXVIII.
It was the stalwart warder then undid the portal broad,
It was the noble Moringer that o'er the threshold strode;
"And have thou thanks, kind Heaven," he said, "though from a man of sin,
That the true Lord stands here once more his castle gate within."
XXXIX.

Then up the halls paced Moringer, his step was sad and slow;
It sat full heavy on his heart, none seem’d their Lord to know;
He sat him on a lowly bench, oppress’d with woe and wrong,
Short space he sat, but ne’er to him seem’d little space so long.

XXX.

Now spent was day, and feasting o’er, and come was evening hour,
The time was nigh when new-made brides retire to nuptial bower;
“Our castle’s wont,” a bridesman said, “hath been both firm and long,
No guest to harbor in our halls till he shall chant a song.”

XXXI.

Then spoke the youthful bridegroom there as he sat by the bride,
“My merry minstrel folk,” quoth he, “lay shalm and harp aside;
Our pilgrim guest must sing a lay, the castle’s rule to hold,
And well his guerdon will I pay with garment and with gold.”—

XXXII.

“Chill flows the lay of frozen age,” ’twas thus the pilgrim sung,
“Nor golden meed, nor garment gay, unlocks his heavy tongue;
Once did I sit, thou bridegroom gay, at board as rich as thine,
And by my side as fair a bride with all her charms was mine.

XXXIII.

“But time traced furrows on my face, and I grew silver-hair’d,
For locks of brown, and cheeks of youth, she left this brow and beard;
Once rich, but now a palmer poor, I tread life’s latest stage,
And mingle with your bridal mirth the lay of frozen age.”

XXXIV.

It was the noble Lady there this woeful lay that hears,
And for the aged pilgrim’s grief her eye was dimm’d with tears;
She bade her gallant cupbearer a golden beaker take,
And bear it to the palmer poor to quaff it for her sake.

XXXV.

It was the noble Moringer that dropp’d amid the wine
A bridal ring of burning gold so costly and so fine:

Now listen, gentle, to my song, it tells you but the sooth,
’Twas with that very ring of gold he pledged his bridal truth.

XXXVI.

Then to the cupbearer he said, “Do me one kindly deed,
And should my better days return, full rich shall be thy meed;
Bear back the golden cup again to yonder bride so gay,
And crave her of her courtesy to pledge the palmer gray.”

XXXVII.

The cupbearer was courtly bred, nor was the boon denied;
The golden cup he took again, and bore it to the bride:
“Lady,” he said, “your reverend guest sends this, and bids me pray
That, in thy noble courtesy, thou pledge the palmer gray.”

XXXVIII.

The ring hath caught the Lady’s eye, she views it close and near,
Then might you hear her shriek aloud, “The Moringer is here!”
Then might you see her start from seat, while tears in torrents fell,
But whether ’twas for joy or woe, the ladies best can tell.

XXXIX.

But loud she utter’d thanks to Heaven, and every saintly power,
That had return’d the Moringer before the midnight hour;
And loud she utter’d vow on vow, that never was there bride
That had like her preserved her troth, or been so sorely tried.

XL.

“Yes, here I claim the praise,” she said, “to constant matrons due,
Who keep the troth that they have plighted, so steadfastly and true;
For count the term howe’er you will, so that you count aright,
Seven twelvemonths and a day are out when bells toll twelve to-night.”

XLI.

It was Marstetten then rose up, his falchion there he drew,
He kneel’d before the Moringer, and down his weapon threw;
"My oath and knightly faith are broke," these were the words he said, "Then take, my liege, thy vassal’s sword, and take thy vassal’s head."

XLII.
The noble Moringer he smiled, and then aloud did say, "He gathers wisdom that hath roam’d seven twelve-months and a day; My daughter now hath fifteen years, fame speaks her sweet and fair, I give her for the bride you lose, and name her for my heir.

XLIII.
"The young bridegroom hath youthful bride, the old bridegroom the old, Whose faith was kept till term and tide so punctually were told; But blessings on the warder kind that oped my castle gate, For had I come at morrow tide, I came a day too late."

The Erl-King.¹

FROM THE GERMAN OF GOETHE.

[The Erl-King is a goblin that haunts the Black Forest in Thuringia.—To be read by a candle particularly long in the snuff.]

Oh who rides by night thro’ the woodland so wild? It is the fond father embracing his child; And close the boy nestles within his loved arm, To hold himself fast, and to keep himself warm.

¹ 1797. "To Miss Christian Rutherford.—I send a goblin story. You see I have not altogether lost the faculty of rhyming. I assure you there is no small impudence in attempting a version of that ballad, as it has been translated by Lewis... W. S."—Life, vol. i. p. 378.
Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces.

IN THE ORDER OF THEIR COMPOSITION OR PUBLICATION.

Juvenile Lines. FROM VIRGIL.

1782.—Etat. 11.

"Scott's autobiography tells us that his translations in verse from Horace and Virgil were often approved by Dr. Adams [Rector of the High School, Edinburgh]. One of these little pieces, written in a weak boyish scrawl, within pencilled marks still visible, had been carefully preserved by his mother; it was found folded up in a cover, inscribed by the old lady—'My Walter's first lines, 1782.'"—Lockhart, Life of Scott, vol. i. p. 129.

In awful ruins Ætna thunders nigh, And sends in pitchy whirlwinds to the sky Black clouds of smoke, which still as they aspire, From their dark sides there bursts the glowing fire; At other times huge balls of fire are toss'd, That lick the stars, and in the smoke are lost: Sometimes the mount, with vast convulsions torn, Emits huge rocks, which instantly are borne With loud explosions to the starry skies, The stones made liquid as the huge mass flies, Then back again with greater weight recoils, While Ætna thundering from the bottom boils.

On a Thunder Storm.

1783.—Etat. 12.

"In Scott's introduction to the 'Lay,' he alludes to an original effusion of these 'schoolboy days,' prompted by a thunder-storm, which he says 'was much approved of, until a malevolent critic sprung up in the shape of an apothecary's blue-buskined wife,' &c. &c. These lines, and another short piece, 'On the Setting Sun,' were lately found wrapped up in a cover, inscribed by Dr. Adam, 'Walter Scott, July, 1783.'"

Loud o'er my head though awful thunders roll, And vivid lightnings flash from pole to pole, Yet 'tis thy voice, my God, that bids them fly, Thy arm directs those lightnings through the sky, Then let the good thy mighty name revere, And harden'd sinners thy just vengeance fear.

On the Setting Sun.

1783.

Those evening clouds, that setting ray, And beauteous tints, serve to display Their great Creator's praise; Then let the short-lived thing call'd man, Whose life's comprised within a span, To him his homage raise.

We often praise the evening clouds, And tints so gay and bold, But seldom think upon our God, Who tinged these clouds with gold!"1

The Violet.

1707.

It appears from the Life of Scott, vol. i. p. 333, that these lines, first published in the English Minstrelsy,

1 "It must, I think, be allowed that these lines, though of the class to which the poet himself modestly ascribes them, and not to be compared with the efforts of Pope, still less of Cowley at the same period, show, nevertheless, praiseworthy dexterity for a boy of twelve."—Life of Scott, vol. i. p. 131.
1810, were written in 1797, on occasion of the poet's disappointment in love.

The violet in her Greenwood bower,
   Where birchen boughs with hazels mingle,
May boast itself the fairest flower
In glen, or copse, or forest dingle.

Though fair her gems of azure hue:
   Beneath the dewdrop's weight reclining,
I've seen an eye of lovelier blue,
   More sweet through wat'ry lustre shining.

The summer sun that dew shall dry,
   Ere yet the day be past its morrow;
Nor longer in my false love's eye
   Remain'd the tear of parting sorrow.

---

To a Lady.

WITH FLOWERS FROM A ROMAN WALL.

1797.

WRITTEN in 1797, on an excursion from Gillisland, in Cumberland. See Life, vol. i. p. 365.

Take these flowers which, purple waving,
   On the ruin'd rampart grew,
Where, the sons of freedom braving,
   Rome's imperial standards flew.

Warriors from the breach of danger
   Pinch no longer laurels there;
They but yield the passing stranger
   Wild-flower wreaths for Beauty's hair.

---

Fragments.

(1.) Bothwell Castle.

1799.

The following fragment of a ballad written at Bothwell Castle, in the autumn of 1799, was first printed in the Life of Sir Walter Scott, vol. ii. p. 28.

When fruitful Clydesdale's apple-bowers
   Are mellowing in the noon;
When sighs round Pembroke's ruin'd towers
   The sultry breath of June;

When Clyde, despite his sheltering wood,
   Must leave his channel dry,
And vainly o'er the limpid flood
   The angler guides his fly,—

If chance by Bothwell's lovely braes
   A wanderer thou hast been,
Or hid thee from the summer's blaze
   In Blantyre's bowers of green,

Full where the copsewood opens wild
   Thy pilgrim step hath staid,
Where Bothwell's towers, in ruin piled,
   O'looker the verdant glade;

And many a tale of love and fear
   Hath mingled with the scene—
Of Bothwell's banks that bloom'd so dear,
   And Bothwell's bonny Jean.

Oh, if with rugged minstrel lays
   Unstated be thy ear,
And thou of deeds of other days
   Another tale wilt hear,—

Then all beneath the spreading beech,
   Flung careless on the lea,
The Gothic muse the tale shall teach
   Of Bothwell's sisters three.

Wight Wallace stood on Deckmont head,
   He blew his bugle round,
Till the wild bull in Cadyow wood
   Has started at the sound.

St. George's cross, o'er Bothwell hung,
   Was waving far and wide,
And from the lofty turret flung
   Its crimson blaze on Clyde;

And rising at the bugle blast
   That mark'd the Scottish foe,
Old England's yeomen muster'd fast,
   And bent the Norman bow.

Tall in the midst Sir Aylmer's rose
   Proud Pembroke's Earl was he—While"— . . . . . .

---

(2.) The Shepherd's Tale.2

1799.

"Another imperfect ballad, in which he had meant to blend together two legends familiar to every reader

1 Sir Aylmer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, Edward the First's Governor of Scotland, usually resided at Bothwell of Scottish history and romance, has been found in the same portfolio, and the handwriting proves it to be of the same early date.—LOCKHART, vol. ii. p. 30.

And ne'er but once, my son, he says,
Was yon sad cavern trod,
In persecution's iron days,
When the land was left by God.

From Bowlie bog, with slaughter red,
A wanderer hither drew
And oft he stopp'd and turn'd his head,
As by fits the night wind blew;

For trampling round by Cheviot edge
Were heard the troopers keen,
And frequent from the Whitelaw ridge
The death-shot flash'd between.

The moonbeams through the misty shower
On yon dark cavern fell;
Through the cloudy night the snow gleam'd white,
Which sunbeam ne'er could quell.

"Yon cavern dark is rough and rude,
And cold its jaws of snow;
But more rough and rude are the men of blood
That hunt my life below!

"Yon spell-bound den, as the aged tell,
Was hewn by demon's hands;
But I had lourd'd melle with the fiends of hell,
Than with Clavers and his band."

He heard the deep-mouth'd blood-hound bark,
He heard the horses neigh,
He plunged him in the cavern dark,
And downward sped his way.

Now faintly down the winding path
Came the cry of the faulting hound,
And the mutter'd oath of baulked wrath
Was lost in hollow sound.

He threw him on the flinted floor,
And held his breath for fear;
He rose and bitter cursed his foes,
As the sounds died on his ear.

"Oh bare thine arm, thou battling Lord,
For Scotland's wandering band;
Dash from the oppressor's grasp the sword,
And sweep him from the land!

"Forget not thou thy people's groans;
From dark Dunnotter's tower,

Mix'd with the seafowl's shrilly moans,
And ocean's bursting roar!

"Oh, in fell Clavers' hour of pride,
Even in his mightiest day,
As bold he strides through conquest's tide,
Oh stretch him on the clay!

"His widow and his little ones,
Oh may their tower of trust
Remove its strong foundation stones,
And crush them in the dust!"—

"Sweet prayers to me," a voice replied;
"Thrice welcome, guest of mine!"
And glimmering on the cavern side,
A light was seen to shine.

An aged man, in amice brown,
Stood by the wanderer's side;
By powerful charm, a dead man's arm
The torch's light supplied.

From each stiff finger, stretch'd upright,
Arose a ghastly flame,
That waved not in the blast of night
Which through the cavern came.

Oh, deadly blue was that taper's hue,
That flamed the cavern o'er,
But more deadly blue was the ghastly hue
Of his eyes who the taper bore.

He laid on his head a hand like lead,
As heavy, pale, and cold—
"Vengeance be thine, thou guest of mine,
If thy heart be firm and bold.

"But if faint thy heart, and caitiff fear
Thy recreant sinews know,
The mountain ernie thy heart shall tear,
Thy nerves the hooded crow."

The wanderer raised him undismay'd:—
"My soul, by dangers steel'd,
Is stubborn as my Border blade,
Which never knew to yield.

"And if thy power can speed the hour
Of vengeance on my foes,
Thiers be the fate, from bridge and gate,
To feed the hooded crows."

The Brownie look'd him in the face,
And his color fled with speed—
"I fear me," quoth he, "neath it will be
To match thy word and deed.

"In ancient days, when English bands
Sore ravaged Scotland fair,
The sword and shield of Scottish land
Was valiant Halbert Kerr.

"A warlock loved the warrior well,
Sir Michael Scott by name,
And he sought for his sake a spell to make,
Should the Southern foemen tame.

"'Look thou,' he said, 'from Cessford head,
As the July sun sinks low,
And when glimmering white on Cheviot's height
Thou shalt spy a wreath of snow,
The spell is complete which shall bring to thy feet
The haughty Saxon foe.'

"For many a year wrought the wizard here,
In Cheviot's bosom low,
Till the spell was complete, and in July's heat
Appear'd December's snow,
But Cessford's Halbert never came
The wondrous cause to know.

"For years before in Bowden aisle
The warrior's bones had lain,
And after short while, by female guile,
Sir Michael Scott was slain.

"But me and my brethren in this cell
His mighty charms retain,—
And he that can quell the powerful spell
Shall o'er broad Scotland reign."

He led him through an iron door
And up a winding stair,
And in wild amaze did the wanderer gaze
On the sight which open'd there.

'Through the gloomy night flash'd a ruddy light,—
A thousand torches glow;
The cave rose high, like the vaulted sky,
O'er stalls in double row.

In every stall of that endless hall
Stood a steed in barbing bright;
At the foot of each steed, all 'arm'd save the head,
Lay stretch'd a stalwart knight.

In each mail'd hand was a naked brand;
As they lay on the black bull's hide,
Each visage stern did upwards turn,
With eyeballs fix'd and wide.

A launcegay strong, full twelve ells long,
By every warrior hung;
'At each pommel there, for battle yare,
A Jedwood axe was slung.

The casque hung near each cavalier;
The plumes waved mournfully

At every tread which the wanderer made
Through the hall of gramarye.

The ruddy beam of the torches' gleam
That glared the warriors on,
Reflected light from armor bright,
In noon tide splendor shone.

And onward seen in lustre sheen,
Still lengthening on the sight,
Through the boundless hall stood steeds in stall,
And by each lay a sable knight.

Still as the dead lay each horseman dread,
And moved nor limb nor tongue;
Each steed stood stiff as an earthfast cliff,
Nor hoof nor bridle rung.

No sounds through all the spacious hall
The deadly still divide,
Save where echoes aloof from the vaulted roof
To the wanderer's step replied.

At length before his wondering eyes,
On an iron column borne,
Of antique shape, and giant size,
Appear'd a sword and horn.

"Now choose thee here," quoth his leader,
"Thy venturous fortune try;
Thy woe and weal, thy boot and bale,
In yon brand and bugle lie."

To the fatal brand he mounted his hand,
But his soul did quiver and quail;
The life-blood did start to his shuddering heart,
And left him wan and pale.

The brand he forsook, and the horn he took
To 'say a gentle sound;
But so wild a blast from the bugle brast,
That the Cheviot rock'd around.

From Forth to Tees, from seas to seas,
The awful bugle rung;
On Carlisle wall, and Berwick withal,
To arms the warders sprung.

With clank and clang the cavern rang,
The steeds did stamp and neigh;
And loud was the yell as each warrior fell
Sterte up with a hoop and cry.

"Woe, woe," they cried, "thou caitiff coward,
That ever thou wert born!
Why drew ye not the knightly sword
Before ye blew the horn?"

The morning on the mountain shone,
And on the bloody ground
Hurl'd from the cave with shiver'd bone,
The mangled wretch was found.

And still beneath the cavern dread,
Among the glidders gray,
A shapeless stone with liebens spread
Marks where the wanderer lay."

(3.) Cheviot.

1799.

* * * * * * *

Go sit old Cheviot's crest below,
And pensive mark the lingering snow
In all his scanners abide,
And slow dissolving from the hill
In many a sightless, soundless rill,
Feed sparkling Bowmont's tide.

Fair shines the stream by bank and lea,
As wimpling to the eastern sea
She seeks Till's sullen bed,
Indenting deep the fatal plain
Where Scotland's noblest, brave in vain
Around their monarch bled.

And westward hills on hills you see,
Even as old Ocean's mightiest sea
Heaves high her waves of foam,
Dark and snow-ridged from Cutsfeld's wold
To the proud foot of Cheviot roll'd,
Earth's mountain billows come.

* * * * * * *

1 The reader may be interested by comparing this ballad the author's prose version of part of its legend, as given in one of the last works of his pen. He says, in the "Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft," 1839:—"Thomas of Erroll-donme, during his retirement, has been supposed, from time to time, to be calling forces to take the field in some crisis of his country's fate. The story has often been told of a daring horse-jockey having sold a black horse to a man of venerable and antique appearance, who appointed the remarkable hillock upon Eildon Hills, called the Lucken-hare, as the place where, at twelve o'clock at night, he should receive the price. He came, his money was paid in ancient coin, and he was invited by his customer to view his residence. The trader in horses followed his guide in the deepest astonishment through several long ranges of stalls, in each of which a horse stood motionless, while an armed warrior lay equally still at the charger's feet. 'All these men,' said the wizard in a whisper, 'will awaken at the battle of Sheriffmuir.' At the extremity of this extraordinary depot hung

(4.) The Reiver's Wedding.

1802.

In "The Reiver's Wedding," the poet had evidently designed to blend together two traditional stories concerning his own forefathers, the Scotts of Harden, which are detailed in the first chapters of his Life. The biographer adds:—"I know not for what reason, Lochwood, the ancient fortress of the Johnstones in Annandale, has been substituted for the real locality of his ancestor's drumhead Wedding Contract."—Life, vol. ii, p. 94.

* * * * * * *

Oh will ye hear a mirthful bourd?
Or will ye hear of courtesie?
Or will hear how a gallant lord
Was wedded to a gay ladye?

"Ca' out the kye," quo' the village herd,
As he stood on the knowe,
"Ca' this ane's nine and that ane's ten,
And bauld Lord William's cow."—

"Ah! by my sooth!" quoth William then,
"And stands it that way now,
When knave and churl have nine and ten,
That the Lord has but his cow?

"I swear by the light of the Michaelmas moon,
And the might of Mary high,
And by the edge of my braid-sword brown,
They shall soon say Harden's kye."

He took a bugle frae his side,
With names carved o'er and o'er—
Full many a chief of meikle pride
That Border bugle bore.}

a sword and a horn, which the prophet pointed out to the horse-dealer as containing the means of dissolving the spell. The man, in confusion, took the horn and attempted to wind it. The horses instantly started in their stalls, stamped, and shook their bridles, the men arose and closed their armor, and the mortal, terrified at the tumult he had excited, dropped the horn from his hand. A voice like that of a giant, louder even than the tumult around, pronounced these words:—

'Woe to the coward that ever he was born,
That did not draw the sword before he blew the horn.'

A whirlwind expelled the horse-dealer from the cavern, the entrance to which he could never more find. A moral might be perhaps extracted from the legend, namely, that it is better to be armed against danger before bidding it defiance."

2 This celebrated horn is still in the possession of the chief of the Harden family, Lord Polwarth.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

He blew a note baith sharp and hie,
Till rock and water rang around—
Three score of moss-troopers and three
Have mounted at that bugle sound.

The Michaelmas moon had enter'd then,
And ere she wan the full,
Ye might see by her light in Harden glen
A bow o' kye and a bassen'd bull.

And loud and loud in Harden tower
The quaigh gaed round wi' meikle glee;
For the English beef was brought in bower,
And the English ale flow'd merrilie.

And mony a guest from Teviotside
And Yarrow's braes was there;
Was never a lord in Scotland wide
That made more dainty fare.

They ate, they laugh'd, they sang and quaff'd,
Till nought on board was seen,
When knight and squire were boun to dine,
But a spur of silver sheen.

Lord William has ta'en his berry brown steed—
A sore shent man was he;
"Wait ye, my guests, a little speed—
Weel feast'd ye shall be."

He rode him down by Falsehope burn,
Ifis cousin dear to see,
With him to take a riding turn—
Wat-draw-the-sword was he.

And when he came to Falsehope glen,
Beneath the trysting-tree,
On the smooth green was carved plain,
"To Lochwood bound are we."

"Oh if they be gone to dark Lochwood
To drive the Warden's gear,
Betwixt our names, I ween, there's feud;
I'll go and have my share:

"For little reck I for Johnstone's feud,
The Warden though he be."
So Lord William is away to dark Lochwood,
With riders barely three.

The Warden's daughters in Lochwood sat,
Were all both fair and gay,
All save the Lady Margaret,
And she was wan and wae.

The sister, Jean, had a full fair skin,
And Grace was bauld and braw;
But the leaf-fast heart her breast within
It weel was worth them a'.

Her father's prank'd her sisters twa
With meikle joy and pride;
But Margaret maun seek Dundrennan's wa'—
She ne'er can be a bride.

On spear and casque by gallants gent
Her sisters' sears were borne,
But never at tilt or tournament
Were Margaret's colors worn.

Her sisters rode to Thirlstane bower,
But she was left at hame
To wander round the gloomy tower,
And sigh young Harden's name.

"Of all the knights, the knight most fair,
From Yarrow to the Tyne," Soft sigh'd the maid, "is Harden's heir,
But ne'er can he be mine;

"Of all the maids, the foulest maid
From Teviot to the Dee,
Ah!" sighing sad, that lady said,
"Can ne'er young Harden's be."—

She looked up the briery glen,
And up the mossy brae,
And she saw a score of her father's men
Yelad in the Johnstone gray.

Oh fast and fast they downwards sped
The moss and briers among,
And in the midst the troopers led
A shackled knight along.

The Bard's Incantation.

WRITTEN UNDER THE THREAT OF INVASION IN THE AUTUMN OF 1804.

The forest of Glenmore is drear,
It is all of black pine and the dark oak-tree;
And the midnight wind, to the mountain deer,
Is whistling the forest lullaby:
The moon looks through the drifting storm,
But the troubled lake reflects not her form, was cut in the turf, and the arrangement of the letters announced to his followers the course which he had taken."—

Introduction to the Minstrelsy, p. 185.
For the waves roll whitening to the land,
And dash against the shelvy strand,
There is a voice among the trees,
That mingles with the groaning oak—
That mingles with the stormy breeze,
And the lake-waves dashing against the rock;—
There is a voice within the wood,
The voice of the bard in fitful mood;
His song was louder than the blast,
As the bard of Glenmore through the forest past.

"Wake ye from your sleep of death,
Minstrels and bards of other days!
For the midnight wind is on the heath,
And the midnight meteors dimly blaze:
The Spectre with his Bloody Hand
Is wandering through the wild woodland;
The owl and the raven are mute for dread,
And the time is meet to awake the dead!

"Souls of the mighty, wake and say
To what high strain your harps were strung,
When Lochlin plow'd her billowy wave,
And on your shores her Norsemen flung?
Her Norsemen train'd to spoil and blood,
Skill'd to prepare the Raven's food,
All, by your harpings, doom'd to die
On bloody Largs and Lornarty.²

"Mute are ye all? No murmurs strange
Upon the midnight breeze sail by,
Nor through the pines, with whistling change,
Minic the harp's wild harmony!
Mute are ye now?—Ye ne'er were mute
When Murder with his bloody foot,
And Rape with his iron hand,
Were hovering near you mountain strand.

"Oh yet awake the strain to tell,
By every deed in song enroll'd,
By every chief who fought or fell
For Albion's weal in battle bold,—
From Coilgach,³ first who roll'd his car
Through the deep ranks of Roman war,
To him, of veteran memory dear,
Who victor died on Aboukir.

"By all their swords, by all their scars,
By all their names, a mighty spell!
By all their wounds, by all their wars,
Arise, the mighty strain to tell!
For fiercer than fierce Hengist's strain,
More impious than the heathen Dane,
More grasping than all-grasping Rome,
Gaul's ravening legions hither come!"³
The wind is hush'd, and still the lake—
Strange murmurs fill my tinkling ears,

---

Bristles my hair, my sinews quake,
At the dread voice of other years:—
"When targets clash'd, and bugles rung,
And blades round warriors' heads were flung,
The foremost of the band were we,
And hymn'd the joys of Liberty!"

---

HELLBELLYN.

1805.

In the spring of 1805, a young gentleman of talents, and of a most amiable disposition, perished by losing his way on the mountain Hellvellyn. His remains were not discovered till three months afterwards, when they were found guarded by a faithful terrier-bitch, his constant attendant during frequent solitary rambles through the wilds of Cumberland and Westmoreland.

I climb'd the dark brow of the mighty Hellvellyn,—
Lakes and mountains beneath me gleam'd misty and wide;
All was still, save by fits, when the eagle was yelling,
And starting around me the echoes replied.
On the right, Striden-edge round the Red-tarn was bending,
And Cachedicam its left verge was defending;
One huge nameless rock in the front was ascending,
When I mark'd the sad spot where the wanderer had died.

Dark green was that spot 'mid the brown mountain heather,
Where the Pilgrim of Nature lay stretch'd in decay,
Like the corpse of an outcast abandon'd to weather,
Till the mountain winds wasted the tenantless clay.
Nor yet quite deserted, though lonely extended,
For, faithful in death, his mute favorite attended,
The much-loved remains of her master defended,
And chased the hill-fox and the raven away.

How long didst thou think that his silence was slumber?
When the wind waved his garment, how oft didst thou start?
How many long days and long weeks didst thou number,
Ere he faded before thee, the friend of thy heart?
And, oh, was it meet that—no requiem read o'er him—

---

¹ The forest of Glenmore is haunted by a spirit called mean-dearg, or Red-hand.
² Where the Norwegian invader of Scotland received two bloody defeats.
³ The Galgacus of Tacitus.
No mother to weep, and no friend to deplore him,
And thou, little guardian, alone stretch'd before him—
Unhonor'd the Pilgrim from life should depart?

When a prince to the fate of the peasant has yielded,
The tapestry waves dark round the dim-lighted hall;
With scutcheons of silver the coffin is shielded,
And pages stand mute by the canopied pall:
Through the courts, at deep midnight, the torches are gleaming;
In the proudest-arch'd chapel the banners are beaming,
Far adown the long aisle sacred music is streaming,
Lamenting a chief of the people should fall.

But meeter for thee, gentle lover of nature,
To lay down thy head like the meek mountain lamb,
When, wilder'd, he drops from some cliff huge in stature,
And draws his last sob by the side of his dam.
And more stately thy couch by this desert lake lying,
Thy obsequies sung by the gray plover flying,
With one faithful friend but to witness thy dying,
In the arms of Hellvellyn and Catchedican.

The Dying Bard.¹

¹ This and the following were written for Mr. George Thomson's Welsh Airs, and are contained in his Select Melodies, vol. 1.

The Welsh tradition bears that a bard, on his deathbed, demanded his harp, and played the air to which these verses are adapted; requesting that it might be performed at his funeral.

I.
Dinas Emlinn, lament; for the moment is nigh
When mute in the woodlands thine echoes shall die:
No more by sweet Teivi Cadwallon shall range,
And mix his wild notes with the wild dashing wave.

II.
In spring and in autumn thy glories of shade
Unhonor'd shall flourish, unhonor'd shall fade;
For soon shall be lifeless the eye and the tongue
That view'd them with rapture, with rapture that sung.

III.
Thy sons, Dinas Emlinn, may march in their pride,
And chase the proud Saxon from Prestatyn's side;
But where is the harp shall give life to their name?
And where is the bard shall give heroes their fame?

IV.
And oh, Dinas Emlinn! thy daughters so fair,
Who heave the white bosom, and wave the dark hair,—
What tuneful enthusiast shall worship their eye,
When half of their charms with Cadwallon shall die?

V.
Then adieu, silver Teivi! I quit thy loved scene,
To join the dim choir of the bards who have been;
With Lewarch, and Meilor, and Merlin the Old,
And sage Taliessin, high harping to hold.

VI.
And adieu, Dinas Emlinn! still green be thy shades,
Unconquer'd thy warriors, and matchless thy maids!
And thou, whose faint warblings my weakness can tell,
Farewell, my loved Harp! my last treasure, farewell!

The Norman Horse-shoe.

Air—The War-Song of the Men of Glamorgan.

The Welsh, inhabiting a mountainous country, and possessing only an inferior breed of horses, were usually unable to encounter the shock of the Anglo-Norman cavalry. Occasionally, however, they were successful in repelling the invaders; and the following verses are supposed to celebrate a defeat of Clare, Earl of Striguil and Pembroke, and of Neville, Baron of Chepstow, lords-marchers of Monmouthshire. Rymney is a stream which divides the counties of Monmouth and Glamorgan; Caerphilly, the scene of the supposed battle, is a vale upon its banks, dignified by the ruins of a very ancient castle.

I.
Red glows the forge in Striguil's bounds,
And hammers din, and anvil sounds,
And armorer, with iron toil,
Barb many a steed for battle's broil.
Foul fall the hand which bends the steel
Around the courser's thundering heel,
That e'er shall dint a sable wound
On fair Glamorgan's velvet ground!

II.
From Chepstow's towers, ere dawn of morn,
Was heard afar the bugle-horn;
And forth in banded pomp and pride,
Stout Clare and fiery Neville ride.
They swore, their banners broad should gleam,
In crimson light, on Rymney's stream;
Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces.

631

They vow'd, Caerphilly's sod should feel
The Norman charger's spurning heel.

III.

And sooth they swore—the sun arose,
And Rymny's wave with crimson glows;
For Clare's red banner, floating wide,
Roll'd down the stream to Severn's tide!
And sooth they vow'd—the trampled green
Show'd where hot Neville's charge had been:
In every sable hoof-tramp stood
A Norman horseman's curdling blood!

IV.

Old Chepstow's brides may curse the toil
That arm'd stout Clare for Cambrian broil;
Their orphans long the art may rue
For Neville's war-horse forged the shoe.
No more the stamp of armed steed
Shall dint Glamorgan's velvet mead;
Nor trace be there, in early spring,
Save of the Fairies' emerald ring.

The Maid of Toro.¹

1806.

Oh, low shone the sun on the fair lake of Toro,
And weak were the whispers that waved the dark wood,
All as a fair maiden, bewild'er'd in sorrow,
Sorely sigh'd to the breezes, and wept to the flood.
"O saints! from the mansions of bliss lowly bending;
Sweet Virgin! who hearest the suppliant's cry,
Now grant my petition, in anguish ascending,
My Henry restore, or let Eleanor die!"

All distant and faint were the sounds of the battle,
With the breezes they rise, with the breezes they fail,
Till the shout, and the groan, and the conflict's dread rattle,
And the chase's wild clamor, came loading the gale.
Breathless she gazed on the woodlands so dreary;
Slowly approaching a warrior was seen;
Life's ebbing tide mark'd his footsteps so weary,
Cleft was his helmet, and woe was his mien.

"Oh save thee, fair maid, for our armies are flying!
Oh save thee, fair maid, for thy guardian is low!
Deadly cold on yon heath thy brave Henry is lying,
And fast through the woodland approaches the foe."

Scarcely could he falter the tidings of sorrow,
And scarce could she hear them, benumb'd with despair:
And when the sun sank on the sweet lake of Toro,
For ever he set to the Brave and the Fair.

The Palmer.

1806.

"Oh, open the door, some pity to show;
Keen blows the northern wind!
The glen is white with the drifted snow,
And the path is hard to find.

"No outlaw seeks your castle gate,
From chasing the King's deer,
Though even an outlaw's wretched state
Might claim compassion here.

"A weary Palmer, worn and weak,
I wander for my sin;
Oh open, for Our Lady's sake!
A pilgrim's blessing win!

"I'll give you pardons from the Pope,
And relics from o'er the sea;
Or if for these you will not ope,
Yet open for charity.

"The hare is crouching in her form,
The hart beside the hind;
An aged man, amid the storm,
No shelter can I find.

"You hear the Ettrick's sullen roar,
Dark, deep, and strong is he,
And I must ford the Ettrick o'er,
Unless you pity me.

"The iron gate is bolted hard,
At which I knock in vain;
The owner's heart is closer barr'd,
Who hears me thus complain.

"Farewell, farewell! and Mary grant,
When old and frail you be,
You never may the shelter want,
That's now denied to me."

The Ranger on his couch lay warm,
And heard him plead in vain;
But oft amid December's storm,
He'll hear that voice again:

¹ This and the three following were first published in Haydn's Collection of Scottish Airs. Edin. 1806.
For lo, when through the vapors dank
Morn shone on Ettrick fair,
A corpse amid the alders rank,—
The Palmer welter'd there.

The Maid of Neidpath.

1806.

There is a tradition in Tweeddale that, when Neidpath Castle, near Peebles, was inhabited by the Earls of March, a mutual passion subsisted between a daughter of that noble family and a son of the Laird of Tushielaw, in Ettrick Forest. As the alliance was thought unsuitable by her parents, the young man went abroad. During his absence, the lady fell into a consumption; and at length, as the only means of saving her life, her father consented that her lover should be recalled. On the day when he was expected to pass through Peebles, on the road to Tushielaw, the young lady, though much exhausted, caused herself to be carried to the balcony of a house in Peebles, belonging to the family, that she might see him as he rode past. Her anxiety and eagerness gave such force to her organs that she is said to have distinguished his horse's footsteps at an incredible distance. But Tushielaw, unprepared for the change in her appearance, and not expecting to see her in that place, rode on without recognizing her, or even slackening his pace. The lady was unable to support the shock; and, after a short struggle, died in the arms of her attendants. There is an incident similar to this traditional tale in Count Hamilton’s Fleur d’Epine.

Oh, lovers’ eyes are sharp to see,
And lovers’ ears in hearing;
And love, in life’s extremity,
Can lend an hour of cheering.
Disease had been in Mary’s bower,
And slow decay from mourning,
Though now she sits on Neidpath’s tower,
To watch her love’s returning.

All sunk and dim her eyes so bright,
Her form decay’d by pining,
Till through her wasted hand, at night,
You saw the taper shining;
By fits, a sultry hectic hue
Across her cheek was flying;
By fits, so ashy pale she grew,
Her maidens thought her dying.

Yet keenest powers to see and hear
Seem’d in her frame residing;
Before the watch-dog prick’d his ear,
She heard her lover’s riding;

Ere scarce a distant form was kenn’d,
She knew, and waved to greet him;
And o’er the battlement did bend,
As on the wing to meet him.

He came—he pass’d—an heedless gaze,
As o’er some stranger glancing;
Her welcome, spoke in faltering phrase,
Lost in his courser’s prancing—
The castle arch, whose hollow tone
Returns each whisper spoken,
Could scarcely catch the feeble moan
Which told her heart was broken.

Wandering Willie.

1806.

All joy was bereft me the day that you left me,
And climb’d the tall vessel to sail you wide sea;
Oh weary betide it! I wander’d beside it,
And bann’d it for parting my Willie and me.

Far o’er the wave hast thou follow’d thy fortune,
Oft fought the squadrons of France and of Spain;
Ae kiss of welcome’s worth twenty at parting,
Now I hae gotten my Willie again.

When the sky it was mirk, and the winds they were wailing,
I sat on the beach wi’ the tear in my ee,
And thought o’ the bark where my Willie was sailing,
And wish’d that the tempest could a’ blaw on me.

Now that thy gallant ship rides at her mooring,
Now that my wanderer’s in safety at hame,
Music to me were the wildest winds’ roaring
That o’er o’er Inch-Keith drove the dark ocean foam.

When the lights they did blaze, and the guns they did rattle,
And blithe was each heart for the great victory,
In secret I wept for the dangers of battle,
And thy glory itself was scarce comfort to me.

But now shalt thou tell, while I eagerly listen,
Of each bold adventure, and every brave scar;
And trust me, I’ll smile, though my een they may glisten;
For sweet after danger’s the tale of the war.

And oh, how we doubt when there’s distance ’tween lovers,
When there’s naething to speak to the heart thro’ the ee;
How often the kindest and warmest prove rovers,
And the love of the faithfullest ebbs like the sea.

Till, at times—could I help it?—I pined and I ponder'd,
If love could change notes like the bird on the tree—
Now I'll ne'er ask if thine eyes may hae wander'd,
Enough, thy leaf heart has been constant to me.

Welcome, from sweeping o'er sea and through channel,
Hardships and danger despising for fame,
Furnishing story for glory's bright annal,
Welcome, my wanderer, to Jeanie and hame!

Enough, now thy story in annals of glory
Has humbled the pride of France, Holland, and Spain;
No more shalt thou grieve me, no more shalt thou leave me,
I never will part with my Willie again.

---

Wealth to Lord Melville.1
1806.

AIR—CuRieCKFERGUS.

"The impeachment of Lord Melville was among the first measures of the new (Whig) government; and personal affection and gratitude graced as well as heightened the zeal with which Scott watched the issue of this, in his eyes, vindictive proceeding; but, though the ex-minister's ultimate acquittal was, as to all the charges involving his personal honor, complete, it must now be allowed that the investigation brought out many circumstances by no means creditable to his disposition; and the rejoicings of his friends ought not, therefore, to have been scornfully jubilant. Such they were, however—at least in Edinburgh; and Scott took his share in them by inditing a song, which was sung by James Ballantyne, and received with clamorous applause, at a public dinner given in honor of the event, on the 27th of June, 1806."—Life, vol. ii. p. 322.

Since here we are set in array round the table,
Five hundred good fellows well met in a hall.
Come listen, brave boys, and I'll sing as I'm able
How innocence triumph'd and pride got a fall.
But push round the claret—
Come, stewards, don't spare it—

With rapture you'll drink to the toast that I give:
Here, boys,
Off with it merrily—

MELVILLE for ever, and long may he live!

What were the Whigs doing, when boldly pursuing,
PITT banish'd Rebellion, gave Treason a string?
Why, they swore on their honor, for ARTHUR O'CONNOR,
And fought hard for DESPARD against country and king.
Well, then, we knew, boys,
PITT and MELVILLE were true boys,
And the tempest was raised by the friends of Reform.
Ah, woe!
WEEP to his memory;
Low lies the pilot that weather'd the storm!

And pray, don't you mind when the Blues first were raising,
And we scarcely could think the house safe o'er our heads?
When villains and coxcombs, French politics praising,
Drove peace from our tables and sleep from our beds?
Our hearts they grew bolder
When, musket on shoulder,
Stepp'd forth our old Statesmen example to give.
Come, boys, never fear,
Drink the Blue grenadier—
Here's to old HARRY, and long may he live!

They would turn us adrift; though rely, sir, upon it—
Our own faithful chronicles warrant us that
The free mountaineer and his bonny blue bonnet
Have oft gone as far as the regular's hat.
We laugh at their taunting,
For all we are wanting
Is license our life for our country to give.
Off with it merrily,
Horse, foot, and artillery,
Each loyal Volunteer, long may he live!

'Tis not us alone, boys—the Army and Navy
Have each got a slap 'mid their politic pranks;
CORNWALLIS cashier'd, that watch'd winters to save ye,
And the Cape call'd a bauble, unworthy of thanks.
But vain is their taunt,
No soldier shall want
The thanks that his country to valor can give:
Come, boys,
Drink it off merrily,—
SIR DAVID and Popham, and long may they live!

And then our revenue—Lord knows how they view'd it,
While each petty statesman talk'd lofty and big;
But the beer-tax was weak, as if Whitbread had brew'd it,
And the pig-tax duty a shame to a pig.
In vain is their vaunting,
Too surely there's wanting
What judgment, experience, and steadiness give:
Come, boys,
Drink about merrily,—
Health to sage Melville, and long may he live!

Our King, too—our Princess—I dare not say more, sir,—
May Providence watch them with mercy and might!
While there’s one Scottish hand that can wag a claymore, sir,
They shall ne’er want a friend to stand up for their right.
Be damn’d he that dare not,—
For my part, I’ll spare not
To beauty afflicted a tribute to give:
Fill it up steadily,
Drink it off readily—
Here’s to the Princess, and long may she live!

And since we must not set Auld Reekie in glory,
And make her brown visage as light as her heart;¹
Till each man illumine his own upper story,
Nor law-book nor lawyer shall force us to part.
In Grenville and Spencer,
And some few good men, sir,
High talents we honor, slight difference forgive;
But the Brewer we’ll hoax,
Tallyho to the Fox,
And drink Melville for ever, as long as we live!

Hunting Song.²

1808.

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
On the mountain dawns the day,
All the jolly chase is here,
With hawk, and horse, and hunting-spear!
Hounds are in their couples yelping,
Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,
Merrily, merrily, mingle they,
"Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
The mist has left the mountain gray,
Springlets in the dawn are steaming,
Diamonds on the brake are gleaming:
And foresters have busy been,
To track the buck in thicket green;
Now we come to chant our lay,
"Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
To the greenwood haste away;
We can show you where he lies,
Fleet of foot, and tall of size;
We can show the marks he made,
When ’gainst the oak his antlers fray’d;
You shall see him brought to bay,
"Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Louder, louder chant the lay,
Waken, lords and ladies gay!
Tell them youth, and mirth, and glee,
Run a course as well as we;
Time, stern huntsman! who can balk,
Stance as bound, and fleet as hawk;
Think of this, and rise with day
Gently lords and ladies gay.

The Resolve.³

IN Imitation of an Old English Poem.

1808.

My wayward fate I needs must plain,
Though bootless be the theme;
I loved, and was beloved again,
Yet all was but a dream:
For, as her love was quickly got,
So it was quickly gone;
No more I’ll bask in flame so hot,
But coldly dwell alone.

Not maid more bright than maid was e’er
My fancy shall beguile,
By flattering word, or feigned tear,
By gesture, look, or smile:
No more I’ll call the shaft fair shot,
Till it has fairly flown,
Nor search me at a flame so hot:—
I’ll rather freeze alone.

¹ The Magistrates of Edinburgh had rejected an application for illumination of the town on the arrival of the news of Lord Melville’s acquittal.
² First published in the continuation of Strutt’s Queenhoo Hall, 1808, inserted in the Edinburgh Annual Register of the same year, and set to a Welsh air in Thomson’s Select Melodies, vol. iii. 1817.
³ Published anonymously in the Edinburgh Annual Register of 1808. Writing to his brother Thomas, the author says:—"‘The Resolve’ is mine; and it is not—or, to be less enigmatical, it is—an old fragment, which I coopered up into its present state with the purpose of quizzing certain judges of poetry, who have been extremely delighted, and declare that no living poet could write in the same exquisite taste."—Life of Scott, vol. iii. p. 320.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

635

Each ambush’d Cupid I’ll defy,
In cheek, or chin, or brow,
And deem the glance of woman’s eye
As weak as woman’s vow:
I’ll lightly hold the lady’s heart
That is but lightly won;
I’ll steel my breast to beauty’s art,
And learn to live alone.

The flaunting torch soon blazes out,
The diamond’s ray abides;
The flame its glory hurls about,
The gem its lustre hides;
Such gem I fondly deem’d was mine,
And glow’d a diamond stone,
But, since each eye may see it shine,
I’ll darkling dwell alone.

No waking dream shall tinge my thought
With dyes so bright and vain,
No silken net, so slightly wrought,
Shall tangle me again;
No more I’ll pay so dear for wit,
I’ll live upon mine own,
Nor shall wild passions trouble it,—
I’ll rather dwell alone.

And thus I’ll crush my heart to rest,—
 Thy loving labor’s lost;
Thou shalt no more be wildy blest,
To be as strangely crost;
The widow’d turtles mateless die,
The phoenix is but one;
They seek no loves—no more will I—
I’ll rather dwell alone.

Epitaph,¹

DESIGNED FOR A MONUMENT
IN LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL, AT THE BURIAL-PLACE
OF THE FAMILY OF MISS SEWARD.

AMID these aisles, where once his precepts show’d
The heavenward pathway which in life he trode,
This simple tablet marks a Father’s bier,
And those he loved in life, in death are near;
For him, for them, a Daughter bade it rise,
Memorial of domestic charities.
Still wouldst thou know why o’er the marble spread,
In female grace the willow droops her head;
Why on her branches, silent and unstrung,
The minstrel harp is emblematic hung;

What poet’s voice is smoother’d here in dust
Till waked to join the chorus of the just,—
Lo! one brief line an answer sad supplies,
Honor’d, beloved, and mourn’d, here SEWARD lies.
Her worth, her warmth of heart, let friendship say,—
Go seek her genius in her living lay.

Prologue

TO MISS BAILLIE’S PLAY OF THE FAMILY LEGEND.²

1809.

’Tis sweet to hear expiring summer’s sigh,
Through forests tinged with russet, wail and die;
’Tis sweet and sad the latest notes to hear
Of distant music, dying on the ear;
But far more sadly sweet, on foreign strand,
We list the legends of our native land,
Link’d as they come with every tender tie,
Memorials dear of youth and infancy.

Chief, thy wild tales, romantic Caledon,
Wake keen remembrance in each handy son.
Whether on India’s burning coasts he toil,
Or till Arcadia’s³ winter-fetter’d soil,
He hears with throbbing heart and moisten’d eyes,
And, as he hears, what dear illusions rise!
It opens on his soul his native dell,
The woods wild waving, and the water’s swell;
Tradition’s theme, the tower that threats the plain,
The mossy cairn that hides the hero slain;
The cot, beneath whose simple porch were told,
By gray-hair’d patriarch, the tales of old,
The infant group, that hush’d their sports the while,
And the dear maid who listen’d with a smile.
The wanderer, while the vision warms his brain,
Is denizen of Scotland once again.

Are such keen feelings to the crowd confined,
And sleep they in the Poet’s gifted mind?
Oh no! For She, within whose mighty page
Each tyrant Passion shows his woe and rage,
Has felt the wizard influence they inspire,
And to your own traditions tuned her lyre.
Yourselves shall judge—whoe’er has raised the sail
By Mull’s dark coast, has heard this evening’s tale.
The plaided boatman, resting on his oar,
Points to the fatal rock amid the roar
Of whitening waves, and tells whate’er to-night
Our humble stage shall offer to your sight;

¹ Edinburgh Annual Register, 1809.
² Miss Baillie’s Family Legend was produced with considerable success on the Edinburgh stage in the winter of 1809-10.
³ Acadia, or Nova Scotia.

This prologue was spoken on that occasion by the author’s friend, Mr. Daniel Terry.
Proudly preferr'd that first our efforts give Scenes glowing from her pen to breathe and live;
More proudly yet, should Caledon approve
The filial token of a daughter's love.

The Poacher.

WRITTEN IN IMITATION OF CRABBE, AND PUBLISHED
IN THE EDINBURGH ANNUAL REGISTER OF 1809.¹

Welcome, grave Stranger, to our green retreats,
Where health with exercise and freedom meets!
Thrice welcome, Sage, whose philosophic plan
By nature's limits metes the rights of man;
Generous as he who now for freedom baws,
Now gives full value for true Indian shawls:
O'er court, o'er custom-house, his shoe who flings,
Now bilks excisemen, and now bullies kings.
Like his, I ween, thy comprehensive mind
Holds laws as mouse-traps baited for mankind:
Thine eye, applausive, each sly vermin sees,
That balks the snare, yet battens on the cheese;
Thine ear has heard, with scorn instead of awe,
Our braekskinn'd justices expound the law,
Wire-draw the acts that fix for wires the pain,
And for the netted partridge noose the swain;
And thy vindictive arm would fain have broke
The last light fetter of the feudal yoke,
To give the denizens of wood and wild,
Nature's free race, to each her free-born child.
Hence hast thou mark'd, with grief, fair London's race,
Mock'd with the boon of one poor Easter chase,
And long'd to send them forth as free as when Pour'd o'er Chantilly the Parisian train,
When musket, pistol, blunderbuss, combined,
And scarce the field-pieces were left behind!
A squadron's charge each leveret's heart dismay'd,
On every cover fired a bold brigade;
La Duche Humanité approved the sport,
For great the alarm indeed, yet small the hurt;
Shouts patriotic solemnized the day,
And Seine re-echo'd 'Vive la Liberté!'
But mad Citoyen, meek Monsieur again,
With some few added links resumes his chain.
Then, since such scenes to France no more are known,
Come view with me a hero of thine own!
One whose free actions vindicate the cause
Of sylvan liberty o'er feudal laws.

Seek we you glades, where the proud oak o'ertops
Wide-waving seas of birch and hazel copse,
Leaving between deserted isles of land,
Where stunted heath is patch'd with ruddy sand;
And lonely on the waste the yew is seen,
Or straggling hollies spread a brighter green.
Here, little worn, and winding dark and steep,
Our scarce-mark'd path descends you dingle deep:
Follow—but heedful, cautious of a trip,—
In earthly mire philosophy may slip.
Step slow and wary o'er that swampy stream,
Till, guided by the charcoal's smothing steam,
We reach the frail yet barricaded door
Of hovel form'd for poorest of the poor;
No hearth the fire, no vent the smoke receives,
The walls are wattles, and the covering leaves;
For, if such hut, our forest statutes say,
Rise in the progress of one night and day (Though placed where still the Conqueror's hests o'eraw,
And his son's stirrup shins the badge of law),
The builder claims the unenviable boon,
To tenant dwelling, framed as slight and soon
As wigwam wild, that shrouds the nativefore
On the bleak coast of frost-barr'd Labrador.²

Approach, and through the unlatticed window peep—
Nay, shrink not back, the inmate is asleep;
Sunk 'mid yon sordid blankets, till the sun
Stoop to the west, the plunderer's toils are done.
Loaded and primed, and prompt for desperate hand,
Rifle and fowling-piece beside him stand;
While round the hut are in disorder laid
The tools and booty of his lawless trade;
For force or fraud, resistance or escape,
The crow, the saw, the bludgeon, and the crape.
His piffer'd powder in yon nook he hoards,
And the flich'd lead the church's roof affords—
(Here shall the rector's congregation fret,
That while his sermon's dry his walls are wet.)
The fish spear bar'd, the sweeping net, are there,
Doe-hides, and pheasant plumes, and skins of hare,
Cordage for toils, and wiring for the snare.
Rarter'd for game from chase or warren won,
Yon cask holds moonlight,³ run when moon was none;
And late-snatch'd spoils lie stow'd in hutch apart,
To wait the associate higgler's evening cart.

Look on his pallet foul, and mark his rest:
What scenes perturb'd are acting in his breast!
His sable brow is wet and wrung with pain,
And his dilated nostril toils in vain;
For short and scant the breath each effort draws,
And 'twixt each effort Nature claims a pause.

² Such is the law in the New Forest, Hampshire, tending greatly to increase the various settlements of thieves, smugglers, and deer-stealers, who infest it. In the forest courts the presiding judge wears as a badge of office an antique stirrup, said to have been that of William Rufus. See Mr. William Rose's spirited poem entitled "The Red King."
³ To the bleak coast of savage Labrador.—Falconer.

² A cant term for smuggled spirits.
Beyond the loose and sable neckcloth stretch'd,
His sinewy throat seems by convulsion twitch'd,
While the tongue falters, as to utterance loth,

SOUNDS OF DIRE IMPORT—WATCHWORD, THREAT, AND OATH.

Though, stupefied by toil, and drugg'd with gin,
The body sleeps, the restless guest within
Now plies on wood and wold his lawless trade,
Now in the fangs of justice wakes dismay'd.—

“Was that wild start of terror and despair,
Those bursting eyeballs, and that wilder'd air,
Signs of compunction for a murder'd hare?

DO THE LOCKS BRISTLE AND THE EYEBROWS ARCH
FOR GROUSE OR PARTRIDGE MASSACRED IN MARCH?”—

No, scroffer, no! Attend, and mark with awe,
There is no wicket in the gate of law!
He that would e'er so lightly set ajar
That awful portal, must undo each bar;

TEMMPTING OCCASION, HABIT, PASSION, PRIDE,
WILL JOIN TO STORM THE BRACE, AND FORCE THE BARRIER WIDE.

That ruffian, whom true men avoid and dread,
Whom bruise, poachers, smugglers, call Black Ned,
Was Edward Mansell once;—the lightest heart
That ever play'd on holiday his part!

The leader he in every Christmas game,
The harvest-feast grew blither when he came,
And liveliest on the chords the bow did glance,
When Edward named the tune and led the dance.

Kind was his heart, his passions quick and strong,
Hearty his laugh, and jovial was his song;
And if he loved a gun, his father swore,
“TWAS BUT A TRICK OF YOUTH WOULD SOON BE O'ER, HIMSELF HAD DONE THE SAME SOME THIRTY YEARS BEFORE.”

But he whose honors spurn law's awful yoke
Must herd with those by whom law's bonds are broke;

The common dread of justice soon allies
The clown, who robs the warren or excuse,
With sterner felons train'd to act more dread,
Even with the wretch by whom his fellow bled.

Then, as in plagues the foul contagions pass,
Leavening and Lestering the corrupted mass,
Guilt leagues with guilt, while mutual motives draw,
Their hope impurity, their fear the law;

Their foes, their friends, their rendezvous the same,
Till the revenue balk'd, or pilfer'd game,
Flesh the young culprit, and example leads
To darker villainy and dire deeds.

Wild howl'd the wind the forest glades along,
And o'er the owl renew'd her dismal song;
Around the spot where erst he felt the wound,
Red William's spectre walk'd his midnight round.

When o'er the swamp he cast his blighting look,
From the green marshes of the stagnant brook

| The Bittern's Sullen Soot the Sedges Shook!  |
| The waning moon, with storm-presaging gleam,  |
| Now gave and now withheld her doubtful beam;  |
| The old oak stoop'd his arms, then flung them high, |
| Bellowing and groaning to the troubled sky;— |

'TWAS THEN THAT, CONCH'D AMID THE BRUSHWOOD SERE,
IN MALWOOD-WALK YOUNG MANSELL WATCH'D THE DEER:

The fattest buck received his deadly shot—
The watchful keeper heard, and sought the spot.
Stout were their hearts, and stubborn was their strife,
O'erpow'd at length the Outlaw drew his knife.

Next morn a corpse was found upon the fell—
The rest his waking agony may tell!

Song.

Oh, say not, my love, with that mortified air,
That year spring-time of pleasure is flown,
Nor bid me to maids that are younger repair,
For those raptures that still are thine own.

Though April his temples may wreath with the vine,
Its tendrils in infancy curl'd,—
'TIS THE ARDOR OF AUGUST FEATURES US THE WINE,
Whose life-blood enliven the world.

Though thy form, that was fashion'd as light as a Fay's,
Has assumed a proportion more round,
And thy glance, that was bright as a falcon's at gaze,
Looks soberly now on the ground,—

Enough, after absence to meet me again,
Thy steps still with ecstasy move;
Enough, that those dear sober glances retain
For me the kind language of love.

The Bold Dragoon;

OR,

THE PLAIN OF BADAJOS.

1812.

'TWAS A MARÉCHAL OF FRANCE, AND HE FAIN WOULD HONOR GAIN,

AND HE LONG'D TO TAKE A PASSING GLANCE AT PORTUGAL FROM SPAIN;

WITH HIS FLYING GUNS THIS GALLANT GAY,

AND BOASTED CORPS D'ARCuÉE—

OH, HE FEARD NOT OUR DRAGOONS, WITH THEIR LONG SWORDS,

BOLDLY RIDING,

WHACK, FAI DE RAL, &c.

1 This song was written shortly after the battle of Badajos (April, 1812), for a Yeomanry Cavalry dinner. It was first printed in Mr. George Thomson's Collection of Select Melodies, and stands in vol. vi. of the last edition of that work.
To Campo Mayor come, he had quietly sat down,
Just a friecassee to pick, while his soldiers sack'd the town,
When, 'twas peste! morblenn! mon General,
Hear the English bugle-call!
And behold the light dragoons, with their long swords,
boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, &c.

Right about went horse and foot, artillery and all,
And, as the devil leaves a house, they tumbled through the wall;
They took no time to seek the door,
But, best foot set before—
Oh they ran from our dragoons, with their long swords,
boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, &c.

Those valiant men of France they had scarcely fled a mile,
When on their flank there sowned at once the British rank and file;
For Long, De Grey, and Otway, then
Ne'er minded one to ten,
But came on like light dragoons, with their long swords,
boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, &c.

Three hundred British lads they made three thousand reel,
Their hearts were made of English oak, their swords of Sheffield steel,
Their horses were in Yorkshire bred,
And Beresford them led;
So huzza for brave dragoons, with their long swords,
boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, &c.

Then here's a health to Wellington, to Beresford, to Long,
And a single word of Bonaparte before I close my song:
The eagles that to fight he brings
Should serve his men with wings,
When they meet the bold dragoons, with their long swords, boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, &c.

On the Massacre of Glencoe.

1814.

"In the beginning of the year 1692, an action of unexampled barbarity disgraced the government of

1 In their hasty evacuation of Campo Mayor the French pulled down a part of the rampart, and marched out over the glacis.
2 First published in Thomson's Select Melodies, 1814.
tenant Lindsay, with a party of soldiers, called in a friendly manner at his door, and was instantly admitted. Macdonald, while in the act of rising to receive his guest, was shot dead through the back with two bullets. His wife had already dressed; but she was stripped naked by the soldiers, who tore the rings off her fingers with their teeth. The slaughter now became general, and neither age nor infirmity was spared. Some women, in defending their children, were killed; boys imploring mercy were shot dead by officers on whose knees they hung. In one place nine persons, as they sat enjoying themselves at table, were butchered by the soldiers. In Inverriggon, Campbell's own quarters, nine men were first bound by the soldiers, and then shot at intervals, one by one.
Nearly forty persons were massacred by the troops;
and several who fled to the mountains perished by famine and the inclemency of the season. Those who escaped owed their lives to a tempestuous night.
Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton, who had received the charge of the execution from Dalrymple, was on his march with four hundred men, to guard all the passes from the valley of Glencoe; but he was obliged to stop by the severity of the weather, which proved the safety of the unfortunate clan. Next day he entered the valley, laid the houses in ashes, and carried away the cattle and spoil, which were divided among the officers and soldiers."—Article "BRITAIN;" Encyc.
Britannica, new edition.

"Oh tell me, Harper, wherefore flow
Thy wayward notes of wail and woe,
Far down the desert of Glencoe,
Where none may list their melody?
Say, harp'ist thou to the mists that fly,
Or to the dun-deer glancing by,
Or to the eagle, that from high
Screams chorus to thy minstrelsy?"

"No, not to these, for they have rest,—
The mist-wreath has the mountain crest,
The stag his lair, the erne her nest,
Abode of lone security.
But those for whom I pour the lay,
Not wildwood deep, nor mountain gray,
Not this deep dell, that shrouds from day
Could screen from treach'rous cruelty.

"Their flag was furl'd, and mute their drum,
The very household dogs were dumb,
Unwont to bay at guests that come
In guise of hospitality.
His blitesth notes the piper plied,
Her gayest snood the maiden tied,
The dame her distaff flung aside,
To tend her kindly housewifery.

"The hand that mingled in the meal
At midnight drew the felon steel,
And gave the host's kind breast to feel
Meed for his hospitality!
The friendly hearth which warm'd that hand,
At midnight arm'd it with the brand,
That bade destruction's flames expand
Their red and fearful blazonry.

"Then woman's shriek was heard in vain,
Nor infancy's unpitied plain,
More than the warrior's groan, could gain
Respite from ruthless butchery!
The winter wind that whistled shrill,
The snows that night that cloak'd the hill,
Though wild and pitiless, had still Far more than Southern clemency.

"Long have my harp's best notes been gone,
Few are its strings, and faint their tone,
They can but sound in desert lone
Their gray-hair'd master's misery.
Were each gray hair a minstrel string,
Each chord should imprecautions fling,
Till startled Scotland loud should ring,
"Revenge for blood and treach'ry!"

---

For a' that an' a' that.

A NEW SONG TO AN OLD TUNE.

1814.

THOUGH right be a'f put down by strength,
As mony a day we saw that,
The true and leillfu' cause at length
Shall bear the grie for a' that.
For a' that an' a' that,
Guns, guillotines, and a' that,
The Fleur-de-lis, that lost her right,
Is queen again for a' that!

We'll twine her in a friendly knot
With England's Rose, and a' that;
The Shamrock shall not be forgot,
For Wellington made braw that.
The Thistle, though her leaf be rude,
Yet faith we'll no misea' that,
She shelter'd in her solitude
The Fleur-de-lis, for a' that.

The Austrian Vine, the Prussian Pine
(For Blucher's sake, hurrah that),
The Spanish Olive, too, shall join,
And bloom in peace for a' that.

1 Sung at the first meeting of the Pitt Club of Scotland, and published in the Scots Magazine for July, 1814.
Stout Russia's Hemp, so surely twined
Around our wreath we'll draw that,
And he that would the cord unbind,
Shall have it for his grav-vat!

Or, if to choke sae puir a sot,
Your pity scorn to throw that,
The Devil's elbow be his lot,
Where he may sit and claw that.

In spite of slight, in spite of might,
In spite of brag, an' a' that,
The lads that batted for the right
Have won the day, an' a' that!

There's a bit spot I had forgot,
America e'at' that!
A coward plot her rats had got
Their father's flag to gaw that:
Now see it fly top-gallant high,
Atlantic winds shall blow that,
And Yankee loon, beware your croun,
There's kames in hand to claw that!

For on the land, or on the sea,
Where'er the breezes blow that,
The British Flag shall bear the grie,
And win the day for a' that!

Song,
FOR THE ANNIVERSARY MEETING OF THE PITT CLUB
OF SCOTLAND.

1814.

Oh, dread was the time, and more dreadful the omen,
When the brave on Marengo lay slaughter'd in vain,
And beholding broad Europe bow'd down by her foes,

PITT closed in his anguish the map of her reign!
Not the fate of broad Europe could bend his brave spirit
To take for his country the safety of shame;
Oh then in her triumph remember his merit,
And hallow the goblet that flows to his name.

Round the husbandman's head, while he traces the furrow,
The mists of the winter may mingle with rain,

He may plough it with labor, and sow it in sorrow,
And sigh while he fears he has sow'd it in vain;
He may die ere his children shall reap in their gladness,
But the blithe harvest-home shall remember his claim;
And their jubilee-shout shall be soften'd with sadness,
While they hallow the goblet that flows to his name.

Though anxious and timeless his life was expended,
In toils for our country preserved by his care,
Though he died ere one ray o'er the nations ascended,
To light the long darkness of doubt and despair;
The storms he endured in our Britain's December,
The perils his wisdom foresaw and o'ercame,
In her glory's rich harvest shall Britain remember,
And hallow the goblet that flows to his name.

Nor forget His gray head who, all dark in affliction,
Is dear to the tale of our victories won,
And to sounds the most dear to paternal affection,
The shout of his people applauding his Son;
By his firmness unmoved in success and disaster,
By his long reign of virtue, remember his claim!
With our tribute to PITT join the praise of his Master,
Though a tear stain the goblet that flows to his name.

Yet again fill the wine-cup, and change the sad measure;
The rites of our grief and our gratitude paid,
To our Prince, to our Heroes, devote the bright treasure,
The wisdom that plann'd, and the zeal that obey'd,
Fill WELLINGTON's cup till it beam like his glory,
Forget not our own brave DALHOOSE and GLENE;
A thousand years hence hearts shall bound at their story,
And hallow the goblet that flows to their fame.

Pharos Loquitur. 1

Far in the bosom of the deep,
O'er these wild shelves my watch I keep;
A ruddy gem of changeful light,
Bound on the dusky brow of night,
The seaman bids my lustre hail,
And scorns to strike his timorous sail.

1 "On the 30th of July, 1814, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Erskine, and Mr. Duff, commissioners, along with Mr. (now Sir) Walter Scott, and the writer, visited the lighthouse, the commissioners being then on one of their voyages of inspection, noticed in the introduction. They breakfasted in the library, when Sir Walter, at the entreaty of the party, upon inscribing his name in the album, added these interesting lines."—STEWENSON'S Account of the Bell-Rock Light-

House, 1824. Scott's Diary of the Voyage is now published in the fourth volume of his Life.

* The late Robert Hamilton, Esq., advocate, long Sheriff-Depute of Lanarkshire, and afterwards one of the Principal Clerks of Session in Scotland. Died in 1851.

† Afterwards Lord Kinneirder.

1 The late Adam Duff, Esq., Sheriff-Depute of the county of Edinburgh.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

641

Lines, 1
ADDRESS TO RANALD MACDONALD, ESQ., OF STAFFA. 2

1814.

STAFFA, sprung from high Macdonald, Worthy branch of old Clan-Ranal! Staffa! king of all kind fellow! Well befall thy hills and valleys, Lakes and inlets, deeps and shallows—Cliffs of darkness, caves of wonder, Echoing the Atlantic thunder; Mountains which the gray mist covers, Where the chieftain spirit hovers, Pausing while his pinions quiver, Stretch'd to quit our land for ever! Each kind influence reign above thee! Warmer heart, 'twixt this and Staffa, Beats not, than in heart of Staffa!

Letter in Verse
ON THE VOYAGE WITH THE COMMISSIONERS OF NORTHERN LIGHTS.

"Of the letters which Scott wrote to his friends during those happy six weeks, I have recovered only one, and it is, thanks to the leisure of the yacht, in verse. The strong and easy heroes of the first section prove, I think, that Mr. Canning did not err when he told him that if he chose he might emulate even Dryden's command of that noble measure; and the dancing anapests of the second show that he could with equal facility have rivalled the gay graces of Cotton, Anstey, or Moore."—LOCKHART. Life, vol. iv. p. 372.

TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCELLECH, &c. &c. &c.

Lighthouse Yacht in the Sound of Lerwick, Zetland, 8th August, 1814.

Health to the chieftain from his clansman true! From her true minstrel, health to fair Buccleuch! Health from the isles where dewy Morning weaves Her chaplet with the tints that Twilight leaves; Where late the sun scarce vanish'd from the sight, And his bright pathway grace the short-lived night, Though darker now as autumn's shades extend, The north winds whistle and the mists ascend!

1 These lines were written in the album kept at the Sound of Ulva Inn, in the month of August, 1814.
2 Afterwards Sir Reginald Macdonald Stewart Seton of Staffa, Allanton, and Touch, baronet. He died 16th April, 1833, in his sixty-first year. The reader will find a warm tribute to Staffa's character as a Highland landlord in Scott's article on Sir John Carr's Caledonian Sketches.—Miscellaneous Prose Works, vol. xix.
Not thus of old the Norsemen hither came,
Wen by the love of danger or of fame;
On every storm-beat cape a shapeless tower
Tells of their wars, their conquests, and their power;
For ne'er for Grecian's vales, nor Latian land,
Was fiercer strife than for this barren strand;
A race severe—the isle and ocean lords
Loved for its own delight the strife of swords;
With scornful laugh the mortal pang defied,
And blest their gods that they in battle died.

Such were the sires of Zetland's simple race,
And still the eye may faint resemblance trace
In the blue eye, tall form, proportion fair,
The limbs athletic, and the long light hair
(Such was the mien, as Scald and Minstrel sings,
Of fair-hair'd Harold, first of Norway's Kings);
But their high deeds to scale these crags confined,
Their only warfare is with waves and wind.

Why should I talk of Mousa's castled coast?
Why of the horrors of the Sumburgh Rost?
May not these bald disjointed lines suffice,
Penn'd while my comrades whir! the rattling dice—
While down the cabin skylight lessening shine
The rays, and eve is chased with mirth and wine?
Imagined, while down Mousa's desert bay
Our well-trimm'd vessel urged her nimble way,
While to the freshening breeze she lean'd her side,
And bade her bowsprit kiss the foamy tide?

Such are the lays that Zetland Isles supply;
Drench'd with the drizzly spray and dropping sky,
Wcary and wet, a sea-sick minstrel I. —— W. Scott.

POSTSCRIPTUM.
Kirkwall, Orkney, Aug. 13, 1814.

In respect that your Grace has commission'd a Kraken,
You will please be inform'd that they seldom are taken;
It is January two years, the Zetland folks say,
Since they saw the last Kraken in Scalloway bay;
He lay in the offing a fortnight or more,
But the devil a Zetlander put from the shore,
Though bold in the seas of the North to assail
The mose and the sea-horse, the grampus and whale.
If your Grace thinks I'm writing the thing that is not,
You may ask at a namesake of ours, Mr. Scott
(He's not from our clan, though his merits deserve it,
But springs, I'm inform'd, from the Scotts of Scottstarvet);

He question'd the folks who beheld it with eyes,
But they differ'd confoundedly as to its size.
For instance, the modest and diffident swore
That it seem'd like the keel of a ship, and no more—

1 The Scotts of Scottstarvet, and other families of the name in Fife and elsewhere, claim no kindred with the great clan of the Border, and their armorial bearings are different.

Those of eyesight more clear, or of fancy more high,
Said it rose like an island 'twixt ocean and sky—
But all of the hulk had a steady opinion
That 'twas sure a live subject of Neptune's dominion—
And I think, my Lord Duke, your Grace hardly would wish,
To cumber your house, such a kettle of fish.
Had your order related to night-caps or hose,
Or mittens of worsted, there's plenty of those;
Or would you be pleased but to fancy a whale?
And direct me to send it—by sea or by mail?
The season, I'm told, is nigh over, but still
I could get you one fit for the lake at Bowhill.
Indeed, as to whales, there's no need to be thrifty,
Since one day last fortnight two hundred and fifty,
Pursued by seven Orkneymen's boats and no more,
Betwixt Truthness and my Fairness were drawn on the shore!
You'll ask if I saw this same wonderful sight;
I own that I did not, but easily might—
For this mighty shoal of Leviathans lay
On our lee-beam a mile, in the loop of the bay,
And the islemen of Sanda were all at the spoil,
And finching (so term it) the blubber to boil;
( Ye spirits of lavender, drown the reflection
That awakes at the thoughts of this odorous dissection!)
To see this huge marvel full fain would we go,
But Wilson, the wind, and the current, said no.
We have now got to Kirkwall, and needs I must stare
When I think that in verse I have once call'd it fair;—
'Tis a base little borough, both dirty and mean—
There is nothing to hear, and there's nought to be seen
Save a church, where, of old times, a prelate harangued,
And a palace that's built by an earl that was hang'd.
But, farewell to Kirkwall—aboard we are going,
The anchor's a-peak, and the breezes are blowing;
Our commodore calls all his band to their places,
And 'tis time to release you—good night to your Graces!

VERSES FROM WAVERLEY.

1814.

"The following song, which has been since borrowed by the worshipful author of the famous "History of Fryar Bacon," has been with difficulty deciphered.
It seems to have been sung on occasion of carrying home the bride."

(1)—BRIDAL SONG.

To the tune of "I have been a Fiddler," &c.

And did ye not hear of a mirth befell
The morrow after a wedding day,
And carrying a bride at home to dwell?
And away to Tewin, away, away!
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

The quintain was set, and the garlands were made,
'Tis pity old customs should ever decay;
And woe be to him that was horsed on a jade,
For he carried no credit away, away.

We met a concert of fiddle-de-dees;
We set them a cockhorse, and made them play
The winning of Bullen, and Upsey-frees,
And away to Tewin, away, away!

There was ne'er a lad in all the parish
That would go to the plough that day;
But on his fore-horse his wench he carries,
And away to Tewin, away, away!

The butler was quick, and the ale he did tap,
The maidens did make the chamber full gay;
The servants did give me a fuddling cup,
And I did carry't away, away.

The smith of the town his liquor so took,
That he was persuaded that the ground look'd blue;
And I dare boldly be sworn on a book,
Such smiths as he there's but a few.

A posset was made, and the women did sip,
And simpering said, they could eat no more;
Full many a maiden was laid on the lip,—
I'll say no more, but give o'er, (give o'er.)

Appendix to the General Preface.

(2.)—WAVERLEY.

"On receiving intelligence of his commission as captain of a troop of horse in Colonel Gardiner's regiment, his tutor, Mr. Pembroke, picked up about Edard's room some fragments of irregular verse, which he appeared to have composed under the influence of the agitating feelings occasioned by this sudden page being turned up to him in the book of life."

Late, when the autumn evening fell
On Mirkwood-Mere's romantic dell,
The lake return'd, in chas'ten'd gleam,
The purple cloud, the golden beam:
Reflected in the crystal pool,
Headland and bank lay fair and cool;
The weather-tinted rock and tower,
Each drooping tree, each fairy flower,
So true, so soft, the mirror gave,
As if there lay beneath the wave,
Secure from trouble, toil, and care,
A world than earthly world more fair.

But distant winds began to wake,
And roused the Genius of the Lake!

He heard the groaning of the oak,
And donn'd at once his sable cloak,
As warrior, at the battle cry,
Invests him with his panoply:
Then, as the whirlwind nearer press'd,
He 'gan to shake his foamy crest
O'er furrow'd brow and blacken'd cheek,
And bade his surge in thunder speak.
In wild and broken eddies whirl'd,
Flitted that fond ideal world;
And, to the shore in tumult toss,
The realms of fairy bliss were lost.

Yet, with a stern delight and strange,
I saw the spirit-stirring change.
As warr'd the wind with wave and wood,
Upon the ruin'd tower I stood,
And felt my heart more strongly bound,
Responsive to the lofty sound,
While, joying in the mighty roar,
I mourn'd that tranquil scene no more.

So, on the idle dreams of youth
Breaks the loud trumpet-call of truth,
Bids each fair vision pass away,
Like landscape on the lake that lay,
As fair, as fleeting, and as frail,
As that which fled the autumn gale—
For ever dead to fancy's eye
Be each gay form that glided by,
While dreams of love and lady's charms
Give place to honor and to arms!

(3.)—DAVIE GELLATLEY'S SONG.

"HE (Daft Davie Gellatley) sung with great earnestness, and not without some taste, a fragment of an old Scotch ditty:"

False love, and hast thou play'd me this
In summer among the flowers?
I will repay thee back again
In winter among the showers.
Unless again, again, my love,
Unless you turn again;
As you with other maidens rove,
I'll smile on other men.

"This is a genuine ancient fragment, with some alteration in the last two lines."

"—The questioned party replied,—and, like the witch of Thalaba, 'still his speech was song.'"
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

The Knight's to the mountain
His bugle to wind;
The Lady's to Greenwood
Her garland to bind.
The bower of Burd Ellen
Has moss on the floor,
That the step of Lord William
Be silent and sure.

(4.)—SCENE

IN LUCKIE MACLEARY'S TAVERN.

"In the middle of this din, the Baron repeatedly implored silence; and when at length the instinct of polite discipline so far prevailed that for a moment he obtained it, he hastened to beseech their attention 'unto a military airattle, which was a particular favorite of the Maréchal Duc de Berwick;' then, imitating, as well as he could, the manner and tone of a French masqueur, he immediately commenced,"

Mon cœur volage, dit-elle,
N'est pas pour vous, garçon,
Est pour un homme de guerre,
Qui a barbe au menton.
Lon, Lon, Laridon.

Qui porte chapeau a plume,
Soulier a rouge talon,
Qui jone de la flûte,
Aussi de violon.
Lon, Lon, Laridon.

"Balmawhapple could hold no longer, but break in with what he called a d—d good song, composed by Gibby Gaethrowit, the Piper of Cupar; and, without wasting more time, struck up—"

It's up Glenbarchan's braes I gaed,
And o'er the bent of Killiebraid,
And mony a weary cast I made,
To cinnette the moor-fowl's tail.

If up a bonny black-cook should spring,
To whistle him down wi' a slug in his wing,
And strap him on to my lunzie string,
Right seldom would I fail.

(5.)—"HIE AWAY, HIE AWAY."

"The stamping of horses was now heard in the court, and Davie Gellatley's voice singing to the two large deer greyhounds,"

Hie away, hie away,
Over bank and over brae,
Where the copsewood is the greenest,
Where the fountains glisten sheenest,
Where the lady-fern grows strongest,
Where the morning dew lies longest,
Where the black-cock sweetest sips it,
Where the fairy latest trips it:
Hie to haunts right seldom seen,
Lovely, lonesome, cool, and green,
Over bank and over brae,
Hie away, hie away.

(6.)—ST. SWITHIN'S CHAIR.

"The view of the old tower, or fortalice, introduced some family anecdotes, and tales of Scottish chivalry, which the Baron told with great enthusiasm. The projecting peak of an impending crag, which rose near it, had acquired the name of St. Swithin's Chair. It was the scene of a peculiar superstition, of which Mr. Rubbrick mentioned some curious particulars, which reminded Waverley of a rhyme quoted by Edgar in King Lear; and Rose was called upon to sing a little legend, in which they had been interwoven by some village poet,

Who, noteless as the race from which he sprung,
Saved others' names, but left his own unsung.

"The sweetness of her voice, and the simple beauty of her music, gave all the advantage which the minstrel could have desired, and which his poetry so much wanted."

On Hallow-Mass Eve, ere you bounie ye to rest,
Ever beware that your couch be bless'd;
Sign it with cross, and sain it with bead,
Sing the Ave, and say the Creed.

For on Hallow-Mass Eve the Night-Hag will ride,
And all her nine-fold sweeping on by her side,
Whether the wind sing lowly or loud,
Sailing through moonshine or swath'd in the cloud.

The Lady she sat in St. Swithin's Chair,
The dew of the night has damp'd her hair:
Her cheek was pale—but resolved and high
Was the word of her lip and the glance of her eye.

She mutter'd the spell of Swithin bold,
When his naked foot traced the midnight wold,
When he stopp'd the Hag as she rode the night,
And bade her descend, and her promise plight.

He that dare sit on St. Swithin's Chair,
When the Night-Hag wings the troubled air,
Questions three, when he speaks the spell,
He may ask, and she must tell.

The Baron has been with King Robert his liege,
These three long years in battle and siege;
News are there none of his weal or his woe,
And fain the Lady his fate would know.

She shudders and stops as the charm she speaks;—
Is it the moody owl that shrieks?
Or is that sound, betwixt laughter and scream,
The voice of the Demon who haunts the stream?

The moan of the wind sunk silent and low,
And the roaring torrent had ceased to flow;
The calm was more dreadful than raging storm,
When the cold gray mist brought the ghastly form!

* * * * *

Chap. xiii.

(7.)—Davie Gellatley's Song.

"The next day Edward arose betimes, and in a morning walk around the house and its vicinity, came suddenly upon a small court in front of the dog-kennel, where his friend Davie was employed about his four-footed charge. One quick glance of his eye recognized Waverley, when, instantly turning his back, as if he had not observed him, he began to sing part of an old ballad."

Young men will love thee more fair and more fast;
Heard ye so merry the little bird sing?
Old men's love the longest will last,
And the throstle-cock's head is under his wing.

The young man's wrath is like light straw on fire;
Heard ye so merry the little bird sing?
But like red-hot steel is the old man's ire,
And the throstle-cock's head is under his wing.

The young man will brawl at the evening board;
Heard ye so merry the little bird sing?
But the old man will draw at the dawning the sword,
And the throstle-cock's head is under his wing.

[The song has allusion to the Baron of Braidwardine's personal encounter with Balmawhapple early next morning, after the evening quarrel betwixt the latter and Waverley.]

Chap. xiv.

(8.)—Janet Gellatley's Alleged Witchcraft.

"This anecdote led into a long discussion of"

All those idle thoughts and phantasies,
Devices, dreams, opinions unsound,
Shows, visions, soothsays, and prophecies,
And all that feigned is, as leasing, tales, and lies,

Chap. xiii.

(9.)—Flora Macivor's Song.

"Flora had exchanged the measured and monotonous recitative of the bard for a lofty and uncommon Highland air, which had been a battle-song in former ages. A few irregular strains introduced a prelude of a wild and peculiar tone, which harmonized well with the distant water-fall, and the soft sigh of the evening breeze in the rustling leaves of an aspen which overhung the seat of the fair harpess. The following verses convey but little idea of the feelings with which, so sung and accompanied, they were heard by Waverley;"

There is mist on the mountain, and night on the vale,
But more dark is the sleep of the sons of the Gael.
A stranger commanded—it sunk on the land,
It has frozen each heart, and benumb'd every hand!

The dirk and the target lie sodden with dust,
The bloodless claymore is but redden'd with rust;
On the hill or the glen if a gun should appear,
It is only to war with the heath-cock or deer.

The deeds of our sires if our bards should rehearse,
Let a blush or a blow be the meed of their verse!
Be mute every string, and be blush'd every tone,
That shall bid us remember the fame that is flown.

But the dark hours of night and of slumber are past,
The morn on our mountains is dawning at last;
Glenaladale's peaks are illumined with the rays,
And the streams of Glenfinnan leap bright in the blaze.

Oh, high-minded Moray!—the exiled—the dear!—
In the blush of the dawning the standard uprear!
Wide, wide on the winds of the north let it fly,
Like the sun's latest flash when the tempest is nigh!

Ye sons of the strong, when that dawning shall break,
Need the harp of the aged remind you to wake?
That dawn never beam'd on your forefathers' eye,
But it roused each high chieftain to vanquish or die.

Oh sprung from the Kings who in Islay kept state,
Proud chiefs of Clan-Ranald, Glengarry, and Sleat!
Combine like three streams from one mountain of snow,
And resistless in union rush down on the foe!"
True son of Sir Evan, undaunted Lochiel,
Place thy targe on thy shoulder, and burnish thy steel!
Rough Keppoch, give breath to thy bugle's bold swell,
Till far Coryarrick resound to the knell!

Stern son of Lord Kenneth, high chief of Kintail,
Let the stag in thy standard bound wild in the gale!
May the race of Clan-Gillian, the fearless and free,
Remember Glenlivat, Harlaw, and Duudee!

Let the clan of gray Fingon, whose offspring has given
Such heroes to earth, and such martyrs to heaven,
U unite with the race of renown'd Rorri More,
To launch the long galley, and stretch to the ear!

How MacShimeil will joy when their chief shall display
The yew-crested bonnet o'er tresses of gray!
How the race of wrong'd Alpine and murder'd Glenoe Shail shout for revenge when they pour on the foe!

Ye sons of brown Dermid, who slew the wild boar,
Resume the pure faith of the great Callum-More!
MacNiel of the Islands, and Moy of the Lake,
For honor, for freedom, for vengeance awake!

Awake on your hills, on your islands awake,
Brave sons of the mountain, the frith, and the lake!
'Tis the bugle—but not for the chase is the call;
'Tis the pibroch's shrill summons—but not to the hall.

'Tis the summons of heroes for conquest or death,
When the banners are blazing on mountain and heath;
They call to the dirk, the claymore, and the targe,
To the march and the muster, the line and the charge.

Be the brand of each chieftain like Fin's in his ire!
May the blood through his veins flow like currents of fire!
Burst the base foreign yoke as your sires did of yore!
Or die, like your sires, and endure it no more!

"As Flora concluded her song, Fergus stood before them, and immediately commenced with a theatrical air,"

O Lady of the desert, hail!
That lovest the harping of the Gael,
Through fair and fertile regions borne,
Where never yet grew grass or corn.

"But English poetry will never succeed under the influence of a Highland Helicon—Allons, courage"—

O vous, qui buvez à tasse pleine,
A cette heureuse fontaine,
Où on ne voit sur le rivage
Que quelques vilains troupeaux,
Suivis de nymphes de village,
Qui les escortent sans sabots—

(10.)—LINES ON CAPTAIN WOGAN.

"The letter from the Chief contained Flora's lines on the fate of Captain Wogan, whose enterprising character is so well drawn by Clarendon. He had originally engaged in the service of the Parliament, but had abjured that party upon the execution of Charles I.; and upon hearing that the royal standard was set up by the Earl of Glencarin and General Middleton in the Highlands of Scotland, took leave of Charles II., who was then at Paris, passed into England, assembled a body of cavaliers in the neighborhood of London, and traversed the kingdom, which had been so long under domination of the usurper, by marches conducted with such skill, dexterity, and spirit, that he safely united his handful of horsemen with the body of Highlanders then in arms. After several months of desultory warfare, in which Wogan's skill and courage gained him the highest reputation, he had the misfortune to be wounded in a dangerous manner, and no surgical assistance being within reach, he terminated his short but glorious career."

The verses were inscribed,

TO AN OAK TREE,

IN THE CHURCHYARD OF ———, IN THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND, SAID TO MARK THE GRAVE OF CAPTAIN WOGAN, KILLED IN 1649.

Emblem of England's ancient faith,
Full proudly may thy branches wave,
Where loyalty lies low in death,
And valor fills a timeless grave.

And thou, brave tenant of the tomb!
Repine not if our clime deny,
Above thine honor'd sod to bloom,
The flow'rets of a milder sky.

These owe their birth to genial May;
Beneath a fiercer sun they pine,
Before the winter storm decay—
And can their worth be type of thine?

No! for, 'mid storms of Fate opposing,
Still higher swell'd thy dauntless heart,
And, while Despair the scene was closing,
Commenced thy brief but brilliant part.

'Twas then thou sought'st on Albyn's hill
(When England's sons the strife resign'd)
A rugged race resisting still,
And unsubdued though unrefined.

Thy death's hour heard no kindred wail,
No holy knell thy requiem rung;
Thy mourners were the plaided Gael,
Thy dirge the clamorous pibroch sung.
Yet who, in Fortune's summer-shine
To waste life's longest term away,
Would change that glorious dawn of thine,
Though darken'd ere its noontide day?

Be thine the Tree whose dauntless boughs
Brave summer's drought and winter's gloom!
Rome bound with oak her patriots' brows,
As Albyn shadows Wogan's tomb.

Chap. xxix.

(11.)—"FOLLOW ME, FOLLOW ME."

"Who are dead?" said Waverley, forgetting the incapacity of Davie to hold any connected discourse.

"Baron—and Bailie—and Sanders Sanderson—and Lady Rose, that sang sae sweet—A' dead and gane—dead and gane,' (said Davie)—

But follow, follow me,
While the glow-worms light the lea,
I'll show ye where the dead should be—
Each in his shroud,
While winds pipe loud,
And the red moon peeps dim through the cloud.

Follow, follow me;
Brave should he be
That treads by the night the dead man's lea."

Chap. lxiii.

The Author of Waverley?

["I am not able to give the exact date of the following reply to one of John Ballantyne's expostulations on the subject of the secret:"—Life, vol. iv. p. 179.]

"No, John, I will not own the book—
I won't, you Picaroon.
When next I try St. Grubby's brook,
The A. of Wa—shall bait the hook—
And flat-fish bite as soon,
As if before them they had got
The worn-out wriggler
WALTER SCOTT."

Farewell to Mackenzie,
HIGH CHIEF OF KINTAIL.
FROM THE GAELIC.

1815.—Et. 44.

The original verses are arranged to a beautiful Gaelic air, of which the chorus is adapted to the double pull upon the oars of a galley, and which is therefore distinct from the ordinary jorrisms or boat-songs. They were composed by the family bard upon the departure of the Earl of Seaforth, who was obliged to take refuge in Spain, after an unsuccessful effort at insurrection in favor of the Stuart family, in the year 1718.

Farewell to Mackenneth, great Earl of the North,
The Lord of Lochcarron, Glenshiel, and Seaforth;
To the Chiefman this morning his course who began,
Launching forth on the billows his bark like a swan.
For a far foreign land he has hoisted his sail,
Farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

Oh swift be the galley, and hardy her crew,
May her captain be skillful, her mariners true,
In danger undaunted, unwearied by toil,
Though the whirlwind should rise, and the ocean should boil;
On the brave vessel's gunnel I drank his bonail,¹
And farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

Awake in thy chamber, thou sweet Southland gale!
Like the sighs of his people, breathe soft on his sail;
Be prolong'd as regret, that his vassals must know,
Be fair as their faith, and sincere as their woe;
Be so soft, and so fair, and so faithful, sweet gale,
Wafting onward Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

Be his pilot experienced, and trusty, and wise,
To measure the seas and to study the skies:
May he hoist all his canvas from streamer to deck,
But oh! crowd it higher when waiting him back—
Till the cliffs of Skooroora, and Conan's glad vale,
Shall welcome Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

IMITATION OF THE PRECEDING SONG.²

So sung the old Bard, in the grief of his heart,
When he saw his loved Lord from his people depart.
Now mute on thy mountains, O Albyn, are heard
Nor the voice of the song, nor the harp of the bard;
Or its strings are but waked by the stern winter gale,
As they mourn for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

From the far Southland Border a Minstrel came forth,
And waited the hour that some bard of the north
His hand on the harp of the ancient should cast,
And bid its wild numbers mix high with the blast;
But no bard was there left in the land of the Gaal,
To lament for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

And shalt thou then sleep, did the Minstrel exclaim,
Like the son of the lowly, unnoticed by fame?

He was a nobleman of extraordinary talents, who must have made for himself a lasting reputation had not his political exertions been checked by the painful natural infirmities alluded to in the fourth stanza. See Life of Scott, vol. v. pp. 18, 19.

¹ Bonail or Bonaleez, the old Scottish phrase for a feast at parting with a friend.
² These verses were written shortly after the death of Lord Seaforth, the last male representative of his illustrious house.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

No, son of Fitzgerald! in accents of woe,
The song thou hast loved o'er thy coffin shall flow,
And teach thy wild mountains to join in the wail
That laments for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

In vain, the bright course of thy talents to wrong,
Fate deedn'd thine ear and imprison'd thy tongue;
For brighter o'er all her obstructions arose
The glow of the genius they could not oppose;
And who in the land of the Saxon or Gael
Might match with Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail?

Thy sons rose around thee in light and in love,
All a father could hope, all a friend could approve;
What 'vails it the tale of thy sorrow to tell?
In the spring-time of youth and of promise they fell!
Of the line of Fitzgerald remains not a male
To bear the proud name of the Chief of Kintail.

And thou, gentle Dame, who must bear, to thy grief,
For thy clan and thy country the cares of a Chief,
Whom brief rolling moons in six changes have left
Of thy husband, and father, and brethren bereft,
To thine ear of affection how sad is the hail
That salutes thee the Heir of the line of Kintail!

---

THE WAR-SONG OF LACHLAN, HIGH CHIEF OF MACLEAN.
FROM THE GAELIC.

1815.

This song appears to be imperfect, or, at least, like many of the early Gaelic poems, makes a rapid transition from one subject to another; from the situation, namely, of one of the daughters of the clan, who opens the song by lamenting the absence of her lover, to an eulogium over the military glories of the chieflain. The translator has endeavored to imitate the abrupt style of the original.

A weary month has wander'd o'er
Since last we parted on the shore;
Heaven! that I saw thee, Love, once more,
Safe on that shore again!—
'Twas valiant Lachlan gave the word,—
Lachlan, of many a galleon lord:
He call'd his kindred bands on board,
And launch'd them on the main.

Clan-Gillian? is to ocean gone,
Clan-Gillian, fierce in foray known,
Rejoicing in the glory won
In many a bloody broil:
For wide is heard the thundering fray,
The rout, the ruin, the dismay,
When from the twilight glens away
Clan-Gillian drives the spoil.

Woe to the hills that shall rebound
Our banner'd bag-pipes' maddening sound;
Clan-Gillian's onset echoing round
Shall shake their inmost cell.
Woe to the bark whose crew shall gaze
Where Lachlan's silken streamer plays!
The fools might face the lightning's blaze
As wisely and as well!

---

Saint Cloud.

[Paris, 5th September, 1815.]

SOFT spread the southern summer night
Her veil of darksome blue;
Ten thousand stars combined to light
The terrace of Saint Cloud.

The evening breezes gently sigh'd,
Like breath of lover true,
Behaving the deserted pride
And wreck of sweet Saint Cloud.

The drum's deep roll was heard afar,
The bugle wildly blew
Good-night to Hulan and Hussar,
That garrison Saint Cloud.

The startled Naiads from the shade
With broken urns withdrew,
And silence was that proud cascade,
The glory of Saint Cloud.

We sat upon its steps of stone,
Nor could its silence 3 rue,
When waked, to music of our own,
The echoes of Saint Cloud.

Slow Seine might hear each lovely note
Fall light as summer dew,
While through the moonless4 air they float,
Prolong'd from fair Saint Cloud.

And sure a melody more sweet
His waters never knew,
Though music's self was wont to meet
With princes at Saint Cloud.

---

1 The Honorable Lady Hood, daughter of the last Lord Seaforth, widow of Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, now Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie of Seaforth and Glascott. 1833.
2 i. e., The clan of Maclean, literally the race of Gillian.
3 MS.: ——— "absence."
4 MS.: ——— "midnight."
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

Nor then, with more delighted ear,
The circle round her drew,
Than ours, when gathered round to hear
Our songstress ¹ at Saint Cloud.

Few happy hours poor mortals pass,—
Then give those hours their due,
And rank among the foremost class
Our evenings at Saint Cloud.

The Dance of Death.²

1815.

I.

Night and morning³ were at meeting
Over Waterloo;
Cocks had sung their earliest greeting;
Faint and low they crew,
For no pale beam yet shone
On the heights of Mount Saint John;
Tempest-clouds prolong'd the sway
Of timeless darkness over day;
Whirlwind, thunder-clap, and shower,
Mark'd it a predestined hour.
Broad and frequent through the night
Flash'd the sheets of levi-light;
Muskets, glancing lightnings back,
Show'd the dreary bivouac
Where the soldier lay,
Chill and stiff, and drench'd with rain,
Wishing dawn of morn again,
Though death should come with day.

'Tis at such a tide and hour,
Wizard, witch, and fiend have power,
And ghastly forms through mist and shower
Gleam on the gifted ken;
And then the affrighted prophet's ear
Drinks whispers strange of fate and fear,
Presaging death and ruin near
Among the sons of men;—
Apart from Albyn's war array,
'Twas then gray Allan sleepless lay;
Gray Allan, who, for many a day,
Had follow'd stout and stern,

Where, through battle's rout and reel,
Storm of shot and hedge of steel,
Led the grandson of Lochiel,
Valiant Fassiefern.

Through steel and shot he leads no more,
Low laid 'mid friends' and foemen's gore—
But long his native lake's wild shore,
And Sunart rough, and high Ardgower,
And Morven long shall tell,
And proud Bennevis hear with awe,
How, upon bloody Quatre-Bras,
Brave Cameron heard the wild hurrah
Of conquest as he fell.⁴

III.

'Lone on the outskirts of the host,
The weary sentinel held post,
And heard, through darkness far aloof,
The frequent clang⁵ of courser's hoof,
Where held the cloak'd patrol their course,
And spur'd 'gainst storm the swerving horse;
But there are sounds in Allan's ear
Patrol nor sentinel may hear,
And sights before his eye aghast
Invisible to them have pass'd,
When down the destined plain,
'Twixt Britain and the bands of France,
Wild as marsh-born meteor's glance,
Strange phantoms wheel'd a revel dance,
And doom'd the future slain.—
Such forms were seen, such sounds were heard,
When Scotland's James his march prepared
For Flodden's fatal plain;⁶
Such, when he drew his ruthless sword,
As Choosers of the Slain, adored
The yet unchristen'd Dane,
An indistinct and phantom band,
They wheel'd their ring-dance hand in hand,
With gestures wild and dread;
The Seer, who watch'd them ride the storm,
Saw through their faint and shadowy form
The lightning's flash more red;
And still their ghastly roundelay
Was of the coming battle-fray,
And of the destined dead.

IV.

Song.

"Wheel the wild dance
While lightnings glance,
And thunders rattle loud,
And call the brave
To bloody grave,
To sleep without a shroud.

¹ These lines were written after an evening spent at Saint Cloud with the late Lady Alvanley and her daughters, one of whom was the songstress alluded to in the text.
² Originally published in 1815, in the Edinburgh Annual Register, vol. v.
³ MS.: "Dawn and darkness."
⁴ See note, ante, p. 595.
⁵ MS.: "Oft came the clang," &c.
⁶ See ante, "Marmion," canto v., stanzas 24, 25, 26, and Appendix, Note 4 A, p. 165.
The original of this little romance makes part of a manuscript collection of French songs, probably compiled by some young officer, which was found on the field of Waterloo, so much stained with clay and with blood as sufficiently to indicate the fate of its late owner. The song is popular in France, and is rather a good specimen of the style of composition to which it belongs. The translation is strictly literal.

It was Dunois, the young and brave, was bound for Palestine,
But first he made his orisons before St. Mary's shrine:

"Partant pour la Syrie,
Le jeune et brave Dunois," &c., was written, and set to music also, by Hortense Beauharnois, Duchesse de St. Leu, ex-Queen of Holland.
"And grant, immortal Queen of Heaven," was still the soldier’s prayer,
"That I may prove the bravest knight, and love the fairest fair."

His oath of honor on the shrine he graved it with his sword, [Lord; And follow’d to the Holy Land the banner of his Where, faithful to his noble vow, his war-cry fill’d the air,
"Be honor’d aye the bravest knight, beloved the fairest fair."

They owed the conquest to his arm, and then his Liege-Lord said,
"The heart that has for honor beat by bliss must be repaid,—
My daughter Isabel and thou shalt be a wedded pair,
For thou art bravest of the brave, she fairest of the fair."

And then they bound the holy knot before Saint Mary’s shrine,
That makes a paradise on earth, if hearts and hands
combine; [there,
And every lord and lady bright, that were in chapel Cried, "Honor’d be the bravest knight, beloved the fairest fair!"

The Troubadour.¹
FROM THE SAME COLLECTION.
1815.

Glowing with love, on fire for fame,
A Troubadour that hated sorrow
Beneath his Lady’s window came,
And thus he sang his last good-morrow:
"My arm it is my country’s right,
My heart is in my true-love’s bower;
Gayly for love and fame to fight
Becfits the gallant Troubadour."

And while he march’d with helm on head
And harp in hand, the descant rung,
As, faithful to his favorite maid,
The minstrel burden still he sang:
"My arm it is my country’s right,
My heart is in my lady’s bower;
Resolved for love and fame to fight,
I come, a gallant Troubadour."

Even when the battle-roar was deep,
With dauntless heart he hew’d his way,
'Mid splintering lance and fashion-sweep,
And still was heard his warrior-lay:
"My life it is my country’s right,
My heart is in my lady’s bower;
For love to die, for fame to fight,
Becomes the valiant Troubadour."

Alas! upon the bloody field
He fell beneath the foeman’s glaive,
But still reclining on his shield,
Expiring sung the exulting slave:
"My life it is my country’s right,
My heart is in my lady’s bower;
For love and fame to fall in fight
Becomes the valiant Troubadour."

From the French.²
1815.

IT chanced that Cupid on a season,
By Fancy urged, resolved to wed,
But could not settle whether Reason
Or Folly should partake his bed,
What does he then?—Upon my life,
’Twas bad example for a deity—
He takes me Reason for a wife,
And Folly for his hours of gayety.

Though thus he dealt in petty treason,
He loved them both in equal measure;
Fidelity was born of Reason,
And Folly brought to bed of Pleasure.

The Song,
ON THE LIFTING OF THE BANNER OF THE HOUSE OF BUCLEUCH, AT A GREAT FOOT-BALL
MATCH ON CARTERHAUGH.³
1815.

From the brown crest of Newark its summons extending,
Our signal is waving in smoke and in flame;

¹ The original of this ballad also was written and composed by the Duchesse de St. Lou. The translation has been set to music by Mr. Thomson. See his Collection of Scottish Songs. 1826.
² This trifle also is from the French collection found at Waterloo. See Paul’s Letters.
³ This song appears with music in Mr. G. Thomson’s Collection—1825. The foot-ball match on which it was written took place on December 5, 1815, and was also celebrated by the Ettrick Shepherd. See Life of Scott, vol. v. pp. 112, 116-122.
Then up with the Banner, let forest winds fan her,
She has blazed over Etrick eight ages and more;
In sport we'll attend her, in battle defend her,
With heart and with hand, like our fathers before.

Lullaby of an Infant Chief.

Air—"Cadul gu lo."

1815.

I.
Oh hush thee, my babie, thy sire was a knight,
Thy mother a lady, both lovely and bright;
The woods and the glens, from the towers which we see,
They all are belonging, dear babie, to thee.
Oh ho ro, i ri ri, cadul gu lo,
Oh ho ro, i ri ri, &c.

II.
Oh fear not the bugle, though loudly it blows,
It calls but the warders that guard thy repose;
Their bows would be bended, their blades would be red,
Ere the step of a foeman draws near to thy bed.
Oh ho ro, i ri ri, &c.

III.
Oh hush thee, my babie, the time will soon come
When thy sleep shall be broken by trumpet and drum;
Then hush thee, my darling, take rest while you may,
For strife comes with manhood, and waking with day.
Oh ho ro, i ri ri, &c.

Verses from Guy Mannering.

1815.

(1.) SONGS OF MEG MERRILIES.

NATIVITY OF HARRY BERTRAM.

Canny moment, lucky fit;
Is the lady lighter yet?

Mr. Terry's drama of Guy Mannering. The "Lullaby" was first printed in Mr. Terry's drama; it was afterwards set to music in Thomson's Collection. 1822.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

Be it lad, or be it lass,
Sign wi' cross, and sain wi' mass.

Trefoil, vervain, John's-wort, dill,
Hinders witches of their will;
Weel is them, that weel may Fast upon St. Andrew's day.

Saint Bride and her brat,
Saint Colme and her cat,
And his spear,
Keep the house frae reif and wear.
Chap. iii.

"TWIST YE, TWINE YE."

Twist ye, twine ye! even so,
Mingle shades of joy and woe,
Hope, and fear, and peace, and strife,
In the thread of human life.

While the mystic twist is spinning,
And the infant's life beginning,
Dimly seen through twilight bending,
Lo, what varied shapes attending!

Passions wild, and follies vain,
Pleasures soon exchanged for pain,
Doubt, and jealousy, and fear,
In the magic dance appear.

Now they wax, and now they dwindle,
Whirling with the whirling spindle.
Twist ye, twine ye! even so,
Mingle human bliss and woe.

Ibid.

THE DYING GIPSY SMUGGLER.

Wasted, weary, wherefore stay,
Wrestling thus with earth and clay?
From the body pass away;—
Hark! the mass is singing.

From thee doff thy mortal weed,
Mary Mother be thy speed,
Saints to help thee at thy need;—
Hark! the knell is ringing.

Fear not snow-drift driving fast,
Sleet, or hail, or levin blast;
Soon the shroud shall lap thee fast,
And the sleep be on thee cast
That shall ne'er know waking.

Haste thee, haste thee, to be gone,
Earth flits fast, and time draws on,— Gasp thy gasp, and groan thy groan,
Day is near the breaking.

"The songstress paused, and was answered by one or two deep and hollow groans, that seemed to proceed from the very agony of the mortal strife. 'It will not be,' she muttered to herself. 'He cannot pass away with that on his mind; it tethers him here.

Heaven cannot abide it;
Earth refuses to hide it.

I must open the door.'
"——She lifted the latch, saying,

'Open locks, end strife,
Come death, and pass life.'"

Chap. xxvii.

THE PROPHECY.

The dark shall be light,
And the wrong made right,
When Bertram's right and Bertram's might
Shall meet on Ellangowan's height.

Chap. xli.

(2.) SONGS OF DIRK HATTERAICK AND GLOSSIN.

"'And now I have brought you some breakfast,' said Glossin, producing some cold meat and a flask of spirits. The latter Hatteraick eagerly seized upon, and applied to his mouth; and after a hearty draught, he exclaimed with great rapture, 'Das schmeckt!—That is good—that warms the liver!'—Then broke into the fragment of a High-Dutch song:"

Sauen bier, und brante-wein,
Schmeissen alle die fenstern ein;
Ich ben lieiderlich,
Du bist lieiderlich,
Sind wir nicht lieiderlich leute a.

"'Well said, my hearty Captain!' cried Glossin, endeavoring to catch the tone of revelry,'—

Gin by pailfuls, wine in rivers,
Dash the window-glass to shivers!
For three wild lads were we, brave boys,
And three wild lads were we;
Thou on the land, and I on the sand,
And Jack on the gallows-tree!

Chap. xxxiv.
The Return to Ulster.¹

1816.

Once again—but how changed since my wand'ring began!—
I have heard the deep voice of the Lagan and Bann,
And the pines of Clanbrassil resound to the roar
That warries the echoes of fair Tullamore.
Ah! my poor bosom, and why shouldst thou burn?
With the scenes of my youth can its raptures return?
Can I live the dear life of delusion again,
That flow'd when these echoes first mix'd with my strain?

It was then that around me, though poor and unknown,
High spells of mysterious enchantment were thrown;
The streams were of silver, of diamond the dew,
The land was an Eden, for fancy was new.
I had heard of our bards, and my soul was on fire
At the rush of their verse, and the sweep of their lyre:
To me 'twas not legend, nor tale to the ear,
But a vision of noontide, distinguish'd and clear.

Ultonia's old heroes awoke at the call,
And renew'd the wild pomp of the chase and the hall;
And the standard of Fion flash'd fierce from on high,
Like a burst of the sun when the tempest is nigh.²
It seem'd that the harp of green Erin once more
Could renew all the glories she boasted of yore.—
Yet why at remembrance, fond heart, shouldst thou burn?
They were days of delusion, and cannot return.

But was she, too, a phantom, the Maid who stood by,
And listed my lay, while she turn'd from mine eye? Was she, too, a vision, just glancing to view,
Then dispersed in the sunbeam, or melted to dew? Oh, would it had been so!—oh, would that her eye
Had been but a star-glance that shot through the sky,
And her voice, that was moulded to melody's thrill,
Had been but a zephyr, that sigh'd and was still!

Oh, would it had been so!—not then this poor heart
Had learn'd the sad lesson, to love and to part;
To bear, unassisted, its burthen of care,
While I toil'd for the wealth I had no one to share.
Not then had I said, when life's summer was done,
And the hours of her autumn were fast speeding on,

¹ First published in Mr. G. Thomson's Collection of Irish Airs. 1816.

“Take the fame and the riches ye brought in your train,
And restore me the dream of my spring-tide again.”

Jock of Hazeldean.

Air—A Border Melody.

1816.

The first stanza of this ballad is ancient. The others were written for Mr. Campbell's Albyn's Anthology.

I.

“Why weep ye by the tide, ladie? Why weep ye by the tide?
I'll wed ye to my youngest son,
And ye sall be his bride;
And ye sall be his bride, ladie,
Sae comely to be seen”—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

II.

“Now let this willfu' grief be done,
And dry that cheek so pale;
Young Frank is chief of Errington,
And lord of Langley-dale;
His step is first in peaceful ha',
His sword in battle keen”—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

III.

“A chain of gold ye sall not lack,
Nor braid to bind your hair;
Nor mettled hound, nor managed hawk,
Nor palfrey fresh and fair;
And you, the foremost o' them a',
Shall ride our forest queen”—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

IV.

The kirk was deck'd at morning tide,
The tapers glimmer'd fair;
The priest and bridegroom wait the bride,
And damne and knight are there.
They sought her baith by bower and ha';
The ladie was not seen!
She's o'er the Border, and awa'
Wi' Jock of Hazeldean.

² In ancient Irish poetry, the standard of Fion, or Fingal, is called the Sun-burst, an epithet feebly rendered by the Sunbeam of Macpherson.
Pibroch of Donald Dhu.

AIR—"Piobaireachd Dhonnul Dhuidh."\(^1\)

1816.

This is a very ancient pibroch belonging to Clan MacDonald, and supposed to refer to the expedition of Donald Balloch, who, in 1431, launched from the Isles with a considerable force, invaded Lochaber, and at Inverlochy defeated and put to flight the Earls of Mar and Caithness, though at the head of an army superior to his own. The words of the set, theme, or melody, to which the pipe variations are applied, run thus in Gaelic:

Píobaireachd Dhonnul Dhuidh, píobaireachd Dhonnul; Píobaireachd Dhonnul Dhuidh, píobaireachd Dhonnul; Píobaireachd Dhonnul Dhuidh, píobaireachd Dhonnul; Píob agus bratach air faicne Inverlochi.
The pipe-summons of Donald the Black, The pipe-summons of Donald the Black, The war-pipe and the pennon are on the gathering-place at Inverlochy.\(^2\)

Pibroch of Donuil Dhu,
Pibroch of Donuil,
Wake thy wild voice anew, Summon Clan-Conuil.
Come away, come away, Hark to the summons!
Come in your war array, Gentles and commons.

Come from deep glen, and From mountain so rocky, The war-pipe and pennon Are at Inverlochy,
Come every hill-plaid, and True heart that wears one, Come every steel blade, and Strong hand that bears one.

Leave untended the herd, The flock without shelter; Leave the corpse uninterr’d, The bride at the altar; Leave the deer, leave the steer, Leave nets and barges: Come with your fighting gear, Broadswords and targes.

Come as the winds come when Forests are rended,
Come as the waves come when Navies are stranded:
Faster come, faster come,
Faster and faster,
Chief, vassal, page and groom,
Tenant and master.

Fast they come, fast they come; See how they gather!
Wide waves the eagle plume, Blended with heather.
Cast your plauds, draw your blades, Forward each man set!
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu, Knell for the onset!

Nora’s Vow.

AIR—"Cha teid mis a chaoiùd."\(^3\)

WRITTEN FOR ALBYN’S ANTHOLOGY.\(^4\)

1816.

In the original Gaelie, the lady makes protestations that she will not go with the Red Earl’s son, until the swan should build in the cliff, and the eagle in the lake—until one mountain should change places with another, and so forth. It is but fair to add that there is no authority for supposing that she altered her mind—except the vehemence of her protestation.

I.

Hear what Highland Nora said,—
"The Earlie’s son I will not wed, Should all the race of nature die, And none be left but he and I. For all the gold, for all the gear, And all the lands both far and near, That ever valor lost or won, I would not wed the Earlie’s son."—

II.

"A maiden’s vows," old Callum spoke, "Are lightly made and lightly broke; The heather on the mountain’s height Begins to bloom in purple light;

---

\(^1\) "The pibroch of Donald the Black." This song was written for Campbell’s Albyn’s Anthology, 1816. It may also be seen, set to music, in Thomson’s Collection. 1830.

\(^2\) Compare this with the gathering-song in the third canto of the "Lady of the Lake," ante.

\(^3\) "I will never go with him."

\(^4\) See also Mr. Thomson’s Scottish Collection. 1822.
The frost-wind soon shall sweep away
That lustre deep from glen and brae;
Yet Nora, ere its bloom be gone,
May blithely wed the Earlie's son."—

III.
"The swan," she said, "the lake's clear breast
May barter for the eagle's nest;
The Awe's fierce stream may backward turn,
Ben-Cruaichan full, and crush Kilchurn;
Our kilted clans, when blood is high,
Before their foes may turn and fly;
But I, were all these marvels done,
Would never wed the Earlie's son."

IV.
Still in the water-lily's shade
Her wonted nest the wild-swan made;
Ben-Cruaichan stands as fast as ever,
Still downward foams the Awe's fierce river;
To shun the clash of foeman's steel
No Highland brogue has turn'd the heel;
But Nora's heart is lost and won,
—She's wedded to the Earlie's son!

MacGregor's Gathering.

AIR—"Thais! a Grigalach."

WRITTEN FOR ALBYN'S ANTHOLOGY.

1816.

These verses are adapted to a very wild yet lively gathering-tune used by the MacGregors. The severe treatment of this clan, their outlawry, and the proscription of their very name, are alluded to in the ballad, 2

The moon's on the lake, and the mist's on the brae,
And the clan has a name that is nameless by day;
Then gather, gather, gather, Grigalach!
Gather, gather, gather, &c.

Our signal for fight, that from monarchs we drew,
Must be heard but by night in our vengeful halloo!
Then halloo, Grigalach! halloo, Grigalach!
Halloo, halloo, halloo, Grigalach, &c.

1 "The MacGregor is come."
2 For the history of the clan, see introduction to "Rob
3 "Rob Roy MacGregor's own designation was of Innessnaid; but he appears to have acquired a right of some kind Glen Orchy's proud mountains, Coaichuirm and her towers,
Glenstrae and Glenlyon no longer are ours;
We're landless, landless, landless, Grigalach!
Landless, landless, landless, &c.

But doom'd and devoted by vassal and lord,
MacGregor has still both his heart and his sword!
Then courage, courage, courage, Grigalach!
Courage, courage, courage, &c.

If they rob us of name, and pursue us with beagles,
Give their roofs to the flame, and their flesh to the eagles!
Then vengeance, vengeance, vengeance, Grigallatch!
Vengeance, vengeance, vengeance, &c.

While there's leaves in the forest, and foam on the river,
MacGregor, despite them, shall flourish for ever!
Come then, Grigalach, come then, Grigalach,
Come then, come then, come then, &c.

Through the depths of Loch Katrine the steed shall career,
O'er the peak of Ben-Lomond the galley shall steer,
And the rocks of Craig-Royston 3 like icicles melt,
Ere our wrongs be forgot, or our vengeance unfelt!
Then gather, gather, gather, Grigalach!
Gather, gather, gather, &c.

Verses,

COMPOSED FOR THE OCCASION, ADAPTED TO HAYDN'S AIR,

"God save the Emperor Francis,"

AND SUNG BY A SELECT BAND AFTER THE DINNER GIVEN BY THE LORD PROVOST OF EDINBURGH TO THE GRAND-DUKE NICHOLAS OF RUSSIA,
AND HIS SUITE, 19TH DECEMBER, 1816.

God protect brave Alexander,
Heaven defend the noble Czar,
Mighty Russia's high commander,
First in Europe's banded war;
For the realms he did deliver
From the tyrant overthrown, or other to the property or possession of Craig-Royston, a domain of rock and forest, lying on the east side of Loch Lomond, where that beautiful lake stretches into the dusky mountains of Glenfalloch."—Introduction to "Rob Roy," Waverley Novels,

vol. vii. p. 31.
Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces.

Thou, of every good the Giver,
Grant him long to bless his own!
Bless him, 'mid his land's disaster,
For her rights who battled brave,
Of the land of foemen master,
Bless him who their wrongs forgave.

O'er his just resentment victor,
Victor over Europe's foes,
Late and long supreme director,
Grant in peace his reign may close.
Hail! then, hail! illustrious stranger!
Welcome to our mountain strand;
Mutual interests, hopes, and danger,
Link us with thy native land.
Foemen's force, or false beguiling,
Shall that union ne'er divide,
Hand in hand while peace is smiling,
And in battle side by side.¹

From the Antiquary.

1816.

(1.)—TIME.

"The window of a turret, which projected at an angle with the wall, and thus came to be very near Lovel's apartment, was half open, and from that quarter he heard again the same music which had probably broken short his dream. With its visionary character it had lost much of its charms—it was now nothing more than an air on the harpsichord, tolerably well performed—such is the caprice of imagination as affecting the fine arts. A female voice sung, with some taste and great simplicity, something between a song and a hymn, in words to the following effect:"

"Why sitt'st thou by that ruin'd hall,
Thou aged earl so stern and gray?
Dost thou its former pride recall,
Or ponder how it pass'd away?"

"Know'st thou not me?" the Deep Voice cried;
"So long enjoy'd, so oft misused—
Alternate, in thy fickle pride,
Desired, neglected, and accused!

"Before my breath, like blazing flax,
Man and his marvels pass away!
And changing empires wane and wax,
Are founded, flourish, and decay.

¹ Mr., afterwards Sir William Arbuthnot, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, who had the honor to entertain the grand- duke, now Emperor of Russia, was a personal friend of Sir Walter Scott; and these verses, with their heading, are now given from the newspapers of 1816.
When Donald came branking down the brae
Wi' twenty thousand men.

Their tartans they were waving wide,
Their glaives were glancing clear,
The pibrochs rung free side to side,
Would deafen ye to hear.

The great Earl in his stirrups stood,
That Highland host to see:
"Now here a knight that's stout and good
May prove a jeardie:

"What wouldst thou do, my squire so gay,
That rides beside my reyne,
Were ye Glenallan's Earl the day,
And I were Roland Cheyne?

"To turn the rein were sin and shame,
To fight were wondrous peril,—
What would ye do now, Roland Cheyne,
Were ye Glenallan's Earl?"—

"Were I Glenallan's Earl this tide,
And ye were Roland Cheyne,
The spear should be in my horse's side,
And the bridle upon his mane.

"If they hae twenty thousand blades,
And we twice ten times ten,
Yet they hae but their tartan plaid,
And we mall-clad men.

"My horse shall ride through ranks sae rude,
As through the moorland fern,—
Then ne'er let the gentle Norman blade
Grow cauld for Highland kerne."

He turn'd him right and round again,
Said, Scorn na at my mither;
Light loves I may get mony a aue,
But minnie ne'er anither.  Chap. xi.

MOTTOES IN THE ANTIQUARY.

"The" scraps of poetry which have been in most cases tacked to the beginning of chapters in these Novels are sometimes quoted either from reading or from memory, but, in the general case, are pure invention.
I found it too troublesome to turn to the collection of the British Poets to discover apposite mottoes, and, in the situation of the theatrical mechanist, who, when the white paper which represented his shower of snow was exhausted, continued the shower by snowing brown, I drew on my memory as long as I could, and when that failed, eke'd it out with invention. I believe that in some cases, where actual names are affixed to the supposed quotations, it would be to little purpose to seek them in the works of the authors referred to. In some cases, I have been entertained when Dr. Watts and other graver authors have been ransacked in vain for stanzas for which the novelist alone was responsible."—Introduction to Chronicles of the Canongate.

1.
I knew Anselmo. He was shrewd and prudent,
Wisdom and cunning had their shares of him;
But he was shrewish as a wayward child,
And pleased again by toys which childhood please;
As—book of fables graced with print of wood,
Or else the jingling of a rusty medal,
Or the rare melody of some old ditty,
That first was sung to please King Pepin's cradle.

(2)—Chap. ix.
"Be brave," she cried, "you yet may be our guest.
Our haunted room was ever held the best:
If, then, your valor can the fight sustain
Of rustling curtains, and the clinking chain;
If your courageous tongue have powers to talk,
When round your bed the horrid ghost shall walk;
If you dare ask it why it leaves its tomb,
I'll see your sheets well air'd, and show the room."
True Story.

(3)—Chap. xi.
Sometimes he thinks that Heaven this vision sent,
And order'd all the pageants as they went;
Sometimes that only 'twas wild Fancy's play,—
The loose and scatter'd relics of the day.

(4)—Chap. xii.
Beggar!—the only freemen of your Commonwealth;
Free above Scot-free, that observe no laws,
Obey no governor, use no religion
But what they draw from their own ancient customs,
Or constitute themselves, yet they are no rebels.
Brome.

(5)—Chap. xix.
Here has been such a stormy encounter,
Betwixt my cousin Captain and this soldier,
About I know not what!—nothing, indeed;
Competitions, degrees, and comparatives
Of soldiery—

A Faire Quarrel.

(6)—Chap. xx.
If you fail honor here,
Never presume to serve her any more;
Bid farewell to the integrity of arms,
And the honorable name of soldier
Fall from you, like a shiver'd wreath of laurel
By thunder struck from a desertless forehead.
A Faire Quarrel.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

(7.)—Chap. xxxi.

—The Lord Abbot had a soul
Subtile and quick, and searching as the fire:
By magic stairs he went as deep as hell,
And if in devils' possession gold be kept,
He brought some sure from thence—'tis hid in caves,

The Wonder of a Kingdome.

(8.)—Chap. xxvii.

Many great ones
Would part with half their states, to have the plan
And credit to beg in the first style.—

Beggar's Bush.

(9.)—Chap. xxx.

Who is he?—One that for the lack of land
Shall fight upon the water—he hath challenged
Formerly the grand whale; and by his titles
Of Leviathan, Behemoth, and so forth.
He tilted with a sword-fish—Marry, sir,
Th' aquatic had the best—the argument
Still galls our champion's breech.

Old Play.

(10.)—Chap. xxxi.

Tell me not of it, friend—when the young weep,
Their tears are lukewarm brine;—from our old eyes
Sorrow falls down like hail-drops of the North,
Chilling the furrows of our wither'd cheeks,
Cold as our hopes, and harden'd as our feeling—
Theirs, as they fall, sink sightless—ours recoil,
Heap the fair plain, and bleaken all before us.

Old Play.

(11.)—Chap. xxxiii.

Remorse—she ne'er forsakes us!—
A blood-hound stanch, she tracks our rapid step
Through the wild labyrinth of youthful frenzy,
Unheard, perchance, until old age hath tamed us;
Then in our lair, when Time hath chill'd our joints,
And main'd our hope of combat or of flight,
We hear her deep-mouth'd bay, announcing all
Of wrath and woe and punishment that bides us.

Old Play.

(12.)—Chap. xxxiv.

Still in his dead hand clenched'd remain the strings
That thrill his father's heart—e'en as the limb,
Lopp'd off and laid in grave, retain, they tell us,
Strange commerce with the mutilated stump,
Whose nerves are twining still in main'd existence.

Old Play.

(13.)—Chap. xxxv.

—Life, with you,
Glows in the brain and dances in the arteries;
'Tis like the wine some joyous guest hath quaff'd,
That glads the heart and elevates the fancy:

Mine is the poor residuum of the cup,
Vapid, and dull, and tasteless, only soil'd
With its base dregs the vessel that contains it.

Old Play.

(14.)—Chap. xxxvii.

Yes! I love Justice well—as well as you do—
But, since the good dame's blind, she shall excuse me,
If, time and reason fitting, I prove dumb;—
The breath I utter now shall be no means
To take away from me my breath in future.

Old Play.

(15.)—Chap. xxxviii.

Well, well, at worst, 'tis neither theft nor coinage,
Granting I knew all that you charge me with,
What thev the tomb hath borne a second birth,
And given the weight to one that knew not on't,
Yet fair exchange was never robbery,
Far less pure bounty—

Old Play.

(16.)—Chap. xli.

Life ebbs from such old age, unmark'd and silent,
As the slow neap-tide leaves you stranded galley.—
Late she rock'd merrily at the least impulse
That wind or wave could give; but now her keel
Is settling on the sand, her mast has 't'en
An angle with the sky, from which it shifts not.
Each wave receding shakes her less and less,
Till, bedded on the strand, she shall remain
Useless as motionless.

Old Play.

(17.)—Chap. xlii.

So, while the Goose, of whom the fable told,
Incumbent, brooded o'er her eggs of gold,
With hand outstretch'd, impatient to destroy,
Stole on her secret nest the cruel Boy,
Whose gripe rapacious changed her splendid dream,
For wings vain fluttering, and for dying scream.

The Loves of the Sea-Weeds.

(18.)—Chap. xliii.

Let those go see who will—I like it not—
For, say he was a slave to rank and pomp,
And all the nothings he is now divorced from
By the hard doom of stern necessity;
Yet is it sad to mark his alter'd brow,
Where Vanity adjusts her flimsy veil
O'er the deep wrinkles of repentant Anguish.

Old Play.

(19.)—Chap. xliv.

Fortune, you say, flies from us—She but circles,
Like the fleet sea-bird round the Fowler's skiff,—
Lost in the mist one moment, and the next
Brushing the white sail with her whiter wing,
As if to court the aim.—Experience watches,
And has her on the wheel.—

Old Play.
From the Black Dwarf.

1816.

MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. v.

The bleakest rock upon the loneliest heath
Feels, in its barrenness, some touch of spring;
And, in the April dew, or beam of May,
Its moss and lichen freshen and revive;
And thus the heart, most sear'd to human pleasure,
Melts at the tear, joys in the smile of woman.

Beaumont.

(2.)—CHAP. XVI.

'Twas time and griefs
That framed him thus: Time, with his fairer hand,
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him—Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Old Play.

From Old Mortality.

1816.

(1.)—MAJOR BELLENDEEN'S SONG.

And what though winter will pinch severe
Through locks of gray and a cloak that's old,
Here lyes ane saint to prelates surly,
Being John Balfour, sometime of Burley,
Who, stirred up to vengeance take,
For Solemn League and Cov'nant's sake,
Upon the Magnus-Moor, in Fifè,
Did tak' James Sharpe the apostate's life;
By Dutchman's hands was hacked and shot,
Then drowned in Clyde near this saam spot.

Chap. xliv.

MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. v.
Arouse thee, youth!—it is no common call,—
God's Church is leaguer'd—haste to man the wall;
Haste where the Red-Cross banners wave on high,
Signals of honor'd death or victory.

James Duff.

(2.)—CHAP. xiv.
My hounds may a' rin masterless,
My hawks may fly free tree to tree,
My lord may grip my vassal lands,
For there again maun I never be!

Old Ballad.

(3.)—CHAP. xxxiv.
Sound, sound the clarion, fill the file!
To all the sensual world proclaim,
One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name.

Anonymous.

The Search after Happiness; or,
The QUEST OF SULTAUN SOLIMAUN.

1817.

I.
Oh for a glance of that gay Muse's eye
That lighten'd on Bandello's laughing tale,
And twinkled with a lustre shrewd and sly,
When Giam Battista bade her vision hail!—

Yet fear not, ladies, the naifé detail
Given by the natives of that land canorus;
Italian license loves to leap the pale,
We Britons have the fear of shame before us,
And, if not wise in mirth, at least must be decorous.

II.
In the far eastern clime, no great while since,
Lived Sultaun Solimaun, a mighty prince,
Whose eyes, as oft as they perform'd their round,
Beheld all others fix'd upon the ground;
Whose ears received the same unvaried phrase,
"Sultaun! thy vassal hears, and he obeys!" All have their tastes—this may the fancy strike
Of such grave folks as pomp and grandeur like;
For me, I love the honest heart and warm
Of monarch who can amble round his farm,
Or, when the toil of state no more annoy,
In chimney corner seek domestic joys—
I love a prince will bid the bottle pass,
Exchanging with his subjects glance and glass;
In fitting time, can, gayest of the gay,
Keep up the jest, and mingle in the lay—
Such monarchs best our free-born humors suit,
But despots must be stately, stern, and mute.

III.
This Solimaun, Serendib had in sway—
And where's Serendib? may some critic say,—
Good lack, mine honest friend, consult the chart,
Scarce not my Pegasus before I start!
If Rennell has it not, you'll find, mayhap,
The isle laid down on Captain Sindbad's map,—
Famed mariner! whose merciless narrations
Drove every friend and kinsman out of patience,
Till, faint to find a guest who thought them shorter,
He deign'd to tell them over to a porter—
The last edition see, by Long and Co.,
Rees, Hurst, and Orme, our fathers in the Row.

IV.
Serendib found, deem not my tale a fiction—
This Sultaun, whether lacking contradiction—
(A sort of stimulant which hath its uses,
To raise the spirits and reform the juices,
—Soeign specific for all sorts of eures
In my wife's practice, and perhaps in yours),
The Sultaun lacking this same wholesome bitter,
Or cordial smooth for prince's palate fitter—
Or if some Mollah had Hag-rid his dreams
With Degial, Ginnistan, and such wild themes
Belonging to the Mollah's subtle craft,
I wot not—but the Sultaun never laugh'd,
Scarc'e ate or drank, and took a melancholy
That scorn'd all remedy—profane or holy;

1 First published in "The Sale Room," No. V., February 1, 1817.
2 The hint of the following tale is taken from La Camisola Magica, a novel of Giam Battista Casti.
3 See the Arabian Nights' Entertainments.
In his long list of melancholies, mad,
Or mazed, or dumb, hath Burton none so bad.1

V.
Physicians soon arrived, sage, ware, and tried,
As e'er scrawl'd jargon in a darken'd room;
With heedful glance the Sultaun's tongue they eyed,
Peep'd in his bath, and God knows where beside,
And then in solemn accent spoke their doom,
"His majesty is very far from well."
Then each to work with his specific fell:
The Hakim Ibrahim instanter brought
His unguent Mahazzim al Zerduggkaut,
While Roompot, a practitioner more wily,
Relied on his Munaskif al fillify.2
More and yet more in deep array appear,
And some the front assu, and some the rear;
Their remedies to reinforce and vary,
Came surgeon eke, and eke apothecary;
Till the tired Monarch, though of words grown weary,
Yet dropt, to recompense their fruitless labor,
Some hint about a bowstring or a sabre.
There lack'd, I promise you, no longer speeches
To rid the palace of those learned leeches.

VI.
Then was the Conneil call'd—by their advice
(They deem'd the matter ticklish all, and nice),
And sought to shift it off from their own shoulders,
Tartars and couriers in all speed were sent,
To call a sort of Eastern Parliament.
Of feudatory chieftains and freeholders—
Such have the Persians at this very day,
My gallant Malcolm calls them couroultai;—
I'm not prepared to show in this slight song
That to Serendib the same forms belong,—
E'en let the learn'd go search, and tell me if I'm wrong.

VII.
The Omrahs,4 each with hand on seimitar,
Gave, like Sempourius, still their voice for war—
"The sabre of the Sultaun in its sheath
Too long has slept, nor own'd the work of death;
Let the Tambourgi bid his signal rattle,
Bang the loud gong, and raise the shout of battle!
This dreary cloud that dims our sovereign's day
Shall from his kindled bosom wit away,
When the bold Lootie wheels his courser round,
And the arm'd elephant shall shake the ground.
Each noble pants to own the glorious summons—
And for the charges—Lo! your faithful Commons!"
The Riots who attended in their places
(Serendib language calls a farmer Riot)
Look'd ruefully in one another's faces,
From this oration auguring much disquiet,

Double assessment, forage, and free quarters;
And fearing these as Chinamen the Tartars,
Or as the whisker'd vermin fear the mousers,
Each fumbled in the pocket of his brovers.

VIII.
And next came forth the reverend Convocation,
Bald heads, white beards, and many a turban green,
Imaun and Mollah there of every station,
Santon, Fakir, and Calendar were seen.
Their votes were various—some advised a Mosque
With fitting revenues should be erected,
With seemly gardens and with gay Kiosque,
To recreate a band of priests selected;
Others opined that through the realms a dole
Be made to holy men, whose prayers might profit
The Sultaun's weal in body and in soul.
But their long-headed chief, the Sheik Ul-Soft, More closely touch'd the point:—"Thy studious mood."
Quoth he, "O Prince! hath thick'nnen all thy blood,
And dull'd thy brain with labor beyond measure;
Wherefore relax a space and take thy pleasure,
And toy with beauty, or tell o'er thy treasure; From all the cares of state, my Liege, enlarge thee, And leave the burden to thy faithful clergy."

IX.
These counsels sage availed not a whit,
And so the patient (as is not uncommon Where grave physicians lose their time and wit) Resolved to take advice of an old woman; His mother she, a dame who once was beauteous, And still was called so by each subject duteous. Now, whether Fatima was witch in earnest, Or only made believe, I cannot say— But she profiss'd to cure disease the sternest, By dint of magic amulet or lay; And, when all other skill in vain was shown, She deem'd it fitting time to use her own.

X.
"Sympathia magica hath wonders done" (Thus did old Fatima bespeak her son), "It works upon the fibres and the pores, And thus, insensibly, our health restores, And it must help us here. —Thou must endure The ill, my son, or travel for the cure. Search land and sea, and get, where'er you can, The inmost vesture of a happy man, I mean his shirt, my son; which, taken warm And fresh from off his back, shall chase your harm, Bid every current of your veins rejoice, And your dull heart leap light as shepherd-boy's." Such was the counsel from his mother came;— I know not if she had some under-game,

1 See Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.
2 For these hard words see D'Herbelot, or the learned editor of the Recettes of Avicenna.
3 See Sir John Malcolm's admirable History of Persia.
4 Nobility.
As doctors have, who bid their patients roam
And live abroad, when sure to die at home;
Or if she thought that, somehow or another,
Queen-Regent sounded better than Queen-Mother;
But, says the Chronicle (who will go look it)
That such was her advice—the Sultaun took it.

XI.
All are on board—the Sultaun and his train,
In gilded galley prompt to plough the main.
The old Rais 1 was the first who questioned,
"Whither?"
They paused—"Arabia," thought the pensive Prince,
"Was call'd The Happy many ages since—
For Mokha, Rais."—And they came safely thither.
But not in Araby, with all her balm,
Not where Judea weeps beneath her palm,
Not in rich Egypt, not in Nubian waste,
Could there the step of happiness be traced.
One Copt alone profess'd to have seen her smile,
When Bruce his gobot fill'd at infant Nile:
She bless'd the dauntless traveller as he quaff'd,
But vanish'd from him with the ended draught.

XII.
"Enough of turbans," said the weary King,
"These dolimans of ours are not the thing;
Try we the Giaours, these men of coat and cap, I
Incline to think some of them must be happy;
At least, they have as fair a cause as any can,
They drink good wine and keep no Ramazan.
Then northward, ho!"—The vessel cuts the sea,
And fair Italia lies upon her lee.—
But fair Italia, she who once unfurl'd
Her eagle banners o'er a conquer'd world,
Long from her throne of domination tumbled,
Lay, by her quondam vassals, sorely humbled;
The Pope himself look'd pensive, pale, and lean,
And was not half the man he once had been.
"While these the priest and those the noble fleece,
Our poor old boot," they said, "is torn to pieces.
Its tops the vengeful claws of Austria feel,
And the Great Devil is rending toe and heel."
If happiness you seek, to tell you truly,
We think she dwells with one Giovanni Bulli;
A tramontane, a heretic,—the buck,
Poffaredio! still has all the luck;
By land or ocean never strikes his flag—
And then—a perfect walking money-bag."
Off set our Prince to seek John Bull's abode,
But first took France—it lay upon the road.

XIII.
Monsieur Baboon, after much late commotion,
Was agitated like a settling ocean,
Quite out of sorts, and could not tell what ail'd him,
Only the glory of his house had fail'd him;
Besides, some tumors on his noddle biding
Gave indication of a recent hiding. 2
Our Prince, though Sultauns of such things are heedless,
Thought it a thing indelicate and needless
To ask if at that moment he was happy.
And Monsieur, seeing that he was comme il faut, a Loud voice mustered up, for "Vive le Roi!"
Then whisper'd, "Ave you any news of Nappy?"
The Sultaun answer'd him with a cross question,—
"Pray, can you tell me aught of one John Bull,
That dwells somewhere beyond your herring-pool?"
The query seem'd of difficult digestion,
The party shrugg'd, and grin'd, and took his snuff,
And found his whole good breeding scarce enough.

XIV.
Twitching his visage into as many puckers
As damsels wont to put into their tuckers
(Ere liberal Fashon damn'd both lace and lawn,
And bade the veil of modesty be drawn),
Replied the Frenchman, after a brief pause,
"Jean Fool! I was not know him—Yes, I vas—
I vas remember dat, von year or two,
I saw him at von place call'd Waterloo—
Ma foi! il s'est tres joliment battu,
Dat is for Englishman,—m'entendez-vous?
But den he had wit him one damn son-gun,
Rogue I no like—dey call him Wellington."
Monsieur's politeness could not hide his fret,
So Solimaun took leave, and cross'd the Strait.

XV.
John Bull was in his very worst of moods,
Raving of sterile farms and unsold goods;
His sugar-loaves and bales about he threw,
And on his counter beat the devil's tattoo.
His wars were ended, and the victory won,
But then, 'twas reckoning-day with honest John;
And authors vouch, 'twas still this Worthy's way
"Never to grumble till he came to pay;
And then he always thinks, his temper's such,
The work too little, and the pay too much." 3
Yet, grumbler as he is, so kind and hearty,
That when his mortal foe was on the floor,
And past the power to harm his quiet more,
Poor John had wealigh weft for Bonaparte!
Such was the wight whom Solimaun salam'd,—
"And who are you," John answer'd, "and be d—d?"

XVI.
"A stranger, come to see the happiest man,—
So, signior, all avouch,—in Frangistan."— 4

1 Master of the vessel.
2 The well-known resemblance of Italy in the map.
3 Florence, Venice, &c.
4 The Calabrias, infected by bands of assassins. One of the leaders was called Fra Diavolo, i.e., Brother Devil.
5 Or drubbing; so called in the Slang Dictionary.
6 See the True-Born Englishman, by Daniel De Foe.
7 Europe.
"Happy? my tenants breaking on my hand;
Unstock'd my pastures, and until'd my land;
Sugar and rum a drug, and mice and moths
The sole consumers of my good broadcloths—
Happy?—Why, cursed war and taxing tax
Have left us scarcely raiment to our backs."—
"In that ease, signior, I may take my leave;
I come to ask a favor—but I grieve"—
"Favor?" said John, and eyed the Sultaun hard,
"It's my belief you come to break the yard!—
But, stay, you look like some poor foreign sinner,—
Take that to buy yourself a shirt and dinner."—
With that he chuck'd a guinea at his head;
But, with due dignity, the Sultaun said,
"Permit me, sir, your bounty to decline;
A shirt indeed I seek, but none of thine.
Signior, I kiss your hands, so fare you well."—
"Kiss and be d—d," quoth John, "and go to hell!"

XVII.
Next door to John there dwelt his sister Peg,
Once a wild lass as ever shook a leg;
When the blithe bagpipe blew—but, soberer now,
She douceely span her flax and milk'd her cow.
And whereas erst she was a needy slattern,
Nor now of wealth or cleanliness a pattern,
Yet once a month her house was partly swept,
And once a week a plenteous board she kept.
And whereas, eke, the vixen used her claws
And teeth, of yore, on slender provocation,
She now has grown amenable to laws,
A quiet soul as any in the nation;
The sole remembrance of her warlike joys
Was in old songs she sang to please her boys.
John Bull, whom, in their years of early strife,
She wont to lead a cat-and-doggish life,
Now found the woman, as he said, a neighbor,
Who look'd to the main chance, declined no labor,
Loved a long grace, and spoke a northern jargon,
And was d—d close in making of a bargain.

XVIII.
The Sultaun enter'd, and he made his leg,
And with decorum curtesy'd sister Peg;
(She loved a book, and knew a thing or two,
And guess'd at once with whom she had to do.)
She bade him "Sit into the fire," and took Her dram, her cake, her keebuck from the nook;
Ask'd him "about the news from Eastern parts;
And of her absent bairns, puri Highland hearts!" If peace brought down the price of tea and pepper,
And if the nitmugs were grown any cheaper;—
Were there nae speerings of our Mungo Park—
Ye'll be the gentleman that wants the sark?
If ye wad buy a web o' anld wife's spinnin',
I'll warrant ye it's a weil-wearing linen."

XIX.
Then up got Peg, and round the house 'gan scuttle
In search of gooss her customer to nail,
Until the Sultaun strain'd his princely throttle,
And hollo'd, "Ma'am, that is not what I aill.
Pray, are you happy, ma'am, in this snug glen?"
"Happy?" said Peg; "what for d'ye want to ken?
Besides, just think upon this by-gane year,
Grain wadna pay the yoking of the plough."—
"What say you to the present?"—"Meal's sae dear,
To mak' their brose my bairns have scarce aneugh."—
"The devil take the shirt!" said Solimaun,
"I think my quest will end as it began.—
Farewell, ma'am; nay, no ceremony, I beg"—
"Ye'll no be for the linen then?" said Peg.

XX.
Now for the land of verdant Erin,
The Sultaun's royal bark is steering,
The Emerald Isle, where honest Paddy dwells,
The cousin of John Bull, as story tells.
For a long space had John, with words of thunder,
Hard looks, and harder knocks, kept Paddy under,
Till the poor lad, like boy that's flogg'd unduly,
Had gotten somewhat restive and unruly.
Hard was his lot and lodging, you'll allow,
A wigwam that would hardly serve a sow;
His landlord, and of middle-men two brace,
Had screw'd his rent up to the starving-place;
His garment was a top-coat, and an old one,
His meal was a potato, and a cold one;
But still for fun or frolic, and all that,
In the round world was not the match of Pat.

XXI.
The Sultaun saw him on a holiday,
Which is with Paddy still a jolly day:
When mass is ended, and his loud of sins
Confess'd, and Mother Church hath from her binns
Dealt forth a bonus of imputed merit,
Then is Pat's time for fancy, whim, and spirit!
To jest, to sing, to caper fair and free,
And dance as light as leaf upon the tree.
"By Mahomet," said Sultaun Solimaun,
"That ragged fellow is our very man!
Rush in and seize him—do not do him hurt,
But, will he nill he, let me have his shirt."—

XXII.
Shilela their plan was wellnigh after balking
(Much less provocation will set it a-walking),
But the odds that foil'd Hercules foil'd Paddy Whack;
They seized, and they floor'd, and they stripp'd him—
Alack!
Up-bubboo! Paddy had not—a shirt to his back!!!
And the King, disappointed, with sorrow and shame,
Went back to Serendib as sad as he came.
Mr. Kemble's Farewell Address,¹

ON TAKING LEAVE OF THE EDINBURGH STAGE.

1817.

As the worn war-horse, at the trumpet's sound,
Erects his mane, and neighs, and paws the ground,
Disdains the ease his generous lord assigns,
And longs to rush on the embattled lines,—
So I, your plaudits ringing on mine ear,
Can scarce sustain to think our parting near;
To think my scenic hour for ever past,
And that these valued plaudits are my last.

Why should we part, while still some powers remain,
That in your service strive not yet in vain?
Cannot high zeal the strength of youth supply,
And sense of duty fire the fading eye;
And all the wrongs of age remain subdued
Beneath the burning glow of gratitude?
Ah, not the taper, wearing to its close,
Oft for a space in fitful lustre glows;
But all too soon the transient gleam is past,
It cannot be renew'd, and will not last;
Even duty, zeal, and gratitude, can wage
But short-lived conflict with the frosts of age.
Yes! It were poor, remembering what I was,
To live a pensioner on your applause,
To drain the dregs of your endurance dry,
And take, as alms, the praise I once could buy;
Till every sneering youth around inquires,
"Is this the man who once could please our sires?"
And scorn assumes compassion's doubtful mien,
To warn me off from the encumber'd scene.
This must not be:—and higher duties crave
Some space between the theatre and the grave,
That, like the Roman in the Capitol,
I may adjust my mantle ere I fall:
My life's brief act in public service flown,
The last, the closing scene, must be my own.

1 These lines first appeared April 5, 1817, in a weekly sheet called "The Sale Room," conducted and published by Messrs. Ballantyne & Co., at Edinburgh. In a note prefixed, Mr. James Ballantyne says:—"The character fixed upon, with happy propriety, for Kemble's closing scene, was Macbeth, in which he took his final leave of Scotland on the evening of Saturday, the 29th March, 1817. He had labored under a severe cold for a few days before, but on this memorable night the physical annoyance yielded to the energy of his mind. He was," he said in the green-room, immediately before the curtain rose, "determined to leave behind him the most perfect specimen of his art which he had ever shown; and his success was complete. At the moment of the tyrant's death the curtain fell by the universal acclamation of the audience. The applauses were vehement and prolonged; they ceased—were resumed—rose again—were reiterated—and again were hushed. In a few minutes the curtain ascended, and Mr. Kemble came forward in the dress of Macbeth (the audience by a consentaneous movement rising to receive him), to deliver his farewell." . . . "Mr. Kemble delivered these lines with exquisite beauty, and with an effect that was evidenced by the tears and sobs of many of the audience. His own emotions were very compeuous. When his farewell was closed he lingered long on the stage, as if unable to retire. The house again stood up, and cheered him with the waving of hats and long shouts of applause. At length he finally retired, and, in so far as regards Scotland, the curtain dropped upon his professional life for ever."

² These lines were first printed in "The Forget-Me-Not" for 1834. They were written for recitation by the distinguished actress, Miss Smith, now Mrs. Bartley, on the night of her benefit at the Edinburgh Theatre, in 1817, but reached her too late for her purpose. In a letter which enclosed them the poet intimated that they were written on the evening of the day on which they were sent—that he thought the idea better than the execution, and forwarded them with the hope of their adding perhaps "a little salt to the bill."

Here, then, adieu! while yet some well-graced parts
May fix an ancient favorite in your hearts,
Not quite to be forgotten, even when
You look on better actors, younger men:
And if your bosoms own this kindly debt
Of old remembrance, how shall mine forget—
Oh, how forget!—how oft I hither came
In anxious hope, how oft return'd with fame!
How oft around your circle this weak hand
Has waved immortal Shakspeare's magic wand,
Till the full burst of inspiration came,
And I have felt, and you have fann'd, the flame!
By mem'ry treasured, while her reign endures,
Those hours must live—and all their charms are yours.

O favor'd land! renown'd for arts and arms,
For manly talent, and for female charms,
Could this full bosom prompt the sinking line,
What fervent benedictions now were thine!
But my last part is play'd, my knell is rung,
When e'en your praise falls faltering from my tongue;
And all that you can hear, or I can tell,
Is—Friends and Patrons, hail, and FARE YOU WELL.

Lines,³

WRITTEN FOR MISS SMITH.

1817.

When the lone pilgrim views afar
The shrine that is his guiding star,
With awe his footsteps print the road
Which the loved saint of yore has trode.
As near he draws, and yet more near,
His dim eye sparkles with a tear;
The Gothic fame's unwonted show,
The choral hymn, the tapers' glow,
Oppress his soul while they delight,
And chasen rapture with afflict.

¹ These lines first appeared April 5, 1817, in a weekly sheet called "The Sale Room," conducted and published by Messrs. Ballantyne & Co., at Edinburgh. In a note prefixed, Mr. James Ballantyne says:—"The character fixed upon, with happy propriety, for Kemble's closing scene, was Macbeth, in which he took his final leave of Scotland on the evening of Saturday, the 29th March, 1817. He had labored under a severe cold for a few days before, but on this memorable night the physical annoyance yielded to the energy of his mind. 'He was,' he said in the green-room, immediately before the curtain rose, 'determined to leave behind him the most perfect specimen of his art which he had ever shown; and his success was complete. At the moment of the tyrant's death the curtain fell by the universal acclamation of the audience. The applauses were vehement and prolonged; they ceased—were resumed—rose again—were reiterated—and again were hushed. In a few minutes the curtain ascended, and Mr. Kemble came forward in the dress of Macbeth (the audience by a consentaneous movement rising to receive him), to deliver his farewell." . . . "Mr. Kemble delivered these lines with exquisite beauty, and with an effect that was evidenced by the tears and sobs of many of the audience. His own emotions were very compeuous. When his farewell was closed he lingered long on the stage, as if unable to retire. The house again stood up, and cheered him with the waving of hats and long shouts of applause. At length he finally retired, and, in so far as regards Scotland, the curtain dropped upon his professional life for ever."

² These lines were first printed in "The Forget-Me-Not" for 1834. They were written for recitation by the distinguished actress, Miss Smith, now Mrs. Bartley, on the night of her benefit at the Edinburgh Theatre, in 1817, but reached her too late for her purpose. In a letter which enclosed them the poet intimated that they were written on the evening of the day on which they were sent—that he thought the idea better than the execution, and forwarded them with the hope of their adding perhaps "a little salt to the bill."
No longer dare he think his toil
Can merit aught his patron’s smile;
Too light appears the distant way,
The chilly eve, the sultry day—
All these endured no favor claim,
But murmuring forth the sainted name,
He lays his little offering down,
And only deprecates a frown.

We too, who ply the Thespian art,
Oft feel such bodings of the heart,
And, when our utmost powers are strain’d,
Dare hardly hope your favor gain’d.
She, who from sister elines has sought
The ancient land where Wallace fought;—
Land long renown’d for arms and arts,
And conquering eyes and dauntless hearts;—
She, as the flutterings here arow,
Feels all the pilgrim’s terrors now;
Yet sure on Caledonian plain
The stranger never sued in vain.
’Tis yours the hospitable task
To give the applause she dare not ask;
And they who bid the pilgrim speed,
The pilgrim’s blessing be their meed.

The westland wind is hush and still,
The lake lies sleeping at my feet.
Yet not the landscape to mine eye
Bears those bright hues that once it bore;
Though evening, with her richest dye,
Flames o’er the hills of Ettrick’s shore.

With listless look along the plain,
I see Tweed’s silver current glide,
And coldly mark the holy fane
Of Melrose rise in ruin’d pride.
The quiet lake, the balmy air,
The hill, the stream, the tower, the tree,—
Are they still such as once they were?
Or is the dreary change in me?

Alas, the warp’d and broken board,
How can it bear the painter’s dye!
The harp of strain’d and tuneless chord,
How to the minstrel’s skill reply!
To aching eyes each landscape lowers,
To feverish pulse each gale blows chill;
And Araby’s or Eden’s bowers
Were barren as his moorland hill.

The Sun upon the Weirdlaw Hill.

1817.

[“Scott’s enjoyment of his new territories was,
however, interrupted by various returns of his cramp,
and the depression of spirit which always attended, in his case, the use of opium, the only medicine that seemed to have power over the disease. It was while struggling with such languor, on one lovely evening of this autumn, that he composed the following beautiful verses. They mark the very spot of their birth, —namely, the then naked height overlooking the northern side of the Caithness Loch, from which Melrose Abbey to the eastward, and the hills of Ettrick and Yarrow to the west, are now visible over a wide range of rich woodland,—all the work of the poet’s

Air—‘Rimhin alunr ‘stu mo run’.

The air composed by the editor of Albion’s Anthology;* the words written for Mr. George Thomson’s Scottish Melodies.
1822.

The sun upon the Weirdlaw Hill,
In Ettrick’s vale, is sinking sweet;

The Monks of Bangor’s March.

Air—Ynwa’th Mensa.

WRITTEN FOR MR. GEORGE THOMSON’S WELSH MELODIES.

1817.

Ethelfrid or Olfrid, King of Northumberland, having besieged Chester in 613, and Brocmael, a British prince, advancing to relieve it, the religious of the neighboring Monastery of Bangor marched in procession, to pray for the success of their countrymen.
But the British being totally defeated, the heathen victor put the monks to the sword, and destroyed their monastery. The tune to which these verses are adapted is called the Monks’ March, and is supposed to have been played at their ill-omened procession.

When the heathen trumpet’s clang
Round beleaguer’d Chester rang,
Veiled nun and friar gray
March’d from Bangor’s fair Abbaye;
High their holy anthem sounds,
Costria’s vale the hymn rebounds,
Floating down the sylvan Dee,
O miserer, Domine!

* “Nathaniel Gow told me that he got the air from an old gentleman, a Mr. Dalrymple of Orangefield (he thinks), who had it from a friend in the Western Isles, as an old Highland air.”—George Thomson.

1 “O favor’d land! renown’d for arts and arms,
For manly talent, and for female charms.”
Lines written for Mr. J. Kemble.
From Rob Roy.

1817.

(1)—TO THE MEMORY OF EDWARD THE BLACK PRINCE.

"A blotted piece of paper dropped out of the book, and, being taken up by my father, he interrupted a hint from Owen, on the propriety of securing loose memoranda with a little paste, by exclaiming, 'To the memory of Edward the Black Prince—What's all this?—verses!—By heaven, Frank, you are a greater blockhead than I supposed you!'"

Oh, for the voice of that wild horn,
On Fontarabian echoes borne,
The dying hero's call,
That told imperial Charlemagne
How Paynim sons of swarthy Spain
Had wrought his champion's fall.

"I Fontarabian echoes!" continued my father, interrupting himself; 'the Fontarabian Fair would have been more to the purpose.—Paynim?—What's Paynim?—Could you not say Pagan as well, and write English, at least, if you must needs write nonsense?"—

Sad over earth and ocean sounding,
And England's distant cliffs astounding,
Such are the notes should say
How Britain's hope, and France's fear,
Victor of Cressy and Poitier,
In Bourdeaux dying lay.

"Poitiers, by the way, is always spelled with an s, and I know no reason why orthography should give place to rhyme."

"Raise my faint head, my squires," he said,
"And let the casement be displayed,
That I may see once more
The splendor of the setting sun
Gleam on thy mirror'd wave, Garonne,
And Blaye's emurpled shore."

"Garonne and sun is a bad rhyme. Why, Frank, you do not even understand the beggarly trade you have chosen."

---

Letter

TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH, DRUMLAURIG CASTLE,
Sanquhar, 2 o'clock, July 30, 1817.

FROM Ross, where the clouds on Benlomond are sleeping—
From Greenock, where Clyde to the Ocean is sweeping—
From Largs, where the Scotch gave the Northmen a drilling—
From Ardrossan, whose harbor cost many a shilling—
From old Cumnock, where beds are as hard as a plank, sir—
From a chop and green pease, and a chicken in Sanquhar,
This eve, please the Fates, at Drumlaurig we anchor.
W. S.

1 William of Malmesbury says that in his time the extent of the ruins of the monastery bore ample witness to the desolation occasioned by the massacre:—"tot seminruti parietes ecclesiarum, tot anfractus porticium, tanta turba ruderum quantum vix alibi cernas."
"Like me, he sinks to Glory's sleep,
His fall the dews of evening steep,
As if in sorrow shed.
So soft shall fall the trickling tear,
When England's maids and matrons hear
Of their Black Edward dead.

"And though my sun of glory set,
Nor France nor England shall forget
The terror of my name;
And oft shall Britain's heroes rise,
New planets in these southern skies,
Through clouds of blood and flame."

"A cloud of flame is something new—Good-morrow, my masters all, and a merry Christmas to you!—Why, the bellman writes better lines." Chap. ii.

(2.)—TRANSLATION FROM ARIOSTO.

1817.

"MISS VERNON proceeded to read the first stanza, which was nearly to the following purpose:"—

Ladies, and knights, and arms, and love's fair flame,
Deeds of emprise and courtesy, I sing,
What time the Moors from sultry Africk came,
Led on by Agramant, their youthful king—
He whom revenge and hasty ire did bring
O'er the broad wave, in France to waste and war;
Such ills from old Trojano's death did spring,
Which to avenge he came from realms afar,
And menaced Christian Charles, the Roman emperor.

Of dauntless Roland, too, my strain shall sound,
In import never known in prose or rhyme,
How he, the chief of judgment deem'd profound,
For luckless love was crazed upon a time—

"'There is a great deal of it,' said she, glancing along the paper, and interrupting the sweetest sounds which mortal ears can drink in; those of a youthful poet's verses, namely, read by the lips which are dearest to them.'" Chap. xvi.

(3.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. X.
In the wide pile, by others heeded not,
Hers was one sacred solitary spot,
Whose gloomy aisles and bending shelves contain,
For moral hunger food, and cures for moral pain.

Anonymous.

"The library at Osbaldistone Hall was a gloomy room," &c.

(2.)—CHAP. XIII.
Dire was his thought, who first in poison steep'd
The weapon form'd for slaughter—direr his,
And worthier of damnation, who instill'd
The mortal venom in the social cup,
To fill the veins with death instead of life.

Anonymous.

(3.)—CHAP. XXII.
Look round thee, young Astolpho: Here's the place
Which men (for being poor) are sent to starve in,— Rude remedy, I trow, for sord disease.
Within these walls, stilled by damp and stench,
Doth Hope's fair torch expire; and at the snuff,
Ere yet 'tis quite extinct, rude, wild, and wayward,
The desperate reveries of wild despair,
Kindling their hell-born cresses, light to deeds
That the poor captive would have died ere practic'd,
Till bondage sunk his soul to his condition.

The Prison, scene iii. act i.

(4.)—CHAP. XXVII.
Far as the eye could reach no tree was seen,
Earth, clad in russet, scorn'd the lively green;
No birds, except as birds of passage, flew;
No bee was heard to hum, no dove to coo;
No streams, as amber smooth, as amber clear,
Were seen to glide, or heard to warble here.

Prophecy of Famine.

(5.)—CHAP. XXXI.
"Woe to the vanquish'ld!" was stern Brenno's word,
When sunk proud Rome beneath the Gallic sword—
"Woe to the vanquish'ld!" when his massive blade
Bore down the scale against her ransom weigh'd,
And on the field of foughten battle still,
Who knows no limit save the victor's will.

The Cauclad.

(6.)—CHAP. XXXII.
And be he safe restored ere evening set,
Or, if there's vengeance in an injured heart,
And power to wreak it in an arm'd hand,
Your land shall ache for't.

Old Play.

(7.)—CHAP. XXXVI.
Farewell to the land where the clouds love to rest,
Like the shroud of the dead on the mountain's cold breast;
To the cataract's roar where the eagles reply,
And the lake her lone bosom expands to the sky.
Epilogue to the Appeal.¹

SPKEN BY MRS. HENRY SIDDONS,
FEB. 16, 1818.

A CAT of yore (or else old Æsop lied)
Was changed into a fair and blooming bride,
But spied a mouse upon her marriage-day,
Forgot her spouse, and seized upon her prey;
Even thus my bridegroom lawyer, as you saw,
Threw off poor me, and pounced upon papa.
His neck from Hymen’s mystic knot made loose,
He twisted round my sire’s the literal noose.
Such are the fruits of our dramatic labor
Since the New Jail became our next-door neighbor.²

Yes, times are changed; for, in your fathers’ age,
The lawyers were the patrons of the stage;
However high advanced by future fate,
There stands the bench (points to the Pit) that first received their weight.
The future legal sage ‘twas ours to see
Doom though unwigged, and plead without a fee.

But now, astounding each poor mimic elf,
Instead of lawyers comes the law herself;
Tremendous neighbor, on our right she dwells,
Builds high her towers and excavates her cells;
While on the left she agitates the town
With the tempestuous question, Up or down?³
’Twixt Scylla and Charybdis thus stand we,
Law’s final end, and law’s uncertainty.
But, soft! who lives at Rome the Pope must flatter,
And jails and lawsuits are no jesting matter.
Then—just farewell! We wait with serious awe
Till your applause or censure gives the law,
Trusting our humble efforts may assure ye,
We hold you Court and Counsel, Judge and Jury.

Mackrimmon’s Lament.⁴

—

1818.

AIR—“Cha til mi tuille.”⁵

MACKRIMMON, hereditary piper to the Laird of Mackleod, is said to have composed this lament when the clan was about to start upon a distant and dangerous expedition. The minstrel was impressed with a belief, which the event verified, that he was to be slain in the approaching feud; and hence the Gaelic words, “Cha til mi tuille; ged thilis Macleod, cha till Mackrimmon”—“I shall never return, although Macleod returns, yet Mackrimmon shall never return!” The piece is but too well known, from its being the strain with which the emigrants from the West Highlands and Isles usually take leave of their native shore.

Macleod’s wizard flag from the gray castle sallies,
The rows are seated, unmoor’d are the galleys;
Gleam war-axe and broadsword, clang target and quiver,
As Mackrimmon sings, “Farewell to Dunvegan for ever!
Farewell to each cliff, on which breakers are foaming;
Farewell, each dark glen, in which red-deer are roaming;
Farewell, lonely Skye, to lake, mountain, and river;
Macleod may return, but Mackrimmon shall never!

“Farewell the bright clouds that on Quillan are sleeping;
Farewell the bright eyes in the Dun that are weeping;
To each minstrel delusion farewell!—and for ever—
Mackrimmon departs, to return to you never!
The Banshee’s wild voice sings the death-dirge before me;⁶
The pall of the dead for a mantle hangs o’er me;
But my heart shall not flag, and my nerves shall not shiver,
Though devoted I go—to return again never!

“Too oft shall the notes of Mackrimmon’s bewailing
Be heard when the Gael on their exile are sailing;
Dear land! to the shores, whence unwilling we sever,
Return—return—return shall we never!
Cha till, cha till, cha till sin tuille,
Cha till, cha till, cha till sin tuille,
Cha till, cha till, cha till sin tuille,
Gia thilis Macleod, cha till Mackrimmon!”

by a lawsuit betwixt the magistrates and many of the inhabitants of the city concerning a range of new buildings on the western side of the North Bridge, which the latter insisted should be removed as a deformity.

¹ The Appeal, a tragedy, by John Galt, the celebrated author of the Annals of the Parish, and other novels, was played for four nights at this time in Edinburgh.
² It is necessary to mention that the allusions in this piece are all local, and addressed only to the Edinburgh audience. The new prisons of the city, on the Calton Hill, are not far from the theatre.
³ At this time the public of Edinburgh was much agitated

⁴ Written for Albyn’s Anthology.
⁵ “We return no more.”
Donald Caird's Come Again.

AIR—"Malcolm Caird's come again."

1818.

CHORUS.
Donald Caird's come again!
Donald Caird's come again!
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

Donald Caird can lift and sing,
Blithely dance the Hieland fling,
Drink till the gudeman be blind,
Fleece till the gudewife be kind;
Hoop a leglin, clout a pan,
Or crack a pow wi' ony man;
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

Donald Caird's come again!
Donald Caird's come again!
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

Donald Caird can wire a maunkin,
Kens the wiles o' dun-deer staukin',
Leisters kipper, makes a shift
To shoot a muir-fowl in the drift;
Water-bailiffs, rangers, keepers,
He can wauk when they are sleepers;
Not for bounith or reward
Dare ye mell wi' Donald Caird.

Donald Caird's come again!
Donald Caird's come again!
Gur the bagpipes hum amain,
Donald Caird's come again.

Donald Caird can drink a gill
Fast as hostler-wife can fill;
Ilka ane that sells gude liquor
Kens how Donald bends a bicker;
When he's fou he's stout and saucy,
Keeps the cantle o' the cawsey;
Hieland chief and Lawland laird
Maun gie room to Donald Caird!

Donald Caird's come again!
Donald Caird's come again!
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

Steek the amrie, lock the kist,
Else some gear may weel be mis'it;
Donald Caird finds orra things
Where Allan Gregor fond the tings;
Dunts of kebuck, taits o' woe,
Whiles a hen and whiles a sow,
Webs or duds frae hedge or yard—
'Ware the wuddle, Donald Caird!

Donald Caird's come again!
Donald Caird's come again!
Dinna let the Shirra ken
Donald Caird's come again.

On Donald Caird the doom was stern,
Crag to tether, legs to airn;
But Donald Caird, wi' mickle study,
Caught the gift to cheat the wuddled;
Rings of airn, and bolts of steel,
Fell like ice frae hand and heel!
Watch the sheep in fauld and glen,
Donald Caird's come again!

Donald Caird's come again!
Donald Caird's come again!
Dinna let the Justice ken
Donald Caird's come again.3

From the Heart of Mid-Lothian.

1818.

(1.)—MADGE WILDFIRES SONGS.

When the gledd's in the blue cloud,
The lavrock lies still;
When the hound's in the Greenwood,
The hind keeps the hill.

Oh sleep ye sound, Sir James, she said,
When ye suld rise and ride?
There's twenty men, wi' bow and blade,
Are seeking where ye hide.

Hey for cavaliers, ho for cavaliers,
Dubb a dub, dub a dub;
Have at old Beelzebub,— Oliver's running for fear.—

amused with a sly allusion to his twofold character of Sher-iff of Selkirkshire and author-suspect of "Rob Roy," in the chorus,—

"Think ye, does the Shirra ken Rob M'Gregor's come again?"
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES. 671

I glance like the wildfire through country and town;
I'm seen on the causeway—I'm seen on the down;
The lightening that flashes so bright and so free
Is scarcely so blithe or so bonny as me.

What did ye wi' the bridal ring—bridal ring—bridal ring?
What did ye wi' your wedding ring, ye little cutty queue, O?
I gied it till a sodger, a sodger, a sodger,
I gied it till a sodger, an auld true love o' mine, O.

Good even, good fair moon, good even to thee;
I prithee, dear moon, now show to me
The form and the features, the speech and degree,
Of the man that true lover of mine shall be.

It is the bonny butcher lad,
That wears the sleeves of blue,
He sells the flesh on Saturday,
On Friday that he slew.

There's a blood-hound ranging Tinwald Wood,
There's harness glancing sheen;
There's a maiden sits on Tinwald brae,
And she sings loud between.

Up in the air,
On my bonny gray mare,
And I see, and I see, and I see her yet.

In the bonny cells of Bedlam,
Ere I was aye and twenty,
I had hempen bracelets strong,
And merry whips, ding-dong,
And prayer and fasting plenty.

My banes are buried in yon kirk-yard
Sac far ayont the sea,
And it is but my blithesome ghaist
That's speaking now to thee.

I'm Madge of the country, I'm Madge of the town,
And I'm Madge of the lad I am blithest to own—
The Lady of Beever in diamonds may shine,
But has not a heart half so lightsome as mine.

I am Queen of the Wake, and I am Lady of May,
And I lead the blithe ring round the May-pole to-day;
The wildfire that flashes so fair and so free
Was never so bright or so bonny as me.

He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is low no pride;
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide.

Fullness to such a burthen is
That go on pilgrimage;

Here little, and hereafter bliss,
Is best from age to age.

"As Jeanie entered, she heard the first air, and then a part of the chorus and words, of what had been, perhaps, the song of a jolly harvest-home:"

Our work is over—over now,
The gudeman wipes his weary brow,
The last long wain wends slow away,
And we are free to sport and play.

The night comes on when sets the sun,
And labor ends when day is done.
When autumn's gone, and winter's come,
We hold our jovial harvest-home.

"The attendant on the hospital arranged her in her bed as she desired, with her face to the wall, and her back to the light. So soon as she was quiet in this new position, she began again to sing in the same low and modulated strains, as if she was recovering the state of abstraction which the interruption of her visitants had disturbed. The strain, however, was dif-
f erent, and rather resembled the music of the Methodist hymns, though the measure of the song was similar to that of the former:"

When the fight of grace is fought,—
When the marriage vest is wrought,—
When Faith has chased cold Doubt away,
And Hope but sickens at delay,—
When Charity, imprison'd here,
Longs for a more expanded sphere,—
Doff thy robes of sin and clay;
Christian, rise, and come away.

"Her next seemed to be the fragment of some old ballad:"

Cauld is my bed, Lord Archibald,
And sad my sleep of sorrow:
But thine sall be as sad and cauld,
My fause true-love! to-morrow.

And weep ye not, my maidens free,
Though death your mistress borrow;
For he for whom I die to-day,
Shall die for me to-morrow.

"Again she changed the tune to one wilder, less monotonous, and less regular. But of the words only a fragment or two could be collected by those who listened to this singular scene:"

Proud Maisie is in the wood,
Walking so early;
Sweet Robin sits on the bush,
Singing so rarely.
"Tell me, thou bonny bird,
When shall I marry me?"—
"When six braw gentlemen
Kirkward shall carry ye."

"Who makes the bridal bed, Birdie, say truly?"—
"The gray-headed sexton
That delves the grave duly.

"The glow-worm o'er grave and stone
Shall light thee steady.
The owl from the steeple sing,
'Welcome, proud lady.'"

"Her voice died away with the last notes, and she fell into a slumber, from which the experienced attendant assured them that she would never awake at all, or only in the death agony.
"Her first prophecy was true. The poor maniac parted with existence without again uttering a sound of any kind."

Chaps. xv.—xxxviii. passim.

(2.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. XIX.
To man, in this his trial state,
The privilege is given,
When lost by tides of human fate,
To anchor fast in heaven.

Watts' Hymns.

(2.)—CHAP. XXIII.
Law, take thy victim!—May she find the mercy
In yon mild heaven which this hard world denies her!

(3.)—CHAP. XXVII.
And Need and Misery, Vice and Danger, bind
In sad alliance each degraded mind.

(4.)—CHAP. XXXV.
I beseech you—
These tears beseech you, and these chaste hands
woe you,
That never yet were heaved but to things holy—
Things like yourself—You are a God above us;
Be as a God, then, full of saving mercy!

The Bloody Brother.

(5.)—CHAP. XLVI.
Happy thou art! then happy be,
Nor envy me my lot;
Thy happy state I envy thee,
And peaceful cot.

Lady C—C—l.

From the Bride of Lammermoor.

1819.

(1.)—LUCY ASHTON'S SONG.

"The silver tones of Lucy Ashton's voice mingled with the accompaniment in an ancient air, to which some one had adapted the following words:

Look not thou on beauty's charming,—
Sit thou still when kings are arming,—
Taste not when the wine-cup glistens,—
Speak not when the people listen,—
Stop thine ear against the singer,—
From the red gold keep thy finger,—
Vacant heart, and hand, and eye,
Easy live and quiet die.

Chap. iii.

(2.)—NORMAN THE FORESTER'S SONG.

"And humming his rustic roundelay, the yeoman went on his road, the sound of his rough voice gradually dying away as the distance betwixt them increased."

The monk must arise when the matins ring,
The abbot may sleep to their chime;
But the yeoman must start when the bugles sing,
'Tis time, my hearts, 'tis time.

There's bucks and rams on Billhope braes,
There's a herd on Shortwood Shaw;
But a lily-white doe in the garden gaes,
She's fairly worth them a'.

Chap. iii.

(3.)—THE PROPHECY.

"With a quivering voice, and a cheek pale with apprehension, Caleb faltered out the following lines:"—

When the last Laird of Ravenswood to Ravenswood shall ride,
And woe a deal maiden to be his bride,
He shall stable his steed in the kelpie's flow,
And his name shall be lost for evermore!

Chap. xviii.

(4.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. VIII.
The hearth in hall was black and dead,
No board was dight in bower within,
Nor merry bowl nor welcome bed;
"Here's sorry cheer," quoth the Heir of Linne.
Old Ballad,
[Altered from the "Heir of Linne."

(2.)—CHAP. XIV.
As, to the autumn breeze's bugle-sound,
Various and vague the dry leaves dance their round;
Or, from the garner-door, on ether borne,
The chaff flies devious from the winnow'd corn;
So vague, so devious, at the breath of heaven,
From their fix'd aim are mortal counsels driven.
Anonymous.

(3.)—CHAP. XVII.
Here is a father now,
Will truck his daughter for a foreign venture,
Make her the stop-gap to some canker'd feud,
Or fling her o'er, like Jonah, to the fishes
To appease the sea at highest.
Anonymous.

(4.)—CHAP. XVIII.
Sir, stay at home and take an old man's counsel:
Seek not to bask you by a stranger's hearth;
Our own blue smoke is warmer than their fire.
Domestic food is wholesome, though 'tis homely,
And foreign dainties poisonous, though tasteful.
The French Courtesan.

(5.)—CHAP. XXV.
True-love, an' thou be true,
Thou hast one kittle part to play,
For fortune, fashion, fancy, and thou
Maun strive for mony a day.
I've kenn'd by mony friend's tale,
Far better by this heart of mine,
What time and change of fancy avail,
A true love-knot to untwine.
Henderson.

(6.)—CHAP. XXVII.
Why, now I have Dame Fortune by the forelock,
And if she 'scape my grasp, the fault is mine;
He that hath buffeted with stern adversity
Best knows to shape his course to favoring breezes.
Old Play.

From A Legend of Montrose.

(1.)—ANCIENT GAELIC MELODY.
"So saying, Annot Lyle sat down at a little distance upon the bench on which Allan M'Aulay was placed, and tuning her clarsach, a small harp, about thirty inches in height, she accompanied it with her voice. The air was an ancient Gaelic melody, and the words, which were supposed to be very old, were in the same language; but we subjoin a translation of them, by Secundus M'Pherson, Esq., of Glenforgen; which, although submitted to the fetters of English rhythm, we trust will be found nearly as genuine as the version of Ossian by his celebrated namesake:"—

1. Birds of omen dark and foul,
   Night-crow, raven, bat, and owl,
   Leave the sick man to his dream—
   All night long he heard you scream.
   Haste to cave and ruin'd tower,
   Ivy tod, or dingled bower,
   There to wink and mop, for, hark!
   In the mid air sings the lark.

2. Hie to moorish gills and rocks,
   Prowling wolf and wily fox,—
   Hie ye fast, nor turn your view,
   Though the lamb bleats to the ewe.
   Couch your trains, and speed your flight,
   Safety parts with parting night;
   And on distant echo borne,
   Comes the hunter's early horn.

3. The moon's wan crescent scarcely gleams,
   Ghost-like she fades in morning beams;
   Hie hence, each peevish imp and fay
   That scare the pilgrim on his way.—
   Quench, kelpie! quench, in bog and fen,
   Thy torch, that cheats benighted men;
   Thy dance is o'er, thy reign is done,
   For Benyieglo hath seen the sun.

4. Wild thoughts, that, sinful, dark, and deep,
   O'erpower the passive mind in sleep,
   Pass from the slumberer's soul away,
   Like night-mists from the brow of day:
   Foul hag, whose blasted visage grim
   Smothers the pulse, unnerves the limb,
   Spur thy dark palfrey, and begone!
   Thou darest not face the godlike sun.
Chap. vi.

(2.)—THE ORPHAN MAID.
"Tuning her instrument, and receiving an assenting look from Lord Monteith and Allan, Annot Lyle executed the following ballad, which our friend, Mr. Secundus M'Pherson, whose goodness we had before to acknowledge, has thus translated into the English tongue:

November’s hail-cloud drifts away,
November’s sunbeam wan
Looks coldly on the castle gray,
When forth comes Lady Anne.

The orphan by the oak was set,
Her arms, her feet, were bare;
The hail-drops had not melted yet
Amid her raven hair.

“And, dame,” she said, “by all the ties
That child and mother know,
Aid one who never knew these joys,— Relieve an orphan’s woe.”

The lady said, “An orphan’s state
Is hard and sad to bear;
Yet worse the widow’d mother’s fate,
Who mourns both lord and heir.

“Twelve times the rolling year has sped,
Since, while from vengeance wild
Of fierce Strathallan’s chief I fled,
Forth’s eddies whelm’d my child.”

“Twelve times the year its course has borne,”
The wandering maid replied,
“Since fishers on St. Bridget’s morn
Drew nets on Campsie side.”

“St. Bridget sent no scaly spoil;
An infant, wellnigh dead,
They saved, and rear’d in want and toil,
To beg from you her bread.”

That orphan maid the lady kiss’d,—
“My husband’s looks you hear;
St. Bridget and her morn be bless’d!
You are his widow’s heir.”

They’ve robed that maid, so poor and pale,
In silk and sandals rare;
And pearls, for drops of frozen hail,
Are glistening in her hair.

(3.)—MO TTO ES.

(1.)—CHAP. X.

Dark on their journey lower’d the gloomy day,
Wild were the hills, and doubtful grew the way;
More dark, more gloomy, and more doubtful, show’d
The mansion which received them from the road.

The Travellers, a Romance.

(2.)—CHAP. XI.

Is this thy castle, Baldwin? Melancholy
Displays her sable banner from the donjon,
Dark’ning the foam of the whole surge beneath.
Were I a habitant, to see this gloom
Pollute the face of nature, and to hear
The ceaseless sound of wave and sea-bird’s scream,
I’d wish me in the hut that poorest peasant
E’er framed to give him temporary shelter.

Browne.

(3.)—CHAP. XIV.

This was the entry, then, these stairs—but whither after?
Yet he that’s sure to perish on the land
May quit the nicety of card and compass,
And trust the open sea without a pilot.

Tragedy of Brennwald.

From Evanhoc.

(1.)—THE CRUSADER’S RETURN.

1.

HIGH deeds achieved of knightly fame,
From Palestine the champion came;
The cross upon his shoulders borne,
Battle and blast had dimm’d and torn.
Each dint upon his batter’d shield
Was token of a foughten field;
And thus, beneath his lady’s bower,
He sung, as fell the twilight hour:

2.

“Joy to the fair!—thy knight behold,
Return’d from yonder land of gold;
No wealth he brings, nor wealth can need,
Save his good arms and battle-stead;
His spurs to dash against a foe,
His lance and sword to lay him low;
Such all the trophies of his toil,
Such—and the hope of Tekla’s smile!”

3.

“Joy to the fair!—whose constant knight
Her favor fired to feats of might!
Unnoted shall she not remain
Where meet the bright and noble train;
Minstrel shall sing, and herald tell—
‘Mark yonder maid of beauty well,
’Tis she for whose bright eyes was won
The listed field of Ascalon!”

4.

“‘Note well her smile!—it edged the blade
Which fifty wives to widows made,
When, vain his strength and Mahound's spell,
Iconium's turban'd Soldan fell.
Seest thou her locks, whose sunny glow
Half shows, half shades, her neck of snow?
Twines not of them one golden thread,
But for its sake a Paynim bled.

"Joy to the fair! my name unknown,
Each deed, and all its praise, thine own;
Then, oh! unbar this churlish gate,
The night-dew falls, the hour is late.
Inured to Syria's glowing breath,
I feel the north breeze chill as death;
Let grateful love quell maiden shame,
And grant him bliss who brings thee fame."

(2.)—THE BAREFOOTED PRIEST.

I'll give thee, good fellow, a twelvemonth or twain,
To search Europe through from Byzantium to Spain;
But ne'er shall you find, should you search till you tire,
So happy a man as the Barefooted Friar.

Your knight for his lady pricks forth in career,
And is brought home at even-song prickt'd through with a spear;
I confess him in haste—for his lady desires
No comfort on earth save the Barefooted Friar's.

Your monarch!—Pshaw! many a prince has been known
To barter his robes for our cowl and our gown;
But which of us e'er felt the idle desire
To exchange for a crown the gray hood of a Friar?

The Friar has walk'd out, and where'er he has gone,
The land and its fatness is mark'd for his own;
He can roam where he lists, he can stop where he tires,
For every man's house is the Barefooted Friar's.

He's expected at noon, and no wight, till he comes,
May profane the great chair, or the porridge of plums;
For the best of the cheer, and the seat by the fire,
Is the undenied right of the Barefooted Friar.

He's expected at night, and the pasty's made hot,
They broach the brown ale, and they fill the black pot;
And the goodwife would wish the goodman in the mire,
Ere he lack'd a soft pillow, the Barefooted Friar.

7.
Long flourish the sandal, the cord, and the crape,
The dread of the devil and trust of the Pope!
For to gather life's roses, unscathed by the briar,
Is granted alone to the Barefooted Friar.

Chap. xviii.

(3.)—SAXON WAR-SONG.

"The fire was spreading rapidly through all parts of the castle, when Ulrica, who had first kindled it, appeared on a turret, in the guise of one of the ancient furies, yelling forth a war-song, such as was of yore chanted on the field of battle by the yet heathen Saxons. Her long dishevelled gray hair flew back from her uncovered head; the inebriating delight of gratified vengeance contended in her eyes with the fire of insanity; and she brandished the distaff which she held in her hand, as if she had been one of the Fatal Sisters, who spin and abridge the thread of human life. Tradition has preserved some wild strophes of the barbarous hymn which she chanted wildly amid that scene of fire and slaughter?"—

1.
Whet the bright steel,
Sons of the White Dragon!
Kindle the torch,
Daughter of Hengist!

The steel glimmers not for the carving of the banquet,
It is hard, broad, and sharply pointed;
The torch goeth not to the bridal chamber,
It steams and glitters blue with sulphur.
Whet the steel, the raven croaks!
Light the torch, Zernebock is yelling!
Whet the steel, sons of the Dragon!
Kindle the torch, daughter of Hengist!

2.
The black clouds are low over the thane's castle:
The eagle screams—he rides on their bosom.
Scream not, gray rider of the sable cloud,
Thy banquet is prepared!
The maidens of Valhalla look forth,
The race of Hengist will send them guests.
Shake your black tresses, maidens of Valhalla!
And strike your loud timbrels for joy!
Many a haughty step bends to your halls,
Many a helmed head.

3.
Dark sits the evening upon the thane's castle,
The black clouds gather round;
Soon shall they be red as the blood of the valiant!
The destroyer of forests shall shake his red crest against them;
He, the bright consumer of palaces,
Broad waves he his blazing banner,
Red, wide, and dusky,
Over the strife of the valiant;
His joy is in the clashing swords and broken bucklers;
He loves to lick the hissing blood as it bursts warm from the wound!

4.
All must perish!
The sword cleaveth the helmet;
The strong armor is pierced by the lance:
Fire'devoureth the dwelling of princes,
Engines break down the fences of the battle. All must perish!
The race of Hengist is gone—
The name of Horsa is no more!
Shrink not then from your doom, sons of the sword!
Let your blades drink blood like wine;
Feast ye in the banquet of slaughter,
By the light of the blazing halls!
Strong be your swords while your blood is warm.
And spare neither for pity nor fear,
For vengeance hath but an hour;
Strong hate itself shall expire!
I also must perish.

Note.—"It will readily occur to the antiquary that these verses are intended to imitate the antique poetry of the Scalds—the minstrels of the old Scandinavians—the race, as the Laureate so happily terms them,

"Stern to inflict, and stubborn to endure,
Who smiled in death."

The poetry of the Anglo-Saxons, after their civilization and conversion, was of a different and softer character; but, in the circumstances of Ulrica, she may be not unnaturally supposed to return to the wild strains which animated her forefathers during the times of Paganism and untamed ferocity."

(4.)—REBECCA'S HYMN.

"It was in the twilight of the day when her trial, if it could be called such, had taken place, that a low knock was heard at the door of Rebecca's prison chamber. It disturbed not the inmate, who was then engaged in the evening prayer recommended by her religion, and which concluded with a hymn, which we have ventured thus to translate into English:"—

When Israel, of the Lord beloved,
Out from the land of bondage came,
Her fathers' God before her moved,
An awful guide in smoke and flame.

By day, along the astonish'd lands
The cloudy pillar glided slow;
By night, Arabia's crimson'd sands
Return'd the fiery column's glow.

There rose the choral hymn of praise, And trump and timbrel answer'd keen,
And Zion's daughters pour'd their lays,
With priest's and warrior's voice between.
No portents now our foes amaze,
Forsaken Israel wanders lone:
Our fathers would not know Thy ways, And Thou hast left them to their own.

But present still, though now unseen!
When brightly shines the prosperous day,
Be thoughts of Thee a cloudy screen
To temper the deceitful ray.
And oh, when stoops on Judah's path
In shade and storm the frequent night,
Be Thou, long-suffering, slow to wrath,
A burning and a shining light!

Our harps we left by Babel's streams,
The tyrant's jest, the Gentile's scorn;
No censer round our altar beams,
And mute are timbrel, harp, and horn.
But Thou hast said, The blood of goat,
The flesh of rams, I will not prize;
A contrite heart, a humble thought,
Are mine accepted sacrifice."

(5.)—THE BLACK KNIGHT'S SONG.

"At the point of their journey at which we take them up, this joyous pair were engaged in singing a virelai, as it was called, in which the clown bore a stiff and mellow burthen to the better instructed Knight of the Fetterlock. And thus ran the ditty:"—

Anna-Marie, love, up is the sun,
Anna-Marie, love, morn is begun,
Mists are dispersing, love, birds singing free,
Up in the morning, love, Anna-Marie.
Anna-Marie, love, up in the morn,
The hunter is winding blithe sounds on his horn,
The echo rings merry from rock and from tree,
’Tis time to arouse thee, love, Anna-Marie.

WAMBA.

Oh, Tybalt, love, Tybalt, awake me not yet,
Around my soft pillow while softer dreams flit;
For what are the joys that in waking we prove,
Compared with these visions, oh, Tybalt! my love?
Let the birds to the rise of the mist carol shrill,
Let the hunter blow out his loud horn on the hill,
Softer sounds, softer pleasures, in slumber I prove,
But think not I dream’d of thee, Tybalt, my love.

Chap. xli.
(6.)—SONG.

THE BLACK KNIGHT AND WAMBA.
"The Jester next struck into another carol, a sort of comic ditty, to which the Knight, catching up the tune, replied in the like manner."

KNIGHT AND WAMBA.
There came three merry men from south, west, and north,
Ever more sing the roundelay;
To win the Widow of Wycombe forth,
And where was the widow might say them nay?
The first was a knight, and from Tynedale he came,
Ever more sing the roundelay;
And his fathers, God save us, were men of great fame,
And where was the widow might say him nay?

Of his father the laird, of his uncle the squire,
He boasted in rhyme and in roundelay;
She bade him go bask by his sea-coal fire,
For she was the widow would say him nay.

WAMBA.
The next that came forth swore by blood and by nails,
Merrily sing the roundelay;
Hur’s a gentleman, God wot, and hur’s lineage was of Wales,
And where was the widow might say him nay?

Sir David ap Morgan ap Griffith ap Hugh
Ap Tudor ap Rhicic, quoth his roundelay;
She said that one widow for so many was too few,
And she bade the Welshman wend his way.

But then next came a yeoman, a yeoman of Kent,
Jollily singing his roundelay;
He spoke to the widow of living and rent,
And where was the widow could say him nay?

Both,
So the knight and the squire were both left in the mire,
There for to sing their roundelay;
For a yeoman of Kent, with his yearly rent,
There ne’er was a widow could say him nay.

(7.)—FUNERAL HYMN.
"Four maidens, Rowena leading the choir, raised a hymn for the soul of the deceased, of which we have only been able to decipher two or three stanzas:"—

Dust unto dust,
To this all must;
The tenant hath resign’d
The faded form
To waste and worm—
Corruption claims her kind.

Through paths unknown
Thy soul hath flown,
To seek the realms of woe,
Where fiery pain
Shall purge the stain
Of actions done below.

In that sad place,
By Mary’s grace,
Brief may thy dwelling be!
Till prayers and alms,
And holy psalms,
Shall set the captive free.

Chap. xliii.

(8.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. XIX.
Away! our journey lies through dell and dingle,
Where the blithe fawn trips by its timid mother,
Where the broad oak, with intercepting boughs,
Chequers the sunbeam in the greensward alley—
Up and away!—for lovely paths are these
To tread, when the glad sun is on his throne:
Less pleasant, and less safe, when Cynthia’s lamp
With doubtful glimmer lights the dreary forest.

Ettrick Forest.

(2.)—CHAP. XXI.
When autumn nights were long and drear,
And forest walks were dark and dim,
How sweetly on the pilgrim’s ear
Was wont to steal the hermit’s hymn!

Devotion borrows Music’s tone,
And Music took Devotion’s wing,
And, like the bird that hails the sun,
They soar to heaven, and soaring sing.

The Hermit of St. Clement’s Well.

(3.)—CHAP. XXVII.
The hottest horse will oft be cool,
The dullest will show fire;
The friar will often play the fool,
The fool will play the friar.

Old Song.

(4.)—CHAP. XXIX.
This wandering race, sever’d from other men,
Boast yet their intercourse with human arts;
The seas, the woods, the deserts which they haunt,
Find them acquainted with their secret treasures;
And unregarded herbs, and flowers, and blossoms,
Display undream’d-of powers when gather’d by them.

The Jew.
(5.)—CHAP. XXXI.
Approach the chamber, look upon his bed,
His is the passing of no peaceful ghost,
Which, as the lark arises to the sky,
'Mid morning's sweetest breeze and softest dew,
Is wing'd to heaven by good men's sighs and tears!
Anselm parts otherwise.

Old Play.

(6.)—CHAP. XXXIII.
Trust me, each state must have its policies:
Kingdoms have edicts, cities have their charters;
Even the wild outlaw, in his forest walk,
Keeps yet some touch of civil discipline.
For not since Adam wore his verdant apron
Hath man with man in social union dwelt,
But laws were made to draw that union closer.

Old Play.

(7.)—CHAP. XXXVI.
Arouse the tiger of Hyrcanian deserts,
Strive with the half-starved lion for his prey;
Lesser the risk, than rouse the slumbering fire
Of wild Fanaticism.

Anonymous.

(8.)—CHAP. XXXVII.
Say not my art is fraud—all live by seeming;
The beggar begs with it, and the gay courtier
Gains land and title, rank and rule, by seeming:
The clergy scorn it not, and the bold soldier
Will eke with it his service. All admit it,
All practice it; and he who is content
With showing what he is, shall have small credit
In church, or camp, or state. So wags the world.

Old Play.

(9.)—CHAP. XXXVIII.
Stern was the law which bade its vot'ries leave
At human woes with human hearts to grieve;
Stern was the law which at the winning wile
Of frank and harmless mirth forbade to smile;
But sterner still, when high the iron rod
Of tyrant power she shook, and call'd that power
Of God.

The Middle Ages.

Epitaph on Mrs. Erskine.¹

1819.

Plain, as her native dignity of mind,
Arise the tomb of her we have resign'd;

Unflaw'd and stainless be the marble scroll,
Emblem of lovely form and candid soul.—
But, oh! what symbol may avail to tell
The kindness, wit, and sense, we loved so well!
What sculpture show the broken ties of life,
Here buried with the parent, friend, and wife!
Or on the tablet stamp each title dear,
By which thine urn, Euphemia, claims the tear!
Yet taught, by thy meek sufferance, to assume Patience in anguish, hope beyond the tomb,
Resign'd, though sad, this votive verse shall flow,
And brief, alas! as thy brief span below.

From the Monastery.

1820.

(1.)—SONGS OF THE WHITE LADY OF AVENEL.

ON TWEED RIVER.

1.
Merrily swim we, the moon shines bright,
Both current and ripple are dancing in light.
We have roused the night raven, I heard him croak,
As we plashed along beneath the oak
That flings its broad branches so far and so wide,
Their shadows are dancing in midst of the tide.
"Who wakens my nestlings," the raven he said,
"My beak shall ere morn in his blood be red!
For a blue swollen corpse is a dainty meal,
And I'll have my share with the pike and the eel."

2.
Merrily swim we, the moon shines bright,
There's a golden gleam on the distant height:
There's a silver shower on the alders dank,
And the drooping willows that wave on the bank.
I see the Abbey, both turret and tower,
It is all astir for the vesper hour;
The monks for the chapel are leaving each cell,
But where's Father Philip should toll the bell?

3.
Merrily swim we, the moon shines bright,
Downward we drift through shadow and light.
Under you rock the eddies sleep,
Calm and silent, dark and deep.
The kelpie has risen from the fathomless pool,
He has lighted his candle of death and of dool:
Look, Father, look, and you'll laugh to see
How he gapes and glares with his eyes on thee!

¹ Mrs. Euphemia Robison, wife of William Erskine, Esq. (afterwards Lord Kinnedder), died September, 1819, and was buried at Saline, in the county of Fife, where these lines are inscribed on the tombstone.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES. 679

4.
Good luck to your fishing, whom watch ye to-night?
A man of mean or a man of might?
Is it layman or priest that must float in your cove,
Or lover who crosses to visit his love?
Hark! heard ye the kelpie reply as we pass'd,—
"God's blessing on the warder, he lock'd the bridge fast!
All that come to my cove are sunk,
Priest or layman, lover or monk."

Landed—landed! the black book hath won,
Else had you seen Berwick with morning sun!
Sain ye, and save ye, and blithe mot ye be,
For seldom they land that go swimming with me.

TO THE SUB-PRIOR.

GOOD evening, Sir Priest, and so late as you ride,
With your mule so fair, and your mantle so wide;
But ride you through valley, or ride you o'er hill,
There is one that has warrant to wait on you still.

Back, back,
The volume black!
I have a warrant to carry it back.

What, ho! Sub-Prior, and came you but here
To conjure a book from a dead woman's bier?
Sain you, and save you, be wary and wise,
Ride back with the book, or you'll pay for your prize.

Back, back,
There's death in the track!
In the name of my master, I bid thee bear back.

"In the name of my Master," said the astonished Monk, "that name before which all things created tremble, I conjure thee to say what thou art that hauntest me thus?"

The same voice replied,—

That which is neither ill nor well,
That which belongs not to heaven nor to hell,
A wreath of the mist, a bubble of the stream,
'Twixt a waking thought and a sleeping dream;
A form that men spy
With the half-shut eye
In the beams of the setting sun, am I.

Vainly, Sir Prior, wouldst thou bar me my right!
Like the star when it shoots, I can dart through the night;
I can dance on the torrent, and ride on the air,
And travel the world with the bonny nightmare.
Again, again,
At the crook of the glen,
Where bickers the burnie, I'll meet thee again.

Men of good are bold as sackless,¹
Men of rude are wild and reckless,
Lie thou still
In the nook of the hill,
For those be before thee that wish thee ill.

HALBERT'S INCANTATION.

THRISE to the holly brake—
Thrice to the well:—
I bid thee awake,
White Maid of Avenel.

Noon gleams on the Lake—
Noon glows on the Fell—
Wake thee, oh wake,
White Maid of Avenel.

TO HALBERT.

YOUTH of the dark eye, wherefore didst thou call me?
Wherefore art thou here, if terrors can appall thee?
He that seeks to deal with us must know nor fear nor failing;
To coward and churl our speech is dark, our gifts are unavailing.
The breeze that brought me hither now must sweep Egyptian ground,
The fleecy cloud on which I ride for Araby is bound;
The fleecy cloud is drifting by, the breeze sighs for my stay,
For I must sail a thousand miles before the close of day.

What I am I must not show—
What I am thou couldst not know—
Something betwixt heaven and hell—
Something that neither stood nor fell—
Something that through thy wit or will
May work thee good—may work thee ill,
Neither substance quite, nor shadow,
Haunting lonely moor and meadow,
Dancing by the haunted spring,
Riding on the whirlwind's wing;
Aping in fantastic fashion
Every change of human passion,
While o'er our frozen minds they pass,
Like shadows from the mirror'd glass.
Wayward, fickle, is our mood,
Hovering betwixt bad and good,
Happier than brief-dated man,
Living ten times o'er his span;
Far less happy, for we have
Help nor hope beyond the grave!

¹ Sackless, innocent.
Man awakes to joy or sorrow;
Ours the sleep that knows no morrow.
This is all that I can show—
This is all that thou may'st know.

Ay! and I taught thee the word and the spell
To waken me here by the Fairies' Well.
But thou hast loved the heron and hawk
More than to seek my haunted walk;
And thou hast loved the lance and the sword
More than good text and holy word;
And thou hast loved the deer to track
More than the lines and the letters black;
And thou art a ranger of moss and wood,
And scornest the nurture of gentle blood.

Thy craven fear my truth accused,
Thine idlehood my trust abused;
He that draws to harbor late
Must sleep without, or burst the gate.
There is a star for thee which burn'd,
Its influence wanes, its course is turn'd;
Valor and constancy alone
Can bring thee back the chance that's flown.

Within that awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries!
Happiest they of human race
To whom God has granted grace
To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch, and force the way:
And better had they ne'er been born,
Who read to doubt, or read to scorn.

Many a fathom dark and deep
I have laid the book to sleep;
Ethereal fires around it glowing—
Ethereal music ever flowing—
The sacred pledge of Heav'n
All things revere,
Each in his sphere,
Save man for whom 'twas giv'n:
Lend thy hand, and thou shalt spy
Things ne'er seen by mortal eye.

Fearest thou to go with me?
Still it is free to thee
A peasant to dwell;
Thou may'st drive the dull steer,
And chase the king's deer,
But never more come near
This haunted well.

Here lies the volume thou boldly hast sought;
Touch it, and take it, 'twill dearly be bought.

Rash thy deed,
Mortal weed
To immortal flames applying;

Rasher trust
Has thing of dust,
On his own weak worth relying;
Strip thee of such fences vain,
Strip, and prove thy luck again.

Mortal warp and mortal woof
Cannot brook this charmed roof;
All that mortal art hath wrought
In our cell returns to nought.
The molten gold returns to clay,
The polish'd diamond melts away;
All is altered, all is flown,
Nought stands fast but truth alone.
Not for that thy quest give o'er:
Courage! prove thy chance once more.

Alas! alas!
Not ours the grace
These holy characters to trace:
Idle forms of painted air,
Not to us is given to share
The boon bestow'd on Adam's race.
With patience bide,
Heaven will provide
The fitting time, the fitting guide.

HALBERT'S SECOND INTERVIEW WITH THE WHITE LADY OF AVENEL.

"She spoke, and her speech was still song, or rather measured chant; but if, as now, more familiar, it flowed occasionally in modulated blank-verse, and, at other times, in the lyrical measure which she had used at their former meeting."

This is the day when the fairy kind
Sit weeping alone for their hopeless lot,
And the wood-maiden sighs to the sighing wind,
And the mermaid weeps in her crystal grot;
For this is a day that the deed was wrought,
In which we have neither part nor share,
For the children of clay was salvation bought,
But not for the forms of sea or air!
And ever the mortal is most forlorn
Who meeteth our race on the Friday morn.

During youth! for thee it is well,
Here calling me in haunted dell,
That thy heart has not quail'd,
Nor thy courage fail'd,
And that thou couldst brook
The angry look
Of her of Avenel,
Did one limb shiver,
Or an eyelid quiver,
Thou wert lost for ever.
Though I am form'd from the ether blue,
And my blood is of the unfallen dew,
And thou art framed of mud and dust,
'Tis thine to speak, reply I must.

A mightier wizard far than I
Wields o'er the universe his power;
Him owns the eagle in the sky,
The turtle in the bower.
Changeful in shape, yet mightiest still,
He wields the heart of man at will,
From ill to good, from good to ill,
In cot and castle tower.

Ask thy heart, whose secret cell
Is fill'd with Mary Avenel!
Ask thy pride why scornful look
In Mary's view it will not brook!
Ask it why thou seek'st to rise
Among the mighty and the wise,—
Why thou spurrest thy lowly lot,—
Why thy pastimes are forgot,—
Why thou wouldest in bloody strife
Mend thy luck or lose thy life!
Ask thy heart, and it shall tell,
Sighing from its secret cell,
'Tis for Mary Avenel.

Do not ask me;
On doubts like these thou canst not task me.
We only see the passing show
Of human passions' ebb and flow;
And view the pageant's idle glance
As mortals eye the northern dance,
When thousand streamers, flashing bright,
Career it o'er the brow of night,
And gazers mark their changeable gleams,
But feel no influence from their beams.

By ties mysterious link'd, our fated race
Holds strange connection with the sons of men.
The star that rose upon the House of Avenel,
When Norman Ulrie first assumed the name,
That star, when culminating in its orbit,
Shot from its sphere a drop of diamond dew,
And this bright font received it—and a Spirit
Rose from the fountain, and her date of life
Hath coexistence with the House of Avenel,
And with the star that rules it.

Look on my girdle—on this thread of gold:
'Tis fine as web of lightest gossamer,
And, but there is a spell on't, would not bind,
Light as they are, the folds of my thin robe.
But when 'twas donn'd, it was a massive chain,
Such as might bind the champion of the Jews,
Even when his locks were longest; it hath dwindled,
Hath 'minish'd in its substance and its strength,
As sunk the greatness of the House of Avenel.
When this frail thread gives way, I to the elements
Resign the principles of life they lent me.
Ask me no more of this!—the stars forbid it.

Dim burns the once bright star of Avenel,
Dim as the beacon when the morn is nigh,
And the o'er-wearied warder leaves the lighthouse;
There is an influence sorrowful and fearful,
That dogs its downward course. Disastrous passion,
Fierce hate and rivalry, are in the aspect
That lowers upon its fortunes.

Complain not on me, child of clay,
If to thy harm I yield the way.
We, who soar thy sphere above,
Know not aught of hate or love;
As will or wisdom rules thy mood,
My gifts to evil turn or good.

When Piercie Shafton boasteth high,
Let this token meet his eye,
The sun is westering from the dell,
Thy wish is granted—fare thee well!

Chap. xvii.

THE WHITE LADY TO MARY AVENEL.

Maiden, whose sorrows wail the Living Dead,
Whose eyes shall commune with the Dead Alive,
Maiden, attend! Beneath my foot lies hid
The Word, the Law, the Path which thou dost strive
To find, and cannot find. Could Spirits shed
Tears for their lot, it were my lot to weep,
Showing the road which I shall never tread,
Though my foot points it.—Sleep, eternal sleep,
Dark, long, and cold forgetfulness my lot!—
But do not thou at human ills repine;
Secure there lies full guerdon in this spot
For all the woes that wait frail Adam's line;
Stoop then and make it yours—I may not make it mine!

Chap. xxx.

THE WHITE LADY TO EDWARD GLEN-DINNING.

Thou who seek'st my fountain lone,
With thoughts and hopes thou dar'st not own;
Whose heart within leap'd wildly glad,
When most his brow seem'd dark and sad,—
Hie thee back, thou findest not here
Corpse or coffin, grave or bier;
The Dead Alive is gone and fled—
Go thou and join the Living Dead!

The Living Dead, whose sober brow
Oft shrugs such thoughts as thou hast now,
Whose hearts within are seldom cured
Of passions by their vows abjured;
Where, under sad and solemn show,
Vain hopes are nursed, wild wishes glow.
Seek the convent's vaulted room,
Prayer and vigil be thy doom;
Doff the green, and don the gray,
To the cloister hence away!

——

THE WHITE LADY'S FAREWELL.

Fare thee well, thou Holly green!
Thou shalt seldom now be seen,
With all thy glittering garlands bending,
As to greet my slow descending,
Startling the bewilder'd hind,
Who sees thee wave without a wind.

Farewell, Fountain! now not long
Shalt thou murmur to my song,
While thy crystal bubbles glancing
Keep the time in mystic dancing,
Rise and swell, are burst and lost,
Like mortal schemes by fortune cross'd.

The knot of fate at length is tied,
The Churl is Lord, the Maid is Bride!
Vainly did my magic sleight
Send the lover from her sight,
Wither bush, and perish well,
Fall'n is lofty Avenel!

——

(2.)—BORDER BALLAD.

1.

MARCH, march, Ettrick and Teviotdale!
Why the dell dimna ye march forward in order?
March, march, Eskdale and Liddesdale!
All the Blue Bonnets are bound for the Border.
Many a banner spread
Flutter above your head,
Many a crest that is famous in story;
Mount and make ready then,
Sons of the mountain ken,
Fight for the Queen and our old Scottish glory.

2.

Come from the hills where your hirsels are grazing,
Come from the glen of the buck and the roe;
Come to the crag where the beacon is blazing,
Come with the bucker, the lance, and the bow.
Trumpets are sounding,
War-steeds are bounding,
Stand to your arms, and march in good order;
England shall many a day
Tell of the bloody fray,
When the Blue Bonnets came over the Border.

(3.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. I.

Oh ay! the Monks, the Monks, they did the mischief!
Theirs all the grossness, all the superstition,
Of a most gross and superstitious age.
May He be praised that sent the healthful tempest,
And scatter'd all these pestilential vapors!
But that we owed them all to yonder Harlot
Throned on the seven hills with her cup of gold,—
I will as soon believe, with kind Sir Roger,
That old Moll White took wing with eat and broomstick,
And raised the last night's thunder.

Old Play.

(2.)—CHAP. II.

In yon lone vale his early youth was bred.
Not solitary—then—the bugle-horn
Of fell Alecto often waked its windings,
From where the brook joins the majestic river,
To the wild northern bog, the curlew's haunt,
Where oozes forth its first and feeble streamlet.

Old Play.

(3.)—CHAP. V.

A priest, ye cry, a priest!—lame shepherds they,
How shall they gather in the straggling flock?
Dumb dogs which bark not, how shall they compel
The loitering vagrants to the Master's fold?
Flutter to bask before the blazing fire,
And snuff the mess neat-handed Phillis dresses,
Than on the snow-wreath battle with the wolf.

Reformation.

(4.)—CHAP. VI.

Now let us sit in conclave. That these weeds
Be rooted from the vineyard of the Church,
That these foul tares be sever'd from the wheat,
We are, I trust, agreed. Yet how to do this,
Nor hurt the wholesome crop and tender vine-plants,
Craves good advisement.

The Reformation.

(5.)—CHAP. VIII.

Nay, dally not with time, the wise man's treasure,
Though fools are lavish on't—the fatal Fisher
Hooks souls, while we waste moments.

Old Play.

(6.)—CHAP. XI.

You call this education, do you not?
Why, 'tis the forced march of a herd of bullocks
Before a shouting drover. The glad van
Move on at ease, and pause a while to snatch
A passing morsel from the dewy greenward;
While all the blows, the oaths, the indignation,
Fall on the croupe of the ill-fated laggard
That cripples in the rear.

(7.)—Chap. xii.
There's something in that ancient superstition,
Which, erring as it is, our fancy loves.
The spring that, with its thousand crystal bubbles,
Bursts from the bosom of some desert rock
In secret solitude, may well be deemed
The haunt of something purer, more refined,
And mightier than ourselves.

(8.)—Chap. xiv.
Nay, let me have the friends who eat my victuals
As various as my dishes. The feast's nought,
Where one huge plate predominates.—John Plaintext,
He shall be mighty beef, our English staple;
The worthy Alderman, a butler'd dumpling;
You pair of whisker'd Cornets, ruffs and roes;
Their friend the Dandy, a green goose in sippets.
And so the board is spread at once and fill'd
On the same principle—Variety.

(9.)—Chap. xv.
He strikes no coin, 'tis true, but coins new phrases,
And vends them forth as knaves vend gilded counters,
Which wise men scorn, and fools accept in payment.

(10.)—Chap. xvi.
A courtier extraordinary, who by diet
Of meats and drinks, his temperate exercise,
Choice music, frequent bath, his horary shifts
Of shirts and waistcoats, means to immortalize
Mortality itself, and makes the essence
Of his whole happiness the trim of court.

(11.)—Chap. xix.
Now choose thee, gallant, betwixt wealth and honor;
There lies the pelf, in sum to bear thee through
The dance of youth, and the turmoil of manhood,
Yet leave enough for age's chimney-corner;
But an thou grasp to it, farewell Ambition!
Farewell each hope of bettering thy condition,
And raising thy low rank above the churls
That till the earth for bread!

(12.)—Chap. xxi.
Indifferent, but indifferent—pshaw! he doth it not Like one who is his craft's master—ne'ertheless
I have seen a clown confer a bloody coxcomb
On one who was a master of defence.

(13.)—Chap. xxii.
Yes, life hath left him—every busy thought,
Each fiery passion, every strong affection,
The sense of outward ill and inward sorrow,
Are fled at once from the pale trunk before me;
And I have given that which spoke and moved,
Thought, acted, suffer'd, as a living man,
To be a ghastly form of bloody clay,
Soon the foul food for reptiles.

(14.)—Chap. xxiii.
'Tis when the wound is stiffening with the cold,
The warrior first feels pain—'tis when the heat
And fiery fever of his soul is past,
The sinner feels remorse.

(15.)—Chap. xxiv.
I'll walk on tiptoe; arm my eye with caution,
My heart with courage, and my hand with weapon,
Like him who ventures on a lion's den.

(16.)—Chap. xxvii.
Now, by Our Lady, Sheriff, 'tis hard reckoning,
That I, with every odds of birth and barony,
Should be detain'd here for the casual death
Of a wild forester, whose utmost having
Is but the brazen buckle of the belt
In which he sticks his hedge-knife.

(17.)—Chap. xxx.
You call it an ill angel—it may be so;
But sure I am, among the ranks which fell,
'Tis the first fiend er' counsell'd man to rise,
And win the bliss the sprite himself had forfeited.

(18.)—Chap. xxxi.
At school I knew him—a sharp-witted youth,
Grave, thoughtful, and reserved amongst his mates,
Turning the hours of sport and food to labor,
Starving his body to inform his mind.

(19.)—Chap. xxxiii.
Now on my faith this gear is all entangled,
Like to the yarn-ewe of the drowsy knitter,
Drag'd by the frolic kitten through the cabin,
While the good dame sits nodding o'er the fire—
Masters, attend; 'twill crave some skill to clear it.

(20.)—Chap. xxxiv.
It is not texts will do it—Church artillery
Are silenced soon by real ordinance,
And canons are but vain opposed to cannon.
Go, coin your crozier, melt your church plate down,
Bid the starved soldier banquet in your halls,
And quaff your long-saved hogsheads—Turn them out
Thus primed with your good cheer, to guard your wall,
And they will venture for't._____

From the Abbot.

1820.

(1.)—THE PARDONER'S ADVERTISEMENT.

"At length the pardon pulled from his scrip a small vial of clear water, of which he vaunted the quality in the following verses:"

Listneth, gode people, everyche one,
For in the londe of Babylone,
Far eastward I wot it lyeth,
And is the first londe the sonne espeth,
Ther, as he cometh fro out the wilde;
In this ilk londe, as thinketh me,
Right as holic legendes tell,
Snotruth from a roke a well,
And falleth into ane bath of ston,
Wher chast Susanne in times long gon
Was wont to wash her bodie and lim—
Mickle vertue hath that streme,
As ye shall se er that ye pas,
Ensample by this little glas—
Through nightes cold and dayes hote,
Inderward I have it brought;
Haeth a wife made slip or slide,
Or a maiden stepp'd aside;
Putteth this water under her nece,
Wold she nold she, she shall snece.

Chap. xxvii.

(2.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. V.

——IN the wild storm,
The seaman hews his mast down, and the merchant
Heaves to the billows wares he once deem'd precious:
So prince and peer, 'mid popular contentions,
Cast off their favorites.

Old Play.

(2.)—CHAP. VI.

Thou hast each secret of the household, Francis,
I dare be sworn thou hast been in the buttery
Steeping thy curious humor in fat ale,
And in the butler's tattle—ay, or chatting

With the glib waiting-woman o'er her comfits—
These bear the key to each domestic mystery.

Old Play.

(3.)—CHAP. VIII.

The sacred tapers' lights are gone,
Gray moss has clad the altar stone,
The holy image is o'erthrown,
The bell has ceased to toll,
The long ribb'd ailes are burst and shrunk,
The holy shrines to ruin sunk,
Departed is the pious monk,
God's blessing on his soul!

Rediviva.

(4.)—CHAP. XI.

Life hath its Mai, and all is mirthful then:
The woods are vocal, and the flowers all odor;
Its very blast has mirth in't,—and the maidens,
The while they don their cloaks to screen their kirtles,
Laugh at the rain that wets them.

Old Play.

(5.)—CHAP. XII.

Nay, hear me, brother—I am elder, wiser,
And holier than thou; and age, and wisdom,
And holiness, have peremptory claims,
And will be listen'd to.

Old Play.

(6.)—CHAP. XIV.

Not the wild billow, when it breaks its barrier—
Not the wild wind, escaping from its cavern—
Not the wild fiend, that mingleth both together,
And pours their rage upon the ripening harvest,
Can match the wild freaks of this mirthful meeting—
Comic, yet fearful—droll, and yet destructive.

The Conspiracy.

(7.)—CHAP. XVI.

Youth! thou wear'st to manhood now,
Darker lip and darker brow,
Statelier step, more pensive mien,
In thy face and gait are seen:
Thou must now brook midnight watches,
Take thy food and sport by snatches!
For the gambol and the jest
Thou wert wont to love the best,
Graver follies must thou follow,
But as senseless, false, and hollow.

Life, a Poem.

(8.)—CHAP. XIX.

It is and is not—'tis the thing I sought for,
Have kneel'd for, pray'd for, risk'd my fame and life for,
And yet it is not—no more than the shadow
Upon the hard, cold, flat, and polish'd mirror,
Is the warm, graceful, rounded, living substance
Which it presents in form and lineament.

Old Play.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

(9.)—CHAP. XXIII.
Give me a morsel on the greensward rather,
Coarse as you will the cooking—let the fresh spring
Bubble beside my napkin—and the free birds,
Tweeting and chirping, hop from bough to bough,
To claim the crumbs I leave for perquisites—
Your prison-feasts I like not.

The Woodman, a Drama.

(10.)—CHAP. XXIV.
'Tis a weary life this——
Vaults overhead, and grates and bars around me,
And my sad hours spent with as sad companions,
Whose thoughts are brooding o'er their own mischances,
Far, far too deeply to take part in mine.

The Woodman.

(11.)—CHAP. XXV.
And when Love's torch hath set the heart in flame,
Comes Signor Reason, with his saws and cautions,
Giving such aid as the old gray-beard sexton,
Who from the church-vault drags his crazy engine,
To ply its dribbling ineffectual streamlet
Against a conflagration.

Old Play.

(12.)—CHAP. XXVIII.
Yes, it is she whose eyes look'd on thy childhood,
And watch'd with trembling hope thy dawn of youth,
That now, with these same eye-balls, dimm'd with age,
And dimmer yet with tears, sees thy dishonor.

Old Play.

(13.)—CHAP. XXX.
In some breasts passion lies conceal'd and silent,
Like war's swart powder in a castle vault,
Until occasion, like the linstock, lights it;
Then comes at once the lightning and the thunder,
And distant echoes tell that all is rent asunder.

Old Play.

(14.)—CHAP. XXXIII.
Death distant?—No, alas! he's ever with us,
And shakes the dart at us in all our actings:
He lurks within our cup, while we're in health;
Sits by our sick-bed, mocks our medicines;
We cannot walk, or sit, or ride, or travel,
But Death is by to seize us when he lists.

The Spanish Father.

(15.)—CHAP. XXXIV.
Ay, Pedro,—Come you here with mask and lantern,
Ladder of ropes, and other moonshine tools—
Why, youngster, thou may'st cheat the old Duenna,
Flatter the waiting-woman, bribe the valet;
But know, that I her father play the Gryphon,
Tameless and sleepless, proof to fraud or bribe,
And guard the hidden treasure of her beauty.

The Spanish Father.

(16.)—CHAP. XXXV.
It is a time of danger, not of revel,
When churchmen turn to masquers.

The Spanish Father.

(17.)—CHAP. XXXVII.
Ay, sir—our ancient crown, in these wild times,
Oft stood upon a cast—the gamester's ducat,
So often staked, and lost, and then regain'd,
Scarce knew so many hazards.

The Spanish Father.

From Kenilworth.

1821.

(1.)—GOLDSITHRED'S SONG.

"AFTER some brief interval, Master Goldsithred, at the earnest instigation of mine host, and the joyous concurrence of his guests, indulged the company with the following morsel of melody:"

Of all the birds on bush or tree,
Commend me to the owl,
Since he may best ensample be
To those the cup that trowl.
For when the sun hath left the west,
He chooses the tree that he loves the best,
And he whoops out his song, and he laughs at his jest.
Then, though hours be late, and weather foul,
We'll drink to the health of the bonny, bonny owl.

The lark is but a bumpkin fowl,
He sleeps in his nest till morn;
But my blessing upon the jolly owl,
That all night blows his horn.
Then up with your cup till you stagger in speech,
And match me this catch, till you swagger and screech,
And drink till you wink, my merry-men each;
For, though hours be late, and weather be foul,
We'll drink to the health of the bonny, bonny owl.

Chap. ii.

(2.)—SPEECH OF THE PORTER AT KENILWORTH.

"At the approach of the Queen, upon sight of whom, as struck by some heavenly vision, the gigantic warder dropped his club, resigned his keys, and gave open way to the Goddess of the night, and all her magnificent train."

What stir, what turmoil, have we for the nones?
Stand back, my masters, or beware your bones!
Sirs, I'm a warder, and no man of straw;
My voice keeps order, and my club gives law.

Yet soft—may stay—what vision have we here?
What dainty darling's this—what peerless peer?
What loveliest face, that loving ranks enfold,
Like brightest diamond chanced in purest gold?
Dazzled and blind, mine office I forsake,
My club, my key, my knee, my hommage take,
Bright paragon, pass on in joy and bliss;—
Beshrew the gate that opens not wide at such a sight as this!

(3.)—MOTTOES.
(1.)—CHAP. IV.
Not serve two masters?—Here's a youth will try it—
Would fain serve God, yet give the devil his due;
Says grace before he doth a deed of villainy,
And returns his thanks devoutly when 'tis acted.

Old Play.

(2.)—CHAP. V.
He was a man
Versed in the world as pilot in his compass.
The needle pointed ever to that interest
Which was his loadstar, and he spread his sails
With vantage to the gale of others' passion.

The Deceiver, a Tragedy.

(3.)—CHAP. VII.
This is He
Who rides on the court gate; controls its tides;
Knows all their secret shoals and fatal eddies;
Whose frown abases, and whose smile exalts.
He shines like any rainbow—and, perchance,
His colors are as transient.

Old Play.

(4.)—CHAP. XIV.
This is rare news thou tell'st me, my good fellow;
There are two bulls fierce battling on the green
For one fair heifer—if the one goes down,
The dale will be more peaceful, and the herd,
Which have small interest in their bruilienent,
May pasture there in peace.

Old Play.

(5.)—CHAP. XVII.
Well, then, our course is chosen; spread the sail,—
Heave off the lead, and mark the soundings well;

Look to the helm, good master; many a shoal
Marks this stern coast, and rocks where sits the siren,
Who, like ambition, lures men to their ruin.

The Shipwreck.

(6.)—CHAP. XXIII.
Now God be good to me in this wild pilgrimage!
All hope in human aid I cast behind me.
Oh, who would be a woman? who that fool,
A weeping, pining, faithful, loving woman?
She hath hard measure still where she hopes kindest,
And all her bounties only make ingrates.

Love's Pilgrimage.

(7.)—CHAP. XXV.
Hark! the bells summon, and the bugle calls,
But she the fairest answers not; the tide
Of nobles and of ladies throgs the halls,
But she the loveliest must in secret hide.
What eyes were thine, proud Prince, which in the gleam
Of you gay meteors lost that better sense,
That o'er the glow-worm doth the star esteem,
And merit's modest blush o'er courtly insolence?

The Glass Slipper.

(8.)—CHAP. XXVIII.
What, man, ne'er lack a draught, when the full can Stands at thine elbow, and craves emptying!—
Nay, fear not me, for I have no delight
To watch men's vices, since I have myself
Of virtue nought to boast of—'I'm a striker,
Would have the world strike with me, pell-mell, all.

Pandamonium.

(9.)—CHAP. XXIX.
Now fare thee well, my master! if'true service
Be guerdon'd with hard looks, e'en cut the tow-line,
And let our barks across the pathless flood
Hold different courses.

Shipwreck.

(10.)—CHAP. XXX.
Now bid the steeple rock—she comes, she comes!
Speak for us, hells! speak for us, shrill-tongued tuckets!
Stand to the linstock, gunner; let thy cannon
Play such a peal, as if a Paynim foe
Came stretch'd in turban'd ranks to storm the ramparts.
We will have pageants too; but that craves wit,
And I'm a rough-hewn soldier.

The Virgin Queen, a Tragi-Comedy.

(11.)—CHAP. XXXII.
The wisest sovereigns err like private men,
And royal hand has sometimes laid the sword

"Princely Pleasures of Kenilworth," by the same author, in the History of Kenilworth. Chiswick, 1821.
Of chivalry upon a worthless shoulder,
Which better had been branded by the hangman.
What then? Kings do their best,—and they and we Must answer for the intent, and not the event.

Old Play.

(12.)—CHAP. XXXIII.
Here stands the victim—there the proud betray,
E'en as the hind pull'd down by straggling dogs
Lies at the hunter's feet, who courteous profers
To some high dame, the Dian of the chase,
To whom he looks for guerdon, his sharp blade,
To gash the sobbing throat.

The Woodman.

(13.)—CHAP. XL.
High o'er the eastern steep the sun is beaming,
And darkness flies with her deceitful shadows;
So truth prevails o'er falsehood.

Old Play.

From the Pirate.

1821.

(1.)—THE SONG OF THE TEMPEST.

"A NORWEGIAN invocation, still preserved in the island of Unst, under the name of the Song of the Reim-kennar, though some call it the Song of the Tempest. The following is a free translation, it being impossible to render literally many of the elliptical and metaphorical terms of expression peculiar to the animal Northern poetry:"

1.
Stern eagle of the far northwest,
Thou that bearest in thy grasp the thunderbolt,
Thou whose rushing pinions stir ocean to madness,
Thou the destroyer of herds, thou the scatterer of navies,
Amidst the scream of thy rage,
Amidst the rushing of thy onward wings,
Though thy scream be loud as the cry of a perishing
nation,
Though the rushing of thy wings be like the roar of ten thousand waves,
Yet hear, in thine ire and thy haste,
Hear thou the voice of the Reim-kennar.

2.
Thou hast met the pine-trees of Drontheim,
Their dark-green heads lie prostrate beside their uprooted stems;
Thou hast met the rider of the ocean,
The tall, the strong bark of the fearless rover,

And she has struck to thee the topsail
That she had not veilt'd to a royal armada;
Thou hast met the tower that bears its crest among the clouds,
The battled massive tower of the Jarl of former days,
And the cope-stone of the turret
Is lying upon its hospitable hearth;
But thou too shalt stoop, proud compeller of clouds,
When thou hearest the voice of the Reim-kennar.

3.
There are verses that can stop the stag in the forest,
Ay, and when the dark-color'd dog is opening on his track;
There are verses can make the wild hawk pause on the wing,
Like the falcon that wears the hood and the jesses,
And who knows the shrill whistle of the fowler,
Thou who canst mock at the scream of the drowning
mariner,
And the crash of the ravaged forest,
And the groan of the overwhelmed crowds,
When the church has fallen in the moment of prayer;
There are sounds which thou also must list,
When they are chanted by the voice of the Reimkennar.

4.
Enough of woe hast thou wrought on the ocean,
The widows wring their hands on the beach;
Enough of woe hast thou wrought on the land,
The husbandman folds his arms in despair;
Cease thou the waving of thy pinions,
Let the ocean repose in her dark strength;
Cease thou the flashing of thine eye,
Let the thunderbolt sleep in the armory of Odin;
Be thou still at my bidding, viewless racer of the northwestern heaven,—
Sleep thou at the voice of Norna the Reim-kennar.

5.
Eagle of the far northwestern waters,
Thou hast heard the voice of the Reim-kennar,
Thou hast closed thy wide sails at her bidding,
And folded them in peace by thy side.
My blessing be on thy retiring path;
When thou stoopest from thy place on high,
Soft be thy slumbers in the caverns of the unknown
ocean,
Rest till destiny shall again awaken thee;
Eagle of the northwest, thou hast heard the voice of the Reim-kennar.

Chap. vi.

(2.)—CLAUD HALCRO'S SONG.

MARY.

FAREWELL to Northmaven,
Gray Hillswicke, farewell!
To the calms of thy haven,
The storms on thy fell—
To each breeze that can vary
The mood of thy main,
And to thee, bonny Mary!
We meet not again!

Farewell the wild ferry,
Which Hacon could brave,
When the peaks of the Skerry
Were white in the wave.
There's a maid may look over
These wild waves in vain,
For the skiff of her lover—
He comes not again!

The vows thou hast broke,
On the wild currents fling them;
On the quicksand and rock
Let the mermaidens sing them.
New sweetness they'll give her
Bewildering strain;
But there's one who will never
Believe them again.

Oh were there an island,
Though ever so wild,
Where woman could smile, and
No man be beguiled—
Too tempting a snare
To poor mortals were given;
And the hope would fix there
That should anchor in heaven.

(3.)—THE SONG OF HAROLD HARFAGER.

The sun is rising dimly red,
The wind is wailing low and dread;
From his cliff the eagle sallies,
Leaves the wolf his darksome valleys;
In the mist the ravens hover,
Peep the wild dogs from the cover,
Screaming, croaking, baying, yelling,
Each in his wild accents telling,
"Soon we feast on dead and dying,
Fair-hair'd Harold's flag is flying."

Many a crest on air is streaming,
Many a helmet darkly gleaming,
Many an arm the axe upears,
Doom'd to hew the wood of spears.
All along the crowded ranks
Horses neigh and armor clanks;
Chiefs are shouting, clarions ringing,
Louder still the bard is singing,
"Gather, footmen, gather, horsemen,
To the field, ye valiant Norsemen!"

"Halt ye not for food or slumber,
View not vantage, count not number;
Jolly reapers, forward still,
Grow the crop on vale or hill,
Thick or scatter'd, stiff or lithe,
It shall down before the seythe.
Forward with your sickles bright,
Reap the harvest of the fight.—
Onward, footmen, onward, horsemen,
To the charge, ye gallant Norsemen!"

"Fatal Choosers of the Slaughter,
O'er you hovers Odin's daughter;
Hear the choice she spreads before ye,—
Victory, and wealth, and glory;
Or old Valhalla's roaring hail,
Her ever-circling mead and ale,
Where for eternity unite
The joys of wassail and of fight.
Headlong forward, foot and horsemen,
Charge and fight, and die like Norsemen!"

(4.)—SONG OF THE MERMAIDS AND MERMEN.

MERMAID.
Fathoms deep beneath the wave,
Stringing beads of glistering pearl,
Singing the achievements brave
Of many an old Norwegian earl;
Dwelling where the tempest's raving
Falls as light upon our ear
As the sigh of lover, craving
Pity from his lady dear,
Children of wild Thule, we,
From the deep eaves of the sea,
As the lark springs from the lea,
Hither come to share your glee.

MERMAN.
From reining of the water-horse,
That bounded till the waves were foaming,
Watching the infant tempest's course,
Chasing the sea-snake in his roaming;
From winding charge-notes on the shell,
When the huge whale and sword-fish duel,
Or tolling shroudsless seamen's knell,
When the winds and waves are cruel;
Children of wild Thule, we
Have plough'd such furrows on the sea
As the steer draws on the lea,
And hither we come to share your glee.

MERMAIDS AND MERMEN.
We heard you in our twilight caves,
A hundred fathom deep below,
For notes of joy can pierce the waves,
That drown each sound of war and woe.
Those who dwell beneath the sea
   Love the sons of Thule well;
Thus, to aid your mirth, bring we
Dance, and song, and sounding shell.
Children of dark Thule, know,
Those who dwell by haaf and voe,
Where your daring shallows ride,
Come to share the festal show.

(5.)—NORNA'S SONG.

For leagues along the watery way,
Through gulf and stream my course has been;
The billows know my Runic lay,
And smooth their crests to silent green.
The billows know my Runic lay,—
The gulf grows smooth, the stream is still;
But human hearts, more wild than they,
Know but the rule of wayward will.

One hour is mine, in all the year,
To tell my woes,—and one alone;
When gleams this magic lamp, 'tis here,—
When dies the mystic light, 'tis gone.

Daughter of northern Magnus, hail!
The lamp is lit, the flame is clear;
To you I come to tell my tale,—
Awake, arise, my tale to hear!

(6.)—CLAUD HALCRO AND NORNA.

CLAUD HALCRO.

Mother darksome, Mother dread,
Dweller on the Fitful-head,
Thou canst see what deeds are done
Under the never-setting sun.
Look through alet, and look through frost,
Look to Greenland's caves and coast:
By the iceberg is a sail
Chasing of the swarthy whale;
Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
Tell us, has the good ship sped?

NORNA.

The thought of the aged is ever on gear,—
On his fishing, his furrow, his flock, and his steer;
But thrive may his fishing, flock, furrow, and herd,
While the aged for anguish shall tear his grey beard.
The ship, well laden as bark need be,
Lies deep in the furrow of the Iceland sea;—
The breeze for Zetland blows fair and soft,
And gayly the garland is fluttering aloft:
Seven good fishes have spouted their last,
And their jawbones are hanging to yard and mast;
Two are for Lerwick, and two for Kirkwall,—
Three for Burgh Westra, the choicest of all.

CLAUD HALCRO.

Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
Dweller of the Fitful-head,
Thou hast conn'd full many a rhyme
That lives upon the surge of time:
Tell me, shall my lays be sung,
Like Haco's of the golden tongue,
Long after Halcro's dead and gone?
Or shall Hialtland's minstrel own
One note to rival glorious John?

CLAUD HALCRO.

Be mine the Imber-goose to play,
And haunt lone cave and silent bay;
The archer's aim so shall I shun,
So shall I 'scape the level'd gun—
Content my verses' tuneless jingle
With Thule's sounding tides to mingle,
While, to the ear of wondering wight,
Upon the distant headland's height,
Soft'n'd by murm'ring of the sea,
The rude sounds seem like harmony!

NORNA.

Gold is ruddy, fair, and free,
Blood is crimson, and dark to see.—
I look'd out on Saint Magnus Bay,
And I saw a falcon that struck her prey;—
A goblet of flesh in her beak she bore,
And talons and singles are dripping with gore;—
Let him that asks after them look on his hand,
And if there is blood on't, he's one of their band.

CLAUD HALCRO.

Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
Dweller of the Fitful-head,
Well thou know'st it is thy task
To tell what Beauty will not ask;—
Then steep thy words in wine and milk,
And weave a doom of gold and silk,—
For we would know, shall Brenda prove
In love, and happy in her love?

Norna.
Untouch'd by love, the maiden's breast
Is like the snow on Rona's crest,
High seated in the middle sky,
In bright and barren purity;
But by the sunbeam gently kiss'd,
Scarce by the gazing eye 'tis miss'd,
Ere, down the lonely valley stealing,
Fresh grass and growth its course revealing,
It cheers the flock, revives the flower,
And decks some happy shepherd's bower.

Magnus Troil.
Mother, speak, and do not tarry:
Here's a maiden fain would marry,
Shall she marry, ay or not?
If she marry, what's her lot?

Norna.
Untouch'd by love, the maiden's breast
Is like the snow on Rona's crest,—
So pure, so free from earthy dye,
It seems, whilst leaning on the sky,
Part of the heaven to which 'tis nigh;
But passion, like the wild March rain,
May soil the wreck with many a stain.
We gaze—the lovely vision's gone—
A torrent fills the bed of stone,
That, hurrying to destruction's shock,
Leaps headlong from the lofty rock.

Chap. xxi.

(7.)—Song of the Zetland Fishermen.

"While they were yet within hearing of the shore,
They chanted an ancient Norse ditty, appropriate to the occasion,
Of which Claud Halcro had executed the following literal translation:"

Farewell, merry maidens, to song and to laughs,
For the brave lads of Westra are bound to the Haaf;
And we must have labor, and hunger, and pain,
Ere we dance with the maidens of Dunrossness again.

For now, in our trim boats of Noroway deal,
We must dance on the waves with the porpoise and seal;
The breeze it shall pipe, so it pipe not too high,
And the gull be our songstress wifenc'er she flits by.

Sing on, my brave bird, while we follow, like thee,
By bank, shoal, and quicksand, the swarms of the sea;
And when twenty-score fishes are straining our line,
Sing louder, brave bird, for their spoils shall be thine.

We'll sing while we bait, and we'll sing while we haul,
For the deeps of the Haaf have enough for us all;
There is torsk for the gentle, and skate for the earl,
And there's wealth for bold Magnus, the son of the earl.

Huzza! my brave comrades, give way for the Haaf,
We shall sooner come back to the dance and the laugh;
For light without mirth is a lamp without oil,—
Then mirth and long life to the bold Magnus Troil!

Chap. xxii.

(8.)—CLEVELAND'S SONGS.

1.
Love wakes and weeps
While Beauty sleeps!
Oh for Music's softest numbers,
To prompt a theme
For Beauty's dream,
Soft as the pillow of her slumber's!

2.
Through groves of palm
Sigh gales of balm,
Fireflies on the air are wheeling;
While through the gloom
Comes soft perfume,
The distant beds of flowers revealing.

3.
Oh wake and live!
No dream can give
A shadow'd bliss, the real excelling;
No longer sleep,—
From lattice peep,
And list the tale that Love is telling.

Farewell! farewell! the voice you hear
Has left its last soft tone with you,—
Its next must join the seaward cheer,
And shout among the shouting crew.

The accents which I scarce could form
Beneath your brown's controlling check
Must give the word, above the storm,
To cut the mast, and clear the wreck.

The timid eye I dared not raise,
The hand that shook when press'd to thine,
Must point the guns upon the chase,
Must bid the deadly cutlass shine.

To all I love, or hope, or fear,
Honor, or own, a long adieu!
To all that life has soft and dear
Farewell! save memory of you!

Chap. xxiii.
(9.)—CLAUD HALCRO’S VERSES.

And you shall deal the funeral dole;
Ay, deal it, mother mine,
To weary body, and to heavy soul,
The white bread and the wine.

And you shall deal my horses of pride;
Ay, deal them, mother mine;
And you shall deal my lands so wide,
And deal my castles nine.

But deal not vengeance for the deed,
And deal not for the crime;
The body to its place, and the soul to Heaven’s grace,
And the rest in God’s own time.

Saint Magnus control thee, that martyr of treason;
Saint Ronan rebuke thee, with rhyme and with reason;
By the mass of Saint Martin, the might of Saint Mary,
Be thou gone, or thy weird shall be worse if thou tarry!

If of good, go hence and hallow thee;—
If of ill, let the earth swallow thee;—
If thou’rt of air, let the gray mist fold thee;—
If of earth, let the swart mine hold thee;—
If a Pixie, seek thy ring;—
If a Nixie, seek thy spring;—
If on middle earth thou’st been
Slave of sorrow, shame, and sin,
Hast eat the bread of toil and strife,
And dree’d the lot which men call life,—
Begone to thy stone! for thy coffin is scant of thee,
The worm, thy play-fellow, walls for the want of thee:
Hence, houseless ghost! let the earth hide thee,
Till Michael shall blow the blast, see that there thou bide thee!—
Phantom, fly hence! take the Cross for a token,
Hence pass till Hallowmass!—my spell is spoken.

Where corpse-light
Dances bright,
Be it by day or night,
Be it by light or dark,
There shall corpse lie stiff and stark.

Menseful maiden ne’er should rise,
Till the first beam tinge the skies;
Silk-fringed eyelids still should close,
Till the sun has kiss’d the rose;
Maiden’s foot we should not view,
Mark’d with tiny print on dew,
Till the opening flowerets spread
Carpet meet for beauty’s tread.

Chap. xxiii.

(10.)—NORNA’S INCANTATIONS.

Champion, famed for warlike toil,
Art thou silent, Ribolt Troil?
Sand, and dust, and pebbly stones,
Are leaving bare thy giant bones.
Who dared touch the wild bear’s skin
Ye slumber’d on, while life was in?—
A woman now, or babe, may come
And cast the covering from thy tomb.

Yet be not wrathful, Chief, nor blight
Mine eyes or ears with sound or sight!
I come not, with unhallow’d tread,
To wake the slumbers of the dead,
Or lay thy giant relics bare;
But what I seek thou well canst spare.
Be it to my hand allow’d
To shear a merk’s weight from thy shroud;
Yet leave thee sheeted lead enough.
To shield thy bones from weather rough.

See, I draw my magic knife—
Never, while thou wert in life,
Laidst thou still for sloth or fear,
When point and edge were glittering near;
See, the cerments now I sever—
Waken now, or sleep for ever!
Thou wilt not wake—the deed is done!
The prize I sought is fairly won.

Thanks, Ribolt, thanks,—for this the sea
Shall smooth its ruffled crest for thee—
And while afar its billows foam,
Subside to peace near Ribolt’s tomb.
Thanks, Ribolt, thanks—for this the might
Of wild winds raging at their height,
When to thy place of slumber nigh,
Shall soften to a lullaby.

She, the dame of doubt and dread,
Norna of the Fitful-head,
Mighty in her own despite,— Miserable in her might;
In despair and frenzy great,
In her greatness desolate;
Wisest, wickedest who lives,—
Well can keep the word she gives.

Chap. xxv.

[AT INTERVIEW WITH MINNA.]

Thou, so needful, yet so dread,
With cloudy crest, and wing of red;
Thou, without whose genial breath
The North would sleep the sleep of death;
Who deign’st to warm the cottage hearth,
Yet hurst proud palaces to earth,—
Brightest, keenest of the Powers
Which form and rule this world of ours,
With my rhyme of Runic, I
Thank thee for thy agency.

Old Reim-kennar, to thy art
Mother Hertha sends her part;
She, whose gracious bounty gives
Needful food for all that lives.
From the deep mine of the North
Came the mystic metal forth,
Doom'd, amidst disjointed stones,
Long to cire a champion's bones
Disinhumed my charms to aid—
Mother Earth, my thanks are paid.

Girdle of our islands dear,
Element of Water, hear!
Thou whose power can overwhelm
Broken mounds and ruin'd realm
On the lowly Belgian strand;
All thy fiercest rage can never
Of our soil a furlong sever
From our rock-defended land;
Play then gently thou thy part,
To assist old Norna's art.

Elements, each other greeting,
Gifts and power attend your meeting.

Thou, that over billows dark
 Safely sendst the fisher's bark,—
 Giving him a path and motion
 Through the wilderness of ocean;
Thou, that when the billows brave ye,
O'er the shelves canst drive the navy,—
Didst thou chase as one neglected,
While thy brethren were respected?
To appease thee, see, I tear
This full grizzled of grizzled hair;
Oft thy breath hath traversed it sung,
Softening to my magic tongue,—
Now, 'tis thine to bid it fly
Through the wide expanse of sky,
'Mid the countless swarms to sail
Of wild-fowl wheeling on thy gale;
Take thy portion and rejoice,—
Spirit, thou hast heard my voice!

She who sits by haunted well
Is subject to the Nixies' spell;
She who walks on lonely beach,
To the Mermaid's charmed speech;
She who walks round ring of green,
Offends the peevish Fairy Queen;
And she who takes rest in the Dwarfie's cave,
A weary weird of woe shall have.

By ring, by spring, by cave, by shore,
Minna Troil has braved all this and more;
And yet hath the root of her sorrow and ill
A source that's more deep and more mystical still.

Thou art within a demon's hold,
More wise than Heinus, more strong than Trold;
No siren sings so sweet as he,—
No fay springs lighter on the lea;
No elfin power hath half the art
To soothe, to move, to wring the heart,—
Life-blood from the cheek to drain,
Drench the eye, and dry the vein.
Maiden, ere we farther go,
Dost thou note me, ay or no?

MINNA.
I mark thee, my mother, both word, look, and sign;
Speak on with thy riddle—to read it be mine.

NORNA.
Mark me! for the word I speak
Shall bring the color to thy cheek.
This leaden heart, so light of cost,
The symbol of a treasure lost,
Thou shalt wear in hope and in peace, [cease,
That the cause of your sickness and sorrow may
When crimson foot meets crimson hand
In the Martyr's aisle, and in Orkney land.—

Be patient, be patient; for Patience hath power
To ward us in danger, like mantle in shower;
A fairy gift you best may hold
In a chain of fairy gold;—
The chain and the gift are each a true token
That not without warrant old Norna has spoken;
But thy nearest and dearest must never behold them,
Till time shall accomplish the truths I have told them.

Chap. xxvii.

(11.)—BRYCE SNAILSFOOT'S ADVERTISEMENT.

Poor sinners whom the snake deceives
Are vain to cover them with leaves.
Zetland hath no leaves, 'tis true,
Because that trees are none, or few;
But we have flax and taits of woof,
Ye gallanty Lambmas lads, appear,
And bring your Lambmas sisters here;
Bryce Snailsfoot spares not cost or care
To pleasure every gentle pair.

Chap. xxxii.

(12.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. II.
'Tis not alone the scene—the man, Anselmo,
The man finds sympathies in these wild wastes.
And roughly tumbling seas, which fairer views
And smoother waves deny him.

_Ancient Drama._

(2.)—CHAP. VII.
She does no work by halves, you raving ocean;
Engulfing those she estranges, her wild womb
Affords the mariners whom she hath dealt on
Their death at once and sepulchre.

_Old Play._

(3.)—CHAP. IX.
This is a gentle trader, and a prudent—
He's no Autolycus, to clear your eye
With quips of worldly gauds and gamesomeness;
But seasons all his glittering merchandize
With wholesome doctrine suited to the use,
As men sauce goose with sage and rosemary.

_Old Play._

(4.)—CHAP. XI.
All your ancient customs,
And long-descended usages, I'll change.
Ye shall not eat, nor drink, nor speak, nor move,
Think, look, or walk, as ye were wont to do;
Even your marriage-beds shall know mutation;
The bride shall have the stock, the groom the wall;
For all old practice will I turn and change,
And call it reformation—marry, will I!

'Tis Even that we're at Odds.

(5.)—CHAP. XIV.
We'll keep our customs—what is law itself,
But old establish'd custom? What religion
(I mean, with one-half of the men that use it),
Save the good use and wont that carries them
To worship how and where their fathers worshipp'd?
All things resolve in custom—we'll keep ours.

_Old Play._

(6.)—CHAP. XXV.
I do love these ancient ruins!
We never tread upon them but we set
Our foot upon some reverend history,
And questionless, here in this open court
(Which now lies naked to the injuries
Of stormy weather) some men lie inter'd,
Loved the Church so well, and gave so largely to it,
They thought it should have canopied their bones
Till doomsday;—but all things have their end—
Churches and cities, which have diseases like to men,
Must have like death which we have.

_Duchess of Malfy._

(7.)—CHAP. XXIX.
See yonder woman, whom our swains revere,
And dread in secret, while they take her counsel

When sweetheart shall be kind, or when cross dame shall die;
Where lurks the thief who stole the silver tankard,
And how the pestilent murrain may be cured;—
This sage adviser's mad, stark mad, my friend;
Yet, in her madness, hath the art and cunning
To wring fools' secrets from their inmost bosoms,
And pay inquirers with the coin they gave her.

_Old Play._

(8.)—CHAP. XXX.
What ho, my jovial mates! come on! we'll frolic it
Like fairies frisking in the merry moonshine,
Seen by the curtail friar, who, from some christening,
Or some blithe bridal, hies belated cellward—
He starts, and changes his bold bottle swagger
To churchman's pace professional,—and, ransack-ing
His treacherous memory for some holy hymn,
Finds but the roundel of the midnight catch.

_Old Play._

(9.)—CHAP. XXXII.
I strive like to the vessel in the tide-way,
Which, lacking favoring breeze, hath not the power
To stem the powerful current.—Even so,
Resolving daily to forsake my vices,
Habit, strong circumstance, renew'd temptation,
Sweep me to sea again.—Oh, heavenly breath,
Fill thou my sails, and aid the feeble vessel,
Which ne'er can reach the blessed port without thee!

'Tis Odds when Evens meet.

(10.)—CHAP. XXXIII.
Parental love, my friend, has power o'er wisdom,
And is the charm which, like the falconer's lure,
Can bring from heaven the highest soaring spirits.—
So, when famed Prosper doff'd his magic robe,
It was Miranda pluck'd it from his shoulders.

_Old Play._

(11.)—CHAP. XXXIV.
Hark to the insult loud, the bitter sneer,
The fierce threat answering to the brutal jeer;
Oaths fly like pistol-shots, and vengeful words
Clash with each other like conflicting swords.—
The robber's quarrel by such sounds is shown,
And true men have some chance to gain their own.

_Captivity, a Poem._

(12.)—CHAP. XXXVII.
Over the mountains and under the waves,
Over the fountains and under the graves,
Over floods that are deepest,
Which Neptune obey,
Over rocks that are steepest,
Love will find out the way.

_Old Song.
On Ettrick Forest's Mountains Dun. 1

1822.

On Ettrick Forest's mountains dun,
'Tis blithe to hear the sportsman's gun,
And seek the heath-frequenting brood
Far through the noonday solitude;
By many a cairn and trenched mound,
Where chiefs of yore sleep lone and sound,
And springs, where gray-hair'd shepherds tell
That still the fairies love to dwell.

Along the silver streams of Tweed,
'Tis blithe the mimic fly to lead,
When to the hook the salmon springs,
And the line whistles through the rings;
The boiling eddy see him try,
Then dashing from the current high,
Till watchful eye and cautious hand
Have led his wasted strength to land.

'Tis blithe along the midnight tide
With stalwart arm the boat to guide;
On high the dazzling blaze to rear,
And heedful plunge the barbed spear;
Rock, wood, and scur, emerging bright,
Fling on the stream their ruddy light,
And from the bank our band appears
Like Genii armed with fiery spears. 2

'Tis blithe at eve to tell the tale
How we succeed, and how we fail,
Whether at Alwyn's 3 lordly meal,
Or lowlier board at Ashestiel; 4
While the gay tapers cheerily shine,
Bickers the fire, and flows the wine—
Days free from thought, and nights from care,
My blessing on the Forest fair!

Farewell to the Muse. 5

1822.

Farewell to the Muse.

Enchantress, farewell, who so oft has decoy'd me
At the close of the evening through woodlands to roam,

Where the forester, lated, with wonder espied me
Explore the wild scenes he was quitting for home.
Farewell, and take with thee thy numbers wild-speaking
The language alternate of rapture and woe:
Oh! none but some lover, whose heart-strings are breaking,
The pang that I feel at our parting can know.

Each joy thou couldst double, and when there came sorrow
Or pale disappointment to darken my way,
What voice was like thine, that could sing of to-morrow,
Till forgot in the strain was the grief of to-day!
But when friends drop about us in life's weary waning,
The grief, Queen of Numbers, thou canst not assuage;
Nor the gradual estrangement of those yet remaining,
The languor of pain, and the chillness of age.

'Twas thou that once taught me, in accents bewailing,
To sing how a warrior lay stretch'd on the plain,
And a maiden hung o'er him with aid unavailing,
And held to his lips the cold goblet in vain;
As vain thy enchantments, O Queen of wild Numbers,
To a bard when the reign of his fancy is o'er,
And the quick pulse of feeling in apathy slumbers—
Farewell, then, Enchantress! I meet thee no more!

The Maid of Isla.

AIR—"The Maid of Isla."

WRITTEN FOR MR. GEORGE THOMSON'S SCOTTISH MELODIES.

1822.

Oh, maid of Isla, from the cliff,
That looks on troubled wave and sky,
Dost thou not see yon little skiff
Contend with ocean gallantly?
Now heaves 'gainst the breeze and surge,
And steep'd her leeeward deck in foam,
Why does she war unequal urge?—
Oh, Isla's maid, she seeks her home.

1 Written after a week's shooting and fishing, in which the poet had been engaged with some friends. The reader may see these verses set to music in Mr. Thomson's Scottish Melodies for 1822.
2 See the famous salmon-spear scene in "Guy Mancering."—Waverley Novels, vol. iii. pp. 239-63.
3 Alwyn, the seat of the Lord Somerville,—now, alas! un-tenanted, by the lamented death of that kind and hospitable nobleman, the author's nearest neighbor and intimate friend. Lord S. died in February, 1819.
4 Ashestiel, the poet's residence at that time.
5 Written, during illness, for Mr. Thomson's Scottish collection, and first published in 1822, united to an air composed by George Kinloch of Kinloch, Esq.
Oh, Isla's maid, yon sea-bird mark:
Her white wing gleams through mist and spray,
Against the storm-cloud, lowering dark,
As to the rock she wheels away;—
Where clouds are dark and billows rave,
Why to the shelter should she come
Of cliff exposed to wind and wave?—
Oh, maid of Isla, 'tis her home!

As breeze and tide to yonder skiff,
Thou'rt adverse to the suit I bring,
And cold as is your wintry cliff,
Where sea-birds close their weathered wing.
Yet cold as rock, unkind as wave,
Still, Isla's maid, to thee I come;
For in thy love, or in his grave,
Must Allan Vourich find his home.

Carle, now the King's come.¹

BEING NEW WORDS TO AN AULD SPRING.

1822.

The news has flown frae mouth to mouth,
The North for a'ce has hang'd the South;
The deil a Scotsman's die o' drouth,
Carle, now the King's come!

CHORUS.
Carle, now the King's come!
Carle, now the King's come!
Thou shalt dance, and I will sing,
Carle, now the King's come!

Auld England held him lang and fast,
And Ireland had a joyfu' cast;
But Scotland's turn is come at last—
Carle, now the King's come!

Auld Reckie, in her rokelay gray,
Thought never to have seen the day;
He's been a weary time away—
But, Carle, now the King's come!

She's skirling frae the Castle hill;
The Carline's voice is grown sae shrill,
Ye'll hear her at the Canon-mill—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Up, bairns!" she cries, "baith grit and sma',
And busk ye for the weapon-shaw!
Stand by me, and we'll bang them a'—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Come from Newbattle's ancient spires,
Bauld Lothian, with your knights and squires,
And match the mettle of your sires—
Carle, now the King's come!

"You're welcome hame, my Montagu!
Bring in your hand the young Bucleuch;
I'm missing some that I may rue—
Carle, now the King's come!²

"Come, Haddington, the kind and gay,
You've graced my causeway mony a day;
I'll weep the cause if you should stay—
Carle, now the King's come!³

"Come, premier Duke,⁴ and carry doun
Frac yonder craig his ancient crow;
It's had a lang sleep and a soom'—
But, Carle, now the King's come!

"Come, Tweeddale, true as sword to sheath;
Come, Hopetoun, fear'd on fields of death;
Come, Clerk,⁵ and give your bugle breath;
Carle, now the King's come!

"Come, Wemyss, who modest merit aids;
Come, Rosebery, from Dalmeny shades;
Breadalbane, bring your belted plaid;
Carle, now the King's come!

"Come, stately Niddrie, auld and true,
Girt with the sword that Minden knew;
We have o'er few such lairds as you—
Carle, now the King's come!

¹ This imitation of an old Jacobite ditty was written on the appearance, in the Frith of Forth, of the fleet which conveyed his Majesty King George IV. to Scotland, in August, 1822; and was published as a broadside.
² Lord Montagu, uncle and guardian to the young Duke of Bucleuch, placed his Grace's residence of Dalkeith at his Majesty's disposal during his visit to Scotland.
³ Charles, the tenth Earl of Haddington, died in 1828.
⁴ The Duke of Hamilton, as Earl of Angus, carried the ancient royal crown of Scotland on horseback in King George's procession, from Holyrood to the Castle.
⁵ The Castle.
⁶ MS.: "Come, Athole, from your hills and woods
Bring down your Hielandmen in clads,
With bannet, brogue, and tartan duds!"
"King Arthur's grown a common erier,
He's heard in Fife and far Kintire,—
'Tie, lads, behold my crest of fire!' 1
Carle, now the King's come!

"Saint Abb roars out, 'I see him pass,
Between Tantallon and the Bass!' 2
Calton, get out your keeking-glass—
Carle, now the King's come!"

The Carlne stopp'd; and, sure I am,
For very glee had ta'en a dwam,
But Oman 3 help'd her to a dram—
Cogie, now the King's come!

Cogie, now the King's come!
Cogie, now the King's come!
I'se be fou' and ye's be toom, 4
Cogie, now the King's come!

CARLE, NOW THE KING'S COME.

PART SECOND.

A Hawick gill of mountain dew
Heised up Auld Reekie's heart, I row;
It minded her of Waterloo—
Carle, now the King's come!

Again I heard her summons swell,
For sic a dirdum and a yell,
It drown'd Saint Giles's jowling bell—
Carle, now the King's come!

"My trusty Provost, tried and tight,
Stand forward for the Good Town's right;
There's waur than you been made a knight— 6
Carle, now the King's come!"

1 MS.: "Brave Arthur's Scat's a story higher;
Saint Abb is shouting to Kintire,—
'Ton lour, light up a crest of fire.'"

As seen from the west, the ridge of Arthur's Scat bears a marked resemblance to a lion couchant.

2 Mr. Oman, landlord of the Waterloo Hotel. 3 Empty.

3 The Lord Provost had the agreeable surprise to hear his health proposed, at the civil banquet given to George IV, in the Parliament House, as "Sir William Arthuquot, Bart." The Blue Blanket is the standard of the incorporated trades of Edinburgh, and is kept by their convener, "at whose appearance therewith," observes Maitland, "tis said that not only the artificers of Edinburgh are obliged to repair to it, but all the artificers or craftsmen within Scotland are bound to follow it, and fight under the convener of Edinburgh as aforesaid." According to an old tradition, this standard was used in the Holy Wars by a body of crusading citizens of Edinburgh, and was the first that was planted on the walls of Jerusalem, when that city was stormed by the Christian army under the famous Godfrey. But the real history of it seems to be this:—James III., a prince who had

"My reverend Clergy, look ye say
The best of thanksgiving ye ha'e,
And warste for a sunny day—
Carle, now the King's come!

"My Doctors, look that you agree,
Cure a' the town without a fee;
My Lawyers, dinna pike a plea—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Come forth, each sturdy Burgher's bairn,
That dints on wood or clanks on airm,
That fires the o'en or winds the pirm—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Come forward with the Blanket Blue; 5
Your sires were loyal men and true,
As Scotland's foemen oft might rue—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Scots downa loup, and rin, and rave;
We're steady folks, and something grave:
We'll keep the causeway firm and brave—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Sir Thomas, 8 thunder from your rock,
Till Pentland dinnles wi' the shock,
And lice wi' fire my snood o' smoke—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Melville, bring out your bands of blue,
A' Louden lads, baith stout and true,
With Eelho, Hope, and Cockburn too— 8
Carle, now the King's come!

"And you, who on yon bludiy braes
Compell'd the vanquish'd Despot's praise,
Rank out, rank out, my gallant Grays—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Cock o' the North, my Huntly bra',
Where are you with the Forty-twa? 10

virtues which the rude age in which he lived could not appreciate, having been detained for nine months in the Castle of Edinburgh by his factious nobles, was relieved by the citizens of Edinburgh, who assaulted the Castle and took it by surprise; on which occasion James presented the citizens with this banner, "with a power to display the same in defence of their king, country, and their own rights."—Note to this stanza in the "Account of the King's Visit," &c. Svo, 1822. 6 Sir Thomas Bradford, then commander of the forces in Scotland.

7 Edinburgh Castle.

8 Lord Melville was colonel of the Mid-Lothian Yeomanry Cavalry; Sir John Hope of Pinkie, Bart., major; and Robert Cockburn, Esq., and Lord Eelho, were captains in the same corps, to which Sir Walter Scott had formerly belonged.

9 The Scots Grays, headed by their gallant colonel, General Sir James Stewart of Coltness, Bart., were on duty at Edinburgh during the king's visit. Bonaparte's exclamation at Waterloo is well known:—"Ces beaux chevaux gris, comme ils bravissent!"

10 Marquis of Huntly, who since became the last Duke of Gordon, was colonel of the 42d Regiment, and died in 1836.
Ah! wae's my heart that ye're awa'—
Carle, now the King's come!

"But yonder come my canty Celts,
With dirk and pistols at their belts;
Thank God, we've still some plaids and kilts—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Lord, how the pibrochs groan and yell!
Macdonell's! ta'en the field himself,
Macleod comes branking o'er the fell—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Rend up your bow, each Archer spark,
For you're to guard him light and dark;
Faith, lads, for once ye've hit the mark—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Young Errol,² take the sword of state,
The sceptre, Panie-Morarachate;³
Knight Mareschal,⁴ see ye clear the gate—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Kind cummer, Leith, ye've been mis-set,
But dinna be upon the fret—
Ye'se hae the handsel of him yet,
Carle, now the King's come!

"My daughters, come with een see blue,
Your garlands weave, your blossoms strew;
He ne'er saw fairer flowers than you—
Carle, now the King's come!

"What shall we do for the propine—
We used to offer something fine,
But ne'er a groat's in pouch of mine—
Carle, now the King's come!

"Deil care—for that I'se never start,
We'll welcome him with Highland heart;
Whate'er we have he's get a part—
Carle, now the King's come!

"I'll show him mason-work this day—
None of your bricks of Babel clay,
But towers shall stand till Time's away—
Carle, now the King's come!

"I'll show him wit, I'll show him lair,
And gallant lads and lasses fair,
And what wad kind heart wish for mair?
Carle, now the King's come!

"Step out, Sir John,⁵ of projects rife,
Come win the thanks of an auld wife,
And bring him health and length of life—
Carle, now the King's come!"

From the Fortunes of Nigel.

1822.

MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. I.

Now Scot and English are agreed,
And Saunders hastes to cross the Tweed,
Where, such the splendors that attend him,
His very mother scarce had kenn'd him.
His metamorphosis behold,
From Glasgow frieze to cloth of gold;
His backword, with the iron hilt,
To rapier, fairly hatch'd and gilt;
Was ever seen a gallant braver!
His very bonnet's grown a beaver.

The Reformation.

(2.)—CHAP. II.

This, sir, is one among the Seignory,
Has wealth at will, and will to use his wealth,
And wit to increase it. Marry, his worst folly
Lies in a thriftless sort of charity,
That goes a-gadding sometimes after objects
Which wise men will not see when thrust upon them.

The Old Couple.

Sutherland, was permitted to act as deputy for his mother in that honorable office. After obtaining his Majesty's permission to depart for Dunrobin Castle, his place was supplied by the Honorable John M. Stuart, second son of the Earl of Moray.—Ed.

3 In more correct Gaelic orthography, Banamhorar-Chat, or the Great Lady (literally, Female Lord of the Chatte), the Celtic title of the Countess of Sutherland. "E'en unto this day, the country of Sutherland is yet called Chattey, the inhabitants Catteigh, and the Earl of Sutherland Morweir Cattey, in old Scottish or Irish; which language the inhabitants of this country doe still use."—Gordon's Genealogical History of the Earls of Sutherland, p. 18. It was determined by his Majesty that the right of carrying the sceptre lay with this noble family; and Lord Francis Leveson Gower (now Egerton), second son of the Countess (afterwards Duchess) of 1 Colonel Ronaldson Macdonell of Glengarry, who died in January, 1828.

2 The Earl of Errol is hereditary Lord High Constable of Scotland.

3 The author's friend and relation, the late Sir Alexander Keith, of Dunottar and Ravelston.

4 MS.: "Rise up, Sir John, of projects rife,
And wuss him health and length of life,
And win the thanks of an auld wife."

5 The Right Honorable Sir John Sinclair, Bart., author of The Code of Health and Longevity, &c., &c.,—the well-known patron and projector of national and patriotic plans and improvements innumerable,—died 21st December, 1835, in his eighty-second year.—Ed.
(3.)—CHAP. IV.
Ay, sir, the clouted shoe hath oftimes craft in't,
As says the rustic proverb; and your citizen,
In's program suit, gold chain, and well-black'd shoes,
Bears under his flat cap oftimes a brain
Wiser than burns beneath the cap and feather,
Or seethes within the statesman's velvet nightcap.

Read me my Riddle.

(4.)—CHAP. V.
Wherefore come ye not to court?
Certain 'tis the rarest sport;
There are silks and jewels glistening,
Prattling fools and wise men listening,
Bullies among brave men justling,
Beggars amongst nobles bustling;
Low-breath'd talkers, minion lispers,
Cutting honest throats by whispers;
Wherefore come ye not to court?
Skelton swears 'tis glorious sport.

Skelton Skeltonizeth.

(5.)—CHAP. VI.
Oh, I do know him—'tis the mouldy-lemon
Which our court wits will wet their lips withal,
When they would sauce their honey'd conversation
With somewhat sharper flavor.—Marry, sir,
That virtue's wellnigh left him—all the juice
That was so sharp and polgiant is squeezed out;
While the poor rind, although as sour as ever,
Must season soon the draft we give our grunters,
For two-legg'd things are weary on't.

The Chamberlain, a Comedy.

(6.)—CHAP. VII.
Things needful we have thought on; but the thing
Of all most needful—that which Scripture terms,
As if alone it merited regard,
The one thing needful—that's yet unconsider'd.

The Chamberlain.

(7.)—CHAP. VIII.
Ah! mark the matron well—and laugh not, Harry,
At her old steppie-hat and velvet guard—
I've call'd her like the ear of Dionysius;
I mean that car-form'd vault, built o'er the dungeon,
To catch the groans and discontented murmurs
Of his poor bondsmen.—Even so doth Martha
Drink up, for her own purpose, all that passes,
Or is supposed to pass, in this wide city—
She can retail it too, if that her profit
Shall call on her to do so; and retail it
For your advantage, so that you can make
Your profit jump with hers.

The Conspiracy.

(8.)—CHAP. X.
Did not thy fortune troll upon the wheels
Of yonder dancing cubs of mottled bone;
And drown it not, like Egypt's royal harlot,
Dissolving her rich pearl in the brimm'd wine-cup.
These are the arts, Lothario, which shrink acres
Into brief yards—bring sterling pounds to farthings
Credit to infamy; and the poor gull,
Who might have lived an honor'd, easy life,
To ruin, and an unregarded grave.

The Changes.

(9.)—CHAP. XII.
This is the very barn-yard,
Where muster daily the prime cocks o' the game,
Ruffle their pinions, crow till they are hoarse,
And spar about a barleycorn. Here, too, chickens,
The callow, unfledged brood of forward folly,
Learn first to rear the crest, and aim the spur,
And tune their note like full-plumbed Chanticleer.

The Bear Garden.

(10.)—CHAP. XIII.
Let the proud salmon gorge the feather'd hook,
Then strike, and then you have him.—He will wince;
Spin out your line that it shall whistle from you
Some twenty yards or so, yet you shall have him
Marry, you must have patience—the stout rock
Which is his trust hath edges something sharp;
And the deep pool hath ooze and sludge enough
To mar your fishing,—less you are more careful.

Albion, or the Double Kings.

(11.)—CHAP. XVI.
Give way—give way—I must and will have justice,
And tell me not of privilege and place;
Where I am injured, there I'll sue redress.
Look to it, every one who bars my access;
I have a heart to feel the injury,
A hand to right myself, and by my honor,
That hand shall grasp what gray-beard Law denies me.

The Chamberlain.

(12.)—CHAP. XVII.
Come hither, young one—Mark me! Thou art now
'Mongst men o' the sword, that live by reputation
More than by constant income—Single-suited
They are, I grant you; yet each single suit
Maintains, on the rough guess, a thousand followers—
And they be men who, hazarding their all,
Needful apparel, necessary income,
And human body, and immortal soul,
Do in the very deed but hazard nothing—
So strictly is that all bound in reversion
Clothes to the broker, income to the usurer,
And body to disease, and soul to the foul fiend;
Who laughs to see Soldadoes and fooladaces
Play better than himself his game on earth.

The Mohocks.

(13.)—CHAP. XVIII.
Mother. What! dazzled by a flash of Cupid's mirror,
With which the boy, as mortal urchins wont,
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

699

Flings back the sunbeam in the eye of passengers—
Then laughs to see them stumble!
Daughter. Mother! no—
It was a lightning-flash which dazzled me,
And never shall these eyes see true again.
Beef and Pudding, an Old English Comedy.

(14.)—CHAP. XIX.
By this good light, a wench of matchless mettle!
This were a leaguer-lass to love a soldier,
To bind his wounds, and kiss his bloody brow,
And sing a roundel as she helped to arm him,
Though the rough foeman's drums were beat so nigh,
They seem'd to bear the burden.

Old Play.

(15.)—CHAP. XX.
Credit me, friend, it hath been ever thus,
Since the ark rested on Mount Ararat.
False man hath sworn, and woman hath believed—
Repented and reproach'd, and then believed once more.

The New World.

(16.)—CHAP. XXI.
Rove not from pole to pole—the man lives here
Whose razor's only equal'd by his beer;
And where, in either sense, the cockney-put
May, if he pleases, get confounded cut.

On the Sign of an Alehouse kept by a Barber.

(17.)—CHAP. XXII.
Chance will not do the work—Chance sends the breeze;
But if the pilot slumber at the helm,
The very wind that wafts us towards the port
May dash us on the shelves.—The steersman's part is vigilance,
Blow it or rough or smooth.

Old Play.

(18.)—CHAP. XXIV.
This is the time—heaven's maiden-sentinel
Hath quitted her high watch—the lesser spangles
Are paling one by one; give me the ladder
And the short lever—bid Anthony
Keep with his carabine the wicket-gate;
And do thou bare thy knife and follow me,
For we will in and do it—darkness like this
Is dawning of our fortunes.

Old Play.

(19.)—CHAP. XXV.
Death finds us 'mid our playthings—snatches us,
As a cross nurse might do a wayward child,
From all our toys and baubles. His rough call
Unlooses all our favorite ties on earth;
And well if they are such as may be answer'd
In yonder world, where all is judged of truly.

Old Play.

(20.)—CHAP. XXVI.
Give us good voyage, gentle stream—we stun not
Thy sober ear with sounds of revelry;
Wake not the slumbering echoes of thy banks
With voice of flute and horn—we do but seek
On the broad pathway of thy swelling bosom
To glide in silent safety.

The Double Bridal.

(21.)—CHAP. XXVII.
This way lie safety and a sure retreat;
Yonder lie danger, shame, and punishment.
Most welcome danger then—Nay, let me say,
Though spoke with swelling heart—welcome e'en shame;
And welcome punishment—for, call me guilty,
I do but pay the tax that's due to justice;
And call me guiltless, then that punishment
Is shame to those alone who do inflict it.

The Tribunal.

(22.)—CHAP. XXIX.
How fares the man on whom good men would look
With eyes where scorn and censure combated,
But that kind Christian love hath taught the lesson—
That they who merit most contempt and hate,
Do most deserve our pity—

Old Play.

(23.)—CHAP. XXXI.
Marry, come up, sir, with your gentle blood!
Here's a red stream beneath this coarse blue doublet,
That warms the heart as kindly as if drawn
From the far source of old Assyrian kings,
Who first made mankind subject to their sway.

Old Play.

(24.)—CHAP. XXXV.
We are not worse at once—the course of evil
Begins so slowly, and from such slight source,
An infant's hand might stem its breach with clay;
But let the stream get deeper, and philosophy, —
Ay, and religion too,—shall strive in vain
To turn the headlong torrent.

Old Play.

From Peveril of the Peak.

1823.

MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. II.
Why then, we will have bellowing of beeves,
Broaching of barrels, brandishing of spigots;
Blood shall flow freely, but it shall be gore
Of herds and flocks, and venison and poultry,
Join'd to the brave heart's-blood of John-a-Barleycorn!

(2.)—CHAP. IV.
No, sir,—I will not pledge—I'm one of those Who think good wine needs neither bush nor preface
To make it welcome. If you doubt my word,
Fill the quart-cup, and see if I will choke on't.

(3.)—CHAP. VI.
You shall have no worse prison than my chamber,
Nor jailer than myself.

(4.)—CHAP. XVI.
Acasto. Can she not speak?
Oswald. If speech be only in accented sounds,
Framed by the tongue and lips, the maiden's dumb;
But if by quick and apprehensive look,
By motion, sign, and glance, to give each meaning,
Express as clothed in language, be term'd speech,
She hath that wondrous faculty; for her eyes,
Like the bright stars of heaven, can hold discourse,
Though it be mute and soundless.

(5.)—CHAP. XVII.
This is a love meeting? See, the maiden mourns,
And the sad suitor bends his looks on earth.
There's more hath pass'd between them than belongs
To Love's sweet sorrows.

(6.)—CHAP. XIX.
Now, hoist the anchor, mates—and let the sails
Give their broad bosom to the buxom wind,
Like lass that woes a lover.

(7.)—CHAP. XXII.
He was a fellow in a peasant's garb;
Yet one could censure you a woodcock's carving,
Like any courtier at the ordinary.

(8.)—CHAP. XXIV.
We meet, as men see phantoms in a dream,
Which glide and sigh, and sign, and move their lips,
But make no sound; or, if they utter voice,
'Tis but a low and undistinguish'd moaning,
Which has nor word nor sense of utter'd sound.

(9.)—CHAP. XXV.
The course of human life is changeful still
As is the fickle wind and wandering rill;

Or like the light dance which the wild breeze weaves
Amidst the faded race of fallen leaves;
Which now its breath bears down, now tosses high,
Beats to the earth, or wafts to middle sky.
Such, and so varied, the precarious play
Of fate with man, frail tenant of a day!

(10.)—CHAP. XXVI.
Necessity—thou best of peacemakers,
As well as surest prompter of invention—
Help us to composition!

(11.)—CHAP. XXVII.
— This is some creature of the elements,
Most like your sea-gull. He can wheel and whistle
His screaming song, e'en when the storm is loudest—
Take for his sheeted couch the restless foam
Of the wild wave-crest—slumber in the calm,
And dally with the storm. Yet 'tis a gull,
An arrant gull, with all this.

(12.)—CHAP. XXXI.
I fear the devil worst when gown and casock,
Or, in the lack of them, old Calvin's cloak,
Conceals his cloven hoof.

(13.)—CHAP. XXXII.
'Tis the black ban-dog of our jail—Pray look on him,
But at a wary distance—repose him not—
He bays not till he worries.

(14.)—CHAP. XXXVIII.
"Speak not of niceness, when there's chance of wreck,"
The captain said, as ladies writhed their neck
To see the dying dolphin flap the deck:
"If we go down, on us these gentry sup;
We dine upon them, if we haul them up.
Wise men applaud us when we eat the eaters,
As the devil laughs when keen folks cheat the cheaters."

(15.)—CHAP. XL.
—— Contentions fierce,
Ardent, and dire, spring from no petty cause.

(16.)—CHAP. XLI.
He came amongst them like a new-raised spirit,
To speak of dreadful judgments that impend,
And of the wrath to come.
(17.)—Chap. xlv.
And some for safety took the dreadful leap;
Some for the voice of Heaven seem'd calling on them;
Some for advancement, or for lucre's sake—
I leap'd in frolic.

The Dream.

(18.)—Chap. xlv.
High feasting was there there—the gilded roofs
Rung to the wassail-health—the dancer's step
Sprung to the chord responsive—the gay gamester
To fate's disposal flung his heap of gold,
And laugh'd alike when it increased or lessen'd;
Such virtue hath court-air to teach us patience
Which schoolmen preach in vain.

Why come ye not to Court?

(19.)—Chap. xlvi.
Here stand I tight and trim,
Quick of eye, though little of limb;
He who denieth the word I have spoken,
Betwixt him and me shall lances be broken.

Lay of the Little John de Saintré.

From Quentin Durward.

1823.

(1.)—Song—County Guy.

Ah! County Guy, the hour is nigh,
The sun has left the lea,
The orange flower perfumes the bower,
The breeze is on the sea.
The lark, his lay who thrill'd all day,
Sits hush'd his partner nigh;
Breeze, bird, and flower, confess the hour,
But where is County Guy?

The village maid steals through the shade,
Her shepherd's suit to hear;
To beauty shy, by lattice high,
Sings high-born cavalier.
The star of Love, all stars above,
Now reigns o'er earth and sky;
And high and low the influence know—
But where is County Guy?

Chap. iv.

(2.)—Mottoes.

(1.)—Chap. xi.

Painters show Cupid blind—Hath Hymen eyes?
Or is his sight warp'd by those spectacles
Which parents, guardians, and advisers, lend him,
That he may look through them on lands and mansions,
On jewels, gold, and all such rich donations,
And see their value ten times magnified?
—Methinks 'twill brook a question.

The Miseries of Enforced Marriage.

(2.)—Chap. xii.

This is a lecturer so skill'd in policy
That (no disparagement to Satan's cunning)
He well might read a lesson to the devil,
And teach the old seducer new temptations.

Old Play.

(3.)—Chap. xiv.

I see thee yet, fair France—thou favor'd land
Of art and nature—thou art still before me;
Thy sons, to whom their labor is a sport,
So well thy grateful soil returns its tribute;
Thy sunburnt daughters, with their laughing eyes
And glossy raven locks. But, favor'd France,
Thou hast had many a tale of woe to tell,
In ancient times as now.

Anonymous.

(4.)—Chap. xv.

He was a son of Egypt, as he told me,
And one descended from those dread magicians
Who waged rash war, when Israel dwelt in Gosben,
With Israel and her Prophet—matching rod
With his the sons of Levi's—and encountering Jehovah's miracles with incantations,
Till upon Egypt came the avenging Angel,
And those proud sages wept for their first-born,
As wept the unletter'd peasant.

Anonymous.

(5.)—Chap. xxiv.

Rescue or none, Sir Knight, I am your captive;
Deal with me what your nobleness suggests—
Thinking the chance of war may one day place you
Where I must now be reckon'd—'t is the roll
Of melancholy prisoners.

Anonymous.

(6.)—Chap. xxv.

No human quality is so well wove
In warp and woof, but there's some flaw in it,
I've known a brave man fly a shepherd's cur,
A wise man so demean him, drivelling idiocy
Had wellnigh been ashamed on't. For your crafty,
Your worldly-wise man, he, above the rest,
Weaves his own snare so fine, he's often caught in them.

Old Play.
From St. Ronan's Well.

1823.

MOTTOES.

(1.)—Chap. II.—The Guest.
Quis novus hic hospes?

_Dido apud Virgiliam._

Ch'm-maid!—The Gemman in the front parlor!
Boots' free Translation of the Æneid.

(2.)—Chap. III.
There must be government in all society—
Bees have their queen, and stag herds have their leader;
Rome had her Consuls, Athens had her Archons,
And we, sir, have our Managing Committee.
The Album of St. Ronan's.

(3.)—Chap. X.
Come, let me have thy counsel, for I need it;
Thou art of those who better help their friends
With sage advice, than usurers with gold,

Or brawlers with their swords—I'll trust to thee,
For I ask only from thee words, not deeds.

_The Devil hath met his Match._

(4.)—Chap. XI.
Nearest of blood should still be next in love;
And when I see these happy children playing,
While William gathers flowers for Ellen's ringlets,
And Ellen dresses flies for William's angle,
I scarce can think that in advancing life,
Coldness, unkindness, interest, or suspicion,
Will e'er divide that unity so sacred,
Which Nature bound at birth.

_Anonymous._

(5.)—Chap. XXXIII.
Oh! you would be a vestal maid, I warrant,
The bride of Heaven—Come—we may shake your purpose:
For here I bring in hand a jolly suitor
Hath ta'en degrees in the seven sciences
That ladies love best—He is young and noble,
Handsome and valiant, gay and rich, and liberal.

_The Nun._

(6.)—Chap. XXXII.
It comes—it wrings me in my parting hour,
The long-hid crime—the well-disguised guilt.
Bring me some holy priest to lay the spectre!

_Old Play._

(7.)—Chap. XXXV.
_Sedet post equitem atra cura——_

Still though the headlong cavalier,
O'er rough and smooth, in wild career,
Seems racing with the wind,
His sad companion—ghastly pale,
And darksome as a widow's veil,
Care—keeps her seat behind.

_Horace._

(8.)—Chap. XXXVIII.
What sheeted ghost is wandering through the storm?
For never did a maid of middle earth
Choose such a time or spot to vent her sorrows.

_Old Play._

(9.)—Chap. XXXIX.
Here come we to our close—for that which follows
Is but the tale of dull, unvaried misery.
Steep crags and headlong linns may court the pencil
Like sudden haps, dark plots, and strange adventures;
But who would paint the dull and fog-wrapt moor,
In its long tract of sterile desolation?

_Old Play._
The Bannatyne Club.

1823.

I.
Assist me, ye friends of Old Books and Old Wine,
To sing in the praises of sage Bannatyne,
Who left such a treasure of old Scottish lore
As enables each age to print one volume more.
One volume more, my friends, one volume more;
We’ll ransack old Banny for one volume more.

II.
And first, Allan Ramsay was eager to glean
From Bannatyne’s Hortus his bright Evergreen;
Two light little volumes (intended for four)
Still leave us the task to print one volume more.
One volume more, &c.

III.
His ways were not ours, for he cared not a pin
How much he left out, or how much he put in;
The truth of the reading he thought was a bore,
So this accurate age calls for one volume more.
One volume more, &c.

IV.
Correct and sagacious, then came my Lord Hailes,
And weigh’d every letter in critical scales,
But left out some brief words, which the prudish abhor,
And castrated Banny in one volume more.
One volume more, my friends, one volume more;
We’ll restore Banny’s manhood in one volume more.

V.
John Pinkerton next, and I’m truly concern’d
I can’t call that worthy so candid as learn’d;
He rail’d at the plain and blasphemed the claymore,
And set Scots by the ears in his one volume more.
One volume more, my friends, one volume more;
Celt and Goth shall be pleased with one volume more.

VI.
As bitter as gall, and as sharp as a razor,
And feeding on herbs as a Nebuchadnezzar,
His diet too acid, his temper too sour,
Little Ritson came out with his two volumes more.
But one volume, my friends, one volume more,
We’ll dine on roast-beef and print one volume more.

VII.
The stout Gothic yeditur, next on the roll,
With his beard like a brush and as black as a coal,
And honest Greysteil that was true to the core,
Lent their hearts and their hands each to one volume more.
One volume more, &c.

VIII.
Since by these single champions what wonders were done,
What may not be achieved by our Thirty and One?
Law, Gospel, and Commerce, we count in our corps,
And the Trade and the Press join for one volume more.
One volume more, &c.

IX.
Ancient libels and contraband books, I assure ye,
We’ll print as secure from Exchequer or Jury;
Then hear your Committee, and let them count o’er
The Chiefl they intend in their three volumes more.
Three volumes more, &c.

X.
They’ll produce you King Jamie, the sapient and Sext,
And the Rob of Dumblane and her Bishops come next;
One tome miscellaneous they’ll add to your store,
Resolving next year to print four volumes more.
Four volumes more, my friends, four volumes more;
Pay down your subscriptions for four volumes more.

This club was instituted in the year 1822, for the publication or reprint of rare and curious works connected with the history and antiquities of Scotland. It consisted at first of a very few members,—gradually extended to one hundred, at which number it has now made a final pause. They assume the name of the Bannatyne Club from George Bannatyne, of whom little is known beyond that prodigious effort which produced his present honors, and is, perhaps, one of the most singular instances of its kind which the literature of any country exhibits. His labors as an amanuensis were undertaken during the time of pestilence, in 1568. The dread of infection had induced him to retire into solitude, and under such circumstances he had the energy to form and execute Pinkerton, Ritson, and Herd, &c., in the "Introductory Remarks on Popular Poetry," ante, p. 337, et seq.

4 James Sibbald, editor of Scottish Poetry, &c. "The Yeditur" was the name given him by the late Lord Eldin, then Mr. John Clerk, advocate. The description of him here is very accurate.

5 David Herd, editor of Songs and Historical Ballads. Two vols. He was called Greysteil by his intimates, from having been long in unsuccessful quest of the romance of that name.
the plan of saving the literature of the whole nation; and, undisturbed by the general mourning for the dead and general tears of the living, to devote himself to the task of collecting and recording the triumphs of human genius in the poetry of his age and country; thus, amid the wreck of all that was mortal, employing himself in preserving the lays by which immortality is at once given to others and obtained for the writer himself. He informs us of some of the numerous difficulties he had to contend with in this self-imposed task. The volume containing his labors, deposited in the library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, is no less than eight hundred pages in length, and very neatly and closely written, containing nearly all the ancient poetry of Scotland now known to exist.

This Caledonian association, which boasts several names of distinction both from rank and talent, has assumed rather a broader foundation than the parent society, the Roxburgh Club in London, which, in its plan, being restricted to the reprinting of single tracts, each executed at the expense of an individual member, it follows as almost a necessary consequence that no volume of considerable size has emanated from it, and its range has been thus far limited in point of utility. The Bannatyne, holding the same system with respect to the ordinary species of club reprints, levies, moreover, a fund among its members of about £500 a year, expressly to be applied for the editing and printing of works of acknowledged importance, and likely to be attended with expense beyond the reasonable bounds of an individual’s contribution. In this way either a member of the club or a competent person under its patronage superintends a particular volume or set of volumes. Upon these occasions a very moderate number of copies are thrown off for general sale; and those belonging to the club are only distinguished from the others by being printed on the paper and ornamented with the decorations peculiar to the society. In this way several useful and eminently valuable works have recently been given to the public for the first time, or at least with a degree of accuracy and authenticity which they had never before attained.—Abridged from the Quarterly Review—Art. "Pitozairn’s Ancient Criminal Trials," February, 1831.

To J. G. Lockhart, Esq.

ON THE COMPOSITION OF MAIDA’S EPIPHYS.

1824.

"Maidæ Marmorea dormis sub imagine Maida! Ad janum domini sit tili terra levius."

DEAR JOHN,—I some time ago wrote to inform his Fat worship of joves, misprinted for dormis; But that several Southerns assured me the Janum Was a twitch to both ears of Ass Prisician’s cranium.

1 There is an excellent story (but too long for quotation) in the Memoirs of the Somervilles (vol. i. p. 240) about an old lord of that family who, when he wished preparations to be made for high feasting at his castle of Cowthally, used to send on a billet inscribed with this lachonian phrase, “Speates and raxes,” i.e. splits and ranges. Upon one occasion Lady Somerville (being newly married, and not yet skilled in her husband’s hieroglyphics) read the mandate as spears and jacks.

You, perhaps, may observe that one Lionel Berguer In defence of our blunder appears a stout arguer: But at length I have settled, I hope, all these clatters, By a rovet in the papers—fine place for such matters, I have, therefore, to make it for once my command, sir, That my gudeson shall leave the whole thing in my hand, sir, And by no means accomplish what James says you threaten, Some banter in Blackwood to claim your dog-Latin. I have various reasons of weight, on my word, sir, For pronouncing a step of this sort were absurd, sir.— Firstly, erudite sir, ‘twas against your advising I adopted the lines this monstrosity lies in; For you modestly hinted my English translation Would become better far such a dignified station. Second—how, in God’s name, would my bacon be saved By not having writ what I clearly engraved? On the contrary, I, on the whole, think it better To be whipped as the thief, than his lousy resetter. Thirdly—don’t you perceive that I don’t care a boddle Although fifty false metres were flung at my noddle, For my back is as broad and as hard as Benlomon’s, And I treat as I please both the Greeks and the Romans; Whereas the said heathens might rather look serious At a kick on their drum from the scribe of Valerius. And, fourthly and lastly—it is my good pleasure To remain the sole source of that murderous measure. So stet pro ratione voluntas—be tractile, Invade not, I say, my own dear little dactyl; If you do, you’ll occasion a breach in our intercourse: To-morrow will see me in town for the winter course, But not at your door, at the usual hour, sir, My own pye-house daughter’s good prog to devour, sir. Ergo—peace!—on your duty, your squeamishness throttle, And we’ll soothe Prisician’s spleen with a canny third bottle. A fig for all dactyls, a fig for all spondees, A fig for all dunces and dominie Grundys; A fig for dry thrapples, south, north, east, and west, sir, Speates and raxes were five for a famishing guest, sir; And as Fatsman and I have some topic for haver, he’ll Be invited, I hope, to meet me and Dame Peveril, Upon whom, to say nothing of Oury and Anne, you a Dog shall be deemed if you fasten your Janua.

2 Futsman was one of Mr. James Ballantyne’s many alises. Another (to which Constable mostly adhered) was Mr. “Baskettail”—an allusion to the celebrated printer Baskerville.
Lyrical and Miscellaneous Pieces.

Lines,

Addressed to Monsieur Alexandre, the Celebrated Ventriloquist.

1824.

Of yore, in old England, it was not thought good
To carry two visages under one hood;
What should folk say to you? who have faces such plenty,
That from under one hood you last night show'd us twenty!

Stand forth, arch deceiver, and tell us in truth,
Are you handsome or ugly, in age or in youth?
Man, woman, or child—a dog or a mouse?
Or are you, at once, each live thing in the house?
Each live thing, did I ask?—each dead implement too—
A workshop in your person,—saw, chisel, and screw!
Above all, are you one individual? I know
You must be at least Alexandre and Co.
But I think you're a troop, an assemblage, a mob,
And that I, as the Sheriff, should take up the job,
And instead of rehearsing your wonders in verse,
Must read you the Riot Act, and bid you disperse.

Abbotsford, 23d April.

Epilogue

To the Drama Founded on "St. Ronan's Well."

1824.

"After the play the following humorous address (ascribed to an eminent literary character) was spoken with infinite effect by Mr. Mackay in the character of Meg Dodds."—Edinburgh Weekly Journal, 9th June, 1824.

Enter Meg Dodds, encircled by a crowd of unruly boys, whom a town's-officer is driving off.

That's right, friend—drive the gauntlings back,
And lend you muckle ane a whack;
Your Embro' bairns are grown a pack
Sae proud and saucy,
They scarce will let an auld wife walk
Upon your causey.

I've seen the day they would been scaur'd
Wi' the Tolbooth, or wi' the Guard,
Or maybe wud hae some regard
For Jamie Laing,

The Water-hole was right weel wared
On sic a gang.

But whar's the gude Tolbooth? gane now?
Whar's the auld Claught,
Whar's Jamie Laing? and whar's John Doo?
And whar's the Weigh-house?

Deil hae't I see but what is new,
Except the Playhouse!

Yoursells are changed frae head to heel;
There's some that gar the causeway reel
With clashing hufe and rattling wheel,
And horses canterin',
Wha's fathers daund'r'd hame as weel
Wi' lass and lantern.

Myself being in the public line,
I look for hows I kenn'd lang syne,
Whar gentles used to drink gude wine,
And eat cheap dinners;
But deil a soul gangs there to dine,
Of saints or sinners!

Fortune's and Hunter's gane, alas!
And Bayle's is lost in empty space;

1 When Monsieur Alexandre, the celebrated ventriloquist, was in Scotland, in 1824, he paid a visit to Abbotsford, where he entertained his distinguished host, and the other visitors, with his unrivalled imitations. Next morning, when he was about to depart, Sir Walter felt a good deal embarrassed as to the sort of acknowledgment he should offer; but at length, resolving that it would probably be most agreeable to the young foreigner to be paid in professional coin, if in any, he stepped aside for a few minutes, and, on returning, presented him with this epigram. The reader need hardly be reminded that Sir Walter Scott held the office of sheriff of the county of Selkirk.—Scotch newspaper, 1830.

2 The lines, with this date, appeared in the Edinburgh Annual Register of 1824.

3 James Laing was one of the depute clerks of the city of Edinburgh, and in his official connection with the police and the Council Chamber, his name was a constant terror to evil doers. He died in February, 1806.

4 The Watch-hole.

5 The Tolbooth of Edinburgh—the Heart of Mid-Lothian—was pulled down in 1817.

6 The ancient Town Guard. The reduced remnant of this body of police was finally disbanded in 1817.

7 John Doo or Dhu, a terrific-looking and high-spirited member of the Town Guard, and of whom there is a print by Kay, etched in 1784.

8 The Weigh-house, situated at the head of the West Bow, Lawnmarket, and which had long been looked upon as an incumbrance to the street, was demolished in order to make way for the royal procession to the Castle, which took place on the 22d of August, 1822.

9 Fortune's Tavern, a house on the west side of the Old Stamp Office Close, High Street, and which was, in the early part of the last century, the mansion of the Earl of Eclisfoun. The Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the day held his levees and dinners in this tavern.

10 Hunter's, another once much-frequented tavern, in Writer's Court, Royal Exchanges.

11 Bayle's Tavern and Coffee-house, originally on the North Bridge, east side, afterwards in Shakespeare Square, but removed to admit of the opening of Waterloo Place. Such was the dignified character of this house that the waiter always appeared in full dress, and nobody was admitted who had not a white neckcloth—then considered an indispensable insignium of a gentleman.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

706

And now if folk would splice a brace,
Or crack a bottle,
They gang to a new-fangled place
They ca' a Hottie.

The deevil hottle them for Meg!
They are sae greedy and sae gleug,
That if ye're served but wi' an egg
(And that's pair pickin'),
In comes a chiel and makes a leg,
And charges chicken!

"And wha may ye be," gin ye speer,
"That brings your auld-wurld clavers here?"

Troth, if there's anybody near
That kens the roads,
I'll hand ye Burgundy to beer,
He kens Meg Dodds.

I come a piece frae west o' Currie;
And, since I see you're in a hurry,
Your patience I'll nae langer worry,
But be sue crouse
As speak a word for ane Will Murray,¹
That keeps this house.

Plays are auld-fashion'd things, in truth,
And ye've seen wonders mair uncouth;
Yet actors shouldna suffer drouch,
Or want of dramock,
Although they speak but wi' their mouth,
Not with their stomack.

But ye tak care of a' folk's pantry;
And surely to hae stoen sentry
Ower this big house (that's far frae rent-free)
For a lone sister,
Is claims as gude's to be a ventri—
How'st ca'd?—loquier.

Weel, sirs, gude'en, and have a care
The bairns mak fun o' Meg nae mair;
For gin they do, she tells you fair,
And without failzie,
As sure as ever ye sit there,
She'll tell the Bailie.

Epilogue.²

1824.

THE sages—for authority, pray look
Seneca's morals, or the copy-book—

¹ Mr. William Murray became manager of the Edinburgh Theatre in 1815.
² "I recovered the above with some difficulty. I believe

From Redgauntlet.

1824.

"It was but three nights ago that, worn out by the uniformity of my confinement, I had manifestly more symptoms of despondence than I had before exhibited, which I conceive may have attracted the attention of the domestics, through whom the circumstances might transpire. On the next morning the following lines lay on my table; but how conveyed it was never spoken, but written for some play, afterwards withdrawn, in which Mrs. H. Siddons was to have spoken it in the character of Queen Mary."—Extract from a Letter of Sir Walter Scott to Mr. Constable, 22d October, 1824.
there I cannot tell. The hand in which they are written is a beautiful Italian manuscript."—Dairsie Latimer's Journal, chap. x.

As lords their laborers' hire delay,
Fate quits our toil with hopes to come,
Which, if far short of present pay,
Still owes a debt and names a sum.

Quit not the pledge, frail sufferer, then;
Although a distant date be given;
Despair is treason towards man,
And blasphemy to Heaven.

From the Betrothed.

1825.

(1.)—SONG—SOLDIER, WAKE.

I.
Soldier, wake—the day is peeping,
Honor ne'er was won in sleeping,
Never when the sunbeams still
Lay unreflected on the hill:
'Tis when they are glinted back
From axe and armor, spear and jack,
That they promise future story
Many a page of deathless glory,
Shields, that are the foeman's terror,
Ever are the morning's mirror.

II.
Arm and up—the morning beam
Hath call'd the rustic to his team,
Hath call'd the falconer to the lake,
Hath call'd the huntsman to the brake;
The early student ponders o'er
His dusty tomes of ancient lore.
Soldier, wake—thy harvest, fame;
Thy study, conquest; war, thy game.
Shield, that would be foeman's terror,
Still should gleam the morning's mirror.

III.
Poor hire repays the rustic's pain;
More paltry still the sportsman's gain;
Vainest of all, the student's theme
Ends in some metaphysic dream:
Yet each is up, and each has toil'd
Since first the peep of dawn has smiled;
And each is eagerer in his aim
Than he who barters life for fame.
Up, up, and arm thee, son of terror!
Be thy bright shield the morning's mirror.

(2.)—SONG—THE TRUTH OF WOMAN.

I.
Woman's faith, and woman's trust—
Write the characters in dust;
Stamp them on the running stream,
Print them on the moon's pale beam,
And each evanescent letter
Shall be clearer, firmer, better,
And more permanent, I ween,
Than the thing those letters mean.

II.
I have strain'd the spider's thread
'Gainst the promise of a maid;
I have weigh'd a grain of sand
'Gainst her plight of heart and hand;
I told my true love of the token,
How her faith proved light, and her word was broken:
Again her word and truth she plight,
And I believed them again ere night.

(3.)—SONG—I ASK'D OF MY HARp.

—"The minstrel took from his side a rote, and striking, from time to time, a Welsh descant, sung at others a lay, of which we can offer only a few fragments, literally translated from the ancient language in which they were chanted, premising that they are in that excursive symbolical style of poetry which Taliesin, Llewarch Hen, and other bards, had derived perhaps from the time of the Druids:"—

I ask'd of my harp, "Who hath injured thy chords?"
And she replied, "The crooked finger, which I mock'd in my tune."

A blade of silver may be bended—a blade of steel abideth—
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance endureth.

The sweet taste of mead passeth from the lips,
But they are long corroded by the juice of wormwood:
The lamb is brought to the shambles, but the wolf
Rangeth the mountain;
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance endureth.

I ask'd the red-hot iron, when it glimmer'd on the anvil,
"Wherefore lower thou longer than the firebrand?"
"I was born in the dark mine, and the brand in the pleasant Greenwood."
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance endureth.

I ask'd the green oak of the assembly, wherefore its boughs were dry and scar'd like the horns of the stag;
And it show'd me that a small worm had gnaw'd its roots.
The boy who remember'd the scourge, undid the wicket of the castle at midnight.
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance endureth.

Lightning destroyeth temples, though their spires pierce the clouds;
Storms destroy armadas, though their sails intercept the gale.
He that is in his glory falleth, and that by a contemptible enemy.
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance endureth.

(Chap. xxxi.

(4.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. II.
In Madoc's tent the clarion sounds,
With rapid clangor hurried far;
Each hill and dale the note rebounds,
But when return the sons of war!
Thou, born of stern Necessity,
Dull Peace! the valley yields to thee,
And owns thy melancholy sway.

Welsh Poem.

(2.)—CHAP. VII.
Oh sadly shines the morning sun
On leaueger'd castle wall,
When bastion, tower, and battlement,
Seem nodding to their fall.

Old Ballad.

(3.)—CHAP. XII.
Now, all ye ladies of fair Scotland,
And ladies of England that happy would prove,
Marry never for houses, nor marry for land,
Nor marry for nothing but only love.

Family Quarrels.

(4.)—CHAP. XIII.
Too much rest is rust,
There's ever chear in changing;
We tyne by too much trust,
So we'll be up and ranging.

Old Song.

(5.)—CHAP. XVII.
Ring out the merry bells, the bride approaches.
The blush upon her cheek has shamed the morning,
For that is dawning palely.
Grant, good saints,
These clouds betoken nought of evil omen!

Old Play.

(6.)—CHAP. XXVII.
Julia.
—— Gentle sir,
You are our captive—but we'll use you so,
That you shall think your prison joys may match

Whate'er your liberty hath known of pleasure,
Roderick. No, fairest, we have trifled here too long;
And, lingering to see your roses blossom,
I've let my laurels wither.

Old Play.

From the Talisman.

1825.

(1.)—AHRIMAN.

—— "So saying, the Saracen proceeded to chant verses, very ancient in the language and structure, which some have thought derive their source from the worshippers of Arimanes, the Evil Principle:"—

Dark Ahriman, whom Irak still Holds origin of woe and ill!
When, bending at thy shrine,
We view the world with troubled eye,
Where see we 'neath the extended sky
An empire matching thine?

If the Benign Power can yield
A fountain in the desert field,
Where weary pilgrims drink,
Thine are the waves that lash the rock,
Thine the tornado's deadly shock,
Where countless navies sink!

Or if He bid the soil dispense
Balsams to cheer the sinking sense,
How few can they deliver
From lingering pains, or pang intense,
Red Fever, spotted Pestilence,
The arrows of thy quiver!

Chief in Man's bosom sits thy sway,
And frequent, while in words we pray
Before another throne,
Whate'er of specious form be there,
The secret meaning of the prayer
Is, Ahriman, thine own.

Say, hast thou feeling, sense, and form,
Thunder thy voice, thy garments storm,
As Eastern Magi say,
With sentient soul of hate and wrath,
And wings to sweep thy deadly path,
And fangs to tear thy prey?

Or art thou mix'd in Nature's source,
An ever-operating force,
Converting good to ill;
An evil principle innate,
Contending with our better fate,
And oh! victorious still?

How'er it be, dispute is vain.
On all without thou holdst thy reign,
Nor less on all within;
Each mortal passion's fierce career,
Love, hate, ambition, joy, and fear,
Thou goadest into sin.

When'er a sunny gleam appears,
To brighten up our vale of tears,
Thou art not distant far;
Mid such brief solace of our lives,
Thou whett'st our very banquet-knives
To tools of death and war.

Thus, from the moment of our birth,
Long as we linger on the earth,
Thou rule'st the fate of men;
Thine are the pangs of life's last hour,
And—who dare answer?—is thy power,
Dark Spirit! ended then?

Chap. iii.

(2.)—SONG OF BLONDEL.—THE BLOODY VEST.

"The song of Blondel was, of course, in the Norman language; but the verses which follow express its meaning and its manner:"

'Twas near the fair city of Benevent,
When the sun was setting on bough and bent,
And knights were preparing in bower and tent,
On the eve of the Baptist's tournament;
When in Lincoln green a stripling gent,
Well seeming a page by princess sent,
Wander'd the camp, and, still as he went,
Inquired for the Englishman, Thomas a Kent.

Far hath he fared, and farther must fare,
Till he finds his pavilion, nor stately nor rare,—
Little save iron and steel was there;
And, as lacking the coin to pay armorer's care,
With his sinewy arms to the shoulders bare,
The good knight with hammer and file did repair
The mail that to-morrow must see him wear,
For the honor of Saint John and his lady fair.

"Thus speaks my lady," the page said he,
And the knight bent lowly both head and knee,
"She is Benevent's Princess so high in degree,
And thou art as lowly as knight may well be—
He that would climb so lofty a tree,
Or spring such a gulf as divides her from thee,
Must dare some high deed, by which all men may see
His ambition is back'd by his high chivalry.

"Therefore thus speaks my lady," the fair page he said,
And the knight lowly louted with hand and with head,
"Fling aside the good armor in which thou art clad,
And don thou this weed of her night-gear instead,
For a hauberk of steel, a kirtle of thread:
And charge, thus attired, in the tournament dread,
And fight as thy wont is where most blood is shed,
And bring honor away, or remain with the dead."

Untroubled in his look, and untroubled in his breast,
The knight the weed hath taken, and reverently hath kiss'd:
"Now bless'd be the moment, the messenger be blest!
Much honor'd do I hold me in my lady's high behest;
And say unto my lady, in this dear night-weed dress'd,
To the best arm'd champion I will not veil my crest;
But if I live and bear me well 'tis her turn to take the test."

Here, gentle, ends the foremost fytte of the Lay of the Bloody Vest.

THE BLOODY VEST.

FYTTE SECOND.

The Baptist's fair morrow beheld gallant feats—
There was winning of honor, and losing of seats—
There was hewing with falchions, and splintering of staves,
The victors won glory, the vanquish'd won graves,
Oh, many a knight there fought bravely and well,
Yet one was accounted his peers to excel,
And 'tis he whose sole armor on body and breast
Seem'd the weed of a damsel when bounte for her rest.

There were some dealt him wounds that were bloody and sore,
But others respected his plight, and forbore.
"It is some oath of honor," they said, "and I trow,
'Twere unknighthly to slay him achieving his vow."
Then the Prince, for his sake, bade the tournament cease,
He flung down his warer, the trumpets sung peace;
And the judges declare, and competitors yield,
That the Knight of the Night-gear was first in the field.

The feast it was nigh, and the mass it was nigher,
When before the fair Princess low louted a squire,
And deliver'd a garment unseemly to view,
With sword-cut and spear-thrust all hack'd and pierced through;
All rent and all tatter'd, all clotted with blood,
With foam of the horses, with dust, and with mud,
Not the point of that lady's small finger, I ween,
Could have rested on spot was unsullied and clean.

"This token my master, Sir Thomas a Kent,
Restores to the Princess of fair Benevent;
SCOTT'S

He that climbs the tall tree has won right to the fruit;
He that leaps the wide gulf should prevail in his suit;
Through life's utmost peril the prize I have won,
And now must the faith of my mistress be shown:
For she who prompts knight on such danger to run
Must avouch his true service in front of the sun.

"I restore," says my master, 'the garment I've worn,
And I claim of the Princess to don it in turn;
For its stains and its rents she should prize it the more,
Since by shame 'tis unsullied, though crimson'd with gore.'"
Then deep blush'd the Princess, yet kiss'd she and press'd
The blood-spotted robe to her lips and her breast.
"Go tell my true knight, church and chamber shall show
If I value the blood on this garment or no."

And when it was time for the nobles to pass
In solemn procession to minster and mass,
The first walk'd the Princess in purple and pall,
But the blood-besmear'd night-robe she wore over all;
And eke in the hall, where they all sat at dine,
When she kneel'd to her father and proffer'd the wine,
Over all her rich robes and state jewels she wore
That wimple unseemly bedabbled with gore.

Then lords whisper'd ladies, as well you may think,
And ladies replied with nod, titter, and wink;
And the Prince, who in anger and shame had look'd down,
Turn'd at length to his daughter, and spoke with a frown:
"Now since thou hast publish'd thy folly and guilt,
E'en alone with thy hand for the blood thou hast spilt;
Yet sore for your boldness you both will repent,
When you wander as exiles from fair Benevent."

Then out spoke stout Thomas, in hall where he stood,
Exhausted and feeble, but dauntless of mood:
"The blood that I lost for this daughter of thine,
I pour'd forth as freely as flask gives its wine;
And if for my sake she breaks penance and blame,
Do not doubt I will save her from suffering and shame;
And light will she reck of thy princeedom and rent,
When I hail her, in England, the Countess of Kent."

(3.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. IX.
This is the Prince of Liceces; fever, plague,
Cold rheum, and hot podagra, do but look on him,
And quit their grasp upon the tortured sinews.

Anonymous.

(2.)—CHAP. XI.
One thing is certain in our Northern land;
Allow that birth, or valor, wealth, or wit,
Give each precedence to their possessor,
Envy, that follows on such eminence,
As comes the lyme-hound on the roebuck's trace,
Shall pull them down each one.

Sir David Lindsay.

(3.)—CHAP. XIII.
You talk of Gayety and Innocence!
The moment when the fatal fruit was eaten,
They parted ne'er to meet again; and Malice
Has ever since been playmate to light Gayety,
From the first moment when the smiling infant
Destroys the flower or butterfly he toys with,
To the last chuckle of the dying miser,
Who on his deathbed laughs his last to hear
His wealthy neighbor has become a bankrupt.

Old Play.

(4.)—CHAP. XVI.
'Tis not her sense—for sure, in that
There's nothing more than human common;
And all her wit is only chat,
Like any other woman.

Song.

(5.)—CHAP. XVII.
Were every hair upon his head a life,
And every life were to be supplicated
By numbers equal to those hairs quadrupled,
Life after life should out like waning stars
Before the daybreak—or as festive lamps,
Which have lent lustre to the midnight revel,
Each after each are quench'd when guests depart!

Old Play.

(6.)—CHAP. XIX.
Must we then sheathe our still victorious sword;
Turn back our forward step, which ever trod
O'er foemen's necks the onward path of glory;
Unclap the mail, which with a solemn vow,
In God's own house we hung upon our shoulders;
That vow as unaccomplish'd as the promise
Which village nurses make to still their children,
And after think no more of?

The Crusade, a Tragedy.

(7.)—CHAP. XX.
When beauty leads the lion in her toils,
Such are her charms, he dare not raise his mane,
Far less expand the terror of his fangs;
So great Aleides made his club a distaff,
And spun to please fair Omphalé.

Anonymous.

(8.)—CHAP. XXIII.
'Mid these wild scenes Enchantment waves her hand,
To change the face of the mysterious land;
Till the bewildering scenes around us seem
The vain productions of a feverish dream.

_Astolpho, a Romance._

(9.)—CHAP. XXIV.
— A grain of dust
Soiling our cup will make our sense reject
Fastidiously the draught which we did thirst for;
A rusted nail, placed near the faithful compass,
Will sway it from the truth, and wreck the argosy.
Even this small cause of anger and disgust
Will break the bonds of amity 'mongst princes,
And wreck their noblest purposes.

_The Crusade._

(10.)—CHAP. XXVI.
The tears I shed must ever fall!
I weep not for an absent swain,
For time may happier hours recall,
And parted lovers meet again.

I weep not for the silent dead;
Their pains are past, their sorrows o'er,
And those that loved their steps must tread,
When death shall join to part no more.

But worse than absence, worse than death,
She wept her lover's sullied fame,
And, fired with all the pride of birth,
She wept a soldier's injured name.

_Ballad._

---

Life of Napoleon

_JUNE, 1825._

While Scott was engaged in writing the _Life of Napoleon_, Mr. Lockhart says,—"The rapid accumulation of books and MSS. was at once flattering and alarming; and one of his notes to me, about the middle of June, had these lines by way of postscript:

When with Poetry dealing,
Room enough in a sheltering
Neither cabin nor hovel
Too small for a novel:
Though my back I should rub
On Diogenes' tub,
How my fancy could prance
In a dance of romance!
But my house I must swap
With some Prodigal chap,
Ere I grapple, God bless me! with Emperor Nap."

---

From Woodstock

1826.

(1.)—AN HOUR WITH THEE.

An hour with thee!—When earliest day
Dapples with gold the eastern gray,
Oh, what can frame my mind to bear
The toil and turmoil, care and care,
New griefs, which coming hours unfold,
And sad remembrance of the old?

One hour with thee.

One hour with thee!—When burning June
Waves his red flag at pitch of noon,
What shall repay the faithful swain
His labor on the sultry plain,
And more than cave or sheltering bough,
Cool feverish blood, and throbbing brow?—

One hour with thee.

One hour with thee!—When sun is set,
Oh, what can teach me to forget
The thankless labors of the day;
The hopes, the wishes, flung away;
The increasing wants, and lessening gains,
The master's pride, who scorches my pains?—

One hour with thee.

Chap. xxvi.

(2.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—CHAP. II.

Come forth, old man—Thy daughter's side
Is now the fitting place for thee:
When Time hath quell'd the oak's bold pride,
The youthful tendril yet may hide
The ruins of the parent tree.

(2.)—CHAP. III.

Now, ye wild blades, that make loose inns your stage,
To vapor forth the acts of this sad age,
Stout Edgehill fight, the Newberries and the West,
And northern clashes, where you still fought best;
Your strange escapes, your dangers void of fear,
When bullets flew between the head and ear,
Whether you fought by Damme or the Spirit,
Of you I speak.

_Legend of Captain Jones._

(3.)—CHAP. IV.

_Yon path of greensward
Winds round by sparry grot and gay pavilion;
There is no flint to gall thy tender foot,
There's ready shelter from each breeze or shower.—
But Duty guides not that way—see her stand,

---
With wand entwined with amaranth, near yon cliffs.
Oft where she leads thy blood must mark thy footsteps,
Oft where she leads thy head must bear the storm,
And thy shrunk form endure heat, cold, and hunger;
But she will guide thee up to noble heights,
Which he who gains seems native of the sky,
While earthly things lie stretch'd beneath his feet,
Diminish'd, shrunk, and valueless——
Anonymous.

(4.)—CHAP. V.
My tongue pnts slowly under this new language,
And starts and stumbles at these uncouth phrases.
They may be great in worth and weight, but hang
Upon the native gibbosity of my language
Like Saul's plate-armor on the shepherd boy,
Encumbering and not arming him.

J. B.

(5.)—CHAP. X.
Here we have one head
Upon two bodies—your two-headed bullock
Is but an ass to such a prodigy.
These two have but one meaning, thought, and counsel;
And when the single noddle has spoke out,
The four legs scrape assent to it.

Old Play.

(6.)—CHAP. XIV.
Deeds are done on earth
Which have their punishment ere the earth closes
Upon the perpetrators. Be it the working
Of the remorse-stir'd fancy, or the vision,
Distinct and real, of unearthly being,
All ages witness that beside the couch
Of the fell homicide oft stalks the ghost
Of him he slew, and shows the shadowy wound.

Old Play.

(7.)—CHAP. XVII.
We do that in our zeal,
Our calmer moments are afraid to answer.
Anonymous.

(8.)—CHAP. XXIV.
The deadliest snakes are those which, twined 'mongst flowers,
Blend their bright coloring with the varied blossoms,
Their fierce eyes glittering like the spangled dew-drop;
In all so like what nature has most harmless,
That sportive innocence, which dreads no danger,
Is poison'd unawares.

Old Play.

Lines to Sir Cuthbert Sharp.

1827.

"SIR CUTHBERT SHARP, who had been particularly kind and attentive to Scott when at Sunderland, happened, in writing to him on some matter of business, to say he hoped he had not forgotten his friends in that quarter. Sir Walter's answer to Sir Cuthbert (who had been introduced to him by his old and dear friend Mr. Surtees of Mainsforth) began thus:—

Forget thee? No! my worthy sire!
Forget blithe mirth and gallant cheer!
Death sooner stretch me on my bier!
Forget thee? No.

Forget the universal shout!
When "canny Sunderland" spoke out—
A truth which knaves affect to doubt—
Forget thee? No.

Forget you? No—though now-a-day
I've heard your knowing people say,
Disown the debt you cannot pay,
You'll find it far the thriftiest way—
But I?—Oh no.

Forget your kindness found for all room,
In what, though large, seen'd still a small room,
Forget my Surtees in a ball-room—
Forget you? No.

Forget your sprightly dumbdy-diddles,
And beauty tripping to the fiddles,
Forget my lovely friends the Liddells—
Forget you? No.

"So much for oblivion, my dear Sir C.; and now, having dismounted from my Pegasus, who is rather spavined, I charge a-foot, like an old dragoon as I am," &c. &c.—Life of Scott, vol. ix. p. 165.

From Chronicles of the Canon-gate.

1827.

MOTTOES.

(1.) THE TWO DROVERS.

CHAP. II.

WERE ever two such loving friends!—
How could they disagree?

1 An allusion to the enthusiastic reception of the Duke of Wellington at Sunderland.—Ed.
Lyric and Miscellaneous Pieces. 713

Oh thus it was he loved him dear,
And thought how to requite him,
And having no friend left but he,
He did resolve to fight him.

Duke upon Duke.

(2.)—MY AUNT MARGARET'S MIRROR.

There are times
When Fancy plays her gambols, in despite
Even of our watchful senses, when in sooth
Substance seems shadow, shadow substance seems,
'Twixt that which is and is not, seems dissolved,
As if the mental eye gain'd power to gaze
Beyond the limits of the existing world,
Such hours of shadowy dreams I better love
Than all the gross realities of life.

Anonymous.

From the Fair Maid of Perth.

1828.

(1.)—THE LAY OF POOR LOUISE.\(^1\)

Ah, poor Louise! the livelong day
She roams from cot to castle gay;
And still her voice and viol say,
Ah, maids, beware the woodland way,
Think on Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! The sun was high,
It smirch'd her cheek, it dimm'd her eye;
The woodland walk was cool and nigh,
Where birds with chiming streamlets vie
To cheer Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! The savage bear
Made ne'er that lovely grove his lair;
The wolves molest not paths so fair—
But better far had such been there
For poor Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! In woody wold
She met a huntsman fair and bold;
His baldric was of silk and gold,
And many a witching tale he told
To poor Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! Small cause to pine
Hadst thou for treasures of the mine;
For peace of mind, that gift divine.
And spotless innocence, were thine,

Ah, poor Louise!

Ah, poor Louise! Thy treasure's rest!
I know not if by force or theft,
Or part by violence, part by gift;
But misery is all that's left
To poor Louise.

Let poor Louise some succor have!
She will not long your bounty crave,
Or tire the gay with warning stave—
For Heaven has grace, and earth a grave,
For poor Louise.

Chap. x.

(2.)—DEATH CHANT.

"Ere he guessed where he was going, the leech
Was hurried into the house of the late Oliver Prout,
From which he heard the chant of the women, as
They swathed and dressed the corpse of the unquibled
Jonnet-maker, for the ceremony of next morning; of Which chant the following verses may be received as A modern imitation!"—

1. Viewless Essence, thin and bare,
Wellnigh melted into air;
Still with fondness hovering near
The earthly form thou once didst wear,—

2. Pause upon thy pinions' flight,
Be thy course to left or right;
Be thou doom'd to soar or sink,
Pause upon the awful brink.

3. To avenge the deed expelling
Thee untimely from thy dwelling,
Mystic force thou shalt retain
O'er the blood and o'er the brain.

4. When the form thou shalt espy
That darken'd on thy closing eye;
When the footstep thou shalt hear
That thrill'd upon thy dying ear,—

5. Then strange sympathies shall wake,
The flesh shall thrill, the nerves shall quake;
The wounds renew their clotter'd flood,
And every drop cry blood for blood,

Chap. xxii.

post proud of his verses.—Mrs. Robert Arkwright, born Miss Kemble.
(3.)—SONG OF THE GLEE-MAIDEN.

"She sung a melancholy dirge in Norman French;
The words, of which the following is an imitation, were united to a tune as doloful as they are themselves:"

1. Yes, thou may'st sigh,
And look once more at all around,
At stream and bank, and sky and ground.
Thy life its final course has found,
And thou must die.

2. Yes, lay thee down,
And while thy struggling pulses flutter,
Bid the gray monk his soul-mass mutter,
And the deep bell its death-tone utter—
Thy life is gone.

3. Be not afraid.
'Tis but a pang, and then a thrill,
A fever fit, and then a chill;
And then an end of human ill,
For thou art dead.

Chap. xxx.

(4.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—INTRODUCTORY.

The ashes here of murder'd kings
Beneath my footsteps sleep;
And yonder lies the scene of death,
Where Mary learnt'd to weep.

Captain Marjoribanks.

(2.)—CHAP. I.

"Behold the Tiber!" the vain Roman cried,
Viewing the ample Tay from Baiglie's side;
But where's the Scot that would the vaunt repay,
And hail the puny Tiber for the Tay?

Anonymous.

(3.)—CHAP. XI.

Fair is the damsel, passing fair—
Sunny at distance gleams her smile!
Approach—the cloud of woeful care
Hangs trembling in her eye the while.

Lucinda, a Ballad.

1 These stanzas, accompanying an engraving from Mr. Cooper's subject "The Death of Keeldar," appeared in "The Gem" of 1829, a literary journal edited by Thomas Hood, Esq. In the acknowledgment to his contributors, Mr. Hood says, "To Sir Walter Scott—not merely a literary feather in my cap, but a whole plume of them—towards, and with the hand of my heart acknowledge, a deep obligation. A poem from his pen is likely to confer on the book that contains it, if not perpetuity, at least a very Old Mortality."—Preface, p. 4. The original painting by Cooper remains at Abbotsford.—Ed.

(4.)—CHAP. XV.

Oh for a draught of power to steep
The soul of agony in sleep!

Bertha.

(5.)—CHAP. XXIII.

Lo! where he lies embalm'd in gore,
His wound to Heaven cries;
The floodgates of his blood implore
For vengeance from the skies.

Uranus and Psyche.

The Death of Keeldar.

1828.

Percy or Percival Rede of Trochend, in Redesdale, Northumberland, is celebrated in tradition as a huntsman and a soldier. He was, upon two occasions, singularly unfortunate; once, when an arrow, which he had discharged at a deer, killed his celebrated dog Keeldar; and again, when, being on a hunting party, he was betrayed into the hands of a clan called Crossar, by whom he was murdered. Mr. Cooper's painting of the first of these incidents suggested the following stanzas:—

Up rose the sun, o'er moor and mead;
Up with the sun rose Percy Rede;
Brave Keeldar, from his couples freed,
Career'd along the lea;
The pulfrey sprung with sprightly bound,
As if to match the game hound;
His horn the gallant huntsman wound:
They were a jovial three!

Man, hound, or horse, of higher fame,
To wake the wild deer never came,
Since Alnwick's Earl pursued the game
On Cheviot's r自由ful day;
Keeldar was matchless in his speed,
Than Tarras, ne'er was stancher steed,
A peerless archer, Percy Rede;
And right dear friends were they.

The chase engross'd their joys and woes;
Together at the dawn they rose,
Together shared the noon's repose,
By fountain or by stream;
And oft when evening skies were red,
The heater was their common bed,
Where cash, as wildering fancy lov'd,
Still hunted in his dream.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

Now is the thrilling moment near
Of sylvan hope and sylvan fear;
Yon thicket holds the harbor'd deer,
The signs the hunters know.
With eyes of flame, and quivering ears,
The brake sagacious Keeldar nears;
The restless palfrey paws and rears;
The archer strings his bow.
The game's afoot!—Halloo! halloo!
Hunter, and horse, and hound pursue;—
But woe the shaft that erring flew—
That e'er it left the string!
And ill betide the faithless yew!
The stag bounds deathless o'er the dew,
And gallant Keeldar's life-blood true
Has drench'd the gray-goose wing.
The noble hound, he dies, he dies!
Death, death has glazed his fixed eyes;
Stiff on the bloody heath he lies,
Without a groan or quiver.
Now day may break and bugle sound,
And whoop and halloo ring around,
And o'er his couch the stag may bound,
But Keeldar sleeps for ever.

Dilated nostrils, staring eyes,
Mark the poor palfrey's mute surprise;
He knows not that his comrade dies,
Nor what is death—but still
His aspect hath expression drear
Of grief and wonder mix'd with fear,
Like startled children when they hear
Some mystic tale of ill.

But he that bent the fatal bow
Can well the sum of evil know,
And o'er his favorite bending low,
In speechless grief recline;
Can think he hears the senseless clay
In unreaechoeful accents say,
"The hand that took my life away,
Dear master, was it thine?"

"And if it be, the shaft be bless'd,
Which sure some erring aim address'd,
Since in your service prized, caress'd,
I in your service die;
And you may have a fletter hound,
To match the dun-deer's merry bound,
But by your couch will ne'er he found
So true a guard as I."

And to his last stout Percy rued
The fatal chance, for when he stood
'Gainst fearful odds in deadly feud,
And fell amid the fray,
E'en with his dying voice he cried,
"Had Keeldar but been at my side,
Your treacherous ambush had been spied—
I had not died to-day!"

Remembrance of the erring bow
Long since had join'd the tides which flow,
Conveying human bliss and woe,
Down dark oblivion's river;
But Art can Time's stern doom arrest,
And snatch his spoil from Lethe's breast,
And, in her Cooper's colors drest,
The scene shall live for ever.

From Anne of Geierstein.

1829.

(1.)—THE SECRET TRIBUNAL.

— "PHILIPSON could perceive that the lights proceeded from many torches, borne by men muffled in black cloaks, like mourners at a funeral, or the Black Friars of St. Francis's Order, wearing their cowls drawn over their heads, so as to conceal their features. They appeared anxiously engaged in measuring off a portion of the apartment; and while occupied in that employment, they sung, in the ancient German language, rhymes more rude than Philipson could well understand, but which may be imitated thus:"—

Measurers of good and evil,
Bring the square, the line, the level;
Rear the altar, dig the trench,—
Blood both stone and ditch shall drench.
Cubits six, from end to end,
Must the fatal bench extend;
Cubits six, from side to side,
Judge and culprit must divide.
On the east the Court assembles,
On the west the Accused trembles:
Answer, brethren, all and one,
Is the ritual rightly done?

On life and soul, on blood and bone,
One for all, and all for one,
We warrant this is rightly done.

How wears the night? Doth morning shine
In early radiance on the Rhine?
What music floats upon his tide?
Do birds the tardy morning chide?
Brethren, look out from hill and height,
And answer true, how wears the night?

The night is old; on Rhine's broad breast
Glance drowsy stars which long to rest.
No beams are twinkling in the east,
There is a voice upon the flood,
The stern still call of blood for blood;
'Tis time we listen the behest.

Up, then, up! When day's at rest,
'Tis time that such as we are watchers;
Rise to judgment, brethren, rise!
Vengeance knows not sleepy eyes,
He and night are matchers.

(2.)—MOTTOES.

(1.)—Chap. III.
Cursed be the gold and silver, which persuade Weak man to follow far fatiguing trade!
The lily, peace, outshines the silver store,
And life is dearer than the golden ore.
Yet money tempts us o'er the desert brown,
To every distant mart and wealthy town.

Hassan, or the Camel-driver.

(2.)—Chap. V.
Who loved the greenwood bank and lowing herd,
The russet prize, the lowly peasant's life,
Season'd with sweet content, more than the halls
Where revellers feast to fever height.
Believe me, there ne'er was poison mix'd in maple bowl.

Anonymous.

(3.)—Chap. VI.
When we two meet, we meet like rushing torrents,
Like warring winds, like flames from various points,
That mate each other's fury. There is nought
Of elemental strife, were fiends to guide it,
Can match the wrath of man.

Frenaud.

(4.)—Chap. X.
We know not when we sleep nor when we wake.
Visions distinct and perfect cross our eye,
Which to the slumberer seem realities;
And while they waked, some men have seen such sights
As set at nought the evidence of sense,
And left them well persuaded they were dreaming.

Anonymous.

(5.)—Chap. XI.
These be the adept's doctrines—every element
Is peopled with its separate race of spirits.
The airy Sylphs on the blue ether float;
Deep in the earthy cavern skulks the Gnome;
The sea-green Naiad skims the ocean billow;
And the fierce fire is yet a friendly home
To its peculiar sprite, the Salamander.

Anonymous.

(6.)—Chap. XVIII.
Upon the Rhine, upon the Rhine they cluster,
The grapes of juice divine,
Which make the soldier's jovial courage muster;
Oh, blessed be the Rhine!

Drinking Song.

(7.)—Chap. XXII.
Tell me not of it—I could ne'er abide
The munmery of all that forced civility.
"Pray seat yourself, my lord." With cringing hams
The speech is spoken, and with bended knee
Heard by the smiling courtier.—"Before you, sir?
It must be on the earth then." Hang it all!
The pride which cloaks itself in such poor fashion
Is scarcely fit to swell a beggar's bosom.

Old Play.

(8.)—Chap. XXVIII.
A mirthful man he was; the snows of age
Fell, but they did not chill him. Gayety,
Even in life's closing, touch'd his teeming brain
With such wild visions as the setting sun
Raises in front of some hoar glacier,
Painting the bleak ice with a thousand hues.

Old Play.

(9.)—Chap. XXX.
Ay, this is he who wears the wreath of bays
Wove by Apollo and the Sisters Nine,
Which Jove's dread lightning scathes not.
He hath doff'd
The cumbersome helm of steel, and flung aside
The yet more galling diadem of gold;
While, with a leafy circlet round his brows,
He reigns the king of Lovers and of Poets.

Old Play.

(10.)—Chap. XXXI.
Want you a man
Experienced in the world and its affairs?
Here is he to your purpose.
He's a monk;
He hath forsworn the world and all its work—
The rather that he knows it passing well,
'Special the worst of it, for he's a monk.

Old Play.

(11.)—Chap. XXXIII.
Toll, toll the bell!
Greatness is o'er;
The heart has broke,
To ache no more.

An unsubstantial pageant all—
Drop o'er the scene the funeral pall.

Old Poem.

"Am Rhein, am Rhein, da wachsen unsere Reben, Gesegnet sei der Rhein," &c.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

(12.)—CHAP. XXXV.
—— Here's a weapon, now,
Shalt shake a conquering general in his tent,
A monarch on his throne, or reach a prelate,
However holy be his offices,
E'en while he serves the altar.

Old Play.

The Foray.¹

SET TO MUSIC BY JOHN WHITEFIELD, MUS. DOC. CAM.

1830.

The last of our steers on the board has been spread,
And the last glass of wine in our goblet is red;
Up, up, my brave kinsmen; belt swords and begone,
There are dangers to dare, and there's spoil to be won.

The eyes that so lately mix'd glances with ours
For a space must be dim, as they gaze from the towers.
And strive to distinguish, through tempest and gloom,
The prance of the steed, and the toss of the plume.

The rain is descending; the wind rises loud;
And the moon her red beacon has veil'd with a cloud;
'Tis the better, my mates! for the warder's dull eye
Shall in confidence slumber, nor dream we are nigh.

Our steers are impatient! I hear my blithe gray!
There is life in his hoof-clang, and hope in his neigh;
Like the flash of a meteor, the glance of his mane
Shall marshal your march through the darkness and rain.

The drawbridge has dropp'd, the bugle has blown;
One pledge is to quaff yet—then mount and begone!—
To their honor and peace, that shall rest with the slain;
To their health and their glee, that see Teviot again!

Inscription

FOR THE MONUMENT OF THE REV. GEORGE SCOTT.²

1830.

To youth, to age, alike, this tablet pale
Tells the brief moral of its tragic tale.

Art thou a parent? Reverence this bier,
The parents' fondest hopes lie buried here.
Art thou a youth, prepared on life to start,
With opening talents and a generous heart,
Fair hopes and flattering prospects all thine own?
Lo! here their end—a monumental stone.
But let submission tame each sorrowing thought,
Heaven crown'd its champion ere the fight was fought.

Lines on Fortune.

1831.

"By the advice of Dr. Ebenezer Clarkson, Sir Walter consulted a skillful mechanist, by name Fortune, about a contrivance for the support of the lame limb, which had of late given him much pain as well as inconvenience. Mr. Fortune produced a clever piece of handiwork, and Sir Walter felt at first great relief from the use of it; insomuch that his spirits rose to quite the old pitch, and his letter to me upon the occasion overflows with merry applications of sundry maxims and verses about Fortune. 'Fortis Fortuna adjuvat'—he says—'never more sing I.'"

Fortune, my Foe, why dost thou frown on me?
And will my Fortune never better be?
Wilt thou, I say, for ever breed my pain?
And wilt thou ne'er return my joys again?

No—let my ditty be henceforth—
Fortune, my Friend, how well thou favorest me!
A kinder Fortune man did never see!
Thou propp'st my thigh, thou ridd'st my knee of pain,
I'll walk, I'll mount—I'll be a man again.

From Count Robert of Paris.

1831.

MOTTOES.

(L.)—CHAP. II.

Otho. ———— This superb successor
Of the earth's mistress, as thou vainly speakest,
Stands 'midst these ages as, on the wide ocean,
The last spared fragment of a spacious land, died there the 9th June, 1590. This epitaph appears on his tomb in the chancel there.

"I believe this is the only verse of the old song (often alluded to by Shakespeare and his contemporaries) that has as yet been recovered."—Lockhart. Life, vol. x. p. 38.
That in some grand and awful ministration
Of mighty nature has engulfed been,
Doth lift aloft its dark and rocky cliffs
O'er the wild waste around, and sadly frowns
In lonely majesty.

Constantine Paleologus, scene i.

(2.)—CHAP. III.
Here, youth, thy foot unbraze,
Here, youth, thy brow unbraze;
Each tribute that may grace
The threshold here be paid.
Walk with the stealthy pace
Which Nature teaches deer,
When, echoing in the chase,
The hunter's horn they hear.

The Court.

(3.)—CHAP. V.
The storm increases—'tis no sunny shower,
Foster'd in the moist breast of March or April,
Or such as parched Summer cools his lip with;
Heaven's windows are flung wide; the inmost deeps
Cal'd in hoarse greeting one upon another;
On comes the flood in all its foaming horrors,
And where's the dike shall stop it!

The Deluge, a Poem.

(4.)—CHAP. VI.
Vain man! thou may'st esteem thy love as fair
As fond hyperboles suffice to raise.
She may be all that's matchless in her person,
And all-divine in soul to match her body;
But take this from me—thou shalt never call her
Superior to her sex, while one survives,
And I am her true votary.

Old Play.

(5.)—CHAP. VIII.
Through the vain webs which puzzle sophists' skill,
Plain sense and honest meaning work their way;
So sink the varying clouds upon the hill,
When the clear dawning brightens into day.

Dr. Watts.

(6.)—CHAP. IX.
Between the foaming jaws of the white torrent,
The skillful artist draws a sudden mound;
By level long he subdivides their strength,
Stealing the waters from their rocky bed,
First to diminish what he means to conquer;
Then, for the residue he forms a road,
Easy to keep, and painful to desert,
And guiding to the end the planner aim'd at.

The Engineer.

(7.)—CHAP. X.
These were wild times—the antipodes of ours:
Ladies were there, who oftener saw themselves
In the broad lustre of a foeman's shield
Than in a mirror, and who rather sought
To match themselves in battle, than in dalliance
To meet a lover's onset.—But though Nature
Was outraged thus, she was not overcome.

Feudal Times.

(8.)—CHAP. XI.
Without a ruin, broken, tangled, embrous,
Within it was a little paradise,
Where Taste had made her dwelling. Statuary,
First-born of human art, moulded her images,
And bade men mark and worship.

Anonymous.

(9.)—CHAP. XII.
The parties met. The wily, wordy Greek,
Weighing each word, and canvassing each syllable;
Evading, arguing, equivocating,
And the stern Frank came with his two-hand sword,
Watching to see which way the balance sways,
That he may throw it in, and turn the scales.

Palestine.

(10.)—CHAP. XVI.
Strange ape of man! who loathes thee while he scorns thee;
Half a reproach to us and half a jest.
What fancies can be ours ere we have pleasure
In viewing our own form, our pride and passions,
Reflected in a shape grotesque as thine!

Anonymous.

(11.)—CHAP. XVII.
'Tis strange that, in the dark, sulphureous mine,
Where wild ambition piles its ripening stores
Of slumbering thunder, Love's will interpose
His tiny torch, and cause the stern explosion
To burst, when the devisor's least aware.

Anonymous.

(12.)—CHAP. XXIV.
All is prepared—the chambers of the mine
Are cram'm'd with the combustible, which, harmless
While yet unkindled, as the sable sand,
Needs but a spark to change its nature so,
That he who wakes it from its slumbrous mood
Dreads scarce the explosion less than he who knows
That 'tis his towers which meet its fury.

Anonymous.

(13.)—CHAP. XXV.
Heaven knows its time; the bullet has its billet,
Arrow and javelin each its destined purpose;
The fated beasts of Nature's lower strain
Have each their separate task.

Old Play.
LYRICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

From Castle Dangerous.

1831.

MOTTOES.

(1.)—Chap. V.
A tale of sorrow, for your eyes may weep;
A tale of horror, for your flesh may tingle;
A tale of wonder, for the eyebrows arch,
And the flesh curdles, if you read it rightly.

Old Play.

(2.)—Chap. XI.
Where is he? Has the deep earth swallow'd him?
Or hath he melted like some airy phantom
That shuns the approach of morn and the young sun?
Or hath he wrapt him in Cimmerian darkness,
And pass'd beyond the circuit of the sight
With things of the night's shadows?

Anonymous.

(3.)—Chap. XIV.
The way is long, my children, long and rough—
The moors are dreary, and the woods are dark;
But he that creeps from cradle on to grave,
Unskill'd save in the velvet course of fortune,
Hath miss'd the discipline of noble hearts.

Old Play.

(4.)—Chap. XVIII.
His talk was of another world—his bodements
Strange, doubtful, and mysterious; those who heard him
Listen'd as to a man in feverish dreams,
Who speaks of other objects than the present,
And mutters like to him who sees a vision.

Old Play.

(5.)—Chap. XX.
Cry the wild war-note, let the champions pass,
Do bravely each, and God defend the right;
Upon Saint Andrew thrice can they thus cry,
And thrice they shout on height,
And then marked them on the Englishmen,
As I have told you right.
Saint George the bright, our ladies' knight,
To name they were full fain;
Our Englishmen they cried on height,
And thrice they shout again.

Old Ballad.
Dramatic Pieces.

Halidon Hill:

A DRAMATIC SKETCH FROM SCOTTISH HISTORY.

PREFACE.

THOUGH the public seldom feel much interest in such communications (nor is there any reason why they should), the author takes the liberty of stating that these scenes were commenced with the purpose of contributing to a miscellany projected by a much-esteemed friend. But instead of being confined to a scene or two, as intended, the work gradually swelled to the size of an independent publication. It is designed to illustrate military antiquities and the manners of chivalry. The drama (if it can be termed one) is in no particular either designed or calculated for the stage.

The subject is to be found in Scottish history; but not to overload so slight a publication with antiquarian research, or quotations from obscure chronicles, may be sufficiently illustrated by the following passage from Pinkerton's History of Scotland, vol. i. p. 72:—

"The governor (anno 1402) dispatched a considerable force under Murdine, his eldest son; the Earls of Angus and Moray also joined Douglas, who entered England with an army of ten thousand men, carrying terror and devastation to the walls of Newcastle.

"Henry IV. was now engaged in the Welsh war against Owen Glendour; but the Earl of Northumberland, and his son, the Hotspur Percy, with the Earl of March, collected a numerous array, and awaited the return of the Scots, impeded with spoil, near Milfield, in the north part of Northumberland. Douglas had reached Wooler, in his return; and, perceiving the enemy, seized a strong post between the two armies, called Homildon Hill. In this method he rivalled his predecessor at the battle of Otterburn, but not with like success. The English advanced to the assault, and Henry Percy was about to lead them up the hill, when March caught his bridle, and advised him to advance no farther, but to pour the dreadful shower of English arrows into the enemy. This advice was followed by the usual fortune; for in all ages the bow was the English instrument of victory; and though the Scots, and perhaps the French, were superior in the use of the spear, yet this weapon was useless after the distant bow had decided the combat. Robert the Great, sensible of this, at the battle of Ban-

---

1 Published by Constable & Co., June, 1822, in 8vo.
2 The author alludes to a collection of small pieces in verse, edited, for a charitable purpose, by Miss Joanna Baillie. See Life of Scott, vol. vii. pp. 7, 18, 169-70.
3 In the first edition the text added, "In case any attempt shall be made to produce it in action (as has happened in similar cases), the author takes the present opportunity to intimate that it shall be at the peril of those who make such an experiment." Adverting to this passage, the New Edinburgh Review (July, 1822) said, "We, nevertheless, do not believe that any thing more essentially dramatic, in so far as it goes, more capable of stage effect, has appeared in England since the days of her greatest genius; and giving Sir Walter, therefore, full credit for his coyness on the present occasion, we ardently hope that he is but trying his strength in the most arduous of all literary enterprises, and that ere long he will demonstrate his right to the highest honors of the tragic muse." The British Critic for October, 1822, says on the same head, "Though we may not accede to the author's declaration that it is 'in no particular calculated for the stage,' we must not lead our readers to look for any thing amounting to a regular drama. It would, we think, form an underplot of very great interest in an historical play of customary length; and although its incidents and personages are mixed up, in these scenes, with an event of real history, there is nothing in either to prevent their being interwoven in the plot of any drama of which the action should lie in the confines of England and Scotland at any of the very numerous periods of Border warfare. The whole interest, indeed, of the story is engrossed by two characters, imagined, as it appears to us, with great force and probability, and contrasted with considerable skill and effect."
nookburn ordered a prepared detachment of cavalry to rush among the English archers at the commencement, totally to disperse them, and stop the deadly effusion. But Douglas now used no such precaution; and the consequence was that his people, drawn up on the face of the hill, presented one general mark to the enemy, none of whose arrows descended in vain. The Scots fell without fight, and unreavenged, till a spirited knight, Swinton, exclaimed aloud, 'Oh, my brave countrymen! what fascination has seized you to-day, that you stand like deer to be shot, instead of indulging your ancient courage, and meeting your enemies hand to hand? Let those who will, descend with me, that we may gain victory, or life, or fall like men.' This being heard by Adam Gordon, between whom and Swinton there remained an ancient deadly feud, attended with the mutual slaughter of many followers, he instantly fell on his knees before Swinton, begged his pardon, and desired to be dubbed a knight by him whom he must now regard as the wisest and the boldest of that order in Britain. The ceremony performed, Swinton and Gordon descended the hill accompanied only by one hundred men; and a desperate valor led the whole body to death. Had a similar spirit been shown by the Scottish army, it is probable that the event of the day would have been different. Douglas, who was certainly deficient in the most important qualities of a general, seeing his army begin to disperse, at length attempted to descend the hill; but the English archers, retiring a little, sent a flight of arrows so sharp and strong that no armor could withstand; and the Scottish leader himself, whose panoply was of remarkable temper, fell under five wounds, though not mortal. The English men-of-arms, knights, or squires, did not strike one blow, but remained spectators of the rout, which was now complete. Great numbers of the Scots were slain, and near five hundred perished in the river Tweed upon their flight. Among the illustrious captives was Douglas, whose chief wound deprived him of an eye; Murdoch, son of Albany; the Earls of Moray and Angus; and about twenty-four gentlemen of eminent rank and power. The chief slain were Swinton, Gordon, Livingston of Calendar, Ramsay of Dalhousie, Walter Sinclair, Roger Gordon, Walter Scott, and others. Such was the issue of the unfortunate battle of Halidon Hill.\footnote{Miles magnanimus dominus Johannes Swinton, tanquam voce horrida preconis exclamavit, dicens, O commilitones inclyti! quis vos hodie fascinavit non indulgere solute probitati, quod nec dextris consortis, nec ut viri corda crigtis, ad invadendum amulos, qui vos, tonquam damulos vel Haldon Hill for Homildon. A Scottish army was defeated by the English on both occasions, and under nearly the same circumstances of address on the part of the victors and mismanagement on that of the vanquished, for the English long-bow decided the day in both cases. In both cases, also, a Gordon was left on the field of battle; and at Halidon, as at Homildon, the Scots were commanded by an ill-fated representative of the great house of Douglas. He of Homildon was surnamed Tine-man, i.e. Locate-man, from his repeated defeats and miscarriages; and, with all the personal valor of his race, seems to have enjoyed so small a portion of their sagacity as to be unable to learn military experience from reiterated calamity. I am far, however, from intimating that the traits of imbecility and envy attributed to the regent in the following sketch are to be historically ascribed either to the elder Douglas of Halidon Hill or to him called Tine-man, who seems to have enjoyed the respect of his countrymen, notwithstanding that, like the celebrated Anne de Montmorency, he was either defeated or wounded or made prisoner in every battle which he fought. The regent of the sketch is a character purely imaginary.

The tradition of the Swinton family, which still survives in a lineal descent, and to which the author has the honor to be related, avers that the Swinton who fell at Homildon in the manner related in the preceding extract had slain Gordon's father; which seems sufficient ground for adopting that circumstance into the following dramatic sketch, though it is rendered improbable by other authorities.

If any reader will take the trouble of looking at Froissart, Fordun, or other historians of the period, he will find that the character of the Lord of Swinton for strength, courage, and conduct, is by no means exaggerated.

\textit{Abbotsford, 1822.}

\textit{Dramatis Personae.}

\textbf{Scottish.}

\textbf{The Regent of Scotland.}

Gordon, Swinton, Lennox, Sutherland, Ross, Maxwell, Johnstone, Lindesay, Scottish Chiefs and Nobles.

\begin{itemize}
  \item[\textbf{hinnulos imparesatos, sagittarum jaculis perdere festinant.}]
  \item[\textbf{descendunt mecum qui velit, et in nomine Domini hostes penetrabimus, ut vel sie vita potiamur, vel saltem ut milites cum honore occubamus,}]
\end{itemize}

\textit{Fdun., Scoti-Chronicon, vol. ii. p. 434.}
HALIDON HILL.

SYMON DE VIPONT, a Knight Templar.
THE PRIOR OF MAISON-DIEU.
REYNALD, Swinton’s Squire.
HOB HATTELY, a Border Moss-Trooper.
Heralds.

ENGLISH.

KING EDWARD III.
CHANDOS,
PERCY,
RIBAUMONT,
The Abbot of Walthamstow.

Halidon Hill.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

The northern side of the eminence of Halidon. The back Scene represents the summit of the ascent, occupied by the Rear-guard of the Scottish army. Bodies of armed Men appear as advancing from different points, to join the main Body.

Enter De Vipont and the Prior of Maison-Dieu.

VIP. No farther, Father—here I need no guidance; I have already brought your peaceful step Too near the verge of battle.
PRI. Fain would I see you join some Baron’s banner, Before I say farewell. The honor’d sword That fought so well in Syria should not wave Amid the ignoble crowd.
VIP. Each spot is noble in a pitched field, So that a man has room to fight and fall on’t. But I shall find out friends. ’Tis scarce twelve years Since I left Scotland for the wars of Palestine, And then the flower of all the Scottish nobles Were known to me; and I, in my degree, Not all unknown to them.
PRI. Alas! there have been changes since that time! The royal Bruce, with Randolph, Douglas, Grahaime, Then shook in field the banners which now moulder Over their graves I the chanced.
VIP. And thence comes it, That while I look’d on many a well-known crest And blazon’d shield, as hitherward we came, The faces of the Barons who display’d them Were all unknown to me. Brave youths they seem’d; Yet, surely, fitter to adorn the tilt-yard Than to be leaders of a war. Their followers, Young like themselves, seem like themselves unpracticed—

Look at their battle-rank.

PRI. I cannot gaze on’t with undazzled eye, So thick the rays dart back from shield and helmet, And sword and battle-axe, and spear and pennon, Sure ’tis a gallant show! The Bruce himself Hath often conquer’d at the head of fewer And worse appointed followers.

VIP. Ay, but ’twas Bruce that led them. Reverend Father,
’Tis not the falchion’s weight decides a combat; It is the strong and skillful hand that wields it. Ill fate, that we should lack the noble King And all his champions now! Time call’d them not, For when I parted hence for Palestine, The brows of most were free from grizzled hair.
PRI. Too true, alas! But well you know, in Scotland Few hairs are silver’d underneath the helmet; ’Tis crows like mine which hide them. ’Mongst the laity, War’s the rush reaper, who thrusts in his sickle Before the grain is white. In threescore years And ten, which I have seen, I have outlived Wellnigh two generations of our nobles. The race which holds? you summit is the third.
VIP. Thou may’st outlive them also.
PRI. Heaven forefend! My prayer shall be, that Heaven will close my eyes Before they look upon the wrath to come.
VIP. Retire, retire, good Father!—Pray for Scotland—
Think not on me. Here comes an ancient friend, Brother in arms, with whom to-day I’ll join me. Back to your choir, assemble all your brotherhood, And weary Heaven with prayers for victory.3
PRI. Heaven’s blessing rest with thee, Champion of Heaven, and of thy suffering country! [Exit PRIOR. VIPONT draws a little aside and lets down the beaver of his helmet.

Enter Swinton, followed by Reynald and others, to whom he speaks as he enters.

SWI. Halt here, and plant my pennon, till the Regent Assign our band its station in the host.
REY. That must be by the standard. We have had That right since good Saint David’s reign at least. Fain would I see the Marcher would dispute it.
SWI. Peace, Reynald! Where the general plants the soldier, There is his place of honor, and there only His valor can win worship. Thou’rt of those Who would have war’s deep art bear the wild semblance Of some disorder’d hunting, where, Pell-mell, Each trusting to the swiftness of his horse, Gallants press on to see the quarry fall. You steel-clad Southrons, Reynald, are no deer; And England’s Edward is no stag at bay.

2 MS.: “The youths who hold,” &c., “are.”
3 MS.: —— “with prayers for Scotland’s weak.”
VIP. (advancing). There needed not, to blazon forth the Swinton, his ancient burgonet, the sable Boar Chaine'd to the guarled oak,—nor his proud step, Nor giant stature, nor the ponderous mace, Which only he, of Scotland's realm, can wield: His discipline and wisdom mark the leader, As does his frame the champion. Hail, brave Swinton! Swi. Brave Templar, thanks! Such your cross'd shoulder speaks you; But the closed visor, which conceals your features, Forbids more knowledge. Umfraville, perhaps—VIP. (unclosing his helmet). No: one less worthy of our sacred Order; Yet, unless Syrian suns have scorched my features Swart as my sable visor, Alan Swinton Will welcome Symon Vipont. Swi. (embracing him). As the blithe reaper Welcomes a practiced mate, when the ripe harvest Lies deep before him, and the sun is high! Thou'll follow yon old pennon, wilt thou not? 'Tis tatter'd since thou saw'st it, and the Boar-heads Look as if 'brought from off' some Christmas board, Where knives had notch'd them deeply. VIP. Have with them, ne'ertheless. The Stuart's Chequer, The Bloody Heart of Douglas, Ross's Lymphads, Sutherland's Wild-cats, nor the royal Lion, Rampant in golden treasure, wins me from them. We'll back the Boar-heads bravely. I see round them A chosen band of lances—some well known to me. Where's the main body of thy followers? Swi. Symon de Vipont, thou dost see them all That Swinton's bugle-horn can call to battle, However loud it rings. There's not a boy Left in my halls, whose arm has strength enough To bear a sword—there's not a man behind, However old, who moves without a staff. Striplings and greybeards, every one is here, And here all should be—Scotland needs them all; And more and better men, were each a Hercules, And yonder handful centupled. VIP. A thousand followers—such, with friends and kinsmen, Allies and vassals, thouwert wont to lead— A thousand followers shrank to sixty lances In twelve years' space!—And thy brave sons, Sir Alan? Alas! I fear to ask. Swi. All slain, De Vipont. In my empty home A puny babe lisps to a widow'd mother, "Where is my grandsire? wherefore do you weep?" But for that prattler, Lyulphe's house is heirless. I'm an old oak, from which the foresters Have hew'd four goodly boughs, and left beside me

Only a sapling, which the fawn may crush As he springs over it. VIP. All slain— alas! Swi. Ay, all, De Vipont. And their attributes, John with the Long Spear—Archibald with the Axe—Richard the Ready—and my youngest darling, My Fair-hair'd William—do but now survive In measures which the gray-hair'd minstrels sing, When they make maidens weep. VIP. These wars with England, they have rooted out The flowers of Christendom. Knights, who might win The sepulchre of Christ from the rude heathen, Fall in unholy warfare! Swi. Unholy warfare? ay, well hast thou named it; But not with England—would her cloth-yard shafts Had bored their cuirasses! Their lives had been Lost like their grandsire's, in the bold defence Of their dear country—but in private feud With the proud Gordon fell my Long-spear'd John, He with the Axe, and he men call'd the Ready, Ay, and my Fair-hair'd Will—the Gordon's wrath Devour'd my gallant issue. VIP. Since thou dost weep, their death is unavenged? Swi. Templar, what think'st thou me?—See yonder rock, From which the fountain gushes—is it less Compact of adamant, though waters flow from it? Firm hearts have moister eyes.—They are avenged; I wept not till they were—till the proud Gordon Had with his life-blood dyed my father's sword, In gurdon that he thinn'd my father's lineage— And then I wept my sons; and, as the Gordon Lay at my feet, there was a tear for him, Which mingled with the rest. We had been friends, Had shared the banquet and the chase together, Fought side by side,—and our first cause of strife, Woe to the pride of both, was but a light one! VIP. You are at feud, then, with the mighty Gordon? Swi. At deadly feud. Here in this Border-land, Where the sire's quarrels descend upon the son, As due a part of his inheritance As the strong castle and the ancient blazon, Where private Vengeance holds the scales of Justice, Weighing each drop of blood as scrupulously As Jews or Lombards balance silver pence,— Not in this land, 'twixt Solway and Saint Abb's, Rages a bitterer feud than mine and theirs, The Swinton and the Gordon. VIP. You, with some threescore lances—and the Gordon Leading a thousand followers! Swi. You rate him far too low. Since you sought Palestine,
He hath had grants of baronies and lordships in the far-distant North. A thousand horse
His southern friends and vassals always number'd,
Add Badenoch kerns, and horse from Dey and Spey,
He'll count a thousand more.—And now, De Vipont,
If the Boar-heads seem in your eyes less worthy
For lack of followers, seek yonder standard,—
The bounding Stag, with a brave host around it;
There the young Gordon makes his earliest field,
And pants to win his spurs. His father's friend,
As well as mine, thou wert—go, join his pennon,
And grace him with thy presence.

VIP. When you were friends, I was the friend of both,
And now I can be enemy to neither;
But my poor person, though but slight the aid,
Joins on this field the banner of the two
Which hath the smallest following.

SWI. Spoke like the generous Knight, who gave up all,
Leading and lordship, in a heathen land
To fight, a Christian soldier! Yet, in earnest, I pray, De Vipont, you would join the Gordon
In this high battle. 'Tis a noble youth,—
So fame doth vouch him,—amorous, quick, and valiant;
Takes knighthood, too, this day, and well may use
His spurs too rashly! in the wish to win them.
A friend like thee beside him in the fight
Were worth a hundred spears, to rein his valor
And temper it with prudence:—'tis the aged eagle
Teaches his brood to gaze upon the sun
With eye undazzled.

Vip. Alas! brave Swinton! Wouldst thou train the hunter
That soon must bring thee to the bay? Your custom,
Your most unchristian, savage, fiend-like custom,
Binds Gordon to avenge his father's death.

SWI. Why, be it so! I look for nothing else:
My part was acted when I slew his father,
Avenging my four sons—Young Gordon's sword,
If it should find my heart, can ne'er inflict there
A pang so poignant as his father's did,
But I would perish by a noble hand,
And such will his be if he bear him nobly,
Nobly and wisely, on this field of Halidon.

Enter a Pursuivant.

PUR. Sir Knights, to counsel!—'tis the Regent's order,
That knights and men of leading meet him instantly
Before the royal standard. Edward's army
Is seen from the hill-summit.

SWI. Say to the Regent, we obey his orders.

[Exit Pursuivant.

[To Reynald.] Hold thou my casque, and furl my pennon up
Close to the staff. I will not show my crest,
Nor standard, till the common foe shall challenge them.
I'll wake no civil strife, nor tempt the Gordon
With aught that's like defiance.

Vip. Will be not know your features?

SWI. He never saw me. In the distant North,
Against his will, 'tis said, his friends detain'd him
During his nurture—caring not, belike,
To trust a pledge so precious near the Boar-tusks.
It was a natural but needless caution:
I wage no war with children, for I think
Too deeply on mine own.

Vip. I have thought on it, and will see the Gordon
As we go hence? to council. I do bear
A cross, which binds me to be Christian priest,
As well as Christian champion.2 God may grant,
That I, at once his father's friend and yours,
May make some peace betwixt you.4

SWI. When that your priestly zeal, and knightly valor,
Shall force the grave to render up the dead.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE II.

/The summit of Halidon Hill, before the Regent's Tent.
/The Royal Standard of Scotland is seen in the background, with the Pennons and Banners of the principal Nobles around it.

Council of Scottish Nobles and Chiefs. Sutherland, Ross, Lennox, Maxwell, and other Nobles of the highest rank are close to the Regent's person, and in the act of keen debate. Vipont with Gordon and others remain grouped at some distance on the right hand of the Stage. On the left, standing also apart, is Swinton, alone and bare-headed. The Nobles are dressed in Highland or Lowland habits, as historical costume requires. Trumpets, Heralds, &c. are in attendance.

LEN. Nay, Lordings, put no shame upon my counsels.
I did but say, if we retired a little,
We should have fairer field and better vantage.
I've seen King Robert—ay, the Bruce himself—
Retreat six leagues in length, and think no shame on't.

REG. Ay, but King Edward sent a haughty message, Defying us to battle on this field,
This very hill of Halidon; if we leave it
Unfought withal, it squares not with our honor.

1 MS.: —— "sharply."

2 MS.: "As we do pass," &c.

3 MS.: "The cross I wear appoints me Christian priest,
As well as Christian warrior," &c.

4 In the MS. the scene terminates with this line.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

SWT. (apart). A perilous honor, that allows the enemy,
And such an enemy as this same Edward,
To choose our field of battle! He knows how To make our Scottish pride betray its master
Into the pitfall.

[During this speech the debate among the Nobles is continued.

SUTH. (aloud). We will not back one furlong—not one yard,
No, nor one inch; where'er we find the foe,
Or where the foe finds us, there will we fight him.
Retreat will dull the spirit of our followers,
Who now stand prompt for battle.

ROSS. My Lords, methinks great Morarchat has doubts
That, if his Northern clans once turn the seam
Of their check'd hose behind, it will be hard
To halt and rally them.

SUTH. Say'st thou, MacDonnell?—Add another falsehood,
And name when Morarchat was coward or traitor.
Thine island race, as chronicles can tell,
Were oft affianced to the Southron cause;
Loving the weight and temper of their gold,
More than the weight and temper of their steel.

REG. Peace, my Lords, ho! Ross (throwing down his glove).
MacDonnell will not peace! There lies my pledge,
Proud Morarchat, to witness thee a liar.

MAX. Brought I all Nithsdale from the Western Border—
Left I my towers exposed to foraying England
And thieving Annandale—to see such misrule?

JOHN. Who speaks of Annandale? Dare Maxwell slander
The gentle House of Lochwood?

REG. Peace, Lords, once again. We represent
The Majesty of Scotland—in our presence
Brawling is treason.

SUTH. Were it in presence of the King himself,
What should prevent my saying—

Enter LindeSAY.

LIN. You must determine quickly. Scarce a mile
Parts our vanguard from Edward's. On the plain
Bright gleams of armor flash through clouds of dust,
Like stars through frost-mist—steeds neigh, and weapons clash—
And arrows soon will whistle—the worst sound
That waits on English war,—You must determine.

REG. We are determined. We will spare proud Edward Half of the ground that parts us.—Onward, Lords;
Saint Andrew strike for Scotland! We will lead
The middle ward ourselves, the royal standard

Display'd beside us; and beneath its shadow
Shall the young gallants, whom we knight this day,
Fight for their golden spurs.—Lennox, thou'rt wise,
And wilt obey command—lead thou the rear.

LEN. The rear!—why I the rear? The van were fitter
For him who fought abreast with Robert Bruce.

SWT. (apart). Discretion hath forsaken Lennox too!
The wisdom he was forty years in gathering
Has left him in an instant. 'Tis contagious
Even to witness frenzy.

SUTH. The Regent hath determined well. The rear
Suits him the best who counsell'd our retreat.

LEN. Proud Northern Thane, the van were soon the rear,
Were thy disorder'd followers planted there.

SUTH. Then, for that very word, I make a vow,
By my broad cardiom, and my father's soul,
That, if I have not leading of the van,
I will not fight to-day!

ROSS. Morarchat! thou the leading of the van!
Not whilst MacDonnell lives.

SWT. (apart). Nay, then a stone would speak.

[Addresses the Regent.] May't please your Grace,
And you, great Lords, to hear an old man's counsel,
That hath seen fights enow. These open bickerings
Dishearten all our host. If that your Grace,
With these great Earls and Lords, must needs debate,
Let the closed tent conceal your disagreement;
Else 'twill be said, ill fares it with the flock
If shepherds wrangle when the wolf is nigh.

REG. The old Knight counsels well. Let every Lord
Or Chief, who leads five hundred men or more,
Follow to counsell—others are excluded:
We'll have no vulgar censurers of our conduct—

[Looking at SWINTON.

Young Gordon, your high rank and numerous following
Give you a seat with us, though yet unknighthed.

GORDON. I pray you, pardon me. My youth's unfit
To sit in counsel, when that Knight's gray hairs
And wisdom wait without.

REG. Do as you will; we deign not bid you twice.

[The Regent, Ross, Sutherland, Lennox, Maxwell, &c. enter the Tent. The rest remain grouped about the Stage.

GOR. (observing SWT.). That helmetless old Knight, his giant stature,
His awful accents of reprove and wisdom,
Have caught my fancy strangely. He doth seem Like to some vision'd form which I have dream'd of,
But never saw with waking eyes till now.
I will accost him.

VIP. Pray you, do not so;
Anon I'll give you reason why you should not.
There's other work in hand—

---

1 Morarchat is the ancient Gaelic designation of the Earls of Sutherland. See ante, p. 697, note.

2 Lochwood Castle was the ancient seat of the Johnstones, Lords of Annandale.
Gor. I will but ask his name. There's in his presence
Something that works upon me like a spell,
Or like the feeling made my childish ear
Dote upon tales of superstitious dread,
Attracting while they chill'd my heart with fear.
Now, born the Gordon, I do feel right well
I'm bound to fear nought earthly—and I fear nought.
I'll know who this man is—

[Accepts SWINTON.]

Sir Knight, I pray you, of your gentle courtesy,
To tell your honor'd name. I am ashamed,
Being unknown in arms, to say that mine
Is Adam Gordon.

SWI. (shows emotion, but instantly subsides it).
It is a name that soundeth in my ear
Like to a death-knell—ay, and like the call
Of the shrill trumpet to the mortal lists;
Yet 'tis a name which ne'er hath been dishonor'd,
And never will, I trust—most surely never
By such a youth as thou.

Gor. There's a mysterious courtesy in this,
And yet it yields no answer to my question.
I trust you hold the Gordon not unworthy
To know the name he asks?

SWI. Worthy of all that openness and honor
May show to friend or foe—but, for my name,
Vipont will show it you; and if it sound
Harsh in your ear, I remember that it knells there
But at your own request. This day, at least,
Though seldom wont to keep it in concealment,
As there's no cause I should, you had not heard it.
Gor. This strange—

VIP. The mystery is needful. Follow me.

[They retire behind a side scene.

SWI. (looking after them). 'Tis a brave youth. How blush'd his noble cheek,
While youthful modesty, and the embarrassed
Of curiosity, combined with wonder,
And half suspicion of some slight intended,
All mingled in the flush; but soon 'twill deepen
Into revenge's glow. How slow is Vipont!—
I wait the issue, as I've seen spectators
Suspend the motion even of the eyelids,
When the slow gunner, with his lighted match,
Approach'd the charged cannon, in the act
To waken its dread slumbers.—Now 'tis out;
He draws his sword, and rushes towards me,
Who will nor seek nor shun him.

Enter GORDON, withheld by VIPONT.

VIP. Hold, for the sake of Heaven! Oh, for the sake
Of your dear country, hold!—Has Swinton slain your father,
And must you, therefore, be yourself a parricide,
And stand recorded as the selfish traitor
Who, in her hour of need, his country's cause
Deserts, that he may wreak a private wrong?
Look to your banner—that is Scotland's standard;
Look to the Regent—he is Scotland's general;
Look to the English—they are Scotland's foemen!
Betheink thee, then, thou art a son of Scotland,
And think on nought beside.²

Gor. He hath come here to brave me!—Off! unhand me!—
Thou canst not be my father's ancient friend,
That standst 'twixt me and him who slew my father.

VIP. You know not Swinton. Scarce one passing thought
Of his high mind was with you; now, his soul
Is fix'd on this day's battle. You might slay him
At unawares before he saw your blade drawn.—
Stand still, and watch him close.³

Enter MAXWELL from the tent.

SWI. How go our councils, Maxwell, may I ask?
MAX. As wild as if the very wind and sea
With every breeze and every billow battled
For their precedence.⁴

SWI. Most sure they are possess'd! Some evil spirit,
To mock their valor, robs them of discretion.
Fie, fie upon't!—Oh that Dunfermline's tomb
Could render up the Bruce! that Spain's red shore
Could give us back the good Lord James of Douglas!
Or that fierce Randolph, with his voice of terror,
Were here to awe these brawlers to submission!

VIP. (to Gor.). Thou hast perused him at more leisure now.

Gor. I see the giant form which all men speak of,
The stately port—but not the sullen eye,
Not the bloodthirsty look, that should belong
To him that made me orphan. I shall need
To name my father twice ere I can strike
At such gray hairs, and face of such command;
Yet my hand clenches on my falchion hilt,
In token he shall die.

VIP. Need I again remind you that the place
Permits not private quarrel?

Gor. I'm calm. I will not seek—nay, I will shun it—
And yet methinks that such debate's the fashion.
You've heard how taunts, reproaches, and the lie,
The lie itself, have flown from mouth to mouth;
As if a band of peasants were disputing

---

1 "A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine."—Orlando.

2 In the MS. the last five lines of Vipont's speech are interpolated.

2 MS.: "You must not here—not where the royal standard
Awaits the attack of Scotland's enemies,

Against the common foe—wage private quarrel.
He braves you not—his thought is on the event
Of this day's field. Stand still, and watch him closer."

4 "Mad as the sea and wind, when both contend
Which is the mightler."—Hamlet.
About a foot-ball match, rather than Chiefs
Were ordering a battle. I am young,
And lack experience; tell me, brave De Vipont,
Is such the fashion of your wars in Palestine?

Vip. Such it at times hath been; and then the Cross
Hath sunk before the Crescent. Heaven's cause
Won us not victory where wisdom was not.—
Behold you English host come slowly on,
With equal front, rank marshal'd upon rank,
As if one spirit ruled one moving body;
The leaders, in their places, each prepared
To charge, support, and rally, as the fortune
Of changeful battle needs: then look on ours,
Broken, disjointed, as the tumbling surges
Which the winds wake at random. Look on both,
And dread the issue; yet there might be succor.

Gor. We're fearfully o'ermatch'd in discipline;
So even my inexperienced eye can judge.
What succor save in Heaven?

Vip. Heaven acts by human means. The artist's skill
Supplies in war, as in mechanic crafts,
Deficiency of tools. There's courage, wisdom,
And skill enough, live in one leader here,
As, flung into the balance, might avail
To counterpoise the odds 'twixt that ruled host
And our wild multitude.—I must not name him.

Gor. I guess, but dare not ask.—What band is yonder,
Arranged so closely as the English discipline
Hath marshal'd their best files?

Vip. Know'st thou not the pennon?
One day, perhaps, thou'lt see it all too closely;—
It is Sir Alan Swinton's.

Gor. These, then, are his,—the relics of his power;
Yet worth an host of ordinary men,—
And I must slay my country's sages leader,
And crush by numbers that determined handful,
When most my country needs their practised aid,
Or men will say, "There goes degenerate Gordon;
His father's blood is on the Swinton's sword,
And his is in his scabbard!"

Vip. (apart). High blood and mettle, mix'd with early wisdom,
Sparkle in this brave youth. If he survive
This evil-omen'd day, I pawn my word,
That, in the ruin which I now forebode,
Scotland has treasure left.—How close he eyes
Each look and step of Swinton! Is it hate,
Or is it admiration, or are both
Commingle strangely in that steady gaze?

[Swinton and Maxwell return from the bottom of the stage.

Max. The storm is laid at length among these counsellors;
See, they come forth.

Swi. And it is more than time;
For I can mark the vanguard archery
Handling their quivers—bending up their bows.

Enter the Regent and Scottish Lords.

Reg. Thus shall it be, then, since we may no better:
And, since no Lord will yield one jot of way
To this high urgency, or give the vanguard
Up to another's guidance, we will abide them
Even on this bent; and as our troops are rank'd,
So shall they meet the foe. Chief, nor Thane,
Nor Noble, can complain of the precedence
Which chance has thus assign'd him.

Swi. (apart). Oh, sage discipline,
That leaves to chance the marshalling of a battle!

Gor. Move him to speech, De Vipont.

Vip. Move him!—Move whom?

Gor. Even him, whom, but brief space since,
My hand did burn to put to utter silence.

Vip. I'll move it to him.—Swinton, speak to them,
They lack thy counsel sorely.

Swi. Had I the thousand spears which once I led,
I had not thus been silent. But men's wisdom
Is rated by their means. From the poor leader
Of sixty lances, who seeks words of weight?

Gor. (steps forward). Swinton, there's that of wisdom on thy brow,
And valor in thine eye, and that of peril
In this most urgent hour, that bids me say,—
Bids me, thy mortal foe, say,—Swinton, speak,
For King and Country's sake!

Swi. Nay, if that voice命令s me, speak I will;
It sounds as if the dead lays charge on me.

Reg. (to Lennox, with whom he has been consulting).
'Tis better than you think. This broad hillside
Affords fair compass for our power's display,
Rank above rank rising in seemly tiers;
So that the rearward stands as fair and open—

Swi. As e'er stood mark before an English archer.

Reg. Who dares to say so?—Who isn't dare impeach
Our rule of discipline?

Swi. A poor Knight of these Marches, good my Lord;
Alan of Swinton, who hath kept a house here,
He and his ancestry, since the old days
Of Malcolm, call'd the Maiden.

Reg. You have brought here, even to this pitched
In which the royal banner is display'd,
I think some sixty spears, Sir Knight of Swinton;
Our musters name no more.

Swi. I brought each man I had; and Chief or Earl,
Thane, Duke, or dignitary, brings no more:
And with them brought I what may here be useful—
An aged eye; which, what in England, Scotland,
Spain, France, and Flanders, hath seen fifty battles,
And tawen some judgment of them; a stark hand too,
Which plays as with a straw with this same mace,—
Which if a young arm here can wield more lightly,
I never more will offer word of counsel.

Len. Hear him, my Lord; it is the noble Swinton—
He hath had high experience.

Max. He is noted
The wisest warrior 'twixt the Tweed and Solway,—
I do beseech you, hear him.
JOHN. Ay, hear the Swinton—hear stout old Sir Alan;
Maxwell and Johnstone both agree for once.
REG. Where's your impatience now?
Late you were all for battle, would not hear Ourselves pronounce a word—and now you gaze On yon old warrior, in his antique armor, As if he were arisen from the dead, To bring us Bruce's counsel for the battle.
SWI. 'Tis a proud word to speak; but he who fought Long under Robert Bruce, may something guess, Without communication with the dead, [ye At what he would have counsel'd.—Bruce had bidden Review your battle-order, marshal'd broadly Here on the bare hillside, and bidden you mark Yon clouds of Southron archers, bearing down To the green meadow-lands which stretch beneath— The Bruce had war'd you, not a shaft to-day But shall find mark within a Scottish bosom, If thus our field be order'd. The callow boys, Who draw but four-foot bows, shall gall our front, While on our mainward, and upon the rear, The cloth-yard shafts shall fall like death's own darts, And, though blind men discharge them, find a mark. Thus shall we die the death of slaughter'd deer, Which, driven into the toils, are shot at ease By boys and women, while they toss aloft All idly and in vain their branchy horns, As we shall shake our unavailing spears.
REG. Tush, tell not me! If their shot fall like hail, Our men have Milan coats to bear it out.
SWI. Never did armorer temper steel on stithy That made sure fence against an English arrow; A cobweb gossamer were guard as good Against a wasp-sting.
REG. Who fears a wasp-sting?
SWI. I, my Lord, fear none; Yet should a wise man brush the insect off, Or he may smart for it.
REG. We'll keep the hill; it is the vantage-ground When the main battle joins.
SWI. It ne'er will join, while their light archery Can foil our spearmen and our barbed horse. To hope Plantagenet would seek close combat When he can conquer riskless, is to deem Sagacious Edward simpler than a babe In battle-knowledge. Keep the hill, my Lord, With the main body, if it is your pleasure; But let a body of your chosen horse Make execution on yon waspish archers.

1 MS.: —— "guard as thick."
2 "The generous abandonment of private dissension on the part of Gordon, which the historian has described as a momentary impulse, is depicted by the dramatist with great skill and knowledge of human feeling, as the result of many powerful and conflicting emotions. He has, we think, been very successful in his attempt to express the hesitating and sometimes retrograde movements of a young and ardent mind, in its transition from the first glow of indignation I've done such work before, and love it well; If 'tis your pleasure to give me the leading, The dames of Sherwood, Inglewood, and Weardale, Shall sit in widowhood and long for venison, And long in vain. Who'er remembers Bannockburn,—
And when shall Scotsman, till the last loud trumpet, Forget that stirring word!—knows that great battle Even thus was fought and won.
LEN. This is the shortest road to handy blows; For when the hills step forth and bows go back, Then is the moment that our hardy spearmen, With their strong bodies, and their stubborn hearts, And limbs well knit by mountain exercise, At the close tug shall foil the short-breath'd Southron.
SWI. I do not say the field will thus be won; The English host is numerous, brave, and loyal; Their Monarch most accomplish'd in war's art, Skill'd, resolute, and wary—
REG. And if your scheme secure not victory, What does it promise us?
SWI. This much at least,— Darkling we shall not die: the peasant's shaft, Loosen'd perchance without an aim or purpose, Shall not drink up the life-blood we derive From those famed ancestors who made their breasts This frontier's barrier for a thousand years. We'll meet these Southron bravely hand to hand, And eye to eye, and weapon against weapon; Each man who falls shall see the foe who strikes him. While our good blades are faithful to the hills, And our good hands to these good blades are faithful, Blow shall meet blow, and none fall unavenged— We shall not bleed alone.
REG. And this is all Your wisdom hath devised?
SWI. Not all; for I would pray you, noble Lords (If one, among the guilty guiltiest, might), For this one day to charm to ten hours' rest The never-dying worm of deadly feud, That gnaws our vexed hearts—think no one foe Save Edward and his host:—days will remain, Ay, days by far too many will remain, To avenge old feuds or struggles for precedence;— Let this one day be Scotland's.—For myself, If there is any here may claim from me (As well may chance) a debt of blood and hatred, My life is his to-morrow unresisting, So he to-day will let me do the best That my old arm may achieve for the dear country That's mother to us both.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

[Gordon shows much emotion during this and the preceding speech of Swinton.]

REG. It is a dream—a vision!—if one troop
Rush down upon the archers, all will follow,
And order is destroy'd—we'll keep the battle-rank
Our fathers wont to do. No more on'.—Ho!
Where be those youths seek knighthood from our sword?

HER. Here are the Gordon, Somerville, and Hay,
And Hepburn, with a score of gallants more.

REG. Gordon, stand forth.

Gor. I pray your Grace, forgive me.

REG. How! seek you not for knighthood?

Gor. I do thirst for't.

But, pardon me—'tis from another sword.

REG. It is your Sovereign's—seek you for a worthier?

Gor. Who would drink purely, seeks the secret fountain,
How small soever—not the general stream,
Though it be deep and wide. My Lord, I seek
The boon of knighthood from the honor'd weapon
Of the best knight, and of the sagest leader,
That ever graced a ring of chivalry.
—Therefore, I beg the boon on bended knee,
Even from Sir Alan Swinton. [Kneels.]

REG. Degenerate boy! Abject at once and insolent!—

See, Lords, he kneels to him that slew his father!

Gor. (starting up). Shame be on him who speaks such shameful word!
Shame be on him whose tongue would sow dissension,
When most the time demands that native Scotsmen
Forget each private wrong!

SWI. (interrupting him). Youth, since you crave me
To be your sire in chivalry, I remind you
War has its duties, Office has its reverence;
Who governs in the Sovereign's name is Sovereign;—
Crave the Lord Regent's pardon.

Gor. You task me justly, and I crave his pardon,
[Boys to the Regent.]

His and these noble Lords'; and pray them all
Bear witness to my words.—Ye noble presence,
Here I remit unto the Knight of Swinton
All bitter memory of my father's slaughter,
All thoughts of malice, hatred, and revenge;
By no base fear or composition moved,
But by the thought that in our country's battle
All hearts should be as one. I do forgive him
As freely as I pray to be forgiven,
And once more kneel to him to sue for knighthood.

SWI. (affected, and drawing his sword).

Alas! brave youth, 'tis I should kneel to you,
And, tendering thee the hilt of the fell sword
That made thee fatherless, bid thee use the point
After thine own discretion. For thy boon—
Trumpets be ready—In the Holiest name,
And in our Lady's and Saint Andrew's name,
[Touching his shoulder with his sword.]
I dub thee Knight!—Arise, Sir Adam Gordon!

Be faithful, brave, and oh, be fortunate,
Should this ill hour permit!

[The trumpets sound; the heralds cry
"Largesse," and the attendants shout
"A Gordon! A Gordon!"

REG. Beggars and flatterers! Peace, peace, I say!
We'll to the standard; knights shall there be made
Who will with better reason crave your clamor.

LEN. What of Swinton's counsel?
Here's Maxwell and myself think it worth noting.

REG. (with concentrated indignation).
Let the best knight, and let the sagest leader,—
So Gordon quotes the man who slew his father,—
With his old pedigree and heavy mace,
Essay the adventure if it pleases him,
With his fair threecorse horse. As for ourselves,
We will not peril aught upon the measure.

Gor. Lord Regent, you mistake; for if Sir Alan Shall venture such attack, each man who calls
The Gordon chief, and hopes or fears from him
Or good or evil, follows Swinton's banner
In this achievement.

REG. Why, God ha' mercy! This is of a piece.
Let young and old e'en follow their own counsel,
Since none will list to mine.

ROSS. The Border cockerel fain would be on horseback;
'Tis safe to be prepared for fight or flight:
And this comes of it to give Northern lands
To the false Norman blood.

Gor. Hecarken, proud Chief of Isles! Within my stalls
I have two hundred horse; two hundred riders
Mount guard upon my castle, who would tread
Into the dust a thousand of your Redshanks,
Nor count it a day's service.

SWI. Hear I this
From thee, young man, and on the day of battle?
And to the brave MacDonnell?

Gor. 'Twa he that urged me; but I am rebuked.

REG. He crouches like a leash-hound to his master!!

SWI. Each hound must do so that would head the deer—

'Tis mongrel curs that snatch at mate or master.

REG. Too much of this. Sirs, to the royal standard!
I bid you in the name of good King David.
Sound trumpets—sound for Scotland and King David!

[The Regent and the rest go off, and the scene closes. MARCH GORDON, SWINTON, and VIPONT, with REYNAUD and followers. LENNOX follows the Regent; but returns, and addresses SWINTON.

LEN. Oh, were my western horsemen but come up,
I would take part with you!

SWI. Better that you remain.
They lack discretion; such gray head as yours
May best supply that want.

1 In the MS, this speech and the next are interpolated.
LENNOX, mine ancient friend, and honor'd lord,
Farewell, I think for ever!
LEN. Farewell, brave friend!—and farewell, noble Gordon,
Whose sun will be eclipsed even as it rises!—
The Regent will not aid you.
SWI. We will so bear us, that as soon the blood-hound
Shall halt and take no part, what time his comrade
Is grappling with the deer, as he stand still
And see us overmatch'd.
LEN. Alas! thou dost not know how mean his pride is,
How strong his envy. [him.
SWI. Then we will die, and leave the shame with [Exit LENNOX.
VIP. (to GOR.). What ails thee, noble youth? What means this pause?
Thou dost not rue thy generosity?
GOR. I have been hurried on by strong impulse,
Like to a bark that sends before the storm,
Till driven upon some strange and distant coast,
Which never pilot dream'd of. Have I not forgiven?
And am I not still fatherless?
SWI. Gordon, no;
For while we live I am a father to thee.
GOR. Thou, Swinton?—not that cannot, cannot be.
SWI. Then change the phrase, and say that, while we live,
Gordon shall be my son. If thou art fatherless,
Am I not childless too? Bethink thee, Gordon,
Our death-feud was not like the household fire
Which the poor peasant hides among its embers,
To smoulder on, and wait a time for waking.
Ours was the conflagration of the forest,
Which in its fury spares no sprout nor stem,
Hear oak nor sapling,—not to be extinguish'd
Till Heaven, in mercy, sends down all her waters;
But, once subdued, its flame is quench'd for ever,
And spring shall hide the tract of devastation¹
With foliage and with flowers. Give me thy hand,
GOR. My hand and heart!—And freely now!—to fight!
VIP. How will you act? (To SWINTON.) The Gordon's band and thine
Are in the rearward left, I think in scorn;
Till post for them who wish to charge the foremost!
SWI. We'll turn that scorn to vantage, and descend
Sidelong the hill; some winding path there must be.
Oh for a well-skill'd guide!
[HOB HATTELY starts up from a thicket.
HOB. So, here he stands. An ancient friend, Sir Alan:
HOB Hattely, or, if you like it better,
Hob of the Heron Plume,—here stands your guide.

¹ MS.: "But, once extinguish'd, it is quench'd for ever,
And spring shall hide the blackness of its ashes."
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

Even as the artist, sir, whose name offends you,
Sits prosing o'er his can until the trap fall,
Announcing that the vermin are secured,
And then 'tis up and on them.

Per. Chandos, you give your tongue too bold a license.

Cha. Percy, I am a necessary evil;
King Edward would not want me if he could,
And could not if he would. I know my value.
My heavy hand excuses my light tongue.
So men wear weighty swords in their defence,
Although they may offend the tender shin
When the steel boot is doff'd.

Ab. My Lord of Chandos,
This is but idle speech on brink of battle,
When Christian men should think upon their sins;
For as the tree falls, so the trunk must lie,
Be it for good or evil. Lord, bethink thee;
Thou hast withheld from our most reverend house
The tithes of Everingham and Settleston.
Wilt thou make satisfaction to the Church
Before her thunders strike thee? I do warn thee
In most paternal sort.

Cha. I thank you, Father, filially.
Though but a truant son of Holy Church,
I would not choose to undergo her censure
When Scottish blades are waving at my throat.
I'll make fair composition.
Ab. No composition; I'll have all or none.
Cha. None, then—'tis soonest spoke. I'll take my chance,
And trust my sinful soul to Heaven's mercy,
Rather than risk my worldly goods with thee.
My hour may not be come.

Ab. Impious! impudent!—

Per. Hush! the King—the King!

Enter King Edward, attended by Baliol and others.

King (apart to Cha.). Hark! hither, Chandos!—
Have the Yorkshire archers
Yet join'd the vanguard?

Cha. They are marching thither.
K. Ed. Bid them make haste, for shame; send a quick rider.

The loitering knaves! were it to steal my venison,
Their steps were light enough.—How now, Sir Abbot?
Say, is your Reverence come to study with us
The princely art of war?

Ab. I've had a lecture from my Lord of Chandos,
In which he term'd your Grace a rat-catcher.
K. Ed. Chandos, how's this?

Cha. Oh, I will prove it, sir!—These skipping Scots
Have changed a dozen times 'twixt Bruce and Baliol,
Quitting each House when it began to totter;
They're fierce and cunning, treacherous, too, as rats,
And we, as such, will smoke them in their fastnesses.
K. Ed. These rats have seen your back, my Lord of Chandos,
And noble Percy's too.

Per. Ay; but the mass which now lies wetering

On you hillside, like a leviathan
That's stranded in the shallows, then had soul in't,
Order and discipline, and power of action.
Now 'tis a headless corpse, which only shows
By wild convulsions that some life remains in't.
K. Ed. True, they had once a head; and 'twas a wise,
Although a rebel head.

Ab. (bowing to the King). Would he were here!
We should find one to match him.
K. Ed. There's something in that wish which wakes an echo
Within my bosom. Yet it is as well,
Or better, that the Bruce is in his grave.
We have enough of powerful foes on earth,—
No need to summon them from other worlds,
Per. Your Grace ne'er met the Bruce?
K. Ed. Never himself; but in my earliest field
I did encounter with his famous captains,
Ab. My Liege, if I might urge you with a question,
Will the Scots fight to-day?
K. Ed. (sharply). Go look your breviary.

Cha. (apart). The Abbot has it—Edward will not answer
On that nice point. We must observe his humor.—

[Addresses the King.]

Your first campaign, my Liege? That was in Wear-dale,
When Douglas gave our camp yon midnight ruffle,
And turn'd men's beds to biers?
I was a soldier then for holidays,
And slept not in mine armor. My safe rest
Was startled by the cry of "Douglas! Douglas!"
And by my couch, a grisly chamberlain,
Stood Alan Swinton, with his bloody mace.
It was a churchman saved me; my stout chaplain—
Heaven quit his spirit!—caught a weapon up,
And grappled with the giant.—How now, Louis?

Enter an Officer, who whispers the King.

K. Ed. Say to him,—thus—and thus—

[Whispers.

Ab. That Swinton's dead. A monk of ours reported,
Bound homeward from Saint Ninian's pilgrimage,
The Lord of Gordon slew him,
Per. Father, and if your house stood on our borders,
You might have cause to know that Swinton lives,
And is on horseback yet.

Cha. He slew the Gordon,
That's all the difference—a very trifle.
Ab. Trilling to those who wage a war more noble
Than with the arm of flesh.
Cha. (apart). The Abbot's wroth; I'll rub the sore for him.
(Aloud.) I have seen priests that used that arm of flesh,
And used it stoutly. Most reverend Father,
What say you to the chaplain’s deed of arms
In the King’s tent at Weardale?
Ab. It was most sinful, being against the canon
Prohibiting all churchmen to bear weapons;
And as he fell in that unseemly guise,
Perchance his soul may rue it.
K. Ed. (overhearing the last words). Who may rue it?
And what is to be said?
Cha. (apart). I'll match his Reverence for the titles
Of Everingham.
—The Abbot says, my Liege, the deed was sinful,
By which your chaplain, wielding secular weapons,
Secured your Grace’s life and liberty,
And that he suffers for’t in purgatory.
K. Ed. (to the Abbot). Say’st thou my chaplain is in purgatory?
Ab. It is the canon speaks it, good my Liege.
K. Ed. In purgatory! thou shalt pray him out on’t,
Or I will make thee wish thyself beside him.
Ab. My Lord, perchance his soul is past the aid
Of all the Church may do—there is a place
From which there’s no redemption.
K. Ed. And if I thought my faithful chaplain there,
Thou shouldst there join him, priest!—Go, watch, fast,
pray,
And let me have such prayers as will storm Heaven—
None of your maim’d and mutter’d hunting-masses.
Ab. (apart to Cha.). For God’s sake take him off!
Cha. Wilt thou compound, then,
The tithes of Everingham?
K. Ed. I tell thee, if thou bearst the keys of Heaven,
Abbot, thou shalt not turn a bolt with them
‘Gainst any well-deserving English subject.
Ab. (to Cha.). We will compound, and grant thee, too, a share
I’ the next indulgence. Thou dost need it much,
And greatly ’twill avail thee.
Cha. Enough—we’re friends, and when occasion serves,
I will strike in.—
[Flourish of Trumpets, answered by a distant sound of Bugles.
See, Chandos, Percy—Ha, Saint George! Saint Edward!
See it descending now, the fatal hail-shower,
The storm of England’s wrath—sure, swift, resist-
less,
Which no mail-coat can brook.—Brave English hearts!
How close they shoot together!—as one eye
Had aim’d five thousand shafts—as if one hand
Had loosed five thousand bow-strings!
Per. The thick volley
Darkens the air, and hides the sun from us.
K. Ed. It falls on those shall see the sun no more.
The winged, the resistless plague1 is with them,
How their vex’d host is reeling to and fro!
Like the chafed whale with fifty lances in him,
They do not see, and cannot shun, the wound.
The storm is viewless as Death’s sable wing,
Unerring as his seythe.
Per. Horses and riders are going down together.
’Tis almost pity to see nobles fall,
And by a peasant’s arrow.
Bal. I could weep them,
Although they are my rebels.
Cha. (aside to Per.). His conquerors, he means, who cast him out
From his usurped kingdom.—(Aloud.) ’Tis the worst of it,
That knights can claim small honor in the field
Which archers win, unaided by our lances.
K. Ed. The battle is not ended.
[Looks towards the field.
Not ended?—scarce begun! What horse are these.
Rush from the thicket underneath the hill?
Per. They’re Hainaulters, the followers of Queen
Isabel.
K. Ed. (hastily). Hainaulters!—thou art blind—wear Hainaulters
Saint Andrew’s silver cross?—or would they charge
Full on our archers, and make havoc of them?—
Bruce is alive again—ho, rescue! rescue!—
Who was’t survey’d the ground?
Riba. Most royal Liege—
K. Ed. A rose hath fallen from thy chaplet,2
Ribamont.
Riba. I’ll win it back, or lay my head beside it.
[Exit.
K. Ed. Saint George! Saint Edward! Gentlemen, to horse,
And to the rescue!—Percy, lead the billmen;
Chandos, do thou bring up the men-at-arms.—
If yonder numerous host should now bear down
Bold as their vanguard, (to the Abbot,) thou may’st pray for us,

1 MS. : “The viewless, the resistless plague,” &c.
2 The well-known expression by which Robert Bruce censured the negligence of Randolph for permitting an English body of cavalry to pass his flank on the day preceding the battle of Bannockburn.

We may need good men's prayers.—To the rescue,
Lords, to the rescue! ha, Saint George! Saint Edward!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

A part of the Field of Battle betwixt the two Main Armies. Tumults behind the scene; alarums, and cries of "Gordon, a Gordon!" "Swinton!" &c.

Enter, as victorious over the English vanguard, Vipont, Reynald, and others.

VIP. 'Tis sweet to hear these war-cries sound togetherness,—
Gordon and Swinton.

REY. 'Tis passing pleasant, yet 'tis strange withal.
Faith, when at first I heard the Gordon's slogan
Sounded so near me, I had nigh struck down
The knave who cried it.2

Enter Swinton and Gordon.

SWI. Pitch down my pennon in yon holly bush.
GON. Mine in the thorn beside it; let them wave,
As fought this morn their masters, side by side.
SWI. Let the men rally, and restore their ranks
Here in this vantage-ground—disorder'd chase
Leads to disorder'd flight; we have done our part,
And if we're succes'd now, Plantagenet
Must turn his bridle southward.—
Reynald, spur to the Regent with the basnet
Of stont De Grey, the leader of their vanguard;
Say, that in battle-front the Gordon slew him,
And by that token bid him send us succor.

GON. And tell him that when Selby's headlong charge
Had well-nigh borne me down, Sir Alan smote him.
I cannot send his helmet, never nutshell
Went to so many shivers.—Harkye, grooms!

[To those behind the scenes.]

Why do you let my noble steed stand stiffening
After so hot a course?

SWI. Ay, breathe your horses, they'll have work anon,

For Edward's men-at-arms will soon be on us,
The flower of England, Gaseony, and Flanders;
But with swift succor we will bide them bravely.—
De Vipont, thou look'st sad.3

VIP. It is because I hold a Templar's sword
Wet to the crossed hilt with Christian blood.
SWI. The blood of English archers—what can gild
A Scottish blade more bravely?

VIP. Even therefore grieve I for those gallant yeesmen,
England's peculiar and appropriate sons,
Known in no other land. Each boasts his hearth
And field as free as the best lord his barony,
Owing subjection to no human vassallage,
Save to their King and law. Hence are they resolute,
Leading the van on every day of battle,
As men who know the blessings they defend.
Hence are they frank and generous in peace,
As men who have their portion in its plenty.
No other kingdom shows such worth and happiness
Veil'd in such low estate—therefore I mourn them.
SWI. I'll keep my sorrow for our native Scots
Who, spite of hardship, poverty, oppression,
Still follow to the field their Chieftain's banner,
And die in the defence on't.

GON. And if I live and see my halls again,
They shall have portion in the good they fight for.
Each hardy follower shall have his field,
His household hearth and sod-built home, as free
As ever Southron had. They shall be happy!—
And my Elizabeth shall smile to see it!—4
I have betray'd myself.

SWI. Do not believe it.—
Vipont, do thou look out from yonder height,
And see what motion in the Scottish host,
And in King Edward's.—[Exit Vipont.]

Now will I counsel thee;

The Templar's ear is for no tale of love,
Being wedded to his Order. But I tell thee,
The brave young knight that hath no lady-love
Is like a lamp unlighted; his brave deeds,
And its rich painting, do seem then most glorious,
When the pure ray gleams through them.—
Hath thy Elizabeth no other name?26

1 "In the second act, after the English nobles have amused themselves in some trifling conversation with the Abbot of Walthamstow, Edward is introduced, and his proud, courageous temper and short manner are very admirably delineated; though, if our historical recollections do not fail us, it is more completely the picture of Longshanks than that of the third Edward. . . . We conceive it to be extremely probable that Sir Walter Scott had resolved to commemorate some of the events in the life of Wallace, and had already sketched that hero, and a Templar, and Edward the First, when his eye glanced over the description of Haldon Hill, in Pinkerton's History of Scotland; that, being pleased with the characters of Swinton and Gordon, he transferred his Wallace to Swinton; and that, for the sake of retaining his portrait of Edward, as there happened to be a Gordon and a Douglas at the battle of Haldon, in the time of Edward the Third, and there was so much similarity in the circumstances of the contest, he preserved his Edward as Edward the Third, retaining also his old Knight Templar, in defiance of the anachronism."—Monthly Review, July, 1822.

2 The MS. adds, "such was my surprise."

3 "While thus enjoying a breathing time, Swinton observes the thoughtful countenance of De Vipont. See what follows. Were ever England and Englishmen more nobly, more beautifully, more justly characterized than by the latter, or was patriotic feeling ever better sustained than by the former and his brave companions in arms?"—New Edinburgh Review.

4 "There wanted but a little of the tender passion to make this youth every way a hero of romance. But the poem has no ladies. How admirably is this defect supplied! In his enthusiastic anticipation of prosperity, he allows a name to escape him."—New Edinburgh Review.

5 "Amid the confusion and din of the battle, the reader is unexpectedly greeted with a dialogue which breathes indeed the soft sounds of the lute in the clang of trumpets."—Monthly Review.
HALIDON HILL.

GOR. Must I then speak of her to you, Sir Alan?
The thought of thee, and of thy matchless strength,
Hath conjured phantoms up amongst her dreams.
The name of Swinton hath been spell sufficient
To chase the rich blood from her lovely cheek,
And wouldst thou now know hers?

SWI. I would, nay must.

Thy father in the paths of chivalry
Should know the load-star thou dost rule thy course by.

GOR. Nay, then, her name is—hark—

[Whispers.

SWI. I know it well, that ancient northern house.

GOR. Oh, thou shalt see its fairest grace and honor
In my Elizabeth. And if music touch thee—

SWI. It did, before disasters had untuned me.

GOR. Oh, her notes
Shall hush each sad remembrance to oblivion,
Or melt them to such gentleness of feeling
That grief shall have its sweetness. Who, but she,
Knows the wild harpings of our native land?
Whether they lull the shepherd on his hill,
Or wake the knight to battle; rouse to merriment,
Or soothe to sadness,—she can touch each mood.
Princes and statesmen, chiefs renown'd in arms,
And gray-hair'd bards, contend which shall the first
And choicest homage render to the enchantress.

SWI. You speak her talent bravely.

GOR. Though you smile,
I do not speak it half. Her gift creative
New measures adds to every air she wakes;
Varying and gracing it with liquid sweetness,
Like the wild modulation of the lark;
Now leaving, now returning to the strain!
To listen to her is to seem to wander
In some enchanted labyrinth of romance,
Whence nothing but the lovely fairy's will,
Who wove the spell, can extricate the wanderer.

Methinks I hear her now!—

SWI. Bless'd privilege
Of youth! There's scarce three minutes to decide
'Twixt death and life, 'twixt triumph and defeat,
Yet all his thoughts are in his lady's bower,
List'ning her harping!—

[Enter VIPONT.

VIP. Where are thine, De VIPONT?

SWI. On death,—on judgment,—on eternity!
For time is over with us.

SWI. There moves not, then, one pennon to our aid,
Of all that flutter yonder!

VIP. From the main English host come rushing forward
Pennons snow—ay, and their royal standard.
But ours stand rooted, as for crows to roost on.

SWI. (to himself). I'll rescue him at least.—Young
Lord of Gordon,
Spur to the Regent—show the instant need—

GOR. I penetrate thy purpose; but I go not.

SWI. Not at my bidding? I, thy sire in chivalry—
Thy leader in the battle—I command thee.

GOR. No, thou wilt not command me seek my safety,—
For such is thy kind meaning,—at the expense
Of the last hope which Heaven reserves for Scotland.
While I abide, no follower of mine
Will turn his rein for life; but were I gone,
What power can stay them? and, our band dispersed,
What swords shall for an instant stem you host,
And save the latest chance for victory?

VIP. The noble youth speaks truth; and were he gone,
There will not twenty spears be left with us.

GOR. No, bravely as we have begun the field,
So let us fight it out. The Regent's eyes,
More certain than a thousand messages,
Shall see us stand, the barrier of his host
Against you bursting storm. If pot for honor,
If not for warlike rule, for shame at least
He must bear down to aid us.

SWI. Must it be so?

And am I forced to yield the sad consent,
Devoting thy young life? Oh, Gordon, Gordon,
I do it as the patriarch doom'd his issue,—
I at my country's, he at Heaven's command;
But I see vainly some atoning sacrifice,
Rather than such a victim!—(Trumpets.) Hark, they come!

That music sounds not like thy lady's lute.

GOR. Yet shall my lady's name mix with it gayly—
Mount, vassals, couch your lances, and cry, "Gordon!
Gordon for Scotland and Elizabeth!"

[Exeunt. Loud Alarums.

SCENE III.

Another part of the Field of Battle, adjacent to the former Scene.

Alarums. Enter Swinton, followed by Hob Hatteley.

SWI. Stand to it yet! The man who flies to-day,
May bastards warm them at his household hearth!

HOB. That ne'er shall be my curse. My Magdalen
Is trusty as my broadsword.

SWI. Ha, thou knave,
Art thou dismounted too?

HOB. I know, Sir Alan,

You want no homeward guide; so threw my reins
Upon my palfrey's neck, and let him loose.

Within an hour he stands before my gate;
And Magdalen will need no other token
To bid the Melrose Monks say masses for me.

1 MS.: "And am I doom'd to yield the sad consent
That thus devotes thy life?"

2 MS.: "Oh, could there be some lesser sacrifice."
SWI. Thou art resolved to cheat the halter, then? Hor. It is my purpose, Having lived a thief, to die a brave man's death; And never had I a more glorious chance for't. SWI. Here lies the way to it, knave.—Make in, make in, And aid young Gordon! [Exeunt. Loud and long Alarums. After which the Scene rises, and discovers SWINTON on the ground, GORDON supporting him; both much wounded.

SWI. All are cut down—the reapers have pass’d o’er us, And hie to distant harvest.—My toil’s over; There lies my sickle. (Dropping his sword.) Hand of mine again Shall never, never wield it! GOR. Oh, valiant leader, is thy light extinguish’d! That only beacon-flame which promised safety In this day’s deadly wrack! SWI. My lamp hath long been dim! But thine, young Gordon, Just kindled, to be quench’d so suddenly, Ere Scotland saw its splendor!— GOR. Five thousand horse hung idly on yon hill, Saw us o’erpower’d, and no one stirr’d to aid us! SWI. It was the Regent’s envy.—Out!—alas! Why blame I him!—It was our civil discord, Our selfish vanity, our jealous hatred, Which framed this day of dole for our poor country.— Had thy brave father held yon leading staff, As well his rank and valor might have claim’d it, We had not fall’n unaided.—How, oh how Is he to answer it, whose deed prevented— GOR. Alas! alas! the author of the death-feud, He has his reckoning too! for had your sons And num’rous vassals lived, we had lack’d no aid. SWI. May God assolve the dead, and him who follows! We’ve drank the poison’d beverage which we brew’d: Have sown the wind, and reap’d the tenfold whirlwind!— But thou, brave youth, whose nobleness of heart Pour’d oil upon the wounds our hate inflicted; Thou, who hast done no wrong, needst no forgiveness,— Why shouldst thou share our punishment! GOR. All need forgiveness—(distant alarum)— Hark, in yonder shout Did the main battles counter! SWI. Look on the field, brave Gordon, if thou canst, And tell me how the day goes.—But I guess, Too surely do I guess— GOR. All’s lost! all’s lost! Of the main Scottish host,

Some wildly fly, and some rush wildly forward; And some there are who seem to turn their spears Against their countrymen. SWI. Rashness, and cowardice, and secret treason, Combine to ruin us; and our hot valor, Devoid of discipline, is madmen’s strength, More fatal unto friends than enemies! I’m glad that these dim eyes shall see no more on’t.— Let thy hands close them, Gordon—I will dream My fair-hair’d William renders me that office! [Dies. GOR. And, Swinton, I will think I do that duty To my dead father.

Enter De Vipont.

VIP. Fly, fly, brave youth!—A handful of thy followers, The scatter’d gleaning of this desperate day, Still hover yonder to essay thy rescue.— Oh linger not!—I’ll be your guide to them. GOR. Look there, and bid me fly!—The oak has fall’n; And the young ivy bush, which learn’d to climb By its support, must needs partake its fall. VIP. Swinton? Alas! the best, the bravest, strongest, And saget of our Scottish chivalry! Forgive one moment, if to save the living, My tongue should wrong the dead.—Gordon, bethink thee, Thou dost but stay to perish with the corpse Of him who slew thy father. GOR. Ay, but he was my sire in chivalry. He taught my youth to soar above the promptings Of mean and selfish vengeance; gave my youth A name that shall not die even on this death-spot. Records shall tell this field had not been lost, Had all men fought like Swinton and like Gordon. [Trumpets. Save thee, De Vipont.—Hark! the Southron trumpets.

VIP. Nay, without thee I stir not.

Enter EDWARD, CHANDOS, PERCY, BAILIOL, &c. GOR. Ay, they come on—the Tyrant and the Traitor; Workman and tool, Plantagenet and Bailiol.— Oh for a moment’s strength in this poor arm, To do one glorious deed! [He rushes on the English, but is made prisoner with VIPONT.

K. ED. Disarm them—harm them not; though it was they Made havoc on the archers of our vanguard, They and that bulky champion. Where is he? CHAN. Here lies the giant! Say his name, young Knight?

1 This speech of Swinton’s is interpolated on the blank page of the manuscript.

2 MS.: “Thou hast small cause to tarry with the corpse.”
Gor. Let it suffice, he was a man this morning.¹

CH. I question'd thee in sport; I do not need Thy information, youth. Who that has fought Through all these Scottish wars, but knows his crest, The sable bow chain'd to the leafy oak, And that huge mace, still seen where war was wildest? K. Ed. 'Tis Alan Swinton!

Gor. Chamberlain, who in my tent at Weardale Stood by my startled couch with torch and mace, When the Black Douglas' war-cry waked my camp. Gor. (sinking down). If thus thou know'st him, Thou wilt respect his corpse.³

K. Ed. As belted Knight and crowned King, I will. Gor. And let mine Sleep at his side, in token that our death Ended the feud of Swinton and of Gordon. K. Ed. It is the Gordon!—Is there ought beside Edward can do to honor bravery, Even in an enemy? Gor. Nothing but this: Let not base Balliol, with his touch or look, Profane my corpse or Swinton's. I've some breath Enough to say.—Scotland! Elizabeth! [Dies.

¹ In his narrative of events on the day after the battle of Sheriffmuir, Sir Walter Scott says:—"Amongst the gentlemen who fell on this occasion were several on both sides alike eminent for birth and character. The body of the gallant young Earl of Strathmore was found on the field, watched by a faithful old domestic, who, being asked the name of the person whose body he waited upon with such care, made this striking reply, 'He was a man yesterday.'"—Tales of a Grandfather.

² MS.: "Stood arm'd beside my couch," &c.

³ "The character of Swinton is obviously a favorite with the author, to which circumstance we are probably indebted for the strong relief in which it is given, and the perfect verisimilitude which belongs to it. The stately, commanding figure of the veteran warrior, whom, by the illusion of his art, the author has placed in veritable presencement before us; his venerable age, superior prowess, and intuitive decision; the broils in which he had engaged, the misfortunes he had suffered, and the interminable war with which he sustained them, together with that rigorous control of temper, not to be shaken even by unmerited contumely and insult;—these qualities, grouped and embodied in one and the same character, render it morally impossible that we should not at once sympathize and admire. The inherent force of his character is finely illustrated in the effect produced upon Lord Gordon by the first appearance of the man 'who had made him fatherless.'"—Edinburgh Magazine, July, 1822.

⁴ A Venetian general, observing his soldiers testified some unwillingness to fight against those of the pope, whom they regarded as father of the Church, addressed them in terms of similar encouragement:—"Fight on! we were Venetians before we were Christians." ⁵ It is generally the case that much expectation ends in disappointment. The free delineation of character in some of the recent Scottish novels, and the admirable conversations interspersed throughout them, raised hopes that, when a regular drama should be attempted by the person who was considered as their author, the success would be eminent. Its announcement, too, in a solemn and formal manner, did not diminish the interest of the public. The drama, however, which was expected, turns out to be in fact, and not only in name, merely a dramatic sketch, which is entirely deficient in plot, and contains but three characters, Swinton, Gordon, and Edward, in whom any interest is endeavored to be excited. With some exceptions, the dialogue also is flat and course; and for all these defects, one or two vigorous descriptions of battle scenes will scarcely make sufficient atonement, except in the eyes of very enthusiastic friends."—Monthly Review.

"'Haldon Hill,' we understand, unlike the earlier poems of his author, has not been received into the ranks of popular favor. Such rumors, of course, have no effect on our critical judgment; but we cannot forbear saying that, thinking as we do very highly of the spirit and taste with which an interesting tale is here sketched in natural and energetic verse, we are yet far from feeling surprised that the approbation which it is our pleasing duty to bestowed should not have been anticipated by the ordinary readers of the work before us. It bears, in truth, no great resemblance to the narrative poems from which Sir Walter Scott derived his first and high reputation, and by which, for the present, his genius must be characterized. It is wholly free from many of their most obvious faults— their carelessness, their irregularity, and their inequality both of conception and of execution; but it wants likewise in considerable portion of their beauties—it has less 'pomp and circumstance,' less picturesque description, romantic association, and chivalrous glitter, less sentiment and reflection, less perhaps of all their striking charms, with the single exception of that one redeeming and sufficing quality which forms, in our view, the highest recommendation of all the author's works of imagination, their unaffected and unflagging vigor. This perhaps, after all, is only saying that we have before us a dramatic poem, instead of a metrical tale of romance, and that the author has had too much taste and discretion to bestow upon his scenes with inappropriately and encumbering ornament. There is, however, a class of readers of poetry, and a pretty large class, too, who have no relish for a work, however naturally and strongly the characters and incidents may be conceived and sustained—however appropriate and manly may be the imagery and diction—from which they cannot select any isolated passages to store in their memories or their commonplace books, to whisper into a lady's ear or transcribe into a lady's album. With this tea-table and watering-place school of critics 'Haldon Hill' must expect no favor; it has no rant, no mysticism, and, worst offence of all, no affectation."—British Critic, October, 1822.
MacDuff's Cross.

INTRODUCTION.

These few scenes had the honor to be included in a Miscellany published in the year 1823 by Miss Joanna Baillie, and are here reprinted to unite them with the trifles of the same kind which owe their birth to the author. The singular history of the Cross and Law of Clan MacDuff is given, at length enough to satisfy the keenest antiquary, in the Miscellany of the Scottish Border.1 It is here only necessary to state that the Cross was a place of refuge to any person related to MacDuff, within the ninth degree, who, having committed homicide in sudden quarrel, should reach this place, prove his descent from the Thane of Fife, and pay a certain penalty.

The shaft of the Cross was destroyed at the Reformation. The huge block of stone which served for its pedestal is still in existence near the town of Newburgh, on a kind of pass which commands the county of Fife to the southward, and to the north the windings of the magnificent Tay and fertile country of Angus-shire. The Cross bore an inscription, which is transmitted to us in an unintelligible form by Sir Robert Sibbald.

Abbotsford, January, 1830.

Dramatis Personæ.

NINIAN, WALDHAWE, } Monks of Lindores.
LINDSEAY, MAURICE BERKELEY, } Scottish Barons.

To Miss Joanna Baillie, Author of
"The Plays on the Passions."

Prellude.

Nay, smile not, Lady, when I speak of witchcraft,
And say that still there lurks amongst our glens

Some touch of strange enchantment. Mark that fragment,
I mean that rough-hewn block of massive stone,
Placed on the summit of this mountain pass,
Commanding prospect wide o'er field and fell,
And peopled village and extended moorland,
And the wide ocean and majestic Tay,
To the far-distant Grampians. Do not deem it
A loosed' portion of the neighboring rock,
Detach'd by storm and thunder; — 'twas the pedestal
On which, in ancient times, a Cross was rear'd,
Carved o'er with words which foil'd philologists;
And the events it did commemorate
Were dark, remote, and undistinguishable
As were the mystic characters it bore.
But, mark,—a wizard, born on Avon's bank,
Tuned but his harp to this wild northern theme,
And, lo! the scene is hallow'd. None shall pass,
Now or in after days, beside that stone,
But he shall have strange visions; thoughts and words
That shake, or rouse, or thrill the human heart,
Shall rush upon his memory when he hears
The spirit-stirring name of this rude symbol;—
Oblivious ages, at that simple spell,
Shall render back their terrors with their woes,
Alas! and with their crimes—and the proud phantoms
Shall move with step familiar to his eye,
And accents which, once heard, the ear forgets not,
Though ne'er again to list them. Siddons, thine,
Thou matchless Siddons! thrill upon our ear;
And on our eye thy lofty Brother's form
Rises as Scotland's monarch.—But to thee,
Joanna, why to thee speak of such visions?—
Thine own wild wand can raise them.

Yet, since thou wilt an idle tale of mine,
Take one which scarcely is of worth enough
To give or to withhold. Our time creeps on,
Fancy grows colder as the silvery hair
Tells the advancing winter of our life.
But if it be of worth enough to please,
That worth it owes to her who set the task;
If otherwise, the fault rests with the author.

MacDuff's Cross.

Scene I.

The summit of a rocky Pass near Newburgh, about two miles from the ancient Abbey of Lindores, in Fife. In the centre is MacDuff's Cross, an antique

1 Vol. iv., p. 266, in the appendix to Lord Soulis' "Law of Clan MacDuff." (738)
Macduff's Cross.

Monument; and at a small distance, on one side, a Chapel, with a Lamp burning.

Enter, as having ascended the Pass, Ninian and Waldhave, Monks of Lindores. Ninian crosses himself, and seems to recite his devotions. Waldhave stands gazing on the prospect, as if in deep contemplation.

Nin. Here stands the Cross, good brother, consecrated
By the bold Thane unto his patron saint
Magridius, once a brother of our house.
Canst thou not spare an ave or a creed?
Or hast the steep ascent exhausted you?
You trod it stoutly, though 'twas rough and toilsome.

Wal. I have trod a rougher.

Nin. On the Highland hills—
Searcely within our sea-girt province here,
Unless upon the Lomonds or Benarty.

Wal. I spoke not of the literal path, good father,
But of the road of life which I have travell'd
Ere I assumed this habit; it was bounded,
Hedged in, and limited by earthly prospects,
As ours beneath was closed by dell and thicket.

Here we see wide and far, and the broad sky,
With wide horizon, opens full around,
While earthly objects dwindle. Brother Ninian,
Fain would I hope that mental elevation
Could raise me equally o'er worldly thoughts,
And place me nearer heaven.

Nin. 'Tis good morality.—But yet forget not,
That though we look on heaven from this high eminence,
Yet doth the Prince of all the airy space,
Arch foe of man, possess the realms between.

Wal. Most true, good brother; and men may be farther
From the bright heaven they aim at, even because They deem themselves secure on.

Nin. (after a pause.) You do gaze—
Strangers are wont to do so—on the prospect.

You is the Tay roll'd down from Highland hills,
That rests its waves, after so rude a race,
In the fair plains of Gowrie—farther westward,
Prond Stirling rises—yonder to the east,
Dundee, the gift of God, and fair Montrose,
And still more northward lie the ancient towers—

Wal. Of Edzell.

Nin. How? know you the towers of Edzell?

Wal. I've heard of them.

Nin. Then have you heard a tale
Which, when he tells, the peasant shakes his head,
And shuns the moulderig and deserted walls.

Wal. Why, and by whom, deserted?

Nin. Long the tale—
Enough to say that the last Lord of Edzell,
Bold Louis Lindesay, had a wife, and found—

Wal. Enough is said, indeed—since a weak woman,
Ay, and a tempting fiend, lost Paradise,
When man was innocent.

Nin. They fell at strife,
Men say, on slight occasion: that fierce Lindesay
Did bend his sword against De Berkeley's breast,
And that the lady threw herself between:

That then De Berkeley dealt the Baron's death-wound.

Enough, that from that time De Berkeley bore
A spear in foreign wars. But, it is said,
He hath return'd of late; and therefore, brother,
The Prior hath ordain'd our vigil here,
To watch the privilege of the sanctuary,
And rights of Clan MacDuff.

Wal. What rights are these?

Nin. Most true! you are but newly come from Rome,
And do not know our ancient usages.

Know, when fell Macbeth beneath the arm
Of the predestined knight, unborn of woman,
Three boons the victor ask'd, and thrice did Malcolm,
Stooping the sceptre by the Thane restored,
Assent to his request. And hence the rule,
That first when Scotland's King assumes the crown,
MacDuff's descendant rings his brow with it;

And hence, when Scotland's King calls forth his host,
MacDuff's descendant leads the van in battle:

And last, in guardon of the crown restored,
Red with the blood of the usurping tyrant,
The right was granted in succeeding time,
That if a kinsman of the Thane of Fife

Commit a slaughter on a sudden impulse,
And fly for refuge to this Cross MacDuff,
For the Thane's sake he shall find sanctuary;
For here must the avenger's step be stayed,

And here the pantaing homicide find safety.

Wal. And here a brother of your order watches,

To see the custom of the place observed?

Nin. Even so;—such is our convent's holy right,
Since Saint Magridius—blessed be his memory!—

Did by a vision warn the Abbot Eadmir.—

And chief we watch, when there is bickering
Among the neighboring nobles, now most likely
From this return of Berkeley from abroad,

Having the Lindesay's blood upon his hand.

Wal. The Lindesay, then, was loved among his friends?

Nin. Honor'd and fear'd he was—but little loved:

For even his bounty bore a show of sternness;

And when his passions waked, he was a Sathan
Of wrath and injury.

Wal. How now, Sir Priest! (fiercely)—Forgive me (recollecting himself)—I was dreaming

Of an old baron, who did bear about him

Some touch of your Lord Reynold.

Nin. Lindesay's name, my brother,
Indeed was Reynold;—and methinks, moreover,

That, as you spoke even now, he would have spoken.
I brought him a petition from our convent:
He granted straight, but in such tone and manner,
By my good saint! I thought myself scarce safe
Till Tay roll'd broad between us. I must now
Unto the chapel—meanwhile the watch is thine;
And, at thy word, the hurrying fugitive,
Should such arrive, must here find sanctuary;
And, at thy word, the fiery-paced avenger
Must stop his bloody course—c'en as swoon Jordan
Controll'd his waves, soon as they touch'd the feet
Of those who bore the ark.

WAL. Is this my charge?
NIN. Even so; and I am near, should chance re-require me.

At midnight I relieve you on your watch,
When we may taste together some refreshment:
I have car'd for it; and for a flask of wine—
There is no sin, so that we drink it not Until the midnight hour, when lands have toll'd,
Farewell a while, and peaceful watch be with you!

[Exit towards the Chapel.

WAL. It is not with me, and alas! alas!
I know not where to seek it. This monk's mind
Is with his cloister match'd, nor lacks more room.
Its petty duties, formal ritual,
Its humble pleasures and its paltry troubles,
Fill up his round of life: even as some reptiles,
They say, are moulded to the very shape
And all the angles of the rocky crevice
In which they live and die. But for myself,
Retired in passion to the narrow cell,
Conching my tired limbs in its recesses,
So ill adapted am I to its limits,
That every attitude is agony.—
How now! what brings him back?

Re-enter NINIAN.

NIN. Look to your watch, my brother; horsemen come:
I heard their tread when kneeling in the chapel.

WAL. (looking at a distance). My thoughts have rapt me more than thy devotion,
Else had I heard the tread of distant horses
Further than thou couldst hear the sacring bell;
But now in truth they come:—flight and pursuit
Are sights I've been long strange to.

NIN. See how they gallop down the opposing hill!
You gray steed bounding down the headlong path,
As on the level meadow; while the black,
Urged by the rider with his naked sword,
Stoops on his prey, as I have seen the falcon
Dashing upon the heron.—Thou dost frown,
And clench thy hand as if it grasp'd a weapon.

WAL. 'Tis but for shame to see a man fly thus While only one pursues him. Coward, turn!—
Turn thee, I say! thou art as stout as he,
And well may'st match thy single sword with his—
Shame, that a man should rein a steel like thee,
Yet fear to turn his front against a foe!—
I am ashamed to look on them.

NIN. Yet look again; they quit their horses now,
Unfit for the rough path: the fugitive
Keeps the advantage still. They strain towards us.

WAL. I'll not believe that ever the bold Thane
Rear'd up his Cross to be a sanctuary
To the base coward who shunn'd an equal combat.—
How's this?—that look—that mien—mine eyes grow dizzy!—

NIN. He comes!—thou art a novice on this watch,—
Brother, I'll take the word and speak to him.
Pluck down thy cowl; know that we spiritual champions

Have honor to maintain, and must not seem
To quail before the haity.

[Waldhale lets down his cowl, and steps back.

Enter Maurice Berkeley.

NIN. Who art thou, stranger? speak thy name and purpose.

BER. I claim the privilege of Clan MacDuff.
My name is Maurice Berkeley, and my lineage
Allies me nearly with the Thane of Fife.

NIN. Give us to know the cause of sanctuary?

BER. Let him show it
Against whose violence I claim the privilege.

Enter Lindesay, with his sword drawn. He rushes at Berkeley; Ninian interposes.

NIN. Peace, in the name of Saint Magridius!
Peace, in my Prior's name, and in the name
Of that dear symbol which did purchase peace
And good will towards man! I do command thee
To sheathe thy sword, and stir no contest here.

LIN. One charm I'll try first,
To lure the craven from the enchanted circle
Which he hath harbor'd in.—Hear you, De Berkeley,
This is my brother's sword—the hand it arms
Is weapon'd to avenge a brother's death:—
If thou hast heart to step a furlong off,
And change three blows,—even for so short a space
As these good men may say an ave-marie,—
So Heaven be good to me! I will forgive thee
Thy deed and all its consequences.

BER. Were not my right hand fetter'd by the thought
That slaying thee were but a double guilt
In which to steep my soul, no bridegroom ever
Stepp'd forth to trip a measure with his bride
More joyfully than I, young man, would rush
To meet thy challenge.

LIN. He quails, and shuns to look upon my weapon,
Yet boasts himself a Berkeley!

BER. Lindesay, and if there were no deeper cause
For shunning thee than terror of thy weapon,
That rock-hewn Cross as soon should start and stir
Because a shepherd-boy blew horn beneath it,
As I for brag of thine.

NIN. I charge you both, and in the name of Heaven,
Breathe no defiance on this sacred spot,
Where Christian men must bear them peacefully,
On pain of the Church thunders. Calmly tell
MACDUFF'S CROSS. 741

Your cause of difference; and, Lord Lindesey, thou
Be first to speak them.

LIN. Ask the blue welkin—ask the silver Tay,
The northern Grampians—all things know my wrongs;
But ask not me to tell them, while the villain
Who wrought them stands and listens with a smile.

NIN. It is said—
Since you refer us thus to general fame—
That Berkeley slew thy brother, the Lord Louis,
In his own halls at Etzell——

LIN. Ay, in his halls—
In his own halls, good father, that's the word,
In his own halls he slew him, while the wine
Pass'd on the board between! The gallant Thane,
Who wreak'd Macbeth's inhospitable murder,
Rear'd not yon Cross to sanction deeds like these.

BER. Thou say'st I came a guest!—I came a victim,
A destined victim, train'd on to the doom
His frantic jealousy prepared for me.
He fix'd a quarrel on me, and we fought,
Can I forget the form that came between us,
And perish'd by his sword? 'Twas then I fought
For vengeance,—until then I guarded life,
But then I sought to take it, and prevail'd.

LIN. Wretch! thou didst first dishonor to thy victim,
And then didst slay him!

BER. There is a busy fiend tugs at my heart,
But I will struggle with it!—Youthful knight,
My heart is sick of war, my hand of slaughter;
I come not to my lordships, or my land,
But just to seek a spot in some cold cloister,
Which I may kneel on living, and, when dead,
Which may suffice to cover me,
Forgive me that I caused your brother's death;
And I forgive thee the injurious terms
With which thou taxest me.

LIN. Take worse and blacker.—Murderer, adulterer!—
Art thou not moved yet?

BER. Do not press me further.
The hunted stag, even when he seeks the thicket,
Counsell'd to stand at bay, grows dangerous! Most true thy brother perish'd by my hand,
And if you term it murder, I must hear it.
Thus far my patience can; but if thou brand
The purity of yonder martyr'd saint,
Whom then my sword but poorly did avenge,
With one injurious word, come to the valley,
And I will show thee how it shall be answer'd!

NIN. This heat, Lord Berkeley, doth but ill accord
With thy late pious patience.

BER. Father, forgive, and let me stand excused
To Heaven and thee, if patience brooks no more.

I loved this lady—fondly, truly loved—Loved her, and was beloved, ere yet her father
Confer'd her on another. While she lived,
Each thought of her was to my soul as hallow'd
As those I send to Heaven; and on her grave,
Her bloody, early grave, while this poor hand
Can hold a sword, shall no one cast a scorn.

LIN. Follow me. Thou shalt hear me call the adulteress
By her right name.—I'm glad there's yet a spar
Can rouse thy slurred mettle.

BER. Make then obesiance to the blessed Cross,
For it shall be on earth thy last devotion.

[They are going off.

WAL. ( rushing forward). Madmen, stand!—
Stay but one second—answer but one question.—
There, Maurice Berkeley, canst thou look upon
That blessed sign, and swear thou'st spoken truth?

BER. I swear by Heaven,
And by the memory of that murder'd innocent,
Each seeming charge against her was as false
As our bless'd Lady's spotless. Hear, each saint!
Hear me, thou holy rood! hear me from heaven,
Thou martyr'd excellence!—Hear me from penal fire
(For sure not yet thy guilt is expiated!),
Stern ghost of her destroyer!——

WAL. ( throws back his coat). He hears! he hears!
Thy spell hath raised the dead.

LIN. My brother! and alive!—

WAL. Alive,—but yet, my Richard, dead to thee:
No tie of kindred binds me to the world;
All were renounced when, with reviving life,
Came the desire to seek the sacred cloister.
Alas, in vain! for to that last retreat,
Like to a pack of blood-hounds in full chase,
My passion and my wrongs have follow'd me,
Wrath and remorse—and, to fill up the cry,
Thou hast brought vengeance hither.

LIN. I but sought
To do the act and duty of a brother.

WAL. I ceased to be so when I left the world;
But if he can forgive as I forgive,
God sends me here a brother in mine enemy,
To pray for me and with me. If thou canst,
De Berkeley, give thine hand.—

BER. ( gives his hand). It is the will
Of Heaven, made manifest in thy preservation,
To inhibit further bloodshed; for De Berkeley,
The rotary Maurice lays the title down,
Go to his halls, Lord Richard, where a maiden,
Kin to his blood, and daughter in affection,
Heirs his broad lands;—if thou canst love her, Linde-
say,

Woo her, and be successful.
The Doom of Devorgoil.

PREFACE.

The first of these dramatic pieces was long since written for the purpose of obliging the late Mr. Terry, then Manager of the Adelphi Theatre, for whom the author had a particular regard. The manner in which the mimic goblins of Devorgoil are intermixed with the supernatural machinery was found to be objectionable, and the production had other faults which rendered it unfit for representation. I have called the piece a melodrama, for want of a better name; but, as I learn from the unquestionable authority of Mr. Colman's Random Records that one species of the drama is termed an extravaganza, I am sorry I was not sooner aware of a more appropriate name than that which I had selected for "Devorgoil."

The author's publishers thought it desirable that the scenes, long condemned to oblivion, should be united to similar attempts of the same kind; and as he felt indifferent on the subject, they are printed in the same volume with "Halidon Hill" and "MacDuff's Cross," and thrown off in a separate form, for the convenience of those who possess former editions of the author's poetical works.

The general story of the "Doom of Devorgoil" is founded on an old Scottish tradition, the scene of which lies in Galloway. The crime supposed to have occasioned the misfortunes of this devoted house is similar to that of a Lord Herries of Hoddam Castle, who is the principal personage of Mr. Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe's interesting ballad in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, vol. iv, p. 307. In remorse for his crime, he built the singular monument called the Tower of Repentance. In many cases the Scottish superstitions allude to the fairies, or those who, for sins of a milder description, are permitted to wander with the "rout that never rest," as they were termed by Dr. Leyden. They imitate human labor and human amusements, but their toil is useless and without any advantageous result; and their gayety is unsubstantial and hollow. The phantom of Lord Erick is supposed to be a spectre of this character.

The story of the Ghostly Barber is told in many countries; but the best narrative founded on the passage is the tale called "Stumme Liebe," among the legends of Muscus. I think it has been introduced upon the English stage in some pantomime, which was one objection to bringing it upon the scene a second time.

ABPOTSFORD, April, 1830.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

OSWALD OF DEVORGOIL, a decayed Scottish Baron.
LEONARD, a Ranger.
DURWARD, a Palmer.
LANCELOT BLACKTHORN, a Companion of Leonard, in love with Katleen.
GULLCRAMMER, a conceited Student.
OWLSPIEGLE and Maskers represented by Black-Cockledemoy, thorn and Katleen.
SPIRIT OF LORD ERICK OF DEVORGOIL.
Peasants, Shepherds, and Vassals of inferior rank.

ELEANOR, Wife of Oswald, descended of obscure Parentage.
FLORA, Daughter of Oswald.
KATELEEN, Niece of Eleanor.

The Doom of Devorgoil.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

The Scene represents a wild and hilly but not a mountainous Country, in a frontier District of Scotland. The flat Scene exhibits the Castle of Devorgoil, decayed and partly ruinous, situated upon a Lake, and connected with the Land by a Drawbridge, which is lowered. Time—Sunset.

FLORA enters from the Castle, looks timidly around, then comes forward and speaks.

He is not here—those pleasures are not ours Which placid evening brings to all things else.

SONG. The sun upon the lake is low, The wild birds hush their song, members of his profession, was, during many years, on terms of intimacy with Sir Walter Scott. He died 23d June, 1829. The author thought of omitting this song, which was, in fact, abridged into one in "Quentin Durward," termed "County Gay." [See ante, p. 701.] It seemed, however, necessary to the sense that the original stanzas should be retained here.
The hills have evening's deepest glow,
Yet Leonard tarries long.
Now all whom varied toil and care
From home and love divide,
In the calm sunset may repair
Each to the loved one's side.

The noble dame, on turret high,
Who waits her gallant knight,
Looks to the western beam to spy
The flash of armor bright.
The village maid, with hand on brow,
The level ray to shade,
Upon the footpath watches now
For Colin's darkening plaid.

Now to their mates the wild swans row,
By day they swap apart,
And to the thicket wanders slow
The hind beside the hart.
The woodlark at his partner's side
Twitters his closing song—
All meet whom day and care divide,
But Leonard tarries long.

[KATLEEN has come out of the Castle while Flora was singing, and speaks when the song is ended.]

KAT. Ah, my dear coz!—if that your mother's niece
May so presume to call your father's daughter—
All these fond things have got some home of comfort
To tempt their rovers back:—the lady's bower,
The shepherdess's hut, the wild swan's couch
Among the rushes, even the lark's low nest,
Has that of promise which lures home a lover;
But we have nought of this.

Flo. How call you, then, this castle of my sire,
The towers of Devorgoil?

Kat. Dungeons for men, and palaces for owls;
Yet no wise owl would change a farmer's barn
For yonder hungry hall. Our latest mouse—
Our last of mice, I tell you—has been found
Starved in the pantry; and the reverend spider,
Sole living tenant of the Baron's halls,
Who, train'd to abstinence, lived a whole summer
Upon a single fly,—he's famish'd too;
The cat is in the kitchen chimney seated
Upon our last of fagots, destined soon
To dress our last of suppers, and, poor soul,
Is starved with cold, and mewing mad with hunger.

Flo. D'ye mock our misery, Katleen?
Kat. No, but I am hysteric on the subject,
So I must laugh or cry, and laughing's lightest.

Flo. Why stay you with us then, my merry cousin?
From you my sire can ask no filial duty.

Kat. No, thanks to Heaven!
No noble in wide Scotland, rich or poor,
Can claim an interest in the vulgar blood

That dances in my veins; and I might wed
A forester to-morrow, nothing fearing
The wrath of high-born kindred, and far less
That the dry bones of lead-lapp'd ancestors
Would clatter in their ceremonies at the tidings.

Flo. My mother, too, would gladly see you placed
Beyond the verge of our unhappiness,
Which, like a witch's circle, blights and taints
Whatever comes within it.

Kat. Ah, my good aunt!
She is a careful kinswoman and prudent,
In all but marrying a ruin'd Baron,
When she could take her choice of honest yeomen;
And now, to balance this ambitious error,
She presses on her daughter's love the suit
Of one who hath no touch of nobleness,
In manners, birth, or mind, to recommend him,—
Sage Master Gullrammer, the new-dubb'd preacher.

Flo. Do not name him, Katleen!
Kat. Ay, but I must, and with some gratitude.
I said but now, I saw our last of fagots
Destined to dress our last of meals, but said not
That the repast consisted of choice dainties,
Sent to our harder by that liberal sitor,
The kind Melchisedek.

Flo. Were famishing the word,
I'd famish ere I tasted them—the top,
The fool, the low-born, low-bred, pedant coxcomb!
Kat. There spoke the blood of long-descended sires!
My cottage wisdom ought to echo back,—
Oh the snug parsonage! the well-paid stipend!
The yew-hedged garden! beehives, pigs, and poultry!
But, to speak honestly, the peasant Katleen,
Valuing these good things justly, still would scorn
To wed, for such, the paltry Gullrammer,
As much as Lady Flora.

Flo. Mock me not with a title, gentle cousin,
Which poverty has made ridiculous.—

[Trumpets for off.]

Hark! they have broken up the weapon-shewing;
The vassals are dismiss'd, and marching homeward.

Kat. Comes your sire back to-night?

Flo. He did purpose
To tarry for the banquet. This day only,
Summon'd as a king's tenant, he resumes
The right of rank his birth assigns to him,
And mingles with the proudest.

Kat. To return
To his domestic wretchedness to-morrow;
I envy not the privilege. Let us go
To yonder height, and see the marksmen practice;
They shoot their match down in the dale beyond,
Betwixt the Lowland and the Forest district,
By ancient custom, for a tun of wine.
Let us go see which wins.

Flo. That were too forward.
Kat. Why, you may drop the screen before your face,

1 MS.: "Beyond the circle of our wretchedness."
Which some chance breeze may haphly blow aside
Just when a youth of special note takes aim.
It chanced even so that memorable morning
When, nutting in the woods, we met young Leonard;—
And in good time here comes his sturdy comrade,
The rough Lance Blackthorn.

Enter Lanceot Blackthorn, a Forester, with the Carcass of a Deer on his back, and a Gun in his hand.
BLA. Save you, damsels!
KAT. Godden, good yeoman. Come you from the weapon-shaw?
BLA. Not I, indeed; there lies the mark I shot at.

[Loys down the Deer.
The time has been I had not miss’d the sport,
Although Lord Nichsdale’s self had wanted venison;
But this same mate of mine, young Leonard Daere,
Makes me do what he lists. He’ll win the prize, though:
The Forest district will not lose its honor,
And that is all I care for. (Some shots are heard.)
Hark! they’re at it;
I’ll go see the issue:

FLO. Leave not here
The produce of your hunting.
BLA. But I must, though.
That is his lair to-night, for Leonard Daere
Charged me to leave the stag at Devorgoil;
Then show me quickly where to stow the quarry,
And let me to the sports. (More shots.) Come, hasten, damsels!

FLO. It is impossible—we dare not take it.
BLA. There let it lie, then, and I’ll wind my bugle,
That all within these tottering walls may know
That here lies venison, whose likes to lift it.

[About to blow.
KAT. (to FLO.). He will alarn your mother; and,
besides,
Our Forest proverb teaches that no question
Should ask where venison comes from.
Your careful mother, with her wonted prudence,
Will hold its presence plead its own apology.—
Come, Blackthorn, I will show you where to stow it.

[Exeunt Katleen and Blackthorn into the Castle.
More shooting, then, distant shout.
Stragglers, armed in different ways, pass over the Stage, as if from the Weapon-shaw.

FLO. The prize is won; that general shout proclaim’d it.
The marksmen and the vassals are dispersing.

[She draws back.
FIRST VASSAL (a peasant). Ay, ay, ’tis lost and won,—the Forest have it;
’Tis they have all the luck on’t.
SECOND VASSAL (a shepherd). Luck say’st thou, man?
’Tis practice, skill, and cunning.
THIRD VASSAL. ’Tis no such thing! I had hit the mark precisely,
But for this cursed flint; and, as I fired,
A swallow cross’d mine eye too. Will you tell me
That that was but a chance, mine honest shepherd?
FIRST VAS. Ay, and last year, when Lancelot
Blackthorn won it,
Because my powder happen’d to be damp,
Was there no luck in that? The worse luck mine.
SECOND VAS. Still I say ’twas not chance: it might be witchcraft.
FIRST VAS. Faith, not unlikely, neighbors; for these foresters
Do often haunt about this ruin’d castle.
I’ve seen myself this spark—young Leonard Daere—
Come stealing like a ghost ere break of day,
And after sunset too, along this path;
And well you know the haunted towers of Devorgoil
Have no good reputation in the land.
SHEP. That have they not. I’ve heard my father
say,
Ghost dance as lightly in its moonlight halls
As ever maiden did at midsummer
Upon the village-green.
FIRST VAS. Those that frequent such spirit-haunted ruins
Must needs know more than simple Christians do.
See, Lance this blessed moment leaves the castle,
And comes to triumph o’er us.

[BLACKTHORN enters from the Castle, and comes forward while they speak.

THIRD VAS. A mighty triumph! What is’t, after all,
Except the driving of a piece of lead,—
As learned Master Gullcrammer defined it,—
Just through the middle of a painted board?
BLA. And if he so define it, by your leave,
Your learned Master Gullcrammer’s an ass.
THIRD VAS. (angrily). He is a preacher, huntsman, under favor.
SECOND VAS. No quarrelling, neighbors—you may both be right.

Enter a Fourth Vassal, with a gallon stoup of wine.
FOURTH VAS. Why stand you brawling here?
Young Leonard Daere
Has set abroach the tun of wine he gain’d,
That all may drink who list.—Blackthorn, I sought
you;
Your comrade prays you will bestow this flagon
Where you have left the deer you kill’d this morning.
BLA. And that I will; but first we will take toll,
To see if it’s worth carriage.—Shepherd, thy horn;
There must be due allowance made for leakage,
And that will come about a draught apiece.
Skink it about, and when our throats are liquor’d,
We’ll merrily roll our song of weapon-shaw.

[They drink about out of the Shepherd’s horn, and then sing.

SONG.
We love the shrill trumpet, we love the drum’s rattle,
They call us to sport, and they call us to battle;
And old Scotland shall laugh at the threats of a stranger,
While our comrades in pastime are comrades in danger.

If there's mirth in our house, 'tis our neighbor that shares it—
If peril approach, 'tis our neighbor that dares it;
And when we lead off to the pipe and the tabor,
The fair hand we press is the hand of a neighbor.

Then close your ranks, comrades, the bands that combine them,
Faith, friendship, and brotherhood, join'd to entwine
And we'll laugh at the threats of each insolent stranger,
While our comrades in sport are our comrades in danger.

BLA. Well, I must do mine errand. Master flagon
Is too consumptive for another bleeding.
SHEEP. I must to my fold.
THIRD VAS. I'll to the butt of wine,
And see if that has given up the ghost yet.
FIRST VAS. Have with you, neighbor.

[BLACKTHORN enters the Castle, the rest except severally. MELCHISEDEK GULLCRAMMER watches them off the stage, and then enters from the side-scene. His costume is a Grecian cloak and band, with a high-crowned hat; the rest of his dress in the fashion of James the First's time. He looks to the windows of the Castle, then draws back as if to escape observation, while he brushes his cloak, drives the white threads from his waistcoat with his vête ted thumb, and dusts his shoes, all with the air of one who would not willingly be observed engaged in these offices. He then adjusts his collar and band, comes forward and speaks.

GUL. Right comely is thy garb, Melchisedek; As well becometh one whom good Saint Mungo, The patron of our land and university, Hath graced with license both to teach and preach. Who dare opine whom this plod'st on foot? Trim sits thy cloak, unruffled is thy band, And not a speck upon thine outward man Bewrays the labors of thy weary sole.

[Touches his shoe, and smiles complacently.
Quaint was that jest and pleasant!—Now will I Approach and hail the dwellers of this fort; But specially sweet Flora Devorgoil, Ere her proud sire return. He loves me not, Mocketh my lineage, flouts at mine advancement— Sour as the fruit the crab-tree furnishes, And hard as is the cudgel it supplies; But Flora—she's a lily on the lake, And I must reach her, though I risk a ducking.

[As GULLCRAMMER moves towards the drawbridge, BAULDIE DURWARD enters, and interposes himself betwixt him and the Castle. GULLCRAMMER stops and speaks.

Whom have we here?—that ancient fortune-teller, Papist and sorcerer, and sturdy beggar,
Old Bauldie Durward! Would I were well past him! [DURWARD advances, partly in the dress of a palmer, partly in that of an old Scottish mendicant, having course blue cloak and badge, white beard, &c.

DUR. The blessing of the evening on your worship, And on your tall'ry doublet. Much I marvel Your wisdom chooseth such trim garb,1 when tempests Are gathering to the bursting.

GULLCRAMMER (looks to his dress, and then to the sky, with some apprehension).

Surely, Bauldie,
Thon dost belie the evening—in the west
The light sinks down as lovely as this band
Drops o'er this mantle—Tush, man! 'twill be fair.

DUR. Ay, but the storm I bode is big with blows, Horsewhips for hailstones, clubs for thunderbolts; And for the wailing of the midnight wind, The unpitied howling of a cudgel'd doxcomb.
Come, come, I know thou seek'st fair Flora Devorgoil.
GUL. And if I did, I do the damsel grace.
Her mother thinks so, and she has accepted
At these poor hands gifts of some consequence, And curious dainties for the evening cheer, To which I am invited—She respects me.

DUR. But not so doth her father, haughty Oswald. Bethink thee, he's a baron——
GUL. And a bare one;
Construe me that, old man!—The crofts of Mucklewhame—
Destined for mine so soon as heaven and earth Have shared my uncle's soul and bones between them— The crofts of Mucklewhame, old man, which nourish Three scores of sheep, three cows, with each her follower, A female palfrey eke—I will be candid, She is of that meek tribe whom, in derision, Our wealthy southern neighbors nickname donkeys——

DUR. She hath her follower too,—when thou art there.

GUL. I say to thee, these crofts of Mucklewhame, In the mere tithing of their stock and produce, Outvie whatever patch of land remains To this old rugged castle and its owner. Well, therefore, may Melchisedek Gullcrammer, Younger of Mucklewhame, for such I write me, Master of Arts, by grace of good Saint Andrew, Preacher, in brief expectation of a kirk, Endow'd with ten score Scottish pounds per annum, Being eight pounds seventeen eight in sterling coin— Well then, I say, may this Melchisedek, Thus highly graced by fortune—and by nature E'en gifted as thou seest—aspire to woo The daughter of the beggar'd Devorgoil.

1 MS.: "That you should walk in such trim guise."
DUR. Credit an old man's word, kind Master Gullcrammer,
You will not find it so.—Come, sir, I've known
The hospitality of Mucklewhame;
It reach'd not to profusion—yet, in gratitude
For the pure water of its living well,
And for the barley loaves of its fair fields,
Wherein chopp'd straw contended with the grain
Which best should satisfy the appetite,
I would not see the hopeful heir of Mucklewhame
Thus fling himself on danger.

GUL. Danger! what danger?—Know'st thou not, old Oswald
This day attends the muster of the shire,
Where the crown-vassals meet to show their arms,
And their best horse of service?—'Twas good sport
(An if a man had dared but laugh at it)
To see old Oswald with his rusty morion,
And huge two-handed sword, that might have seen
The field of Bannockburn or Chevy Chase,
Without a squire or vassal, page or groom,
Or e'en a single pikeman at his heels,
Mix with the proudest nobles of the county,
And claim precedence for his tatter'd person
O'er armors double gilt and ostrich plumage.

DUR. Ay! 'twas the jest at which fools laugh
the loudest,
The downfall of our old nobility—
Which may overrun the ruin of a kingdom.
I've seen an idiot clap his hands, and shout
To see a tower like yon (points to a part of the Castle) stoop to its base
In headlong ruin; while the wise look'd round,
And fearful sought a distant stance to watch
What fragment of the fabric next should follow;
For when the turrets fall, the walls are tottering.

GUL (after pondering). If that means aught, it means thou saw'st old Oswald
Expell'd from the assembly.

DUR. Thy sharp wit
Hath glanced unwittingly right nigh the truth.
Expell'd he was not, but, his claim denied
At some contested point of ceremony,
He left the weapon-shaw in high displeasure,
And hither comes—his wonted bitter temper
Scarce sweeten'd by the chances of the day.
'Twere much much rashness should you wait his coming,
And thither tends my counsel.

GUL. And I'll take it;
Good Bauldie Durward, I will take thy counsel,
And will requite it with this minted farthing,
That bears our sovereign's head in purest copper.

DUR. Thanks to thy bounty—I haste thee, good young master;
Oswald, besides the old two-handed sword,
Bears in his hand a staff of potency,
To charm intruders from his castle parliens.

GUL. I do abhor all charms, nor will abide
To hear or see, far less to feel their use.
Behold, I have departed.
[Exit hastily.

DUR. Thus do I play the idle part of one
Who seeks to save the moth from scorching him
In the bright taper's flame—And Flora's beauty
Must, not unlike that taper, waste away,
Gilding the rugged walls that saw it kindled.
This was a shard-born beetle, heavy, drossy;
Though boasting his dull drone and gilded wing.
Here comes a flutterer of another stamp,
Whom the same ray is charming to his ruin.

Enter LEONARD, dressed as a huntsman; he pauses before the Tower, and whistles a note or two at intervals—drawing back, as if fearful of observation, yet waiting, as if expecting some reply. Durward, whom he had not observed, moves round, so as to front Leonard unexpectedly.

LEON. I am too late—it was no easy task
To rid myself from yonder noisy revellers.
Flora!—I fear she's angry—Flora—Flora!

SONG.
Admire not that I gain'd the prize
From all the village crew;
How could I fall with hand or eyes,
When heart and faith were true?

And when in floods of rosy wine
My comrades drunk'd their cares,
I thought but that thy heart was mine,
My own leapt light as theirs.

My brief delay then do not blame,
Nor deem your swain untrue;
My form but linger'd at the game,
My soul was still with you.

She hears not!
DUR. But a friend hath heard—Leonard, I pity thee.

LEON. (starts, but recovers himself.) Pity, good father, is for those in want,
In age, in sorrow, in distress of mind,
Or agony of body. I'm in health—
Can match my limbs against the stag in chase,
Have means enough to meet my simple wants,
And am so free of soul that I can carol
To woodland and to wild in notes as lively
As are my jolly luggle's.

DUR. Even therefore dost thou need my pity,
Leonard,
And therefore I bestow it, paying thee,
Before thou feel'st the need, my mite of pity.

1 MS.: —— "And Flora's years of beauty."
2 MS.: "This was an earth-born beetle, dull and drossy."
3 From the MS, the following song appears to have been a recent interpolation.
Leonard, thou lovest; and in that little word
There lies enough to claim the sympathy
Of men who wear such hoary locks as mine,
And know what misplaced love is sure to end in. ¹

LEON. Good father, thou art old, and even thy youth,
As thou hast told me, spent in cloister'd cells,
Fits thee but ill to judge the passions
Which are the joy and charm of social life.
Press me no farther, then, nor waste those moments
Whose worth thou canst not estimate.

[As turning from him.

DUR. (detains him). Stay, young man!
'Tis seldom that a beggar claims a debt;
Yet I bethink me of a gay young stripling,
That owes to these white locks and hoary beard
Something of reverence and of gratitude
More than he wills to pay.

LEON. Forgive me, father. Often hast thou told me
That in the ruin of my father's house
You saved the orphan Leonard in his cradle;
And well I know that to thy care alone—
Care seconded by means beyond thy seeming—
I owe what'er of nurture I can boast.

DUR. Then for thy life preserved,
And for the means of knowledge I have furnish'd
(Which lacking, man is levell'd with the brutes),
Grant me this boon:—Avoid these fatal walls!
A curse is on them, bitter, deep, and heavy,
Of power to split the massiest tower they boast
From pinnacle to dungeon vault. It rose
Upon the gay horizon of proud Devorgoil
As unregarded as the fleecy cloud,
The first forerunner of the hurricane,
Scarce seen amid the weikin's shadeless blue.
Dark grew it, and more dark, and still the fortunes
Of this doom'd family have darken'd with it.
It hid their sovereign's favor, and obscured
The lustre of their service, gender'd hate
Betwixt them and the mighty of the land;
Till by degrees the waxing tempest rose,
And stripp'd the goodly tree of fruit and flowers,
And buds, and boughs, and branches. There remains
A rugged trunk, dismember'd and unsightly,
Waiting the bursting of the final bolt
To splinter it to shivers. Now, go pluck
Its single tendril to enwreath thy brow,
And rest beneath its shade—to share the ruin.

LEON. This anathema,
Whence should it come?—How merited?—and when and where?
DUR. 'Twas in the days
Of Oswald's grandsire,—'mid Galwegian chiefs
The fellest foe, the fiercest champion.
His blood-red pennons seaward the Cumbrian coasts,
And wasted towns and manors mark'd his progress,
His galleys stored with treasure, and their decks
Crowded with English captives, who beheld,
With weeping eyes, their native shores retire,
He bore him homeward; but a tempest rose—

LEON. So far I've heard the tale,
And spare thee the recital,—The grim chief,
Marking his vessels labor on the sea,
And loth to lose his treasure, gave command
To plunge his captives in the raging deep.

DUR. There sunk the lineage of a noble name,
And the wild waves boom'd over sire and son,
Mother and nursling, of the House of Aglionby ²
Leaving but one frail tendril.—Hence the fate
That hovers o'er these turrets,—hence the peasant,
Belated, haying homewards, dreads to cast
A glance upon that portal, lest he see
The unshrunked spectres of the murder'd dead; ³
Or the avenging Angel, with his sword,
Waving destruction; or the grisly phantom
Of that fell Chief, the doer of the deed,
Which still, they say, roams through his empty halls,
And mourns their wachseness and their loneliness.

LEON. Such is the dotage
Of superstition, father, ay, and the cant
Of hoodwink'd prejudice.—Not for atonement
Of some foul deed done in the ancient warfare,
When war was butchery, and men were wolves,
Doth Heaven consign the innocent to suffering.
I tell thee, Flora's virtues might atone
For all the massacres her sires have done,
Since first the Pietish race their stained limbs
Array'd in wolf's skin.

DUR. Leonard, ere yet this beggar's scrip and cloak
Supplied the place of mitre and of crosier, ⁵
Which in these alter'd lands must not be worn,
I was superior of a brotherhood
Of holy men,—the Prior of Lanecost.
Nobles then sought my footstool many a league,
There to unload their sins—questions of conscience
Of deepest import were not deem'd too nice
For my decision, youth. But not even then,

¹ The MS. here adds:

"Leonard. But mine is not misplaced—If I sought beauty,
Besides it not with Flora Devorgoil? If plety, if sweetness, if discretion,
Patience beneath ill-suited tasks of labor,
And filial tenderness, that can beguile
Her moody sire's dark thoughts, as the soft moonshine Illumes the cloud of night—If I seek these,
Are they not all with Flora? Number me
The list of female virtues one by one,
And I will answer all with Flora Devorgoil.

"Durward. This is the wonted pitch of youthful passion;
And every woman who hath had a lover,
However nor deem'd crabbed, cross, and canker'd,
And crooked both in temper and in shape,
Has in her day been thought the purest, wisest,
Gentlest, and best condition'd—and o'er all
Fairest and liveliest of Eve's numerous daughters.

² MS. — "House of Ehrenwald."

³ MS. — "spectres of the murder'd captives."

⁴ MS. — "their painted limbs."

⁵ MS. — "Supplied the place of palmer's cowl and staff."
With mitre on my brow, and all the voice
Which Rome gives to a father of her church,
Dared I pronounce so boldly on the ways
Of hidden Providence, as thou, young man,
Whose chiefest knowledge is to track a stag,
Or wind a bale, hast presumed to do.

Leon. Nay, I pray forgive me,
Father; thou know'st I meant not to presume——

DUR. Can I refuse thee pardon? —Thou art all
That war and change have left to the poor Durward.
Thy father, too, who lost his life and fortune
Defending Lanercost, when its fair aisles
Were spoil'd by sacrilege— I bless'd his banner,
And yet it prosper'd not. But—all I could—
Thee from the wreck I saved, and for thy sake
Have still dragg'd on my life of pilgrimage
And penitence upon the hated shores
I else had left for ever. Come with me,
And I will teach thee there is healing in
The wounds which friendship gives.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Scene changes to the interior of the Castle. An apartment is discovered, in which there is much appearance of present poverty, mixed with some relics of former grandeur. On the wall hangs, amongst other things, a suit of ancient armor; by the table is a covered basket; behind, and concealed by it, the carcass of a roe-deer. There is a small lattice window, which, appearing to perforate a wall of great thickness, is supposed to look out towards the drawbridge. It is in the shape of a loop-hole for musketry; and, as is not unusual in old buildings, is placed so high up in the wall that it is only approached by five or six narrow stone steps.

Eleanor, the wife of Oswald of Devorgoil, Flora and Katleen, her Doughter and Niece, are discovered at work. The former spins, the latter are em-broidering. Eleanor quits her own labor to examine the manner in which Flora is executing her task, and shakes her head as if dissatisfied.

Ele. Fie on it, Flora! this botch'd work of thine
Shows that thy mind is distant from thy task.
The finest tracery of our old cathedral
Had not a richer, freer, bolder pattern
Than Flora once could trace. Thy thoughts are wandering.

Flo. They're with my father. Broad upon the lake
The evening sun sunk down; huge piles of clouds
Crimson and sable, rose upon his disk,
And quench'd him ere his setting, like some champion
In his last conflict, losing all his glory.
Sure signals those of storm. And if my father
Be on his homeward road——

Ele. But that he will not.

Baron of Devorgoil, this day at least

He banquets with the nobles, who the next
Would scarce vouchsafe an aim to save his household
From want or famine. Thanks to a kind friend,
For one brief space we shall not need their aid.

Flo. (joyfully). What! knew you then his gift?
How silly I that would, yet durst not, tell it!
I fear my father will condemn us both,
That easily accepted such a present.

Kat. Now, here's the game a bystander sees better
Than those who play it.—My good aunt is pondering
On the good cheer which Gullcranner has sent us,
And Flora thinks upon the forest venison. [Aside.

Ele. (to Flo.). Thy father need not know on't—
'tis a boon

Comes timely, when frugality, nay, abstinence,
Might scarce avail us longer. I had hoped
Ere now a visit from the youthful donor,
That we might thank his bounty; and perhaps
My Flora thought the same, when Sunday's kerieh
And the best krtle were sought out and donn'd
To grace a work-day evening.

Flo. Nay, mother, that is judging all too close!
My work-day gown was torn—my kerieh sullied;
And thus—but, think you, will the gallant come?

Ele. He will, for with these dainties came a message
From gentle Master Gullcranner, to intimate——

Flo. (greatly disappointed). Gullcranner?
Kat. There burst the bubble—down fell house of cards,
And cousin's like to cry for't! [Aside.

Ele. Gullcranner? ay, Gullcranner — thou sceorn't not at him?

'Twere something short of wisdom in a maiden,
Who, like the poor but in the Grecian fable,
Hovers betwixt two classes in the world,
And is disclaim'd by both the mouse and bird.

Kat. I am the poor mouse,
And may go creep into what hole I list,
And no one heed me—Yet I'll waste a word
Of counsel on my betters.—Kind my aunt,
And you, my gentle cousin, were't not better
We thought of dressing this same gear for supper,
Than quarrelling about the worthless donor?

Ele. Peace, minx!
Flo. Thou hast no feeling, cousin Katleen.
Kat. Soh! I have brought them both on my poor shoulders;
So meddling peace-makers are still rewarded:
E'en let them to't again, and fight it out.

Flo. Mother, were I disclaim'd of every class,
I would not therefore so disclaim myself
As even a passing thought of scorn to waste
On clodish Gullcranner.

Ele. List to me, love, and let adversity
Incline thine ear to wisdom. Look around thee—
Of the gay youths who boast a noble name,
Which will incline to wed a dowerless damsel?
And of the yeomanry, who think'st thou, Flora,
Would ask to share the labors of his farm
An high-born beggar? —This young man is modest—
THE DOOM OF DEVORGOIL.

FLO. Silly, good mother; sheepish, if you will it.

ELE. E'en call it what you list—the softer temper,
The fitter to endure the bitter sallies
Of one whose wit is all too sharp for mine.

FLO. Mother, you cannot mean it as you say;
You cannot bid me prize concocted folly?

ELE. Content thee, child—each lot has its own blessings.
This youth, with his plain-dealing honest suit,
Proffers thee quiet, peace, and competence,
Redemption from a home o'er which fell Fate
Stoops like a falcon.—Oh, if thou couldst choose
(As no such choice is given) 'twixt such a mate
And some proud noble!—Who, in sober judgment,
Would like to navigate the heady river,
Dashing in fury from its parent mountain,
More than the waters of the quiet lake?

KAT. Now can I hold no longer—Lake, good aunt?
Nay, in the name of truth, say mill-pond, horse-pond;
Or if there be a pond more miry,
More sluggish, mean-derived, and base than either,
Be such Gullcrammer's emblem—and his portion!

FLO. I would that he or I were in our grave,
Rather than thus his suit should goad me!—Mother, for Flora of Devorgoil, though low in fortunes,
Is still too high in mind to join her name
With such a base-born child as Gullcrammer.

ELE. You are trim maidens both!
(To FLORA) Have you forgotten,
Or did you mean to call to my remembrance,
Thy father chose a wife of peasant blood?

FLO. Will you speak thus to me, or think the stream
Can mock the fountain it derives its source from?
My venerated mother, in that name
Lies all on earth a child should chiefest honor;
And with that name to mix reproach or taunt,
Were only short of blasphemy to Heaven.

ELE. Then listen, Flora, to that mother's counsel,
Or rather profit by that mother's fate.
Your father's fortunes were but bent, not broken,
Until he listen'd to his rash affection.
Means were afforded to redeem his house,
Ample and large—the hand of a rich heiress
Awaited, almost courted, his acceptance;
He saw my beauty—such it then was call'd,
Or such at least he thought it,—the wather'd bush,
Whate'er it now may seem, had blossoms then,—
And he forsook the proud and wealthy heiress,
To wed with me and ruin—

KAT. (aside). The more fool,
Say I, apart, the peasant maiden then,
Who might have chose a mate from her own hamlet.

ELE. Friends fell off,
And to his own resources, his own counsels,
Abandon'd, as they said, the thoughtless prodigal,
Who had exchanged rank, riches, pomp, and honor,
For the mean beauties of a cottage maid.

FLO. It was done like my father,
Who scorn'd to sell what wealth can never buy—

True love and free affections. And he loves you!
If you have suffer'd in a weary world,
Your sorrows have been jointly borne, and love
Has made the load sit lighter.

ELE. Ay, but a misplaced match hath that deep curse in,
That can embitter e'en the purest streams
Of true affection. Thou hast seen me seek,
With the strict caution early habits taught me,
To match our wants and means—ha'st seen thy father,
With aristocracy's high brow of scorn,
Spurn'd at economy, the cottage virtue,
As best betitting her whose sires were peasants;
Nor can I, when I see my lineage scorn'd,
Always conceal in what contempt I hold
The fancied claims of rank he clans to fondly.

FLO. Why will you do so?—well you know it chafes him.

ELE. Flora, thy mother is but mortal woman,
Nor can at all times check an eager tongue.

KAT. (aside). That's no new tidings to her niece
And daughter.

ELE. Oh may'st thou never know the spited feelings
That gender discord in adversity
Betwixt the dearest friends and truest lovers!
In the chill damping gale of poverty,
If Love's lamp go not out, it gleams but palely,
And twinkles in the socket.

FLO. But tenderness can screen it with her veil,
Till it revive again. By gentleness, good mother,
How oft I've seen you soothe my father's mood!

KAT. Now there speak youthful hope and fantasy!

[Aside]

ELE. That is an easier task in youth than age;
Our temper hardens, and our charms decay,
And both are needed in that art of soothing.

KAT. And there speaks sad experience.

[Aside]

ELE. Besides, since that our state was utter deserate,
Darker his brow, more dangerous grow his words;
Fain would I snatch thee from the woe and wrath
Which darken'd long my life, and soon must end it.

[Knocking without; ELEANOR shows alarm.
It was thy father's knock, haste to the gate.

[Exit FLORA and KATEEN.
What can have happ'd?—he thought to stay the night.
This gear must not be seen.

[As she is about to remove the basket, she sees the body of the roe-deer.

What have we here? a roe-deer!—as I fear it,
This was the gift of which poor Flora thought.
The young and handsome hunter—but time presses.

[She removes the basket and the roe into a closet.
As she has done—

Enter OSWALD of DEVORGOIL, FLORA, and KATEEN.
[He is dressed in a scarlet cloak, which should seem worn and old, a head-piece, and old-fashioned

1 MS. “Ay, but the veil of tenderness can screen it.”
spear; the rest of his dress that of a peasant. His countenance and manner should express the moody and irritable haughtiness of a proud man involved in calamity, and who has been exposed to recent insult.

Osw. (addressing his wife). The sun hath set—why is the drawbridge lower'd?

ELE. The counterpoise has fail'd, and Flora's strength,
Kathleen's, and mine united, could not raise it.

Osw. Flora and thou! A goodly garrison
To hold a castle, which, if fame say true,
Once foil'd the King of Norse and all his rovers.

ELE. It might be so in ancient times, but now——
Osw. A herd of deer might storm proud Devorgoil.

KAT. (aside to Flo.). You, Flora, know full well one deer already Has enter'd at the breach; and, what is worse,
The escort has not yet march'd off, for Blackthorn Is still within the castle.

Flo. In Heaven's name rid him out on't, ere my father
Discovers he is here! Why went he not before?

KAT. Because I staid him on some little business;
I had a plan to scare poor paltry Gullcrammer
Out of his paltry wits.

Flo. Well, haste ye now,
And try to get him off.

KAT. I will not promise that.
I would not turn an honest hunter's dog,
So well I like the woodcraft, out of shelter
In such a night as this—far less his master:
But I'll do this, I'll try to hide him for you.

Osw. (whom his wife has assisted to take off his cloak and feathered cap). Ay, take them off, and bring my peasant's bonnet
And peasant's plaid—I'll noble it no farther.
Let them erase my name from honor's lists,
And drag my scutecheon at their horses' heels;
I have deserved it all, for I am poor,
And poverty hath neither right of birth,
Nor rank, relation, claim, nor privilege,
To match a new-coin'd viscount, whose good grandsire
The Lord be with him, was a careful skipper,
And steer'd his paltry skiff 'twixt Leith and Campvere——
Marry, sir, he could buy Geneva cheap,
And knew the coast by moonlight.

Flo. Mean you the Viscount Ellondale, my father?
What strife has been between you?

Osw. Oh, a trifle!
Not worth a wise man's thinking twice about——
Precedence is a toy—a superstition
About a table's end, joint-stool, and trencher.
Something was once thought due to long descent,

And something to Galwegia's oldest baron,—
But let that pass—a dream of the old time.

ELE. It is indeed a dream.
Osw. (turning upon her rather quickly). Hal said ye!
let me hear these words more plain.

ELE. Alas! they are but echoes of your own.
Match'd with the real woes that hover o'er us,
What are the idle visions of precedence,
But, as you term them, dreams, and toys, and trifles,
Not worth a wise man's thinking twice upon?

Osw. Ay, 'twas for you I framed that consolation, The true philosophy of clouted shoe
And linsey-woolsey kirtle. I know that minds Of nobler stamp receive no dearer motive!
Than what is link'd with honor. Ribbons, tassels, Which are but shreds of silk and spangled tinsel——
The right of place, which in itself is momentary——
A word, which is but air—may in themselves,
And to the nobler file, be steep'd so richly
In that elixir, honor, that the lack
Of things so very trivial in themselves
Shall be misfortune. One shall seek for them!
O'er the wild waves—one in the deadly breach
And battle's headlong front—one in the paths Of midnight study; and, in gaining these Emblems of honor, each will hold himself
Repaid for all his labors, deeds, and dangers.
What then should he think, knowing them his own,
Who sees what warriors and what sages toil for,
The formal and establish'd marks of honor,
Usurp'd from him by upstart insolence?

ELE. (who has listened to the last speech with some impatience). This is but empty declamation, Oswald.

The fragments left at yonder full-spread banquet,
Nay, even the poorest crust swept from the table,
Ought to be far more precious to a father,
Whose family lacks food, than the vain boast,
He sat at the board-head.

Osw. Thou'lt drive me frantic! I will tell thee, woman—
Yet why to thee? There is another ear
Which that tale better suits, and he shall hear it.

[Looks at his sword, which he has unbuckled, and addresses the rest of the speech to it.]

Yes, trusty friend, my father knew thy worth,
And often proved it—often told me of it——
Though thou and I be now held lightly of,
And want the gilded hatchments of the time,
I think we both may prove true metal still.
'Tis thou shalt tell this story, right this wrong:
Rest thou till time is fitting. [Hangs up the sword.]

[The Women look at each other with anxiety during this speech, which they partly overhear. They both approach Oswald.]

ELE. Oswald—my dearest husband!
Flo. My dear father!

1 MS.: "Yet, I know, for minds
Of nobler stamp earth has no dearer motive."

2 MS.: "tinsel'd spangle."

3 MS.: "One shall seek these emblems."
Osw. Peace, both!—we speak no more of this. I go
To heave the drawbridge up.

[Exit.

KATLEEN mounts the steps towards the loop-hole, looks out, and speaks.
The storm is gathering fast; broad, heavy drops
Fall plashing on the bosom of the lake,
And dash its inky surface into circles;
The distant hills are hid in wreaths of darkness.
'Twill be a fearful night.

OSWALD re-enters, and throws himself into a seat.

Ele. More dark and dreadful
Than is our destiny, it cannot be.

Osw. (to Flo.). Such is Heaven's will— it is our part to bear it.

We're warranted, my child, from ancient story
And blessed writ, to say, that song assuages
The gloomy cares that prey upon our reason,
And wake a strife betwixt our better feelings
And the fierce dictates of the headlong passions.
Sing, then, my love; for if a voice have influence
To mediate peace betwixt me and my destiny,
Flora, it must be thine.

Flo. My best to please you!

SONG.
When the tempest's at the loudest,
On its gale the eagle rides;
When the ocean rolls the proudest,
Through the foam the sea-bird glides—
All the rage of wind and sea
Is subdued by constancy.

Gnawing want and sickness pining,
All the ills that men endure,
Each their various pangs combining,
Constancy can find a cure—
Pain, and Fear, and Poverty,
Are subdued by constancy.

Bar me from each wond'ring pleasure,
Make me abject, mean, and poor;
Heap on insults without measure,
Chain me to a dungeon floor—
I'll be happy, rich, and free,
If endow'd with constancy.

ACT II.—SCENE I.

A Chamber in a distant part of the Castle. A large Window in the flat scene, supposed to look on the Lake, which is occasionally illuminated by lightning. There is a Couch-bed in the Room, and an antique Cabinet.

Enter Katleen, introducing Blackthorn.¹
Kat. This was the destined scene of action, Blackthorn,
And here our properties. But all in vain,
For of Gullramer we'll see nought to-night,
Except the dainties that I told you of.

Bla. Oh, if he's left that same hog's face and sausages,
He will try back upon them, never fear it.
The cur will open on the tail of bacon,
Like my old brach-hound.

Kat. And should that hap, we'll play our comedy,—
Shall we not, Blackthorn? Thou shalt be Owlspiegle—

Bla. And who may that hard-named person be?
Kat. I've told you nine times over.
Bla. Yes, pretty Katleen, but my eyes were busy
In looking at you all the time you were talking,
And so I lost the tale.

Kat. Then shut your eyes, and let your goodly ears
Do their good office.

Bla. That were too hard penance.
Tell but thy tale once more, and I will hearken
As if I were thrown out, and listening for My blood-hound's distant bay.

Kat. A civil simile!
Then, for the tenth time, and the last—be told,
Owlspiegle was of old the wicked barber
To Erick, wicked Lord of Devorgoil.

Bla. The chief who drownd'd his captives in the Solway—
We all have heard of him.

Kat. A hermit hoar, a venerable man—
So goes the legend—came to wake repentance
In the fierce lord, and tax'd him with his guilt;
But he, heart-harden'd, turn'd it into derision
The man of heaven, and, as his dignity
Consisted much in a long reverend beard,
Which reach'd his girdle, Erick caused his barber,
This same Owlspiegle, violate its honors
With sacrilegious razor, and clip his hair
After the fashion of a roguish fool.

Bla. This was reversing of our ancient proverb,
And shaving for the devil's, not for God's sake.

Kat. True, most grave Blackthorn; and in punishment
Of this foul act of scorn, the barber's ghost
Is said have no resting after death,
But haunts these halls, and chiefly this same chamber,
Where the profanity was acted, trimming
And clipping all such guests as sleep within it.
Such is at least the tale our elders tell,
With many others, of this haunted castle.

Bla. And you would have me take this shape of Owlspiegle,
And trim the wise Melchisedek!—I wonnot.
Kat. You will not!

¹ The MS. throughout the first act reads Buckthorn.
BLA. No—unless you bear a part.

KAT. What! can you not alone play such a farce?
BLA. Not I—I’m dull. Besides, we foresters
Still hunt our game in couples. Look you, Katleen,
We danced at Shrovetide—then you were my partner;
We sung at Christmas—you kept time with me;
And if we go a mumming in this business,
By heaven, you must be one, or Master Gullcrammer
Is like to rest unshaven—
KAT. Why, you fool,
What end can this serve?
BLA. Nay, I know not, I.
But if we keep this wont of being partners,
Why, use makes perfect—who knows what may happen?
KAT. Thou art a foolish patch—But sing our carol,
As I have alter’d it, with some few words
To suit the characters, and I will bear—

\[Gives a paper.\]

BLA. Part in the gambol. I’ll go study quickly.
Is there no other ghost, then, haunts the castle,
But this same barber shave-a-penny goblin?
I thought they glanced in every beam of moonshine,
As frequent as the bat.
KAT. I’ve heard my aunt’s high husband tell of prophecies,
And fates impending o’er the house of Devorgoil;
Legends first coin’d by ancient superstition,
And rendered current by credulity
And pride of lineage. Five years have I dwelt,
And ne’er saw anything more mischievous
Than what I am myself.
BLA. And that is quite enough, I warrant you.
But, stay, where shall I find a dress
To play this—what d’ye call him—Owlspleige?
KAT. \(\text{tak’es dresses out of the cabinet.}\) Why, there are his own clothes,
Preserved with other trumpery of the sort,
For we have kept nought but what is good for nought.
\[She drops a cap as she draws out the clothes,
Blackthorn lifts it, and gives it to her.\]
Nay, keep it for thy pains—it is a coaxcomb;
So call’d in ancient times, in ours a fool’s cap;
For you must know they kept a Fool at Devorgoil
In former days; but now are well contented
To play the fool themselves, to save expenses;
Yet give it me, I’ll find a worthy use for’t.
I’ll take this page’s dress, to play the page
Cockledemoy, who waits on ghostly Owlspleige;
And yet ’tis needless, too, for Gullcrammer
Will scarce be here to-night.
BLA. I tell you that he will—I will uphold
His plighted faith and true allegiance
Unto a soused sow’s face and sausages,
And such the dainties that you say he sent you,
Against all other likings whatsoever,
Except a certain sneaking of affection,
Which makes some folks I know of play the fool
To please some other folks.

KAT. Well, I do hope he’ll come—there’s first a chance
He will be cudgel’d by my noble uncle—
I cry his mercy—by my good aunt’s husband,
Who did vow vengeance, knowing nought of him
But by report, and by a limping sonnet
Which he had fashion’d to my cousin’s glory,
And forwarded by blind Tom Long the carrier;
So there’s the chance, first of a hearty beating,
Which failing, we’ve this after-plot of vengeance.
BLA. Kind damsels, how considerate and merciful!
But how shall we get off, our parts being play’d?
KAT. For that we are well fitted; here’s a trap-door
Sinks with a counterpoise—you shall go that way.
I’ll make my exit yonder—thence the window,
A balcony communicates with the tower
That overhangs the lake.
BLA. ‘Twere a rare place, this house of Devorgoil,
To play at hide-and-seek in—shall we try
One day, my pretty Katleen?

\[hawk\]

KAT. Hands off, rude ranger! I’m no managed
To stoop to lure of yours.—But bear you gallantly;
This Gullcrammer hath vex’d my cousin much,
I fain would have some vengeance.
BLA. I’ll bear my part with glee;—he spoke irrever-
ently
Of practice at a mark!
KAT. That cries for vengeance.
But I must go; I bear my aunt’s shrill voice!
My cousin and her father will scream next.

Ele. \(\text{(at a distance).}\) Katleen! Katleen!
BLA. Hark to old Sweetlips!
Away with you before the full cry open—
But stay, what have you there?
KAT. \(\text{(with a bundle she has taken from the wardrobe).}\)
My dress, my page’s dress—let it alone.
BLA. Your tiring-room is not, I hope, far distant;
You’re inexperienced in these new habiliments—
I am most ready to assist your toilet.
KAT. Out, you great ass! was ever such a fool!

\[Runs off.\]

BLA. \(\text{(sings).}\)
Oh, Robin Hood was a bowman good,
And a bowman good was he,
And he met with a maiden in merry Sherwood,
All under the greenwood tree.

Now give me a kiss, quoth bold Robin Hood,
Now give me a kiss, said he,
For there never came maid into merry Sherwood,
But she paid the forester’s fee.

I’ve coursed this twelvemonth this sly pass, young Katleen,
And she has dodged me, turn’d beneath my nose,
And flung me out a score of yards at once;
If this same gear fadge right, I’ll cote and mouth her,
And then whoop! dead! dead! dead!—She is the metal
To make a woodsman's wife of!—

[Pauses a moment.]

Well, I can find a hare upon her form
With any man in Nithsdale—stalk a deer,
Run Reynard to the earth for all his doubles,
Reclaim a haggard hawk that's wild and wayward,
Can bait a wild-eat,—sure the devil's in't
But I can match a woman: I'll to study.

[Sits down on the couch to examine the paper.

SCENE II.

Scene changes to the inhabited apartment of the Castle, as in the last Scene of the preceding Act. A fire is kindled, by which Oswald sits in an attitude of deep and melancholy thought, without paying attention to what passes around him. Eleanor is busy in coring a table; Flora goes out and re-enters, as if busied in the kitchen. There should be some by-play —the women whispering together, and watching the state of Oswald; then separating, and seeking to avoid his observation, when he casually raises his head, and drops it again; this must be left to taste and management. The Women, in the first part of the Scene, talk apart, and as if fearful of being overheard. The by-play of stopping occasionally, and attending to Oswald's movements, will give liveliness to the Scene.

ELE. Is all prepared?

FLO. Ay; but I doubt the issue
Will give my sire less pleasure than you hope for.

ELE. Tush, maid! I know thy father's humor better.

He was high-bred in gentle luxuries;
And when our griefs began, I've wept apart,
While lordly cheer and high-fill'd cups of wine
Were blinding him against the woe to come.
He has turn'd his back upon a princely banquet:
We will not spread his board—this night at least,
Since chance hath better furnish'd—with dry bread,
And water from the well.

Enter Katleen, and hears the last speech.

KAT. (aside). Considerate aunt! she deems that a good supper
Were not a thing indifferent even to him
Who is to hang to-morrow. Since she thinks so,
We must take care the venison has true honor —
So much I owe the sturdy knave, Lanoe Blackthorn.

FLO. Mother, alas! when Grief turns reveller,
Despair is cup-bearer. What shall hap to-morrow?

ELE. I have learn'd carelessness from fruitless care.
Too long I've watch'd to-morrow; let it come
And cater for itself.—Thou hear'st the thunder?

[Low and distant thunder.

This is a gloomy night—within, alas!

[Looking at her husband.

Still gloomier and more threatening.—Let us use

Whatever means we have to drive it o'er,
And leave to Heaven to-morrow. Trust me, Flora,
'Tis the philosophy of desperate want
To match itself but with the present evil,
And face one grief at once.

Away; I wish thine aid, and not thy counsel.

[As Flora is about to go off, Gullcrammer's voice is heard behind the flat scene, as if from the drawbridge.

GUL. (behind). Hillo! hillo! hilloa—hooa!

[Oswald goes up the steps and opens the window at the loop-hole; Gullcrammer's voice is then heard more distinctly.

GUL. Kind Lady Devorgoil—sweet Mistress Flora—
The night grows fearful—I have lost my way,
And wander'd till the road turn'd round with me,
And brought me back—For Heaven's sake, give me shelter!

KAT. (aside). Now, as I live, the voice of Gullcrammer!

Now shall our gambol be play'd off with spirit;
I'll swear I am the only one to whom
That sereen-owl whoop was e'er acceptable.

OSW. What bawling knave is this that takes our dwelling
For some hedge-inn, the haunt of lated drunkards?

ELE. What shall I say?—Go, Katleen, speak to him.

KAT. (aside). The game is in my hands; I will say something
Will fret the Baron's pride—and then he enters.

(She speaks from the window.) Good sir, be patient! We are poor folks— it is but six Scotch miles To the next borough town, where your Reverence May be accommodated to your wants.

We are poor folks, an't please your Reverence,
And keep a narrow household; there's no track To lead your steps astray—

GUL. Nor none to lead them right. You kill me, lady,
If you deny me harbor. To budge from hence,
And in my weary plight, were sudden death,
Interment, funeral sermon, tombstone, epitaph.

OSW. Who's he that is thus clamorous without?

(To ELE.) Thou know'st him?

ELE. (confused). I know him?—no—yes—'tis a worthy clergyman,
Benighted on his way;—but think not of him.

KAT. The morn will rise when that the tempest's past;
And if he miss the marsh, and can avoid
The crags upon the left, the road is plain.

OSW. Then this is all your piety! to leave
One whom the holy duties of his office
Have summon'd over moor and wilderness
To pray beside some dying wretch's bed,
Who (erring mortal!) still would cleave to life,
Or wake some stubborn sinner to repentance,—
To leave him, after offices like these,
To choose his way in darkness 'twixt the marsh
And dizzy precipice!

ELE. What can I do?
OSW. Do what thou canst; the wealthiest do no more,
And if so much, 'tis well. These crumbling walls,
While yet they bear a roof, shall now, as ever,
Give shelter to the wanderer. Have we food?
Shall partake it: have we none? the first
Shall be accounted with the good man's merits
And our misfortunes.

[He goes to the loop-hole while he speaks, and places himself there in room of his Wife, who comes down with reluctance.

GUL. (without). Hillo—ho!—ho!
By my good faith, I cannot plod it farther;
The attempt were death.
OSW. (speaks from the window). Patience, my friend;
I come to lower the drawbridge.

[Descends, and exit.

ELE. Oh that the screaming bitter had his couch
Where he deserves it, in the deepest marsh!

KAT. I would not give this sport for all the rent
Of Devorgoil, when Devorgoil was richest!

(To ELE.) But now you chided me, my dearest aunt,
For wishing him a horse-pond for his portion!

ELE. Yes, saucy girl; but, an it please you, then
He was not fretting me. If he had sense enough,
And skill to bear him as some casual stranger,—
But he is dull as earth, and every hint
Is lost on him, as hail-shot on the coromorant,
Whose hide is proof except to musket-bullets!

FLO. (apart). And yet to such a one would my kind mother,
Whose chiefest fault is loving me too fondly,
Wed her poor daughter!

Enter GULLCRAMMER, his dress damaged by the storm;
ELEANOR runs to meet him, in order to explain to him that she wishes him to behave as a stranger.

GULLCRAMMER, mistaking her approach for an invitation to familiarity, advances with the air of pedantic conceit belonging to his character, when Oswald enters. Eleanor recovers herself, and assumes an air of distance; Gullcrammer is confronted, and does not know what to make of it.

OSW. The counterpoise has clean given way; the bridge
Must e'en remain unraised, and leave us open,
For this night's course at least, to passing visitants.—
What have we here?—is this the reverend man?

[He takes up the candle and surveys Gull-Crammer, who strives to sustain the inspection with confidence, while fear obviously contends with conceit and desire to show himself to the best advantage.

GUL. Kind sir—or, good my lord—my band is ruf-flled,
But yet 'twas fresh this morning. This fell shower
Hath somewhat smirch'd my cloak, but you may note
It rates five marks per yard; my doublet
Hath fairly 'scaped—'tis three-piled taffeta.

OSW. A goodly inventory.—Art thou a preacher?
GUL. Yea—I laud Heaven and good Saint Mungo for it.

OSW. 'Tis the time's plague, when those that should weed follies
Out of the common field, have their own minds
O'errun with folly—Euvoy's 'twixt heaven and earth
Example should with precept join, to show us
How we may scorn the world with all its vanities.

GUL. Nay, the high heavens forefend that I were vain!
When our learn'd Principal such sounding laud
Gave to mine Essay on the hidden qualities
Of the sulphuric mineral, I disclaim'd
All self-exaltment. And (turning to the women) when at the dance
The lovely Saccharissa Kirkeneroff,
Daughter to Kirkeneroff of Kirkeneroff,
Grace me with her soft hand, credit me, ladies,
That still I felt myself a mortal man,
Though beauty smiled on me.

OSW. Come, sir, enough of this,
That you're our guest to-night, thank the rough heavens,
And all our worser fortunes: be conformable
Unto my rules; these are no Saccharissas
To gild with compliments. There's in your profession—
As the best grain will have it piles of chaff—
A certain whiffler, who hath dared to bait
A noble maiden with love tales and sonnets;
And if I meet him, his Geneva cap
May scarce be proof to save his ass's ears.

KAT. (aside). Umph! I am strongly tempted;
And yet I think I will be generous,
And give his brains a chance to save his bones.
Then there's more humor in our goblin plot
Than in a simple dubbing.

ELE. (apart to FLO). What shall we do? If he discover him,
He'll fling him out at window.

FLO. My father's hint to keep himself unknown
Is all too broad, I think, to be neglected.

ELE. But yet the fool, if we produce his bounty,
May claim the merit of presenting it;
And then we're but lost women for accepting
A gift our needs made timely.

KAT. Do not produce them.
E'en let the top go supperless to bed,
And keep his bones whole.

1 MS.: "And headlong dizzy precipice."
2 MS.: "shall give, as ever,
3 MS.: "Where it is fittest," &c.
Osw. (to his Wife). Hast thou aught
To place before him ere he seek repose?
Ele. Alas! too well you know our needful fare
Is of the narrowest now, and knows no surpluses.
Osw. Shame us not with thy niggard housekeeping;
He is a stranger: were it our last crust,
And he the veriest coccob e’er wore taffeta—
A pitch he’s little short of—he must share it,
Though all should want to-morrow.
Gul. (partly overhearing what passes between them).
Nay, I am no lover of your sauced dainties:
Plain food and plenty is my motto still.
Your mountain air is bleak, and brings an appetite:
A sauced sow’s face, now, to my modest thinking,
Has ne’er a fellow. What think these fair ladies
Of a sow’s face and sausages?
[Make signs to Eleanor.]
Flo. Plague on the vulgar hind, and on his courteties!
The whole truth will come out.
Osw. What should they think, but that you’re like to lack
Your favorite dishes, sir, unless perchance
You bring such dainties with you.
Gul. No, not with me; not, indeed,
Directly with me; but—Aha! fair ladies!
[Make signs again.]
Kat. He’ll draw the beating down—Were that the worst,
Heaven’s will be done! [Aside.]
Osw. (apart). What can he mean?—this is the veriest dog-welp—
Still he’s a stranger, and the latest act
Of hospitality in this old mansion
Shall not be sullied,
Gul. Troth, sir, I think, under the ladies’ favor,
Without pretending skill in second sight,
Those of my cloth being seldom conjurers—
Osw. I’ll take my Bible-oath that thou art none.
[Aside.]
Gul. I do opine, still with the ladies’ favor,
That I could guess the nature of our supper:
I do not say in such and such precedence
The dishes will be placed; housewives, as you know,
On such forms have their fancies; but, I say still,
That a sow’s face and sausages—
Osw. Peace, sir! O’er-driven jests (if this be one) are insolent.
Flo. (apart, seeing her mother uneasy). The old saw still holds true—a chalk’s benefits,
Sauced with his lack of feeling, sense, and courtesy,
Savor like injuries.
[A horn is winded without; then a loud knocking at the gate.]
Leo. (without). Ope, for the sake of love and charity!
[Oswald goes to the loop-hole.
Gul. Heaven’s mercy! should there come another stranger,
And he half starved with wandering on the wolds,
The sow’s face boasts no substance, nor the sausages,
To stand our reinforced attack! I judge, too,
By this starved Baron’s language, there’s no hope
Of a reserve of victuals.
Flo. Go to the casement, cousin.
Kat. Go yourself,
And bid the gallant who that bugle winded
Sleep in the storm-swept waste; as meet for him
As for Lance Blackthorn.—Come, I’ll not distress you,
I’ll get admittance for this second suitor,
And we’ll play out this gambol at cross purposes.
But see, your father has prevented me.
Osw. (seems to have spoken with those without, and answers). Well, I will ope the door; one guest already,
Driven by the storm, has claim’d my hospitality,
And you, if you were fiends, were scarce less welcome
To this my mouldering roof, than empty ignorance
And rank conceit—I hasten to admit you. [Exit.]
Ele. (to Flo.). The tempest thickens. By that winded bugle,
I guess the guest that next will honor us.—
Little deceiver, that didst mock my troubles,
’Tis now thy turn to fear!
Flo. Mother, if I knew less or more of this Unthought of and most perilous visitation,
I would your wishes were fulfilled on me,
And I were wedded to a thing like you.
Gul. (approaching). Come, ladies, now you see the jest is threadbare,
And you must own that same sow’s face and sausages—
Re-enter Oswald with Leonard, supporting Balduile.
Durward. Oswald takes a view of them, as formerly of Gullcrammer, then speaks.
Osw. (to Leo.). By thy green cassock, hunting-spear, and bugle,
I guess thou art a huntsman.
Leo. (bowing with respect). A ranger of the neighboring royal forest,
Under the good Lord Nithsdale; huntsman, therefore,
In time of peace, and when the land has war,
To my best powers a soldier.
Osw. Welcome, as either. I have loved the chase,
And was a soldier once.—This aged man,
What may he be?
Dur. (recovering his breath). Is but a beggar, sir, an humble mendicant,
Who feels it passing strange that from this roof,
Above all others, he should now crave shelter.
Osw. Why so? You’re welcome both—only the word
Warrants more courtesy than our present means
Permit us to bestow. A huntsman and a soldier
May be a prince’s comrade, much more mine;
And for a beggar—friend, there little lacks,
Save that blue gown and badge, and clouted poulches,
To make us comrades too; then welcome both,
And to a beggar’s feast. I fear brown bread,
And water from the spring, will be the best on’t;
For we had cast to wend abroad this evening,
And left our larder empty.

SCOTT’S "Oswald it else,
In our behalf, would search its hid recesses,— (APART) We’ll not go supperless now—we’re three to one.—

Still do I say, that a soused face and sausages—
Osw. (Looks sternly at him, then at his wife). There’s something under this, but that the present
Is not a time to question. (To ELE.) Wife, my mood
Is at such height of tide, that a turn’d feather
Would make me frantic now, with mirth or fury!
Tempt me no more—but if thou hast the things
This carrion crow so croaks for, bring them forth;
For, by my father’s beard, if I stand caterer,
’Twill be a fearful banquet!

ELE. Your pleasure be obey’d—Come, aid me,
Flora. [Exeunt.

[During the following speeches the Women place dishes on the table.

Osw. (to Dur.). How did you lose your path?
DUR. E’en when we thought to find it, a wild meter
Danced in the moss, and led our feet astray.—
I give small credence to the tales of old,
Of Friar’s-lantern told, and Will-o’-wisp,
Else would I say that some malicious demon
Guided us in a round; for to the meat,
Which we had pass’d two hours since, were we led,
And there the gleam flicker’d and disappear’d,
Even on your drawbridge. I was so worn down,
So broke with laboring through marsh and moor,
That, wold I nold I, here my young conductor
Would needs implore for entrance; else, believe me,
I had not troubled you.

Osw. And why not, father?—have you e’er heard aught,
Or of my house or me, that wanderers,
Whom or their roving trade or sudden circumstance
Oblige to seek a shelter, should avoid
The House of Devorgoil?

DUR. Sir, I am English born—
Native of Cumberland. Enough is said
Why I should shun these bowers, whose lords were hospitable
To English blood, and unto Cumberland
Most hospitable and most fatal.

Osw. Ay, father. Once my grandsire plough’d,
And harrow’d,
And sow’d with salt, the streets of your fair towns;
But what of that?—you have the ’va’ntage now.

DUR. True, Lord of Devorgoil, and well believe I,
That not in vain we sought these towers to-night,
So strangely guided, to behold their state.

Osw. Ay, thou wouldst say, ’twas fit a Cumbrian beggar
Should sit an equal guest in his proud halls

Whose fathers beggar’d Cumberland—Graybeard, let it be so,
I’ll not dispute it with thee.
(To Leo., who was speaking to Flora, but, on being surprised, occupied himself with the suit of armor.)

What makest thou there, young man?

Leo. I marvell’d at this harness; it is larger Than arms of modern days. How richly carved
With gold inlaid on steel—how close the rivets—
How justly fit the joints! I think the gauntlet
Would swallow twice my hand.

[He is about to take down some part of the Armor; Oswald interferes.

Osw. Do not displace it.

My grandsire, Erick, doubled human strength,
And almost human size—and human knowledge,
And human vice, and human virtue also,
As storm or sunshine chanced to occupy
His mental hemisphere. After a fatal deed,
He hung his armor on the wall, forbidding
It e’er should be ta’en down. There is a prophecy,
That of itself ’twill fall, upon the night
When, in the fiftieth year from his decease,
Devorgoil’s feast is full. This is the era;
But, as too well you see, no meet occasion
Will do the downfall of the armor justice,
Or grace it with a feast. There let it bide,
Trying its strength with the old walls it hangs on,
Which shall fall soonest.

DUR. (Looking at the trophy with a mixture of feeling).
Then there stern Erick’s harness hangs untouch’d,
Since his last fatal raid on Cumberland!

Osw. Ay, waste and want, and recklessness—a comrade
Still yoked with waste and want—have stripp’d these walls
Of every other trophy. Antler’d skulls,
Whose branches vouch’d the tales old vassals told
Of desperate chases—partisans and spears—
Knights’ barred helms and shields—the shafts and bows,
Axes and breastplates, of the hardy yeomanry—
The banners of the vanquish’d—signs these arms
Were not assumed in vain—have disappear’d.
Yes, one by one they all have disappear’d;
And now Lord Erick’s harness hangs alone,
‘Midst implements of vulgar husbandry
And mean economy; as some old warrior,
Whom want hath made an inmate of an almshouse,
Shows, mid the beggar’d spendthrifts, base mechanics,
And bankrupt peddlers, with whom fate has mix’d him.

DUR. Or rather like a pirate, whom the prisonhouse,
Prime leveller next the grave, hath for the first time
Mingled with peaceful captives, low in fortunes,
But fair in innoence.

1 MS.: “Mingled with peaceful men, broken in fortunes.”
Osw. (looking at Dur. with surprise). Friend, thou art bitter!

Dur. Plain truth, sir, like the vulgar copper coinage,
Despised amongst the gentry, still finds value
And currency with beggars.

Osw. Be it so.
I will not trench on the immunities
I soon may claim to share. Thy features, too,
Though weather-beaten, and thy strain of language,
Relish of better days.¹ Come hither, friend,

[They speak apart.

And let me ask thee of thine occupation.

[Leonard looks round, and, seeing Oswald engaged with Durward, and Gullcrammer with Eleanor, approaches towards Flora, who must give him an opportunity of doing so, with obvious attention on her part to give it the air of chance. The by-play here will rest with the Lady, who must engage the attention of the audience by playing off a little female hypocrisy and simple coquetry.

Leo. Flora—

Flo. Ay, gallant huntsman, may she deign to question
Why Leonard came not at the appointed hour,
Or why he came at midnight?

Leo. Love has no certain loadstar, gentle Flora,
And oft gives up the helm to wayward pilotage.
To say the sooth—a beggar forced me hence,
And Will-o’-wisp did guide us back again.

Flo. Ay, ay, your beggar was the faded spectre
Of Poverty, that sits upon the threshold
Of these our ruin’d walls. I’ve been unwise,
Leonard, to let you speak so oft with me;
And you a fool to say what you have said.
E’en let us here break short; and, wise at length,
Hold each our separate way through life’s wide ocean.

Leo. Nay, let us rather join our course together,
And share the breeze or tempest, doubling joys,
Relieving sorrows, warding evils off
With mutual effort, or enduring them
With mutual patience.

Flo. This is but flattering counsel—sweet and baneful;
But mine had wholesome bitter in’t.

Kat. Ay, ay; but like the sly apothecary,
You’ll be the last to take the bitter drug
That you prescribe to others.

[They whisper. Eleanor advances to interrupt them, followed by Gullcrammer.

Ele. What, maid, no household cares? Leave to your elders
The task of filling passing strangers’ cars
With the due notes of welcome.

Gul. Be it thine,
Oh, Mistress Flora, the more useful talent
Of filling strangers’ stomachs with substantial;

That is to say,—for learn’d commentators
Do so expound substantialis in some places,—
With a soured bacon-face and sausages.

Flo. (apart). Would thou wert soused, intolerable pedant,
Base, greedy, perverse, interrupting coxcomb!
Kat. Hush, coz, for we’ll be well avenged on him,
And ere this night goes o’er, else woman’s wit
Cannot o’ertake her wishes.

[She proceeds to arrange seats. Oswald and Durward come forward in conversation.

Osw. I like thine humor well.—So all men beg—

Dur. Yes—I can make it good by proof. Your soldier Begs for a leaf of laurel, and a line
In the Gazette. He brandishes his sword
To back his suit, and is a sturdy beggar.
The courtier begs a ribbon or a star,
And, like our gentler mumpers, is provided
With false certificates of health and fortune
Lost in the public service. For your lover,
Who begs a sigh, a smile, a lock of hair,
A buskin-point, he maunds upon the pad,
With the true cant of pure mendicity,
“The smallest trifle to relieve a Christian,
And if it like your Ladyship!”—

[In a begging tone.

Kat. (apart). This is a cunning knave, and feeds the humor
Of my aunt’s husband,—for I must not say
Mine honor’d uncle. I will try a question.—
Your man of merit though, who serves the commonwealth,
Nor asks for a requital?—

[To Durward.

Dur. Is a dumb beggar,
And lets his actions speak like signs for him,
Challenging double guarden.—Now, I’ll show
How your true beggar has the fair advantage
O’er all the tribes of cloak’d mendicity
I have told over to you.—The soldier’s laurel,
The statesman’s ribbon, and the lady’s favor,
Once won and gain’d, are not held worth a farthing
By such as longest, loudest, canted for them;
Whereas your charitable halfpenny,²
Which is the scope of a true beggar’s suit,
Is worth two farthings, and, in times of plenty,
Will buy a crust of bread.

Flo. (interrupting him, and addressing her father).
Sir, let me be a beggar with the time,
And pray you come to supper.

Ele. (to Oswald, apart). Must he sit with us?
[Looking at Durward.

Osw. Ay, ay, what else—since we are beggars all?
When cloaks are ragged, sure their worth is equal,
Whether at first they were of silk or woolen.
Ele. Thou art scarce consistent.
This day thou didst refuse a princely banquet,
Because a new-made lord was placed above thee;
And now—

¹ MS.: “Both smack of better days,” &c.

² MS.: “Whereas your genuine copper halfpenny.”
Osw. Wife, I have seen, at public executions,
A wretch that could not brook the hand of violence
Should push him from the scaffold, pluck up courage,
And, with a desperate sort of cheerfulness,
Take the fell plunge himself—
Welcome then, beggars, to a beggar’s feast!

Gul. (who has in the meanwhile seated himself.) But this is more.—A better countenance,—
Fair fall the hands that souse’d it!—than this hog’s,
Or prettier provender than these same sausages
(By what good friend sent hither, shall be nameless, Doubtless some youth whom love hath made profuse),

[Smiling significantly at Eleanor and Flora.
No prince need wish to peek at. Long, I ween,
Since that the nostrils of this house (by metaphor,
I mean the chimneys) smell’d a steam so grateful—
By your good leave I cannot daily longer.

[Helps himself.

Osw. (places Durward above Gullcrammer.)
Meanwhile, sir,
Please it your youthful learning to give place
To gray hairs and to wisdom; and, moreover,
If you had tarried for the benediction——

Gul. (somewhat abashed). I said grace to myself.

Osw. (not minding him). And waited for the company of others,
It had been better fashion. Time has been,
I should have told a guest at Devorgoil,
Bearing himself thus forward, he was saucy.

[He seats himself, and helps the company and himself in dumb-show. There should be a contrast between the precision of his aristocratic civility and the rude under-breeding of Gullcrammer.

Osw. (having tasted the dish next him). Why, this is venison, Eleanor!

Gul. Eh! What! Let’s see—

[Pushes across Oswald and helps himself.

It may be venison—
I’m sure ’tis not beef, veal, mutton, lamb, or pork.
Eke am I sure, that be it what it will,
It is not half so good as sausages,
Or as a sow’s face souse’d.

Osw. Eleanor, whence all this?—

Ele. Wait till to-morrow,
You shall know all. It was a happy chance
That furnish’d us to meet so many guests.

[Fills wine.

Try if your cup be not as richly garnish’d
As is your treacher.1

Kat. (apart). My aunt adheres to the good cautious maxim
Of,—“Eat your pudding, friend, and hold your tongue.”

Osw. (tastes the wine). It is the grape of Bordeaux.

Such dainties, once familiar to my board,
Have been estranged from’t long.

[He again fills his glass, and continues to speak as he holds it up.

Fill round, my friends—here is a treacherous friend
now
Smiles in your face, yet seeks to steal the jewel
Which is distinction between man and brute—
I mean our reason; this he does, and smiles.
But are not all friends treacherous?—one shall cross you
Even in your dearest interests—one shall slander you—
This steal your daughter, that defraud your purse;
But this gay flask of Bordeaux will but borrow
Your sense of mortal sorrows for a season,
And leave, instead, a gay delirium.
Methinks my brain, unused to such gay visitants,
The influence feels already!—we will revel!—
Our banquet shall be loud!—it is our last.

Katleen, thy song.

Kat. Not now, my lord—I mean to sing to-night
For this same moderate, grave, and reverend clergyman;
I’ll keep my voice till then.

Ele. Your round refusal shows but cottage breeding.

Kat. Ay, my good aunt, for I was cottage-nurtured,
And taught, I think, to prize my own wild will
Above all sacrifice to compliment.
Here is a huntsman—in his eyes I read it,
He sings the martial song my uncle loves,
What time fierce Claver’se with his Cavaliers,
Abjuring the new change of government,
Forcing his fearless way through timorous friends,
And enemies as timorous, left the capital
To rouse in James’s cause the distant Highlands.
Have you ne’er heard the song, my noble uncle?

Osw. Have I not heard, wench?—it was I rode next him,
’Tis thirty summers since—rode by his rein;
We marched on through the alarm’d city,
As sweeps the osprey through a flock of gulls,
Who scream and flutter, but dare no resistance
Against the bold sea-empress—They did murmur,
The crowds before us, in their sullen wrath,
And those whom we had pass’d, gathering fresh courage,
Cried havoc in the rear—we minded them
E’en as the brave bark minds the bursting billows,
Which, yielding to her bows, burst on her sides,
And ripple in her wake.—Sing me that strain,

[To Leonard.

And thou shalt have a meed I seldom tender,
Because they’re all I have to give—my thanks.

Leo. Nay, if you’ll bear with what I cannot help,
A voice that’s rough with hollowing to the hounds,
I’ll sing the song even as old Rowland taught me.

---

1 Wooden trenchers should be used, and the quahg, a Scottish drinking-cup.
SONG.

AIR—"The Bonnets of Bonny Dundee."

To the Lords of Convention 'twas Claver'se who spoke,
"Ere the King's crown shall fall, there are crowns to be broke;
So let each Cavalier who loves honor and me
Come follow the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.

"Come fill up my cup, come fill up my can,
Come saddle your horses, and call up your men;
Come open the West Port, and let me gang free,
And it's room for the bonnets of Bonny Dundee!"

Dundee he is mounted, he rides up the street;
The bells are rung backward, the drums they are beat;
But the Provost, dooce man, said, "Just e'en let him be,
The Gude Town is well quit of that Deil of Dundee."
Come fill up my cup, &c.

As he rode down the sanctified bends of the Bow,
Ilk carlue was flying and shaking her pow;
But the young plants of grace they look'd couthie and slee,
Thinking, Luck to thy bonnet, thou Bonny Dundee!
Come fill up my cup, &c.

1 "Dundee, enraged at his enemies, and still more at his friends, resolved to retire to the Highlands and to make preparations for civil war, but with secrecy; for he had been ordered by James to make no public insurrection until assistance should be sent him from Ireland.

"Whilst Dundee was in this temper, information was brought him, whether true or false is uncertain, that some of the Covenanters had associated themselves to assassinate him, in revenge for his former severities against their party. He flew to the Convention and demanded justice. The Duke of Hamilton, who wished to get rid of a troublesome adversary, treated his complaint with neglect; and in order to sting him in the tenderest part, reflected upon that courage which could be alarmed by imaginary dangers. Dundee left the house in a rage, mounted his horse, and with a troop of fifty horsemen who had deserted to him from his regiment in England, galloped through the city. Being asked by one of his friends who stopt him, where he was going, he waved his hat, and is reported to have answered, 'Wherever the spirit of Montrose shall direct me.' In passing under the walls of the castle, he stopt, scrambled up the precipice at a place difficult and dangerous, and held a conference with the Duke of Gordon at a postern-gate, the marks of which are still to be seen, though the gate itself is built up. Hoping, in vain, to infuse the vigor of his own spirit into the duke, he pressed him to retire with him into the Highlands, raise his vassals there, who were numerous, brave, and faithful, and leave the command of the castle to Winram, the lieutenant-governor, an officer on whom Dundee could rely. The duke concealed his timidity under the excuse of a soldier. 'A soldier,' said he, 'cannot in honor quit the post that is assigned him.' The novelty of the sight drew numbers to the foot of the rock upon which the conference was held. These numbers every minute increased, and, in the end, were mistaken for Dundee's adherents. The Convention was then sitting; news were carried thither that Dundee was at the gates with an army, and had prevailed upon the governor of the castle to fire upon the town. The Duke of Hamilton, whose intelligence was better, had the presence of mind, by improving the moment of agitation, to overwhelm the one party and provoke the other by their fears. He ordered the doors of the house to be shut, and the keys to be laid on the table before him. He cried out that there was danger within as well as without doors; that traitors must be held in confinement until the present danger was over; but that the friends of liberty had nothing to fear, for that thousands were ready to start in their defence at the stamp of his foot. He ordered the drums to beat and the trumpets to sound through the city. In an instant vast swarms of those who had been brought into the town by him and Sir John Dalrymple from the western counties, and who had hitherto been hid in garrets and cellars, showed themselves in the streets; not, indeed, in the proper habiliments of war, but in arms, and with looks fierce and sullen, as if they felt disdain at their former concealment. This unexpected sight increased the noise and tumult of the town, which grew loudest in the square adjoining to the house where the members were confined, and appeared still louder to those who were within, because they were ignorant of the cause from which the tumult arose, and caught contagion from the anxious looks of each other. After some hours the doors were thrown open, and the Whig members, as they went out, were received with acclamations, and those of the opposite party with the threats and curses of a prepared populace. Terrified by the prospect of future alarms, many of the adherents of James quitted the Convention and retired to the country; most of them changed sides; only a very few of the most resolute continued their attendance."—DALRYMPLE'S MEMOIRS, vol. ii. p. 305.

2 Previous to 1784, the Grassmarket was the common place of execution at Edinburgh.
There are wild Duniewassals three thousand times three,
Will cry hoigt! for the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, &c.

"There's brass on the target of barken'd bull-hide;
There's steel in the scabbard that dangles beside;
The brass shall be burnish'd, the steel shall flash free,
At a toss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, &c.

"Away to the hills, to the caves, to the rocks—
Ere I own an usurper, I'll couch with the fox;
And tremble, false Whigs, in the midst of your glee,
You have not seen the last of my bonnet and me!"
Come fill up my cup, &c.

He waved his proud hand, and the trumpets were blown,
The kettle-drums clash'd, and the horsemen rode on,
Till on Ravelston's cliffs and on Clermiston's lea
Died away the wild-war-notes of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, come fill up my can,
Come saddle the horses, and call up the men;
Come open your gates, and let me gae free,
For it's up with the bonnets of Bonny Dundee!

Ele. Katleen, do thou sing now. Thy uncle's cheerful;
We must not let his humor ebb again.
Kat. But I'll do better, aunt, than if I sung,
For Flora can sing blithe; so can this huntsman,
As he has shown e'en now; let them duet it.
Osw. Well, huntsman, we must give to freakish maiden
The freedom of her fancy. Raise the carol,
And Flora, if she can, will join the measure.

SONG.
When friends are met o'er merry cheer,
And lovely eyes are laughing near,
And in the goblet's bosom clear
The cares of day are drown'd;
When puns are made, and bumpers quaff'd,
And wild Wit shoots his roving shaft,
And Mirth his jovial laugh has laugh'd
Then is our banquet crown'd,
Ah gay,
Then is our banquet crown'd.

When glee's are sung, and catches troll'd,
And bashfulness grows bright and bold,
And beauty is no longer cold,
And age no longer dull;
When chimes are brief, and cocks do crow,
To tell us it is time to go,
Yet how to part we do not know,
Then is our feast at full,
Ah gay,
Then is our feast at full.

Osw. (rises with the cup in his hand). Devorgoill's feast is full—
Drink to the pledge!

[A tremendous burst of thunder follows these words of the Song; and the lightning should seem to strike the suit of black Armor, which falls with a crash.] All rise in surprise and fear except Gullcrammer, who tumbles over backwards and lies still.

Osw. That sounded like the judgment-peat; the roof
Still trembles with the volley.
Dur. Happy those Who are prepared to meet such fearful summons!—
Leonard, what dost thou there?
Leo. (supporting Flo.). The duty of a man—
Supporting innocence. Were it the final call,
I were not misemploy'd.
Osw. The armor of my grandsire hath fall'n down,
And old saws have spoke truth.—(Musing.)
The fiftieth year—
Devorgoill's feast at fullest! What to think of it—
Leo. (lifting a scroll which had fallen with the armor). This may inform us.
[Attempts to read the manuscript, shakes his head, and gives it to Oswald.] But not to eyes unlearn'd it tells its tidings.
Osw. Hawks, hounds, and revelling consumed the hours
I should have given to study.

[Looks at the manuscript.]
These characters I spell not more than thou:
They are not of our day, and, as I think,
Not of our language. Where's our scholar now,
So forward at the banquet? Is he laggard
Upon a point of learning?
Leo. Here is the man of letter'd dignity,
E'en in a piteous case.

[Draws Gullcrammer forward.]
Osw. Art waking, craven? canst thou read this scroll?
Or art thou only learn'd in sousing swine's flesh,
And prompt in eating it?
Gul. Eh—ah!—oh—ho!—Have you no better time
To tax a man with riddles, than the moment
When he scarce knows whether he's dead or living?
Osw. Confound the pedant!—Can you read the scroll,
Or can you not, sir? If you can, pronounce
Its meaning speedily.
Gul. Can I read it, quoatha?
When at our learned University,
I gain'd first premium for Hebrew learning,—
Which was a pound of high-dried Scottish snuff,
And half a peck of onions, with a bushel
Of curious oatmeal,—our learn'd Principal
Did say, "Melchisedek, thou canst do any thing!"

1 I should think this may be contrived by having a transparent zigzag in the flat-scene, immediately above the armor, suddenly and very strongly illuminated.
Now comes he with his paltry scroll of parchment, and, “Can you read it?”—After such afront, the point is, if I will.

Osw. A point soon solved, unless you choose to sleep among the frogs; for look you, sir, there is the chamber window,—Beneath it lies the lake.

Ele. Kind Master Gullerammer, beware my husband,
He brooks no contradiction—’tis his fault,
And in his wrath he’s dangerous.

Gul. (looks at the scroll, and mutters as if reading).
Hashgaboth hitch-potch—
A simple matter this to make a rout of!—
Ten rashersen bacon, mish-mash venison,
Sausagian sosed-face—’Tis a simple catalogue
Of our small supper, made by the grave sage
Whose prescience knew this night that we should feast
On venison, hash’d sow’s face, and sausages,
And hung his steel coat for a supper bell—
E’en let us to our provender again,
For it is written we shall finish it,
And bless our stars the lightning left it us.

Osw. This must be impudence or ignorance!—
The spirit of rough Erick stirs within me,
And I will knock thy brains out if thou palterest!
Expound the scroll to me!

Gul. You’re over hasty;
And yet you may be right too—’Tis Samaritan,
Now I look closer on’t, and I did take it
For simple Hebrew.

Dur. ’Tis Hebrew to a simpleton,
That we see plainly, friend—Give me the scroll.

Gul. Alas, good friend! what would you do with it?

Dur. (takes it from him). My best to read it, sir—
The character is Saxon,
Used at no distant date within this district;
And thus the tenor runs—nor in Samaritan,
Nor simple Hebrew, but in wholesome English:
Devorgoil, thy bright moon waneth,
And the lusty harness staineth;
Servile guests the banquet soil
Of the once proud Devorgoil.
But should Black Erick’s armor fall,
Look for guests shall scare you all!
They shall come ere peep of day,—
Wake and watch, and hope and pray.

Kat. (to Fl.). Here is fine foolery—an old wall shakes
At a loud thunder-clap—down comes a suit
Of ancient armor, when its wasted braces
Were all too rotten to sustain its weight—
A beggar cries out, Miracle! and your father,
Weighing the importance of his name and lineage,
Must needs believe the dotard!

Fl. Mock not, I pray you; this may be too serious.

Kat. And if I live till morning, I will have

The power to tell a better tale of wonder
Wrought on wise Gullcrammer. I’ll go prepare me.

[Flo. I have not Katleen’s spirit, yet I hate
This Gullerammer too heartily, to stop
Any disgrace that’s hastening towards him.

Osw. (to whom the Beggar has been again reading the scroll).
’Tis a strange prophecy!—The silver moon,
Now waning sorely, is our ancient bearing—
Strange and unfitting guests—

Gul. (interrupting him). Ay, ay, the matter
Is, as you say, all moonshine in the water.

Osw. How mean you, sir? (threatening.)

Gul. To show that I can rhyme
With yonder bluegown. Give me breath and time,
I will maintain, in spite of his pretence,
Mine exposition had the better sense—
It spoke good victuals and increase of cheer;
And his, more guests to eat what we have here—
An increment right needless.

Osw. Get thee gone;

To kennel, hound!

Gul. The hound will have his bone.

[Takes up the platter of meat, and a flask.

Osw. Flora, show him his chamber—take him hence,
Or, by the name I bear, I’ll see his brains.

Gul. Ladies, good night!—I spare you, sir, the pains.

[Exit, lighted by Flora with a lamp.

Osw. The owl is fled.—I’ll not to bed to-night;
There is some change impending o’er this house,
For good or ill. I would some holy man
Were here, to counsel us what we should do!
Yon witless thin-faced gull is but a cassock
Stuff’d out with chaff and straw.

Dur. (assuming an air of dignity). I have been wont,
In other days, to point to erring mortals
The rock which they should anchor on.

[He holds up a Cross—the rest take a posture
Of devotion, and the Scene closes.

1 MS.: “A begging knave cries out, A miracle!
And your good sire, doting on the importance

ACT III.—SCENE I.

A ruinous Ante-room in the Castle. Enter Katleen, fantastically dressed to play the Character of Cockle-de-moy, with the visor in her hand.

Kat. I’ve scarce had time to glance at my sweet person,
Yet this much could I see, with half a glance,
My elfish dress becomes me—I’ll not mask me
Till I have seen Lance Blackthorn. Lance! I say—

[Calls.

Blackthorn, make haste!

Of his high birth and house, must needs believe him.”
Enter Blackthorn, half dressed as Owlspiegle.
BLA. Here am I—Blackthorn in the upper half,
Much at your service; but my nether parts
Are goblinized and Owlspiegled. I had much ado
To get these trankums on. I judge Lord Eric
Kept no good house, and starved his quondam barber.

Kat. Peace, ass, and hide you—Gullcrammer is coming;
He left the hall before, but then took fright,
And 'e'en sneak'd back. The Lady Flora lights him—

Trim occupation for her ladyship!
Had you seen Leonard, when she left the hall
On such fine errand!

BLA. This Gullcrammer shall have a bob extraordin-
For my good comrade's sake.—But tell me, Kat-

What dress is this of yours?
Kat. A page's, fool!
BLA. I'm accounted no great scholar,
But 'tis a page that I would fain peruse
A little closer. [Approaches her.
Kat. Put on your spectacles,
And try if you can read it at this distance,
For you shall come no nearer.
BLA. But is there nothing, then, save rank impos-
In all these tales of goblinry at Devorgoil?
Kat. My aunt's grave lord thinks otherwise, sup-

That his great name so interests the heavens,
That miracles must needs bespeak its fall.—
I would that I were in a lowly cottage
Beneath the Greenwood, on its walls no armor
To court the levin-bolt—
BLA. And a kind husband, Katleen,
To ward such dangers as must needs come nigh.—
My father's cottage stands so low and lone
That you would think it solitude itself;
The Greenwood shields it from the northern blast,
And, in the woodbine round its latticed casement,
The linnet's sure to build the earliest nest
In all the forest.
Kat. Peace, you fool, they come.

Flora lights Gullcrammer across the Stage.
Kat. (when they have passed). Away with you!
On with your cloak—he ready at the signal.
BLA. And shall we talk of that same cottage, Kat-

At better leisure? I have much to say
In favor of my cottage.
Kat. If you will be talking,
You know I can't prevent you.
BLA. That's enough.

(Aside.) I shall have leave, I see, to spell the page
A little closer when the due time comes.

SCENE II.

Scene changes to Gullcrammer's Sleeping Apartment. He enters, ushered in by Flora, who sets on the table a flask, with the lamp.

FLO. A flask, in case your Reverence be athirst;
A light, in case your Reverence be afar'd;—
And so sweet slumber to your Reverence.

GUL. Kind Mistress Flora, will you?—eh! eh! eh!
FLO. Will I what?
GUL. Tarry a little?
FLO. (smiling). Kind Master Gullcrammer,
How can you ask me aught so unbecoming?

GUL. Oh, fie, fie, fie!—Believe me, Mistress Flora,
'Tis not for that—but being guided through
Such dreary galleries, stairs, and suites of rooms,
To this same edifice, I'm somewhat loth
To bid adieu to pleasant company.

FLO. A flattering compliment!—In plain truth you are fright'en'd.

GUL. What! fright'en'd?—I—I—am not timorous.
FLO. Perhaps you've heard this is our haunted chamber?

But then it is our best—Your Reverence knows
That in all tales which turn upon a ghost,
Your traveller belated has the luck
To enjoy the haunted room—it is a rule:—
To some it were a hardship, but to you,
Who are a scholar, and not timorous—

GUL. I did not say I was not timorous,
I said I was not temerarious.—
I'll to the hall again.

FLO. You'll do your pleasure.
But you have somehow moved my father's anger,
And you had better meet our playful Owlspiegle—
So is our goblin call'd—than face Lord Oswald.

GUL. Owlspiegle?—

It is an uncouth and outlawish name,
And in mine ear sounds fiendish.

FLO. Hush, hush, hush! [merry spirit;
Perhaps he hears us now—(in an undertone)—A
None of your elves that pinch folks black and blue,
For lack of cleanliness.

GUL. As for that, Mistress Flora,
My tafta doublet hath been duly brush'd,
My shirt hebdomalad put on this morning.

FLO. Why, you need fear no goblins. But this
Owlspiegle
Is of another class;—yet has his frolics;
Cuts hair, trim's beards, and plays amid his antics
The office of a sinful mortal barber.
Such is at least the rumor.

GUL. He will not cut my clothes, or scar my face,
Or draw my blood?

FLO. Enormities like these
Were never charged against him.

GUL. And, Mistress Flora, would you smile on me,
If, prick'd by the fond hope of your approval,
I should endure this venture?
FLO. I do hope
I shall have cause to smile.
GUL. Well! in that hope
I will embrace the achievement for thy sake.
[She is going.
Yet, stay, stay, stay!—on second thoughts I will not—
I've thought on it, and will the mortal cudgel
Rather endure than face the ghostly razor!
Your crab-tree's tough but blunt,—your razor's
polish'd,
But, as the proverb goes, 'tis cruel sharp.
I'll to thy father, and unto his pleasure
Submit these destined shoulders.
FLO. But you shall not,
Believe me, sir, you shall not; he is desperate,
And better far be trimm'd by ghost or goblin,
Than by my sire in anger; there are stores
Of hidden treasure, too, and Heaven knows what,
Buried among these ruins—you shall stay.
(Apart.) And if indeed there be such sprite as Owlspiegle,
And, lacking him, that thy fear plague thee not
Worse than a goblin, I have miss'd my purpose,
Which else stands good in either case.—Good-night, sir.
[Exit, and double-locks the door.
GUL. Nay, hold ye, hold!—Nay, gentle Mistress
Flora,
Wherefore this ceremony?—She has lock'd me in,
And left me to the goblin!—(Listening.)—So, so, so!
I hear her light foot trip to such a distance
That I believe the castle's breadth divides me
From human company. I'm ill at ease—
But if this citadel (Laying his hand on his stomach)
were better victual'd,
It would be better manned. [Sits down and drinks.
She has a footstep light, and taper ankle. [Chuckles.
Aha! that ankle! yet, confound it too,
But for those charms Melchisedek had been
Snug in his bed at Mucklewhame—I say,
Confound her footstep, and her instep too,
To use a cobbler's phrase.—There I was quaint.
Now, what to do in this vile circumstance,
To watch or go to bed, I can't determine;
Were I abed, the ghost might catch me napping,
And if I watch, my terrors will increase
As ghostly hours approach. I'll to my bed
E'en in my taffeta doublet, shrink my head
Beneath the clothes—leave the lamp burning there,
[Sets it on the table.
And trust to fate the issue.
[He lays aside his cloak, and brushes it, as from habit, starting at every moment; ties a napkin over his head; then shrinks beneath the bedclothes. He starts once or twice, and at length seems to go to sleep. A bell tolls once. He leaps up in his bed.
GUL. I had just coax'd myself to sweet forgetfulness,
And that confounded bell—I hate all bells,
Except a dinner bell—and yet I lie, too,—

I love the bell that soon shall tell the parish
Of Gabblegoose, Melchisedek's incumbency—
And shall the future minister of Gabblegoose,
Whom his parishioners will soon require
To exorcise their ghosts, detect their witches,
Lie shivering in his bed for a pert goblin,
Whom, be he switch'd or cocktail'd, horn'd or poll'd,
A few tight Hebrew words will soon send packing?
Tush! I will rouse the parson up within me,
And bid defiance—(A distant noise.) In the name of Heaven, [ness!
What sounds are these!—O Lord! this comes of rash-
[Draws his head down under the bed-clothes.
Duet without, between Owlspiegle and Cockledemoy.

OWLSPIEGLE.
Cockledemoy!
My boy, my boy—
COCKLEDEMORY.
Here, father, here.

OWLSPIEGLE.
Now the pole-star's red and burning,
And the witch's spindle turning,
Appear, appear!

GUL. (who has again raised himself, and listened with great terror to the Duet). I have heard of the devil's dam before,
But never of his child. Now, Heaven deliver me!
The Papists have the better of us there,—
They have their Latin prayers, cut and dried,
And pat for such occasion—I can think
On nought but the vernacular.

OWLSPIEGLE.
Cockledemoy!
My boy, my boy,
We'll sport us here—

COCKLEDEMORY.
Our gambols play,
Like elve and fay;

OWLSPIEGLE.
And domineer,

BOTH.
Laugh, frollic, and frisk, till the morning appear.

COCKLEDEMORY.
Lift latch—open clasp—
Shoot bolt—and burst hasp!
[The door opens with violence. Enter BLACK-
THORN as Owlspiegle, fantastically dressed as a Spanish Barber, tall, thin, emaciated, and ghostly; Katleen, as Cockledemoy, attends as his Page. All their manners, tones, and motions, are fantastic, as those of Goblins. They make two or three times the circuit of the Room, without seeming to see Gullcrammer. They then resume their Chant, or Recitative.

OWLSPIEGLE.
Cockledemoy!
My boy, my boy,
What wilt thou do that will give thee joy?
Wilt thou ride on the midnight owl?

COCKLEDEMOY.
No; for the weather is stormy and foul.

OWLSPIEGLE.
Cockledemoy!
My boy, my boy,
What wilt thou do that can give thee joy?
With a needle for a sword, and a thimble for a hat,
Wilt thou fight a traverse with the castle cat?

COCKLEDEMOY.
Oh, no! she has claws, and I like not that.

GUL. I see the devil is a doting father,
And spoils his children—'tis the surest way
To make cursed imps of them. They see me not—
What will they think on next? It must be own'd,
They have a dainty choice of occupations.

OWLSPIEGLE.
Cockledemoy!
My boy, my boy,
What shall we do that can give thee joy?
Shall we go seek for a cuckoo's nest?

COCKLEDEMOY.
That's best, that's best!

BOTH.
About, about,
Like an elvish scout,
The cuckoo's a gull, and we'll soon find him out.

[They search the room with mops and moves.
At length Cockledemoy jumps on the bed.
Gullcrammer raises himself half up, supporting himself by his hands. Cockledemoy does the same, and grins at him, then skips from the bed, and runs to Owlspiegle.

COCKLEDEMOY.
I've found the nest,
And in it a guest,
With a sable cloak and a taffeta vest;
He must be wash'd, and trimm'd, and dress'd,
To please the eyes he loves the best.

OWLSPIEGLE.
That's best, that's best.

BOTH.
He must be shaved, and trimm'd, and dress'd,
To please the eyes he loves the best.
[They arrange shaving things on the table, and sing as they prepare them.

BOTH.
Know that all of the humbug, the bite, and the buzz,
Of the make-believe world, becomes forfeit to us.

OWLSPIEGLE (sharpening his razor).
The sword this is made of was lost in a fray
By a fop, who first bullied and then ran away;
And the strap, from the hide of a lame racer, sold
By Lord Match, to his friend, for some hundreds in gold.

BOTH.
For all of the humbug, the bite, and the buzz,
Of the make-believe world, becomes forfeit to us.

COCKLEDEMOY (placing the napkin).
And this cambrie napkin, so white and so fair,
At an usurer's funeral I stole from the heir.
[Drop something from a vial, as going to make suds.
This dewdrop I caught from one eye of his mother,
Which wept while she ogled the parson with t'other.

BOTH.
For all of the humbug, the bite, and the buzz,
Of the make-believe world, becomes forfeit to us.

OWLSPIEGLE (arranging the lather and the basin).
My soap-ball is of the mild alkali made,
Which the soft dedicator employs in his trade;
And it froths with the pith of a promise, that's sworn
By a lover at night, and forgot on the morn.

BOTH.
For all of the humbug, the bite, and the buzz,
Of the make-believe world, becomes forfeit to us.

GUL. (who has been observing them). I'll pluck a spirit up; they're merry goblins,
And will deal mildly. I will soothe their humor;
Besides, my beard lacks trimming.
[He rises from his bed, and advances with great symptoms of trepidation, but affecting an air of composure. The Goblins receive him with fantastic ceremony.
Gentlemen, 'tis your will I should be trimm'd—
E'en do your pleasure. (They point to a seat—he sits.)

Da capo.
Think, howsoe'er,
Of me as one who hates to see his blood;
Therefore I do beseech you, signior,
Be gentle in your craft. I know those barbers;
One would have harrows driven across his visnomy
Rather than they should touch it with a razor.

Owlspiegle shaves Gullcrammer, while Cockledemoy sings.

Father never started hair,
Shaved too close, or left too bare—
Father's razor slips as glib
As from courteously tongue a fib.
Whiskers, moustache, he can trim in Fashion meet to please the women;
Sharp's his blade, perfumed his father!
Happy those are trimm'd by father!

Gul. That's a good boy. I love to hear a child
Stand for his father, if he were the devil.

[He motions to rise.
Craying your pardon, sir.—What! sit again?
My hair lacks not your scissors.

Owlspiegle insists on his sitting.
Nay, if you're peremptory, I'll ne'er dispute it,
Nor eat the cow and choke upon the tail—
E'en trim me to your fashion.

Owlspiegle cuts his hair, and shaves his head, ridiculously.

Cockledemoy (sings as before).
Hair-breadth 'scapes, and hair-breadth snares,
Hare-brain'd follies, ventures, cares,
Part when father clips your hairs.

If there is a hero frantic,
Or a lover too romantic;—
If threescore seeks second spouse,
Or fourteen lists lover's vows,
Bring them here—for a Scotch boddle,
Owlspiegle shall trim their noodle.

[They take the napkin from about Gullcrammer's neck. He makes bows of acknowledgment, which they return fantastically, and sing—

Thrice crown'd hath the black-cock, thrice croak'd hath the raven,
And Master Melchisedek Gullcrammer's shaven!

Gul. My friends, you are too musical for me;
But though I cannot cope with you in song,
I would, in humble prose, inquire of you,
If that you will permit me to acquit
Even with the barber's pence the barber's service?

[They shake their heads.
Or if there is aught else that I can do for you,
Sweet Master Owlspiegle, or your loving child,
The hopeful Cockle' moy?

Cockledemoy.
Sir, you have been trimm'd of late,
Smooth's your chin, and bald your pate;
Lest cold rheums should work you harm,
Here's a cap to keep you warm.

Gul. Welcome as Fortunatus' wishing cap,
For't was a cap that I was wishing for.
(There I was quaint in spite of mortal terror.)

[As he puts on the cap, a pair of ass's ears disengage themselves.

Upon my faith, it is a dainty head-dress,
And might become an alderman!—Thanks, sweet Monsieur,

Thou'rt a considerate youth.

[Both Goblins bow with ceremony to Gullcrammer, who returns their salutation.
Owlspiegle descends by the trap-door.

Cockledemoy springs out at window.

SONG (without).

Owlspiegle.
Cockledemoy, my hope, my care,
Where art thou now, oh tell me where?

Cockledemoy.
Up in the sky,
On the bonny dragonfly,
Come, father, come you too—
She has four wings and strength enow,
And her long body has room for two.

Gul. Cockledemoy now is a naughty brat—
Would have the poor old stiff-rump'd devil, his father,
Peril his fiendish neck. All boys are thoughtless.

SONG.

Owlspiegle.
Which way didst thou take?

Cockledemoy.
I have fall'n in the lake—
Help, father, for Beelzebub's sake.

Gul. The imp is drown'd—a strange death for a devil,—
Oh, may all boys take warning, and be civil;
Respect their loving sires, endure a chiding,
Nor roam by night on dragonflies a-riding!

Cockledemoy (sings).
Now merrily, merrily, row I to shore,
My bark is a bean-shell, a straw for an ear.

Owlspiegle (sings).
My life, my joy,
My Cockledemoy!

Gul. I can bear this no longer—thus children are spoil'd.

[Strikes into the tune.

Master Owlspiegle, hoy!
He deserves to be whipp'd, little Cockledemoy!

[Their voices are heard as if dying away.
GUL. They're gone!—Now, am I scared, or am I not? I think the very desperate ecstasy Of fear has given me courage. This is strange, now. When they were here, I was not half so frighten'd As now they're gone—they were a sort of company. What a strange thing is use!—A horn, a claw, The tip of a fiend's tail, was wont to scare me. Now am I with the devil hand and glove; His soap has lather'd and his razor shaved me; I've join'd him in a catch, kept time and tune, Could dine with him, nor ask for a long spoon; And if I keep not better company, What will become of me when I shall die?

[Exit.]

SCENE III.

A Gothic Hall, waste and ruinous. The moonlight is at times seen through the shafted windows. Enter KATLEEN and BLACKTHORN—They have thrown off the more ludicrous parts of their disguise.

KAT. This way—this way; was ever fool so gull'd!
BLA. I play'd the barber better than I thought for.
Well, I've an occupation in reserve,
When the long-bow and merry musket fail me.—
But, hark ye, pretty Katleen.
KAT. What should I hearken to?
BLA. Art thou not afraid,
In these wild halls while playing feigned goblins,
That we may meet with real ones?
KAT. Not a jot.
My spirit is too light, my heart too bold,
To fear a visit from the other world.
BLA. But is not this the place, the very hall
In which men say that Oswald's grandfather,
The Black Lord Erick, walks his penance round?
Credit me, Katleen, these half-moulder'd columns
Have in their ruin something very fiendish,
And if you'll take an honest friend's advice,
The sooner that you change their shatter'd splendor
For the snug cottage that I told you of,
Believe me, it will prove the blither dwelling.
KAT. If I e'er see that cottage, honest Blackthorn,
Believe me, it shall be from other motive
Than fear of Erick's spectre.

[A rustling sound is heard.]

BLA. I heard a rustling sound—
Upon my life, there's something in the hall,
Katleen, besides us two!
KAT. A yeoman thou,
A forester, and frighten'd! I am sorry
I gave the fool's-cap to poor Gullerammer,
And let thy head go bare.

[The same rustling sound is repeated.]

BLA. Why, are you mad, or hear you not the sound?

1 "Cowards, upon necessity, assume
A fearful bravery; thinking by this face
To fasten in men's minds that they have courage."

SHAKESPEARE.

KAT. And if I do, I take small heed of it.
Will you allow a maiden to be bolder
Than you, with beard on chin and sword at girdle?
BLA. Nay, if I had my sword I would not care;
Though I ne'er heard of master of defence
So active at his weapon as to brave
The devil, or a ghost—See! see! see yonder!

[A figure is imperfectly seen between two of the pillars.]

KAT. There's something moves, that's certain, and
The moonlight,
Chased by the flitting gale, is too imperfect
To show its form; but, in the name of God,
I'll venture on it boldly.
BLA. Wilt thou so?
Were I alone, now, I were strongly tempted
To trust my heels for safety; but with thee,
Be it fiend or fairy, I'll take risk to meet it.
KAT. It stands full in our path, and we must pass it,
Or tarry here all night.
BLA. In its vile company?

[As they advance towards the figure, it is more plainly distinguished, which might, I think, be contrived by raising successive screens of crope.
The figure is wrapped in a long robe, like the mantle of a hermit or palmer.]

PAL. Ho! ye who thread by night these wildering scenes,
In garb of those who long have slept in death,
Fear you the company of those you imitate?
BLA. This is the devil, Katleen, let us fly! [Runs off.
KAT. I will not fly—why should I? My nerves shake
To look on this strange vision, but my heart
Partakes not the alarm.—If thou dost come in Heaven's name,

In Heaven's name art thou welcome!
PAL. I come, by Heaven permitted. Quit this castle;
There is a fate on't—if for good or evil,
Brief space shall soon determine. In that fate,
If good, by lineage thou canst nothing claim;
If evil, much may'st suffer.—Leave these precincts.
KAT. Whate'er thou art, be answer'd—I know I will not Desert the kinswoman who train'd my youth;
Know that I will not quit my friend, my Flora;
Know that I will not leave the aged man
Whose roof has shelter'd me. This is my resolve—
If evil come, I aid my friends to bear it;
If good, my part shall be to see them prosper,
A portion in their happiness from which
No fiend can bar me.
PAL. Maid, before thy courage,
Firm built on innocence, even beings of nature
More powerful far than thine give place and way;

2 I have a notion that this can be managed so as to represent imperfect or flitting moonlight, upon the plan of the Eidophusikon.
Take then this key, and wait the event with courage.
[He drops the key.—He disappears gradually,
the moonlight failing at the same time.]

KAT. (after a pause). Whate'er it was, 'tis gone!
My head turns round—
The blood that lately fortified my heart
Now eddies in full torrent to my brain,
And makes wild work with reason. I will haste,
If that my steps can bear me so far safe,
To living company. What if I meet it
Again in the long aisle, or vaulted passage?
And if I do, the strong support that bore me
Through this appalling interview, again
Shall strengthen and uphold me.

[As she steps forward she stumbles over the key.
What's this? The key!—there may be mystery in't.
I'll to my kinswoman, when this dizzy fit
Will give me leave to choose my way aright.

[She sits down exhausted.]

Re-enter BLACKTHORN, with a drawn sword and torch.
BLA. Katleen! What, Katleen!—What a wretch was I
To leave her!—Katleen! I am weapon'd now,
And fear no dog nor devil. She replies not!
Beast that I was—nay, worse than beast; the stag,
As timorous as he is, fights for his hind.
What's to be done? I'll search this cursed castle
From dungeon to the battlements; if I find her not,
I'll fling me from the highest pinnacle—

KAT. (who has somewhat gathered her spirits in consequence of his entrance, comes behind and touches him; he starts). Brave sir!
I'll spare you that rash leap. You're a bold woodsman!

Surely I hope that from this night henceforward
You'll never kill a hare, since you're akin to them.
Oh, I could laugh, but that my head's so dizzy!

BLA. Lean on me, Katleen. By my honest word,
I thought you close behind—I was surprised,
Not a jot frighten'd.

KAT. Thou art a fool to ask me to thy cottage,
And then to show me at what slight expense
Of manhood I might master thee and it.

BLA. I'll take the risk of that—This goblin business
Came rather unexpected: the best horse
Will start at sudden sights. Try me again,
And if I prove not true to bonny Katleen,
Hang me in mine own bowstring. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

The Scene returns to the Apartment at the beginning of Act Second. OSWALD and DURWARD are discovered with ELEANOR, FLORA, and LEONARD; DURWARD shuts a Prayer-book, which he seems to have been reading.

DUR. 'Tis true—the difference betwixt the churches,
Which zealots love to dwell on, to the wise

Of either flock are of far less importance
Than those great truths to which all Christian men
Subscribe with equal reverence.

OSW. We thank thee, father, for the holy office,
Still best performed when the pastor's tongue
Is echo to his breast: of jarring creeds
It ill beseems a layman's tongue to speak.—
Where have you sworn you prater? [To FLORA.
FLO. Safe in the goblin-chamber.

ELE. The goblin-chamber!
Maiden, wert thou fran'tie? If his Reverence
Have suffer'd harm by waspish Owlspieggle,
Be sure thou shalt abye it.

FLO. Here he comes,
Can answer for himself!

Enter GULLCRAMMER, in the fashion in which OWL-SPIEGLE had put him,—having the foot's-cap on his head and towel about his neck, &c. His manner through the scene is wild and extravagant, as if the fright had a little affected his brain.

DUR. A goodly spectacle!—Is there such a goblin, (To Osw.) Or has sheer terror made him such a figure?

OSW. There is a sort of wavering tradition
Of a malicious imp who teased all strangers;
My father wot to call him Owlspieggle.

GUL. Who talks of Owlspieggle?
He is an honest fellow for a devil;
So is his son, the hopeful Cockle'moy.

(Sings.)
"My hope, my joy,
My Cockle'moy!"

LEO. The fool's bewitch'd—the goblin hath furn-

ish'd him
A cap which well befits his reverend wisdom,

FLO. If I could think he had lost his slender wits,
I should be sorry for the trick they play'd him.

LEO. Oh, fear him not; it were a foul reflection
On any fiend of sense and reputation,
To filch such petty wares as his poor brains.

DUR. What saw'st thou, sir? what hearded thou?
GUL. What was't I saw and heard?
That which old graybeards,
Who conjure Hebrew into Anglo-Saxon,
To cheat starved barons with, can little guess at.

FLO. If he begin so roundly with my father,
His madness is not like to save his bones.

GUL. Sirs, midnight came, and with it came the goblin,
I had reposed me after some brief study;
But as the soldier, sleeping in the trench,
Keeps sword and musket by him, so I had

My little Hebrew manual prompt for service.

FLO. Savagian soused-face; that much of your Hebrew
Even I can bear in memory.

GUL. We counter'd,
The goblin and myself, even in mid-chamber,
And each stepp'd back a pace, as 'twere to study
The foe he had to deal with! I betheought me,
Ghosts ne'er have the first word, and so I took it,
And fired a volley of round Greek at him.
He stood his ground, and answer'd in the Syriac;
I flunk'd my Greek with Hebrew, and compell'd him—
[A noise heard.]

Osw. Peace, idle prater!—Hark! what sounds are these?
Amid the growling of the storm without,
I hear strange notes of music, and the clash
Of coursers' trampling feet.

VOICES (without).
We come, dark riders of the night,
And drit before the dawning light;
Hill and valley, far aloof,
Shake to hear our chargers' hoof,
But not a foot-stamp on the green
At morn shall show where we have been.

Osw. These must be revellers belated:
Let them pass on; the ruin'd halls of Devorgoil
Open to no such guests.
[Flourish of trumpets at a distance, then nearer.
They sound a summons;
What can they lack at this dead hour of night?
Look out, and see their number and their bearing.
Leo. (goes up to the window). 'Tis strange! one
Single shadowy form alone
Is hovering on the drawbridge; far apart
Flit through the tempest banners, horse, and riders,
In darkness lost, or dimly seen by lightning.—
Hither the figure moves; the bolts revolve,
The gate uncloses to him.
Ele. Heaven protect us!

The Palmer enters; Gullcrammer runs off.
Osw. Whence and what art thou? for what end come hither?

Pal. I come from a far land, where the storm howls not,
And the sun sets not, to pronounce to thee,
Oswald of Devorgoil, thy house's fate.

Dur. I charge thee, in the name we late have kneel'd to—

Pal. Abbot of Lanercost, I bid thee peace!
Uninterrupted let me do mine errand.—
Baron of Devorgoil, son of the bold, the proud,
The warlike, and the mighty, wherefore wear'st thou
The habit of a peasant? Tell me, wherefore
Are thy fair halls thus waste, thy chambers bare?
Where are the tapestries, where the conquer'd bannes,
Trophies, and gilded arms, that deck'd the walls
Of once proud Devorgoil?

[He advances, and places himself where the armor hung, so as to be nearly in the centre of the scene.]

Dur. Who'eer thou art, if thou dost know so much,
Needs must thou know—

Osw. Peace! I will answer here; to me he spoke.—
Mysterious stranger, briefly I reply:
A peasant's dress befits a peasant's fortune;
And 'twere vain mockery to array these walls
In trophies, of whose memory nought remains,
Save that the cruelty outvied the valor
Of those who wore them.

Pal. Degenerate as thou art,
Know'st thou to whom thou sayst this?
[He drops his mantle, and is discovered armed as nearly as may be to the suit which hung on the wall. All express terror.]

Osw. It is himself—the spirit of mine Ancestor!
Ele. Tremble not, son, but hear me!
[He strikes the wall; it opens, and discovers the treasure-chamber.]

There lies piled
The wealth I brought from wasted Cumberland,
Enough to reinstate thy ruin'd fortunes.—
Cast from thine high-born brows that peasant bonnet,
Throw from thy noble grasp the peasant's staff,
O'er all, withdraw thine hand from that mean mate,
Whom in an hour of reckless desperation
Thy fortunes cast thee on. This do,
And be as great as e'er was Devorgoil,
When Devorgoil was richest!

Dur. Lord Oswald, thou hast tempted by a fiend,
Who doth assail thee on thy weakest side,—
Thy pride of lineage, and thy love of grandeur.
Stand fast—resist—contemn his fatal offers!

Ele. Urge him not, father; if the sacrifice
Of such a wasted, woe-worn wretch as I am
Can save him from the abyss of misery
Upon whose verge he's tottering, let me wander
An unacknowledged outcast from this castle,
Even to the humble cottage I was born in.

Osw. No, Ellen, no! it is not thus they part
Whose hearts and souls disasters borne in common
Have knit together, close as summer saplings
Are twined in union by the eddying tempest.—
Spirit of Erick, while thou bear'st his shape,
I'll answer with no ruder conjuration
Thy impious counsel, other than with these words,
Depart, and tempt me not!

Ele. Then Fate will have her course.—Fall, massive grate;
Yield them the tempting view of these rich treasures,
But bar them from possession!
[A portcullis falls before the door of the treasure-chamber.]

Mortals, hear!
No hand may ope that grate, except the Heir
Of plunder'd Aglionby, whose mighty wealth,
Ravish'd in evil hour, lies yonder piled;

1 MS.: "And be as rich as e'er was Devorgoil,
When Devorgoil was proudest."
And not his hand prevails without the key
Of Black Lord Erick; brief space is given
To save proud Devorgoil.—So wills high Heaven.

(Thunder; he disappears.

DUR. Gaze not so wildly; you have stood the trial
That his commission bore, and Heaven designs,
If I may spell his will, to rescue Devorgoil
Even by the Heir of Aglionby—Behold him
In that young forester, unto whose hand
Those bars shall yield the treasures of his house,
Destined to ransom yours.—Advance, young Leonard,
And prove the adventure.

LEO. (advances and attempts the grate.) It is fast
As is the tower, rock-seated.

Osw. We will fetch other means, and prove its strength,
Nor starve in poverty with wealth before us.

DUR. Think what the vision spoke;
The key—the fated key—

Enter Gullcrammer.

GUL. A key?—I say a quay is what we want,
Thus by the learn'd orthographiz'd—Q, u, a, y.
The lake is overflow'd!—A quay, a boat,
Oars, punt, or sculler, is all one to me!—
We shall be drown'd, good people!

Enter Katleen and Blackthorn.

KAT. (giving the key). Here, prove this;
A chance most strange and fearful gave it me.

[OSWALD puts it into the lock and attempts to turn it—a loud clap of thunder.

FLO. The lake still rises faster.—Leonard, Leonard,
Canst thou not save us?

[LEONARD tries the lock—it opens with a violent noise, and the Portcullis rises. A loud strain of wild music. There may be a Chorus here.

[OSWALD enters the apartment, and brings out a scroll.

LEO. The lake is ebbing with as wondrous haste
As late it rose—the drawbridge is left dry!

OSW. This may explain the cause.—
(GULLCRAMMER offers to take it.) But soft you, sir,
We'll not disturb your learning for the matter;
Yet, since you've borne a part in this strange drama,
You shall not go unguerdon'd. Wise or learn'd,
Modest or gentle, Heaven alone can make thee,
Being so much otherwise; but from this abundance
Thou shalt have that shall gild thine ignorance,
Exult thy base descent, make thy presumption
Seem modest confidence, and find thee hundreds
Ready to swear that same fool's-cup of thine
Is reverend as a mitre.

GUL. Thanks, mighty baron, now no more a bare one!—
I will be quaint with him, for all his quips. [Aside.

OSW. Nor shall kind Katleen lack
Her portion in our happiness.

KAT. Thanks, my good lord, but Katleen's fate is fix'd—
There is a certain valiant forester,
Too much afeard of ghosts to sleep anights
In his lone cottage, without one to guard him.

LEO. If I forget my comrade's faithful friendship,
May I be lost to fortune, hope, and love!

DUR. Peace, all! and hear the blessing which this scroll
Speaks unto faith, and constancy, and virtue.

No more this castle's troubled guest,
Dark Erick's spirit hath found rest.
The storms of angry Fate are past—
For Constancy defies their blast.
Of Devorgoil the daughter free
Shall wed the Heir of Aglionby;
Nor ever more dishonor soil
The rescued house of Devorgoil?

Constancy abides their blast.
Of Devorgoil the daughter fair
Shall wed with Dacre's injured hear;
The silver moon of Devorgoil.

1 If it could be managed to render the rising of the lake visible, it would answer well for a coup de théâtre.

2 MS.: "The storms of angry Fate are past—
Auchindrane:

OR,

THE AYRSHIRE TRAGEDY.

Cur aliquid vidi? cur noxia lumina feci?
Cur imprudenti cognita culpa mihi est?
    OVIDI Triiutum, Liber Secundus.

PREFACE.

THERE is not, perhaps, upon record a tale of horror which gives us a more perfect picture than is afforded by the present of the violence of our ancestors, or the complicated crimes into which they were hurried by what their wise but ill-enforced laws termed the heathenish and accursed practice of Deadly Feud. The author has tried to extract some dramatic scenes out of it; but he is conscious no exertions of his can increase the horror of that which is in itself so iniquitous. Yet, if we look at modern events, we must not too hastily venture to conclude that our own times have so much the superiority over former days as we might at first be tempted to infer. One great object has indeed been obtained. The power of the laws extends over the country universally, and if criminals at present sometimes escape punishment, this can only be by eluding justice,—not, as of old, by defying it.

But the motives which influence modern ruffians to commit actions at which we pause with wonder and horror arise, in a great measure, from the thirst of gain. For the hope of lucre, we have seen a wretch seduced to his fate, under the pretext that he was to share in amusement and conviviality; and for gold, we have seen the meanest of wretches deprived of life, and their miserable remains cheated of the grave.

The loftier, if equally cruel, feelings of pride, ambition, and love of vengeance, were the idols of our forefathers, while the caitiffs of our day bend to Mammon, the meanest of the spirits who fell. The criminals, therefore, of former times drew their hellish inspiration from a loftier source than is known to modern villains. The fever of unsated ambition, the frenzy of ungratified revenge, the perfervidum ingenium Scotorum, stigmatized by our jurists and our legislators, held life but as passing breath; and such enormities as now sound like the acts of a madman were then the familiar deeds of every offended noble. With these observations we proceed to our story.

John Muir or Mure, of Auchindrane, the contriver and executor of the following cruelties, was a gentleman of an ancient family and good estate in the west of Scotland; bold, ambitious, treacherous to the last degree, and utterly unconscionious,—a Richard the Third in private life, inaccessible alike to pity and to remorse. His view was to raise the power and extend the grandeur of his own family. This gentleman had married the daughter of Sir Thomas Kennedy of Barganie, who was, excepting the Earl of Cassillis, the most important person in all Carrick, the district of Ayrshire which he inhabited, and where the name of Kennedy held so great a sway as to give rise to the popular rhyme,—

"Twixt Wigton and the town of Air,
Portpatrick and the Cruives of Cree,
No man need think for to hide there,
Unless he court Saint Kennedy."

Now, Mure of Auchindrane, who had promised himself high advancement by means of his father-in-law Barganie, saw, with envy and resentment, that his influence remained second and inferior to the House of Cassillis, chief of all the Kennedys. The earl was indeed a minor, but his authority was maintained and his affairs well managed by his uncle, Sir Thomas Kennedy of Cullayne, the brother of the deceased earl, and tutor and guardian to the present. This worthy gentleman supported his nephew's dignity and the credit of the house so effectually that Barganie's consequence was much thrown into the shade, and the ambitious Auchindrane, his son-in-law, saw no better remedy than to remove so formidable a rival as Cullayne by violent means.

For this purpose, in the year of God 1597 he came with a party of followers to the town of Maybole (where Sir Thomas Kennedy of Cullayne then resided), and lay in ambush in an orchard, through which he knew his destined victim was to pass, in returning homewards from a house where he was engaged to sup. Sir Thomas Kennedy came alone and unattended, when he was suddenly fired upon by Auchindrane and his accomplices, who, having missed their aim, drew their swords, and rushed upon him to slay him. But the party thus assaulted at disadvantage had the good fortune to hide himself for that time in

1 "Mammon led them on;
Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
From heaven."—MILTON.

(770)
Auchindrane; or, The Ayrshire Tragedy.

771

a ruinous house, where he lay concealed till the inhabitants of the place came to his assistance.

Sir Thomas Kennedy prosecuted Mure for this assault, who, finding himself in danger from the law, made a sort of apology and agreement with the Lord of Cullayne, to whose daughter he united his eldest son, in testimony of the closest friendship in future. This agreement was sincere on the part of Kennedy, who, after it had been entered into, showed himself Auchindrane's friend and assistant on all occasions. But it was most false and treacherous on that of Mure, who continued to nourish the purpose of murdering his new friend and ally on the first opportunity.

Auchindrane's first attempt to effect this was by means of the young Gilbert Kennedy of Barganie (for old Barganie, Auchindrane's father-in-law, was dead), whom he persuaded to brave the Earl of Cassillis, as one who usurped an undue influence over the rest of the name. Accordingly, this hot-headed youth, at the instigation of Auchindrane, rode past the gate of the Earl of Cassillis, without waiting on his chief, or sending him any message of civility. This led to mutual defiance, being regarded by the earl, according to the ideas of the time, as a personal insult. Both parties took the field with their followers, at the head of about 250 men on each side. The action ensued was shorter and less bloody than might have been expected. Young Barganie, with the rashness of headlong courage, and Auchindrane, fired by deadly enmity to the House of Cassillis, made a precipitate attack on the earl, whose men were strongly posted and under cover. They were received by a heavy fire. Barganie was slain. Mure of Auchindrane, severely wounded in the thigh, became unable to sit his horse, and, the leaders thus slain or disabled, their party drew off without continuing the action.

It must be particularly observed that Sir Thomas Kennedy remained neuter in this quarrel, considering his connection with Auchindrane as too intimate to be broken even by his desire to assist his nephew.

For this temperate and honorable conduct he met a vile reward; for Auchindrane, in resentment of the loss of his relative Barganie, and the downfall of his ambitious hopes, continued his practices against the life of Sir Thomas of Cullayne, though totally innocent of contributing to either. Chance favored his wicked purpose.

The Knight of Cullayne, finding himself obliged to go to Edinburgh on a particular day, sent a message by a servant to Mure, in which he told him, in the most unsuspecting confidence, the purpose of his journey, and named the road which he proposed to take, inviting Mure to meet him at Dupplin, to the west of the town of Ayr, a place appointed, for the purpose of giving him any commissions which he might have for Edinburgh, and assuring his treacherous ally he would attend to any business which he might have in the Scottish metropolis as anxiously as to his own. Sir Thomas Kennedy's message was carried to the town of Maybole, where his messenger, for some trivial reason, had the import committed to writing by a schoolmaster in that town, and despatched it to its destination by means of a poor student, named Dalrymple, instead of carrying it to the house of Auchindrane in person.

This suggested to Mure a diabolical plot. Having thus received tidings of Sir Thomas Kennedy's motions, he conceived the infernal purpose of having the confiding friend who sent the information waylaid and murdered at the place appointed to meet with him, not only in friendship, but for the purpose of rendering him service. He dismissed the messenger Dalrymple, cautioning the lad to carry back the letter to Maybole, and to say that he had not found him, Auchindrane, in his house. Having taken this precaution, he proceeded to instigate the brother of the slain Gilbert of Barganie, Thomas Kennedy of Drumurghie by name, and Walter Mure of Cloncaird, a kinsman of his own, to take this opportunity of revenging Barganie's death. The fiery young men were easily induced to undertake the crime. They waylaid the unsuspecting Sir Thomas of Cullayne at the place appointed to meet thetraitor Auchindrane, and the murderers having in company five or six servants, well mounted and armed, assaulted and cruelly murdered him with many wounds. They then plundered the dead corpse of his purse, containing a thousand marks in gold, cut off the gold buttons which he wore on his coat, and despoiled the body of some valuable rings and jewels.1

---

1 "No papers which have hitherto been discovered appear to afford so striking a picture of the savage state of barbarism into which that country must have sunk as the following bond by the Earl of Cassillis to his brother and heir-apparent, Hew, Master of Cassillis. The uncle of these young men, Sir Thomas Kennedy of Culzean, tutor of Cassillis, as the reader will recollect, was murdered May 11, 1602, by Auchindrane's accomplices.

"The Master of Cassillis, for many years previous to that event, was in open hostility to his brother. During all that period, however, the master maintained habits of the closest intimacy with Auchindrane and his dissolute associates, and actually joined him in various hostile enterprises against his brother the earl. The occurrence of the Laird of Culzean's murder was embraced by their mutual friends as a fitting opportunity to effect a permanent reconciliation between the brothers; 'bot' (as the Historie of the Kennedys, p. 59, quaintly informs us) 'the country thought that he wald not be erneast in that cause, for the auld buift beixus him and Auchindrayne.' The unprincipled earl (whose sobriquet, and that of some of his ancestors, was King of Carrick, to denote the boundless sway which he exercised over his own vassals and the inhabitants of that district), relying on his brother's necessities, held out the infamous bribe contained in the following bond, to induce his brother, the Master of Cassillis, to murder his former friend, the old Laird of Auchindrane. Though there be honor among thieves, it would seem that there is none among assassins; for the younger brother insisted upon having the price of blood assured to him by a written document, drawn up in the form of a regular bond:

"Judging by the earl's former and subsequent history, he probably thought that, in either event, his purposes would be..."
The revenge due for his uncle's murder was keenly pursued by the Earl of Cassilis. As the murderers fled from trial, they were declared outlaws; which doom, being pronounced by three blasts of a horn, was called "being put to the horn, and declared the king's rebel." Mure of Auchindrane was strongly suspected of having been the instigator of the crime. But he conceived there could be no evidence to prove his guilt if he could keep the boy Dalrymple out of the way, who delivered the letter which made him acquainted with Cullayne's journey, and the place at which he meant to halt. On the contrary, he saw that if the lad could be produced at the trial, it would afford ground of fatal presumption, since it could be then proved that persons so nearly connected with him as Kennedy and Cloncaird had left his house, and committed the murder at the very spot which Cullayne had fixed for their meeting.

To avoid this imminent danger, Mure brought Dalrymple to his house, and detained him there for several weeks. But the youth tiring of this confinement, Mure sent him to reside with a friend, Montgomery of Skelmorly, who maintained him under a borrowed name, amid the desert regions of the then almost savage island of Arran. Being confident in the absence of this material witness, Auchindrane, instead of flying, like his agents Drumurghie and Cloncaird, presented himself boldly at the bar, demanded a fair trial, and offered his person in combat to the death against any of Lord Cassilis' friends who might impugn his innocence. This audacity was successful, and he was dismissed without trial.

Still, however, Mure did not consider himself safe so long as Dalrymple was within the realm of Scotland; and the danger grew more pressing when he learned that the lad had become impatient of the restraint which he sustained in the island of Arran, and returned to some of his friends in Ayrshire. Mure no sooner heard of this than he again obtained possession of the boy's person, and a second time concealed him at Auchindrane, until he found an opportunity to transport him to the Low Countries, where he contrived to have him enlisted in Buccleuch's regiment; trusting, doubtless, that some one of the numerous chances of war might destroy the poor young man whose life was so dangerous to him.

But after five or six years' uncertain safety, bought at the expense of so much violence and cunning, attained by 'killing two birds with one stone.' On the other hand, however, it is but doing justice to the master's acute-ness, and the experience acquired under his quondam preceptor, Auchindrane, that we should likewise conjecture that, on his part, he would hold firm possession of the bond, to be used as a checkmate against his brother, should he think fit afterwards to turn his heel upon him, or attempt to betray him into the hands of justice.

"The following is a correct copy of the bond granted by the earl:—"We, John, Earl of Cassilis, Lord Kennedy, etc., bindis and obhisis us, that howsowne our brother, Hew Kennedie of Brunstoun, with his compleys, talkis the Laird of Auchindranes lyf, that we sall mak guid and thankfull pay-

Auchindrane's fears were exasperated into frenzy when he found this dangerous witness, having escaped from all the perils of climate and battle, had left, or been discharged from, the Legion of Borderers, and had again accomplished his return to Ayrshire. There is ground to suspect that Dalrymple knew the nature of the hold which he possessed over Auchindrane, and was desirous of extorting from his fears some better provision than he had found either in Arran or the Netherlands. But if so, it was a fatal experiment to tamper with the fears of such a man as Auchindrane, who determined to rid himself effectually of this unhappy young man.

Mure now lodged him in a house of his own, called Chapeldonan, tenanted by a vassal and connection of his called James Bannatyne. This man he commissioned to meet him at ten o'clock at night on the seashores near Girvan, and bring with him the unfortunate Dalrymple, the object of his fear and dread. The victim seems to have come with Bannatyne without the least suspicion, though such might have been raised by the time and place appointed for the meeting. When Bannatyne and Dalrymple came to the appointed spot, Auchindrane met them, accompanied by his eldest son, James. Old Auchindrane, having taken Bannatyne aside, imparted his bloody purpose of ridding himself of Dalrymple for ever, by murdering him on the spot. His own life and honor were, he said, endangered by the manner in which this inconvenient witness repeatedly thrust himself back into Ayrshire, and nothing could secure his safety but taking the lad's life, in which action he requested James Bannatyne's assistance. Bannatyne felt some compunction, and remonstrated against the cruel expedient, saying, it would be better to transport Dalrymple to Ireland, and take precautions against his return. While old Auchindrane seemed disposed to listen to this proposal, his son concluded that the time was come for accomplishing the purpose of their meeting, and, without waiting the termination of his father's conference with Bannatyne, he rushed suddenly on Dalrymple, beat him to the ground, and, kneeling down on him, with his father's assistance accomplished the crime by strangling the unhappy object of their fear and jealousy. Bannatyne, the witness, and partly the accomplice, of the murder, assisted them in their attempt to make a hole in the sand, with a spade which they had brought on pur-

ment to him and thame, of the sowme of tewell hundreth merkis, yeiriie, togider with corne to sex horsis, ay and quhil* we resaw thame in houshald with our self: Begin ning the first payment immediatlie efter their committing of the said deid. Attour,* we resaw thame in houshald, we sall pay to the twa servng lumentis the feis, yeiriie, as our awin houshald servandis. And heilo we oblis us, vpoun our honour. Subseryvit with our hand, at Maybole, the ferd day of September, 1602.

* Aye and until.
1 Receive.
2 Moreover.
pose, in order to conceal the dead body. But as the tide was coming in, the holes which they made filled with water before they could get the body buried, and the ground seemed, to their terrified consciences, to refuse to be accessory to concealing their crime. Despairing of hiding the corpse in the manner they proposed, the murderers carried it out into the sea as deep as they dared wade, and there abandoned it to the billows, trusting that a wind, which was blowing off the shore, would drive these remains of their crime out to sea, where they would never more be heard of. But the sea, as well as the land, seemed unwilling to conceal their cruelty. After floating for some hours or days, the dead body was, by the wind and tide, again driven on shore, near the very spot where the murder had been committed.

This attracted general attention, and when the corpse was known to be that of the same William Dalrymple whom Auchindrane had so often spirited out of the country, or concealed when he was in it, a strong and general suspicion arose that this young person had met with foul play from the bold, bad man who had shown himself so much interested in his absence. It was always said or supposed that the dead body had bled at the approach of a grandchild of Mure of Auchindrane, a girl who, from curiosity, had come to look at a sight which others crowded to see. The bleeding of a murdered corpse at the touch of the murderer was a thing at that time so much believed that it was admitted as a proof of guilt; but I know no case, save that of Auchindrane, in which the phenomenon was supposed to be extended to the approach of the innocent kindred; nor do I think that the fact itself, though mentioned by ancient lawyers, was ever admitted to proof in the proceedings against Auchindrane.

It is certain, however, that Auchindrane found himself so much the object of suspicion from this new crime that he resolved to fly from justice, and suffer himself to be declared a rebel and outlaw rather than face a trial. But his conduct in preparing to cover his flight with another motive than the real one is a curious picture of the men and manners of the times. He knew well that if he were to shun his trial for the murder of Dalrymple, the whole country would consider him as a man guilty of a mean and disgraceful crime in putting to death an obscure lad, against whom he had no personal quarrel. He knew, besides, that his powerful friends, who would have interceded for him had his offence been merely burning a house or killing a neighbor, would not plead for or stand by him in so pitiful a concern as the slaughter of this wretched wanderer.

Accordingly, Mure sought to provide himself with some ostensible cause for avoiding law, with which the feelings of his kindred and friends might sympathize; and none occurred to him so natural as an assault upon some friend and adherent of the Earl of Cassils. Should he kill such a one, it would be indeed an unlawful action, but so far from being infamous, would be accounted the natural consequence of the avowed quarrel between the families. With this purpose, Mure, with the assistance of a relative, of whom he seems always to have had some ready to execute his worst purposes, beset Hugh Kennedy of Garriechorne, a follower of the earl's, against whom they had especial ill-will, fired their pistols at him, and used other means to put him to death. But Garriechorne, a stout-hearted man, and well armed, defended himself in a very different manner from the unfortunate Knight of Cullayne, and beat off the assailants, wounding young Auchindrane in the right hand, so that he wellnigh lost the use of it.

But though Auchindrane's purpose did not entirely succeed, he availed himself of it to circulate a report that if he could obtain a pardon for firing upon his feudal enemy with pistols, weapons declared unlawful by act of Parliament, he would willingly stand his trial for the death of Dalrymple, respecting which he protested his total innocence. The king, however, was decidedly of opinion that the Mures, both father and son, were alike guilty of both crimes, and used intercession with the Earl of Abercorn, as a person of power in those western counties, as well as in Ireland, to arrest and transmit them prisoners to Edinburgh.

In consequence of the earl's exertions, old Auchindrane was made prisoner, and lodged in the tolbooth of Edinburgh.

Young Auchindrane no sooner heard that his father was in custody than he became as apprehensive of Bannatyne, the accomplice in Dalrymple's murder, telling tales, as ever his father had been of Dalrymple. He, therefore, hastened to him, and prevailed on him to pass over for a while to the neighboring coast of Ireland, finding him money and means to accomplish the voyage, and engaging in the meantime to take care of his affairs in Scotland. Secure, as they thought, in this precaution, old Auchindrane persisted in his innocence, and his son found security to stand his trial. Both appeared with the same confidence at the day appointed, and braved the public justice, hoping to be put to a formal trial, in which Auchindrane reckoned upon an acquittal for want of the evidence which he had removed. The trial was, however, postponed, and Mure the elder was dismissed, under high security to return when called for.

But King James, being convinced of the guilt of the accused, ordered young Auchindrane, instead of being sent to trial, to be examined under the force of torture, in order to compel him to tell whatever he knew of the things charged against him. He was accordingly severely tortured; but the result only served to show that such examinations are as useless as they are cruel. A man of weak resolution, or of a nervous habit, would probably have assented to any confession, however false, rather than have endured the extremity of fear and pain to which Mure was subjected. But young Auchindrane, a strong and determined ruffian, endured the torture with the utmost firmness, and by the constant audacity with which, in spite of the intolerable pain, he continued to assert his innocence, he spread so favorable an opinion of his case that the detaining him in prison, instead of bringing him to open trial, was censured as severe and oppressive. James, however, remained firmly persuaded of his guilt, and by an exertion of authority quite inconsistent with our present laws, commanded young Auchindrane to be still detained in close custody till further light could be thrown on these dark proceedings. He was detained accordingly by the king's express personal command, and against the opinion even of his privy councillors. This exertion of authority was much murmured against.

In the meanwhile, old Auchindrane, being, as we have seen, at liberty on pledges, skulked about in the west, feeling how little security he had gained by Dalrymple's murder, and that he had placed himself by that crime in the power of Bannatyne, whose evidence concerning the death of Dalrymple could not be less fatal than what Dalrymple might have told concerning Auchindrane's accession to the conspiracy against Sir Thomas Kennedy of Cullayne. But though the event had shown the error of his wicked policy, Auchindrane could think of no better mode in this case than that which had failed in relation to Dalrymple. When any man's life became inconsistent with his own safety, no idea seems to have occurred to this inveterate ruffian, save to murder the person by whom he might himself be in any way endangered. He therefore attempted the life of James Bannatyne by more agents than one. Nay, he had nearly ripened a plan by which one Pennyeuke was to be employed to slay Bannatyne, while, after the deed was done, it was devised that Mure of Auchnull, a connection of Bannatyne, should be instigated to slay Pennyeuke; and thus close up this train of murders by one which, flowing in the ordinary course of deadly feud, should have nothing in it so particular as to attract much attention.

But the justice of Heaven would bear this complicated train of iniquity no longer. Bannatyne, knowing with what sort of men he had to deal, kept on his guard, and, by his caution, disconcerted more than one attempt to take his life, while another miscarried by the remorse of Pennyeuke, the agent whom Mure employed. At length Bannatyne, tiring of this state of insecurity, and in despair of escaping such repeated plots, and also feeling remorse for the crime to which he had been necessary, resolved rather to submit himself to the severity of the law than remain the object of the principal criminal's practices. He surrendered himself to the Earl of Abercorn, and was transported to Edinburgh, where he confessed before the king and council all the particulars of the murder of Dalrymple, and the attempt to hide his body by committing it to the sea.

When Bannatyne was confronted with the two Mures before the Privy Council, they denied with vehemence every part of the evidence he had given, and affirmed that the witness had been bribed to destroy them by a false tale. Bannatyne's behavior seemed sincere and simple, that of Auchindrane more resolute and crafty. The wretched accomplice fell upon his knees, invoking God to witness that all the land in Scotland could not have bribed him to bring a false accusation against a master whom he had served, loved, and followed in so many dangers, and calling upon Auchindrane to honor God by confessing the crime he had committed. Mure the elder, on the other hand, boldly replied that he hoped God would not so far forsake him as to permit him to confess a crime of which he was innocent, and exhorted Bannatyne in his turn to confess the practices by which he had been induced to devise such falsehoods against him.

The two Mures, father and son, were therefore put upon their solemn trial, along with Bannatyne, in 1611, and, after a great deal of evidence had been brought in support of Bannatyne's confession, all three were found guilty.1 The elder Auchindrane was convicted of counselling and directing the murder of Sir Thomas Kennedy of Cullayne, and also of the actual murder of the lad Dalrymple. Bannatyne and the younger Mure were found guilty of the latter crime, and all three were sentenced to be beheaded. Bannatyne, however, the accomplice, received the king's pardon, in consequence of his voluntary surrender and confession. The two Mures were both executed.

The younger was affected by the remonstrances of the clergy who attended him, and he confessed the guilt of which he was accused. The father, also, was at length brought to avow the fact, but in other respects died as impenitent as he had lived; and so ended this dark and extraordinary tragedy.

The lord advocate of the day, Sir Thomas Hamilton, afterwards successively Earl of Melrose and of Haddington, seems to have busied himself much in drawing up a statement of this foul transaction, for the purpose of vindicating to the people of Scotland the severe course of justice observed by King James

1 "After pronouncing and declaring of the quhilk determination and delinquency of the saidis personas of Assyse, 'The Justice, in respect thereof, be the mouth of Alexander Kenndye, demuster of Court, decernit and adjudget the saidis John Mure of Auchindrone elder, James Mure of Auchindrone younger, his eldest sone and apprehand air, and James Bannatyne, called of Chapel-Donane, and ilk ane of thame, to be tane to the mercat croce of the burcht of Edinburgh, and their, upon ane scaffold, their heldis to be strukin fra their bodys: And all thair landis, heritages, takis, steiligis, rowmes, possessiones, teynidis, coirnis, cattell, insicht plenissing, guidis, gcr, tytilis, proficitis, commodititis, and richtis quhatsumeuir, directile or indirectile pertaining to thame, or ony of thame, at the committit of the saidis tressonabil Marthbouris, or sensyce; or to the quilkis thay, or ony of thame, had richt, claim, or actionn, to be forfeit, escheit, and inbrocht to our soverane lordis vae; as culpable and convict of the saidis tressonabil crymes.'

"Quhilk was pronounced for Dome."

PITCAIRN'S Criminal Trials, vol. iii. p. 156.
VI. He assumes the task in a high tone of prerogative law, and, on the whole, seems at a loss whether to attribute to Providence, or to his most sacred Majesty, the greatest share in bringing to light these mysterious villainies, but rather inclines to the latter opinion. There is, I believe, no printed copy of the intended tract, which seems never to have been published; but the curious will be enabled to judge of it, as it appears in the next fasciculus of Mr. Robert Pitcairn's very interesting publications from the Scottish Criminal Record. ¹

The family of Auchindrane did not become extinct on the death of the two homicides. The last descendant existed in the eighteenth century, a poor and distressed man. The following anecdote shows that he had a strong feeling of his situation:

There was in front of the old castle a huge ash-tree, called the Dule-tree (mournning-tree) of Auchindrane, probably because it was the place where the baron executed the criminals who fell under his jurisdiction. It is described as having been the finest tree of the neighborhood. This last representative of the family of Auchindrane had the misfortune to be arrested for payment of a small debt; and, unable to discharge it, was prepared to accompany the messenger (bailiff) to the jail of Ayr. The servant of the law had compassion for his prisoner, and offered to accept of this remarkable tree as of value adequate to the discharge of the debt. "What!" said the debtor, "sell the Dule-tree of Auchindrane! I will sooner die in the worst dungeon of your prison." In this luckless character the line of Auchindrane ended. The family, blackened with the crimes of its predecessors, became extinct, and the estate passed into other hands.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

JOHN MURE OF AUCHINDRANE, an Ayrshire Baron.

He has been a follower of the Regent, Earl of Morton, during the Civil Wars, and hides an oppressive, ferocious, and unscrupulous disposition under some pretences to strictness of life and doctrine, which, however, never influence his conduct. He is in danger from the law, owing to his having been formerly active in the assassination of the Earl of Cassilis.

PHILIP MURE, his Son, a wild, debauched Profligate, professing and practicing a contempt for his Father's hypocrisy, while he is as fierce and licentious as Auchindrane himself.

GIFFORD, their Relation, a Courtier.

QUENTIN BLANE, a Youth, educated for a Clergyman, but sent by Auchindrane to serve in a Band of Auxiliaries in the Wars of the Netherlands, and lately employed as Clerk or Comptroller to the Regiment—dismanded, however, and on his return to his native Country. He is of a mild, gentle, and rather feeble character, liable to be influenced by any person of stronger mind who will take the trouble to direct him. He is somewhat of a nervous temperament, varying from sadness to gaiety, according to the impulse of the moment; an amiable hypochondriac.

HILDEBRAND, a stout old Englishman, who, by feats of courage, has raised himself to the rank of Sergeant-Major (then of greater consequence than at present). He, too, has been disbanded, but cannot bring himself to believe that he has lost his command over his Regiment.

ABRAHAM, Privates dismissed from the same Regiment in which Quentin and Hildebrand had served. These are mutinous, and are much disposed to remember former quarrels with their late Officers.

NIEL MACLELLAN, Keeper of Auchindrane Forest and Game.

EARL OF DUNBAR, commanding an army as Lieutenant of James I., for Execution of Justice on Offenders.

Guards, Attendants, &c. &c.

MARION, Wife of Niel Maclellan.

ISABEL, their Daughter, a Girl of six years old.

Other Children and Peasant Women.

¹ See an article in the Quarterly Review, February, 1833, on Mr. Pitcairn's valuable collection, where Sir Walter Scott particularly dwells on the original documents connected with the story of Auchindrane; and where Mr. Pitcairn's important services to the history of his profession and of Scotland are justly characterized. 1833.

"Sir Walter's review of the early parts of Mr. Pitcairn's Ancient Criminal Trials had, of course, much gratified the editor, who sent him, on his arrival in Edinburgh, the proofsheets of the number then in hand, and directed his attention particularly to its details on the extraordinary case of Mure of Auchindrane, A. D. 1611. Scott was so much interested Auchindrane:

or,

THE AYRSHIRE TRAGEDY.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

A rocky Bay on the Coast of Carrick, in Ayrshire, not far from the Point of Turnbery. The Sea comes in upon a bold rocky Shore. The remains of a small half-ruined Tower are seen on the right hand, over-hanging the Sea. There is a Vessel at a distance in the offing. A Boat at the bottom of the Stage lands eight or ten Persons, dressed like disbanded and in one or two cases like disabled Soldiers. They come struggling forward with their knapsacks and bundles.

HILDEBRAND, the Sergeant, belonging to the Party, a stout elderly man, stands by the boat, as if superintending the disembarkation. QUENTIN remains apart.

ABRAHAM. Farewell the flats of Holland, and right welcome
The cliffs of Scotland! Fare thee well, black beer
And Schiedam gin! and welcome twopenny,
Oatcakes, and usquebaugh!

WILLIAMS (who wants an arm). Farewell the gallant field, and "Forward, pikemen!"
For the bridge-end, the suburb, and the lane;
And, "Bless your honor, noble gentleman,
Remember a poor soldier!"

ABR. My tongue shall never need to smooth itself
To such poor sounds, while it can boldly say,
"Stand and deliver!"

WIL. Hush, the sergeant hears you!

ABR. And let him hear; he makes a bustling noise,
And dreams of his authority, forgetting
We are disbanded men, o'er whom his halberd
Has not such influence as the bandle's baton.
We are no soldiers now, but every one
The lord of his own person.

WIL. A wretched lordship—and our freedom such As that of the old cart-horse, when the owner
Turns him upon the common. I for one
Will still continue to respect the sergeant,
And the comptroller, too,—while the cash lasts.

ABR. I scorn them both. I am too stout a Scotsman
To bear a Southerner's rule an instant longer
Than discipline obliges; and for Quentin,
Quentin the quillman, Quentin the comptroller,
We have no regiment now; or, if we had,
Quentin's no longer clerk to it.

WIL. For shame! for shame! What, shall old comrades jar thus,
And on the verge of parting, and for ever?—
Nay, keep thy temper, Abraham, though a bad one.—
Good Master Quentin, let thy song last night
Give us once more our welcome to old Scotland.

ABR. Ay, they sing light whose task is telling
When dollars clink for chorus.
QUE. I've done with counting silver, honest Abraham,
As thou, I fear, with pouching thy small share on't.
But lend your voices, lads, and I will sing
As blithely as if a town were won,—
As if upon a field of battle gain'd
Our banners waved victorious.

[He sings, and the rest bear chorus.

SONG.

Hither we come,
Once slaves to the drum,
But no longer we list to its rattle;
Adieu to the wars,
With their slashes and scars,
The march, and the storm, and the battle.

There are some of us maim'd,
And some that are lamed,
And some of old aches are complaining;
But we'll take up the tools
Which we flung by like fools,
'Gainst Don Spaniard to go a-campaigning.

Dick Hathorn doth vow
To return to the plough,
Jack Steele to his anvil and hammer;
The weaver shall find room
At the wight-wapping loom,
And your clerk shall teach writing and grammar.

ABR. And this is all that thou canst do, gay Quentin?

To swagger o'er a herd of parish brats,
Cut cheese or dibble onions with thy poriard,
And turn the sheath into a ferula?

QUE. I am the prodigal in holy writ;
I cannot work,—to beg I am ashamed.
Besides, good mates, I care not who may know it,
I'm c'en as fairly tired of this same fighting
As the poor cur that's worried in the shambles
By all the mastiff dogs of all the butchers;
Wherefore, farewell sword, poriard, petronel,
And welcome poverty and peaceful labor.

ABR. Clerk Quentin, if of fighting thou art tired,
By my good word, thou'rt quickly satisfied,
For thou'st seen but little on't.

WIL. Thou dost belie him—I have seen him fight
Bravely enough for one in his condition.

ABR. What, he? that counter-casting, smock-faced boy?

What was he but the colonel's scribbling drudge,
With men of straw to stuff the regiment roll;
With cipherings unjust to cheat his comrades,

1 MS.: "I've done with counting dollars," &c.
And cloak false musters for our noble captain?
He bid farewell to sword and petroleon!
He should have said, farewell my pen and standish.
These, with the rosin used to hide erasures,
Were the best friends he left in camp behind him.
QUE. The sword you scoff at is not far, but scorns
The threats of an unmannard mutineer.
SER. (interposes). We'll have no brawling—shall it c'er be said
That being comrades six long years together,
While gulping down the frowzy fogs of Holland,
We tilted at each other's threats so soon
As the first draught of native air refresh'd them?
No! by Saint Dunstan, I forbid the combat.
You all, methinks, do know this trusty halberd;
For I opine that every back amongst you
Hath felt the weight of the tough ashen staff,
Endlong or overthwart. Who is it wishes
A remembrance now?  [Raises his halberd.

ABB. Comrades, have you ears
To hear the old man bully? eyes to see
His staff rear'd o'er your heads, as o'er the bounds
The huntsman cracks his whip?

WIL. Well said—stout Abraham has the right on't.
I tell thee, sergeant, we do reverence thee,
And pardon the rash humors thou hast caught,
Like wiser men, from thy authority.
'Tis ended, howsoe'er, and we'll not suffer
A word of sergeantry, or halberd-staff,
Nor the most petty threat of discipline.
If thou wilt lay aside thy pride of office,
And drop thy wont of swaggering and commanding,
Thou art our comrade still for good or evil.
Else take thy course apart, or with the clerk there—
A sergeant thou, and he being all thy regiment.
SER. Is't come to this, false knaves? And think you not
That if you bear a name o'er other soldiers,
It was because you follow'd to the charge
One that had zeal and skill enough to lead you
Where fame was won by danger?

WIL. We grant thy skill in leading, noble sergeant;
Witness some empty boots and sleeves amongst us,
Which else had still been tenanted with limbs
In the full quantity; and for the arguments
With which you used to back our resolution,
Our shoulders do record them. At a word,
Will you conform, or must we part our company?
SER. Conform to you? Base dogs! I would not lead you
A bolt-flight farther to be made a general.
Mean mutineers! when you swill'd off the drags
Of my poor sea-stores, it was "Noble sergeant—
Heaven bless old Hildebrand—we'll follow him,
At least, until we safely see him lodged
Within the merry bounds of his own England!"

WIL. Ay, truly, sir; but, mark, the ale was mighty,
And the Geneva potent. Such stout liquor
Makes violent protestations. Skint it round,
If you have any left, to the same tune,
And we may find a chorus for it still.
ABB. We lose our time.—Tell us at once, old man,
If thou wilt march with us or stay with Quentin?
SER. Out, mutineers! Dishonor dog your heels!
ABB. Willful will have his way. Adieu, stout Hildebrand!

[The soldiers go off laughing, and taking leave, with mockery, of the SERGEANT and QUENTIN, who remain on the stage.

SER. (after a pause). Fly you not with the rest?—
fail you to follow
You goodly fellowship and fair example?
Come, take your wild-goose flight. I know you Scots,
Like your own sea-fowl, seek your course together.
QUE. Faith, a poor heron I, who wing my flight
In loneliness, or with a single partner;
And right it is that I should seek for solitude,
Bringing but evil luck on them I herd with.
SER. Thou'rt thankless. Had we landed on the coast,
Where our course bore us, thou wert far from home;
But the fierce wind that drove us round the island,
Barring each port and inlet that we aimed at,
Hath wafted thee to harbor; for I judge
This is thy native land we disembark on.
QUE. True, worthy friend. Each rock, each stream
I look on,
Each bosky wood, and every frowning tower,
Awakens some young dream of infancy.
Yet such is my hard hap, I might more safely
Have look'd on Indian cliffs, or Afric's desert,
Than on my native shores. I'm like a babe,
Doon'd to draw poison from my nurse's bosom.
SER. Thou dream'st, young man. Unreal terrors haunt,
As I have noted, giddy brains like thee—
Flighty, poetical, and imaginative—
To whom a minstrel whom gives idle rapture,
And, when it fades, fantastic misery.
QUE. But mine is not fantastic. I can tell thee,
Since I have known thee still my faithful friend,
In part at least the dangerous plight I stand in.
SER. And I will hear thee willingly, the rather
That I would let these vagabonds march on,
Nor join their troop again. Besides, good sooth,
I'm wearied with the toil of yesterday,
And revel of last night.—And I may aid thee;
Yes, I may aid thee, comrade, and perchance
Thou may'st advantage me.
QUE. May it prove well for both!—But note, my friend,
I can but intimate my mystic story.
Some of it lies so secret, even the winds
That whistle round us must know the whole—
An oath!—an oath!—
SER. That must be kept, of course;
I ask but that which thou may'st freely tell.
QUE. I was an orphan boy, and first saw light
Not far from where we stand—my lineage low,
But honest in its poverty. A lord,
The master of the soil for many a mile,
Dreaded and powerful, took a kindly charge
For my advance in letters, and the qualities
Of the poor orphan lad drew some applause.
The knight was proud of me, and, in his halls,
I had such kind of welcome as the great
Give to the humble, whom they love to point to
As objects not unworthy their protection,
Whose progress is some honor to their patron—
A cure was spoken of, which I might serve,
My manners, doctrine, and acquirements fitting.

SIR. Hitherto thy luck
Was of the best, good friend. Few lords had cared
If thou couldst read thy grammar or thy psalter.
Thou hast been valued couldst thou scorn a harness,
And dress a steed distinctly.

QUE. My old master
Held different doctrine, at least it seemed so;
But he was mix'd in many a deadly feud—
And here my tale grows mystic. I became,
Unwitting and unwilling, the depositary
Of a dread secret, and the knowledge on't
Has wack'd my peace for ever. It became
My patron's will that I, as one who knew
More than I should, must leave the realm of Scotland,
And live or die within a distant land.¹

SIR. Ah! thou hast done a fault in some wild raid,
As you wild Scotsmen call them.

QUE. Comrade, nay;
Mine was a peaceful part, and happ'd by chance.
I must not tell you more. Enough, my presence
Brought danger to my benefactor's house.
Tower after tower conceal'd me, willing still
To hide my ill-omen'd face with owls and ravens,
And let my patron's safety be the purchase
Of my severe and desolate captivity.
So thought I, when dark Arran, with its walls
Of native rock, enclos'd me. There I lurk'd,
A peaceful stranger amid armed clans,
Without a friend to love or to defend me,
Where all beside were link'd by close alliances.
At length I made my option to take service
In that same legion of auxiliaries
In which we lately served the Belgian.
Our leader, stout Montgomery, hath been kind
Through full six years of warfare, and assign'd me
More peaceful tasks than the rough front of war,
For which my education little suited me.

SIR. Ay, therein was Montgomery kind indeed;
Nay, kinder than you think, my simple Quentin.
The letters which you brought to the Montgomery
Pointed to thrust thee on some desperate service,
Which should most likely end thee.
QUE. Bore I such letters?—Surely, comrade, no.
Full deeper was the writer bound to aid me.
Percance he only meant to prove my mettle;
And it was but a trick of my bad fortune
That gave his letters ill interpretation.

SIR. Ay, but thy better angel wrought for good,
Whatever ill thy evil fate design'd thee.
Montgomery pitied thee, and changed thy service
In the rough field for labor in the tent,
More fit for thy green years and peaceful habits.
QUE. Even there his well-meaning kindness injur'd me.

My comrades hated, undervalued me,
And whatso'er of service I could do them,
They guerdon'd with ingratitude and envy—
Such my strange doom, that if I serve a man
At deepest risk, he is my foe for ever!

SIR. Hast thou worse fate than others if it were so?
Worse even than me, thy friend, thy officer,
Whom you ungrateful slaves have pitch'd ashore,
As wild waves heap the seaweed on the beach,
And left him here, as if he had the pest
Or leprosy, and death were in his company?

QUE. They think at least you have the worst of plagues,
The worst of leprosies,—they think you poor.

SIR. They think like lying villains then, I'm rich,
And they too might have felt it. I've a thought—
But stay—what plans your wisdom for yourself?

QUE. My thoughts are wellnigh desperate. But I purpose
Return to my stern patron—there to tell him
That wars, and winds, and waves, have cross'd his pleasure,
And cast me on the shore from whence he banish'd me.

Then let him do his will, and destine for me
A dungeon or a grave.

SIR. Now, by the rood, thou art a simple fool!
I can do better for thee. Mark me, Quentin:
I took my license from the noble regiment,
Partly that I was worn with age and warfare,
Partly that an estate of yeomanry,
Of no great purchase, but enough to live on,
Has call'd me owner since a kinsman's death.
It lies in merry Yorkshire, where the wealth
Of fold and furrrow, proper to Old England,
Stretch'd by streams which walk no sluggish pace,
But dance as light as yours. Now, good friend Quen-

¹ MS.: "Quentin. My short tale
Grows mystic now. Among the deadly foes
Which curse our country, something once it chanced
That I unwilling and unwilling witness'd;
And it became my benefactor's will
That I should breathe the air of other climes."
² The MS. here adds:

"And then wild Arran, with its darksome walls
Of naked rock, received me; till at last
I yielded to take service in the legion
Which lately has discharged us. Stout Montgomery,
Our colonel, hath been kind through five years' warfare."
This copyhold can keep two quiet inmates,
And I am childless: wilt thou be my son?

Que. Nay, you can only jest, my worthy friend!
What claim have I to be a burden to you?

Ser. The claim of him that wants, and is in danger,
On him that has, and can afford protection;
Thou wouldst not fear a foeman in my cottage,
Where a stout mastiff slumber'd on the hearth,
And this good halberd hung above the chimney.
But come, I have it—thou shalt earn thy bread
Duly, and honorably, and usefully.
Our village schoolmaster hath left the parish,
Forsook the ancient schoolhouse with its yew-trees,
That lurk'd beside a church two centuries older,—
So long devotion took the lead of knowledge;
And since his little flock are shepherdless,
'Tis thou shalt be promoted in his room;
And rather than thou wastest scholars, man,
Myself will enter pupil. Better late,
Our proverb says, than never to do well.
And look you, on the holydays I'd tell
To all the wondering boors and gaping children
Strange tales of what the regiment did in Flanders;
And thou shouldst say amen, and be my warrant
That I speak truth to them.

Que. Would I might take thy offer! But, alas!
Thou art the hermit who compell'd a pilgrim,
In name of Heaven and heavenly charity,
To share his roof and meal, but found too late
That he had drawn a curse on him and his,
By sheltering a wretch foredoom'd of Heaven!

Ser. Thou talk'st in riddles to me.

Que. If I do,
'Tis that I am a riddle to myself.
Thou know'st I am by nature born a friend
To glee and merriment; can make wild verses;
The jest or laugh has never stopp'd with me,
When once 'twas set a-rolling.

Ser. I have known thee
A blithe companion still, and wonder now
Thou shouldst become thus erst-fallen.

Que. Does the lark sing her descent when the falcon
Scales the blue vault with bolder wing than hers,
And meditates a stoop? The mirth thou'st noted
Was all deception, fraud—Hated enough
For other causes, I did veil my feelings
Beneath the mask of mirth,—laugh'd, sang, and carol'd,
To gain some interest in my comrades' bosoms,
Although mine own was bursting.

Ser. Thou'rt a hypocrite
Of a new order.

Que. But harmless as the innoxious snake,
Which bears the adder's form, lurks in his haunts,
Yet neither hath his fang-teeth nor his poison.
Look you, kind Hildebrand, I would seem merry,
Lest other men should, tiring of my sadness,
Expel me from them, as the hunted wether
Is driven from the flock.

Ser. Faith, thou hast borne it bravely out.
Had I been ask'd to name the merriest fellow
Of all our muster-roll, that man wert thou.

Que. Seest thou, my friend, you brook dance down the valley,
And sing blithe carols over broken rock
And tiny waterfall, kissing each shrub
And each gay flower it nurses in its passage?
Where, think'st thou, is its source, the bonny brook?
It flows from forth a cavern, black and gloomy,
Sullen and sunless, like this heart of mine,
Which others see in a false glare of gayety,
Which I have laid before you in its sadness.

Ser. If such wild fancies dog thee, wherefore leave
The trade where thou wert safe 'midst others' dangers,
And venture to thy native land, where fate
Lies on the watch for thee? Had old Montgomery
Been with the regiment, thou hadst had no congé.

Que. No, 'tis most likely—But I had a hope,
A poor vain hope, that I might live obscurely,
In some far corner of my native Scotland,
Which, of all others, splinter'd into districts,
Differing in manners, families, even language,
Seem'd a safe refuge for the humble wretch
Whose highest hope was to remain unheard of.
But fate has baffled me; the winds and waves,
With force resistless, have promis'd me bither—
Have driven me to the elime most dang'rous to me;
And I obey the call, like the hurt deer,
Which seeks instinctively his native lair,
Though his heart tells him it is but to die there.

Ser. 'Tis false, by heaven, young man! This same despair,
Though showing resignation in its banner,
Is but a kind of covert cowardice.
Wise men have said that though our stars incline,
They cannot force us—Wisdom is the pilot,
And if he cannot cross, he may evade them.
You lend an ear to idle anguries,
The fruits of our last revels—still most sad
Under the gloom that follows boisterous mirth,
As earth looks blackest after brilliant sunshine.

Que. No, by my honest word! I join'd the revel,
And aid'd it with laugh, and song, and shout,
But my heart revel'd not; and when the mirth
Was at the loudest, on yon galliot's prow
I stood unmark'd, and gazed upon the land,
My native land: each cape and cliff I knew.
"Behold me now," I said, "your destined victim!"
So greets the sentenced criminal the headman,
Who slow approaches with his lifted axe.
"Hither I come," I said, "ye kindred hills,
Whose darksome outline in a distant land
Haunted my slumber; here I stand, thou ocean,
Whose hoarse voice, murmuring in my dreams,
required me;
See me now here, ye winds, whose plaintive wail,
On yonder distant shores, appear'd to call me—
Summon'd, behold me." And the winds and waves,
And the deep echoes of the distant mountain,
Made answer—"Come, and die!"

SER. Fantastic all! Poor boy, thou art distracted
With the vain terrors of some feudal tyrant,
Whose frown hath been from infancy thy bugbear.
Why seek his presence?

QUE. Wherefore does the moth
Fly to the searching taper? Why the bird,
Dazzled by lights at midnight, seek the net?
Why does the prey, which feels the fascination
Of the snake's glaring eye, drop in his jaws?

SER. Such wild examples but refine themselves.
Let bird, let moth, let the coil'd adder's prey,
Resist the fascination and be safe.
Thou goest not near this Baron; if thou goest,
I will go with thee. Known in many a field,
Which he in a whole life of petty feud
Has never dream'd of, I will teach the knight
To rule him in this matter—be thy warrant
That far from him, and from his petty lordship,
You shall henceforth tread English land, and never Thy presence shall alarm his conscience more.

QUE. 'Twere desperate risk for both. I will far rather Hastily guide thee through this dangerous province,
And seek thy school, thy yew-trees, and thy churchyard:
—
The last, perchance, will be the first I find.

SER. I would rather face him,
Like a bold Englishman that knows his right,
And will stand by his friend. And yet 'tis folly—
Fancies like these are not to be resisted;
'Tis better to escape them. Many a presage,
Too rashly braved, becomes its own accomplishment.
Then let us go—but whither? My old head
As little knows where it shall lie to-night
As young mutineers that left their officer,
As reckless of his quarters as these billows,
That leave the witch'd seaweed on the beach,
And care not where they pile it.

QUE. Think not for that, good friend. We are in Scotland,
And if it is not varied from its wont,
Each cot that sends a curl of smoke to heaven
Will yield a stranger quarters for the night,
Simply because he needs them.

SER. But are there none within an easy walk
Give lodgings here for hire? for I have left
Some of the Don's plasters (though I kept
The secret from you gulls), and I had rather Pay the fair reckoning I can well afford,
And my host takes with pleasure, than I'd cumber
Some poor man's roof with me and all my wants,
And tax his charity beyond discretion.

QUE. Some six miles hence there is a town and hostelry—
But you are wayworn, and it is most likely
Our comrades must have fill'd it.

SER. Out upon them!
Were there a friendly mastiff who would lend me

Half of his supper, half of his poor kennel,
I would help Honesty to pick his bones,
And share his straw, far rather than I'd sup
On jolly fare with these base varlets!

QUE. We'll manage better,—for our Scottish dogs,
Though stout and trusty, are but ill instructed!
In hospitable rights. Here is a maiden,
A little maid, will tell us of the country;
And sorely it is changed since I have left it,
If we should fail to find a harborage.

Enter ISABEL MACLELLAN, a girl of about six years old, bearing a milk-pail on her head; she stops on seeing the SERGEANT and QUENTIN.

QUE. There's something in her look that doth remind me—

But 'tis not wonder I find recollections
In all that here I look on.—Pretty maid—

SER. You're slow, and hesitate; I will be spokesman.—

Good even, my pretty maiden. Canst thou tell us,
Is there a Christian house would render strangers,
For love or guerdon, a night's meal and lodging?

ISA. Full surely, sir. We dwell in yon old house
Upon the cliff—they call it Chapeldonan:

[Points to the building.

Our house is large enough, and if our supper
Chance to be scant, you shall have half of mine,
For, as I think, sir, you have been a soldier.
Up yonder lies our house; I'll trip before,
And tell my mother she has guests a-coming.
The path is something steep, but you shall see
I'll be there first. I must chain up the dogs, too:
Namrod and Bloodylass are cross to strangers,
But gentle when you know them.

[Exit, and is seen partially ascending to the castle.

SER. You have spoke
Your country folk aright, both for the dogs
And for the people. We had luck to light
On one too young for cunning and for selfishness.—
He's in a reverie—a deep one, sure,
Since the gibe on his country wakes him not.—
Bestir thee, Quentin!

QUE. 'Twas a wondrous likeness.

SER. Likeness! of whom? I'll warrant thee, of one Whom thou hast loved and lost. Such fantasies
Live long in brains like thine, which fashion visions
Of woe and death when they are cross'd in love,
As most men are or have been.

QUE. Thy guess hath touch'd me, though it is but slightly,
'Mongst other woes. I knew, in former days,
A maid that view'd me with some glance of favor
But my fate carried me to other shores,
And she has since been wedded. I did think on't
But as a bubble burst, a rainbow vanish'd;

1 MS.: "Gallant and grim, may be but ill instructed."
It adds no deeper shade to the dark gloom
Which chills the springs of hope and life within me.
Our guide hath got a trick of voice and feature
Like to the maid I spoke of—that is all.

SER. She bounds before us like the gamesome doe,
Or rather as the rock-bred eagle soars
Up to her nest, as if she rose by will Without an effort. Now a Netherlander,
One of our Frogland friends, viewing the scene,
Would take his oath that tower, and rock, and maiden,
Were forms too light and lofty to be real,
And only some delusion of the fancy.
Such as men dream at sunset. I myself
Have kept the level ground so many years,
I have wellnigh forgot the art to climb,
Unless assisted by thy younger arm.
[They go off as if to ascend to the tower, the Sergeant leaning upon Quentin.]

SCENE II.

Scene changes to the Front of the old Tower. Isabel comes forward with her Mother.—Marion speaking as they advance.

MAR. I blame thee not, my child, for bidding wanderers
Come share our food and shelter, if thy father
Were here to welcome them; but, Isabel,
He waits upon his lord at Auchindrane,
And comes not home to-night.

ISA. What then, my mother? The travellers do not ask to see my father; Food, shelter, rest, is all the poor men want, And we can give them these without my father.

MAR. Thou canst not understand, nor I explain,
Why a lone female asks not visitants
What time her husband's absent.—(Apart.) My poor child,
And if thou'rt wedded to a jealous husband,
Thou'll know too soon the cause.

ISA. (partly over-hearing what her mother says.) Ay, but I know already—Jealousy Is, when my father chides, and you sit weeping.

MAR. Out, little spy! thy father never chides; Or, if he does, 'tis when his wife deserves it.—But to our strangers; they are old men, Isabel, That seek this shelter; are they not?

ISA. One is old—Old as this tower of ours, and worn like that, Bearing deep marks of battles long since fought.

MAR. Some remnant of the wars; he's welcome, surely,
Bringing no quality along with him
Which can alarm suspicion.—Well, the other?

ISA. A young man, gentle-voiced and gentle-eyed, Who looks and speaks like one the world has frown'd on;
But smiles when you smile, seeming that he feels

Joy in your joy, though he himself is sad.
Brown hair, and downcast looks.

MAR. (alarmed.) 'Tis but an idle thought—it cannot be!
[Listen.
I hear his accents—It is all too true—
My terrors were prophetic!
I'll compose myself,
And then accost him firmly. Thus it must be.
[She retires hastily into the tower.
[The voices of the Sergeant and Quentin are heard ascending behind the scene.

QUE. One effort more—we stand upon the level.
I've seen thee work thee up glacies and cavalier
Steeper than this ascent, when cannon, culverin, Musket, and hackbut, shower'd their shot upon thee, And form'd, with ceaseless blaze, a fiery garland
Round the defences of the post you storm'd.
[They come on the stage, and at the same time Marion re-enters from the tower.

SER. Truly thou spakest. I am the tardier,
That I, in climbing hither, miss the fire,
Which woulst to tell me there was death in loitering.—
Here stands, methinks, our hostess.
[He goes forward to address Marion. Quentin, struck on seeing her, keeps back.

SER. Kind dame, you little lass hath brought you strangers,
Willing to be a trouble, not a charge to you.
We are disbanded soldiers, but have means
Amply enough to pay our journey homeward.

MAR. We keep no house of general entertainment,
But know our duty; sir, to locks like yours,
Whiten'd and thinn'd by many a long campaign,
I'll chances that my husband should be absent—
(Apart.)—Courage alone can make me struggle through it—

For in your comrade, though he hath forgot me,
I spy a friend whom I have known in school-days,
And whom I think MacLellan well remembers.
[She goes up to Quentin.

You see a woman's memory
Is faithfuller than yours; for Quentin Blane
Hath not a greeting left for Marion Harkness.

QUE. (with effort). I seek, indeed, my native land, good Marion,
But seek it like a stranger.—All is changed,
And thou thyself—

MAR. You left a giddy maiden,
And find, on your return, a wife and mother.
Thine old acquaintance, Quentin, is my mate—
Stout Niel MacLellan, ranger to our lord,
The Knight of Auchindrane. He's absent now,
But will rejoice to see his former comrade,
If, as I trust, you tarry his return.
(Apart.) Heaven grant he understand my words by contraries!
He must remember Niel and he were rivals;
He must remember Niel and he were foes;
He must remember Niel is warm of temper,
And think, instead of welcome, I would blithely
Bid him, God speed you. But he is as simple
And void of guile as ever.

QUE. Marion, I gladly rest within your cottage,
And gladly wait return of Niel MacLellan,
To clasp his hand, and wish him happiness.
Some rising feelings might perhaps prevent this—but 'tis a peevish part to grudge our friends
Their share of fortune because we have miss'd it;
I can wish others joy and happiness,
Though I must ne'er partake them.
MAR. But if it grieve you—
QUE. No! do not fear. The brightest gleams of hope
That shine on me are such as are reflected
From those which shine on others.

[The Sergeant and Quentin enter the tower with the little girl.

MAR. (comes forward, and speaks in agitation). Even so! the simple youth has miss'd my meaning.
I shame to make it plainer, or to say,
In one brief word, Pass on—Heaven guide the bark,
For we are on the breakers! [Exit into the tower.

ACT II.—SCENE I.

A withdrawing Apartment in the castle of Auchindrane.
Servants place a Table, with a Flask of Wine and Drinking-Cups.

Enter Mure of Auchindrane, with Albert Gifford, his Relation and Visitor. They place themselves by the Table after some complimentary ceremony. At some distance is heard the noise of revelling.

AUCH. We're better placed for confidential talk
Than in the hall fill'd with disbanded soldiers,
And fools and fiddlers gather'd on the highway,—
The worthy guests whom Philip crowds my hall with,
And with them spends his evening.

GIF. But think you not, my friend, that your son
Philip
Should be participant of these our counsels,
Being so deeply mingled in the danger—
Your house's only heir—your only son?

AUCH. Kind cousin Gifford, if thou lack'st good counsel
At race, at cockfight, or at gambling table,
Or any freak by which men cheat themselves
As well of life as of the means to live,
Call for assistance upon Philip Mure;
But in all serious parlors spare invoking him.

GIF. You speak too lightly of my cousin Philip;
All name him brave in arms.

AUCH. A second Bevis;
But I, my youth bred up in graver fashions,
Mourn o'er the mode of life in which he spends,
Or rather dissipates, his time and substance.
No vagabond escapes his search—The soldier
Sprun'd from the service, henceforth to be ruffian
Upon his own account, is Philip's comrade;
The fiddler, whose crack'd crowd has still three strings on't;
The balladeer, whose voice has still two notes left;
Whate'er is roguish and whate'er is vile
Are welcome to the board of Auchindrane,
And Philip will return them shout for shout,
And pledge for jovial pledge, and song for song,
Until the shamefaced sun peep at our windows,
And ask, "What have we here?"

GIF. You take such revel deeply—we are Scotsmen,
Far known for rustic hospitality,
That mind not birth or titles in our guests;
The harper has his seat beside our hearth,
The wanderer must find comfort at our board,
His name unask'd, his pedigree unknown;
So did our ancestors, and so must we.

AUCH. All this is freely granted, worthy kinsman;
And prithee do not think me churl enough
To count how many sit beneath my salt.
I've wealth enough to fill my father's hall
Each day at noon, and feed the guests who crowd it:
I am near mate with those whom men call Lord,
Though a rude western knight. But mark me, cousin,
Although I feed wayfaring vagabonds,
I make them not my comrades. Such as I,
Who have advanced the fortunes of my line,
And swell'd a baron's turret to a palace,
Have oft the curse awaiting on our thrift,
To see, while yet we live, the things which must be
At our decease—the downfall of our family,
The loss of land and lordship, name and knighthood,
The wreck of the fair fabric we have built,
By a degenerate heir. Philip has that
Of inborn meanness in him, that he loves not
The company of better, nor of equals;
Never at case, unless he bears the bell,
And crow's the loudest in the company.
He's mesh'd, too, in the snares of every female
Who deigns to cast a passing glance on him—
Licentious, dishonorable, rash, and profligate.

GIF. Come, my good coz, think we too have been young,
And I will swear that in your father's lifetime
You have yourself been trapp'd by toys like these.

AUCH. A fool I may have been—but not a madman;
I never play'd the rake among my followers,
Pursuing this man's sister, that man's wife;
And therefore never saw I man of mine,
When summon'd to obey my hest, grow restive,
Talk of his honor, of his peace destroy'd,
And, while obeying, mutter threats of vengeance.
But now the humor of an idle youth,
Disgusting trusted followers, sworn dependents,
Plays foot-ball with his honor and my safety.
AUCHINDRANE; OR, THE AYRSHIRE TRAGEDY.

GIF. I'm sorry to find discord in your house, For I had hoped, while bringing you cold news, To find you arm'd in union 'gainst the danger.

AUCH. What can man speak that I would shrink to hear, And where the danger I would deign to shun? [He rises.

What should appall a man inured to perils, Like the bold climber on the crags of Ailsa? Winds whistle past him, billows rage below, The sea-fowl sweep around, with shriek and clang; One single slip, one unadvised pace;
One qualm of giddiness—and peace be with him! But he whose grasp is sure, whose step is firm, Whose brain is constant—he makes one proud rock The means to scale another, till he stand Triumphant on the peak.

GIF. And so I trust Thou wilt surmount the danger now approaching, Which scarcely can I frame my tongue to tell you, Though I rode here on purpose.

AUCH. Cousin, I think thy heart was never coward, And strange it seems thy tongue should take such semblance.

I've heard of many a loud-mouth'd, noisy braggart, Whose hand gave feeble sanction to his tongue; But thou art one whose heart can think bold things, Whose hand can act them—but who shrinks to speak them!

GIF. And if I speak them not, 'tis that I shame To tell thee of the calumnies that load thee. Things loudly spoken at the city Cross— Things closely whisper'd in our Sovereign's ear— Things which the plumed lord and flat-capp'd citizen Do circulate amid their different ranks— Things false, no doubt; but falsehoods while I deem them, Still honoring thee, I shun the odious topic. AUCH. Shun it not, cousin; 'tis a friend's best office To bring the news we hear unwillingly. The sentinel, who tells the foe's approach, And wakes the sleeping camp, does but his duty: Be thou as bold in telling me of danger As I shall be in facing danger told of.

GIF. I need not bid thee recollect the death-feud That raged so long betwixt thy house and Cassilis; I need not bid thee recollect the league, When royal James himself stood mediator Between thee and Earl Gilbert.

AUCH. Call you these news?—You might as well have told me That old King Coil is dead, and graved at Kylesfield. I'll help thee out—King James commanded us Henceforth to live in peace, made us clasp hands too. Oh, sir, when such a union hath been made, In heart and hand conjoining mortal foes, Under a monarch's royal mediation, The league is not forgotten. And with this What is there to be told? The King commanded—

"Be friends," No doubt we were so—Who dares doubt it?

GIF. You speak but half the tale.

AUCH. By good Saint Trimon, but I'll tell the whole!

There is no terror in the tale for me—
Go speak of ghosts to children!—This Earl Gilbert
(God sain him!) loved Heaven's peace as well as I did, And we were wondrous friends whene'er we met At church or market, or in burrows town.
'Midst this, our good Lord Gilbert, Earl of Cassilis, Takes purpose he would journey forth to Edinburgh. The King was doling gifts of abbey-lands, Good things that thrifty house was wont to fish for. Our mighty Earl forsakes his sea-wash'd castle, Passes our borders some four miles from hence; And, holding it unwholesome to be fasters Long after sunrise, lo! the Earl and train Dismount, to rest their nags and eat their breakfast. The morning rose, the small birds caroll'd sweetly— The corks were drawn, the pasty brooks incision— His lordship jests, his train are choked with laughter; When,—wondrous change of cheer, and most unlook'd for,
Strange epilogue to bottle and to baked meat!— Flash'd from the greenwood half a score of carabines; And the good Earl of Cassilis, in his breakfast, Had nooning, dinner, supper, all at once, Even in the morning that he closed his journey; And the grim sexton, for his chamberlain, Made him the bed which rests the head for ever.

GIF. Told with much spirit, cousin—some there are Would add, and in a tone resembling triumph. And would that with these long-establish'd facts My tale began and ended! I must tell you, That evil-deeming censures of the events, Both at the time and now, throw blame on thee; Time, place, and circumstance, they say, proclaim thee, Alkite, the author of that morning's ambush.

AUCH. Ay, 'tis an old belief in Carrick here, Where natives do not always die in bed, That if a Kennedy shall not attain Methuselah's last span, a Mure has slain him. Such is the general creed of all their clan. Thank Heaven, that they're bound to prove the charge They are so prompt in making. They have clamor'd Enough of this before, to show their malice. But what said these coward pick-thanks when I came Before the King, before the Justiciers, Rebutting all their calumnies, and daring them To show that I knew aught of Cassilis' journey— Which way he meant to travel—where to halt— Without which knowledge I possess'd no means To dress an ambush for him? Did I not Defy the assembled clan of Kennedys To show, by proof direct or inferential, Wherefore they slander'd me with this foul charge?

1 "There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats." SHAKESPEARE.
My gauntlet rung before them in the court,
And I did dare the best of them to lift it,
And prove such charge a true one—Did I not?

GIF. I saw your gauntlet lie before the Kennedys,
Who look’d on it as men do on an adder,
Longing to crush, and yet afraid to grasp it.
Not an eye sparkled—not a foot advanced—
No arm was stretch’d to lift the fatal symbol.

ACH. Then, wherefore do the hildings murmur now?
Wish they to see again how one bold Mure
Can battle and defy their assembled valor?

GIF. No; but they speak of evidence suppress’d.

ACH. Suppress’d!—what evidence?—by whom suppress’d?

What Will-o’-wisp—what idiot of a witness,
Is he to whom they trace an empty voice,
But cannot show his person?

GIF. They pretend,
With the King’s leave, to bring it to a trial;
Averring that a lad, named Quentin Blane,
Brought thee a letter from the murder’d Earl,
With friendly greetings, telling of his journey,
The hour which he set forth, the place he halted at,
Affording thee the means to form the ambush,
Of which your hatred made the application.

ACH. A prudent Earl, indeed, if such his practice,
When dealing with a recent enemy!
And what should he propose by such strange confidence
In one who sought it not?

GIF. His purposes were kindly, say the Kennedys—
Desiring you would meet him where he halted,
Offering to undertake whate’er commissions
You listest trust him with, for court or city;

And, thus apprised of Cassillis’ purposed journey,
And of his halting place, you placed the ambush,
Prepared the homicides—

ACH. They’re free to say their pleasure. They are men
Of the new court—and I am but a fragment
Of stout old Morton’s faction. It is reason
That such as I be rooted from the earth
That they may have full room to spread their branches.

No doubt, ’tis easy to find strolling vagrants
To prove whate’er they prompt. This Quentin Blane—
Did you not call him so?—why comes he now?
And whereabouts not before? This must be answer’d

—(abruptly)—

Where is he now?

GIF. Abroad, they say—kidnapp’d,
By you kidnapp’d, that he might die in Flanders.
But orders have been sent for his discharge,
And his transmission hither.

ACH. (assuming an air of composure). When they produce such witness, cousin Gifford,
We’ll be prepared to meet it. In the meanwhile,
The King doth ill to throw his royal sceptre
In the accuser’s scale, ere he can know
How justice shall incline it.

GIF. Our sage prince
Resents, it may be, less the death of Cassillis,
Than he is angry that the feud should burn,
After his royal voice had said, “Be quench’d:”
Thus urging prosecution less for slaughter
Than that, being done against the King’s command,
Treason is mix’d with homicide.

ACH. Ha! ha! most true, my cousin.
Why, well consider’d, ’tis a crime so great
To slay one’s enemy, the King forbidding it,
Like parricide, it should be held impossible.
’Tis just as if a wretch retain’d the evil,
When the King’s touch had bid the sores be healed;
And such a crime merits the stake at least.
What! can there be within a Scottish bosom
A feud so deadly that it kept its ground
When the King said, Be friends! It is not credible.
Were I King James, I never would believe it:
I’d rather think the story all a dream,
And that there was no friendship, feud, nor journey,
No halt, no ambush and no Earl of Cassillis,
Than dream anointed Majesty has wrong!

GIF. Speak within door, coz.

ACH. Oh, true—(aside)—I shall betray myself
Even to this half-bred fool. I must have room,
Room for an instant, or I suffocate.—
Cousin, I prithee call our Philip hither—
Forgive me; ’twere more meet I summon’d him Myself; but then the sight of yonder revel
Would chafe my blood, and I have need of coolness.

GIF. I understand thee—I will bring him straight.

[Exit.]

ACH. And if thou dost, he’s lost his ancient trick
To fathom, as he wont, his five-pint flagons.—
This space is mine—oh for the power to fill it,
Instead of senseless rage and empty flagons,
With the dark spell which witches learn from fiends,
That smites the object of their hate afar,
Nor leaves a token of its mystic action,
Stealing the soul from out the unscathed body,
As lightning melts the blade, nor harms the scabbard!

—’Tis vain to wish for it—Each curse of mine
Falls to the ground as harmless as the arrows
Which children shoot at stars! The time for thought,
If thought could aught avail me, melts away,
Like to a snowball in a schoolboy’s hand,
That melts the faster the more close he grasps it!—
If I had time, this Scottish Solomon,
Whom some call son of David the Musician,!
Might find it perilous work to march to Carrick.
There’s many a feud still simmering in its ashes,
Whose embers are yet red. Nobles we have,
Stout as old Graysteel, and as hot as Bothwell;
Here too are castles look from crags as high
On seas as wide as Logan’s. So the King—
Pshaw! he is here again.

1 The calamitous tale which ascribed the birth of James VI to an intrigue of Queen Mary with Rizzio.
Enter Gifford.

GIF.

I heard you name.
The King, my kinsman; know, he comes not hither.

AUCH. (affecting indifference). Nay, then we need not broach our barrels, cousin,

Nor purchase us new jerkins.—Comes not Philip?

GIF. Yes, sir. He tarries but to drink a service

To his good friends at parting.

AUCH. Friends for the beadle or the sheriff-officer.

Well, let it pass. Who comes, and how attended,

Since James designs not westward?

GIF. Oh, you shall have instead his fiery functionary,

George Home that was, but now Dunbar's great Earl;

He leads a royal host, and comes to show you

How he distributes justice on the Border,

Where judge and hangman oft reverse their office,

And the noose does its work before the sentence.

But I have said my tidings best and worst.

None but yourself can know what course the time

And peril may demand. To lift your banner,

If I might be a judge, were desperate game:

Ireland and Galloway offer you convenience

For flight, if flight be thought the better remedy;

To face the court requires the consciousness

And confidence of innocence. You alone

Can judge if you possess these attributes.

[A noise behind the scenes.

AUCH. Philip, I think, has broken up his revels;

His ragged regiment are dispersing them,

Well liquor'd, doubtless. They're disbanded soldiers,

Or some such vagabonds.—Here comes the gallant.

[Enter Philip. He has a buffcoat and head-piece, wears a sword and dagger, with pistols at his girdle. He appears to be affected by liquor, but to be by no means intoxicated.

AUCH. You scarce have been made known to one another,

Although you sat together at the board.—

Son Philip, know and prize our cousin Gifford.

PHI. (tastes the wine on the table). If you had prized him, sir, you had been loth

To have welcomed him in bastard Alican:

I'll make amends, by pledging his good journey

In glorious Burgundy.—The stirrup-cup, ho!

And bring my cousin's horses to the court.

AUCH. (draws him aside). The stirrup-cup! He doeth not ride to-night—

Shame on such churlish conduct to a kinsman!

PHI. (aside to his father). I've news of pressing impor-

Send the fool off.—Stay, I will start him for you.

(To GIF.) Yes, my kind cousin, Burgundy is better,

On a night-ride, to those who tread our moors,

And we may deal it freely to our friends,

For we came freely by it. Yonder ocean

Rolls many a purple cask upon our shore,

Rough with embossed shells and shagged seaweed,

When the good skipper and his careful crew

Have had their latest earthly draught of brine,

And gone to quench or to endure their thirst,

Where nectar's plenty, or even water's scarce,

And filter'd to the parched crew by dropsfull.

AUCH. Thou'rt mad, son Philip!—Gifford's no intruder,

That we should rid him hence by such wild rants;

My kinsman hither rode at his own danger,

To tell us that Dunbar is hasting to us,

With a strong force, and with the King's commission,

To enforce against our house a hateful charge,

With every measure of extremity.

PHI. And is this all that our good cousin tells us?

I can say more, thanks to the ragged regiment,

With whose good company you have upbraided me,

On whose authority I tell thee, cousin,

Dunbar is here already.

GIF. Already?

PHI. Yes, gentle coz. And you, my sire, be hasty

In what you think to do.

AUCH. I think thou dost not jest on such a subject.

Where hast thou these fell tidings?

PHI. Where you, too, might have heard them, noble

father,

Save that your ears, nail'd to our kinsman's lips,

Would list no coarser accents. Oh, my soldiers,

My merry crew of vagabonds, for ever!

Scum of the Netherlands, and wash'd ashore

Upon this coast like unregarded seaweed,

They had not been two hours on Scottish land,

When, lo! they met a military friend,

An ancient fourier, known to them of old,

Who, warm'd by certain strops of searching wine,

Inform'd his old companions that Dunbar

Left Glasgow yesterday, comes here to-morrow;

Himself, he said, was sent a spy before,

To view what preparations we were making.

AUCH. (to GIF.). If this be sooth, good kinsman, thou must claim

to take a part with us for life and death,

Or speed from hence, and leave us to our fortune.

GIF. In such dilemma,

Believe me, friend, I'd choose upon the instant—

But I lack harness, and a steed to charge on,

For mine is overtired, and, save my page,

There's not a man to back me. But I'll hie to Kyle, and raise my vassals to your aid.

PHI. 'Twill be when the rats,

That on these tidings fly this house of ours,

Come back to pay their rents.—(Apart.)

AUCH. Courage, cousin—

Thou goest not hence ill mounted for thy need:

Full forty coursers feed in my wide stalls,—

The best of them is yours to speed your journey.

PHI. Stand not on ceremony, good our cousin,

When safety signs, to shorten courtesy.

GIF. (to AUCH.). Farewell then, cousin, for my tarrying here

Were ruin to myself, small aid to you;

Yet loving well your name and family,

I'd fain—
PHI. Be gone?—that is our object, too—
Kinsman, adieu.

[Exit Gifford. Philip calls after him.

You yeoman of the stable,
Give Master Gifford there my fleetest steed,
You cut-tail'd roar that trembles at a spear.—
[Trampling of the horse heard going off.

Hark! he departs. How swift the dastard rides,
To shun the neighborhood of jeopardy!
[He lays aside the appearance of levity which he has hitherto worn, and says very seriously,

And now, my father—

AUCH. And now, my son—thou'st ta'en a perilous game
Into thine hands, rejecting elder counsel,—
How dost thou mean to play it?

PHI. Sir, good gamblers play not
Till they review the cards which fate has dealt them,
Computing thus the chances of the game;
And woefully they seem to weigh against us.

AUCH. Exile's a passing ill, and may be borne;
And when Dunbar and all his myrmidons
Are eastward turn'd, we'll seize our own again.

PHI. Would that were all the risk we had to stand to!
But more and worse,—a doom of treason, forfeiture,
Death to ourselves, dishonor to our house,
Is what the stern Justiciary menaces;
And, fatally for us, he hath the means
To make his threatenings good.

AUCH. It cannot be. I tell thee, there's no force
In Scottish law to raise a house like mine,
Coeval with the time the Lords of Galloway
Submitted them unto the Scottish sceptre,
Renouncing rights of Tanistry and Brehon.
Some dreams they have of evidence; some suspicion.
But old Montgomery knows my purpose well,
And long before their mandate reach the camp
To crave the presence of this mighty witness,
He will be fitted with an answer to it.

PHI. Father, what we call great is often ruin'd
By means so ludicrously disproportion'd,
They make me think upon the gunner's lintock,
Which, yielding forth a light about the size
And semblance of the glowworm, yet applied
To powder, blew a palace into atoms,
Sent a young King—a young Queen's mate at least—
Into the air as high as e'er flew night-hawk,
And made such wild work in the realm of Scotland,
As they can tell who heard,—and you were one
Who saw, perhaps, the night-flight which began it.

AUCH. If thou hast nought to speak but drunken folly,
I cannot listen longer.

PHI. I will speak brief and sudden.—There is one
Whose tongue to us has the same perilous force

Which Bothwell's powder had to Kirk of Field;
One whose least tones, and those but pleasant accents,
Could rend the roof from off our fathers' castle,
Level its tallest turret with its base;
And he that doth possess this wondrous power
Sleeps this same night not five miles distant from us.

AUCH. (who had looked on Philip with much appearance of astonishment and doubt, exclaims,) Then thou art mad indeed!—Ha! ha! I'm glad on't.

I'd purchase an escape from what I dread,
Even by the frenzy of my only son!

PHI. I thank you, but agree not to the bargain.
You rest on what you cievat eat has said:
You silken doublet, stuff'd with rotten straw,
Told you but half the truth, and knew no more.
But my good vagrants had a perfect tale:
They told me, little judging the importance,
That Quentin Blane had been discharged with them.
They told me, that a quarrel happ'd at landing,
And that the younger and an ancient sergeant
Had left their company, and taken refuge
In Chapeldonan, where our ranger dwells;¹
They saw him scale the cliff on which it stands,
Ere they were out of sight; the old man with him.
And therefore laugh no more at me as mad;
But laugh, if thou hast list for merriment,
To think he stands on the same land with us,
Whose absence thou wouldst deem were cheaply purchased
With thy soul's ransom and thy body's danger.

AUCH. 'Tis then a fatal truth! Thou art no yelper
To open rashly on so wild a scent;
Thou'rt the young blood-hound, which careers and springs,
Frolics and fawns, as if the friend of man,
But seizes on his victim like a tiger.

PHI. No matter what I am—I'm as you bred me;
So let that pass till there be time to mend me,
And let us speak like men, and to the purpose.
This object of our fear and of our dread,
Since such our pride must own him, sleeps to-night
Within our power:—to-morrow in Dunbar's,
And we are then his victims.²

AUCH. He is in ours to-night.³

PHI. He is. I'll answer that MacLellan's trusty.

AUCH. Yet he replied to you to-day full rudely.

PHI. Yes! The poor knave has got a handsome wife,
And is gone mad with jealousy.

AUCH. Fool!—When we need the utmost faith, allegiance,
Obedience, and attachment in our vassals,
Thy wild intrigues pour gall into their hearts,
And turn their love to hatred!

PHI. Most reverend sire, you talk of ancient morals,

¹ MS.: "In the old tower where Niel MacLellan dwells, and therefore laugh no more," &c.

² MS.: "And we are then in his power."

³ MS.: "He's in our power to-night."
AUCHINDRANE; OR, THE AYRSHIRE TRAGEDY.

Preach'd on by Knox, and practiced by Glencairn;¹
Respectable, indeed; but somewhat musty
In these our modern nostrils. In our days,
If a young baron chance to leave his vassal
The sole possessor of a handsome wife,
'Tis sign he loves his follower; and, if not,
He loves his follower's wife, which often proves
The surer bond of patronage. Take either case:
Favor flows in of course, and vassals rise.

AUCH. Philip, this is infamous,
And, what is worse, impolitic. Take example:
Break not God's laws or man's for each temptation
That youth and blood suggest. I am a man—
A weak and erring man;—full well thou know'st
That I may hardly term myself a pattern
Even to my son; yet thus far will I say,
I never swerved from my integrity,
Save at the voice of strong necessity,
Or such overpowering view of high advantage
As wise men like to necessity,
In strength and force compell'd. No one saw me
Exchange my reputation for my pleasure,
Or do the devil's work without his wages,
I practiced prudence, and paid tax to virtue,
By following her behest, save where strong reason
Compell'd a deviation. Then, if preachers
At times look'd sour, or elders shook their heads,
They could not term my walk irregular;
For I stood up still for the worthy cause,
A pillar, though a flaw'd one, of the altar,
Kept a strict walk, and led three hundred horse.

PHIL. Ah, these three hundred horse, in such rough times,

Were better commendation to a party
Than all your efforts at hypocrisy,
Betray'd so oft by avarice and ambition,
And dragg'd to open shame. But, righteous father,
When sire and son unite in mutual crime,
And join their efforts to the same enormity,
It is no time to measure other's faults,
Or fix the amount of each. Most moral father,
Think if it be a moment now to weigh
The vices of the heir of Auchindrane,
Or take precaution that the ancient house
Shall have another heir than the sly courtier
That's gaping for the forfeiture.

AUCH. We'll disappoint him, Philip,—
We'll disappoint him yet. It is a folly,
A willful cheat, to cast our eyes behind,
When time, and the fast-filting opportunity,
Call loudly, nay compel us to look forward,

Why are we not already at MacLellan's,
Since there the victim sleeps?

PHIL. Nay, soft, I pray thee,
I had not made your piety my confessor,
Nor enter'd in debate on these sage counsels,
Which you're more like to give than I to profit by,
Could I have used the time more usefully;
But first an interval must pass between
The fate of Quentin and the little artifice
That shall detach him from his comrade,
The stout old soldier that I told you of.

AUCH. How work a point so difficult, so dangerous?

PHIL. 'Tis cared for. Mark, my father, the convenience

Arising from mean company. My agents
Are at my hand, like a good workman's tools,
And if I mean a mischief, ten to one
That they anticipate the deed and guilt.
Well knowing this, when first the vagrant's tattle
Gave me the hint that Quentin was so near us,
Instant I sent MacLellan, with strong charges
To stop him for the night, and bring me word,
Like an accomplish'd spy, how all things stood,
Lulling the enemy into security.

AUCH. There was a prudent general!

PHIL. MacLellan went and came within the hour,
The jealous bee which buzzes in his nightcap
Had humm'd to him, this fellow, Quentin Blane,
Had been in schoolboy days an humble lover
Of his own pretty wife—

AUCH. Most fortunate!

The knave will be more prompt to serve our purpose.

PHIL. No doubt on't. 'Mid the tidings he brought back

Was one of some importance. The old man
Is flush of dollars; this I caused him tell
Among his comrades, who became as eager
To have him in their company, as e'er
They had been wild to part with him. And in brief space,
A letter's framed by an old hand amongst them,
Familiar with such feats. It bore the name
And character of old Montgomery,
Whom he might well suppose at no great distance,
Commanding his old sergeant Hildebrand,
By all the ties of late authority,
Conjuring him by ancient soldier-ship,
To hasten to his mansion instantly,
On business of high import, with a charge
To come alone.

[owes?

AUCH. Well, he sets out, I doubt it not; what fol-

¹ Alexander, fifth Earl of Glencairn, for distinction called "the Good Earl," was among the first of the peers of Scotland who concurred in the Reformation, in aid of which he acted a conspicuous part, in the employment both of his sword and pen. In a reconciliation with the queen regent, he told her that "if she violated the engagements which she had come under to her subjects, they would consider themselves as absolved from their allegiance to her." He was author of a satirical poem against the Roman Catholics, entitled "The Hermit of Allaric" (Loretto). See Sibbald's Chronicle of Scottish Poetry. He assisted the Reformers with his sword, when they took arms at Perth in 1539; had a principal command in the army embodied against Queen Mary, in June, 1567; and demolished the altar, broke the images, tore down the pictures, &c., in the chapel royal of Holyroodhouse, after the queen was conducted to Lochleven. He died in 1574.
PHI. I am not curious into others' practices,—
So far I'm an economist in guilt,
As you my sire advise. But on the road
To old Montgomery's he meets his comrades;
They nourish grudge against him and his dollars,
And things may hap which counsel, learn'd in law,
Call Robbery and Murder. Should he live,
He has seen nought that we would hide from him.

AUCH. Who carries the forged letter to the veteran?

PHI. Why, Niel MacLellan, who, return'd again
To his own tower, as if to pass the night there,
They pass'd on him, or tried to pass, a story,
As if they wish'd the sergeant's company,
Without the young comptroller's—that is, Quentin's;
And he became an agent of their plot,
That he might better carry on our own.

AUCH. There's life in it—yes, there is life in't;
And we will have a mounted party ready
To scour the moors in quest of the banditti
That kill'd the poor old man—they shall die instantly.

Dunbar shall see us use sharp justice here,
As well as he in Teviotdale. You are sure
You gave no hint nor impulse to their purpose?

PHI. It needed none. The whole pack oped at once Upon the scent of dollars.—But time comes
When I must seek the tower, and act with Niel
What further's to be done.

AUCH. Alone with him thou goest not. He bears grudge:
Thou art my only son, and on a night
When such wild passions are so free abroad,
When such wild deeds are doing, 'tis but natural
I guarantee thy safety. I'll ride with thee.

PHI. E'en as you will, my lord. But, pardon me,—
If you will come, let us not have a word
Of conscience, and of pity and forgiveness;
Fine words to-morrow, out of place to-night.
Take counsel then, leave all this work to me;
Call up your household, make fit preparation
In love and peace to welcome this Earl Justiciar,
As one that's free of guilt. Go, deck the castle
As for an honor'd guest. Hallow the chapel
(If they have power to hallow it) with thy prayers.
Let me ride forth alone, and ere the sun
Comes o'er the eastern hill, thou shalt accost him,
"Now do thy worst, thou oft-returning spy,
Here's nought thou canst discover."

AUCH. Yet goest thou not alone with that MacLellan!
He deems thou nearest will to injure him,
And seek'st occasion suitting to such will.
Philip, thou art irreverent, fierce, ill nurtured,
Stain'd with low vice which disgust a father;
Yet ridest thou not alone with yonder man:
Come weal come woe, myself will go with thee.

[Exit, and calls to horse behind the scene.

PHI. (alone). Now would I give my fleetest horse to know
What sudden thought roused this paternal care,
And if 'tis on his own account or mine.

'Tis true, he hath the deepest share in all
That's likely now to hap, or which has happen'd;
Yet strong through Nature's universal reign
The link which binds the parent to the offspring:
The she-wolf knows it, and the tigress owns it.
So that dark man, who, shunning what is vicious,
Ne'er turn'd aside from an atrocity,
Hath still some care left for his hapless offspring.
Therefore 'tis meet, though wayward, light, and stubb'd,
That I should do for him all that a son
Can do for sire; and his dark wisdom join'd
To influence my bold courses, 'twill be hard
To break our mutual purpose.—Horses, there!

[Exit.

ACT III.—SCENE I.

It is moonlight. The scene is the Beach beneath the Tower which was exhibited in the first Scene; the Vessel is gone from her anchorage. AUCHINRANDE and PHILIP, as if dismounted from their horses, come forward cautiously.

PHI. The nags are safely stow'd; their noise might scare him.
Let them be safe, and ready when we need them:
The business is but short. We'll call MacLellan
To wake him, and in quiet bring him forth,
If he be so disposed, for here are waters
Enough to drown, and sand enough to cover him.
But if he hesitate, or fear to meet us,
By heaven I'll deal on him in Chapeldonan
With my own hand!

AUCH. Too furious boy! alarm or noiseundo us;
Our practice must be silent as 'tis sudden,
Bethink thee that conviction of this slaughter
Confirms the very worst of accusations
Our foes can bring against us. Wherefore should we,
Who by our birth and fortune mate with nobles,
And are allied with them, take this lad's life,—
His peasant life,—unless to quash his evidence,
Taking such pains to rid him from the world,
Who would, if spared, have fix'd a crime upon us?

PHI. Well, I do own me one of those wise folks
Who think that when a deed of fate is plann'd,
The execution cannot be too rapid,
But do we still keep purpose? Is't determined
He sails for Ireland—and without a wherry?
Salt water is his passport—is it not so?

AUCH. I would it could be otherwise.
Might he not go there while in life and limb,
And breathe his span out in another air?
Many seek Ulster never to return;
Why might this wretched youth not harbor there?

PHI. With all my heart. It is small honor to me
To be the agent in a work like this,
Yet this poor cautiff, having thrust himself
Into the secrets of a noble house,
And twined himself so closely with our safety
That we must perish, or that he must die,
I'll hesitate as little on the action
As I would do to slay the animal.
Whose flesh supplies my dinner. 'Tis as harmless,
That deer or stee, as is this Quentin Blane,
And not more necessary is its death
To our accommodation—so we slay it
Without a moment's pause or hesitation.

ACH. 'Tis not, my son, the feeling call'd remorse
That now lies tugging at this heart of mine,
Engendering thoughts that stop the lifted hand.
Have I not heard John Knox pour forth his thunders
Against the oppressor and the man of blood,
In accents of a minister of vengeance?
Were not his fiery eyeballs turn'd on me,
As if he said expressly, "Thou'rt the man"?
Yet did my solid purpose, as I listen'd,
Remain unshaken as that massive rock.

PHI. Well, then, I'll understand 'tis not remorse,—
As 'tis a foible little known to thee,—
That interrupts thy purpose. What, then, is it?
Is't scorn, or is't compassion? One thing's certain,
Either the feeling must have free indulgence,
Or fully be subjected to your reason—
There is no room for these same treacherous courses
Which men call moderate measures.
We must confide in Quentin, or must slay him.

ACH. In Ireland he might live afar from us.

PHI. Among Queen Mary's faithful partisans,
Your ancient enemies, the haughty Hamiltons,
The stern MacDonnells, the resentful Graemes—
With these around him, and with Cassilis' death
Exasperating them against you, think, my father,
What chance of Quentin's silence.

ACH. Too true—too true. He is a silly youth,
Who had not wit to shift for his own living—
A bashful lover, whom his rivals laugh'd at—
Of pliant temper, which companions play'd on—
A moonlight waker, and a nocturnal dreamer—
A torturer of phrases into sonnets,
Whom all might lead that chose to praise his rhymes.

PHI. I marvel that your memory has room
To hold so much on such a worthless subject.

ACH. Base in himself, and yet so strangely link'd
With me and with my fortunes, that I've studied
To read him through and through, as I would read
Some pithy rhyme of vulgar prophecy,
Said to contain the fortunes of my house;
And, let me speak him truly—He is grateful,
Kind, tractable, obedient—a child
Might lead him by a thread—He shall not die!

PHI. Indeed!—then have we had our midnight ride
To wondrous little purpose.

ACH. By the blue heaven,
Thou shalt not murder him, cold selfish sensualist!
You pure vault speaks it—yonder summer moon,
With its ten million sparklers, cries, Forbear!

The deep earth sighs it forth—Thou shalt not murder!—
Thou shalt not mar the image of thy Maker!
Thou shalt not from thy brother take the life,
The precious gift which God alone can give!—

PHI. Here is a worthy guerdon now, for staying
His memory with old saws and holy sayings!
They come upon him in the very crisis,
And when his resolution should be firmest,
They shake it like a palsy—Let it be,
He'll end at last by yielding to temptation,
Consenting to the thing which must be done,
With more remorse the more he hesitates.—

[To his father, who has stood fixed after his last speech,
Well, sir, 'tis fitting you resolve at last
How the young clerk shall be disposed upon;
Unless you would ride home to Auchindrane,
And bid them rear the Maiden in the court-yard,
That when Dunbar comes, he have nought to do
But bid us kiss the cushion and the headsmen.

ACH. It is too true—There is no safety for us,
Consistent with the unhappy wretch's life!
In Ireland he is sure to find my enemies,
Arran I've proved—the Netherlands I've tried,
But wilds and wars return him on my hands.

PHI. Yet fear not, father, we'll make surer work;
The land has caves, the sea has whirlpools,
Where that which they seek in returns no more.

ACH. I will know nought of it, hard-hearted boy!

PHI. Hard-hearted! Why—my heart is soft as yours;
But then they must not feel remorse at once.

PHI. We can't afford such wasteful tenderness:
I can mouth forth remorse as well as you,
Be executioner, and I'll be chaplain,
And say as mild and moving things as you can;
But one of us must keep his steely temper.

ACH. Do thou the deed—I cannot look on it.

PHI. So be it—walk with me—MacLellan brings
him.
The boat lies moor'd within that reach of rock,
And 'twill require our greatest strength combined
To launch it from the beach. Meantime, MacLellan
Brings our man hither.—See the twinkling light
That glances in the tower.

ACH. Let us withdraw—for should he spy us suddenly,
He may suspect us, and alarm the family.

PHI. Fear not, MacLellan has his trust and confidence,
Bought with a few sweet words and welcomes home.

ACH. But think you that the Ranger may be trusted?

PHI. I'll answer for him—Let's go float the shallop.

[They go off, and as they leave the stage, Mac-
Lellan is seen descending from the tower with Quentin. The former bears a dark lantern. They come upon the stage.]
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

MAC. (showing the light). So—bravely done—that's the last ledge of rocks,
And we are on the sands.—I have broke your slumbers
Somewhat untimely.

QUE. Do not think so, friend.
These six years past I have been used to stir
When the reveille rung; and that, believe me,
Chooses the hours for rousing me at random,
And, having given its summons, yields no license
To indulge a second slumber. Nay, more, I'll tell thee,
That, like a pleased child, I was e'en too happy
For sound repose.

MAC. The greater fool were you.
Men should enjoy the moments given to slumber;
For who can tell how soon may be the waking,
Or where we shall have leave to sleep again?
QUE. The god of slumber comes not at command.

Last night the blood danced merry through my veins:
Instead of finding this our land of Carrick
The dreary waste my fears had apprehended,
I saw thy wife, MacLellan, and thy daughter,
And had a brother's welcome;—saw thee, too,
Renew'd my early friendship with you both,
And felt once more that I had friends and country.
So keen the joy that tingly through my system,
Join'd with the searching powers of yonder wine,
That I am glad to leave my feverish lair,
Although my hostess smooth'd my couch herself,
To cool my brow upon this moonlight beach,
Gaze on the moonlight dancing on the waves.
Such scenes are wont to soothe me into melancholy;
But such the hurry of my spirits now,
That every thing I look on makes me laugh. [tin,
MAC. I've seen but few so gamesome, Master Que-
Being roused from sleep so suddenly as you were.

QUE. Why, there's the jest on't. Your old castle's haunted.
In vain the host, in vain the lovely hostess,
In kind addition to all means of rest,
Add their best wishes for our sound repose,
When some hobgoblin brings a pressing message:
Montgomery presently must see his sergeant,
And up gets Hildebrand, and off he trudges.
I can't but laugh to think upon the grin
With which he doff'd the kerechief he had twisted
Around his brows, and put his morion on—
Ha! ha! ha! ha!

MAC. I'm glad to see you merry, Quentin.
QUE. Why, faith, my spirits are but transitory,
And you may live with me a month or more,
And never see me smile. Then some such trifle
As yonder little maid of yours would laugh at
Will serve me for a theme of merriment—
Even now, I scarce can keep my gravity;
We were so snugly settled in our quarters,
With full intent to let the sun be high
Ere we should leave our beds—and first the one
And then the other's summon'd briefly forth,
To the old tune, "Black Bandsmen, up and march!"
MAC. Well! you shall sleep anon—rely upon it—
And make up time misspent. Meantime, methinks,
You are so merry on your broken slumbers,
You ask'd not why I call'd you.

QUE. I can guess:
You lack my aid to search the weir for seals,
You lack my company to stalk a deer.
Think you I have forgot your sylvan tasks,
Which oft you have permitted me to share,
Till days that we were rivals?
MAC. You have memory
Of that too?—
QUE. Like the memory of a dream,
Delusion far too exquisite to last.
MAC. You guess not then for what I call you forth;
It was to meet a friend—
QUE. What friend? Thyself excepted,
The good old man who's gone to see Montgomery,
And one to whom I once gave dearer title,
I know not in wide Scotland man or woman
Whom I could name a friend.

MAC. Thou art mistaken.
There is a Baron, and a powerful one—
QUE. There flies my fit of mirth. You have a grave
And alter'd man before you.
MAC. Compose yourself, there is no cause for fear,—
He will and must speak with you.

QUE. Spare me the meeting, Niel, I cannot see him.
Say, I'm just landed on my native earth;
Say, that I will notumber it a day;
Say, that my wretched thread of poor existence
Shall be drawn out in solitude and exile,
Where never memory of so mean a thing
Again shall cross his path—but do not ask me
To see or speak again with that dark man!

MAC. Your fears are now as foolish as your mirth—
What should the powerful Knight of Auchindrane
In common have with such a man as thou?

QUE. No matter what—Enough, I will not see him.
MAC. He is thy master, and he claims obedience.
QUE. My master? Ay, my task-master—Ever since
I could write man, his hand hath been upon me;
No step I've made but cumber'd with his chain,
And I am weary on't—I will not see him.
MAC. You must and shall—there is no remedy.

QUE. Take heed that you compel me not to find one.
I've seen the wars since we had strife together;
To put my late experience to the test
Were something dangerous—Ha, I am betray'd!
[While the latter part of this dialogue is passing,
AUCHINDEANE and PHILIP enter on the stage from behind, and suddenly present themselves.

AUCH. What says the runagate?

QUE. (languishing all appearance of resistance).
Nothing, you are my fate;
And in a shape more fearfully resistless,
My evil angel could not stand before me.
AUCH. And so you scruple, slave, at my command, To meet me when I deign to ask thy presence?
QUE. No, sir; I had forgot—I am your bond-slave; But sure a passing thought of independence, For which I've seen whole nations doing battle, Was not, in one who has so long enjoy'd it, A crime beyond forgiveness.
AUCH. We shall see; Thou wert my vassal, born upon my land, Bred by my bounty—It concern'd me highly, Thou know'st it did—and yet against my charge Again I find thy worthlessness in Scotland.
QUE. Alas! the wealthy and the powerful know not How very dear to those who have least share in't Is that sweet word of country! The poor exile Feels, in each action of the varied day, His doom of banishment. The very air Cools not his brow as in his native land; The scene is strange, the food is loathly to him; The language, nay, the music, mars his ear. Why should I, guiltless of the slightest crime, Suffer a punishment which, sparing life, Deprives that life of all which men hold dear?
AUCH. Hear ye the serf! I bred, begin to reckon Upon his rights and pleasure! Who am I— Thou abject, who am I, whose will thou thwartest?
PHI. Well spoke, my pious sire. There goes remorse!
Let once thy precious pride take fire, and then, MacLellan, you and I may have small trouble.
QUE. Your words are deadly, and your power resistless; I'm in your hands—but, surely, less than life May give you the security you seek, Without commission of a mortal crime.
AUCH. Who is't would deign to think upon thy life? I but require of thee to speed to Ireland, Where thou may'st sojourn for some little space, Having due means of living dealt to thee, And, when it suits the changes of the times, Permission to return.
QUE. Noble my lord, I am too weak to combat with your pleasure; Yet oh, for mercy's sake, and for the sake Of that dear land which is our common mother, Let me not part in darkness from my country! Pass but an hour or two, and every cape, Headland, and bay, shall gleam with new-born light, And I'll take boat as gayly as the bird That soars to meet the morning. Grant me but this—to show no darker thoughts Are on your heart than those your speech expresses! PHI. A modest favor, friend, is this you ask! Are we to pace the beach like watermen, Waiting your worship's pleasure to take boat? No, by my faith! you go upon the instant. The boat lies ready, and the ship receives you Near to the point of Turnberry.—Come, we wait you; Bestir you!

QUE. I obey.—Then farewell, Scotland, And Heaven forgive my sins, and grant that mercy Which mortal man deserves not!
AUCH. (speaks aside to his son.) What signal Shall let me know 'tis done?
PHI. When the light is quench'd, Your fears for Quentin Blane are at an end.— (To QUE.) Come, comrade, come, we must begin our voyage.
QUE. But when, when to end it! [He goes off reluctantly with PHILIP and MACLELLAN. AUCHINDRANE stands looking after them. The moon becomes overclouded, and the stage dark. AUCHINDRANE, who has gazed fixedly and eagerly after those who have left the stage, becomes animated, and speaks.
AUCH. It is no fallacy!—The night is dark, The moon has sunk before the deepening clouds; I cannot on the rocky beach distinguish The shallip from the rocks which lie beside it; I cannot see tall Philip's floating plume, Nor trace the sullen brow of Niel MacLellan; * Yet still that faultless visage is before me, With chattering teeth, mauz'd look, and bristling hair, As he stood here this moment!—Have I changed My human eyes for those of some night prowler, The wolf's, the tiger-cat's, or the hoarse bird's That spies its prey at midnight? I can see him— Yes, I can see him, seeing no one else,— And well it is I do so. In his absence, Strange thoughts of pity mingled with my purpose, And moved remorse within me—but they vanish'd When'er he stood a living man before me; Then my antipathy awaked within me, Seeing its object close within my reach, Till I could scarce forbear him.—How they linger! The boat's not yet to sea!—I ask myself, What has the poor wretch done to wake my hatred— Docile, obedient, and in sufferance patient?— As well demand what evil has the hare Done to the hound that courses her in sport. Instinct infallible supplies the reason— And that must plead my cause.—The vision's gone! Their boat now walks the waves; a single gleam, Now seen, now lost, is all that marks her course; That soon shall vanish too—then all is over!— Would it were o'er, for in this moment lies The agony of ages?—Now, 'tis gone—

1 MS: "The strains of foreign music jar his ear."
2 MS: "my antipathy, Strong source of inward hate, arose within me,
3 "in that moment, o'er his soul Winters of memory seem'd to roll,"

BYRON. The Giaour.
And all is acted!—no—she breasts again
The opposing wave, and bears the tiny sparkle
Upon her crest—([A faint cry heard as from seaward.])

Ah! there was fatal evidence,
All's over now, indeed!—The light is quenched—
And Quentin, source of all my fear, exists not.—
The morning tide shall sweep his corpse to sea,
And hide all memory of this stern night's work.

[He walks in a slow and deeply meditative manner towards the side of the stage, and suddenly meets Marion, the wife of MacLellan, who has descended from the castle.

Now, how to meet Dunbar—Heaven guard my senses!
Stand! who goes there?—Do spirits walk the earth
Ere yet they've left the body!

Mar. Is it you, My lord, on this wild beach at such an hour?

Auch. It is MacLellan's wife, in search of him,
Or of her lover—of the murderer,
Or of the murder'd man.—Go to, Dame Marion,
Men have their hunting-gear to give an eye to,
Their snares and trackings for their game. But women
Should shun the night air. A young wife also,
Still more a handsome one, should keep her pillow
Till the sun gives example for her wakening.
Come, dame, go back—back to your bed again.

Mar. Hear me, my lord! there have been sights and sounds
That terrified my child and me—Groans, screams,
As if of dying seamen, came from ocean—
A corpse-light danced upon the crested waves
For several minutes' space, then sunk at once.
When we retired to rest we had two guests,
Besides my husband Niel—I'll tell your lordship
Who the men were—

Auch. Pshaw, woman, can you think
That I have any interest in your gossips?
Please your own husband, and that you may please
him,
Get thee to bed, and shut up doors, good dame.
Were I MacLellan, I should scarce be satisfied
To find thee wandering here in mist and moonlight,
When silence should be in thy habitation,
And sleep upon thy pillow.

Mar. Good my lord,
This is a holyday.—By an ancient custom
Our children seek the shore at break of day,
And gather shells, and dance, and play, and sport
them
In honor of the Ocean. Old men say
The custom is derived from heathen times. Our Isabel
Is mistress of the feast, and you may think
She is awake already, and impatient
To be the first shall stand upon the beach,
And bid the sun good-morrow.

Auch. Ay, indeed?
Linger such dregs of heathendom among you?

And hath Knox preach'd, and Wishart died, in vain?
Take notice, I forbid these sinful practices,
And will not have my followers mingle in them.

Mar. If such your honor's pleasure, I must go
And lock the door on Isabel; she is willful,
And voice of mine will have small force to keep her
From the amusement she so long has dream'd of.
But I must tell your honor, the old people,
That were survivors of the former race,
Prophesied evil if this day should pass
Without due homage to the mighty Ocean.

Auch. Folly and Papistry! Perhaps the ocean
Hath had his morning sacrifice already;
Or can you think the dreadful element,
Whose frown is death, whose roar the dirge of navies,
Will miss the idle pageant you prepare for?
I've business for you, too—the dawn advances—
I'd have thee lock thy little child in safety,
And get to Auchindrane before the sun rise;
Tell them to get a royal banquet ready,
As if a king were coming there to feast him.

Mar. I will obey your pleasure. But my husband—

Auch. I wait him on the beach, and bring him in
To share the banquet.

Mar. But he has a friend,
Whom it would ill become him to intrude
Upon your hospitality.

Auch. Fear not; his friend shall be made welcome
too,
Should he return with Niel.

Mar. He must—he will return—he has no option.

Auch. (apart.) Thus rashly do we deem of others' destiny—
He has indeed no option—but he comes not.
Begone on thy commission—I go this way
To meet thy husband.

[Marion goes to her tower, and after entering it, is seen to come out, lock the door, and leave the stage, as if to execute Auchindrane's commission. He, apparently going off in a different direction, has watched her from the side of the stage, and on her departure speaks.

Auch. Fare thee well, fond woman,
Most dangerous of spies—thon prying, prating,
Spying, and telling woman! I've cut short
Thy dangerous testimony—hated word!
What other evidence have we cut short,
And by what fated means, this dreary morning!—
Bright lances here and helmets?—I must shift
To join the others.

Exit from the other side the Sergeant, accompanied with an Officer and two Pikemen.

Ser. 'Twas in good time you came; a minute later
The knaves had ta'en my dollars and my life.

Off. You fought most stoutly. Two of them were down
Ere we came to your aid.

Ser. Gramercy, halberd!
And well it happens, since your leader seeks
This Quentin Blane, that you have fall’n on me;
None else can surely tell you where he hides,
Being in some fear, and bent to quit this province.
Off. 'Twill do our Earl good service. He has sent Despatches into Holland for this Quentin.
Ser. I left him two hours since in yonder tower,
Under the guard of one who smoothly spoke,
Although he look’d but roughly—I will chide him
For bidding me go forth with yonder traitor.
Off. Assure yourself 'twas a concerted stratagem,
Montgomery’s been at Holyrood for months,
And can have sent no letter—'twas a plan
On you and on your dollars, and a base one,
To which this ranger was most likely privy;
Such men as he hang on our fiercer barons,
The ready agents of their lawless will;
Boys of the belt, who aid their master’s pleasures,
And in his moods ne’er scruple his injunctions.
But haste, for now we must unkennel Quentin;
I've strictest charge concerning him.
Ser. Go up, then, to the tower.
You've younger limbs than mine—there shall you find him
Lounging and snoring, like a lazy cur
Before a stable door; it is his practice.

[The Officer goes up to the tower, and after knocking without receiving an answer, turns the key which Marion had left in the lock, and enters; Isabel, dressed as if for her dance, runs out and descends to the stage;
the Officer Follows.

Off. There’s no one in the house, this little maid
Excepted——
Isa. And for me, I’m there no longer,
And will not be again for three hours good:
I’m gone to join my playmates on the sands.
Off. (detaining her). You shall, when you have told to me distinctly
Where are the guests who slept up there last night.
Isa. Why, there is the old man, he stands beside you,
The merry old man, with the glistening hair;
He left the tower at midnight, for my father
Brought him a letter.
Ser. In ill hour I left you,
I wish to Heaven that I had stay’d with you;
There is a nameless horror that comes o’er me,—
Speak, pretty maiden, tell us what chanced next,
And thou shalt have thy freedom.
Isa. After you went last night, my father
Grew moody, and refused to doff his clothes,
Or go to bed, as sometimes he will do
When there is aught to chafe him. Until past midnight,
He wander’d to and fro, then call’d the stranger,
The gay young man, that sung such merry songs,
Yet ever look’d most sadly whilst he sung them,
And forth they went together.

Off. And you’ve seen
Or heard nought of them since?
Isa. Seen surely nothing, and I cannot think
That they have lot or share in what I heard.
I heard my mother praying, for the corpse-lights
Were dancing on the waves; and at one o’clock,
Just as the abbey steeple toll’d the knell,
There was a heavy plunge upon the waters,
And some one cried aloud for mercy!—mercy!
It was the water-spirit, sure, which promised Mercy to boat and fishermen, if we Perform’d to-day’s rites duly. Let me go—
I am to lead the ring.
Off. (to Ser.). Detain her not. She cannot tell us
more;
To give her liberty is the sure way
To lure her parents homeward.—Strahan, take two men,
And should the father or the mother come,
Arrest them both, or either. Auchindrane
May come upon the beach; arrest him also,
But do not state a cause. I’ll back again,
And take directions from my Lord Dunbar.
Keep you upon the beach, and have an eye
To all that passes there. [Exit separately.

SCENE II.

Scene changes to a remote and rocky part of the Sea-beach.
Enter Auchindrane, meeting Philip.

Auch. The devil’s brought his legions to this beach,
That want to be so lonely; morions, lances,
Show in the morning beam as thick as glow-worms
At summer midnight.
Phi. I’m right glad to see them,
Be they who’er they may, so they are mortal;
For I’ve contended with a lifeless foe,
And I have lost the battle. I would give
A thousand crowns to hear a mortal steel
Ring on a mortal harness.
Auch. How now!—Art mad, or hast thou done the turn—
The turn we came for, and must live or die by?
Phi. ’Tis done, if man can do it; but I doubt
If this unhappy wretch have Heaven’s permission
To die by mortal hands.
Auch. Where is he?—where’s MacLellan?
Phi. In the deep—
Both in the deep, and what’s immortal of them
Gone to the judgment-seat, where we must meet them.
Auch. MacLellan dead, and Quentin too?—So be it
To all that menace ill to Auchindrane,
Or have the power to injure him!—Thy words
Are full of comfort, but thine eye and look
Have in this pallid gloom a ghastliness
Which contradicts the tidings of thy tongue. 1

PHI. Hear me, old man—There is a heaven above us,
As you have heard old Knox and Wishart preach,
Though little to your boot. The dreaded witness
Is slain, and silent. But his misused body
Comes right ashore, as if to cry for vengeance;
It rides the waters like a living thing, 2
Erect, as if he trod the waves which bear him.

AUCH. Thou speakest frenzy, when sense is most required.

PHI. Hear me yet more!—I say I did the deed
With all the coolness of a practiced hunter
When dealing with a stag. I struck him overboard,
And with MacLellan's aid I held his head
Under the waters, while the ranger tied
The weights we had provided to his feet.
We cast him loose when life and body parted,
And bid him speed for Ireland. But even then,
As in defiance of the words we spoke,
The body rose upright behind our stern,
One half in ocean, and one half in air,
And tided after as in chase of us. 3

AUCH. It was enchantment!—Did you strike at it?

PHI. Once and again. But blows avail'd no more
Than on a wreath of smoke, where they may break
The column for a moment, which unites
And is entire again. Thus the dead body
Sunk down before my oar, but rose unhar'm'd,
And dogg'd us closer still, as in defiance.

AUCH. 'Twas hell's own work!——

PHI. MacLellan then grew restive
And desperate in his fear, blasphemed aloud,
Cursing us both as authors of his ruin.
Myself was well nigh frantic while pursued
By this dead shape, upon whose ghastly features
The changeful moonbeam spread a grisly light;
And, baited thus, I took the nearest way 4
To ensure his silence, and to quell his noise;
I used my dagger, and I flung him overboard,
And half expected his dead carcass also
Would join the chase—but he sunk down at once.

AUCH. He had enough of mortal sin about him
To sink an argosy.

PHI. But now resolve you what defence to make,
If Quentin's body shall be recognized;
For 'tis ashore already; and he bears
Marks of my handiwork; so does MacLellan.

AUCH. The concourse thickens still—Away, away!
We must avoid the multitude. [They rush out.

SCENE III.

Scene changes to another part of the Beach. Children are seen dancing, and Villagers looking on. ISABEL seems to take the management of the Dance.

VIU. WOM. How well she queens it, the brave little maiden!

VIL. Ay, they all queen it from their very cradle,
These willing slaves of haughty Auchindrine.
But now I hear the old man's reign is ended;—
'Tis well—he has been tyrant long enough.

SECOND VIL. Finlay, speak low, you interrupt the sports.

THIRD VIL. Look out to sea—There's something coming yonder,
Bound for the beach, will scare us from our mirth.

FOURTH VIL. Pshaw, it is but a sea-gull on the wing,
Between the wave and sky.

THIRD VIL. Thou art a fool,
Standing on solid land—'tis a dead body.

SECOND VIL. And if it be, he bears him like a live one,
Not prone and wailing like a drowned corpse,
But bold erect, as if he trod the waters,
And used them as his path.

FOURTH VIL. It is a merman,
And nothing of this earth, alive or dead.
[By degrees all the dancers break off from their sport,
and stand gazing to seaward, while an object,
imperfectly seen, drifts towards the beach,
and at length arrives among the rocks which border the tide.

Between two or three weeks afterwards, when the king (of Naples) was on board the Foudroyant, a Neapolitan fisherman came to the ship and solemnly declared that Caraccioli had risen from the bottom of the sea, and was coming as fast as he could to Naples, swimming half out of the water. Such an account was listened to like a tale of idle credulity.
The day being fair, Nelson, to please the king, stood out to sea;
but the ship had not proceeded far before a body was distinctly seen, upright in the water, and approaching them.
It was recognized indeed to be the corpse of Caraccioli, which had risen and floated, while the great weights attached to the legs kept the body in a position like that of a living man.
A fact so extraordinary astonished the King, and perhaps excited some feelings of superstitious fear akin to regret.
He gave permission for the body to be taken on shore and receive Christian burial.—Life of Nelson, chap. vi.

1 —— "This man's brow, like to a title leaf,
F ore tells the nature of a tragic volume;
Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is asper than thy tongue to tell th' errand."

2d King Henry IV.

2 —— "walks the waters like a thing of life."
BYRON. The Corsair.

3 This passage was probably suggested by a striking one in Southey's Life of Nelson, touching the corpse of the Neapolitan Prince Caraccioli, executed on board the Foudroyant, then the great British admiral's flagship, in the bay of Nauples, in 1799. The circumstances of Caraccioli's trial and death form, it is almost needless to observe, the most unpleasant chapter in Lord Nelson's history:—
"The body," says Southey, "was carried out to a considerable distance and sunk in the bay, with three double-headed shot, weighing two hundred and fifty pounds, tied to its legs.

4 MS.: "And, baited by my slave, I used my dagger."
Third Vil. Perhaps it is some wretch who needs assistance;
Jasper, make in and see.
Second Vil. Not I, my friend;
E'en take the risk yourself, you'd put on others.
[Hildebrand has entered, and heard the two last words.

Ser. What, are you men? Fear ye to look on what you must be one day? I, who have seen a thousand dead and dying Within a flight-shot square, will teach you how in war We look upon the corpse when life has left it.
[He goes to the back scene, and seems attempting to turn the body, which has come ashore with its face downwards.

Will none of you come aid to turn the body? Is. You're cowards all.—I'll help thee, good old man.
[She goes to aid the Sergeant with the body, and presently gives a cry, and faints. Hildebrand comes forward. All crowd round him; he speaks with an expression of horror.

Ser. 'Tis Quentin Blane! Poor youth, his gloomy hodings Have been the prologue to an act of darkness; His feet are manacled, his bosom stabb'd, And he is foully murder'd. The proud Knight And his dark ranger must have done this deed, For which no common ruffian could have motive. A Pea. Caution were best, old man—Thou art a stranger,
The Knight is great and powerful.
Ser. Let it be so.
Call'd on by Heaven to stand forth an avenger, I will not blench for fear of mortal man. Have I not seen that when that innocent Had placed her hands upon the murder'd body, His gaping wounds, that erst were soak'd with brine, Burst forth with blood as ruddy as the cloud Which now the sun doth rise on? Pea. What of that?

Ser. Nothing that can affect the innocent child, But murder's guilt attaching to her father, Since the blood musters in the victim's veins At the approach of what holds lease from him Of all that parents can transmit to children. And here comes one to whom I'll vouch the circumstance.

The Earl of Dunbar enters with Soldiers and others, having Auchindrane and Philip prisoners.
Dun. Fetter the young ruffian and his trait'rous father! [They are made secure.

Auch. 'Twas a lord spoke it—I have known a knight, Sir George of Home, who had not dared to say so.
Dun. 'Tis Heaven, not I, decides upon your guilt. A harmless youth is traced within your power, Sleeps in your ranger's house—his friend at midnight Is spirited away. Then lights are seen, And groans are heard, and corpses come ashore Mangled with daggers, while (to Philip) your dagger wears The sanguine livery of recent slaughter; Here, too, the body of a murder'd victim (Whom none but you had interest to remove) Bleeds on a child's approach, because the daughter Of one the abettor of the wicked deed. All this, and other proofs corroborative, Call on us briefly to pronounce the doom We have in charge to utter.

Auch. If my house perish, Heaven's will be done! I wish not to survive it; but oh, Philip, Would one could pay the ransom for us both!

Phi. Father, 'tis fitter that we both should die, Leaving no heir behind.—The piety Of a bless'd saint, the morals of an anchorite, Could not atone thy dark hypocrisy, Or the wild profligacy I have practiced. Ruin'd our house, and shatter'd be our towers, And with them end the curse our sins have merited!1

the best parts of 'Waverley.' The verse, too, is more rough, natural, and nervous, than that of 'Haldon Hill;' but, noble as the effort was, it was eclipsed so much by his splendid romances that the public still complained that he had not done his best, and that his genius was not dramatic."—Allan Cunningham. Athenaeum, 14th Dec. 1833.

1 MS.: "His unbleeded wounds," &c.
2 "The poet, in his play of 'Auchindrane,' displayed real tragic power, and soothed all those who cried out before for a more direct story, and less of the retrospective. Several of the scenes are conceived and executed with all the powers of..."
The House of Aspen.

A TRAGEDY.

ADVERTISEMENT.

This attempt at dramatic composition was executed nearly thirty years since, when the magnificent works of Goethe and Schiller were for the first time made known to the British public, and received, as many now alive must remember, with universal enthusiasm. What we admire we usually attempt to imitate; and the author, not trusting to his own efforts, borrowed the substance of the story and a part of the diction from a dramatic romance called "Der Heilige Vehme" (the Secret Tribunal), which fills the sixth volume of the Sagen der Vorzeit (Tales of Antiquity), by Beit Weber. The drama must be termed rather a ricanimento of the original than a translation, since the whole is compressed, and the incidents and dialogue occasionally much varied. The imitator is ignorant of the real name of his ingenious contemporary, and has been informed that of Beit Weber is fictitious.¹

The late Mr. John Kemble at one time had some desire to bring out the play at Drury Lane, then adorned by himself and his matchless sister, who were to have supported the characters of the unhappy son and mother: but great objections appeared to this proposal. There was danger that the main spring of the story,—the binding engagements formed by members of the secret tribunal,—might not be sufficiently felt by an English audience, to whom the nature of that singularly mysterious institution was unknown from early association. There was also, according to Mr. Kemble's experienced opinion, too much blood, too much of the dire catastrophe of Tom Thumb, when all die on the stage. It was besides esteemed perilous to place the fifth act and the parade and show of the secret conclave at the mercy of underlings and scene-shifters, who, by a ridiculous motion, gesture, or accent, might turn what should be grave into farce.

The author, or rather the translator, willingly acquiesced in this reasoning, and never afterwards made any attempt to gain the honor of the buskin. The German taste also, caricatured by a number of imitators who, incapable of copying the sublimity of the great masters of the school, supplied its place by extravagance and bombast, fell into disrepute, and received a coup de grâce from the joint efforts of the late lamented Mr. Canning and Mr. Frere. The effect of their singularly happy piece of ridicule called "The Rovers," a mock play which appeared in the Anti-jacobin, was that the German school, with its beauties and its defects, passed completely out of fashion, and the following scenes were consigned to neglect and obscurity. Very lately, however, the writer chanced to look them over with feelings very different from those of the adventurous period of his literary life during which they had been written, and yet with such as perhaps a reformed libertine might regard the illegitimate production of an early amour. There is something to be ashamed of, certainly; but, after all, paternal vanity whispers that the child has a resemblance to the father.

To this it need only be added that there are in existence so many manuscript copies of the following play that if it should not find its way to the public sooner, it is certain to do so when the author can no more have any opportunity of correcting the press, and consequently at greater disadvantage than at present. Being of too small a size or consequence for a separate publication, the piece is sent as a contribution to the Keepsake, where its demerits may be hidden amid the beauties of more valuable articles.²

ABBOTSFORD, 1st April, 1829.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.

RUDIGER, Baron of Aspen, an old German Warrior.
GEORGE OF ASPEN, } Sons to Rudiger.
HENRY OF ASPEN, } RODERIC, Count of Maltingen, Chief of a department of the Invisible Tribunal, and the hereditary Enemy of the Family of Aspen.
WILLIAM, Baron of Wolfstein, Ally of Count Rod-ER.
BERTRAM OF EREESDORF, Brother to the former Husband of the Baroness of Aspen, disguised as a Minstrel.
DUKE OF BAVARIA.
WICKERS, } Followers of the House of Aspen.
REYNOLD, } CONRAD, Page of Honor to Henry of Aspen.
MARTIN, Squire to George of Aspen.

¹ George Wächter, who published various works under the pseudonym of Vell Weber, was born in 1755, and died in 1837.—Ed.
² See Life of Scott, vol. ii. pp. 18, 29, 72; iii. 2; ix. 298.
Hugo, Squire to Count Roderic.

Peter, an ancient Domestic of Rudiger.

Father Ludovic, Chaplain to Rudiger.

Women.

Isabella, formerly married to Arnold of Ebersdorf, now Wife of Rudiger.

Gertrude, Isabella's Niece, betrothed to Henry.

Soldiers, Judges of the Invisible Tribunal, &c. &c.

Scene—The Castle of Ebersdorf in Bavaria, the Ruins of Griebenhaus, and the adjacent Country.

The House of Aspen.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

An ancient Gothic Chamber in the Castle of Ebersdorf. Spears, crosboses, and arms, with the horns of Buffaloes and of Deer, are hung around the wall. An antique Buffet with beakers and stone bottles.

Rudiger, Baron of Aspen, and his Lady, Isabella, are discovered sitting at a large oaken table.

Rud. A plaque upon that roan horse! Had he not stumbled with me at the ford after our last skirmish, I had been now with my sons. And yonder the boys are, hardly three miles off, battling with Count Roderic, and their father must lie here like a worm-eaten manuscript in a convent library. Out upon it! Out upon it! Is it not hard that a warrior who has travelled so many leagues to display the cross on the walls of Zion should be now unable to lift a spear before his own castle gate?

Isa. Dear husband, your anxiety retards your recovery.

Rud. May be so; but not less than your silence and melancholy. Here have I sat this month and more, since that cursed fall! Neither hunting, nor feasting, nor lance-breaking for me! And my sons—George enters cold and reserved, as if he had the weight of the empire on his shoulders, utters by syllables a cold "How is it with you?" and shuts himself up for days in his solitary chamber; Henry, my cheerful Henry—Isa. Surely he at least—

Rud. Even he forsakes me, and skips up the tower staircase like lightning to join your fair ward, Gertrude, on the battlements. I cannot blame him; for, by my knightly faith, were I in his place, I think even these bruised bones would hardly keep me from her side. Still, however, here I must sit alone.

Rud. Tell me not of that, lady. When I first knew thee, Isabella, the fair maid of Arnhaim was the joy of her companions, and breathed life wherever she came. Thy father married thee to Arnolf of Ebersdorf—not much with thy will, 'tis true. (She hides her face.) Nay, forgive me, Isabella—but that is over; he died, and the ties between us, which thy marriage had broken, were renewed—but the sunshine of my Isabella's light heart returned no more.

Isa. (weeping). Beloved Rudiger, you search my very soul! Why will you recall past times—days of spring that can never return? Do I not love thee more than ever wife loved husband?

Rud. (stretches out his arms; she embraces him). And therefore art thou ever my beloved Isabella. But still, is it not true? Has not thy cheerfulness vanished since thou hast become Lady of Aspen? Dost thou repent of thy love to Rudiger?

Isa. Alas, no! never, never!

Rud. Then why dost thou herd with monks and priests, and leave thy old knight alone, when, for the first time in his stormy life, he has rested for weeks within the walls of his castle? Hast thou committed a crime from which Rudiger's love cannot absolve thee?

Isa. Oh, many, many!

Rud. Then be this kiss thy penance. And tell me, Isabella, hast thou not founded a convent, and endowed it with the best of thy late husband's lands?—ay, and with a vineyard which I could have priced as well as the sleek monks. Dost thou not daily distribute alms to twenty pilgrims? Dost thou not cause ten masses to be sung each night for the repose of thy late husband's soul?

Isa. It will not know repose.

Rud. Well, well—God's peace be with Arnolf of Ebersdorf! The mention of him makes thee ever sad, though so many years have passed since his death.

Isa. But at present, dear husband, have I not the most just cause for anxiety? Are not Henry and George, our beloved sons, at this very moment perhaps engaged in a doubtful contest with our hereditary foe, Count Roderic of Maltingen?

Rud. Now, there lies the difference: you sorrow that they are in danger, I that I cannot share it with them. Hark! I hear horses' feet on the drawbridge. Go to the window, Isabella.

Isa. (at the window). It is Weckerd, your squire.

Rud. Then shall we have tidings of George and Henry. (Enter Weckerd.) How now, Weckerd? Have you come to blows yet?

Wic. Not yet, noble sir.

Rud. Not yet! Shame on the boys' dallying!—what wait they for?

Wic. The foe is strongly posted, sir knight, upon the Wolfshill, near the ruins of Griebenhaus; therefore your noble son, George of Aspen, greets you well, and requests twenty more men-at-arms, and after they have joined him, he hopes, with the aid of Saint Theodore, to send you news of victory.

Rud. (attempts to rise hastily). Saddle my black barb; I will head them myself.

(Sits down.)  A mur-

rain on that stumbling roan!  I had forgot my dislocated bones.  Call Reynold, Wickerd, and bid him take all whom he can spare from defence of the castle.  (Wickerd is going.)  And ho!  Wickerd, carry with you my black barb, and bid George charge upon him.  (Exit Wickerd.)  Now see, Isabella, if I disregard the boy's safety: I send him the best horse ever knight bestrode.  When we lay before Ascalon, indeed, I had a bright bay Persian—Thou dost not heed me.

ISA.  Forgive me, dear husband: are not our sons in danger?  Will not our sins be visited upon them?
Is not their present situation—

RUD.  Situation?  I know it well: as fair a field for open fight as I ever hunted over.  See here (makes lines on the table)—here is the ancient castle of Grie-fenhaus in ruins, here the Wolfshill, and here the marsh on the right.

ISA.  The marsh of Griefenhaus!

RUD.  Yes; by that the boys must pass.

ISA.  Pass there!  (Apart.)  Avenging Heaven!  thy hand is upon us!  [Exit hastily.

RUD.  Whither now?  Whither now?  She is gone.
Thus it goes.  Peter!  Peter!  (Enter Peter.)  Help me to the gallery, that I may see them on horseback.
[Exit, leaning on Peter.

SCENE II.

The inner court of the Castle of Ebersdorf; a quadrangle, surrounded with Gothic buildings; troopers, followers of Rudiger, pass and repass in haste, as if preparing for an excursion.

WICKERD comes forward.

WIC.  What, ho!  Reynold!  Reynold!—By our Lady, the spirit of the Seven Sleepers is upon him—
So ho!  not mounted yet?  Reynold!

Enter Reynold.

REY.  Here!  here!  A devil choke thy bawling!
think'st thou old Reynold is not as ready for a skirmish as thou?

WIC.  Nay, nay:  I did but jest; but, by my sooth, it were a shame should our youngsters have yoked with Count Roderic before we graybeards come.

REY.  Heaven forefend!  Our troopers are but salldering their horses; five minutes more and we are in our stirrups, and then let Count Roderic sit fast.

WIC.  A plague on him!  he has ever lain hard on the skirts of our noble master.

REY.  Especially since he was refused the hand of our lady's niece, the pretty Lady Gertrude.

WIC.  Ay, marry!  would nothing less serve the fox of Maltingen than the lovely lamb of our young Baron Henry?  By my sooth, Reynold, when I look upon these two lovers, they make me full twenty years younger; and when I meet the man that would divide them—I say nothing—but let him look to it.

REY.  And how fare our young lords?

WIC.  Each well in his humor,—Baron George stern and cold, according to his wont, and his brother as cheerful as ever.

REY.  Well!—Baron Henry for me.

WIC.  Yet George saved thy life.

REY.  True—with as much indifference as if he had been snatching a chestnut out of the fire.  Now Baron Henry wept for my danger and my wounds.  Therefore George shall ever command my life, but Henry my love.

WIC.  Nay, Baron George shows his gloomy spirit even by the choice of a favorite.

REY.  Ay,—Martin, formerly the squire of Arnolf of Ebersdorf, his mother's first husband.  I marvel he could not have fitted himself with an attendant from among the faithful followers of his worthy father, whom Arnolf and his adherents used to hate as the devil hates holy water.  But Martin is a good soldier, and has stood toughly by George in many a hard brunt.

WIC.  The knife is sturdy enough, but so sulky withal—I have seen, brother Reynold, that when Martin showed his moody visage at the banquet, our noble mistress has dropped the wine she was raising to her lips, and exchanged her smiles for a ghastly frown, as if sorrow went by sympathy, as kissing goes by favor.

REY.  His appearance reminds her of her first husband, and thou hast well seen that makes her ever sad.

WIC.  Dost thou marvel at that?  She was married to Arnolf by a species of force, and they say that before his death he compelled her to swear never to espouse Rudiger.  The priests will not absolve her for the breach of that vow, and therefore she is troubled in mind.
For il'y mark me, Reynold—  [Bugle sounds.

REY.  A truce to your preaching!  To horse!  and a blessing on our arms!

WIC.  Saint George grant it!  [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

The gallery of the castle, terminating in a large balcony commanding a distant prospect.—Voices, bugle-horns, kettle-drums, trampling of horses, &c. are heard without.

RUDIGER, leaning on Peter, looks from the balcony.
GERTRUDE and ISABELLA are near him.

RUD.  There they go at length—look, Isabella!  look, my pretty Gertrude—these are the iron-handed warriors who shall tell Roderic what it will cost him to force thee from my protection.  (Flourish without.
Rudiger stretches his arms from the balcony.)  Go, my children, and God's blessing with you!  Look at my black barb, Gertrude.  That horse shall let daylight in through a phalanx, were it twenty pikes deep.
Shame on it that I cannot mount him! Seest thou how fierce old Reynold looks?
GER. I can hardly know my friends in their armor.  [The bugles and kettle-drums are heard as at a greater distance.]
RUD. Now I could tell every one of their names, even at this distance; ay, and were they covered, as I have seen them, with dust and blood. He on the dapple-gray is Wickerd—a hardy fellow, but somewhat given to prating. That is young Conrad who gallops so fast, page to thy Henry, my girl.
[Bugles, &c., at a greater distance still.]
GER. Heaven guard them! Alas! the voice of war, that calls the blood into your cheeks, chills and freezes mine.
RUD. Say not so. It is glorious, my girl, glorious! See how their armor glistens as they wind round you hill! how their spears glimmer amid the long train of dust! Hark! you can still hear the faint notes of their trumpets. [Bugles very faint.—] And Rudiger, old Rudiger with the iron arm, as the crusaders used to call me, must remain behind with the priests and the women. Well! well!—[Sings.]

"It was a knight to battle rode,
And as his war-horse he bestrode"—
Fill me a bowl of wine, Gertrude; and do thou, Peter, call the minstrel who came hither last night.—
[Sings.]

"Off rode the horseman, dash, sa, sa!
And stroked his whiskers, tra, la, la."—
(Peter goes out. Rudiger sits down, and Gertrude helps him with wine.) Thanks, my love. It tastes ever best from thy hand. Isabella, here is glory and victory to our boys. [Drinks.]—Wilt thou not pledge me?
ISA. To their safety, and God grant it! [Drinks.]

Enter Bertram as a Minstrel, with a boy bearing his harp. Also Peter.
RUD. Thy name, minstrel!
BER. Minhold, so please you.
RUD. Art thou a German?
BER. Yes, noble sir; and of this province.
RUD. Sing me a song of battle.
[Bertram sings to the harp.]
RUD. Thanks, minstrel: well sung, and lustily.
What say'st thou, Isabella?
ISA. I marked him not.
RUD. Nay, in sooth you are too anxious. Cheer up. And thou, too, my lovely Gertrude: in a few hours thy Henry shall return, and twine his laurels into a garland for thy hair. He fights for thee, and he must conquer.
GER. Alas! must blood be spilt for a silly maiden?
RUD. Surely: for what should knights break lances but for honor and ladies' love—ha, minstrel?
BER. So please you—also to punish crimes.
RUD. Out upon it! wouldst have us executioners, minstrel? Such work would disgrace our blades. We leave malefactors to the Secret Tribunal.
ISA. Merciful God! Thou hast spoken a word, Rudiger, of dreadful import.
GER. They say that, unknown and invisible themselves, these awful judges are ever present with the guilty; that the past and the present misdeeds, the secrets of the confessional, nay, the very thoughts of the heart, are before them; that their doom is as sure as that of fate, the means and executioners unknown.
RUD. They say true—the secrets of that association, and the names of those whose compose it, are as inscrutable as the grave: we only know that it has taken deep root, and spread its branches wide. I sit down each day in my hall, nor know I how many of these secret judges may surround me, all bound by the most solemn vow to avenge guilt. Once, and but once, a knight, at the earnest request and inquiries of the emperor, hinted that he belonged to the society: the next morning he was found slain in a forest; the poniard was left in the wound, and bore this label—"Thus do the invisible judges punish treachery."
GER. Gracious! aunt, you grow pale.
ISA. A slight indisposition only.
RUD. And what of it all? We know our hearts are open to our Creator: shall we fear any earthly inspection? Come to the battlements; there we shall soonest desery the return of our warriors.
[Exit Rudiger with Gertrude and Peter.]
ISA. Minstrel, send the chaplain hither. [Exit Bertram.] Gracious Heaven! the guileless innocence of my niece, the manly honesty of my upright-hearted Rudiger, become daily tortures to me. While he was engaged in active and stormy exploits, fear for his safety, joy when he returned to his castle, enabled me to disguise my inward anguish from others. But from myself—Judges of blood, that lie concealed in noontide as in midnight, who boast to avenge the hidden guilt, and to penetrate the recesses of the human breast, how blind is your penetration, how vain your dagger and your cord, compared to the conscience of the sinner!

Enter Father Ludovic.
LUD. Peace be with you, lady!
ISA. It is not with me: it is thy office to bring it.
LUD. And the cause is the absence of the young knights?
ISA. Their absence and their danger.
LUD. Daughter, thy hand has been stretched out in bounty to the sick and to the needy. Thou hast not denied a shelter to the weary, nor a tear to the afflicted. Trust in their prayers, and in those of the holy convent thou hast founded; peradventure they will bring back thy children to thy bosom.
ISA. Thy brethren cannot pray for me or mine. Their vow binds them to pray night and day for another—to supplicate, without ceasing, the Eternal Mercy for the soul of one who—Oh, only Heaven knows how much he needs their prayer!

Lud. Unbounded is the mercy of Heaven. The soul of thy former husband—

Isa. I charge thee, priest, mention not the word. (Apart.) Wretch that I am, the meanest menorial in my train has power to goad me to madness!

Lud. Hearken to me, daughter; thy crime against Arnolf of Ebersdorf cannot bear in the eye of Heaven so deep a dye of guilt.

Isa. Repeat that once more; say once again that it cannot—cannot bear so deep a dye. Prove to me that ages of the bitterest penance, that tears of the dearest blood, can erase such guilt. Prove but that to me, and I will build thee an abbey which shall put to shame the fairest fame in Christendom.

Lud. Nay, nay, daughter, your conscience is over tender. Supposing that, under dread of the stern Arnolf, you swore never to marry your present husband, still the exacting such an oath was unlawful, and the breach of it venial.

Isa. (resuming her composure). Be it so, good father; I yield to thy better reasons. And now tell me, has thy pious care achieved the task I intrusted to thee?

Lud. Of superintending the erection of thy new hospital for pilgrims? I have, noble lady; and last night the minstrel now in the castle lodged there.

Isa. Wherefore came he then to the castle?

Lud. Reynold brought the commands of the Baron.

Isa. Whence comes he, and what is his tale? When he sung before Rudiger, I thought that long before I had heard such tones, seen such a face.

Lud. It is possible you may have seen him, lady, for he boasts to have been known to Arnolf of Ebersdorf, and to have lived formerly in this castle. He inquires much after Martin, Arnolf’s squire.

Isa. Go, Ludovic—go quick, good father, seek him out, give him this purse, and bid him leave the castle, and speed him on his way.

Lud. May I ask why, noble lady?

Isa. Thou art inquisitive, priest: I honor the servants of God, but I foster not the prying spirit of a monk. Begone!

Lud. But the Baron, lady, will expect a reason why I dismiss his guest.

Isa. True, true (recollecting herself); pardon my warmth, good father: I was thinking of the cuckoo that grows too big for the nest of the sparrow, and strangles its foster-mother. Do no such birds roost in convent-walls?

Lud. Lady, I understand you not.

Isa. Well, then, say to the Baron that I have dismissed long ago all the attendants of the man of whom thou hast spoken, and that I wish to have none of them beneath my roof.

Lud. (inquisitively). Except Martin?

Lud. Ever the same—stern and peremptory to others as rigorous to herself; haughty even to me, to whom, in another mood, she has knelt for absolution, and whose knees she has bathed in tears. I cannot fathom her. The unnatural zeal with which she performs her dreadful penances cannot be religion, for shrewdly I guess she believes not in their blessed efficacy. Well for her that she is the foundress of our convent, otherwise we might not have erred in denouncing her as a heretic! [Exit.

ACT II.—SCENE I.

A Woodland Prospect.—Through a long Avenue, half grown up by brambles, are discerned in the background the Ruins of the ancient Castle of Grieften-haus.—The distant noise of Battle is heard during this Scene.

Enter GEORGE OF ASPEN, armed, with a battle-axe in his hand, as from horseback. He supports MARTIN, and brings him forward.

Geo. Lay thee down here, old friend. The enemy’s horsemen will hardly take their way among these brambles through which I have dragged thee.

Mar. Oh, do not leave me! leave me not an instant! My moments are now but few, and I would profit by them.

Geo. Martin, you forget yourself and me—I must back to the field.

Mar. (attempts to rise). Then drag me back thither also; I cannot die but in your presence—I dare not be alone. Stay, to give peace to my parting soul.

Geo. I am no priest, Martin. (Going.)

Mar. (raising himself with great pain). Baron George of Aspen, I saved thy life in battle: for that good deed, hear me but one moment.

Geo. I hear thee, my poor friend. (Returning.)

Mar. But come close—very close. Seest thou, sir knight—this wound I bore for thee—and this—and this—dost thou remember?

Geo. I do. *

Mar. I have served thee since thou wast a child; served thee faithfully—was never from thy side.

Geo. Thou hast.

Mar. And now I die in thy service.

Geo. Thou may’st recover.

Mar. I cannot. By my long service—by mysears—by this mortal gash, and by the death that I am to die—oh, do not hate me for what I am now to unfold!

Geo. Be assured I can never hate thee.

Mar. Ah, thou little knowest—Swear to me thou wilt speak a word of comfort to my parting soul.

Geo. (takes his hand). I swear I will. (Aloud and shouting.) But be brief—thou knowest my haste.

Mar. Hear me, then. I was the squire, the beloved and favorite attendant, of Arnolf of Ebersdorf. Arnolf was savage as the mountain bear. He loved the Lady Isabel, but she requited not his passion. She loved thy father; but her sire, old Arnheim, was the friend of Arnolf, and she was forced to marry him. By midnight, in the chapel of Ebersdorf, the ill-omened rites were performed; her resistance, her screams were in vain. These arms detained her at the altar till the nuptial benediction was pronounced. Canst thou forgive me?

Geo. I do forgive thee. Thy obedience to thy savage master has been obliterated by a long train of services to his widow.

Mar. Services! ay, bloody services! for they commenced—do not quit my hand—they commenced with the murder of my master. (George quits his hand, and stands aghast in speechless horror.) Trample on me! pursue me with your dagger! I aided your mother to poison her first husband! I thank Heaven, it is said.

Geo. My mother? Sacred Heaven! Martin, thou ravest—the fever of thy wound has distracted thee.

Mar. No! I am not mad! Would to God I were! Try me! Yonder is the Wolfshill—yonder the old castle of Griefenhaus—and yonder is the hemlock marsh (in a whisper) where I gathered the deadly plant that drugged Arnolf’s cup of death. (George traverses the stage in utmost agitation, and sometimes stands over Martin with his hands clasped together.) Oh, had you seen him when the potion took effect! Had you heard his ravings, and seen the contortions of his ghastly visage!—He died furious and impenitent, as he lived; and went—where I am shortly to go. You do not speak?

Geo. (with exertion). Miserable wretch! how can I?

Mar. Can you not forgive me?

Geo. May God pardon thee—I cannot!

Mar. I saved thy life—

Geo. For that, take my curse! (He snatches up his battle-axe, and rushes out to the side from which the noise is heard.)

Mar. Hear me! yet more—more horror! (Attempts to rise, and falls heavily. A loud alarm.)

Enter Wickerd, hastily.

Wic. In the name of God, Martin; lend me thy brand!

Mar. Take it.

Wic. Where is it?

Mar. (looks wildly at him). In the chapel at Ebersdorf, or buried in the hemlock marsh.

Wic. The old grumbler is crazy with his wounds, Martin, if thou hast a spark of reason in thee, give me thy sword. The day goes sore against us.

Mar. There it lies. Bury it in the heart of thy master George; thou wilt do him a good office—the office of a faithful servant.

Enter Conrad.

Con. Away, Wickerd! to horse, and pursue! Baron George has turned the day; he fights more like a fiend than a man: he has unhorsed Roderic and slain six of his troopers—they are in headlong flight—the hemlock marsh is red with their gore! (Martin gives a deep groan, and faints.) Away! away! (They hurry off, as to the pursuit.)

Enter Roderic of Maltingen, without his helmet, his arms disordered and broken, holding the truncheon of a spear in his hand; with him, Baron Wolfstein.

Rod. A curse on fortune, and a double curse upon George of Aspen! Never, never will I forgive him my disgrace—overthrown like a rotten trunk before a whirlwind!

Wolf. Be comforted, Count Roderic; it is well we have escaped being prisoners. See how the troopers of Aspen pour along the plain, like the billows of the Rhine! It is good we are shrouded by the thicket.

Rod. Why took he not my life, when he robbed me of my honor and of my love? Why did his spear not pierce my heart, when mine shivered on his arms like a frail bulrush? (Throws down the broken spear.) Bear witness, heaven and earth, I outlive this disgrace only to avenge!

Wolf. Be comforted; the knights of Aspen have not gained a bloodless victory. And see, there lies one of George’s followers—(seeing Martin.)

Rod. His squire Martin; if he be not dead, we will secure him: he is the depositary of the secrets of his master. Arouse thee, trusty follower of the house of Aspen!

Mar. (reviving). Leave me not! leave me not, Baron George! my eyes are darkened with agony! I have not yet told all.

Wolf. The old man takes you for his master.

Rod. What wouldst thou tell?

Mar. Oh, I would tell all the temptations by which I was urged to the murder of Ebersdorf!

Rod. Murder!—this is worth marking. Proceed.

Mar. I loved a maiden, daughter of Arnolf’s steward; my master seduced her—she became an outcast, and died in misery—I vowed vengeance—and I did avenge her.

Rod. Hadst thou accomplices?

Mar. None but thy mother.

Rod. The Lady Isabella!

Mar. Ay: she hated her husband: he knew her love to Rudiger, and when she heard that thy father was returned from Palestine, her life was endangered by the transports of his jealousy—thus prepared for evil, the fiend tempted us, and we fell.

Rod. (breaks into a transport). Fortune! thou hast repaid me all! Love and vengeance are my own!—Wolfstein, recall our followers! quick, sound thy bugle. (Wolfstein sounds.)

Mar. (stares wildly round). That was no note of Aspen—Count Roderic of Maltingen—Heaven! what have I said!

Rod. What thou canst not recall.

Mar. Then is my fate decreed! ’Tis as it should be! in this very place was the poison gathered—’tis retribution!
Enter three or four soldiers of Roderic.

Rod. Secure this wounded trooper; bind his wounds, and guard him well: carry him to the ruins of Griefenhaus, and conceal him till the troopers of Aspen have retired from the pursuit;—look to him, as you love your lives.

Mar. (led off by soldiers). Ministers of vengeance! my hour is come! [Exeunt.

Rod. Hope, joy, and triumph, once again are ye mine! Welcome to my heart, long-absent visitants! One lucky chance has thrown dominion into the scale of the house of Maltingen, and Aspen kicks the beam.

Wolf. I foresee, indeed, dishonor to the family of Aspen, should this wounded squire make good his tale.

Rod. And how thinst thou this disgrace will fall on them?

Wolf. Surely, by the public punishment of Lady Isabella.

Rod. And is that all?

Wolf. What more?

Rod. Shortsighted that thou art, is not George of Aspen, as well as thou, a member of the holy and invisible circle, over which I preside?

Wolf. Speak lower, for God's sake! these are things not to be mentioned before the sun.

Rod. True: but stands he not bound by the most solemn oath religion can devise, to discover to the tribunal whatever concealed iniquity shall come to his knowledge, be the perpetrator whom he may—ay, were that perpetrator his own father—or mother; and can you doubt that he has heard Martin's confession?

Wolf. True: but, blessed Virgin! do you think he will accuse his own mother before the invisible judges?

Rod. If not, he becomes forsworn, and, by our law, must die. Either way my vengeance is complete—perjured or parricidal, I care not; but as the one or the other shall I crush the haughty George of Aspen.

Wolf. Thy vengeance strikes deep.

Rod. Deep as the wounds I have borne from this proud family. Rudiger slew my father in battle—George has twice baffled and dishonored my arms, and Henry has stolen the heart of my beloved: but no longer can Gertrude now remain under the care of the murdering dam of this brood of wolves; far less can she wed the smooth-cheeked boy, when this scene of villainy shall be disclosed. [B雳.

Wolf. Hark! they sound a retreat; let us go deeper into the wood.

Rod. The victors approach! I shall dash their triumph!—Issue the private summons for convoking the members this very evening; I will direct the other measures.

Wolf. What place?

Rod. The old chapel in the ruins of Griefenhaus, as usual. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter George of Aspen, as from the pursuit.

Geo. (comes slowly forward). How many wretches have sunk under my arm this day, to whom life was sweet, though the wretched bondsman of Count Roderic! And I—! who sought death beneath every lifted battle-axe, and offered my breast to every arrow—I am cursed with victory and safety. Here I left the wretch—Martin!—Martin!—what, ho! Martin!—Mother of God! he is gone! Should he repeat the dreadful tale to any other—Martin!—He answers not. Perhaps he has crept into the thicket, and died there—were it so, the horrible secret is only mine.

Enter Henry of Aspen, with Wickerd, Reynold, and followers.

Hen. Joy to thee, brother! though, by St. Francis, I would not gain another field at the price of seeing thee fight with such reckless desperation. Thy safety is little less than miraculous.

Rey. By'r Lady, when Baron George struck, I think he must have forgot that his foes were God's creatures. Such furious doings I never saw, and I have been a trooper these forty-two years come St. Barnaby—

Geo. Peace! Saw any of you Martin?

Wic. Noble sir, I left him here not long since.

Geo. Alive or dead?

Wic. Alive, noble sir, but sorely wounded. I think he must be prisoner, for he could not have budged else from hence.

Geo. Needless slave! Why didst thou leave him?

Hen. Dear brother, Wickerd acted for the best: he came to our assistance and the aid of his companions.

Geo. I tell thee, Henry, Martin's safety was of more importance than the lives of any ten that stand here.

Wic. (muttering). Here's much to do about an old crazy trencher-shifter.

Geo. What mutterest thou?

Wic. Only, sir knight, that Martin seemed out of his senses when I left him, and has perhaps wandered into the marsh, and perished there.

Geo. How—out of his senses? Did he speak to thee?—(approvatively.)

Wic. Yes, noble sir.

Geo. Dear Henry, step for an instant to yon tree—thou wilt see from thence if the foé rally upon the Wolfshill. (Henry retires.) And do you stand back (to the soldiers). [He brings Wickerd forward.

Geo. (with marked apprehension). What did Martin say to thee, Wickerd?—tell me, on thy allegiance.

Wic. Mere ravings, sir knight—offered me his sword to kill you.

Geo. Said he aught of killing any one else?

Wic. No: the pain of his wound seemed to have brought on a fever.

Geo. (closeps his hands together). I breathe again—I spy comfort. Why could I not see as well as this fellow that the wounded wretch may have been distracted? Let me at least think so till proof shall show the truth (aside). Wickerd, think not on what I said—the heat of the battle had charred my blood. Thou hast wished for the Nether farm at Ebersdorf—it shall be thine.

Wic. Thanks, my noble lord.

Re-enter HENRY.

HEN. No, they do not rally—they have had enough of it—but Wickerd and Conrad shall remain, with twenty troopers and a score of crossbowmen, and scour the woods towards Griefenhau, to prevent the fugitives from making head. We will, with the rest, to Ebersdorf. What say you, brother?

Geo. Well ordered. Wickerd, look thou search everywhere for Martin: bring him to me dead or alive; leave not a nook of the wood unsought.

Wic. I warrant you, noble sir, I shall find him, could he clew himself up like a dormouse.

HEN. I think he must be prisoner.

Geo. Heaven forefend! Take a trumpet, Estace (to an attendant); ride to the castle of Maltingen, and demand a parley. If Martin is prisoner, offer any ransom: offer ten—twenty—all our prisoners in exchange.

Etc. It shall be done, sir knight.

HEN. Ere we go, sound trumpets—strike up the song of victory.

SONG.

Joy to the victors! the sons of old Aspen!
Joy to the race of the battle and sea!
Glory's proud garland triumphantly grasping;
Generous in peace, and victorious in war.
Honor acquiring,
Valor inspiring,
Bursting, resistless, through foemen they go;
War-axes wielding,
Broken ranks yielding,
Till from the battle proud Roderic retiring,
Yields in wild rout the fair palm to his foe.

Joy to each warrior, true follower of Aspen!
Joy to the heroes that gain'd the bold day!
Health to our wounded, in agony gasping;
Peace to our brethren that fell in the fray!
Boldly this morning,
Roderic's power scorn'd,
Well for their chieftain their blades did they wield;
Joy blest them dying,
As Maltingen flying,
Low laid his banners, our conquest adorning,
Their death-clouded eyeballs desecred on the field!

Now to our home, the proud mansion of Aspen,
Bend we, gay victors, triumphant away;
There each fond damsel, her gallant youth clasping,
Shall wipe from his forehead the stains of the fray.
Listening the prancing
Of horses advancing,
E'en now on the turrets our maidens appear.

Love our hearts warming,
Songs the night charming,
Round goes the grape in the goblet gay dancing;
Love, wine, and song, our blithe evening shall cheer!

HEN. Now spread our banners, and to Ebersdorf in triumph. We carry relief to the anxious, joy to the heart of the aged, brother George. (Going off.)

Geo. Or treble misery and death.

[Apart, and following slowly.

The music sounds, and the followers of Aspen begin to file across the stage. The curtain falls.

ACT III.—SCENE I.

Castle of Ebersdorf.

RUDIGER, ISABELLA, and GERTRUDE.

RUD. I prithee, dear wife, be merry. It must be over by this time, and happily, otherwise the bad news had reached us.

ISA. Should we not, then, have heard the tidings of the good?

RUD. Oh! these fly slower by half. Besides, I warrant all of them engaged in the pursuit. Oh! not a page would leave the skirts of the fugitives till they were fairly beaten into their holds; but had the boys lost the day, the stragglers had made for the castle. Go to the window, Gertrude: seest thou anything?

GER. I think I see a horseman.

ISA. A single rider? then I fear me much.

GER. It is only Father Ludovic.

RUD. A plague on thee! didst thou see a fat friar on a mule for a trooper of the house of Aspen?

GER. But yonder is a cloud of dust.

RUD. (eagerly). Indeed!

GER. It is only the wine sledges going to my aunt's convent.

RUD. The devil confound the wine sledges, and the mules, and the monks! Come from the window, and torment me no longer, thou seer of strange sights.

GER. Dear uncle, what can I do to amuse you? Shall I tell you what I dreamed this morning?

RUD. Nonsense: but say on; any thing is better than silence.

GER. I thought I was in the chapel, and they were burying my aunt Isabella alive. And who do you think, aunt, were the gravediggers who shovelled in the earth upon you? Even Baron George and old Martin.

ISA. (appears shocked). Heaven! what an idea!

GER. Do but think of my terror—and Minhold the minstrel played all the while to drown your screams.

RUD. And old Father Ludovic danced a saraband, with the steeple of the new convent upon his thick skull by way of mitre. A truce to this nonsense. Give us a song, my love, and leave thy dreams and visions.

GER. What shall I sing to you?
RUD. Sing to me of war.
GER. I cannot sing of battle; but I will sing you the Lament of Eleanor of Toro, when her lover was slain in the wars.
ISA. Oh, no laments, Gertrude.
RUD. Then sing a song of mirth.
ISA. Dear husband, is this a time for mirth?
RUD. Is it neither a time to sing of mirth nor of sorrow? Isabella would rather hear Father Ludovic chant the “De profundis.”
GER. Dear uncle, be not angry. At present, I can only sing the lay of poor Eleanor. It comes to my heart at this moment as if the sorrowful mourner had been my own sister.

SONG 1

Sweet shone the sun on the fair lake of Toro,
Weak were the whispers that waved the dark wood,
As a fair maiden, bewild’rd in sorrow,
Sigh’d to the breezes and wept to the flood.—
“Saints, from the mansion of bliss lowly bending,
Virgin, that hearst the poor suppliants’ cry,
Grant my petition, in anguish ascending,
My Frederick restore, or let Eleanor die.”

Distant and faint were the sounds of the battle;
With the breezes they rise, with the breezes they fail,
Till the shout, and the groan, and the conflict’s dread rattle,
And the chase’s wild clamor, came loading the gale.
Breathless she gazed through the woodland so dreary,
Slowly approaching, a warrior was seen;
Life’s ebbing tide mark’d his footsteps so weary,
Cleft was his helmet, and woe was his mien.

“Save thee, fair maid, for our armies are flying;
Save thee, fair maid, for thy guardian is low;
Cold on yon hearth thy bold Frederick is lying,
Fast through the woodland approaches the foe.”

[The voice of Gertrude sinks by degrees, till she bursts into tears.

RUD. How now, Gertrude?
GER. Alas! may not the fate of poor Eleanor at this moment be mine?
RUD. Never, my girl, never! (Military music is heard.) Hark! hark! to the sounds that tell thee so.

[All rise and run to the window.

RUD. Joy! joy! they come, and come victorious.
(The chorus of the war-song is heard without.) Welcome! welcome! once more have my old eyes seen the banners of the house of Maltingen trampled in the dust.—Isabella, broach our oldest casks: wine is sweet after war.

Enter Henry, followed by Reynold and troopers.

RUD. Joy to thee, my boy! let me press thee to this old heart.
ISA. Bless thee, my son—(embraces him)—Oh, how many hours of bitterness are compensated by this embrace! Bless thee, my Henry! where hast thou left thy brother?
HEN. Hard at hand: by this he is crossing the drawbridge. Hast thou no greetings for me, Gertrude? (Goes to her.)
GER. I joy not in battles.
RUD. But she had tears for thy danger.
HEN. Thanks, my gentle Gertrude. See, I have brought back thy scarf from no inglorious field.
GER. It is bloody!—(shocked.)
RUD. Dost start at that, my girl? Were it his own blood, as it is that of his foes, thou shouldst glory in it.—Go, Reynold, make good cheer with thy fellows.

[Exit Reynold and soldiers.

Enter George pensively.

GEORGE (goes straight to Rudiger). Father, thy blessing.
RUD. Thou hast it, boy.
ISA. (rushes to embrace him—he avoids her.) How? art thou wounded?
GEORGE. No.
RUD. Thou lookest deadly pale.
GEORGE. It is nothing.
ISA. Heaven’s blessing on my gallant George!
GEORGE (aside). Dares she bestow a blessing? Oh, Martin’s tale was frenzy!
ISA. Smile upon us for once, my son; darken not thy brow on this day of gladness—few are our moments of joy—should not my sons share in them?
GEORGE (aside). She has moments of joy—it was frenzy then!
ISA. Gertrude, my love, assist me to disarm the knight. (She loosens and takes off his casque.)
GER. There is one, two, three hacks, and none has pierced the steel.
RUD. Let me see. Let me see. A trusty casque!
GER. Else hast thou gone.
ISA. I will reward the armorer with its weight in gold.
GEORGE (aside). She must be innocent.
GER. And Henry’s shield is hacked, too! Let me show it to you, uncle. (She carries Henry’s to Rudiger.)
RUD. Do, my love; and come hither, Henry, thou shalt tell me how the day went.

(Henry and Gertrude converse apart with Rudiger; George comes forward; Isabella comes to him.

ISA. Surely, George, some evil has befallen thee. Grave thou art ever, but so dreadfully gloomy—
GEORGE. Evil, indeed.—(Aside.) Now for the trial.
ISA. Has your loss been great?
GEORGE. No!—Yes!—(Apart.) I cannot do it.
ISA. Perhaps some friend lost?

---

THE HOUSE OF ASPEN.

Geo. It must be.—Martin is dead.—(He regards her with apprehension, but steadily, as he pronounces these words.)
ISA. (starts, then shows a ghastly expression of joy.)
Geo. (almost overcome by his feelings.) Guilty! guilty!—(apart.)
ISA. (without observing his emotion.) Didst thou say dead?
Geo. Did I?—no—I only said mortally wounded.
ISA. Wounded? only wounded? Where is he?
Geo. Let me fly to him.—(Going.)
ISA. (sternly.) Hold, lady! Speak not so loud! Thou canst not see him: he is a prisoner.
ISA. A prisoner, and wounded! Fly to his deliverance! Offer wealth, lands, castles,—all our possessions,—for his ransom. Never shall I know peace till these walls or till the grave secures him.
Geo. (apart.) Guilty! guilty!

Enter Petee.
PET. Hugo, squire to the Count of Maltingen, has arrived with a message.
RUD. I will receive him in the hall.
[Exit, leaving on GERTRUD and HENRY.
ISA. Go, George—see after Martin.
Geo. (firmly.) No—I have a task to perform; and though the earth should open and devour me alive, I will accomplish it. But first—but first—Nature, take thy tribute.—(He falls on his mother's neck, and weeps bitterly.)
ISA. George! my son! for Heaven's sake, what dreadful frenzy!
Geo. (walks two turns across the stage, and composes himself.) Listen, mother. I knew a knight in Hungary, gallant in battle, hospitable and generous in peace. The king gave him his friendship, and the administration of a province; that province was infested by thieves and murderers. You mark me?
ISA. Most heedfully.
Geo. The knight was sworn—bound by an oath the most dreadful that can be taken by man—to deal among offenders even-handed, stern, and impartial justice. Was it not a dreadful vow?
ISA. (with an affection of composure.) Solemn, doubtless, as the oath of every magistrate.
ISA. And inviolable?
ISA. Surely—inviolable.
Geo. Well! it happened that when he rode out against the banditti, he made a prisoner. And who think you that prisoner was?
ISA. I know not (with increasing terror).
Geo. (trembling, but proceeding rapidly.) His own twin brother, who sucked the same breasts with him, and lay in the bosom of the same mother; his brother, whom he loved as his own soul. What should that knight have done unto his brother?
ISA. (almost speechless.) Alas! what did he do?
Geo. He did (turning his head from her, and with clasped hands) what I can never do:—he did his duty.
ISA. My son! my son!—Mercy! mercy! (Clings to him.)
Geo. Is it then true?
ISA. What?
Geo. What Martin said. (ISABELLA hides her face.) It is true!
ISA. (looks up with an air of dignity.) Hear, Framer of the laws of nature! the mother is judged by the child. (Turns towards him.) Yes, it is true—true that, fearful of my own life, I secured it by the murder of my tyrant. Mistaken coward! I little knew on what terrors I ran to avoid one moment's agony. —Thou hast the secret!
ISA. Knowest thou to whom thou hast told it?
ISA. To my son.
Geo. No! no!—to an executioner!
ISA. Be it so; go, proclaim my crime, and forget not my punishment—forget not that the murderer of her husband has dragged out years of hidden remorse, to be brought at last to the scaffold by her own cherished son.—Thou art silent.
Geo. The language of Nature is no more! How shall I learn another?
ISA. Look upon me, George;—should the executioner be abashed before the criminal? Look upon me, my son. From my soul do I forgive thee.
Geo. Forgive me what?
ISA. What thou dost meditate. Be vengeance heavy, but let it be secret; add not the death of a father to that of the sinner. Oh, Rudiger! Rudiger! innocent cause of all my guilt and all my woe, how wilt thou tear thy silver locks when thou shalt hear her guilt whom thou hast so often clasped to thy bosom—hear her infamy proclaimed by the son of thy fondest hopes! (Weeps.)
Geo. (struggling for breath.) Nature will have utterance! Mother, dearest mother, I will save you or perish. (Throws himself into her arms.) Thus fall my vows!
ISA. Man thyself; I ask not safety from thee. Never shall it be said that Isabella of Aspen turned her son from the path of duty, though his footsteps must pass over her mangled corpse. Man thyself.
ISA. No! no! The ties of nature were knit by God himself; cursed be the stoic pride that would rend them asunder, and call it virtue!
ISA. My son! my son! how shall I behold thee hereafter?
[Three knocks are heard upon the door of the apartment.
Geo. Hark! One—two—three. Roderic, thou art speedy! (Apart.)
ISA. (opens the door.) A parchment stuck to the door with a poniard! (Opens it.) Heaven and earth!—a summons from the invisible judges! (Drops the parchment.)
Geo. (reads with emotion.) "Isabella of Aspen, accused of murder by poison, we conjure thee, by the cord and by the steel, to appear this night before the avengers of blood, who judge in secret and avenge in secret, like the Deity. As thou art innocent or guilty, so be thy deliverance."—Martin, Martin, thou hast played false!

ISA. Alas! whither shall I fly?

GEO. Thou canst not fly: instant death would follow the attempt; a hundred thousand arms would be raised against thy life; every morsel thou didst taste, every drop which thou didst drink, the very breeze of heaven that fanned thee, would come laden with destruction. One chance of safety is open:—obey the summons.

ISA. And perish.—Yet why should I still fear death? Be it so.

GEO. No! I have sworn to save you; I will not do the work by halves. Does any one save Martin know of the dreadful deed?

ISA. None.

GEO. Then go—assert your innocence, and leave the rest to me.

ISA. Wretch that I am! How can I support the task you would impose?

GEO. Think on my father; live for him: he will need all the comfort thou canst bestow. Let the thought that his destruction is involved in thine carry thee through the dreadful trial.

ISA. Be it so. For Rudiger I have lived—for him I will continue to bear the burden of existence; but the instant that my guilt comes to his knowledge shall be the last of my life. Ere I would bear from him one glance of hatred or of scorn, this dagger should drink my blood. (Puts the poniard into her bosom.)

GEO. Fear not; he can never know: no evidence shall appear against you.

ISA. How shall I obey the summons, and where find the terrible judgment-seat?

GEO. Leave that to the judges. Resolve but to obey, and a conductor will be found. Go to the chapel; there pray for your sins and for mine. (He leads her out, and returns.)—Sits indeed! I break a dreadful vow, but I save the life of a parent; and the penance I will do for my perjury shall appall even the judges of blood.

Enter Reynold.

REY. Sir knight, the messenger of Count Roderic desires to speak with you.

GEO. Admit him.

Enter Hugo.

HUG. Count Roderic of Matlingen greets you. He says he will this night hear the bat flutter and the owlet scream; and he bids me ask if thou also wilt listen to the music.

GEO. I understand him. I will be there.

HUG. And the Count says to you that he will not ransom your wounded squire, though you would downweigh his best horse with gold; but you may send him a confessor, for the Count says he will need one.

GEO. Is he so near death?

HUG. Not as it seems to me. He is weak through loss of blood; but since his wound was dressed he can both stand and walk. Our Count has a notable balsam, which has recruited him much.

GEO. Enough; I will send a priest. (Exit Hugo.) I fathom his plot: he would add another witness to the tale of Martin's guilt. But no priest shall approach him. Reynold, thinkest thou not we could send one of the troopers, disguised as a monk, to aid Martin in making his escape?

REY. Noble sir, the followers of your house are so well known to those of Matlingen that I fear it is impossible.

GEO. Knowest thou of no stranger who might be employed? His reward shall exceed even his hopes.

REY. So please you, I think the minstrel could well execute such a commission. He is shrewd and cunning, and can write and read like a priest.

GEO. Call him. (Exit Reynold.) If this fails, I must employ open force. Were Martin removed, no tongue can assert the bloody truth.

Enter Minstrel.

GEO. Come hither, Minhold. Hast thou courage to undertake a dangerous enterprise?

BER. My life, sir knight, has been one scene of danger and of dread. I have forgotten how to fear.

GEO. Thy speech is above thy seeming. Who art thou?

BER. An unfortunate knight, obliged to shroud myself under this disguise.

GEO. What is the cause of thy misfortunes?

BER. I slew, at a tournament, a prince, and was laid under the ban of the empire.

GEO. I have interest with the Emperor: swear to perform what task I shall impose on thee, and I will procure the recall of the ban.

BER. I swear.

GEO. Then take the disguise of a monk, and go with the follower of Count Roderic, as if to confess my wounded squire Martin. Give him thy dress, and remain in prison in his stead. Thy captivity shall be short, and I pledge my knightly word I will labor to execute my promise, when thou shalt have leisure to unfold thy history.

BER. I will do as you direct. Is the life of your squire in danger?

GEO. It is, unless thou canst accomplish his release.

BER. I will essay it. [Exit.]

GEO. Such are the mean expediencies to which George of Aspen must now resort! No longer can I debate with Roderic in the field. The depraved, the perjured knight must contend with him only in the arts of dissimulation and treachery. Oh, mother! mother! the most bitter consequence of thy crime has been the birth of thy first-born! But I must warn my brother of the impending storm. Poor Henry! how little can thy gay temper anticipate evil! What ho, there! (Enter an Attendant.) Where is Baron Henry?

ATT. Noble sir, he rode forth, after a slight refreshment, to visit the party in the field.
GEO. Saddle my steed; I will follow him.
ATT. So please you, your noble father has twice demanded your presence at the banquet.
GEO. If matters not—say that I have ridden forth to the Wolfshill. Where is thy lady?
ATT. In the chapel, sir knight.
GEO. 'Tis well—saddle my bay horse—(apart) for the last time. [Exit.

ACT IV.—SCENE I.

The Wood of Griefenhaus, with the Ruins of the Castle.
A nearer view of the Castle than in Act Second, but still at some distance.

Enter Roderic, Wolfstein, and Soldiers, as from a reconnoitring party.

WOLF. They mean to improve their success, and will push their advantage far. We must retreat betimes, Count Roderic.

ROD. We are safe here for the present. They make no immediate motion of advance. I fancy neither George nor Henry is with their party in the wood.

Enter Hugo.

HUG. Noble sir, how shall I tell what has happened?

ROD. What?

HUG. Martin has escaped.

ROD. Villain, thy life shall pay it! (Strikes at Hugo—is held by Wolfstein.)

WOLF. Hold, hold, Count Roderic! Hugo may be blameless.

ROD. Reckless slave! how came he to escape?

HUG. Under the disguise of a monk's habit, whom by your orders we brought to confess him.

ROD. Has he been long gone?

HUG. An hour or more since he passed our sentinels, disguised as the chaplain of Aspen: but he walked so slowly and feebly, I think he cannot yet have reached the posts of the enemy.

ROD. Where is the treacherous priest?

HUG. He waits his doom not far from hence.

ROD. Drag him hither. The miscreant that snatched the morsel of vengeance from the lion of Maltingen shall expire under torture.

[Exit Hugo.

Re-enter Hugo, with Bertram and Attendants.

ROD. Villain! what tempteth thee, under the garb of a minister of religion, to steal a criminal from the hand of justice?

BER. I am no villain, Count Roderic; and I only aided the escape of one wounded wretch whom thou didst mean to kill basely.

ROD. Liar and slave! thou hast assisted a murderer, upon whom justice had sacred claims.

BER. I warn thee again, Count, that I am neither liar nor slave. Shortly I hope to tell thee I am once more thy equal.

ROD. Thou! Thou!—

BER. Yes; the name of Bertram of Ebersdorf was once not unknown to thee.

ROD. (astonished). Thou Bertram! the brother of Arnolf of Ebersdorf, first husband of the Baroness Isabella of Aspen?

BER. The same.

ROD. Who, in a quarrel at a tournament, many years since, slew a blood-relation of the Emperor, and was laid under the ban?

BER. The same.

ROD. And who has now, in the disguise of a priest, aided the escape of Martin, squire to George of Aspen?

BER. The same—the same.

ROD. Then, by the holy cross of Cologne, thou hast set at liberty the murderer of thy brother Arnolf!

BER. How! What! I understand thee not!

ROD. Miserable plotter!—Martin, by his own confession, as Wolfstein heard, avowed having aided Isabella in the murder of her husband. I had laid such a plan of vengeance as should have made all Germany shudder. And thou hast counteracted it—thou, the brother of the murdered Arnolf!

BER. Can this be so, Wolfstein?

WOLF. I heard Martin confess the murder.

BER. Then am I indeed unfortunate!

ROD. What, in the name of evil, brought thee here?

BER. I am the last of my race. When I was outlawed, as thou knowest, the lands of Ebersdorf, my rightful inheritance, were declared forfeited, and the Emperor bestowed them upon Rudiger when he married Isabella. I attempted to defend my domain, but Rudiger—hell thank him for it!—enforced the ban against me at the head of his vassals, and I was constrained to fly. Since then I have warred against the Saracens in Spain and Palestine.

ROD. But why didst thou return to a land where death attends thy being discovered?

BER. Impatience urged me to see once more the land of my nativity, and the towers of Ebersdorf. I came there yesterday, under the name of the minstrel Minhold.

ROD. And what prevailed on thee to undertake to deliver Martin?

BER. George, though I told not my name, engaged to procure the recall of the ban; besides, he told me Martin's life was in danger, and I accounted the old villain to be the last remaining follower of our house. But, as God shall judge me, the tale of horror thou hast mentioned I could not have even suspected. Report ran that my brother died of the plague.

WOLF. Raised for the purpose, doubtless, of preventing attendance upon his sick-bed, and an inspection of his body.

BER. My vengeance shall be dreadful as its cause!
The usurpers of my inheritance, the robbers of my honor, the murderers of my brother, shall be cut off, root and branch!

Rod. Thou art, then, welcome here; especially if thou art still a true brother to our invisible order.

Ber. I am.

Rod. There is a meeting this night on the business of thy brother's death. Some are now come. I must despatch them in pursuit of Martin.

Enter Hugh.

Hug. The foes advance, sir knight.

Rod. Back! back to the ruins! Come with us, Bertram; on the road thou shalt hear the dreadful history. [Exit.]

From the opposite side enter George, Henry, Wickerd, Conrad, and Soldiers.

Geo. No news of Martin yet?

Wic. None, sir knight.

Geo. Nor of the minstrel?

Wic. None.

Geo. Then he has betrayed me, or is prisoner—misery either way. Begone, and search the wood, Wickerd. [Exit Wickerd and followers.

Hen. Still this dreadful gloom on thy brow, brother? Geo. Ay! what else?

Hen. Once thou thoughtest me worthy of thy friendship.

Geo. Henry, thou art young—

Hen. Shall I therefore betray thy confidence?

Geo. No! but thou art gentle and well-natured. Thy mind cannot even support the burden which mine must bear, far less wilt thou approve the means I shall use to throw it off.

Hen. Try me.

Geo. I may not.

Hen. Then thou dost no longer love me.

Geo. I love thee, and because I love thee, I will not involve thee in my distress.

Hen. I will bear it with thee.

Geo. Shouldst thou share it, it would be doubled to me!

Hen. Fear not, I will find a remedy.

Geo. It would cost thee peace of mind, here and hereafter.

Hen. I take the risk.

Geo. It may not be, Henry. Thou wouldst become the confidant of crimes past—the accomplice of others to come.

Hen. Shall I guess?

Geo. I charge thee, no!

Hen. I must. Thou art one of the secret judges.

Geo. Unhappy boy! what hast thou said?

Hen. Is it not so?

Geo. Dost thou know what the discovery has cost thee?

Hen. I care not.

Geo. He who discovers any part of our mystery must himself become one of our number.

Hen. How so?

Geo. If he does not consent, his secrecy will be speedily ensured by his death. To that we are sworn—take thy choice!

Hen. Well, are you not banded in secret to punish those offenders whom the sword of justice cannot reach, or who are shielded from its stroke by the buckler of power?

Geo. Such is indeed the purpose of our fraternity; but the end is pursued through paths dark, intricate, and slippery with blood. Who is he that shall tread them with safety? Accursed be the hour in which I entered the labyrinth, and doubly accursed that in which thou too must lose the cheerful sunshine of a soul without a mystery!

Hen. Yet for thy sake will I be a member.

Geo. Henry, thou didst raise this morning a free man. No one could say to thee, "Why dost thou so?" Thou hastest thee down to-night the veriest slave that ever tagged at an ear—the slave of men whose actions will appear to thee savage and incomprehensible, and whom thou must aid against the world, upon peril of thy throat.

Hen. Be it so. I will share your lot.

Geo. Alas, Henry! Heaven forbid! But since thou hast by a hasty word fettered thyself, I will avail myself of thy bondage. Mount thy fleetest steed, and hast thee this very night to the Duke of Bavaria. He is chief and paramount of our chapter. Show him this signet and this letter; tell him that matters will be this night discussed concerning the house of Aspen. Bid him speed him to the assembly, for he well knows the president is our deadly foe. He will admit thee a member of our holy body.

Hen. Who is the foe whom you dread?

Geo. Young man, the first duty thou must learn is implicit and blind obedience.

Hen. Well! I shall soon return and see thee again.

Geo. Return, indeed, thou wilt; but for the rest—well! that matters not.

Hen. I go; thou wilt set a watch here?

Geo. I will. (Henry going.) Return, my dear Henry; let me embrace thee, shouldst thou not see me again.

Hen. Heaven! what mean you?

Geo. Nothing. The life of mortals is precarious; and, should we not meet again, take my blessing and this embrace—and this—(embraces him warmly.) And now haste to the Duke. (Exit Henry.) Poor youth, thou little knowest what thou hast undertaken. But if Martin has escaped, and if the Duke arrives, they will not dare to proceed without proof.

Re-enter Wickerd and followers.

Wic. We have made a follower of Maltingen prisoner, Baron George, who reports that Martin has escaped.

Geo. Joy! joy! such joy as I can now feel! Set him free for the good news—and, Wickerd, keep a good watch in this spot all night. Send out scouts to find Martin, lest he should not be able to reach Ebersdorf.

Wic. I shall, noble sir.

[The kettle-drums and trumpets flourish as for setting the watch; the scene closes.

SCENE II.

The Chapel at Ebersdorf, an ancient Gothic building.

Isabella is discovered rising from before the altar, on which burn two tapers.

Isa. I cannot pray. Terror and guilt have stifled devotion. The heart must be at ease—the hands must be pure when they are lifted to Heaven. Midnight is the hour of summons; it is now near. How can I pray, when I go resolved to deny a crime which every drop of my blood could not wash away! And my son! Oh! he will fall the victim of my crime! Arnolf! Arnolf! thou art dreadfully avenged! (Tip at the door.) The footstep of my dreadful guide. (Tip again.) My courage is no more. (Enter Gertrude by the door.) Gertrude! is it only thou? (Embraces her.)

Ger. Dear aunt, leave this awful place; it chills my very blood. My uncle sent me to call you to the hall.

Isa. Who is in the hall?

Ger. Only Reynold and the family, with whom my uncle is making merry.

Isa. Sawest thou no strange faces?

Ger. No; none but friends.

Isa. Art thou sure of that? Is George there?

Ger. No, nor Henry; both have ridden out. I think they might have staid one day at least. But come, aunt, I hate this place; it reminds me of my dream. See, yonder was the spot where methought they were burying you alive, below your monument (pointing).

Isa. (starting). The monument of my first husband. Leave me, leave me, Gertrude. I follow in a moment. (Exit Gertrude.) Ay, there he lies! forgetful alike of his crimes and injuries! Insensible, as if this chapel had never rung with my shrieks, or the castle resounded to his parting groans! When shall I sleep so soundly? (As she goes on the monument, a figure muffled in black appears from behind it.) Merciful God! is it a vision, such as has haunted my couch? (It approaches: she goes on with mingled terror and resolution.) Ghastly phantom, art thou the restless spirit of one who died in agony, or art thou the mysterious being that must guide me to the presence of the avengers of blood? (Figure bends its head and beckons.—To-morrow! To-morrow! I cannot follow thee now! (Figure shows a dagger from beneath its cloak.) Compulsion! I understand thee: I will follow. (She follows the figure a little way; he turns and wraps a black veil round her head, and takes her hand: then both exeunt behind the monument.)

SCENE III.

The Wood of Griezenhaus.—A Watch-fire, round which sit Wickerd, Conread, and others, in their watch-cloaks.

Wic. The night is bitter cold.

Con. Ay, but thou hast lined thy doublet well with old Rhenish.

Wic. True; and I will give you warrant for it. (Sings.)

(RHEIN-WEIN LIED.)

What makes the trooper’s frozen courage muster?
The grapes of juice divine.

Upon the Rhine, upon the Rhine they cluster:
Oh, blessed be the Rhine!

Let fringe and furs, and many a rabbit skin, sirs,
Bedeck your Saracen;
He’ll freeze without what warms our hearts within,
sirs,
When the night-frost crusts the fen.

But on the Rhine, but on the Rhine they cluster,
The grapes of juice divine,
That make our troopers’ frozen courage muster:
Oh, blessed be the Rhine!

Con. Well sung, Wickerd; thou wert ever a jovial soul.

Enter a trooper or two more.

Wic. Hast thou made the rounds, Frank?

Frank. Yes, up to the hemlock marsh. It is a stormy night; the moon shone on the Wolfshill, and on the dead bodies with which to-day’s work has covered it. We heard the spirit of the house of Maltin gen wailling over the slaughter of its adherents; I durst go no farther.

Wic. Hen-hearted rascal! The spirit of some old raven, who was picking their bones.

Con. Nay, Wickerd; the churchmen say there are such things.

Frank. Ay; and Father Ludovic told us last sermon, how the devil twisted the neck of ten farmers at Kletterbach, who refused to pay Peter’s pence.

Wic. Yes, some church devil, no doubt.

Frank. Nay, old Reynold says that in passing, by midnight, near the old chapel at our castle, he saw it all lighted up, and heard a chorus of voices sing the funeral service.

Another Soldier. Father Ludovic heard the same.

Wic. Hear me, ye hare-livered boys! Can you look death in the face in battle, and dread such nursery bugbears? Old Reynold saw his vision in the strength of the grape. As for the chaplain, far be it from me to name the spirit which visits him; but I know what I know, when I found him confessing Bertrand’s pretty Agnes in the chestnut grove.
CON. But, Wickerd, though I have often heard of strange tales which I could not credit, yet there is one in our family so well attested that I almost believe it. Shall I tell it you?

ALL SOLDIERS. Do! do tell it, gentle Conrad.

WIC. And I will take t'other sup of Rhenish to fence against the horrors of the tale.

CON. It is about my own uncle and godfather, Albert of Horsheim.

WIC. I have seen him—he was a gallant warrior.

CON. Well! He was long absent in the Bohemian wars. In an expedition he was benighted, and came to a lone house on the edge of a forest: he and his followers knocked repeatedly for entrance in vain. They forced the door, but found no inhabitants.

FRANK. And they made good their quarters?

CON. They did; and Albert retired to rest in an upper chamber. Opposite to the bed on which he threw himself was a large mirror. At midnight he was awaked by deep groans: he cast his eyes upon the mirror, and saw—

FRANK. Sacred Heaven! Heard you nothing?

WIC. Ay, the wind among the withered leaves. Go on, Conrad. Your uncle was a wise man.

CON. That's more than gray hairs can make other folks.

WIC. Ha! stripling, art thou so malapert? Though thou art Lord Henry's page, I shall teach thee who commands this party.

ALL SOLDIERS. Peace, peace, good Wickerd: let Conrad proceed.

CON. Where was I?

FRANK. About the mirror.

CON. True. My uncle beheld in the mirror the reflection of a human face, distorted and covered with blood. A voice pronounced articulately, "It is yet time." As the words were spoken, my uncle discerned in the ghastly visage the features of his own father.

SOLDIER. Hush! By St. Francis I heard a groan. (They start up all but WICKERD.)

WIC. The croaking of a frog, who has caught cold in this bitter night, and sings rather more hoarsely than usual.

FRANK. Wickerd, thou art surely no Christian. (They sit down, and close round the fire.)

CON. Well—my uncle called up his attendants, and they searched every nook of the chamber, but found nothing. So they covered the mirror with a cloth, and Albert was left alone; but hardly had he closed his eyes when the same voice proclaimed, "It is now too late!" the covering was drawn aside, and he saw the figure—

FRANK. Merciful Virgin! It comes. (All rise.)

WIC. Where? what?

CON. See you figure coming from the thicket!

Enter MARTIN, in the monk's dress, much disorder'd: his face is very pale and his steps slow.

WIC. (levelling his pike). Man or devil, which thou wilt, thou shalt feel cold iron if thou budget a foot nearer. (MARTIN stops.) Who art thou? What dost thou seek?

MAR. To warm myself at your fire. It is deadly cold.

WIC. See there, ye cravens, your apparition is a poor benighted monk: sit down, father. (They place MARTIN by the fire.) By heaven, it is Martin—our Martin! Martin, how fares it with thee? We have sought thee this whole night.

MAR. So have many others (vacantly).

CON. Yes, thy master.

MAR. Did you see him too?

CON. Whom? Baron George?

MAR. No! my first master, Arnolf of Ebersdorf.

WIC. He raves.

MAR. He passed me but now in the wood, mounted upon his old black steed; its nostrils breathed smoke and flame; neither tree nor rock stopped him. He said, "Martin, thou wilt return this night to my service?"

WIC. Wrap thy cloak around him, Francis; he is distracted with cold and pain. Dost thou not recollect me, old friend?

MAR. Yes, you are the butler at Ebersdorf: you have the charge of the large gilded cup, embossed with the figures of the twelve apostles. It was the favorite goblet of my old master.

CON. By our Lady, Martin, thou must be distracted indeed, to think our master would intrust Wickerd with the care of the cellar.

MAR. I know a face so like the apostate Judas on that cup, I have seen the likeness when I gazed on a mirror.

WIC. Try to go to sleep, dear Martin; it will relieve thy brain. (Footsteps are heard in the wood.) To your arms! (They take their arms.)

Enter two Members of the Invisible Tribunal, muffled in their cloaks.

CON. Stand! Who are you?

1 MEM. Travellers benighted in the wood.

WIC. Are ye friends to Aspen or Maltingen?

1 MEM. We enter not into their quarrel: we are friends to the right.

WIC. Then are ye friends to us, and welcome to pass the night by our fire.

2 MEM. Thanks. (They approach the fire, and regard MARTIN very earnestly.)

CON. Hear ye any news abroad?

2 MEM. None: but that oppression and villany are rife and rank as ever.

WIC. The old complaint.

1 MEM. No! never did former age equal this in wickedness; and yet, as if the daily commission of enormities were not enough to blot the sun, every hour discovers crimes which have lain concealed for years.

CON. Pity the Holy Tribunal should slumber in its office.

2 MEM. Young man, it slumbers not. When crim-inans are ripe for its vengeance, it falls like the bolt of Heaven.

MAR. (attempting to rise). Let me be gone.

CON. (detaining him). Whither now, Martin?

MAR. To mass.

1 MEM. Even now, we heard a tale of a villain who, ungrateful as the frozen adder, stung the bosom that had warmed him into life.

MAR. Conrad, bear me off; I would be away from these men.

CON. Be at ease, and strive to sleep.

MAR. Too well I know—I shall never sleep again.

2 MEM. The wretch of whom we speak became, from revenge and lust of gain, the murderer of the master whose bread he did eat.

WIC. Out upon the monster!

1 MEM. For nearly thirty years was he permitted to eumber the ground. The miscreant thought his crime was concealed; but the earth which groaned under his footsteps—the winds which passed over his unhallowed head—the stream which he polluted by his lips—the fire at which he warmed his blood-stained hands—every element bore witness to his guilt.

MAR. Conrad, good youth, lead me from hence, and I will show thee where, thirty years since, I deposed a mighty bribe.

[CON. Be patient, good Martin.

WIC. And where was the miscreant seized?

[The two MEMBERS suddenly lay hands on MARTIN, and draw their daggers; the soldiers spring to their arms.

1 MEM. On this very spot.

WIC. Traitors, unloose your hold!

1 MEM. In the name of the Invisible Judges, I charge ye, impede us not in our duty.

[All sink their weapons, and stand motionless.

MAR. Help! help!

1 MEM. Help him with your prayers!

[He is dragged off. The scene shuts.

ACT V.—SCENE I.

The subterranean Chapel of the Castle of Griefenhaus. It seems deserted and in decay. There are four entrances, each defended by an iron portal. At each door stands a Warder clothed in black, and masked, armed with a naked sword. During the whole Scene they remain motionless on their posts. In the centre of the Chapel is the ruinous Altar, half sunk in the ground, on which lie a large book, a dagger, and a coil of ropes, besides two lighted tapers. Antique stone benches of different heights around the Chapel. In the back Scene is seen a dilapidated entrance into the Sacristy, which is quite dark.

Various Members of the Invisible Tribunal enter by the four different doors of the Chapel. Each whispers something as he passes the Warder, which is answered by an inclination of the head. The costume of the Members is a long black robe, capable of muffling the face: some wear it in this manner; others have their faces uncovered, unless on the entrance of a stranger: they place themselves in profound silence upon the stone benches.

Enter COUNT RODERIC, dressed in a scarlet cloak of the same form with those of the other Members. He takes his place on the most elevated bench.

ROD. Warders, secure the doors! (The doors are barred with great care.) Herald, do thy duty!

[MEMBERS all rise.—HERALD stands by the altar.

HER. Members of the Invisible Tribunal, who judge in secret, and avenge in secret, like the Deity, are your hearts free from malice, and your hands from blood-guiltiness?

[All the members incline their heads.

ROD. God pardon our sins of ignorance, and preserve us from those of presumption.

[AGAIN the members solemnly incline their heads.

HER. To the east, and to the west, and to the north, and to the south, I raise my voice; wherever there is treason, wherever there is blood-guiltiness, wherever there is sacrilege, sorcery, robbery, or perjury, there let this curse alight, and pierce the marrow and the bone. Raise, then, your voices, and say with me, woe! woe, unto offenders!

ALL. Woe! woe!

[MEMBERS sit down.

HER. He who knoweth of an unpunished crime, let him stand forth as bound by his oath when his hand was laid upon the dagger and upon the cord, and call to the assembly for vengeance!

MEM. (rises, his face covered). Vengeance! vengeance! vengeance!

ROD. Upon whom dost thou invoke vengeance?

ACUSER. Upon a brother of this order, who is sworn and perjured to its laws.

ROD. Relate his crime.

ACCU. This perjured brother was sworn, upon the steel and upon the cord, to denounce malefactors to the judgment seat, from the four quarters of heaven, though it were the spouse of his heart, or the son whom he loved as the apple of his eye; yet did he conceal the guilt of one who was dear unto him; he folded up the crime from the knowledge of the tribunal; he removed the evidence of guilt, and withdrew the criminal from justice. What does his perjury deserve?

ROD. Accuser, come before the altar; lay thy hand upon the dagger and the cord, and swear to the truth of thy accusation.

ACCU. (his hand on the altar). I swear!

ROD. Wilt thou take upon thyself the penalty of perjury, should it be found false?

ACCU. I will.

ROD. Brethren, what is your sentence?

[The members confer a moment in whispers—a silence.
ELDEST MEM. Our voice is, that the perfured brother merits death.

ROD. Accuser, thou hast heard the voice of the assembly; name the criminal.

ACCU. George, Baron of Aspen.

[A murmur in the assembly.

A MEM. (suddenly rising). I am ready, according to our holy laws, to swear, by the steel and the cord, that George of Aspen merits not this accusation, and that it is a foul calumny.

ACCU. Rash man! gagest thou an oath so lightly? MEM. I gage it not lightly. I proffer it in the cause of innocence and virtue.

ACCU. What if George of Aspen should not himself deny the charge?

MEM. Then would I never trust man again.

ACCU. Hear him, then, bear witness against himself. (Threws back his mantle.)

ROD. Baron George of Aspen!

GEO. The same—prepared to do penance for the crime of which he stands self-accused.

ROD. Still, canst thou disclose the name of the criminal whom thou hast rescued from justice, on that condition alone thy brethren may save thy life.

GEO. Thinkest thou I would betray for the safety of my life a secret I have preserved at the breach of my word?—No! I have weighed the value of my obligation—I will not discharge it—but most willingly will I pay the penalty!

ROD. Retire, George of Aspen, till the assembly pronounce judgment.

GEO. Welcome be your sentence—I am weary of your yoke of iron. A light beams on my soul. Woe to those who seek Justice in the dark haunts of mystery and of cruelty! She dwells in the broad blaze of the sun, and Mercy is ever by her side. Woe to those who would advance the general weal by trampling upon the social affections! they aspire to be more than men—they shall become worse than tigers. I go: better for me your altars should be stained with my blood than my soul blackened with your crimes.

[Exit George, by the ruinous door in the back scene, into the sacristy.

ROD. Brethren, sworn upon the steel and upon the cord to judge and to avenge in secret, without favor and without pity, what is your judgment upon George of Aspen, self-accused of perjury and resistance to the laws of our fraternity?

[Long and earnest murmurs in the assembly.

ROD. Speak your doom.

ELDEST MEM. George of Aspen has declared himself perjured;—the penalty of perjury is death!

ROD. Father of the secret judges—Eldest among those who avenge in secret—take to thee the steel and the cord;—let the guilty no longer cumber the land.

ELDEST MEM. I am fourscore and eight years old.

My eyes are dim, and my hand is feeble; soon shall I be called before the throne of my Creator;—How shall I stand there, stained with the blood of such a man?

ROD. How wilt thou stand before that throne, loaded with the guilt of a broken oath? The blood of the criminal be upon us and ours!

ELDEST MEM. So be it, in the name of God!

[He takes the dagger from the altar, goes slowly towards the back scene, and reluctantly enters the sacristy.

ELDEST JUDGE (from behind the scene). Dost thou forgive me?

GEO. (behind). I do! (He is heard to fall heavily.)

[Re-enter the old judge from the sacristy. He lays on the altar the bloody dagger.

ROD. Hast thou done thy duty?

ELDEST MEM. I have. (He faints.)

ROD. He swoons. Remove him.

[He is assisted off the stage. During this four members enter the sacristy, and bring out a bier covered with a pall, which they place on the steps of the altar. A deep silence.

ROD. Judges of evil, dooming in secret, and avenging in secret, like the Deity: God keep your thoughts from evil, and your hands from guilt.

BER. I raise my voice in this assembly, and cry, Vengeance! vengeance! vengeance!

ROD. Enough has this night been done—(he rises and brings Bertram forward.) Think what thou dost—George has fallen—it were murder to slay both mother and son.

BER. George of Aspen was thy victim—a sacrifice to thy hatred and envy. I claim mine, sacred to justice and to my murdered brother. Resume thy place!—thou canst not stop the rock thou hast put in motion.

ROD. (resumes his seat). Upon whom callest thou for vengeance?

BER. Upon Isabella of Aspen.

ROD. She has been summoned.

HERALD. Isabella of Aspen, accused of murder by poison, I charge thee to appear, and stand upon thy defence.

[Three knocks are heard at one of the doors—it is opened by the warder.

Enter Isabella, the veil still wrapped around her head, led by her conductor. All the members muffle their faces.

ROD. Uncover her eyes.

[The veil is removed. Isabella looks wildly round.

ROD. Knowest thou, lady, where thou art?

ISA. I guess.

ROD. Say thy guess.

ISA. Before the avengers of blood.

ROD. Knowest thou why thou art called to their presence?

ISA. No.

ROD. Speak, accuser.

BER. I impeach thee, Isabella of Aspen, before this awful assembly, of having murdered, privily and by poison, Arnolf of Ebersdorf, thy first husband.
Rod. Canst thou swear to the accusation?
Ber. (his hand on the altar). I lay my hand on the steel and the cord, and swear.
Rod. Isabella of Aspen, thou hast heard thy accusation. What canst thou answer?
Isa. That the oath of an accuser is no proof of guilt!
Rod. Hast thou more to say?
Isa. I have.
Rod. Speak on.
Isa. Judges invisible to the sun, and seen only by the stars of midnight! I stand before you, accused of an enormous, daring, and premeditated crime. I was married to Arnolf when I was only eighteen years old. Arnolf was wary and jealous; ever suspecting me without a cause, unless it was because he had injured me. How then should I plau and perpetrate such a deed? The lamb turns not against the wolf, though a prisoner in his den.
Rod. Have you finished?
Isa. A moment. Years after years have elapsed without a whisper of this foul suspicion. Arnolf left a brother: though common fame had been silent, natural affection would have been heard against me—why spoke he not my accusation? Or has my conduct justified this horrible charge? No! awful judges, I may answer, I have founded cloisters, I have endowed hospitals. The goods that Heaven bestowed on me I have not held back from the needy. I appeal to you, judges of evil, can these proofs of innocence be downweighed by the assertion of an unknown and disguised, perchance a malignant, accuser?
Ber. No longer will I wear that disguise (throws back his mantle). Dost thou know me now?
Isa. Yes; I know thee for a wandering minstrel, relieved by the charity of my husband.
Ber. No, traitress! know me for Bertram of Ebersdorf, brother to him thou didst murder. Call her accomplice, Martin. Ha! turnest thou pale?
Isa. May I have some water?—(Apart.) Sacred Heaven! his vindictive look is so like—

[Water is brought.]

A Mem. Martin died in the hands of our brethren. Rod. Dost thou know the accuser, lady?
Isa. (reassuming fortitude). Let not the sinking of nature under this dreadful trial be imputed to the consciousness of guilt. I do know the accuser—know him to be outlawed for homicide, and under the ban of the empire: his testimony cannot be received.
Eld. Judge. She says truly.
Ber. (to Roderic). Then I call upon thee and William of Wolfstein to bear witness to what you know.
Rod. Wolfstein is not in the assembly, and my place prevents me from being a witness.
Ber. Then I will call another: meanwhile let the accused be removed.
Rod. Retire, lady. [Isabella is led to the sacristy.
Isa. (in going off). The ground is slippery—Heavens! it is floated with blood!

[Exit into the sacristy.]

Rod. (apart to Bertram). Whom dost thou mean to call?
[Bertram whispers.
Rod. This goes beyond me. (After a moment's thought.) But be it so. Maltingen shall behold Aspen humbled in the dust. (Aloud.) Brethren, the accuser calls for a witness who remains without: admit him.

[All muffle their faces.

Enter Rudiger, his eyes bound or covered, leaning upon two members; they place a stool for him, and unbind his eyes.
Rod. Knowest thou where thou art, and before whom?
Rud. I know not, and I care not. Two strangers summoned me from my castle to assist, they said, at a great act of justice. I ascended the litter they brought, and I am here.
Rod. It regards the punishment of perjury and the discovery of murder. Art thou willing to assist us?
Rud. Most willing, as is my duty.
Rod. What if the crime regard thy friend?
Rud. I will hold him no longer so.
Rod. What if thine own blood?
Rud. I would let it out with my poniard.
Rod. Then canst thou not blame us for this deed of justice. Remove the pall. (The pall is lifted, beneath which is discovered the body of George pale and bloody. Rudiger staggers towards it.)
Rud. My George! my George! Not slain manly in battle, but murdered by legal assassins. Much, much may I mourn thee, my beloved boy; but not now—never will I shed a tear for thy death till I have cleared thy fame.—Hear me, ye midnight murderers, he was innocent (raising his voice)—upright as the truth itself. Let the man who dares gainsay me lift that gage. If the Almighty does not strengthen these frail limbs to make good a father's quarrel, I have a son left who will vindicate the honor of Aspen, or lay his bloody body beside his brother's.
Rod. Rash and insensate! Hear first the cause. Hear the dishonor of thy house.
Isa. (from the sacristy). Never shall he hear it till the author is no more! (Rudiger attempts to rush towards the sacristy, but is prevented. Isabella enters wounded, and throws herself on George's body.)
Isa. Murdered for me—for me! my dear, dear son!
Rud. (still held). Cowardly villains, let me loose! Maltingen, this is thy doing! Thy face thou wouldst disguise, thy deeds thou canst not! I defy thee to instant and mortal combat!
Isa. (looking up). No! no! endanger not thy life! Myself! myself! I could not bear thou shouldst know—Oh! (Dies.)
Rud. Oh! I wish me go—but let me try to stop her blood, and I will forgive all.
Rod. Drag him off and detain him. The voice of lamentation must not disturb the stern deliberation of justice.
RUD. Blood-hound of Maltingen! Well beseems thee thy base revenge! The marks of my son's lance are still on thy craven crest! Vengeance on the band of ye! [RUDGER is dragged off to the sacristy.

ROD. Brethren, we stand discovered! What is to be done to him who shall descry our mystery?

ELDEST JUDGE. He must become a brother of our order, or die!

ROD. This man will never join us! He cannot put his hand into ours, which are stained with the blood of his wife and son: he must therefore die! (Murders in the assembly.) Brethren! I wonder not at your reluctance; but the man is powerful, has friends and allies to buckler his cause. It is over with us, and with our order, unless the laws are obeyed. (Fainter murmurs.) Besides, have we not sworn a deadly oath to execute these statutes? (A dead silence.) Take to thee the steel and the cord (to the eldest judge).

ELDEST JUDGE. He has done no evil—he was the companion of my battle—I will not!

ROD. (to another). Do thou—and succeed to the rank of him who has disobeyed. Remember your oath! (Member takes the dagger, and goes irresolutely forward; looks into the sacristy, and comes back.)

MEM. He has fainted—faintedin anguish for his wife and his son; the bloody ground is strewed with his white hairs, torn by those hands that have fought for Christendom. I will not be your butcher.—(Throes down the dagger.)

BER. Irresolute and perjured! the robber of my inheritance, the author of my exile, shall die!

ROD. Thanks, Bertram. Execute the doom—secure the safety of the holy tribunal!

[BERTRAM seizes the dagger, and is about to rush into the sacristy, when three loud knocks are heard at the door.

ALL. Hold! Hold!

[The Duke of Bavaria, attended by many members of the Invisible Tribunal, enters, dressed in a scarlet mantle trimmed with ermine, and wearing a ducal crown. He carries a rod in his hand. All rise. A murmur among the members, who whisper to each other, "The Duke," "The Chief," &c.

ROD. The Duke of Bavaria! I am lost.

DUKE (sees the bodies). I am too late—the victims have fallen.

HEN. (who enters with the Duke). Gracious Heaven! Oh, George!

ROD. (from the sacristy). Henry—it is thy voice—save me! [HENRY rushes into the sacristy.

DUKE. Roderic of Maltingen, descend from the seat which thou hast dishonored. (Roderic leaves his place, which the Duke occupies.) Thou standest accused of having perverted the laws of our order; for that, being a mortal enemy to the House of Aspen, thou hast abused thy sacred authority to pander to thy private revenge; and to this Wolfstein has been witness.

ROD. Chief among our circles, I have but acted according to our laws.

DUKE. Thou hast indeed observed the letter of our statutes, and woe am I that they do warrant this night's bloody work! I cannot do unto thee as I would, but what I can I will. Thou hast not indeed transgressed our law, but thou hast wrested and abused it: kneel down, therefore, and place thy hands betwixt mine. (Roderic kneels as directed.) I degrade thee from thy sacred office. (Spreads his hands, as pushing Roderic from him.) If after two days thou darest to pollute Bavarian ground by thy footsteps, be it at the peril of the steel and the cord. (Roderic rises.) I dissolve this meeting. (All rise.) Judges and condemners of others, God teach you knowledge of yourselves! (All bend their heads—Duke breaks his rod, and comes forward.)

ROD. Lord Duke, thou hast charged me with treachery—thou art my liege lord—but who else dares maintain the accusation, lies in his throat.

HEN. (rushing from the sacristy). Villain! I accept thy challenge!

ROD. Vain boy! my lance shall chastise thee in the lists—there lies my gage.

DUKE. Henry, on thy allegiance, touch it not. (To RODERIC.) Lists shalt thou never more enter; lance shalt thou never more wield. (Draws his sword.) With this sword wast thou dubbed a knight; with this sword I dishonor thee—I thy prince (strikes him slightly with the flat of the sword), I take from thee the degree of knight, the dignity of chivalry. Thou art no longer a free German noble; thou art honorless and rightless; the funeral obsequies shall be performed for thee as for one dead to knighthood and to fair fame; thy spurs shall be hacked from thy heels; thy arms baffled and reversed by the common executioner. Go, fraudulent and dishonored, hide thy shame in a foreign land! (RODERIC shows a dumb expression of rage.) Lay hands on Bertram of Ebersdorf: as I live, he shall pay the forfeiture of his outlawry. Henry, aid us to remove thy father from this charnel-house. Never shall he know the dreadful secret. Be it mine to soothe his sorrows, and to restore the honor of the House of Aspen.
Goetz of Berlichingen, with the Iron Hand.

PREFACE.

Goetz of Berlichingen, the hero of the following drama, flourished in the fifteenth century, during the reign of Maximilian the First, Emperor of Germany. Previous to this period every German noble holding a fief immediately from the emperor exercised on his estate a species of sovereignty subordinate to the imperial authority alone. Thus, from the princes and prelates possessed of extensive territories, down to the free knights and barons, whose domains consisted of a castle and a few acres of mountain and forest ground, each was a petty monarch upon his own property, independent of all control but the remote supremacy of the emperor.

Among the extensive rights conferred by such a constitution, that of wagging war against each other by their own private authority was most to the taste of proud and military barons. These private wars were called feuds, and the privilege of carrying them on was named Fiaustrecht (club-law). As the empire advanced in civilization, the evils attending feuds became dreadfully conspicuous; each petty knight was by law entitled to make war upon his neighbors without any further ceremony than three days previous defiance by a written form called Feldbrief. Even the Golden Bull, which remedied so many evils in the Germanic body, left this dangerous privilege in full vigor. In time, the residence of every free baron became a fortress, from which, as his passions or avarice dictated, sallied a band of marauders, to back his quarrel, or to collect an extorted revenue from the merchants who presumed to pass through his domain. At length whole bands of these freebooting nobles used to league together for the purpose of mutual defence against their more powerful neighbors, as likewise for that of predatory incursions against the princes, free towns, and ecclesiastic states of the empire, whose wealth tempted the needy barons to exercise against them their privilege of waging private war. These confederacies were distinguished by various titles expressive of their object: we find among them the Brotherhood of the Mace, the Knights of the Bloody Sleeve, &c., &c. If one of the brotherhood was attacked, the rest marched without delay to his assistance; and thus, though individually weak, the petty feudatories maintained their ground against the more powerful members of the empire. Their independence and privileges were recognized and secured to them by many edicts; and though hated and occasionally oppressed by the princes and ecclesiastic authorities, to whom in return they were a scourge and a pest, they continued to maintain tenaciously the good old privilege (as they termed it) of Fiaustrecht, which they had inherited from their fathers. Amid the obvious mischiefs attending such a state of society, it must be allowed that it was frequently the means of calling into exercise the highest heroic virtues. Men daily exposed to danger, and living by the constant exertions of their courage, acquired the virtues as well as the vices of a savage state; and among many instances of cruelty and rapine occur not a few of the most exalted valor and generosity. If the fortress of a German knight was the dread of the wealthy merchant and abbot, it was often the ready and hospitable refuge of the weary pilgrim and oppressed peasant. Although the owner subsisted by the plunder of the rich, yet he was frequently beneficent to the poor, and beloved by his own family dependents and allies. The spirit of chivalry doubtless contributed much to soften the character of these marauding nobles. A respect for themselves taught them generosity towards their prisoners, and certain acknowledged rules prevented many of the atrocities which it might have been expected would have marked these feuds. No German noble, for example, if made captive, was confined in fetters or in a dungeon, but remained a prisoner at large upon his parole (which was called knightly ward), either in the castle of his conqueror or in some other place assigned to him. The same species of honorable captivity was often indulged by the emperor to offenders of a noble rank, of which some instances will be found in the following pages.

Such was the state of the German nobles, when, on the 7th of August, 1495, was published the memorable edict of Maximilian for the establishment of the public peace of the empire. By this ordinance the right of private war was totally abrogated, under the penalty of the ban of the empire, to be enforced by the Imperial Chamber then instituted. This was at once a sentence of anathema secular and spiritual, containing the dooms of outlawry and excommunication. This ordinance was highly acceptable to the princes, bishops, and free towns, who had little to gain and much to lose in these perpetual feuds; and they combined to enforce it with no small severity against the petty feudatories. These, on the other hand, sensible that the very root of their importance consisted in their privilege of declaring private war, without which they foresaw they would not long be able to maintain their independence, struggled hard against the execution of this edict; by which their confederacies were declared unlawful, and all means taken from them of resisting their richer neighbors.

Upon the jarring interests of the princes and clergy on the one hand, and of the free knights and petty imperial feudatories on the other, arise the incidents of the following drama. The hero, Goetz of Berlichingen, was in reality a zealous champion for the privileges of the free knights, and was repeatedly laid under the ban of the empire for the feuds in which he was engaged, from which he was only released in consequence of high reputation for gallantry and generosity. His life was published at Nuremberg, 1731, and some account of his exploits, with a declaration of feud (Fehdbrief) issued by him against that city, will be found in Meusel's Enquiry into History, vol. iv.

While the princes and free knights were thus banded against each other, the peasants and bondsmen remained in the most abject state of ignorance and oppression. This occasioned at different times the most desperate insurrections, resembling in their nature, and in the atrocities committed by the furious insurgents, the rebellions of Tyler and Cade in England, or that of the Jacquerie in France. Such an event occurs in the following tragedy. There is also a scene founded upon the noted institution called the Secret or Invisible Tribunal. With this extraordinary judicatory, the members and executioners of which were unknown, and met in secret to doom to death those criminals whom other courts of justice could not reach, the English reader has been made acquainted by several translations from the German, particularly the excellent romances called Herman of Unna and Alf von Dalman.

The following drama was written by the elegant author of the Sorrows of Werter, in imitation, it is said, of the manner of Shakespear. This resemblance is not to be looked for in the style or expression, but in the outline of the characters and mode of conducting the incidents of the piece. In Germany it is the object of enthusiastic admiration; partly owing, doubtless, to the force of national partiality towards a performance in which the ancient manners of the country are faithfully and forcibly painted. Losing, however, this advantage, and under all the defects of a translation, the translator ventures to hope that in the following pages there will still be found something to excite interest. Some liberties have been taken with the original, in omitting two occasional disquisitions upon the civil law as practiced in Germany. Literal accuracy has been less studied in the translation than an attempt to convey the spirit and general effect of the piece. Upon the whole, it is hoped the version will be found faithful; of which the translator is less distrustful, owing to the friendship of a gentleman of high literary eminence, who has obligingly taken the trouble of superintending the publication.

EDINBURGH, 3d February, 1799.

Dramatis Personæ.

Maximilian, Emperor of Germany.
Goetz von Berlichingen, a free Knight of the Empire.
Elizabeth, his Wife.
Maria, his Sister.
Charles, his Son—a boy.
George, his Page.
Bishop of Bamberg.
Adelbert von Weislingen, a free German Knight of the Empire.
Adela von Waldorf, Widow of the Count von Waldorf.
Liebraut, a Courtier of the Bishop's.
Abbott of Fulda, residing at the Bishop's Court.
Olearius, a Doctor of Laws.
Brother Martin, a Monk.
Hans von Selbiss, a Free Knight in all.
Francis von Seckingen, a Squire to Selbiss.
Leese, a Cavalier.
Francis, Squire to Weislingen.
Female Attendant on Adela.
President, Accuser, and Avenger of the Secret Tribunal.
Mezler, Sievers.
Link, Kohl, Wild, Imperial Commissioners.
Two Merchants of Nuremberg.
Magistrates of Heilbron.
Maximilian Stump, a Vassal of the Palsgrave.
An Unknown.
Bride's Father, Peasants.
Bridegroom, Gypsy Captain.
Gipsy Mother and Women.
Sticks and Wolf, Gipsies.
Imperial Captains.
Imperial Officers.
Innkeeper.
Scout
Sergeant-at-arms.

Imperial Soldiers—Troopers belonging to Goetz, to Selbiss, to Seckingen, and to Weislingen—Peasants—Gipsies—Judges of the Secret Tribunal—Gaulers, Courtiers, &c., &c., &c.
Goetz of Berlichingen.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

An Inn at Schwarzenberg in Franconia.

MEZLER and SIEVERS. Two Swabian Peasants, are seated at a table—At the fire, at some distance from them, two Cavaliers from Bamberg—the Innkeeper.

Siev. Hansel! another cup of brandy—and Christian measure.

Innk. Thou art a Never-enough.

Mez. (apart to Sievers). Repeat again that about Berlichingen—These Bambergers seem to take offense; they look sulky.

Siev. Bambergers!—What are they about here?

Mez. Weislingen has been two days up yonder at the castle with the Earl—they came with him from I know not where; they are his attendants—He is about to return back to Bamberg.

Siev. Who is that Weislingen?

Mez. The Bishop of Bamberg's right hand! a powerful lord, who lies lurking for the means of playing Goetz some trick.

Siev. He had better take care of himself.

Mez. Prithee tell that story once more. (Aloud.) How long is it since Goetz had a new dispute with the Bishop? I thought all had been reconciled and smoothed up between them.

Siev. Ay! reconciliation with priests!—When the Bishop saw he could do no good, and always got the worse at hard blows, he complained to the Circle, and took care to make a good accommodation; while honest Berlichingen was condemned unheard, as he always is, even when he has the right.

Mez. God bless him! a worthy nobleman.

Siev. Only think! Was it not shameful? They have now imprisoned a page of his, even without the least crime; but they will be soon mauled for that.

Mez. How stupidly the last enterprise misgave! The Priest would have been in a furious chafe.

Siev. I do not believe it was owing to negligence—Look you, all had been discovered by Goetz's spies; we had the very best intelligence when the Bishop would come from the baths, with how many attendants, and which way; and, had it not been betrayed by some false brother, Goetz would have blessed his bath for him.

1st Bam. What are you prating there about our Bishop? I think you seek a scuffle.

Siev. Mind your own matters; you have nothing to do with our table.

2d Bam. Who taught you to speak disrespectfully of our Bishop?

Siev. Am I to answer your questions?—Only mind the gluttons. (The 1st Bamberger strikes him a box on the ear.)

Mez. Fell the hound dead.

2d Bam. Here, if you dare—

[They fall upon each other; a scuffle.] Innk. (separating them). Will you remain quiet? Zounds! Get out of the house if you have anything to do together: in this place I will have order and decency. (He gets the Bamberg cavaliers out at the door.) And what did you want, ye asses?

Mez. No bad names, Hansel! your glasses may suffer. Come, comrade, we'll go and have the game out.

Enter two Cavaliers.

1st Cav. What's the matter?

Siev. Ah! Good day, Peter!—Good day, Beta!—From whence?

2d Cav. (making signs). You understand, not to mention whom we serve.

Siev. Is your master Goetz far from this at present?

1st Cav. Hold your peace!—Have you had a quarrel?

Siev. You must have met the fellows without—they are Bambergers.

1st Cav. What brings them here?

Siev. They attend Weislingen, who is above with the Earl at the Castle.

1st Cav. Weislingen?

2d Cav. (aside to his companion). Peter, we have found the game.—How long has he been here?

Mez. Two days—but he goes off to-day, as I heard one of the rascals say.

1st Cav. (aside). Did I not tell thee he was here?—We have now no time to spare—Come—

Siev. Help us first to drub the Bambergers.

2d Cav. There are already two of you.—We must away—Adieu! [Exeunt both cavaliers.

Siev. Flinching dogs, these troopers! They won't fight a stroke without pay.

Mez. I could swear they have something on hand. Whom do they serve?

Siev. I should hardly tell—They serve Goetz.

Mez. So!—Well, now will we out upon these dogs—While I have a quarterstaff, I care not for their spits.

Siev. If we durst but once drub their masters so, who drag the skin over our ears! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Scene changes to the front of a Cottage in a thick forest.

Goetz von Berlichingen discovered walking among the trees before the door.

Goetz. Where linger my servants?—I must walk up and down, or sleep will overcome me—Five days and nights already upon the watch—But freedom gives relish to this mode of life; and when I have thee, Weislingen, I may have some rest. (Fills a glass of wine and drinks; looks at the flask.) Again empty—George!—While this and my courage last, I can laugh at their principles and powers!—They send round their favorite Weislingen to their uncles and cousins to calumniate my character—Very well —I am awake.—Thou didst escape me, Bishop; but thy dear Weislingen may pay the score.—George!—Does the boy not hear?—George! George!

Enter George, endeavoring to put off the corset of a full-grown man.

Goetz. What kept thee? Wert thou asleep?—What masquerade is this, in the devil's name?—Come hither; thou dost not look amiss. Don't be ashamed, boy; thou art gallant. Ah! if thou could'st but fill it!—Is it Hans's cuirass?

Geo. He wished to sleep a little, and unclasped it.

Goetz. He is more delicate than his master.

Geo. Do not be angry! I took it gently away and put it on, and took my father's old sword from the wall, and salilied out to the meadow—

Goetz. And laid about you?—Fine work among the brambles and thorns!—Is Hans asleep?

Geo. He started up and cried to me when you called—I was trying to unclasp it when I heard you twice or thrice.

Goetz. Go take back his cuirass to him, and tell him to be ready with the horses.

Geo. I have fed them and rubbed them well down; they may come out when you will.

Goetz. Bring me a stoup of wine. Give Hans a glass, and tell him to be merry—there is good cause; I expect the return of my scouts every moment.

Geo. Ah! mighty sir!

Goetz. What's the matter with thee?

Geo. May I not go along?

Goetz. Another time, George! When we are intercepting merchants and plundering wagons—

Geo. Another time!—you have said that so often.—Oh, this time, this time! I will only skull behind—just peep at a side; I will gather up all the shot arrows for you.

Goetz. The next time, George!—You must first have a proper dress; a hauberk, and a lance.

Geo. Take me with you! Had I been with you last time, you would not have lost your crossbow.

Goetz. Do you know that?

Geo. You threw it at your antagonist's head; one of his squires picked it up, and ran off with it. Don't I know it?

Goetz. Did my people tell you so?

Geo. Oh, yes; and for doing so, I play them all sorts of tunes on the fife while they dress the horses, and teach them such charming songs—

Goetz. Thou art a brave boy.

Geo. Take me with you to prove myself so.

Goetz. The next time, on my word!—thou must not go to battle unarmed as thou art—Besides, the approaching hour requires men. I tell thee, my boy, it will be a dear time—Princes shall beg their treasure from a man they hate. Go, George, give Hans his armor again, and bring me wine. (Exit George.) Where can my people stay? It is incomprehensible!—A monk!—What brings him here? (Enter Brother Martin.) Worthy father, good evening! Whither so late? Though a man of sacred peace, thou shamest many knights.

Mar. Thanks, noble sir. I stand before you an unworthy brother of the order of St. Augustin; my christened name Martin, from the holy saint.

Goetz. Thou art tired, brother Martin, and without doubt thirsty. (Enter George with wine.) Here, in good time, comes wine!

Mar. For me a draught of water. I dare drink no wine.

Goetz. Is it against your vow?

Mar. Noble sir, to drink wine is not against my vow; but because wine when drunken is against my vow, therefore I drink it not.

Goetz. How do you mean?

Mar. When thou hast eaten and drunken, thou art as it were new born—stronger, bolder, apter for action. After wine thou art double what thou shouldst be—twice as ingenious, twice as enterprising, and twice as active.

Goetz. True, I feel it so.

Mar. Therefore should'st thou drink it—but we—

[George brings water. Goetz speaks to him apart.

Goetz. Go to the road from Darbach; lie down with thy ear to the earth, and listen for the tread of horses. Return immediately. [George goes out.

Mar. But we, on the other hand, when we have eaten and drunken, are the reverse of what we should be. Our sleepy digestion depresses our mental powers; in a weak body such sloth excites desires, which increase with the cause which produced them.

Goetz. One glass, brother Martin, will not set you asleep. You have come far to-day. (Helps him to wine.) Here's to all warriors!

Mar. In God's name!—I cannot defend idle people—yet all monks are not idle; they do what they can; I am just come from St. Bede, where I slept last night. The Prior carried me into their garden, where they had raised beans, excellent salad, cabbages to a wish, and such cauliflowers and artichokes as you will hardly find in Europe.

Goetz. That is no part of your business?

[Dies out and looks anxiously after the boy.

Returns.

Mar. Would God had made me a gardener, or some other laborer; I might then have been happy! My Abbot loves me; the convent is involved in business; he knows I cannot rest idle, and so he sends me to manage what is to be done: I go to the Bishop of Constance.

Goetz. Another glass—A happy expedition!

Mar. The like—

Goetz. Why do you look at me so fixedly, brother?

Mar. I was admiring your armor.
GOETZ OF BERLICHINGEN. 819

GOETZ. Would you have liked a suit? It is heavy, and toilsome to bear.

MAR. What is not toilsome in this world? But what so much so as to renounce our very nature! Poverty, chastity, obedience—three vows, each of which singly is dreadful to humanity—united, insupportable; and to spend a lifetime under this burden, or to pant comfortless under the depressing load of an offended conscience—Ah! sir knight, what are the toils of your life compared to the sorrows of a state which, from a misinterpreted notion of the Deity, condemns as crims even those actions and desires through which we exist?

GOETZ. Were your vow less sacred, I would give you a suit of armor and a steed, and we should go together.

MAR. Would to heaven my shoulders had strength to bear harness, and my arm to unhorse an enemy!—Poor weak hand, accustomed to swing censers, to bear crosses and banners of peace, how couldst thou manage the lance and falchion? My voice, tuned only to Aves and Halleluials, would be a herald of my weakness to a superior enemy; otherwise should no vows keep me from entering an order founded by the Creator himself.

GOETZ. To our happy return! (Drinks.)

MAR. I pledge you upon your account only! Return to my prison must be to me ever unhappy. When you, sir knight, return to your walls with the consciousness of your strength and gallantry, which no fatigue can diminish; when you, for the first time after a long absence, stretch yourself unarm'd upon your bed secure from the attack of enemies, and give yourself up to a sleep sweeter than the draught after thirst,—then can I speak of happiness.

GOETZ. And accordingly it comes but seldom!

MAR. But when it does come, it is a foretaste of paradise. When you return back laden with hostile spoils, and tell, "Such a one I struck from his horse ere he could discharge his piece—such another I overthrew, horse and man,"—then you ride your castle around, and—

GOETZ. What mean you?

MAR. And your wife? (Fills a glass.) To the health of your lady! You have one?

GOETZ. A virtuous, noble wife!

MAR. Well for him who can say so; his life is doubled. The blessing was denied for me, yet was it the finishing crown of creation. (He wipes his eyes.)

GOETZ (aside). I grieve for him. The sense of his situation chills his heart.

Enter George, breathless.

Geo. My Lord, my Lord, horses at the gallop!—two of them—they for certain—

GOETZ. Bring out my steed; let Hans mount. Farewell, dear brother! Be cheerful and duteous; God will give space for exertion.

MAR. Let me request your name.

GOETZ. Pardon me—Farewell! (Gives his left hand.)

MAR. Why the left?—Am I unworthy of the knightly right hand?

GOETZ. Were you the Emperor, you must be satisfied with this. My right hand, though not useless in combat, is unresponsive to the grasp of affection. It is one with its mailed gauntlet—you see, it is iron!

MAR. Then art thou Goetz of Berlichingen. I thank thee, Heaven, who hast shown me the man whom princes hate, but to whom the oppressed throng! Let me kiss this hand, let me kiss it.

GOETZ. You must not!

MAR. Let me—let me—Thou hand, more worth than the relic through which the most sacred blood has flowed! dead though thou seemest, thou livest a witness of the noblest confidence in God.

[GOETZ adjusts his helmet and takes his lance.]

MAR. There was a monk among us about a year, who visited you when your hand was shot off before Landshut. How he used to tell us what you suffered, and your grief at being disabled for your profession of arms; till you heard of one who had also lost a hand, and yet served long a gallant knight. I shall never forget it.

Enter Peter and the other Cavalier. They speak apart with Goetz.

MAR. (going on). I shall never forget his words in the most noble, the most unreserved confidence in God: "If I had twelve hands, what would they avail me without his grace? then may I with only one and heaven to friend"—

GOETZ. In the wood of Haslach too? (Returns to Martin.) Farewell, worthy brother!

MAR. Forget me not, as I shall never forget thee!

[Exit Goetz and his troopers.

MAR. The sight of him touched my heart—He spoke not, and my spirit sunk under his—Yet it is a pleasure to have seen a great man.

Geo. Worthy sir, you will sleep here?

MAR. Can I have a bed?

Geo. No, sir! I know a bed only by hearsay; in our lodgings there is but straw.

MAR. It will serve. What is thy name?

Geo. George, sir.

MAR. George!—Thou hast a gallant patron saint.

Geo. They say he was a knight; that would I like to be!

MAR. Stop! (Takes a picture from his breviary and gives it to the page.) There thou hast him—follow his example; be brave, and fear God.

[Exit into the cottage.

Geo. Ah! what a charming gray steed!—If I had but one like that—and the gilded armor—There is an ugly dragon—At present, I shoot nothing but sparrows. Oh, St. George! make me but tall and strong; give me a lance, armor, and a horse, and then let the dragon come against me when it will.

[Exit.
SCENE III.

An apartment in Jazthausen, the Castle of Goetz of Berlichingen.

ELIZABETH, MARIA, and CHARLES discovered.

CHAR. Pray now, dear aunt, tell me again that story of the good child; it is so pretty—

MARIA. Do you tell it to me, little rogue! that I may see if you pay attention.

CHAR. Wait then till I think—"There was once upon a time a child, and his mother was sick; so the child went"—

MARIA. No, no!—"Then said his mother"—

CHAR. "I am sick"—

MARIA. "And cannot go out;"—

CHAR. "And gave him money, and said, Go and buy yourself a breakfast."—

MARIA. "The child went. There met him an old man that was"—Now, Charles!

CHAR. "that was—old"—

MARIA. Indeed!—"that was not able to walk, and said, Dear child!"—

CHAR. "give me something; I have eat not a morsel yesterday or to-day. Then the child gave him the money"—

MARIA. "that should have bought his breakfast."—

CHAR. "Then said the old man"—

MARIA. "Then the old man took the child by the hand"—

CHAR. "by the hand, and said—and became a fine beautiful saint, and said?"—

MARIA. "Dear child! the sacred Virgin rewards thee for thy benevolence through me; whatever sick person thou touchest"—

CHAR. "with the hand"—It was the right hand, I think.

MARIA. Yes.

CHAR. "he will immediately become well."—

MARIA. "Then the child went home, and could not speak for joy"—

CHAR. "and fell upon his mother’s neck and wept."—

MARIA. "Then the mother cried, What’s the matter with me? and became"—

CHAR. "became—became"—

MARIA. You do not mind—"and became well. And the child cured kings and emperors, and became so rich that he built a great abbey."—

ELIZ. I cannot understand why my husband stays. He has been away five days and nights, and he expected to have done his business much sooner.

MARIA. I am very uneasy about it. Were I married to a man who ever incurred such danger, I should die the first day.

ELIZ. Therefore I thank God, who has made me of harder stuff!

CHAR. But must my father always ride out, when it is so dangerous?

MARIA. Such is his good pleasure.

ELIZ. Indeed he must, dear Charles!

CHAR. Why?

ELIZ. Do you not remember the last time he rode out, when he brought you these fine things?

CHAR. Will he bring me any thing now?

ELIZ. I believe so. Listen: There was a poor man at Stuttgard who shot excellently with the bow, and gained a prize from the magistrates—

CHAR. How much?

ELIZ. A hundred dollars;—and afterwards they would not pay him.

MARIA. That was base, Charles.

CHAR. Shabby people!

ELIZ. The poor man came to your father, and besought him to help him to his money; then your father rode out and intercepted two conveyances of merchandise, and plagued them till they paid the money. Would not you have ridden out too?

CHAR. No—for one must go through thick woods, where there are gipsies and witches—

ELIZ. You little rogue!—Afraid of witches—

MARIA. You are right, Charles! Live at home in your castle, like a quiet Christian knight—One may do a great deal of good out of one’s own fortune. These redressers of wrongs do more harm than good by their interference.

ELIZ. Sister, you know not what you are saying—God grant our boy may turn brave as he grows up, and pull down that Weislingen, who has dealt so faithlessly with my husband!

MARIA. We cannot agree in this, Eliza—My brother is highly incensed, and thou art so also; but I am cooler in the business, and can be less invertebrate.

ELIZ. Weislingen cannot be defended.

MARIA. What I have heard of him has pleased me—Even thy husband speaks him good and affectionate—How happy was their youth when they were both pages of honor to the Margrave!

ELIZ. That may be:—But only tell me, how can the man be good who lays ambushes for his best and truest friend? who has sold his service to the enemies of my husband? and, by invidious misrepresentations, alienates from us our noble Emperor, naturally so gracious?

[Al horn winded.

CHAR. Papa! Papa!

[The worder sounds his horn. The gate opens.

ELIZ. There he comes with booty!

Enter Peter.

PETER. We have hunted—we have caught the game!—God save you, noble ladies!

ELIZ. Have you Weislingen?

PETER. Himself, and three followers.

ELIZ. How came you to stay so long?

PETER. We watched for him between Nuremberg and Bamberg, but he did not come, though we knew he had set out. At length we found him; he had struck off sideways, and was living quietly with the Earl at Schwarzenberg.
Eliz. Then will my husband have him next for an enemy.

Peter. I told this immediately to my master—Up and away we rode for the forest of Hashach. And it was curious, while we were riding thither that night, that a shepherd was watching, and five wolves fell upon the flock, and were taken. Then my master laughed and said, Good luck to us all, dear companion, both to you and us!—And the good omen overjoyed us.—Just then Weislingen came riding along with four attendants—

Maria. My heart shudders in my bosom.

Peter. My comrade and I threw ourselves suddenly on him, and clung to him as if we were one body, while my master and the others fell upon the servants. They were all taken, except one who escaped.

Eliz. I am curious to see him—Will they come soon?

Peter. Immediately. They are riding over the hill.

Maria. He will be cast down and dejected.

Peter. He looks gloomy enough.

Maria. The sight of his distress will grieve me!

Eliz. Oh! I must get food ready. You must be all hungry.

Peter. Right hungry, truly.

Eliz. Take the cellar keys and draw the best wine.

You have deserved the best. [Exit Elizabeth.

Char. I'll go with aunt.

Maria. Come then, you rogue.

[Exeunt Charles and Maria.

Peter. He'll never be his father—At his years he was in the stable—

Enter Goetz, Weislingen, Hans, and other Cavaliers as from horseback.

Goetz (laying his helmet and sword on a table). Unclasp my armor, and give me my doublet—Ease will refresh me. Brother Martin said well.—You have put us out of wind, Weislingen!

[Weislingen answers nothing, but paces up and down.

Goetz. Be of good heart! Come, unravel yourself!—Where are your clothes!—Not lost, I hope, in the scuffle? (To the attendants.) Go, ask his servants; open the trunks, and see that nothing is missing.—Or I can lend you some of mine.

Weis. Let me remain as I am—it is all one.

Goetz. I can give you a handsome clean doublet, but it is only of linen.—It has grown too little for me—I had it on at the marriage of the Lord Palsgrave, when your Bishop was so incensed at me. About a fortnight before I had sunk two of his vessels upon the Main—I was going up stairs to the venison in the inn at Heidelberg, with Francis of Seckingen. Before you get quite up, there is a landing-place with iron rails; there stood the Bishop, and gave Frank his hand as he passed, and the like to me that was close behind him. I laughed in my sleeve, and went to the Landgrave of Hanau, who was always my noble friend, and told him, "The Bishop has given me his hand, but I wot well he did not know me." The Bishop heard me, for I was speaking loud—He came to us angrily, and said, "True, I gave thee my hand, because I knew thee not indeed." To which I answered, "I marked that, my Lord; and so take your shake of the hand back again!" The manikin's neck grew red as a crab for spite, and he went up the room and complained to the Palsgrave Lewis and the Princess of Nassau.—But we have had much to do together since that.

Weis. I wish you would leave me to myself!

Goetz. Why so? I entreat you be at rest. You are in my power, and I will not misuse it.

Weis. That I am little anxious about—Your duty as a knight prescribes your conduct.

Goetz. And you know how sacred it is to me.

Weis. I am taken—What follows is indifferent.

Goetz. You should not say so. Had you been taken by a prince, and shut up fettered in a dungeon, your gaoler directed to drive sleep from your eyes—

Enter Servants with clothes. Weislingen unarms and shifts himself. Enter Charles.

Char. Good morrow, papa!

Goetz (kisses him). Good morrow, boy! How have you been behaving?

Char. Very well. Aunt says I am a good boy.

Goetz. That's right.

Char. Have you brought me any thing?

Goetz. Nothing this time.

Char. I have learned a great deal—

Goetz. Ay!

Char. Shall I tell you about the good boy?

Goetz. After dinner.

Char. And I know something else.

Goetz. What may that be?

Char. "Jaxthausen is a village and castle upon the Jaxt, which has appertained in property and heritage for two hundred years to the Lords of Berlichingen"—

Goetz. Do you know the Lord of Berlichingen? (Charles stands at him.) With all his extensive learning he does not know his own father.—Whom does Jaxthausen belong to?

Char. "Jaxthausen is a village and castle upon the Jaxt"—

Goetz. I did not ask about that—I knew every path, pass, and ford about the place, before ever I knew the name of the village, castle, or river.—Is your mother in the kitchen?

Char. Yes, papa! They are dressing a lamb, with nice white turnips.

Goetz. Do you know that too, Jack Turnspit?

Char. And my aunt is roasting an apple for me to eat after dinner—

Goetz. Can't you eat it raw?

Char. It tastes better roasted.

Goetz. You must have a tid-bit, must you?—Weislingen, I will be with you immediately—I go to see my wife.—Come, Charles!

Char. Who is that man?
Goetz. Bid him welcome.—Tell him to be cheerful.

CHAR. There's my hand, man!—Be cheerful—for the dinner will be ready soon.

WEIS. (taketh up the child and kisses him). Happy boy! that knowest no worse evil than the delay of dinner. May you live to have much joy in your son, Berlichingen!

Goetz. Where there is most light, the shades are deepest. Yet I thank God for him.—We'll see what they are about.

[Exit with CHARLES and servants.

WEIS. Oh that I could but wake and find this all a dream!—In the power of Berlichingen!—of him from whom I had so far detached myself—whose remembrance I shunned like fire—whom I hoped to overpower!—and he still the old true-hearted Goetz!—Oh, Adelbert! couldst thou recall the days when we played as children, and drove the mimic chase round this hall; then thou lovedst him, prizest him as thy soul! Who can be near him and hate him?—Alas! I am not here such as I was—Happy days! ye are gone—There in his chair by the chimney sat old Berlichingen, while we played around him, and loved each other like cherubs!—How anxious will be the Bishop and all my friends!—Well; I wit the whole country will sympathize with my misfortune. But what does it avail? Can that reflection give me the peace after which I struggle?

Re-enter Goetz with wine and beakers.

Goetz. We'll take a glass till dinner is ready. Come, sit down—think yourself at home! Consider you are once more the guest of Goetz. It is long since we have sat side by side and emptied a flagon together. (Fills.) Come: a light heart!

WEIS. Those times are over.

Goetz. God forbid! We shall hardly find more pleasant days than those which we spent together at the Margrave's Court—when we were inseparable night and day. I think with pleasure on the days of my youth. Do you remember the battle I had with the Polander, and how I broke his frizzled pate for him?

WEIS. It was at table; and he struck at you with a knife.

Goetz. However, I came off conqueror—And you had a quarrel upon the account with his comrade. We always stuck together like brave boys. (Fills and hands to Weiسيningen.) I shall never forget how the Margrave used to call us Castor and Pollux: it does me good to think of it.

WEIS. The Bishop of Wurtzburg called us so first.

Goetz. That Bishop was a learned clerk, and withal so gentle—I shall remember as long as I live how he used to caress us, praise our union, and describe the good fortune of the man who has an adopted brother in a friend.

WEIS. No more of that!

Goetz. Does it displease you? I know nothing more delightful after fatigue than to talk over old stories.

Indeed, when I recall to mind how we were almost the same being, body and soul, and how I thought we were to continue so all our lives—Was not that my sole comfort when this hand was shot away at Landshut, and when you nursed and tended me like a brother?—I hoped Adelbert would in future be my right hand.—And now—

WEIS. Alas!

Goetz. Hadst thou followed me when I wished thee to go to Brabant with me, all would have remained well. But then that unhappy turn for Court-dangling seized thee, and thy coquetting and flirting with idle women. I always told thee, when thou wouldst mix with these lounging, begging, court sycophants, and entertain them with gossiping about unlucky matches and seduced girls, and such trash as they are interested about—I always told thee, Adelbert, thou wilt become a rogue.

WEIS. Why all this?

Goetz. Would to God I could forget it, or that it were otherwise! Art thou not as free and as nobly born as any in Germany, independent, holding under the Emperor alone—and dost thou not enshroud amongst vassals? What is the Bishop to thee? Allow he is thy neighbor, and can do thee a shrewd turn, hast thou not an arm and friends to require him in kind? Art thou ignorant of the noble situation of a free knight, who rests only upon God, the Emperor, and himself, that thou canst bear thus to crawl at the footstool of a selfish, malicious priest?

WEIS. Let me speak!

Goetz. What canst thou say?

WEIS. You look upon the princes as the wolf upon the shepherd. And yet, canst thou blame them for uniting in the defence of their territories and property? Are they a moment secure from the unruly chivalry of your free knights, who plunder their vassals upon the very highroads, and sack their castles and towns? While upon the frontiers the public enemy threaten to overrun the lands of our dear Emperor, and, while he needs their assistance, they can scarce maintain their own security—is it not our good genius which at this moment suggests a mean of bringing peace to Germany, of securing the administration of justice, and giving to great and small the blessings of quiet? For this purpose is our confederacy; and dost thou blame us for securing the protection of the powerful princes our neighbors, instead of relying on that of the Emperor, who is so far removed from us, and is hardly able to protect himself?

Goetz. Yes, yes, I understand you. Weiسيingen, were the princes as you paint them, we should be all agreed—all at peace and quiet! Yes, every bird of prey naturally likes to eat its plunder undisturbed. The general weal! They will hardly acquire untimely gray hairs in studying for that!—And with the Emperor they play a fine game—Every day comes some new adviser and gives his opinion. The Emperor means well, and would gladly put things to rights—but because a great man can soon give an order, and by a single word put a thousand hands into motion, he therefore thinks his orders will be as speedily accomplished. Then come ordinances upon ordinances contradictory of each other, while the princes all the while obey those only which serve their own interest, and help them to press under their footstool their less powerful neighbors—and all the while they talk of the quiet and peace of the empire! I will be sworn, many a one thanks God in his heart that the Turk keeps the Emperor from looking into these affairs!

Weis. You view things your own way.

Goetz. So does every one. The question is, which is the right light in which they should be regarded?—And your plans are of the darkest.

Weis. You may say what you will; I am your prisoner.

Goetz. When your conscience is free, so are you.—But we talked of the general tranquility—I stood as a boy of sixteen with the Margrave at an Imperial Diet. What harangues the princes made! and worst of all, your spiritual allies—the Bishop rung into the Emperor's ears his regard for justice, till one wondered again—And now he has imprisoned a page of mine, at the very time when our quarrels were all accommodated, and I thought of nothing less. Is not all betwixt us settled? What is his business with the boy?

Weis. It was done without his knowledge.

Goetz. Then why does he not release him?

Weis. He has not borne himself as he should do.

Goetz. Not as he should do? By my honor, he has done as he should do, as surely as he was imprisoned both with your knowledge and the Bishop's! Do you think I am come into the world this very day, that I cannot see the tendency of all this?

Weis. Your suspicions do us injustice.

Goetz. Weislingen, shall I tell you the truth? Inconsiderable as I am, I am a thorn in your eyes, and Selbiss and Seekingen are no less so, while we retain our firm resolution to die sooner than to thank any one but God for the air we breathe, or pledge our faith and homage to any one but the Emperor. Hence they goad me from every quarter, blacken my character with the Emperor, and among my friends and neighbors, and spy about for advantage against me. They would fain take me out of the way; that was the reason for imprisoning the page whom I had dispatched for intelligence: and you now say he did not bear himself as he should do, because he would not betray my secrets—and thou, Weislingen, art their tool!

Weis. Berlichingen!

Goetz. No more about it—I am an enemy to long explanations; they deceive either the maker or the hearer, and for the most part both.

Enter Charles.

Char. Dinner, father!

Goetz. Good news!—Come, I hope the company of my women folks will revive you—You always liked the girls—Ay, ay, they can tell many pretty stories of you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Scene changes to the Bishop of Bamberg's Palace.

The Bishop, the Abbot of Fulda, Olearius, Liebtraut, and Courtiers at table—The dessert and wine before them.

Bishop. Are there many of the German nobility at your academy of Bologna?

Olearius. Both of nobles andburghers; and, without exaggeration, they acquire the most brilliant reputation. It is a proverb in the university, "As studious as a German noble."

Abbot. Ay!

Lieb. As studious as a German noble! What may one not live to hear? That have I never heard before.

Olearius. Yes, they are the admiration of the whole university. Some of the oldest and most learned will be created even doctors. The Emperor will doubtless be happy to intrust to them the highest offices.

Abbot. Do you know, for instance, a young man—a Hessian—

Olearius. There are many Hessians with us.

Abbot. His name was—Does nobody remember it? His mother was of the What-d'ye-call-them's?—Oh!—his father has but one eye—and is a marshal—Lieb. Von Wildenholz!

Olearius. I know him well. He is highly esteemed for his force in disputation.

Abbot. He has that from his mother.

Lieb. But I never heard that his father esteemed her the more for it.

Bishop. How call you the emperor that wrote your Corpus Juris?

Olearius. Justinian.

Bishop. A worthy prince!—To his health!

Olearius. To his memory! (They drink.)

Abbot. That must be a charming book.

Olearius. It may be called the book of books, comprehending every rule.

Abbot. Every rule!—Then the ten commandments must be in it.

Olearius. By implication; not explicitly.

Abbot. I meant so; plainly set down, without any explication.

Bishop. But the best is, you tell us that a state can be maintained in the surest peace and obedience by receiving that statute-book.

Olearius. Doubtless.

Bishop. All doctors of laws! (They drink.)

Olearius. Would men spoke thus in my country!

Abbot. Whence come you, most learned sir?

Olearius. From Frankfort, at your Eminence's service.
BISHOP. Are you not on good terms with your countrymen?—How comes that?

OLEAR. It is odd enough—but when I went last there to collect my father's effects, the populace pelted me with stones when they heard I was a civilian.

ABBOT. God keep us!

OLEAR. It is because their tribunal, which they hold in great respect, is occupied by vulgar people, ignorant of the Roman law. They decide according to certain edicts of their own, and some old customs recognized in the city and neighborhood.

ABBOT. That's very right.

OLEAR. Yes; but then the life of man is short, and in one generation causes of every description cannot be decided; therefore it is better to preserve a collection of rules to be observed through all ages—and such is our Corpus Juris, which ensures us against the mutability of judges.

ABBOT. That's a great deal better.

OLEAR. But the people are ignorant of that; and, curious as they are after novelties, hate any innovation in their laws, be it ever so much for the better. They hate a jurist as if he were a cut-purse or a subverter of the state, and become furious if one attempts to settle among them.

LIEB. You come from Frankfort?—I know the place well—we tasted of your good cheer there at the Emperor's coronation; but I know no one in that town of your name.

OLEAR. My father's name was Oilman—but after the example of many Curlians, for the decoration of the title-page of my legal treatises, I have Latinized the name to Olearius.

LIEB. You did well to disguise it:—a prophet is not honored in his own country—nor in the language thereof.

OLEAR. That was not the cause.

LIEB. Every thing has two reasons.

ABBOT. A prophet is not honored in his own country.

LIEB. But do you know why, most reverend sir?

ABBOT. Because he was born and bred up there.

LIEB. Well, that may be one reason—Another is, that upon a nearer acquaintance with these gentlemen, the rays of glory and honor that appear at a distance to invest them totally disappear. They are just like old worsted stockings in a frosty night—Draw near, and the splendor is gone!

OLEAR. It seems you are placed here to tell pleasant truths.

LIEB. When I can discover them, my mouth seldom fails to utter them.

OLEAR. Yet you hardly seem to distinguish manner and place.

LIEB. There is no matter where you place a cupping-glass, provided it draws blood.

OLEAR. Buffoons are privileged, and we know them by their scurry jests—But in future let me advise you to bear the badge of your order—a cap and bells!

LIEB. A cap!—True—should I take a fancy to have one, will you direct me to the place where you bought yours?

BISHOP. Some other subject—Not so warm, gentlemen! At table all should be fair and quiet—Choose another subject, Liebtraut.

LIEB. Near Frankfort is an ample building called the correction-house——

OLEAR. What of the Turkish expedition, please your Excellence?

BISHOP. The Emperor has it much at heart to restore peace to the empire, stop feuds, and secure the rigid administration of justice: then, according to report, he goes in person against the Turk. At present domestic dissensions find him enough to do; and the empire, spite of four years of external peace, is one scene of murder. Franconia, Swabia, the Upper Rhine, and the surrounding countries are laid waste by presumptuous and restless knights—And here, Seckingen, Selbiss with one leg, and Goetz with the iron hand, sport with the imperial mandates.

ABBOT. If his Majesty does not exert himself, these fellows will carry us off in their portmanteaus.

LIEB. He would be a sturdy fellow indeed who should carry off the wine-butt of Fuldah in a portmanteau!

BISHOP. Besides, the last has been for many years my mortal foe, and molestes me hourly—but it will not last long, I hope. The Emperor holds his court at Augsburg—we have taken our measures.—Doctor, do you know Adelbert of Weislingen?

OLEAR. No, please your Eminence.

BISHOP. If you stay till his arrival, you will have the pleasure of seeing a most noble, most accomplished, and most gallant knight.

OLEAR. He must be excellent indeed who deserves such praises from such a mouth.

LIEB. And he was bred at no university.

BISHOP. We know that. (The attendants throng to the window.) What's the matter?

ATTEND. Just now, Farber, Weislingen's servant, rode in at the Castle gate.

BISHOP. See what he brings. He will announce his master.

[Exit Liebtraut. They stand up and drink round.

LIEBTRAUT re-enters.

BISHOP. What news?

LIEB. I wish it had been told by another—Weislingen is a prisoner!

BISHOP. How?

LIEB. Berlichingen seized him and three attendants near Haslach—One is escaped to tell you.

ABBOT. A Job's messenger!

OLEAR. I grieve from my heart.

BISHOP. I will see the servant—Bring him up—I will speak with him myself. Conduct him into my cabinet.

[Exit Bishop.
SCENE V.

Scene changes to Jaxthausen.

MARI A.

Weislingen.

Maria. You love me, you say—Alas! I am perhaps but too much inclined to believe it.

Weis. Why not believe what I feel so well, that I am entirely thine! (Embraces her.)

Maria. Softly!—I gave you one kiss for earnest, but you must encroach no further.

Weis. You are too strict, Maria!—Innocent love is pleasing in the sight of Heaven.

Maria. It may be so—But I must not build upon what you say; for I have been taught that caresses are as strong as fetters, and that damsels when they love are weaker than Samson when he lost his locks.

Weis. Who taught you so?

Maria. The abbess of my convent. Till my seventeenth year I was with her—and only with you for the first time have I ceased to regret her company. She had loved, and could tell. . . . She had a most affectionate heart—Oh! she was an excellent woman!

Weis. Then you resemble her. (Takes her hand.) What would become of me were I to lose you?

Maria. That, I hope, is not likely to happen—but you must away.

Weis. I know it, dearest! and I will—Well do I feel what a treasure I have purchased by this sacrifice!—Now, blessed be your brother, and the day on which he undertook to seize me!

Maria. His heart overflowed with hope for you and himself. Farewell, he said; I go to recover my friend.

Weis. That has he done. Would that I had studied the arrangement and security of my property, instead of neglecting it, and dallying at that worthless Court!—then couldst thou have been instantly mine.

Maria. Delay enhances pleasure.

Weis. Say not so, Maria, lest I dread that thy feelings are less keen than mine.—True, I deserved punishment, deserved to lose every glimpse of this heavenly prospect—but now! to be wholly thine, to live only in thee and in thy circle of friends—far removed from the world, to live for the enjoyment of all the raptures which two hearts can bestow—What is the favor of princes, what applause of the universe, to such simple yet unequalled felicity? Many have been my hopes and wishes; henceforth I am equally above both.

Enter Goetz.

Goetz. Your page is returned already. He can scarcely bring out a word for hunger and fatigue—My wife has ordered the poor knave to be taken care of. This much I have picked out—the Bishop will not give up my boy—an imperial commission is to be granted, under which all matters are to be adjusted. But be it as he will, Adelbert, you are free:—Pledge me but your hand, that you will neither give open nor under-hand assistance to my avowed enemies.

Weis. Here I grasp thy hand. From this moment be our union and friendship as firm and unalterable as a primary law of nature!—let me take this hand also (takes Maria's hand), and with it the possession of this lovely lady.

Goetz. Dare I promise for you?

Maria (timidly). If—if it is your wish—

Goetz. By good luck our wishes will not differ on this point.—Thou needst not blush—the glance of thy eye betrays thee. Well then, Weislingen, join hands, and I say Amen!—My friend and brother!—I thank thee, sister; thou spinn'st more than flax, for thou hast drawn a thread which can fetter this wandering bird of Paradise. Yet thou look'st not quite open, Adelbert—What ails thee? I am fully happy! What I but hoped in a dream, I now see with my eyes, and feel as if I still dreamed. Now my vision is out—I thought to-night, that, in token of reconciliation, I gave thee this iron hand; and that you held it so fast that it broke away from my arm:—I started, and awoke. Had I but dreamed a little longer, I should have seen how thou didst make me a new living hand.—You must away this instant, to put in order thy castle and property. That damned Court has detained you long from both.—I must call my wife—Elizabeth!

Maria. How transported is my brother!

Weis. Yet I am still more so.

Goetz (to Maria). You will have pleasant quarters.

Maria. They say Franconia is a fine country.

Weis. And I may venture to say that my castle lies in the most delicious part of it.

Goetz. That thou may'st, and I will swear to it—Look you, here flows the Maine, around a hill clothed with cornfields and vineyards, its top crowned with a Gothic castle—then the river makes a sharp turn, and glides round behind the very rock on which it stands. The windows of the great hall look perpendicularly down upon the river—a prospect which would detain one for hours.

Enter Elizabeth.

Eliz. What wouldst thou?

Goetz. You too must give your hand, and say God bless you!—They are a pair.

Eliz. So soon?
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

GOETZ. But not unexpected.

ELIZ. May ye ever love each other with the same affection as now—and as your love, so be your happiness!

WEIS. Amen! On that condition I ensure it.

GOETZ. The bridegroom, my dear, must perform away for a while; for this great event makes it needful for him to settle some concerns at home. He must bid adieu to the Bishop's Court, in order that that connection may be broken off by degrees—Then he must rescue his property from the hands of some selfish stewards—and—But come, sister—come, Elizabeth; his squire has perhaps some private message to him.

WEIS. None but what you may hear.

GOETZ. Needless:—Franconians and Swabians now that you are one of us, we may bid their mightinesses the princes defiance to their beard.

[Elevant GOETZ, ELIZABETH, MARIA.

WEIS. (alone.) God in heaven!—and canst thou have reserved such happiness for one so unworthy? It is too much for my heart. How meanly I depended upon wretched fools, whom I thought I was governing by superiority of intrigue, subervient to the glance of homage-demanding princes!—Goetz, my faithful Goetz, thou hast restored me to myself—and my beloved Maria has completed my reformation. I feel free, as if I brought from a dungeon into the open air. Bamberg will I never more see—will snap all the shameful bands that have connected it and me. My heart rejoices, never more to undergo the degradation of struggling for boons that may be refused—he alone is great and happy who fills his own station of independence, and has neither to command nor to obey.

Enter FRANCIS.

FRAN. God greet you, noble sir! I bring you so many salutations, that I know not with which to begin—Bamberg, and ten miles around, bid God greet you.

WEIS. Welcome, Francis! Bring'st thou aught else?

FRAN. You are in such consideration at Court that it cannot be expressed.

WEIS. That will not last long.

FRAN. As long as you live—and after your death it will shine more lasting than the marble inscription upon your monument.—How they took your misfortune to heart!

WEIS. And what said the Bishop?

FRAN. His ardent curiosity poured out question upon question, without giving me time to answer. He knew your accident already; for Farber, who galloped from Haslach, had brought him the tidings—but he would hear every particular—he asked so anxiously whether you were not wounded—I told him you were safe from the hair of your scalp to the nail of your toe.

WEIS. And what said he to the treaty?

FRAN. He would have given up the page and a ransom to boot for your liberty. But he heard you were to be dismissed upon your parole, otherwise he had granted to Berlichingen all he could ask. He charged me with a thousand messages to you—more I can ever utter. Oh how he harangued! and concluded, "I cannot live without Weislingen."

WEIS. He must learn.

FRAN. What mean ye?—He bids you hasten to him—All the Court expects you.

WEIS. Let them expect on—The Court will I never, never again see.

FRAN. Not see the Court!—My gracious Lord, how comes that? Did you know what I know—could you but dream what I have seen—

WEIS. What may it be?

FRAN. The bare recital would put me mad,—Bamberg is no longer Bamberg!—An angel of heaven, in semblance of woman, has taken her abode in it, and it is become Paradise.

WEIS. No more than that?

FRAN. May I become a shaven friar, if the bare glimpse of her does not drive you frantic.

WEIS. Who is it, then?

FRAN. Adela von Walldorf.

WEIS. She! I have heard much of her beauty.

FRAN. Heard!—As well might you say I have seen music. So far is the tongue from being able to rehearse the slightest article of her beauty, that the very eye which beholds her cannot drink it all in.

WEIS. You are mad.

FRAN. That may well be. The last time I was in her company, I had no more sense than if I had been drunk; or, I may rather say, I felt at that moment like a glorified saint enjoying the angelic vision!—All my senses exalted, and more lively than ever—yet not one at their owner's command.

WEIS. Enthusiast!

FRAN. As I took leave of the Bishop, she sat by him—they played at chess—he was very gracious—he asked me to kiss, and said much, of which I understood never a syllable. As I looked on his fair antagonist, her eye was fixed upon the board, as if meditating a grand stroke—Traces of attentive intelligence around the mouth and cheek—I could have wished to be the ivory king.—The mixture of dignity and feeling on the brow—and the dazzling lustre of her neck and breast, overshadowed by her raven ringlets.

WEIS. Thou art become a poet upon the subject.

FRAN. I felt at the moment the inspiration of a bard—my whole faculties were concentrated in one object. As the Bishop ended and I made my obeisance, she looked up and said, "Carry your master the best wishes of an unknown. He must not despise them, though he is already so rich in old friends." I would have answered somewhat, but the passage betwixt my heart and my tongue was choked. I would have given my whole revenue for permission to touch but one of her fingers! As I stood thus, the Bishop threw down a pawn, and in stooping to lift it, I kissed the hem of her garment. Transport thrilled through my limbs, and I scarce know how I left the room.

WEIS. Is her husband at Court?
FRAN. She has been a widow these four months, and is at the Court of Bamberg to divert her melancholy. You will see her—and to see her is to stand in the sun of spring!

WEIS. She would make little impression on me.
FRAN. I hear you are as good as married.

WEIS. Would I were really so! My gentle Maria will be the happiness of my life. The sweetness of her soul beams through her mild blue eyes; and, like an angel composed of innocence and love, she guides me to the paths of peace and felicity!—Pack up—and then to my castle—Never will I behold Bamberg, should St. Bede come to guide me in person.

[Exit WEISLINGEN.

FRAN. (alone). God forbid!—But let me hope the best. Maria is beautiful and amiable, and I can excuse a prisoner and an invalid for loving her. In her eye is compassion and a melancholy sympathy—But in thine, Adela, is life—fire—spirit.—Would to—I am a fool—Such has one glance made me. My master must hence—I too must hence, and either recover my senses, or gaze them quite away. [Exit.

ACT II.—SCENE I.

Bamberg.—A Hall in the Bishop's Palace.

The Bishop, Adela, Liebtraut, Ladies and Courtiers discovered.

BISHOP. He will not return, they say.

ADELA. I beseech you put him out of your head.

BISHOP. What can it mean?

LIEB. Poh! The message has been repeated to him like a paternoster. He has taken a fit of obstinacy; but I think I could soon cure him.

BISHOP. Do so—Ride to him instantly.

LIEB. My commission—BISHOP. Shall be instantly made out. Spare nothing to bring him back.

LIEB. May I venture to use your name, gracious lady?

ADELA. Ay, with all manner of propriety.

LIEB. Know you that's a wide commission?

ADELA. Know you not my rank and sex sufficiently to understand in what tone I am to be spoken of to an unknown nobleman?

LIEB. In the tone of a speaking-trumpet, think I?

ADELA. You will always be a madeup.

BISHOP. Well, well, take the best horse in my stable—choose your own servants, and bring him bither.

LIEB. If I do not, say that an old woman who deals in curing warts and freckles knows more of sympathy than I.

BISHOP. Yet, what will it avail? Goetz has wholly gained him—He will be no sooner here than he will wish to return.

LIEB. He will wish it, doubtless; but can he do it? The squeeze of the hand from a prince, and the smiles of a beauty—from these could no Weislingen ever escape.—I have the honor to take my leave.

BISHOP. A good journey!

ADELA. Adieu!

BISHOP. When he is once here, I must trust to you.

ADELA. Would you make me your line-twig?

BISHOP. By no means.

ADELA. Your decoy-duck, then?

BISHOP. No—that part plays Liebtraut. I beseech you do not refuse to do what no other can.

ADELA. I will not.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Scene changes to Jaxthausen—A Hall in Goetz's Castle.

Enter GOETZ and HANS VON SELBSS.

SEL. Every one will applaud you for denouncing feud against the Nurembers.

GOETZ. It would have been a thorn in my very heart had I remained long their debtor. It is clear that they betrayed my page to the Bishop—They shall have cause to remember me.

SEL. They have an old grudge at you.

GOETZ. And I at them. I am glad they have begun the fray.

SEL. These free towns ever hold part with the priests.

GOETZ. Ay, truly do they!

SEL. But we will make hell hot for them.

GOETZ. I wish the Burgomaster, with his gold chain, would come to take a peep at us—He would stare his wits away.

SEL. I hear Weislingen is one of us—Does he really join in our league?

GOETZ. Not immediately—There are some reasons which prevent his instantly giving us assistance; but it is quite enough that he is not against us. The priest without him is what the mass would be without the priest.

SEL. When do we set forward?

GOETZ. To-morrow or next day. There are merchants coming from Bamberg and Nuremberg to the fair at Frankfort—We may strike a good blow.

SEL. So be it, in God's name.

SCENE III.

Scene returns to the Bishop's Palace at Bamberg.

ADELA and her Waiting-maid.

ADELA. He is here, sayest thou? I can scarce believe it.
SCENE IV.

Scene changes to Spessart, the Castle of Selbiss.

Enter Selbiss, Goetz, and George in the armor and dress of a cavalier.

Goetz. So, thou didst not find him, George?

Geo. He had ridden to Bamberg the day before with Liebtraut and two servants.

Goetz. I cannot see the reason of that.

Sel. I see it well—Your reconciliation was too speedy to be lasting—Liebtraut is a cunning fellow, and has inveigled him over.

Goetz. Think'st thou he would become a turncoat?

Sel. The first step is taken.

Goetz. I will never believe it. Who knows what he may have to do at Court? his affairs are unarranged. Let us hope the best.

Sel. Would to God he may deserve your good opinion, and do the best.

Goetz. A thought strikes me!—George shall to Bamberg, disguised in the spoils of the Bamberg trooper, and force the fellow to give him the password—He may then ride to the town and see how matters stand.

Geo. I have long wished to see Bamberg.

Goetz. It is thy first expedition. Take care, my boy; I should be sorry if ill luck attended it.

Geo. Never fear—I shall not go wrong, were fifty of them to gabble about me. [Exit George.

SCENE V.

Scene returns to the Bishop's Palace—His Cabinet.

The Bishop and Weislingen.

Bishop. Then thou wilt stay no longer?

Weis. You would not wish me to break my oath?

Bishop. I could wish indeed thou hadst not sworn to them. But what evil spirit possesses thee? Can I not procure thee a release from that oath? Is my credit so trifling at the imperial and Roman Courts?

Weis. The thing is done!—excuse it as you can.

Bishop. I cannot comprehend where there was the least necessity for taking such a step—Were there not a thousand other ways of procuring thy freedom?—Had we not his page? And would I not have given gold enough to boot? Our operations against him and his confederates had gone so far—but, alas! I do not reflect that I talk to my friend, who has joined him against me, and can easily counterwork the mines he himself has dug.

Weis. Gracious my Lord—

Bishop. And yet, when I again look on thy face, again hear thy voice—it is impossible—impossible!

Weis. Farewell, good my Lord!
BISHOP. I give thee my blessing—Formerly when we parted, I was wont to say “Till we meet again!”—Now—would to God we part for ever! Weis. It cannot be otherwise. BISHOP. Perhaps I may next see thee as an enemy before my walls, carrying havoc through the fertile plains of which till now thou hast been the protector! Weis. Never, my gracious Lord! BISHOP. You cannot say so. My temporal neighbors have long had a grudge at me—but while thou wert mine—Go then, Weislingen!—I have no more to say—Thou hast undone much—Go— Weis. I know not what to answer.

[Exit Bishop.

Enter Francis.

FRAN. The Lady Adela expects you. She is not well—but she will not let you go without bidding her farewell.

Weis. Come. FRAN. Do we go then for certain? Weis. This very night.

FRAN. I feel as if I were to leave the world— Weis. And I—yet I—yet I know not wherefore.

SCENE VI.

Scene changes to Adela's Apartment.

ADELA and Waiting-maid.

MAID. You are pale, gracious lady! Adela. I love him not, yet I would wish him to stay—Seest thou, I may wish his company, yet dislike him for my husband.

MAID. Does your ladyship think he will go? Adela. He has bid the Bishop farewell.

MAID. He has yet a severe struggle to make.

Adela. What meanest thou?

MAID. Gracious lady, the barbed hook is in his heart—ere he tear it away, he must bleed.

Enter Weislingen.

Weis. You are not well, gracious lady! Adela. That is indifferent to you—you leave us, leave us for ever: why do you ask whether we live or die?

Weis. You do not know me. Adela. I judge you by your actions. Weis. Appearances are deceitful. Adela. Then you are a chameleon. Weis. Could you see my heart— Adela. I should see fine things there.

Weis. Surely, your own image— Adela. Thrust into some corner like an old family picture! I beseech you, Weislingen, consider with whom you speak—Fair words are a foul insult when they are belied by actions—A discovered masquerader plays but a pitiful part. Your deeds tell us how to think of you.

Weis. Be it as you will—I am so agonized at reflecting on what I am, that I little reck what the world thinks me.

Adela. You came to take farewell.

Weis. Permit me to kiss your hand, and I will say adieu!—You clear up—I did not think—but I am troublesome—

Adela. I only wished to assist your resolution.—Then you will away?

Weis. Oh, say rather, I must. Am I not compelled by my knightly word—my solemn engagement?

Adela. Go! go! Talk of that to some forsaken damsel whose Corydon has proved forsworn.—Knightly word!—Nonsense!

Weis. You do not think so?

Adela. On my honor, you deceive yourself. What have you promised? and to whom? You have pledged your alliance to a traitor to the Emperor, at the very moment when he incurred the ban of the empire for kidnapping you upon the imperial highway. Such an agreement is no more binding than an extorted unjust oath. Every child knows what faith is to be kept with robbers—And there is more behind—By this oath you are to become an enemy to the peace of the empire—a disturber of domestic happiness and tranquillity—a rebel to the Emperor—the associate of robbers and marauders—of Goetz of Berlichingen, Frank of Seekingen, and Hans of Selbiss; men with hearts hard as the steel of their blades—With these freebooters canst thou have aught in common?—thou, Weislingen, with thy gentle temper!

Weis. Did you but know them—

Adela. I would Justice knew that Goetz! He has a high domineering soul—and woe to thee, therefore, Weislingen!—Go, and try to be his companion—Go, and receive his commands:—Thou art mild, gentle—

Weis. And he too—

Adela. But you are yielding, and he stubborn. Soon will he drive thee from thy own opinion. Thou wilt become the slave of a marauding baron; thou that may'st command princes!—Twere a pity to dissaude you from so glorious a situation.

Weis. Did you but know how kindly he received me—

Adela. Gentle soul!—Think you so much of that? It was his duty as a knight—And what would he have gained by acting otherwise—or what wouldst thou have lost?—You would have been but the more welcome here. An overbearing man like—

Weis. You speak of your enemy.

Adela. I speak for your freedom; yet I know not why I should take interest in it—Farewell!

Weis. Permit me but a moment. (Takes her hand. A pause.)

Adela. Have you sought to say?

Weis. I must hence.

Adela. Then go—

Weis. Gracious lady, I cannot.
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

ADELA. You must.
WEIS. Must this be the last—
ADELA. I am ill—very unable to—
WEIS. Look not on me thus!
ADELA. Thou art our enemy—Should we smile at thee!
WEIS. Adela!

Enter Francis.
FRAN. Noble sir, the Bishop inquires for you.
ADELA. Go! go!
FRAN. He begs you to come instantly.
ADELA. Be gone! be gone!
WEIS. I do not say adieu: I shall see you again.

[Exeunt Weislingen and Francis.

ADELA. Me again? We must provide for that. Margaret, when he comes, refuse him admittance. Say I am ill—have a headache—sleep—any thing. This detains him, or nothing.

[Exeunt.

A pause. Re-enter Weislingen and Francis.
WEIS. She will not see me!
FRAN. Night draws on; shall we saddle?
WEIS. She will not see me!
FRAN. Are you pleased to want the horses?
WEIS. It is too late; we stay here.
FRAN. God be praised!
WEIS. (alone.) Thou dost stay!—Be on thy guard—the risk is infinite. My horse started at the entrance of the palace gate—it was my good angel stood before him—he knew the dangers I was hurrying to meet. Yet it would be unjust to leave in confusion the affairs intrusted to me by the Bishop, at least without arranging them, so that they may be understood by my successor. That I can do without breach of faith to Berlichingen and his league—and that done they shall not detain me—Yet it would have been better that I had never come. But I will away to-morrow or next day—'Tis decided.

SCENE VII.

Scene changes to a Cottage—The Bridal of a Peasant.

The Bride's Father, Bride, Bridegroom, and other country-folks, Goetz of Berlichingen, and Hans of Selbiss, all discovered at table—Troopers, Cavaliers, and Peasants attend.

GOETZ. It was a good fancy to make up your lawsuit by a merry bridal.

BRIDE'S FA. Better than ever I could have dreamed of, noble sir—to spend my days peaceably and quietly with my neighbor, and my daughter to look after me.

BRIDGEGR. And I to get the bone of contention and a pretty wife into the bargain! Ay, the prettiest in the whole village. Would to God we had consulted your Honor sooner!

GOETZ. How long have you been at law?
BRIDE'S FA. About eight years—For these periwiggled gentry never give a decision unless you can tear it out of their very heart. The devil fly away with the assessor Sapupi for a damned swarthy Italian!

BRIDGEGR. Yes, he's a pretty fellow; I was before him twice.

BRIDE'S FA. I thrice—and it cost me many a fair guelder.

GOETZ. Come, good luck to the bride! (Drinks.)

BRIDE'S FA. Amen!—Ay, the assessor alone picked from me eighteen gold guelders. God curse him!

BRIDGEGR. Who?

BRIDE'S FA. Why, who else but Sapupi?

GOETZ. The judge!—that is infamous.

BRIDE'S FA. He asked twenty: and there had I to pay them in his fine country-house. I thought my heart would have broken with anxiety. For, look you, my Lord, I am well enough off with my house and little farm, but how could I raise the ready cash? He did not even leave me a single gold cross to carry me on my journey—At last I took courage and told him my case: when he saw I was desperate, he thrust me from him, and pushed me out of doors.

BRIDGEGR. Impossible!—Sapupi?

BRIDE'S FA. Ay, just he; what do you start at?

BRIDGEGR. The devil! He took fifteen guelders from me too!

BRIDE'S FA. Curse him!

SEL. They call us robbers, Goetz!

BRIDE'S FA. Bribed on both sides!—That delayed the judgment—Oh the seecordel!

GOETZ. This must not be unavenged.

BRIDE'S FA. What can we do?

GOETZ. Why, go to Spurs, where there is an imperial visitation; make your complaint; they must listen to it, and help you to your own again.

BRIDGEGR. Does your Honor think we shall succeed?

GOETZ. I could promise you more surely if I had him by the ears.

SEL. The sum is worth the journey.

GOETZ. Ay; many is the day I have ridden out for the fourth part of it.

BRIDE'S FA. (to Bridegroom.) What think'st thou?

BRIDGEGR. We'll try, go as it may.

[Enter a Cavalier.

cav. The Nurembergers are set out.

GOETZ. Whereabout are they by this time?

Cav. If we ride sharply we shall just catch them in the wood betwixt Berhume and Muhlbauch.

SEL. Excellent!

GOETZ. Well, my children, God bless you, and help every man to his own!

BRIDE'S FA. Thanks, gallant sir! Will you not pass the night here?

GOETZ. It may not be. Adieu!

[Exeunt Goetz, Selbiss, and soldiers.
SCENE VIII.

Scene returns to a Hall in the Bishop’s Palace at Bamberg.

ADELA and WEISLINGEN discovered.

ADELA. Time begins to hang inexpressibly heavy here. I dare not speak seriously, and I am ashamed to trifle with you—Ennui is worse a hundred times than a slow fever.

WEIS. Tired of me already!

ADELA. Not so much of you as of your irresolution. I would you were where you wished to go, and that we had not detained you!

WEIS. Such is your sex:—First, they cherish with maternal care our infant hopes—then, like the stupid ostrich, leave them to destruction.

ADELA. You rail at women, as the losing gambler tears and curses the harmless cards which have been the instruments of his loss. But let me tell you something about men—What are you that talk of fickleness? You that are seldom even what you would wish to be, never what you should be. Holiday princes!—the envy of those who see but your outside. Oh, what would a tailor’s wife give for a necklace of the pearls on the skirt of your frock!

WEIS. You are severe.

ADELA. It is but the antistrophe to your satire. Ere I knew you, Weislingen, I felt something like the poor tailor’s wife—hundred-tongued rumor, to speak without a figure, had excited so many mouths in your praise, that I was tempted to think, Oh that I could but see this quintessence of manhood, this phoenix Weislingen!—I had my wish—

WEIS. And found the phoenix a common bird.

ADELA. No, Weislingen, I took an interest in you—

WEIS. So it appears.

ADELA. So it was—for you really surpassed your reputation. The multitude prize only the show of worth; but I do not examine so superficially as the multitude those whom I esteem—After some time’s acquaintance, something, I knew not what, was missing about you; at length my eyes were opened: I saw the energetic being never dead to the thoughts of fame—that being who was wont to pile princely project on project, till, like the mountains of the giants, they reached the clouds—I saw him at once become as querulous as a sick poet, as melancholy as a forsaken damsel, and as moody as an old bachelor. At length I supposed something of importance lay at your heart, and excused you as well as I could; but now, that from day to day it becomes worse, we must really break off our treaty; I hope you will find a companion for life better able to bear with you.

WEIS. Dismiss me, then.

ADELA. Not till all chance of your recovery is lost—Solitude is fatal in your distemper—Alas! poor soul! you need as much petting as one that has lost his first true love—and yet I won’t give you up. Give me your hand, and pardon what my affection has dictated.

WEIS. Couldst thou but love me, couldst thou but return the fervor of my passion with the least glow of sympathy—Adela, thy reproaches are very unjust. Couldst thou but guess the hundredth part of my sufferings, you would not treat me with mockery, indifference, and contempt—thou wouldst not torture me in every way so cruelly—You smile—To be satisfied with myself after the step I have taken must be the work of more than one day—To plot against him who is yet warm in my affection—

ADELA. Strange being!—To love him against whom you plot, is to send provisions to an enemy.

WEIS. I well know there needs no dallying. He now knows that I am again Weislingen; and he is not a man to brook what I have done. Besides, Adela, we are not so sluggish as you think. Our forces are hardly and watchful, our schemes are going forward, and the Diet of Augsburg will, I hope, bring them to a favorable issue.

ADELA. You go there?

WEIS. If I could carry a glimpse of hope with me! (Kisses her hand.)

ADELA. Ah! infidel!—always signs and wonders required. Go, Weislingen, and accomplish the great work! The interest of the Bishop, yours, mine, are all so wrapped together, that were it but policy—

WEIS. You jest.

ADELA. I do not jest. The haughty Duke has seized my property—Yours will not long escape Goetz; and if we do not unite together, and sway the Emperor to our side, we are lost.

WEIS. I fear nothing. The greater part of the princes are on our side—The Emperor needs assistance against the Turks, and is therefore willing to favor us. What rapture for me to rescue your fortune from rapacious invaders—to crush the mutinous chivalry of Swabia—to restore peace to the bishopric, and then!—

ADELA. One day brings on another, and Fate is mistress of the future.

WEIS. But we must lend our good-will.

ADELA. We do so.

WEIS. But seriously.

ADELA. Well then seriously—Do but go—

WEIS. Enchantress! [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.

Scene changes to Spessart.

Enter Goetz, Selbiss, and George.

SEL. You see it is as I prophesied.

GOETZ. No, no, no.

GEO. I tell you truth, believe me. I did as you directed, and with the dress and password escorted some peasants of the Lower Rhine to Bamberg, who paid my expenses for my convoy as a trooper of the Bishop,
ACT III.—SCENE I.

The Imperial Garden at Augsburg.

Enter two Merchants of Nuremberg.

1ST MER. We'll stand here till the Emperor shall pass—He is just coming up the long avenue.

2D MER. Who is with him?

1ST MER. Adelbert von Weislingen.

2D MER. The friend of the Bishop—That's lucky!

1ST MER. We'll prostrate ourselves, and I'll speak.

2D MER. See! they come.

Enter the Emperor and Weislingen.

1ST MER. He looks displeased.

EMP. I want courage, Weislingen. When I review my past life, well may I be dismayed at the recollection of so many half—ay, and wholly—ruined undertakings; and all because the pettiest feudatory of the empire prefers his own whims to its welfare.

[The merchants throw themselves at his feet.]

1ST MER. Most mighty! most gracious!

EMP. Who are ye? what seek ye?

1ST MER. Poor merchants, from your imperial city of Nuremberg;—Goetz von Berliechingen and Hans von Selbiss fell upon thirteen of us as we journeyed from the fair at Frankfort, under an escort from Bamberg—they overpowered and plundered us. We request your imperial assistance and redress, else must we beg our bread.

EMP. Sacred heaven! what is this? The one has but one hand, the other but one leg—with two hands and two legs what would they have done?

1ST MER. We most humbly beseech your Majesty to look with compassion upon our unfortunate situation.

EMP. Thus it goes:—If a merchant loses a bag of pepper, all Germany must be in arms; but when business occurs in which the imperial majesty is interested, should it concern dukedoms, principalities, or kingdoms, not a man must be disturbed.

WEIS. You come at an unsuitable time. Go, and stay here for a few days.

MERCHANTS. We recommend ourselves to your protection.

[Exeunt merchants.]

EMP. Still new disturbances—they spring like the hydra's heads!

WEIS. Which can only be checked by fire and sword.

EMP. Do you think so?

WEIS. Nothing can be more certain, since your Majesty and the princes of the empire have accommodated your other disputes. It is not the body of the state that complains of this malady—Franconia and Swabia only glow with the embers of civil discord; and even there are many of the nobles and free barons that wish for quiet. Had we but once crushed Seckingen, Selbiss—and—and—Berliechingen, the others would fall asunder; for it is their spirit which enlivens the rest.

EMP. Fain would I excuse these knights—they are noble and hardy. Should I be engaged in war, they would follow me to the field.

WEIS. It is to be wished they might know their duty—Though even in that case it would be dangerous to encourage their mutinous bravery by posts of trust. For it is the imperial mercy and mildness that they so dreadfully abuse, upon which the hope and confidence of their league rests; and it cannot be quelled till we withdraw the encouragement of their presumption, and destroy their power before the eyes of the whole world.

EMP. You advise force, then?

WEIS. I see no other means of quelling the spirit of insurrection which has spread itself abroad. And do we not hear the bitterest complaints from the nobles, that their vassals and bondsmen attach themselves to the side of these restless beings—a practice which destroys all feudal subordination, and must produce the most fearful consequences.

EMP. I shall despatch a strong force against Berlichingen and Selbiss; but I will not have them personally injured. Could they be seized prisoners, they should swear to renounce their feuds, and to remain in their own castles and territories upon their knightly parole. At the next session of the Diet we will propose this plan.

WEIS. A general exclamation of assent and joy will spare your Majesty the trouble of particular detail.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Scene changes to Jazthausen.

Enter Goetz and Francis von Seckingen.

SECK. Yes, my friend, I come to request the heart and hand of your fair sister.

GOETZ. I would you had come sooner—Weilingen during his imprisonment obtained her affections, and I gave my consent. I let the bird loose—and he now despises the benevolent hand that led him in his cage—He has flown to seek his mate God knows where!

SECK. Is this so?

GOETZ. As I tell you.

SECK. He has broken a double band. 'Tis well for you that you were not still more nearly connected with the traitor.

GOETZ. Yonder sits the poor maiden, wasting her life in lamentation and prayer.

SECK. I will comfort her.

GOETZ. What! Would you think of marrying a forsaken?

SECK. It is to the honors of both that you have been betrayed by him. Should the poor girl be caged in a cloister because the first man she knew proved a worthless renegade? Not so—I keep my purpose—She shall be empress of my castle and heart!

GOETZ. I tell you he was not indifferent to her.

SECK. Do you think I cannot efface the recollection of such a wretch?

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Scene changes to the Camp of the party sent to execute the imperial mandate.

Imperial Captain and Officers discovered.

CAPT. We must be cautious, and spare our people as much as possible. Besides, it is our strict orders to overpower and seize him alive. It will be difficult to obey—for who will match him hand to hand?

1ST OFF. 'Tis true. And he will bear himself like a wild boar. Besides, in his whole life he has never injured any of us, so each will willingly leave to the others the honor of risking their legs and arms in behalf of the Emperor.

2d OFF. 'Twere shame to us should we not fight him. Had I him once by the ears, he should not easily shake himself clear.

1ST OFF. If his jaws had hold of you, they might chance to spoil your straight back. My gentle, young sir knight, such people don't fight like a coy wench! 2d OFF. We shall see.

CAPT. By this time he must have had our summons—We must not dally. I mean to despatch a troop to seek him out.

2d OFF. Let me lead it.

CAPT. You are unacquainted with the country.

2d OFF. I have a servant who was born and bred here.

CAPT. I am glad to hear it—Forward! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Scene changes to Jazthausen.

Seckingen alone.

SECK. It goes to my wish! She looked at me from head to foot, comparing me no doubt to her gallant.—Thank God I can stand the scrutiny!—She answered little and confusedly, then with more composure—Oh, it will do some day! A proposal of marriage does not come amiss after such a cruel disappointment.

Enter Goetz.

SECK. How goes it, brother?

GOETZ. Ill:—Laid under the ban.

SECK. How?

GOETZ. There is the summons!—The Emperor has despatched a party to give my body to the beasts of the earth and the owls of heaven.

SECK. They shall first furnish them with a dinner themselves—I am here in the very nick.

GOETZ. No, Seckingen, you must leave me. Your great undertakings will be ruined should you become the enemy of the Emperor at so unseasonable a time. Besides, you can be of more use to me by remaining neuter. The worst that can happen is my being made prisoner; and then your timely good word with the Emperor, who esteems you, may rescue me out of the distress into which your untimely assistance will irremediably plunge us both. To what purpose should you do otherwise? The cry is against me; and could they say we were united, it would be only so much the louder. The Emperor pours forth this tide against me; and I should be utterly ruined, were it as easy to inspire courage into soldiers as to collect them into a body.

SCOTT. But I can privately send you a score of troopers.

GOETZ. Good!—I have already sent George to Selbiss and to my people in the neighborhood. My dear brother, when my forces are collected, they will be such a little troop as few princes can bring together.

SCOTT. It will be small against the multitude.

GOETZ. One wolf is too many for a whole flock of sheep.

SCOTT. But if they have a good shepherd?

GOETZ. Never fear!—They are mere hirelings; and even the best knight can do little if he has not his motions at his own command. It happened once to me, that, to oblige the Palsgrave, I went to serve against Conrad Schotten; then they presented me with a paper of instructions from the Chancery, and said, Thus you must conduct yourself. I threw down the paper before the magistrates, and told them I would have nothing to do with it; that something might happen unprovided for in my instructions, and that I must order my motions from the information of my own eyes.

SCOTT. Good luck, brother! I will hence, and send thee what men I can collect in haste.

GOETZ. Come first to the women—I'll have you together: I would thou hadst her promise before thou goest!—Then send me the troopers, and come here in private to carry away my Maria; for my castle, I fear me, will be shortly no abode for women.

SCOTT. We will hope the best. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.

Scene changes to Bamberg—Adela's chamber.

ADELA and FRANCIS.

ADELA. So the ban is to be enforced against both?

FRAN. Yes—and my master has the happiness to march against your enemy the Duke. Gladly would I have gone too, had I not had the still greater pleasure of being despatched to you. But I will away instantly, and soon return with pleasant news—my master so commanded me.

ADELA. How is it with him?

FRAN. He is cheerful—and commanded me to kiss your hand.

ADELA. There!—Thy lips glow.

FRAN. (aside, pressing his breast). Here glows somewhat yet more fiery.—Gracious lady, your servants are the most fortunate of beings!

ADELA. Who goes against Berlachingen?

FRAN. The Baron von Sirau. Farewell!—Best, most gracious lady, I must away.—Forget me not!

ADELA. Thou must first take some rest and refreshment.

FRAN. I need none—I have seen you!—I am neither weary nor hungry.

ADELA. I know thy fidelity.

FRAN. Ah, gracious lady!

ADELA. You can never hold out; you must repose and refresh yourself.

FRAN. Such care for a poor youth! [Exit.

ADELA. The tears stood in his eyes. He interests me from the heart. Never did man love so warmly and so true. [Exit.

SCENE VI.

Scene returns to Jaxthausen.

GOETZ and GEORGE.

GEO. He would speak with you in person. I know him not—a tall, well-made man, with dark keen eyes.

GOETZ. Bring him in. [Exit GEORGE.

Enter LERSE.

GOETZ. God greet you!—What brings you?

LERSE. Myself:—it is not much, but that is all I have to offer.

GOETZ. You are welcome, doubly welcome!—A gallant man, and at a time when, far from expecting new friends, I trembled for the wavering fidelity of the old—Your name?

LERSE. Francis Lerse.

GOETZ. I thank you, Francis, for having made me acquainted with a brave man.

LERSE. I made you acquainted with him once before, when you did not thank me for my pains.

GOETZ. I remember nothing of it.

LERSE. I am sorry for that. Do you recollect when, to please the Palsgrave, you rode against Conrad Schotten, and went through Hassfurt on an Allhallows eve?

GOETZ. I remember it well.

LERSE. And twenty-five troopers encountered you in a village by the way?

GOETZ. Exactly. I took them only for twelve—and divided my party, which amounted but to sixteen, leaving part in the town, and riding forwards with the others, in hopes they would pass me, and be thus placed betwixt two fires.

LERSE. But we saw you, and guessed your intention. We drew up on the heights above the village, in hopes you would attack us; when we observed you keep the road and go past, then we rode down on you.

GOETZ. And then I first saw that I had put my hand into the wolf's mouth. Five-and-twenty against eight is no jesting business. Everard Trueless killed one of my followers. Had they all behaved like him and one other trooper, it had been over with me and my little band.

LERSE. And that trooper—
GOETZ. Was as gallant a fellow as I ever saw. He attacked me fiercely; and when I thought I had given him enough, and was engaged elsewhere, he was upon me again, and laid on like a fury; he cut quite through my cuirass, and gave me a flesh wound.

LERSE. Have you forgiven him?

GOETZ. I had but too much reason to be pleased with him.

LERSE. I hope then you have cause to be contented with me, since my pattern exhibition was on your own person.

GOETZ. Art thou he?—Oh welcome! welcome!—Canst thou say, Maximilian, thou hast such a heart amongst all thy servants!

LERSE. I wonder you did not sooner inquire after me.

GOETZ. How could I think that the man would engage in my service who attacked me so desperately?

LERSE. Even so, my Lord—From my youth upwards I have served as a cavalier, and have had to do with many a knight. I was overjoyed to learn we were to attack you; for I had heard of your fame, and I wished to know you. You saw I gave way, and you saw it was not from cowardice, for I returned to the charge—In short, I did learn to know you, and from that hour I resolved to serve you.

GOETZ. How long wilt thou engage with me?

LERSE. For a year—without pay.

GOETZ. No—thou shalt have as the others, and as the foremost among them.

Enter GEORGE.

Geo. Hans of Selbiss greets you:—Today he is here with fifty men.

GOETZ. 'Tis well.

Geo. It is coming to sharps—There is a troop of imperialists come forwards, without doubt, to reconnoitre.

GOETZ. How many?

Geo. About fifty or so.

GOETZ. No more!—Come, Lerses, we'll have a crash with them, that when Selbiss comes he may find some work done to his hand.

LERSE. 'Twill be a royal foretaste.

GOETZ. To horse! [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.

Camp of Imperialists.

Captain and First Officer.

1st Off. They fly from afar towards the camp.

Capt. He will be hard at their haunches—Draw out fifty as far as the mill; if he follows the pursuit too far, you may perhaps entrap him. [Exit officer. [The second officer is borne in.

Capt. How now, my young sir, how like you the wolf's jaws?

2nd Off. Oh, curse your jokes! The stoutest lance went to shivers like glass.—He is the devil!—He ran upon me as if he had been that moment unchained: by heaven, you would have thought him a thunder-bolt.
SCENE IX.

Scene changes to Jaxthausen.

Enter Goetz and Selbiss.

GOETZ. And what say you to this business of the ban, Selbiss?

SEL. 'Tis a stroke of Weislingen.

GOETZ. Thinkest thou?

SEL. I do not think it—I know it.

GOETZ. How?

SEL. He was at the Diet, I tell thee, and with the Emperor.

GOETZ. Well, shall we give them another touch tonight?

SEL. I hope so.

GOETZ. We'll away then to course these hares.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.

The Imperial Camp.

Captain, Officers, and Followers.

CAPT. This, sirs, is doing nothing. He beats one squadron after another; and whoever escapes death or captivity would rather fly to Turkey than return to the camp. We must attack him once for all in a body; and seriously. I will go myself, and he shall find with whom he has to do.

OFF. I am glad of it—but he is so well acquainted with the country, and knows every pass and ravine so thoroughly, that he will be as difficult to find as a mouse in a corn magazine.

CAPT. I warrant you we'll manage to find him—On for Jaxthausen; at all events he must appear to defend his castle.

OFF. Shall we all march?

CAPT. Yes, truly—Don't you know that a hundred are melted away already?

OFF. Then let us away with speed, before the whole snowball dissolves; for this is warm work, and we stand here like butter in the sun. [Exeunt—A march sounded.]

SCENE XI.

A Hill and Wood.

Goetz, Selbiss, and Troopers.

GOETZ. They come in full force—Seckingen's troopers joined us in good time.

SEL. We had better divide our force—I will take the left hand by the hill.

GOETZ. And do thou, Lerse, carry fifty men straight through the wood on the right—Let them keep the high-road—I will draw up opposite to them—George, thou stayest by me—When you see them attack me, then do you fall upon their flanks; we'll beat the knives into mummy—they little think we can hold them at the sword's point. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.

Scene changes to a neighboring part of the Wood—A high-road—On one side an eminence with a ruined Watchtower; on the other the Forest.

Enter, on march, the Captain of the Imperialists, with Officers, and his Squadron—Drums and Standards.

CAPT. He halts upon the high-road! That's too impudent. He shall repent it—What! not to fear the torrent that bursts loose upon him!

OFF. You will not run upon iron pikes? He looks as if he means to plant the first that comes upon him in the mire with his head downmost—Here let us wait him.

CAPT. Not so.

OFF. I entreat you—

CAPT. Sound, trumpeter—and let us blow him to hell! [A charge sounded—Exeunt in full career.]

Selbiss, with his Troopers, comes from behind the hill galloping.

SEL. Follow me!—Shout—shout! [They gallop across the stage, and exeunt.]

Loud alarm—Lerse and his party hastily from the wood.

LERSE. Fly to the help of Goetz! He is surrounded.

—Gallant Selbiss, thou hast cut thy way—we will saw the high-road with these thistle heads.

[Gallop off. A loud alarm, with shouts and firing for some minutes.]

Selbiss is borne in wounded, by two Troopers.

SEL. Leave me here, and hasten to Goetz.

1ST TROOP. Let us stay—you need our aid.

SEL. Get one of you on the watchtower, and tell me how it goes.

1ST TROOP. How shall I get up?

2D TROOP. Get upon my shoulder; you can then reach the ruined part.

[First trooper gets up into the tower.]

1ST TROOP. Alas! alas!

SEL. What seest thou?

1ST TROOP. Your cavaliers fly to the hill.

SEL. Hellish cowards!—I would that they stood, and I had a ball through my head!—Ride one of you full speed— Curse and thunder them back to the field—Seest thou Goetz? [Exit second trooper.]
TROOP. I see the three black feathers in the midst of the tumult.
SEL. Swim, brave swimmer—I lie here.
TROOP. A white plume—Whose is that?
SEL. The captain.
TROOP. Goetz gallops upon him—Crash! Down he goes!
SEL. The captain?
TROOP. Yes.
SEL. Brave! brave!
TROOP. Alas! alas! I see Goetz no more.
SEL. Then die, Selbiss.
TROOP. A dreadful tumult where he stood—
George's blue plume vanishes too.
SEL. Climb higher—Seest thou Lerse?
TROOP. No!—Everything is in confusion!
SEL. No further—come down—How do Seckingen's men bear themselves?
TROOP. So so—One of them flies to the wood—another—another—a whole troop—Goetz is lost!
SEL. Come down—tell me no more.
TROOP. I cannot—Bravo! bravo! I see Goetz—I see George—I see Lerse!
SEL. On horseback?
TROOP. Ay, ay, high on horseback—Victory! victory!—They fly!
SEL. The imperialists?
TROOP. Standard and all, Goetz behind them—He seizes the standard—he has it!—a handful of men with him—My comrade reaches him—they come this way.

Enter Goetz, George, Lerse, and Cavaliers, on horseback.
SEL. Joy to thee, Goetz!—Victory! victory!
Goetz (dismounting). Dearly, dearly bought—Thou art sorely wounded, Selbiss!
SEL. But thou dost live, and hast conquered!—I have done little; and the dogs my troopers—How hast thou come off?
Goetz. For the present, well. And here I thank George, and thee, Lerse, for my life. I unhorsed the captain—They stabbed my steed, and broke in upon me. George hewed his way to me, and sprung off. I threw myself like lightning on his horse, and he appeared suddenly like a thunderbolt upon another.—How camest thou by thy steed?
Geo. A fellow struck at you from behind.—As he raised his earring in the exultation, I stabbed him with my dagger. Down he came!—and so I rid you of a backbiter, and helped myself to a horse.
Goetz. Then we stuck together till Francis here came to our help; and then we cut our way out.
Lerse. The bounds whom I led made a good show at first; but when we came to close, they fled like imperialists.
Goetz. Friend and foe fled, except this little party of my own domestics who protected our rear. I had enough to do with the fellows in front; but the fall of their captain dismayed them—they wavered, and they fled. I have their banner, and a few prisoners.

SEL. The captain has escaped you?
Goetz. They rescued him during the scuffle. Come, boys—come, Selbiss—make a bier of lances and boughs—Thou canst not to horse—come to my castle. They are scattered, but we are very few; and I know not what troops they may have in reserve. I will be your host and physician.—Wine tastes so well after action. [Execut, carrying Selbiss.

SCENE XIII.

The Camp.

The Captain and Imperialists.

CAPT. I could crush you all with one hand. What! to give way? He had not a handful of people remaining. To give way before one man! No one would believe it but for a joke's sake. Ride round the country, you, and you, and you:—bring up the reserve troops, and collect our scattered soldiers, or cut them down wherever you find them. We must grind these notches out of our blades, or make pruning-hooks of them. [Execut.

SCENE XIV.

Jaxthausen.

Goetz, Lerse, and George.

Goetz. Poor Selbiss is gone! We must not lose a moment. My good fellows, I dare allow you no rest. Gallop round and collect our cavaliers. Most of them dwell near Weilern, and there they will most likely be found. Should we daily a moment, they will be before the castle. (Execut Lerse and George.) I must send out scouts. It begins to be warm—Yet had I but a few stout fellows—but not of such fellows are the many composed.

[Exit.

Enter Seckingen and Maria.

Maria. I beseech thee, Seckingen, leave not my brother! His own horsemen, Selbiss's, yours, all are scattered; he is alone.—Selbiss is brought here dead, or mortally wounded. I fear the worst.
Seck. Be composed—I will not leave him.

Enter Goetz.

Goetz. Come to the chapel—the chaplain waits—In five minutes you shall be made one.
Seck. Let me remain here.
Goetz. To the chapel!
Seck. Goetz!
Goetz. Will you not to the chapel?
Seck. Willingly, and then—
Goetz. Then you go your way.
Seck. Goetz!
Goetz. To the chapel!—Come, come. [Execut.
SCENE XV.

Camp.

Captain and Officers.

CAPT. How many in all?

OFF. A hundred and fifty odd—

CAPT. Out of five hundred.—Set on the march towards Jaxthausen, before he again collects his forces and attacks us on the way. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XVI.

Jaxthausen.

GOETZ, ELIZABETH, MARIA, and Seckingen.

GOETZ. God bless you, and give you happy days, and support the children with which he shall bless you!

ELIZ. And may they be virtuous as yourselves—then let that which will.

SECK. I thank you!—And you, my Maria! as I led you to the altar, you shall lead me to happiness.

MARIA. Our pilgrimage will be in company towards that distant and high-praised land.

GOETZ. Good luck to your journey!

MARIA. That was not what I meant—We do not leave you.

GOETZ. You must, sister.

MARIA. You were not wont to be so harsh.

GOETZ. You are more affectionate than prudent.

Enter George.

GEO. I can gather no troopers: one was persuaded, but he changed his mind, and would not come.

GOETZ. 'Tis well, George. Fortune begins to look cold upon me. Seckingen, I entreat you to depart this very evening. Persuade Mary—you are her husband—let her feel it.—When women regulate our motions, they are more dangerous than enemies in the field.

Enter a Cavalier.

Cav. The imperial squadron is on full and rapid march hither.

GOETZ. I have diminished them by skirmishes. How many are they?

Cav. About two hundred—They cannot be far from hence.

GOETZ. Have they passed the river yet?

Cav. No, my Lord.

GOETZ. Had I but fifty men, they should come no further.—Hast thou not seen Lersa?

Cav. No, my Lord.

GOETZ. Tell all to hold themselves ready.—Weep on, my gentle Mary—Many a moment of pleasure shall be thy reward—It is better thou shouldst weep on thy wedding-day than that too great joy should be the forerunner of future misery.—Farewell, Mary!—Farewell, brother!

MARIA. I cannot away from you, sister—Dear brother, let us stay. Dost thou hold my husband so cheap as to refuse his help in thy extremity?

GOETZ. Yes—it is gone far with me. Perhaps my fall is near—You are but beginning life, and should separate your lot from mine. I have ordered your horses to be saddled—you must away instantly!

MARIA. Oh, brother! brother!

ELIZ. (to Seckingen). Assist him to persuade her—Speak to her.

SECK. What can I say?—Dear Maria, we must go! MARIA. Thou too?—My heart will break!

GOETZ. Then stay—In a few minutes my castle will be besieged.

MARIA (weeping bitterly). Alas! alas!

GOETZ. We will defend ourselves as we can.

MARIA. Mother of God, have compassion upon us!

GOETZ. And at last we must die or surrender—Thy tears will then have involved thy noble husband in the same miserable lot with me.

MARIA. Thou torturtest me!

GOETZ. Remain, remain!—Seckingen, thou wilt fall into the grave with me, out of which I had hoped thou shouldst help me.

MARIA. We will away—Sister—sister!

GOETZ. Place her in safety, and then remember me.

SECK. Never shall I repose a night till I know thou art out of danger.

GOETZ. Sister! dear sister! (Kisses her.)

SECK. Away! away!

GOETZ. Yet one moment!—I shall see you again—Be comforted, I shall see you again. (Exeunt Seckingen and Maria.) I drive her away—yet when she goes, what would I give to detain her!—Eliza, thou stay'st by me—

ELIZ. Till death!

[Exit.

GOETZ. Whom God loves, he gives such a wife!

Enter George.

GEO. They are near!—I saw them from the tower. The sun is rising, and I perceived their lances glitter. I minded them no more than a cat would do a whole army of mice. 'Tis true we play the rats at present.

GOETZ. Go to the battlements—Look to the gates—See they are provided with stones and beams. We'll find exercise for their patience, and their fury may discharge itself at the expense of their own nails. (A trumpet from without; Goetz goes to the window.) Aha! there comes a red-gowned rascal to ask me whether I will be a soundrel! What says he? (The voice of the Herald is heard indistinctly, as from a distance. Goetz speaks at intervals.) A rope for thy throat! (Voice again.) "Offended majesty!"—Some parson has drawn up the proclamation. (Voice concludes, and Goetz answers from the window.) Surrender myself—surrender myself at all discretion!

—With whom speak ye? Am I a robber? Tell
GOETZ OF BERLICHINGEN.

SCENE XVII.

The Kitchen.

ELIZABETH preparing food—to her GOETZ.

GOETZ. You have hard work, my poor wife!

ELIZ. Would it could but last!—but you can hardly hold out long.

GOETZ. We have not had time to provide ourselves—

ELIZ. And so many people to feed!—The wine is wellnigh finished.

GOETZ. If we hold out a certain time, they must give us articles. We keep them at a fine distance—They may shoot the whole day, and wound our walls, and break our windows.—That LERSE is a gallant fellow—He slips about with his gun; if a rogue comes too nigh—Bah!—there he lies!  [Firing.

Enter a Cavalier.

Cav. We want live coals, gracious lady!

GOETZ. For what?

Cav. Our bullets are spent; we must cast new.

GOETZ. How lasts the powder?

Cav. There is yet no want: we spare our fire.

[Firing at intervals.  Exeunt GOETZ and ELIZABETH.

Enter LERSE with a bullet-mould.

LERSE. Go, seek for lead about the house—meanwhile I will make a shift with this.  (Goes to the window and takes out the lead frames.)  Everything is fair.  So it is in this world—no one knows what a thing may come to: the glazier that made these frames little knew that the work of his hands was to give some fellow his last headache; and the father that got me little thought that the fowls of heaven and the beasts of the field were to pick my bones.

Enter GEORGE with a leaden spout.

GO. Here's lead for thee!—When we have used the half of it, there will none return to tell his Majesty "we have not sped."

LERSE (cutting it down).  A famous prize!

GO. The rain must seek some other way—But never mind that—a gallant trooper and a smart shower will always find their road.  [They cast balls.

LERSE. Hold the crucible.  (Goes to the window.)  Youonder comes a fellow creeping forward with his pop-gun; he thinks our fire is spent—He shall have the bullet warm from the pan.  [He loads his carbine.

GO. (sets down the mould).  Let me see—

LERSE (fires from the window).  Yonder lies the game.

GO. One of them fired at me as I got out on the roof to get the spout—He killed a pigeon that sat near me; it fell into the spout—I thanked him for my dinner, and stepped in with the double booty.

[They cast balls.

LERSE. Now let us load, and go through the castle to earn our dinner.

Enter GOETZ.

GOETZ. Stay, LERSE, I must speak with thee.—I will not keep thee, George, from the sport.

[Exit GEORGE.

GOETZ. They demand a parley.

LERSE. I will out and hear what they have to say.

GOETZ. They will require me to enter myself into ward in some town on my knightly parole.

LERSE. That's a trifle—What if they would allow us free liberty of departure? for we can expect no relief from Seckingen.  We will bury all valuables where they shall never find them, leave them the bare walls, and come out with flying colors.

GOETZ. They will not permit us.

LERSE. It is but asking—We will demand a safe-conduct, and I will sally out.  [Exeunt.

SCENE XVIII.

A Hall.

GOETZ, ELIZABETH, GEORGE, and Troopers, at table.

GOETZ. Danger draws us together, my friends!  Be cheery—don't forget the bottle!  The flask is empty—Come, another, my dear wife!  (ELIZABETH shakes her head.)  Is there no more?

ELIZ. (low).  Only one, which I set apart for you.

GOETZ. Not so, my love!—Bring it out; they need strengthening more than I.

ELIZ. Hand it from the cabinet.

GOETZ. It is the last, and I feel as if we need not spare it.  It is long since I have been so much disposed for joy.  (They fill.)  To the health of the Emperor!

ALL. Long live the Emperor!

GOETZ. Be it our last word when we die!  I love him, for our fate is similar; and I am happier than he.

—He must direct his imperial squadrons against mice, while the rats gnaw his parchment edicts.  I know he often wishes himself rather dead than to be the soul of such a crippled body as the empire.  (They fill.)  It will go but once more round—And when our blood runs low, like this flask—when we pour out its last ebbing drop (empties the wine dropways into his goblet), what then shall be our word?

GO. Freedom!

GOETZ. Freedom!

ALL. Freedom!
Goetz. And if that survives us, we shall die happy: our spirits shall see our sons, and the Emperor of our sons, happy!—Did the servants of princes show the same filial attachment to their masters as you to me—did their masters serve the Emperor as I would serve him—

Geo. It is widely different.

Goetz. Not so much so as would appear. Have I not known worthy men among the princes? And can the breed be extinct?—Men happy in their own minds and in their undertakings, that could bear a petty brother in their neighborhood without feeling either dread or envy; whose hearts were opened when they saw their table surrounded by their free equals, and who did not think free knights unfit company till they had degraded themselves by court homage.

Geo. Have you known such princes?

Goetz. Well!—I recollect, when the Landgrave of Hanau made a grand hunting-party, the princes and free feudatories enjoyed themselves under the open heaven, and the vassals were as happy as they; it was no selfish masquerade, instituted for his own private pleasure or vanity—to see the great round-headed peasant lads and the pretty brown girls, the sturdy hinds, and the respectable ancients, all as happy as if they rejoiced in the pleasures of their master, which he shared with them under God's free sky!

Geo. He must have been such a master as you.

Goetz. And shall we not hope that many such will rule together some future day—to whom reverence to the Emperor, peace and friendship with neighbors, and the love of vassals, shall be the best and dearest family treasure handed down from father to son? Every one will then keep and improve his own, instead of reckoning nothing gained that is not ravaged from their neighbors.

Geo. And shall we then have no skirmishing?

Goetz. Would to God there was no restless spirit in all Germany, and still we should have enough to do! We might then chase the wolves from the cliffs, and bring our peaceful, laborious neighbor a dish of game from the wood, and eat it together. Were that too little, we would join our brethren, and, like cherubins with flaming swords, defend the frontiers against those wolves the Turks, against those foxes the French, and guard for our beloved Emperor both extremities of his empire. There would be a life, George!—to risk one's head for the safety of all Germany. (George springs up.) Whither away?

Geo. Alas! I forgot we were besieged—besieged by that very Emperor; and before we can expose our lives in his defence, we must risk them for our liberty.

Goetz. Be of good cheer.

Enter Lerse.

Lerse. Freedom! freedom! You are cowardly poltroons—hesitating, irresolute asses—You are to depart with men, weapons, horses, and armor—Provisions you are to leave behind.

Goetz. They will hardly find enough to tire their jaws.

Lerse (aside to Goetz). Have you hid the plate and money?

Goetz. No!—Wife, go with Lerse, and hear what he has to say to thee.

SCENE XIX.

Scene changes to the Court of the Castle.

George in the stable curries his horse, and sings—

It was a little naughty page,
Ha! ha!
Would catch a bird was closed in cage,
Sa! sa!
Ha! ha!
Sa! sa!
He seized the cage, the latch did draw,
Ha! ha!
And in he thrust his knavish paw,
Sa! sa!
Ha! ha!
Sa! sa!
The bird dash'd out, and gain'd the thorn,
Ha! ha!
And laugh'd the silly fool to scorn!
Sa! sa!
Ha! ha!
Sa! sa!

Enter Goetz.

Goetz. How goes it?

Geo. (brings out his horse). All saddled!

Goetz. Thou takest it cheerily.

Geo. As the bird that got out of the cage.

Enter all the besieged.

Goetz. Have you all your carabines?—Not yet. Go, take the best from the armory—'Tis all one—we'll ride out.

Geo. And laugh the silly fools to scorn.
Ha! ha!
Sa! sa!
Ha! ha!

SCENE XX.

Scene changes to the Armory.

Two Cavaliers choosing guns.

1st Cav. I take this.

2d Cav. I this—But yonder's a better.

1st Cav. Never mind—Make ready.

[Tumult and firing without.

2d Cav. Hark!

1st Cav. (springs to the window). Sacred heaven, they murder our master!—He is unhorsed!—George is down!
GOETZ OF BERLICHINGEN.

2d Cav. How shall we get off?—By the garden wall, and so to the country. [Exit.
1st Cav. Lerce keeps his ground—I will to him. If they die, I will not survive them.

ACT IV.—SCENE I.
An Inn in the City of Heilbron.

GOETZ. solus.

GOETZ. I am like the evil spirit conjured into a circle—I fret and labor, but all in vain—The false, envious slaves! (Enter Elizabeth.) What news, Eliza, of my dear, my trusty followers?
ELIZ. Nothing certain: some are slain, some are prisoners; no one could or would tell me more particulars.
GOETZ. Is that the reward of faith, of filial obedience?—For thy sake—Goetz!—Oh, thou hast lived too long!
ELIZ. Murmur not against our heavenly Father, my dear husband! They have their reward—It was born with them, a noble and generous heart—Even in the dungeon they are free.—Think now of appearing before the Imperial Commissioners—Their awful presence, the splendor of their dress, and the golden chains which mark their dignity—
GOETZ. Become them like a necklace on a sow!—Would I could see George and Lerce in their dungeon!
ELIZ. It were a sight to make an angel weep.
GOETZ. I would not weep—I would grind my teeth, and gnaw my lip in fury.—What! the apples of my eye in fetters!—and have not the dear boys loved me? Never will I rest till I see them.—What! to break their word pledged in the name of the Emperor!
ELIZ. Forget that—You must appear before the Commissioners—you are in an evil mood to meet them, and I fear the worst.
GOETZ. When will they admit me?
ELIZ. They will send a sergeant-at-arms.
GOETZ. What!—The ass of justice that carries the sacks to the mill, and the dung to the field?—What now?

Enter Sergeant-at-arms.
SERG. The Lords Commissioners are at the Council-house, and require your presence.
GOETZ. I come.
SERG. I am to escort you.
GOETZ. Too much honor.
ELIZ. Be but cool.
GOETZ. Fear me not. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.
The Council-house at Heilbron.
The Imperial Commissioners seated in judgment—The Captain and the Magistrates of the City attending.
MAG. We have, according to your order, collected the stoutest and most hardy of our burgheers to wait in the neighborhood.
COM. We will communicate to his imperial Majesty the zeal with which you have obeyed our illustrious commander—Are they artisans?
MAG. Smiths, cooperers, and carpenters, men with hands hardened by labor—and resolute here. (Points to his breast.)
COM. 'Tis well!

Enter Sergeant.
SERG. Goetz von Berlichingen waits at the door.
COM. Admit him.

Enter GOETZ.
GOETZ. God greet you, my Lords! What would ye with me?
COM. First, that you consider where you are, and with whom.
GOETZ. By my faith, I know it well, my Lords!
COM. You do but your duty in owning it.
GOETZ. From the bottom of my heart!
COM. Be seated. (Points to a stool.)
GOETZ. What, there?—Down below?—I can stand!—That stool smells of the criminal; as indeed does its whole apparatus.
COM. Stand, then.
GOETZ. To business, if you please.
COM. We'll go on in order.
GOETZ. I am happy to hear it. Would every one did as much!
COM. You know how you fell into our hands, and are a prisoner at discretion.
GOETZ. What will you give me if I know no such thing?
COM. Could I give you good manners, I would do you a good office.
GOETZ. A good office!—Can you render any?—Good offices are more difficult than the deeds of destruction.
SEC. Shall I enter all this on record?
COM. Only what is to the point.
GOETZ. Do as you please, for my part.
COM. You know how you fell into the power of the Emperor, whose paternal goodness overpowered his justice, and, instead of a dungeon, ordered you to wait your future doom, upon your knightly parole, in his beloved city of Heilbron.
GOETZ. Well—I am here, and wait it.
COM. And we are here to intimate to you his imperial Majesty's grace and clemency. He is pleased to forgive your rebellion, to release you from the ban, and all well-deserved punishment; provided you do, with suppliant humility, receive his bounty, and subscribe the articles which shall be read unto you.
GOETZ. I am his Majesty's true servant as ever. One word ere you go further—My people—where are they? what is to become of them?
COM. That concerns you not.
GOETZ. So may the Emperor turn his face from you in your need!—They were my companions, and they are so—What have you done with them?

COM. We owe you no account of that.

GOETZ. Ah! I had forgot—Never was promise kept by you to the oppressed. But, hush!

COM. Our business is to lay the articles before you.—Throw yourself at the Emperor's feet, and by humble supplication you may find the true way to save the life and freedom of your associates.

GOETZ. Your paper!

COM. Secretary, read it.

SEC. (reads). "I Goetz of Berlichingen make public acknowledgment, by these presents, that I having lately risen in rebellion against the Emperor and empire'"—

GOETZ. 'Tis false!—I never offended either.

COM. Compose yourself, and hear further.

GOETZ. I will not compose myself, and I will hear no further. Let any one arise and bear witness—Have I ever taken a step against the Emperor, or against the House of Austria?—Have I not in all my feuds conducted myself as one who felt what all Germany owes to its head—and what the free knights and feudatories owe to their liege lord the Emperor?—I should be a liar and a slave could I be persuaded to subscribe that paper.

COM. Yet we have strict orders to persuade you by fair means, or else to throw you into jail.

GOETZ. Into jail!—Me?

COM. Where you may expect your fate from the hands of Justice, since you will not take it from those of Mercy.

GOETZ. To jail! You abuse the imperial power.—To jail! That was never his command. What, ye traitors, to dig a pit for me, and hang out your oath, your knightly honor, as the lure! To promise me permission to ward myself on parole, and then to break your treaty!

COM. We owe no faith to robbers.

GOETZ. Wert thou not the representative of my prince, whom I respect even in the vilest counterfeit, thou shouldst swallow that word, or choke upon it. I was taken in honorable though private war. Thou mightest thank God that gave thee glory, hast thou ever done as gallant deeds as the least with which I am charged. (The Commissioner makes a sign to the Magistrates of Heilbronn, who go out.) Because I would not join the iniquitous confederacy of the great, because I would not grasp at the souls and lives of the helpless—'Tis in this lies my crime!—I defended my own life and the freedom of my children—See ye any rebellion in that? The Emperor and empire were blinded to our hard case by your flatteries. I have, God be praised! one hand, and I have done my best to use it well.

Enter a party of Artisans armed with halberds and swords.

GOETZ. What means this?

COM. Ye will not hearken—Apprehend him!

GOETZ. Is that the purpose? Let not the man whose ear does not itch come too near me; one salvation from my trusty iron fist shall cure him of headache, toothache, and every ache under the wide heaven!

[They make at him—He strikes one down, and snatches a sword from another—They stand afoot.

COM. Surrender!

GOETZ (with the sword drawn). What! Wot ye not that depends but upon myself to make way through all these hares and gain the open field? But I will teach you how a man should keep his word.—Promise to allow me free ward, and I give up my sword, and am again your prisoner.

COM. How! Would you treat with your Emperor sword in hand?

GOETZ. God forbid!—only with you and your worthy companions!—You may go home, good people; here deliberation is of no avail, and from me there is nothing to gain save bruises.

COM. Seize him, I say!—What! does your allegiance to the Emperor supply you with no courage?

GOETZ. No more than the Emperor supplies them with plaster for the wounds which their courage would earn for them.

A Police Officer enters hastily.

OFF. The warder has just discovered from the castle-tower a troop of more than two hundred horsemen hastening towards the town. They have already gained the hill, and seem to threaten an attack.

COM. Alas! alas! what can this mean?

A Soldier enters.

SOL. Francis of Seckingen waits at the drawbridge, and informs you that he has heard how perfidiously you have dealt with his brother-in-law, and how fruitless has been every appeal to the justice of the Council of Heilbronn. He is now come to insist upon that justice; and if refused it, he will fire the four corners of your town within an hour, and abandon it to be plundered by his vassals.

GOETZ. My gallant brother!

COM. Withdraw, Goetz! (He steps aside.) What is to be done?

MAG. Have compassion upon us and our town!—Seckingen is inexorable in his wrath—he will keep his vow.

COM. Shall we forget what is due to ourselves and the Emperor?

CAPT. Well said, if we had but men to support our dignity; but as we are, a show of resistance would only make matters worse. We must gain time.

MAG. We had better apply to Goetz to speak a good word for us—I feel as the flames were rising already.

COM. Let Goetz approach.

GOETZ. What would ye?

COM. Thou wilt do well to dissuade thy brother—in-law from his rebellious interference. Instead of rescuing thee, he will only plunge thee deeper in destruction, and become the companion of thy fall!

Goetz (spies Elizabeth at the door, and speaks to her aside). Go—tell him instantly to break in and force his way hither, only to spare the town. As for the rascals here, if they oppose him, let him use force; there would be no great matter had he a fair pretext for knocking them all upon the head.

[Trampling and galloping heard.—All the magistrates show signs of consternation.

SCENE III.

Scene changes to the front of the Council-house, beset by Seckingen's Cavaliers. A pause.

Enter Seckingen and Goetz from the Council-house.

Goetz. This was help from Heaven!—How camest thou so much to our wish, and beyond our hope, brother?

Seck. Without witchcraft. I had despatched two or three messengers to learn how it fared with thee, and heard from them of this villainy; I set out instantly, and now you have the power in your hand.

Goetz. I ask nothing but knightly ward upon my parole.

Seck. You are too moderate. Avail yourself of fortune, which for once has placed worth above malice! They were doing injustice; we'll greet them with no kisses for their pains. They have misused the royal authority, and, if I know the Emperor, he will make thee ample reparation.—You ask too little.

Goetz. I have ever been content with little.

Seck. And hence hast thou ever been cut short even of that little. My proposal is, that they shall release your servants, and permit you all to return to your castle upon your parole—not to leave it till the Emperor's pleasure be known—You will be safer there than here.

Goetz. They will say my property is escheated to the Emperor.

Seck. So say we—but still thou may'st dwell there, and keep it for his service till he restores it to thee again. Let them wind like eels in the mud, they shall not escape us!—They will talk of the imperial dignity—of their orders—We'll take that risk upon ourselves;—I know the Emperor, and have some influence with him—He has ever wished to have thee in his service—Thou wilt not be long in thy castle ere thou art summoned to serve him.

Goetz. God grant it ere I forget the use of arms!

Seck. Valor can never be forgot, as it can never be learnt. Fear nothing! When once thou art settled, I will seek the imperial Court, where my enterprises begin to ripen—Good fortune seems to smile on them—I want only to sound the Emperor's mind. The towns of Triers and Pfalz as soon expect that the sky should fall, as that I should come down upon their heads—But I will come like a storm of hail on the unsuspecting traveller; and if I am successful, thou shalt soon be brother to a prince. I had hoped for thy hand in this undertaking.

Goetz (looks at his hand). Oh! that explains to me the dream I had the morning that I promised Maria to Weislingen. I thought he professed eternal fidelity, and held my iron hand so fast that it loosened from the arm.—Alas! I am at this moment more helpless and fenceless than when it was shot from me.—Weislingen! Weislingen!

Seck. Forget the traitor! We'll darken his prospects and cross his plans, till shame and remorse shall guaw him to death. I see, I see the downfall of my enemies, of thine—Goetz—only half a year.

Goetz. Thy soul soars high! I know not how, but for some time no fair prospects have smiled upon mine—I have been in distress—I have been a prisoner ere now, but never before did I experience such a depression.

Seck. Fortune gives spirits—Come, let us to the periwigs—They have had our conditions long enough—we must call for their resolution. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Scene changes to the Palace of Adela—Augsburg.

A dela and Weislingen discovered.

Adela. This is detestable.

Weis. I have gnashed my very teeth—So fair a prospect—so well followed out—and at last to leave him in possession of his castle as before! That damned Seckingen!

Adela. The Commissioners should not have consented.

Weis. They were in the net—What else could they do? Seckingen, the haughty and furious chief, thundere'd fire and sword at their ear. I hate him—His power waxes like a mountain torrent—let it but gain two brooks, and others come pouring to its aid.

Adela. Have they no Emperor?

Weis. My dear wife—Old and feeble: he is only the shadow of what he should be—When he heard what was done, and I proposed to lead the readiest forces in his service against them—"Let them be!" said he; "I can spare my old Goetz his little fortress, and if he confines himself to it, of what can you complain?" We spoke of the welfare of the state—"Oh," said he, "that I had rejected every advice which pushed me to sacrifice the peace of an individual to my own ambition!"

Adela. He has lost the very spirit of a prince!

Weis. We broke loose against Seckingen—"He is my faithful servant," said he; "for if he has not acted by my express order, he has performed what I would have wished better than my plenipotentiaries, and I can ratify what he had done as well after as before.”

ADELA. Tis enough to make one tear one’s very flesh!

WEIS. Yet I have not entirely renounced hope. Goetz has given his parole to remain quiet in his castle—"Tis an impossibility for him to keep his promise, and we shall soon have some new subject of complaint.

ADELA. "Tis the more likely, as we may hope that the old Emperor will soon leave the world, and Charles, his gallant successor, promises to bear a princeely mind.

WEIS. Charles! He is neither chosen nor crowned king of the Romans.

ADELA. Who does not expect and hope that event?

WEIS. You speak so warmly that one might think you saw him with partial eyes.

ADELA. You injure me, Weislingen. For what do you take me?

WEIS. I do not mean to offend—but I cannot be silent upon the subject—Charles’s very unusual attentions to thee distress me.

ADELA. And do I receive them as it—

WEIS. Thou art a woman—and no woman hates a flatterer.

ADELA. This from you?

WEIS. It cuts me to the heart the dreadful thought, Adela!

ADELA. Can I not cure thee of this folly?

WEIS. When thou wilt—Thou canst not leave the Court.

ADELA. By what way or pretence? Thou art here—Must I leave thee and all my friends, to shut myself up with owls in thy desolate castle? No, Weislingen, that will never do; set thy heart at ease, thou knowest I love thee.

WEIS. That is the sheet anchor while the cable holds.

Exit.

ADELA. Takest thou it so? It is in vain. The undertakings of my bosom are too great to brook thy interruption. Charles—the great, the gallant Charles—the future Emperor—shall he be the only man not flattered to obey my power? Think not, Weislingen, to prevent it—Soon shalt thou to earth, if my way lies over thee!

Enter Francis.  He gives a letter.

ADELA. Hadst thou it from Charles’s own hand?

FRAN. Yes.

ADELA. What ails thee?—Thou look’st mournful! FRAN. It is your pleasure that I should pine away and waste the fairest years of hope in agonizing despair.

ADELA (aside). I pity him—Be of good courage, youth! I feel thy love and truth, and will not be ungrateful.

FRAN. (sorrowfully). Ere you can resolve to succor me, I shall be gone from you—Heaven! And there boils not a drop of blood in my veins but what is your own—I have not even a feeling but to love and to serve you!

ADELA. My dear Francis!

FRAN. You flatter me. (Bursts into tears.) Does this attachment deserve only to be sacrificed to another—only to see all your thoughts fixed upon Charles?

ADELA. You know not what you wish, and yet less what you speak.

FRAN. (stamping between remorse and rage.) No more will I be your slave, your go-between!

ADELA. Francis, you forget yourself.

FRAN. To sacrifice at once myself and my beloved master—

ADELA. Go from my sight!

FRAN. Gracious lady!

ADELA. Go, betray to thy beloved master the secret of my soul! Fool that I was! I thought thee what thou art not.

FRAN. Dear lady! you know not how I love thee. ADELA. And thou, whom I thought my friend—so near my heart—go, betray me.

FRAN. Rather would I tear the heart from my body!—Forgive me, gentle lady! my heart is too full, my senses forsake me.

ADELA. Thou dear, hot-headed boy!

She takes him by both hands, and draws him towards her.  He throws himself weeping upon her neck.

ADELA. Leave me!

FRAN. (his voice choked by tears.) God! God! ADELA. Leave me! Walls are traitors—Leave me! (Breaks from him.) Be but steady in faith and love: the fairest reward is thy own.

Exit.

FRAN. The fairest reward! Let me but live till that moment—I could murder my father, were he an obstacle to its arrival!

Exit.

SCENE V.

Scene changes to Jazthausen.

GOETZ seated at a table with writing materials. ELIZABETH sits beside him with her work.

GOETZ. This idle life does not suit me. My imprisonment becomes daily more painful; I would I could sleep, or amuse myself with trifling.

ELIZ. Continue writing the memoirs thou hast commenced of thy own deeds. Give thy friends evidence under thy hand to put thy enemies to shame; make thy noble neighbors acquainted with thy real character.

GOETZ. Alas! writing is but busy idleness; it comes slowly on with me. While I write what I have done, I lament the misspent time in which I might do more.

ELIZ. (takes the writings. Thou art now at thy first imprisonment at Heilbron.

End of play.
Goetz. That was always an unlucky place to me.

Eliz. (read). "One of the confederates told me that I had acted foolishly in espousing the cause of my very worst foes; but that I might be of good cheer, for I should be honorably dealt by."—And what didst thou answer?—Write on.

Goetz. I said, Have I so often risked my life for the goods and gold of others, and should I not do so for the sake of my knightly word?

Eliz. Thus does fame speak of thee.

Goetz. They shall not rob me of this honor. They have taken from me all—property—liberty—

Eliz. I happened once to stand in an inn near the Lords of Millenberg and Singlingen, who knew me not—Then I experienced rapture as at the birth of my first-born: they extolled thee to each other, and said, He is the mirror of knighthood, noble and merciful in prosperity, dauntless and true in misfortune.

Goetz. Let them show me where I have preferred my interest to my honor. God knows, my ambition has ever been to labor for my neighbor as for myself, and to acquire the fame of a gallant and irreproachable knight, rather than princes or power; and, God be praised! I have gained the meed of my labor.

Enter George and Lerse with game.

Goetz. Good luck to my gallant huntsmen!

Geo. Such are we become from gallant cavaliers—Boots can be cut down into buskins.

Lerse. The chase is always something—'Tis an image of war.

Geo. Yes—if we were not always crossed by these imperial gamekeepers. Don't you recollect, my Lord, how you prophesied weshould become huntsmen when the world mended? We are become so without any great chance of the other event.

Goetz. What goes on without?—We are cooped up here in a circle.

Geo. These are mark-worthy times!—For eight days a horrible comet has been seen—all Germany fears that it denotes the death of the Emperor, who is very ill.

Goetz. Ill? Our weal then is at an end.

Lerse. And in the neighborhood here are shocking commotions; the peasants have made a formidable insurrection.

Goetz. Where?

Lerse. In the heart of Swabia; they plunder, burn, and slay. I fear me they will sack the whole country.

Geo. It is a horrible warfare! They have already arisen in a hundred places, and daily increase in number. A hurricane too has lately torn up whole forests; and in the place where the insurrection began, have been seen in the sky two fiery swords crossing each other.

Goetz. God preserve my poor friends and neighbors!

Geo. Alas! that we dare not ride out! [Exeunt.

ACT V.—SCENE I.

Scene, a Village plundered by the insurgent Peasantry, Shrieks and tumult. Women, old Men, and Children fly across the stage.

OLD MAN. Away! away! fly from the murdering dogs.

WOMAN. Sacred Heaven! How blood-red is the heaven! how blood-red the rising sun!

ANOThER. 'Tis fire!

A THIRD. My husband! my husband!

OLD MAN. Away! away!—To the wood! [Exeunt.

Enter Link and Insurgents.

Link. Whoever opposes you, down with him! Let none of the booty be left—Plunder clean and quick—We must soon set fire—

Enter Mezler coming down the hill.

Mez. How goes it, Link?

Link. Look round; you are in at the death—From whence?

Mez. From Weinsberg. There was a feast!

Link. How?

Mez. We stabbed them all, in such heaps it was a joy to see it!

Link. Huzzah!

Mez. (to the peasants). Ye dogs, must I find you legs? How they gape and loiter, the asses!

Link. Burn away! Kill and roast them in the flames! Out with your knives!

Mez. Then we brought out Helfenstein, Eltershofen, thirteen of the nobility—in all eighty. What a shouting and jubilee among our boys as they broke loose upon the long row of miserable rich sinners! Heaven and earth! how they struggled and stared on each other! We surrounded them, and killed every soul with pikes.

Link. Why was not I there?

Mez. Never did I see such fun!

Link. On! on!—Bring all out!

Peasant. All's clear.

Link. Then fire the place at the four corners.

Mez. 'Twill make a fine bonfire!—Hadst thou seen how the fellows writhed in a heap, and croaked like frogs! It warmed my heart like a cup of brandy. There was one Rexioninger there, a fellow that, when he went to hunt with his white plume and his flaxen locks, used to drive us before him like dogs, and with dogs. I had not seen him all the while, when suddenly his droll visage looked me full in the face—Push! went the spear between his ribs—and there he lay stretched all-fours above his companions. The fellows tumbled over each other, like the hares that were driven together at their grand hunting parties.

LINK. It smokes already! [The village burns.]

MEZ. All's in flames!—Come, let us with the booty to the main body; it halts betwixt this and Heilbron. They wish to choose a captain whom every one will respect, for we are but equals;—they feel it, and turn restive.

LINK. Whom do they think of?

MEZ. Maximilian Stumpf, or Goetz of Berlichingen.

LINK. That's well. 'Twould give the thing credit should Goetz accept it. He has been ever held a worthy independent knight. Away! away! Draw together!—We march towards Heilbron.

MEZ. The fire will light us on our way. Hast thou seen the great comet?

LINK. Yes—It is a dreadful ghastly sign! As we marched by night we saw it well: it went towards Lins.

MEZ. And was visible for an hour and a quarter, like an arm brandishing a sword, and bloody red!

LINK. Didst thou mark the three stars at the sword's hilt and point?

MEZ. And the broad black clouds, illuminated by a thousand thousand streamers like lances and little swords?

LINK. I saw it well—and beneath a pale white, crossed with fiery ruddy flames, and among them grisly figures with shaggy hair and beards.

MEZ. Did you see them, too?—And how they all swam about as if in a sea of blood, and struggled all in confusion, enough to drive one mad.

LINK. Away! away! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Scene changes to an open country. In the distance two Villages and an Abbey are burning.

The Insurgents KOHL, WILD, and MAXIMILIAN STUMPF.

STUMPF. You cannot wish me for your leader; it were bad for you and for me: I am a vassal of the Palsgrave, and how shall I arm against my liege Lord? Besides, you would suspect I acted not from the heart.

KOHL. We knew well thou wouldst have some evasion.

Enter GEORGE, LEERSE, and GOETZ.

GOETZ. What would ye with me?

KOHL. You must be our captain.

GOETZ. I am under ban: I cannot quit my territory.

WILD. That's no excuse.

GOETZ. And were I free, and you dealing with the lords and nobles as you did at Weinsberg, and ravaging and plundering the whole lands, and should request me to be an abettor of your shameless ravings—rather than be your captain, you should say me like a mad dog!

KOHL. That should not be done, were it to do again.

STUMPF. That's the very misfortune, that they have no leader whom they honor, and who may bridge their fury! I beseech thee, Goetz, take that office upon thee! I will be thy witness and thy surety against the ban. The princes will be grateful; all Germany will thank thee—Thou may'st persuade them to peace; the country and its inhabitants will be saved.

GOETZ. Why dost thou not take it thyself?

STUMPF. They have excused me.

KOHL. We have no time for dallying and useless speeches—Short and good!—Goetz, be our chief, or look to thy castle and thy head! Take two hours to consider of it.

GOETZ. To what purpose? I am resolved now as I shall be then. Why are ye risen up in arms? If to recover your rights and freedom, why do you lay waste the land? Will you abstain from such evil doings, and deal as men who know what they want?—then will I be your chief for eight days, and help you in your lawful and orderly demands.

WILD. What was done was done in the first heat, and we only needed thy prudence to have prevented it.

KOHL. Thou must be ours at least for a quarter of a year.

STUMPF. Say four weeks—that will satisfy both.

GOETZ. Well, then, as far as regards me—KOHL. And we agree!

GOETZ. But you must promise to send the treaty you have made with me in writing to all your troops, and to punish infringers.

WILD. Well—it shall be done.

GOETZ. Then I bind myself to you for four weeks.

STUMPF. Good!—in what thou doest, take care of our noble lord the Palsgrave.

KOHL (aside). Watch that none speak to him without our knowledge.

GOETZ. Lerse, go to my wife—Stay with her—you shall soon have news of me.

[Exeunt GOETZ, GEORGE, LEERSE, and some peasants.

Enter MEZLER, LINK, and their Followers.

MEZ. What hear we of a treaty? To what purpose the treaty?

LINK. It is shameful to make any such bargain.

KOHL. We know as well what to do as you; and will do or let alone as we please.

WILD. This raging, and burning, and murdering must have an end one day sooner or later; and by renouncing it just now, we gain a brave leader.

MEZ. How! An end? Thou traitor! why are we here but to avenge ourselves on our enemies, and enrich ourselves at their expense? Some slave of the nobles has been tampering with thee.

Kohl. Come, Wild, he is mad.

[Execut Wild and Kohl.

Mez. Ay, go your way—few bands will stick by you. The villains!—Link, we'll set on our friends here to burn Miltenberg instantly; and when they make a bustle about the treaty, we'll cut their heads off that made it.

Link. We have the great body of peasants still on our side.

[Execut with insurgents.

SCENE III.

A Hill, and prospect of the country. In the flat scene a Mill. A body of Horsemen ready to mount.

Weisingen comes out of the mill, followed by Francis and a Courier.

Weis. My horse!—Have you told it to the other nobles?

Cour. At least seven standards will meet you in the wood behind Miltenberg. The peasants bend their course that way. Couriers are despatched in every direction to summon all your confederates. Our plan cannot fail, for they say there is division among them.

Weis. The better.—Francis!

Fran. Gracious sir.

Weis. Discharge thy errand punctually—I bind it upon thy soul. Give her the letter—She must from the Court to my castle—instantly.—Thou must see her departure, and send me notice of it.

Fran. Your commands shall be obeyed.

Weis. Tell her she shall go. (To the courier.) Carry us the nearest and best road.

Cour. We must go round; all the rivers are up with the late dreadful rains.

[Execut.

SCENE IV.

Jaxthausen.

Elizabeth and Lerse.

Lerse. Gracious lady, be comforted!

Eliz. Alas! Lerse, the tears stood in his eyes as he took leave of me. It is dreadful, dreadful!

Lerse. He will soon return.

Eliz. It is not that. When he went to wage honorable war, never did his danger sit so heavy at my heart—I then rejoiced at his return, which now I fear.

Lerse. So noble a man—

Eliz. Call him not so—There lies the new misery. The miscreants!—they threatened to murder his family and burn the castle. Should he return, gloomy, gloomy is the prospect. His enemies will raise scandalous falsehoods in accusation against him, which he never can disprove.

Lerse. He will, and can.

Eliz. He has broken his ban:—Canst thou say No?

Lerse. No!—he was constrained; and where is there reason to condemn him?

Eliz. Malice seeks not reasons, but pretexts. He has joined himself to rebels, malefactors, and murderers—has become their chief. Say No to that.

Lerse. Cease to torture yourself and me. They have solemnly sworn to abjure all such doings as at Weinsberg. Did not I myself hear them say, in half remorse, that had not that been done already it should never have been done? Must not the princes and nobles return him their best thanks for having undertaken the dangerous office of leading these unruly people, in order to restrain their rage, and to save their lives and lands?

Eliz. Thou art an affectionate advocate. Should they take him prisoner, deal with him as a rebel, and bring his gray hairs—Lerse, I could run mad!

Lerse. Send sleep to refresh her body, dear Father of mankind, if thou deniest comfort to her soul!

Eliz. George promised to bring news—but he will not dare attempt it. They are worse than prisoners. Well I know they are watched like enemies.—The gallant boy! he would not quit his master.

Lerse. The very heart within me bled as I left him. Had you not needed my help, all the dangers of grisly death should not have separated us.

Eliz. I know not where Seekingen is. Could I but send a message to Maria!

Lerse. Do you write:—I will provide for that.

[Execut.

SCENE V.

A Village.

Enter Goetz and George.

Goetz. To horse, George! Quick! I see Miltenberg burn—Is it thus they keep the treaty?—Ride to them—Tell them my purpose.—The murderous incendiaries!—I renounce them—Let them make a very ruffian their captain, not me.—Quick, George! (Exit George.) Would I were a thousand miles from hence, though I were at the bottom of the deepest dungeon in Turkey!—Could I but come off with honor from them!—I have contradicted them through the whole day, and told them the bitterest truths, that they might be weary of me and let me go.

Enter an Unknown.

Un. God greet you, gallant sir!

Goetz. I thank you!—Your name?

Un. It is not necessary. I came to tell you that your life is in danger—The insurgents are weary of receiving from you such harsh language, and are resolved to rid themselves of you—Lower your tone, or endeavor to escape from them; and God be with you!

[Exit.
Goetz. In this way to lead, thy life, Goetz! and thus to end it!—But be it so—My death will be the clearest proof to the world that I had nothing in common with the miscreants.

Enter Insurgents.

1st IN. Captain, they are prisoners—they are slain! Goetz. Who?

2d IN. They who burned Miltenberg.—A troop of confederated cavalry rushed on them from behind a hill, and overpowered them at once.

Goetz. They have their reward—Oh, George! George!—They have found him among the caifiifs—My George! my George!

Enter Insurgents in confusion.

Link. Up, sir captain, up!—Here is no dallying time—The enemy is near, and in force.

Goetz. Who burned Miltenberg?

Mez. If you mean to make a quarrel, we'll soon show you we'll end it.

Kohl. Look to your own safety and ours!—Up!

Goetz (to Mezler). Darest thou threaten me, thou worthless—Thinkest thou to awe me, because thy garments are clotted with the blood of murdered nobles?

Mez. Berlichingen!

Goetz. Darest thou pronounce my name?—My children will be ashamed to bear it after such contamination.

Mez. From thee this, villain?—Slave of the nobles!

[Goetz strikes him down—he dies. Exit Goetz; the rest disperse in confusion. Alarm.

Kohl. Ye are mad!—The enemy breaks in on all hands, and you dally.

Link. Away! away!

[Cries and tumult. The insurgents fly across the stage.

Enter Weislingen and Troopers.

Weis. Pursue! pursue!—Stop neither for darkness nor rain.—I hear Goetz is among them; see he escape you not—He is sore wounded, say our friends. (Exeunt troopers.) And when I have thee—It will be doing him a favor to execute his sentence of death in prison—and then my foolish heart may beat more freely.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.

Scene changes to the front of a Gipsy Hut in a wild forest.—Night.—A fire before the Hut, at which sits the Mother of the Gipsies and a Girl.—It rains and thunders.

Mother. Throw some fresh straw up the thatch, daughter: it rains fearfully.

Enter a Gipsy Boy.

Boy. A dormouse, mother!—and here, two field mice!

Mother. Skin them and roast them, and thou shalt have a cap of their skins—Thou bleedest!

Boy. Dormouse bit me.

Mother. Gather some thorns that the fire may burn bright when thy father comes; he will be wet through and through.

Other Gipsy Women enter with Children at their backs.

1st Woman. Hast thou fared well?

2d Woman. Ill enough.—The whole country is in uproar—one's life is not safe a moment. Two villages are in a light flame.

1st Woman. So it was the fire that glared in the sky—I looked at it long; for flaming meteors have become so common.

The Captain of the Gipsies enters with three of his gang.

Capt. Heard ye the wild huntsman?

1st Woman. He passed by us but this minute.

Capt. How the hounds gave tongue!—Wow! wow! wow!

2d Man. How the whips clang!

3d Man. And the huntsman cheered them—Hollo—ho!

Mother. 'Tis the devil's chase.

Capt. We have been fishing in troubled waters. The peasants rob each other; we may be well pardoned helping them.

2d Woman. What hast thou got, Wolf?

Wolf. A hare and a cock—there's for the spit—A bundle of linen—some kitchen-ware—and a horse's bridle.—What hast thou, Sticks?

Sticks. A woollen jacket have I, and a pair of stockings, and one boot, and a flint and tinder-box.

Mother. It is all wet as mire, and the clothes are bloody. I'll dry them—give me here! (Trampling without.)

Capt. Hark! A horse!—Go, see who it is.

Enter Goetz on horseback.

Goetz. I thank thee, God! I see fire—they are gipsies.—My wounds bleed sorely—my foes close behind!—Great God, thou dostest dreadfully with me!

Capt. Is it in peace thou comest?

Goetz. I crave help from you—My wounds are stiff with cold—Assist me from horse!

Capt. Help him!—A gallant warrior in appearance and language.

Wolf (aside). 'Tis Goetz of Berlichingen!

Capt. Welcome! welcome! What we have is yours.

Goetz. I thank you.

Capt. Come to my hut.

[Exeunt to the hut.]
GOETZ OF BERLICHINGEN.

SCENE VII.

Scene, inside of the Hut.

Captain, Gipsies, and Goetz.

Capt. Call our mother—let her bring blood-wort and bandages. (Goetz warms himself.) Here is my holiday-doublet.

Goetz. God reward you! (The mother binds his wounds.)

Capt. I rejoice from my heart you are here. Goetz. Do you know me?

Capt. Who does not know you, Goetz? Our lives and hearts' blood are yours.

Enter Gipsy Man.

Gipsy. Horsemen come through the wood—They are confederates.

Capt. Your pursuers!—They shall not reach you—Away, Sticks, call the others! we know the passes better than they—We shall bring them down ere they are aware of us.

(Exit captain and men-gipsies with their guns.

Goetz (alone). Oh, Emperor! Emperor! Robbers protect thy children. (A sharp fire of musketry is heard.) The wild foresters! Steady and true!

Enter Women.

Women. Save yourself!—the enemy have overpowered us.

Goetz. Where is my horse?

Women. Here!

Goetz (girls his horse and mounts without his armor). For the last time shall you feel my arm—Never was it so weak. [Exit.—Tumult.

Women. He gallops to join our party. [Firing.

Enter Wolf.

Wolf. Away! away! All is lost.—The captain shot dead!—Goetz a prisoner.

[The women scream and fly into the wood.

SCENE VIII.

Scene changes to Adela's Bedchamber.

Enter Adela with a letter.

Adela. He or I!—The presumptuous—to threaten me! What glides through the antechamber? (A low knock at the door.) Who is without?

Fran. (without). Open, gracious lady!

Adela. Frank!—He well deserves that I should open to him. (Admits him.)

Fran. (throws himself on her neck). My dear, my gracious lady!

Adela. Shameless being!—What if any one heard you?

Fran. Oh, all—all are asleep.

Adela. What wouldst thou?

Fran. I cannot rest. The threats of my master—your lot—mine.

Adela. He was incensed against me when you parted from him?

Fran. He was as I have never seen him.—To my castle, said he; she must, she shall go.

Adela. And must we obey?

Fran. I know not, dear lady!

Adela. Thou foolish, betrayed boy!—thou dost not see where this will end.—Here he knows I am in safety—Long has he envied my freedom—He desires to have me at his castle—then has he the power to use me as his hate shall dictate.

Fran. He shall not!

Adela. Wilt thou prevent him?

Fran. He shall not!

Adela. I foresee the whole misery of my lot. He will tear me by force from his castle to immure me in a cloister.

Fran. Hell and death!

Adela. Wilt thou rescue me?

Fran. All—all!

Adela (throws herself weeping upon his neck). Francis!—Oh, rescue us!

Fran. I will tear the heart from his body!

Adela. No violence!—You shall carry a letter to him full of submission and obedience—Then give him this vial in his wine.

Fran. Give it!—Thou shalt be free.

Adela. Free! And then no more shalt thou need to slip to me trembling and in fear—no more shall I need anxiously to say, "Away, Frank! the morning dawns."

[Exit.

SCENE IX.

The Street before the Prison at Heilbron.

ELIZABETH and Lerse.

Lerse. God relieve your distress, my gracious lady;—Maria is come.

Eliz. God be praised!—Lerse, we have sunk into the abyss of misery—Now my forebodings are fulfilled!—A prisoner—secured as an assassin and malefactor in the deepest dungeon.

Lerse. I know all.

Eliz. Know! Thou knowest nothing. The distress is too great to be comprehended—His age, his wounds, a slow fever—and, more than all, the gloom of his own mind—There lies the mortal disorder!

Lerse. Ay, and that Weislingen should be commissioner!

Eliz. Weislingen?

Lerse. He is despatched with uncontrollable, unheard-of powers. Link and the other chiefs have been burnt alive—two hundred broken upon the wheel, beheaded, quartered, and impaled. The country all round shows like a shambles where human flesh is rife and cheap.

Eliz. Weislingen commissioner!—Oh, Heaven!—A ray of hope!—Maria shall to him: he cannot refuse her. He had ever a flexible heart; and when he sees her whom he once so loved, whom he has made so miserable—Where is she?
Leise. Still in the inn.
Eliz. Bring me to her. She must away instantly.

I fear all. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.

Scene changes to the Castle of Weislingen.

WEISLINGEN alone.

Weis. I am so sick, so weak—My very bones are empty and hollow—this wretched fever has consumed their very marrow. No rest, no sleep, day nor night!—and in the night such ghastly dreams! Last night again I met Goetz in the wood—He waved his sword, and again defied me to battle—I grasped mine, my hand failed me. In sleep as in reality he darted on me a contemptuous look, sheathed his weapon and went behind me—Dreadful is the vision as the scene it represented. He is a prisoner; yet I tremble to think of him. Miserable man! thy own voice has condemned him; yet thou tremblest like a malefactor before the vision of the night—And shall he die? Goetz! Goetz! we guide not ourselves—Fiends have empire over us, and lead our actions after their own hellish will, and to our eternal perdition. (Sits down.) Weak! Weak! How come my nails so discolored?—A cold, cold wasting sweat drenches every limb—All swins before my eyes. Could I but sleep?—Ha! (Enter Maria.) Mother of God!—Leave me in peace—leave me in peace!—It disappears not. She is dead, and she appears to the traitor. Leave me, blessed spirit! Already I am wretched enough.

Maria. Weislingen, I am no spirit.

Weis. It is her voice!

Maria. I come to implore my brother's life from thee—He is guiltless.

Weis. Hush!—Maria, angel of heaven as thou art, thou bringest with thee the pains of hell! Speak no more!

Maria. And must my brother die?—Weislingen, it is horrible that from me thou must hear that he is guiltless; that it is my lot in bitter sorrow to restrain thee from the most abominable murder. Thy soul is sunk low, low indeed! Can this be Adelbert?

Weis. Thou seest—the consuming breath of death hath blasted me—my strength sinks to the grave—I die in misery, and thou comest to drive me to despair—Could I but speak, thy bitterest hate would melt into sorrow and compassion. Oh, Maria, Maria!

Maria. Weislingen, my brother also is ill, and in prison—His severe wounds—his age—Oh, couldst thou see his gray hairs!—Weislingen, we too despair.

Weis. Enough!—Francis!

Enter Francis in great agitation.

Fran. Gracious sir!

Weis. The papers here, Francis. (He gives them—Weislingen tears a packet, and shows Maria a paper.)—Here is thy brother's sentence of death subscribed! Maria. God in heaven!

Weis. And thus I tear it. He lives! But can I restore what I have destroyed?—Weep not so, Francis! My good youth, my distress lies deep at thy heart.

[Francis throws himself at his feet, and clasps his knees.

Maria (apart). He is ill—very ill. His appearance rends my heart—I loved him! As I again approach him, I feel how dearly—

Weis. Francis, arise, and cease to weep—I may recover! Hope leaves only the dead.

Fran. You will not! You must die!

Weis. Must?

Fran. (beside himself). Poison! poison!—from your wife! I—I—gave it! [Rushes out.

Weis. Follow him, Maria; he is desperate.

[Exit Maria.

Weis. Poison from my wife!—Alas! alas! I feel it. Torture and death!

Maria (within). Help! help!

Weis. (attempts to rise, but cannot). God!—not even that.

Maria (re-entering). He is gone!—He threw himself desperately from a window of the hall into the river.

Weis. It is well with him!—Thy brother is out of danger! The other commissioners, Seekendorf excepted, are his friends—They will readily allow him to ward himself upon his knightly word.—Farewell, Mary! Now go.

Maria. I will stay by thee—Thou poor forsaken!

Weis. Poor and forsaken indeed!—O God, thou art a dreadful avenger!—My wife!

Maria. Remove from thee that thought—Turn to the throne of mercy.

Weis. Go, thou gentle soul! witness not my misery! Horrible! Even thy company, Maria, even the attendance of my only comforter, is agony.

Maria (aside). Strengthen me, Heaven!—My soul suffers as his.

Weis. Alas! alas! Poison from my wife!—My Francis seduced by the detestable!—She waits—hearkens after every horse's hoof for the messenger that brings her news of my death—And thou too, Maria, wherefore art thou come to awake every slumbering recollection of my sins? Leave me, leave me, that I may die!

Maria. Let me stay! Thou art alone;—think me thy nurse—Forget all—May God forgive thee as freely as I forgive!
GOETZ OF BERLICHINGEN.

WEIS. Thou spirit of love! pray for me! pray for me!—My lips are locked.

MARIA. He will forgive thee—Thou art weak.

WEIS. I die! I die!—and yet I cannot die—In the fearful contest betwixt life and death are the pains of hell.

MARIA. Merciful Father, have compassion upon him!—Grant him one glance of thy love, that his heart may be opened to comfort, and his soul to the hope of eternal life, even in the agony of death!

---

SCENE XI.

A narrow Vault dimly illuminated.—The Judges of the Secret Tribunal discovered seated, all muffled in black cloaks, and silent.

ELDEST JUDGE. Judges of the Secret Tribunal, sworn by the cord and the steel to be un pitying in justice, to judge in secret, and to avenge in secret, like the Deity! are your hands clean and hearts pure?—Raise them to heaven, and cry, Woe upon misdoers!

ALL. Woe! woe!

ELDEST JUDGE. Crier, begin the diet of judgment.

CRIER. I cry for accusation against misdoers! Whose heart is pure, whose hand is clean, let him accuse, and call upon the steel and the cord for Vengeance! Vengeance! vengeance!

ACCUSER (comes forward). My heart is pure from misdeed, and my hand clean from innocent blood:—God pardon my sins of ignorance, and frame my steps to his way!—I raise my hand aloft, and cry Vengeance! Vengeance! vengeance!

ELDEST JUDGE. Vengeance upon whom?

ACCUSER. I call upon the cord and upon the steel for vengeance against Adela von Weislingen. She has committed adultery and murder—she has poisoned her husband by the hands of his servant—the servant hath slain himself—the husband is dead.

ELDEST JUDGE. Swearest thou by the God of truth that thy accusation is true?

ACCUSER. I swear.

ELDEST JUDGE. Dost thou take upon thy own head the punishment of murder and adultery, should it be found false?

ACCUSER. I take it.

ELDEST JUDGE. Your voices?

[They converse a minute in low whispers.

ACCUSER. Judges of the Secret Tribunal, what is your doom upon Adela von Weislingen, accused of murder and adultery?

ELDEST JUDGE. She shall die!—shall die a bitter and double death! By the double steel of the steel and the cord shall she expiate the double misdeed. Raise your hands to heaven, and cry, Woe unto her!—Be she given to the hand of the avenger.

ALL. Woe! woe!

ELDEST JUDGE. Come forth, avenger! (A man advances.) There hast thou the cord and the steel!—Within eight days must thou take her from before the face of heaven; wherever thou findest her, let her no longer cumber the ground.—Judges, ye that judge in secret, and avenge in secret, like the Deity, God keep your hearts from wickedness, and your hands from innocent blood!

[Exeunt.

---

SCENE XII.

The Court of an Inn.

LERSE and MARIA.

MARIA. The horses are enough rested; we will away, Lersc.

LERSE. Stay till to-morrow; the night is dreadful.

MARIA. Lersc, I cannot rest till I have seen my brother. Let us away: the weather clears up—we may expect a fair morning.

LERSE. Be it as you will.

[Exeunt.

---

SCENE XIII.

The Prison at Heilbron.

GOETZ and ELIZABETH.

ELIZ. I entreat thee, my dear husband, be comforted! Thy silence distresses me—thou retirest within thyself. Come, let me see thy wounds; they mend daily. In this moody melancholy I know thee no longer.

GOETZ. If thou seest Goetz, he is long since gone! One by one they have robbed me of all I held dear—my hand, my property, my freedom, my renown!—My life!—what is that to what I have lost?—What hear you of George? Is Lersc gone to inquire for George?

ELIZ. He is, my love! Raise yourself—you will sit more easily.

GOETZ. Whom God hath struck down raises himself no more! I best know the load I have to bear—Misfortune I am inured to support—but now it is not Weislingen alone, not the peasants alone, not the death of the Emperor, or my wounds—it is the whole united—My hour is come! I had hoped it would have come only with my death—but His will be done!

ELIZ. Wilt thou eat any thing?

GOETZ. No, my love!—Does the sun shine without?

ELIZ. A fine spring day.

GOETZ. My love, wilt thou ask the keeper's permission for me to walk in his little garden for half an hour, to enjoy the clear face of heaven, the open air, and the blessed sun?

ELIZ. I will—and he will readily grant it. [Exit.
SCENE XIV.

The Garden belonging to the Prison.

Lerse and Maria.

Maria. Go, see how it stands with them.

[Exit Lerse.

Enter Elizabeth and Keeper.

Eliz. (to the keeper), God reward your kindness and mercy to my husband! (Exit keeper.)—Maria, what bringest thou?

Maria. Safety to my brother!—But my heart is torn asunder—Weislingen is dead!—poisoned by his wife.—My husband is in danger—the princes will be too powerful for him; they say he is surrounded and besieged.

Eliz. Hearken not to rumor; and let not Goetz remark aught.

Maria. How is it with him?

Eliz. I fear he will hardly long survive thy return; the hand of the Lord is heavy on him.—And George is dead!

Maria. George! The gallant boy!

Eliz. When the miscreants were burning Miltenberg, his master sent him to check their villainy—At that moment a body of cavalry charged upon them; had they all behaved as George, they would have given a good account of them—Many were killed: and poor George—he died the death of a cavalier!

Maria. Does Goetz know it?

Eliz. We conceal it from him. He asks me ten times a day about him, and sends me as often to see what is become of George. I fear his heart will not bear this last wound.

Maria. O God! what are the hopes of this world!

Enter Goetz, Lerse, and Keepers.

Goetz. Almighty God! how well it is to be under thy heaven! How free! The trees put forth their buds, and all the world hopes.—Farewell, my children! my buds are crushed, my hope is in the grave!

Eliz. Shall I not send Lerse to the cloister for thy son, that thou mayest see and bless him?

Goetz. Leave him where he is—he needs not my blessing—he is holier than I. Upon our wedding, Elizabeth, could I have thought I should die thus!—My old father blessed us, and a succession of noble and gallant sons arose at his prayer—Thou hast not heard him—I am the last.—Lerse, thy countenance cheers me in the hour of death, as in our most noble fights: then my spirit encouraged yours; now, yours supports mine.—Oh that I could but see George once more, to warm myself at his look!—You look down and weep—He is dead! George is dead?—Die, Goetz! Thou hast outlived thyself—outlived the noblest—How did he?—Alas, they took him at Miltenberg, and he is executed?

Eliz. No—he was slain there!—he defended his freedom like a lion.

Goetz. God be praised!—He was the kindest youth under the sun, and a gallant.—Now dismiss my soul!—My poor wife! I leave thee in a wretched world. Lerse, forsake her not!—Lock your hearts carefully as your doors. The age of frankness and freedom is past,—that of treachery begins. The worthless will gain the upper hand by cunning, and the noble will fall into their net. Maria, God restore thy husband to thee!—may he never fall the deeper for having risen so high! Selbiss is dead—and the good Emperor—and my George—Give me some water!—Heavenly sky!—Freedom! freedom! [He dies.

Eliz. Only above! above with thee!—The world is a prison-house.

Maria. Gallant and gentle! Woe to this age that has lost thee!

Lerse. And woe to the future, that cannot know thee!
SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

Byron, Lord, remarks on a conversation between him and Captain Medwina, 5, 576. His satire on Marmion, 74.
Lines on Pitt and Fox, 78, 79. Resemblance between part of Par-sina and a scene in Marmion, 93.
Notice by him of the imitators of Sir
William Scott, 287, n., 288, n. His imitation in the works of the Lord
Isles, 484, n. Notes on Waterloo, 284, 499 to 504, passim. Poem on his mother's marriage, 551. Parallel passages from 18, 272, 295, 296, 297,
313, 341, 416, 428, 438, 449, 500, 504, 505.

Cadel, Mr. Robert, his recollections of the Lady of the Lake, 174, n.
Cadoran, Colonel, tribute to the memory of, 275.
"Cadyrov Castle," 395.
Cairn, Colonel, killed at Fuentes
d'Honoro, 254.
— Colonel, of Fassiefern, killed at Quatre-Bras, 505, 649.
Sir John, Lochiel, 256.
Cameronians, 601.
Camp, a favorite dog of the author's, 107.
Campbell, Sir John Charlotte. See "Scotian,
Thomas, 161. "The Bard of Hope," 590. His admiration of the poem Cadyrov Castle, 593.
Carnach, island and town, of, 434, 481.
Canning, Hon. George, a writer in the Antiquarian, 57, n., 765.
Cantara, peninsula of, 483.
Carnet, Prince, 169, n.
"Carle, Now the King's Comp," Part I.
Cartwright, Dr., the first living poet the author recollected of having seen, 590.
Casill, the Earl of (temp. Jac. VI.), 770.
Bond by him to his brother, 772.
Castilians, their skill in fighting with darts, 51.
"CASTLE DANGEROUS," Mottoes from 719.
"CASTLE OF THE SEVEN SHIELDS," bal-nad of the
Catilina, death of, 503, n.
Cave, MacAllister's, in Strathaird, 480.
Celts, the, 541. Their music and poetry,
541, 566.
Chalmers, George, his Caledonia, 153.
His edition of Sir David Lindsay's
Works, 153, 261.
Chapel Peruzil, 79, 145.
Charles I., King, 358, 363.
— X., of France, in Edinburgh,
117, n.
— Prince Edward, one of his places of retreat, 323.
Charms, healing, 22, 21, 57.
Charter-stones, 457.
Chase, the, in the Ettrick Forest, 151.
Chastity, punishment for broken vows
of, 94, 156.
Chatterton, Thomas, 537.
Chaucer, an early Scottish prin-
ner. See "Mylar and Chepman."
"CHEVIOT," 627.
"Chevy Chappo," 529, 549.
"Child of Elle," the, 547.
Chivalry, 28, 56, 57, 63, 67, 363.
Christ Kirk on the Green," 512.
"Chronicles of the CANONGATE,"
Verses from, 712, 713.
Chivats, the, in Spain, metrical poems of 358.
"CLAUDE HALCRO AND NOREA," 669.
"CLAUDE HALCRO'S Song," 687.
"CLAUDE'S Verses," 921.

Claverhouse, Grahame of, See Dundee.
Clerk, John, Esq. (Lord Edin), 705, n.
John, Esq. of Edin, author of an Essay upon Naval Tactics, 601, n.
Collins, his tenure of Penny-cuik, 693, 895, n.
—, William, Esq., 571.
"CLEVELAND'S SONGS," 660.
Coleridge, S. T., his Ancient Mariner,
468, 558. His Christabel, 5. The Bridal of Trinamian an imitation of his style, 573, 462.

Columbia, his flights of imagination, 57,
494.
Colquhoun, Random Records, 472.
Colquito, 465.
Colwulf, King of Northumberland, 92,
155.
Combat, single, 28, 56, 63, 64, 124, 164,
214, 235.
Comyn, the Red, 419, 423, 472, 475.
Converse's Mourning Bride, 525.
Conscience, 299, 292.
Constable, Mr. George, Esq. (Jonathan Oldbuck), 565.
— Arribald, his "bold and liberal industry," 5. Extract from a letter of the author to, 706, n.
CONTRIBUTIONS of Scott to MINSTREL-
SY of the SCOTTISH BORDER, 567-566.
Cotybeare, Rev. Mr., his illustrations of
Shakespeare, 318, 462.
Cornwallis, Marquis of, 633.
Corban, of the Highlands, 198, 243.
"COURT ROBERT OF PARIS," Mottoes
from, 717, 718.
"COUNT GUY, SONG," 701.
Cowper, 590.
Cox, Captain, of Coventry, 548.
Crannan, family of, 47, 55.
—, George, Esq., consulted by the author on his attempts at compro-
sis, 71, 718.
Crichton Castle, 110, 159.
Critical Review, notices from, 7, 12, 15,
24, 27, 53, 57, 102, 146, 180, 185, 199, 236,
291, 339, 392, 393, 395, 311, 316, 357,
377, 417, 424, 433, 434, 483, 531, 534,
623.
Cromwell, Oliver, his conduct at Marston Moor, 307, 351, 352.
"CUMMOR HALL," poem of, 547.
Cullum, John, of, in his ballad poetry,
558. Critical remarks on Auchin-drane, 795, n.
Cup, a drinking one, at Dunvegan, 469.
—, by Scottish matrons, 241.
"CYPRESS WREATH, TH'," 328.

Dacke, families of, 61.
Dahounay, spell of, 396.
Dalhousie, Earl, of, tribute to, 540.
Dalkin, Charles, Earl of (afterwards Duke of Bucleuch), dedication of the Lay of the Last Minstrel to, 7. See Bucleuch. —, Harriet, Countess of (afterwards Duchess of Bucleuch), 4. See also Bucleuch, —, town and castle of, 503, n.
Dalzell, (now) Sir J. G., his collection of Scottish poems, 549.
— Sir William, his combat with Sir
Piers Courtenay, 147.
Dance, the, in his balladary by, 316, 359.
Traces of their religion in Teesdale, 300.
"Death Bell," the, 156.
"Death CHANT," 713.
— "OF KEELFAR, TH'," 714.
Death of Leith Hall, poem of the, 551.
INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.

INDEX.
Battling Roaring Willie, the Border minstrel, 64.
Ravenscuche Castle, 33, 70.
Ravenwey, 294.
"REBECCA'S Hymns," 676.
"Receipt to make an epic poem," 374.
"Red-Cross Knight, The," by Mickie, 547.
Rede, Percy, 352.
"REDGUARDLET," Verses from, 707.
"Repeate, tower of, 742.
"Rex-Cross on Stannmore, 329.
"Resolve, The," 634.
Riddell, family of, 50.
Rivingham, 322, 333.
Rizzon, Joseph, his criticism of Percy's Reliques, 344, 546.
His collection of songs, 549, 703.
Robin Hood, 549.
Rob Roy, death-bed anecdote of, 227, n.
"Ron Roy," Verses from, 667, 668.
Robert the Bruce. See Bruce.
Robertson, Rev. Principal, his account of the death of the Regent Murray, 705.
Roderick, Gwilym, a grand-daughter of Spain, defeated and killed by the Moors, 278, 280.
His enchanted cavern, 279, 273.
See Don Roderick.
Rogers, Samuel, Esq., "the Bard of Memory," 500.
"Rokery," 285.
--- Castle, 309, 354, 364.
--- family, of 354, 355.
--- Felen Sow of, 365.
Roman antiquities at Greta Bridge, 353.
--- camp at Ardoe, 255.
"ROMANCE OF DIONYSUS," 650.
--- literature, birth of, 161.
Rowney, Robert, his opinion of the Lady of the Lake, 222, n.
Rose, William Stewart, Esq., dedication of the first canto of Marmion to 76.
Ross, John A., seeking a slave, 707.
Ross, John, Earl of, his treaty with King Edward IV, 465.
--- Sir Walter, 484.
--- William, Earl of, deed containing his submission to King Robert Bruce, 492.
"Round Table," 145, 495.
Roxburghe Club, the, 704.
--- John, Duke of, 543, 566.
Rum, John, 566.
Ruskin, Major-General Sir James, of Ashbelt, 73.
Rutherford, Miss Christian, aunt of Sir Walter, 566.
--- of Huntleigh, family of, 67.
ST. CLAIR, family of, 60, 70.
"SAINT CLOUD," 615.
St. John's Vale of, 405.
St. Mary's Lake, 152.
"ST. ROSAN'S WELL," Mottoes from, 702.
"THE SELECTOR'S CHAIR," 644.
Saints, St. Bride of Douglas, 71, Chad, 124, 171.
Dunstan, 255, Fillan, 131, 599.
George, 506, 819, Hilda, 92, 154.
Marion, 256, Modan, 253.
Mungo, 11, Orn, 356.
Regulus (Soothed Rule), 140, Rosalia, 150, Serle, 217.
Thurston, 783.
"Sals Room," the, an Edinburgh periodical, 651, n., 655.
Salisbury, Robert, on the Death of Catiline, 460.
"SAXON'S ACHIEVEMENTS," 675.
Saxons, the Anglo, their language, 541, 545, 555, and poetry, 635, 676.
Scolds, ancient poetry of the, 676.
See Maroot, Loeb, of 373, n.
Schiller, 556, 564, 706.
Schatz, signification of, 493, n.
Scots Grays, 666.
Scots Magazine, the, extracts from, 96, 500.
Scott and Kerr, feuds of the families of, 47.
Scott, Hugh Esq., of Harden, now Lord Polwarth, 166, 544, n., 566, n. His lady, 564, n., 565.
Inscription for the monument of the Rev. John Scott, their son, 717.
John, Esq., of Galas, 410, n.
--- Major Sir Walter, the author's eldest son, 652.
Scots, the, "the Flower of Yarrow," 25, 62, 152.
--- Miss Sophia, the author's daughter, 615, n.
--- See Baceuchle, See Baceuchle.
--- of Harden, family of, 62, 152, 166.
"Re Rev. George, Inscription for the monument of, 717.
--- Robert, of Sandyknoke, the author's grandfather, 39.
--- Sir John, of Thirlestane, 61.
--- Sir Michael, 15, 52, 53, 54.
--- Walter, Lessunden, the author's great-grandson, of, 569.
Sea-fire, phenomenon so called, 465.
Seaford, the last Earl of, 647, n.
Seal, its taste for music, 410, 464.
Search after the "throne of the Hesperides," the, or the Quest of Sultamn Solomon, 661.
Seaton, Christopher, fate of, 374.
Second-sight, account of, the, 322, 390.
Searl, Thomas, Esq., of, 715.
Selectors of the slain, the, 70.
"SEMPACH, BATTLE OF," 615.
Sedgley, 615.
--- Spears of Wedderburn, 30.
Seward, Miss Anna, criticism by, 17, n., 19, n., 20, letter to, 40, n., Epitaph "designed for her monument, 615.
Seymour, Lord Webb, 370.
Shakespeare, his description of a popular song, 555.
Shane-Dymas, an Irish chieftain in the reign of Elizabeth, 363.
Sharpe, Charles K., Esq., of Hoddam, 250, n., 569.
--- Sir Cuthbert, Lines on, "712.
Shaw, Mr. James, notice of a list of Sir W. Scott's publications prepared by him, 565, n.
Sheale, Richard, the author or transcriber of Cheviy Chess, 549, 553.
Sheridan, Thomas, Esq., 329.
Shoreditch, the poorest of, 150.
Shibald, Mr. James, 703.
Siddons, Mrs. Henry, Epitaphs written for, 669, 706.
Sidney, Sir Philip, his opinion of the ballad of Cheviy Chess, 529, n., 540, 555.
Sineinf, Right Hon. Sir John, 697.
"Sir Caitlin," bound of, 547.
"Sir Martyn," a forgotten poem of Micke, extract from, 533.
"Sir Tristrem," metrical romance of Thomas the Rhymker, 539, 557, 581.
Skene, James, account of the dedication of the fourth canto of Marmion to, 105.
Skirving, Mr. author of a ballad on the battle of Flodden, 586.
Skye, Island of, description of its scenery, 425, 478.
Smylhall, describing of, 651.
SMITH, Miss, Lines written for," 665.